The series came to be when producers James Henerson and James Hirsch saw the film and thought, 'We should do something with this!' They approached film producer Michael Douglas about the idea of a series. The initial thought was to develop it as a mid-season replacement, but when ABC heard the notion of a series and liked it, the show was slotted as a prime-time September entry. Henerson and Hirsch hired producers Mike Gray and John Mason to write what's known in the business as a "promo" or "demo" film to pitch the premise. In this promotional video, the character Jenny Hayden is killed in a car crash. But that was changed later to allow the series characters to be in search of Jenny Hayden. The new face of Starman (actor Robert Hays) was easy to explain: The alien had simply taken on a new guise, this time the body of photographer Paul Forrester.

"Although I was hesitant because Jeff Bridges had done such a wonderful job in the film, I realized that this was 14 years later and upon returning to Earth, Starman would have to find a new body," says Robert Hays. "After 14 years, even he must have realized Jeff's body wouldn't be smelling too good-a bit ripe! It seemed like a wonderful opportunity. Like Michael Douglas said to me, 'It's completely open-you can do anything with this character.'" And with that in mind, Hays grabbed the leather jacket and lens and hit the road. "I've been involved in metaphysics for some years, and [I was intrigued about] the idea of someone possessing the powers that [Starman] had," says co-star Michael Cavanaugh, who played the federal security agent Fox. "If you remember, at the end of the movie, there was [going to be] a son, and he said the son was going to be the second coming. I don't mean that in the religious sense, but it would mean this son would be an embodiment of that idea. That really impressed me. I thought Jeff Bridges did a great job. So when I heard about the series, I was very enthusiastic about it."

"I thought it was very novel. We were all looking for [a] flower (to bloom)," says supervising producer Leon Tokatyan. The basis of the show's appeal, according to Tokatyan and Cavanaugh was the relationship between Scott Hayden-a somewhat rebellious growing son-and his extraterrestrial father, a very strange, compassionate alien who saw the world naively and struggled to be a good parent. "He's not us," says Tokatyan. "He's a role model for his son. Once, he sat in the desert with his son and pointed to the sky and said, 'That's where I come from.'"

Tokatyan says the basic foundation of a show is the chemistry between the leading characters. Without good chemistry, the show doesn't work. In Starman's case, [Hays and Barnes] "had something very nice together." This chemistry was the very foundation of the show's appeal. "It's a father and son communicating together and resolving conflicts together, with a little patience and understanding," says Cavanaugh. "And I think that's something very appealing to people."

As evidence, says Cavanaugh, "during the filming of the show, I was in California, and I walked into a hotel lobby. A burly-looking man, a Texan, was there and he looked at me and said, 'You're that guy on Starman, ain'tcha?' He said to me he loves the show because of the relationships between Bob and C.B., which is really delightful. I was quite surprised and quite pleased to see the show touched him." The humanity of the relationships depicted in Starman is rare for television, says Cavanaugh. "The thing that sealed it for me, in terms of my enthusiasm for the show, was what I tend to know and understand: The powers that are in [Starman] are within all of us."

But conveying such a message begins with the right words. Supervising producer Tokatyan, who was responsible for hiring, gathering all the stories for the season and giving Starman his direction, describes how carefully scripts were constructed. "We worked out the entire script, scene by scene, before they started. We made notes and then did a second draft. Sometimes I had to take over; either I did it or [executive story editors] Geoff Fischer or Tom Lazarus did it. I was responsible for the final draft," he explains.

To develop a story, all major parties involved in the show would gather around a table and analyze the script. "We had readings every week of the scripts we were going to shoot, so all the actors gathered around, with the exception of the [one-] day players," says Tokatyan. "The three or four major people. From that, we can go off and do a final polish. We could see what works or didn't work. ... Sometimes there would be tongue twisters. We would sit there and check off parts that didn't play or were repetitive or too long or not clear. We never get enough time to fine-tune them. I remember people dashing in and saying, 'We're two minutes short.' Aaagh! I have to write a whole new scene.

I have to find out where to put it and what does it consist of. Sometimes it's two minutes over and they cut like hell and then they say, 'My mistake!' Michael Cavanaugh gained the role of FSA agent George Fox by becoming, not unlike his character, obsessed with the part. "I don't think I ever wanted something as much as I did with that series," he says. "There were several people in the office, producers, and I was supposed to go in and read for the part. I went in and did my audition, and left. Later, from several different people-producers and other actors sitting outside the room-I heard that producers walked out and said, 'We're not seeing anyone else.' That's how well it went. That day I happened to be the first on the audition list. I was so zeroed in to doing this part, that in my mind, there was no one else. I was absolutely convinced I was going to do that part.'

Of course, the producers accommodated the other would-be Foxes in the outer room, but their minds were set on Cavanaugh. "So, later I had to read for the network. Normally, there's three, four, five or six different people they take to the network. They didn't bring anyone but me. The producers were that convinced. Fortunately the network was convinced, too. So, there's the story. ... I had no question in my mind that I wanted to be involved with something of this stature, [this] metaphysical nature."

Some say villains' roles are always the most interesting. The truth of the matter is, Cavanaugh did not see Fox as a villain. Not even as an antagonist. "He was a man who was absolutely dedicated to his job," explains Cavanaugh. "He had absolute conviction that the world and the nation was at stake at every moment. I don't think he was ever interested in killing Starman; I think he was interested in removing him from circulation. He did not have the understanding of Paul Forrester that the audience has. He perceived him as a threat to the nation. I guess you could call him an absolute company man. Somebody who's got a job to do, and he's willing to do it virtually at all costs."

It was important to Cavanaugh that Fox's character be consistent. In the episode "Grifters", which detailed Fox and Starman's first face-to-face encounter, Fox was supposed to tell Forrester, "If I could kill you now, I'd do it." Both Hays and Cavanaugh objected to that line and implored the producers to change it. They did. "That was a big bone of contention between me and the producers. I must say, though, the producers were very receptive to our ideas."

Again, Cavanaugh returns to the idea of Starman as a show with a message. "With a little intensity, drive and conviction on your part, you can get [Starman's] ability! He was not judgmental. That's a tremendous, subtle message of the show. "Forrester was almost a naive individual. His naivete allowed him to see the good in people and not have his vision clouded by appearances. He went to the heart and soul of people, not their appearances. His basic goodness allowed him to see the basic goodness in other people. A good example of that was saving George Fox's life."

Cavanaugh refers to a scene in the only twoparter of the series, "Starscape." Confronting Forrester, Fox suffers a heart attack. "Just as I'm ready to shoot him in the back, he turns around and recognizes a man is about to die, and he heals me! It's the most amazing thing. I get the chills just thinking about it. It's a tremendous, loving, non-judgmental way of doing things. "I would have liked to have seen in another season where Fox starts to get confused with this man." In the scene where Forrester heals the agent, Fox is unconscious. Cavanaugh says it was important that Fox be unaware of the deed in order to ensure (if the show had continued into further years) that the conflict between the two would continue.

"If, in the first season, I love the man, there's no show!" Cavanaugh exclaims. "So you have to maintain that conflict and over a period of time, drop in some hints" that Fox is beginning to have doubts about his mission. Starman stories were about something. Episodes addressed species preservation, literacy, family estrangements and even illegal (earthly) aliens crossing the border. "I don't think hardedged stories would have worked," says Tokatyan. "It's not what [Starman] was about. It's not what the series was."

Tokatyan's favorite story was Michael Mark's "Appearances." "A blind farming girl realizes [Starman] has magic powers. She says, 'Heal me! Let me see you!' And he tries to tell her he couldn't do that. Stories like that I think were worthwhile. We wanted to get into talking about the fundamentalists on the show. Everyone was against the religious aspects. In my head, it was the parents saying, 'That's the way God wants it, that you can't see. You can't change that.' They were very harsh about that. It gets convoluted. There's a lot going on in there. The problem was I wanted to make it more religion-oriented."

Another script Tokatyan found remarkable was "The Probe," by Syrie Astrahan James. In his 25 years in television, never has a script passed his desk that didn't need tinkering-except this one. "I didn't have to cut it! I didn't have to touch a word! She's a very interesting woman. She had written a romance novel and it was published. She wrote another one and it was published. She got bored and wrote a feature screenplay, which [Starman producers] Henerson and Hirsch optioned! So, she decided, 'Well, this is kind of fun, maybe I can do television too!' Everything she touched became gold. Nothing had to be done with it. The second one ["Fathers and Sons"] needed work, but we worked on it together."

Tokatyan says if he could go back and make one change in the series, he would add more of the wry adult humor that Hays did so well as the character. "By adult, I don't mean archaic cursing or of the sexual innuendo variety, but more sly humor. There was a limit to how much we could play the alien aspects," he notes. "Doing a show in a week is madness. You never have enough time to do anything. I remember going to Bob's place one morning with a script that had to be out that day."

The achievement of Starman, says Tokatyan, was that although the show was typically filled with compromises, when he stood back and looked at the finished product, he was happy with what he saw. "In any collaborative effort, compromise is necessary, so one has to be satisfied with the end product because it's as close as possible to the concept. It was like a sausage factory. And the fact it turned out as well as it did, is a miracle."

Despite his overall satisfaction, Tokatyan longed for more stories that provided "a mirror to contemporary society. That was our original intent and conception. That's one of the reasons I wanted to do religious stuff in the appearances.' The pressures of getting the show on-you can't ask a crew to stand by while you think of a script went against some of the ideals you want for the show." Although Tokatyan acknowledges that the Starman character was a good foundation for examining society, "I don't think we were that successful. We were successful in bits and pieces, but you gotta look fast. Just the pressures of getting the show out. For example, if we had the opportunity to do all 22 shows before we started shooting show number one, we can look at number two and say, 'Aha! This should be shifted this way, and that should be shifted that way. We can take this one out and get another one.' We didn't have that luxury."

Starman was stronger in telling stories about Paul and Scott's relationship than about his extraterrestrial adventures. Viewers never really learned about Starman's life in space. "We went around and around about that," confesses Tokatyan. "What do they do? How are they born where he is? Is there death where he comes from? He cloned himself from another living human and from the blood of the real Paul Forrester." After hours of discussion, producers decided not to dwell on the details of Starman's otherworldly existence, "because we felt we weren't really a science fiction show per se. It's not a science fiction show except for the sphere." Tokatyan refers to a mysterious, glowing blue sphere Starman carried with him. The sphere had magical powers (in the film, Jeff Bridges had several spheres, which spent their energy by being used). "We kept wondering, what's inside that sphere? We had many, many meetings about the limits of that sphere." Tokatyan says they made a conscious effort to use the sphere judiciously. "We didn't want this to turn into a magic show where he'd take the sphere and have them taken out of a forest fire or something."

Starman shared with many other shows the premise of a protagonist pursued by an antagonist. Perhaps the first to ride this premise into megahit status was The Fugitive, followed over the years by The Incredible Hulk (Banner was chased by reporter McGee), The Immortal (a millionaire wanted Ben Richards' blood), The Phoenix (federal agent Preminger dogged the Egyptian Benu), Otherworld (a family transported into a different universe were sought by a high-ranking military man), and Logan's Run (Logan and Jessica with REM ran from fellow Sandman Francis).

Cavanaugh, presented with brief descriptions of each of these shows, is amazed at the common theme. "I haven't heard of 80 percent of them, or think I've seen any of them," he says. "I don't really watch television. I'm not very familiar with drama television, so it's a revelation to me, this chase premise. It seems to have been necessary to create conflict in this way. There has to be something to create tension." Cavanaugh adds that even in Starman's neighborhood, conflict is necessary to life. "The nature of life is to move forward, and what makes us move forward with wisdom and intelligence is conflict. It makes you think. It makes you expand."

"Networks aren't brilliant thinkers. They wanted jeopardy," Tokatyan says succinctly. Robert Hays' portrayal of Paul Forrester garnered high marks from Tokatyan, who liked how Hays played the character very openly and gave him enough of a "clean slate" that he would react naively to ordinary occurrences. "In the pilot when [Starman] steps into the elevator, when the door starts to close, that is something he's never seen before. A lot of actors might have just stood there, but Bob did it being very startled. It was a small moment, but he did a marvelous job."

Robert Hays describes Starman as "basically a void waiting to be filled, and during this process he reacted quizzically to the world around him while taking it in he questioned it all. This made for potentially a blank and therefore bland performance if I wasn't careful. It was also hard to keep from jumping ahead of ourselves. Once Starman learned something, you could never have him go back to where he didn't know it, for a story point." "Robert Hays is one of the nicest men I've ever met in the business," says Tokatyan. "If there was a meeting and a stranger walked in, he does everything he can make this person feel at home."

Working with Robert Hays and C.B. Barnes was a delight for Cavanaugh, who characterizes Hays as "a very generous, outgoing, warm man. C.B. was only 14 at the time. And the three of us got along really well. And that connection spread throughout the whole production and even to guest stars coming aboard. It was an extraordinary experience. We seemed to get the message of the show out—the interaction, kindness, teachings. Those ideas seemed to permeate the whole atmosphere of the set, the production offices; everyone loved the project. I think it comes across on the screen because it was a genuine atmosphere on the set."

And the further miracle of the show for Cavanaugh is that "we're all still friends. The friendships have continued beyond the show." They do not necessarily see each other as frequently as all would like because everyone is occupied with projects, but whenever reunions or birthday parties are arranged, Cavanaugh says, those friendships continue. Tokatyan says C.B. Barnes also brought excellent performances to his role as Scott. Barnes, in interviews, said the show was so popular that he received letters from all over the world, including West Germany, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Chile. Occasionally, he had to get those letters translated.

Cavanaugh excitedly relates personal experiences that demonstrated the international scope of Starman's popularity. For example, while visiting Paris in 1990, he was recognized for Starman in streets, subways and restaurants. But it was while doing a film in Lima, Peru, that Cavanaugh had his most rewarding encounter. In this moment, language was a barrier, but no language was needed to exchange the mutual delight. "We had a day off, so we went shopping," describes Cavanaugh. "We went to this market and in a long lineup of stalls selling wares, we went into this one stall and there was a television, and on the television is Starman. I'm in a scene with a kid with a broken arm asking about Scott [Hayden]. There I am, speaking in perfect [dubbed] Spanish. Of course, it's not me! It was hysterical! Behind the counter there were these two little boys, about 10 or 12. They saw and recognized me, and their faces just lit up. Those kids will probably never forget that day. There's the guy on the TV screen and in front of them at the same time! It was an incredible, amazing experience!"

Starman ran against L.A. Law, Miami Vice, The Cosby Show and Falcon Crest. It lagged in ratings and was canceled in May 1987. Immediately, an organization called Spotlight Starman sprang up, representing fans and admirers from all over the United States and Canada. They tried very hard, with a letter-writing campaign to pressure ABC into renewing the show. Failing, they have since channeled their energies to creative or charitable endeavors, and the organization has been elevated to an international level.

"I thought it was wonderful that they tried," says Tokatyan. "It's very difficult. We weren't even borderline [in the ratings]. Of course today, it might be a different story. In those days, the network was arrogant. People love this show. I get letters. I still get newsletters from the national club. They love the father-son relationship. They love the childlike innocence that [Starman] has that turns into so much wisdom."

Robert Hays says, "They are a remarkable bunch of people, from all walks of life and from many countries around the world. Starman really touched a lot of people in a wonderful, positive way." Spotlight Starman literature obtained by the authors indicated mailing lists for admirers of the show were, initially, in the thousands. Fans were in North America and several foreign countries, with active chapters in Australia,

STARSHIP ORION

AKA: SPACE PATROL : THE FANTASTIC ADVENTURES OF THE STAR SHIP ORION

AKA: RAUMPATROUILL

There are no more States or Nations - there is only mankind and its Colonies in space. Man has colonised the distant stars. The depths of the oceans have been claimed for living space. With speeds unimaginable today, starships flash through the galaxy. One of these starships is the Orion, a tiny part of an enormous Galactic Security System, defending Earth against menaces from the darkness of space. Let us journey with the Orion and her crew on her patrol at the edge of infinity.

The adventures of the ORION and her crew were made by German and French TV in 1965/66. It was Germany's first science fiction series, made in black-and-white, and lasted only 7 episodes. The first airing in late 1966 was a tremendous success, but the producers decided not to make any continuation (another 7 scripts were completed) because of costs and resources.

Fans in many countries still remember the series:

- The starship diving into the ocean landing in submarine Base 104
- Disputes between Commander Cliff McLane and his 'watchdog' Tamara Jagellovsk
- Acrobatic dances and the uncommon music
- Crazy robots and mad scientists
- The mysterious frogs, the supernova, telenose and the invasion ...

The "Starlight Casino" is an officers mess, located in the deep sea.

You can watch the fishes through large windows, wonder about acrobats mimic dancers or simply drink another whisky.

Original music by Peter Thomas, cinematography by Kurt Hasse and W.P. Hassenstein, film editing by Hannes Nickel and Anneliese Schönnenbeck. Production Design by Werner Achmann and Rolf Zehetbauer, costume design by Margit Bardy and Vera Otto. Production Management - Michael Bittins (production manager), Manfred Kercher (production manager). Assistant directors were Brigitte Liphardt and Guenther Richard, sound was by Werner Seth, Special Effects by Werner Hierl, Jörg M. Kunsdorff, Theo Nischwitz, Vinzenz Sandner and Götz Weidner.

Space Patrol - From 1966 To Now

Planned in the early sixties, it took a great deal of time and money to get the production under way.

The backing of a French TV Network was secured, and the series was off and running. The special effects were in turn very innovative and highly- laughable (offering a future with flat-irons as technical equipment and pencil-sharpeners as control knobs). In 1966 these things looked futuristic; nowadays they seem silly, but they still give the show its air of fun.

The adventures of the Starship Orion were the first- and to date, only space opera project on German TV. There have apparently been several proposals to revive, continue or sequelize the series in the years since the series aired; all of these, sadly, have fallen through, but hope springs eternal. The last try was made by Roland Emmerich in 1996, but was dropped a year later.

Dietmar Schönherr (Commander Cliff McLane) is working in his economic aid project for Nicaragua (since 1985) where he founded the 'Casa de los Tres Mundos' (House of three worlds). But he hasn't left TV completely, where they celebrated his 75th birthday in 2001 with some telecasts.

Eva Pflug (Tamara Jagellovsk) plays theater and in TV films. She was the first (and only) who visited a convention. 34 years after the series the SF fans at the ExpoTrek Convention 2000 were much more interested in her panel than in actors from Star Wars or Galactica.

1 - 1 ANGRIFF AUS DEM ALL (ATTACK FROM OUTER SPACE)

Despite instructions to return to Earth immediately the ORION VII stays on course to the planet Rhea. This even involves ignoring on Alpha Order from the Supreme Space Bureau (ORB). Landing on Rhea is considered impossible, but Commander Cliff McLane intends to prove the otherwise. The operation succeeds.

That escapade, however, shall have consequences. After the insane flight to the second moon of Jupiter, the breakthrough to Saturn base during Stellar War II, and the unauthorized meddling on Alpha Centauri this is the straw that broke the camel's back.

Up to then the ORION belonged to the Fast Space Units, whose head is General Lydia van Dyke. What follows now is a disciplinary transfer to space patrol duty. Furthermore security officer Tamara Jagellovsk from the Galactic Security Division (GSD) is assigned to the ORION as a watchdog.

General Wamsler of the Terrestrial Space Reconnaissance Units informs the ORION crew of this development. McLane offers his resignation, but van Dyke makes it clear to him that he is supposed to return to the Fast Space Units in three years time.

The first mission is for 'recreation': Space traffic monitoring and safeguarding in sector 219-33-9. Lieutenant Orderly Spring-Brauner is taking particular delight in this, being a special friend of the people around McLane.

The presence of Tamara Jagellovsk is something nobody of the ORION crew is pleased about. On their way McLane has them maneuver dangerously close past a solar storm, something the GSD official doesn't exactly like.

Mario de Monti tells Cliff McLane: "She'll be either mental after our first three missions, or--she'll be in command."

That evaluation appears to be correct. Not only does she intend to report de Monti's Whiskey he has aboard, she also won't let McLane shoot down the dead radio satellite "Sky-77."

Later the ORION passes the relay and telecommunication station MZ-4, situated on the edge of no-man's-space. The crew, friend's of the ORION crew aren't answering. Mario is still taking it lightly: "They're either dead or drunk."

Because there are also unidentified triple groups being received on a usually unused frequency, McLane wants to go sure everything is all right. He explains that otherwise the lab cruiser Challenger would collide with the station in 48 hours. He couldn't transmit a course correction because Sky-77, the "deaf nut" is jamming the frequencies.

Cliff sends Atan Shubashi and Hasso Sigbjørnsen over to MZ-4 in the dinghy Lancet 1. Over there the oxygen supply has failed. The two can take a look around only inside their pressure suits. The station crew is dead - frozen in mid-move. Soon afterwards they meet an extra-terrestrial of a humanoid shape. Hasso, getting scared, shoots, yet the exoterrist appears to be immune to ray guns.

The ORION is also about to get into trouble. Seven unidentified flying objects are approaching MZ-4. McLane has to perform an emergency take-off to escape. The aliens are influencing the gravity field of the ORION, which is unable to do anything about it.

Tamara tells McLane that, according to Alpha Instruction 3b, with MZ-4 being lost the station would have to be destroyed through energy incineration - regardless of casualties, what with Hasso and Atan no longer being able to get away. The exoterrists have damaged the electrical systems and the oxygen tanks of the Lancet beyond repair.

McLane is struggling with himself and refuses to execute the command at the last moment, when the guns are already locked on and charged. Because the exoterrists are now jamming even the ORION's operating energy nothing is left but the redescent to Earth to warn of a possible invasion there.

There's no oxygen at MZ-4 and maybe it's deadly to the aliens.

Atan and Hasso are trying to flood the station with oxygen but the station's facilities and the lancet are both sabotaged.

After the aliens' landing Atan uses his own oxygen supply while connecting to Hasso's.

"What is enough for 60 days is also enough for that station" he says.

Nevertheless they appear to be beyond help anyway, the lab cruiser Challenger crashes into the station a while later. But luckily the alien ships created an energy shield around the station.

A while later Atan and Hasso are taken back to earth. The fleet was set in motion to destroy the station but Atan succeeded in repairing the station radio thinking he had endless time.

And in the end Hasso asks: "That was only a nightmare, wasn't it?"

Atan replies: "Even worse. That was Science Fiction!"

1 - 2 PLANET AUSSER KURS (PLANET OFF COURSE)

The cruiser Hydra, under the command of Lydia van Dyke, sends a distress light message. The ship is inside a magnetic storm, it's badly damaged, and incapable of maneuvering. And to think, aboard the Hydra it has just been discovered that within the area of Canes Venatici a planet has been thrown off its track, which is displaying the physical qualities of a sun. The high speeder is racing towards Earth.

McLane is taken by two officials of the Galactic Security Division into their headquarters to Colonel Villa. Already there is Tamara Jagellovsk. They are shown a recording of the distress call. It also contains a coincidentally intercepted transmission by the exoterrists, clarifying who's responsible for the high speeder.

The Command Staff of the Supreme Space Bureau has only two options: evacuation or offensive. Actually the Supreme Council has already withdrawn to the Martian moons and the Army Command to the Martian Outer Base, but of Earth's population at most 0.25 per mil could be rescued, as the disaster is expected to arrive within one week.

It is decided to send 200 ships to find and to destroy the exoterrists' control center guiding the high speeder. McLane's ORION being the fastest ship of the fleet, she is taking part in the search also.

Near the Vesta Group the ORION makes contact with Hydra, which had already been written off. With their help the command center can be located. Because there is big trouble aboard the Hydra, particularly with the air supply, McLane wants to come to the ship first, although being forbidden by General van Dyke. Eventually Tamara Jagellovsk has to threaten melting down the ORION's main control board before McLane gives in.

The control center is destroyed, but the high speeder does not change its course. At the ORB everyone is waiting for a miracle to happen, which according to General Wamsler can only be McLane.

The ORION then tries to annihilate the planet using antimatter bombs. The endeavor fails miserably.

McLane makes a last desperate attempt, which will, however, have the ORION VII destroyed, and the crew will have to see to it that they fight their way to the Hydra - whose fate is unclear - aboard the Lancets.

The ORION, supercharged with energy, is steered into the planet and both are destroyed in a gigantic explosion.

The ORION crew aboard two Lancets soon find the Hydra. Hasso is the first to go on board the damaged cruiser to open the Lancet locks. After fixing the oxygen supply they find the Hydra crew in cryo chambers.

Back on earth, only ORB knows about the planet.

So Cliff gets problems to explain the ORION wreckage to the government officials who ask's

"Supernova - what is that?"

1 - 3 DIE HUETER DES GESETZES (THE KEEPER OF THE LAW) OR (THE GUARDIANS OF THE LAW)

McLane and the others are dragged out of the middle of a robotics course to take on a "special assignment" with the new ORION VIII.

Spring-Brauner is sending them to 12-M-8 to "gut" sixteen space probes whose memory shall be evaluated on Earth for the weekly astrophysical report.

Helga Legrelle and Atan Shubashi are the first to go aboard a Lancet to start work. Meanwhile the ORION is being called by the ore freighter Sikh. Commodore Ruyther, whom Cliff McLane has served under as an ensign, transports Germanicum ore from Pallas to Earth. While he used to be in contact with the colonists, they have been sending only transport rockets to the Sikh lately, which instead of ore contained only overburden. There are seventy colonists working on Pallas with over twenty work robots.

When McLane asks what he should do about it Ruyther replies that in former days he would already be on his way there. Cliff promises to see into the matter. Tamara Jagellovsk pointing out to him the ORION would disappear from Earth's locating system, McLane resorts to a trick: The Lancet with Helga and Atan aboard will generate an energy field--a so called Laurin, so nobody realizes the ORION is on her way completely elsewhere.

On Pallas McLane can't make contact with the colonists, either. Cliff, Tamara, Mario, and Hasso search for the entrance to the underground mine. Meanwhile the ORION is being called by several stations. Spring-Brauner giving an Alpha Order to redescend to Earth. Although the ORION is within location at 12-M-8 all connections fail.

In the upper levels of the mine on Pallas McLane and the others find neither people nor robots. Only when they advance into the underground tunnel system they are overpowered and disarmed by several out of control robots.

They meet the colonists, who tell them there has been a conflict with a drug dealer, resulting in his and one of his cronies being shot. The robots have to protect human life, so in order to prevent further mutual killing they took command over the mine.

Meanwhile the Galactic Security Division interrogates Commodore Ruyther, who has repeatedly brought only trash to Earth. General Wamsler is mad at Colonel Villa, because he had ordered this autonomously. According to Villa "a man can fail, a robot never."

In the Lancet work continues, yet calling the ORION -- in vain. In time the energy reserves are diminishing rapidly but Atan won't let the Laurin break down, despite risking his and Helga's life.

On Pallas McLane and the others have to think of something to overpower the robots. It transpires that the death of drug dealer Forrester is the reason for the robots malfunction - he was shot in a fight with Richard Hall, the boss of the mine. While they have to save men in the first robot law they have to harm others which is against the second law.

Only Tamara remembers the robot course but doesn't exactly know which switches are responsible for this action. After trapping 2 robots Cliff and Tamara reset some switches and send the robots back to the control center. They return with guns and the men make their escape.

Back on the ORION they meet the Lancet last-minute. Cliff counters Atans reproaches: "You've been in my crew long enough and should have learned to act without orders in danger."

A message reaches the ORION. Spring-Brauner has mistakenly sent the ship to a job which should have been done by cadets on board the ARION!

General Wamsler meets the crew in the starlight. A bunch of robots should be brought to a colony and the general has "heard something about laurin ..."

1 - 4 DESERTEURE (DESERTERS)

IV. Deserters

The ORION is testing a new secret weapon the Earth wants to continue standing its ground against the exoterrists who rendered the currently used ray guns ineffective with a new light deflector shield. The test of a so-called Overkill Projector at an asteroid proceeds successfully.

Meanwhile the Supreme Space Bureau is buzzing with excitement. Commander Alonzo Pietro apparently attempted on his own initiative to desert to the exoterrists, taking course to their base AC-1000. Even Pietro himself has no explanation for his actions. The light launcher crews of Vesta base, whose vicinity he operated in, had recently fallen ill with space tantrum, yet among the deserters no symptoms can be found.

Because of the incident there is, by order of the Galactic Security Division, a brain specialist joining the ORION on her flight to the Vesta section. Once there, Overkill Projectors are supposed to be set up at the stations M-8-8-12 and K-16, now occupied by robots.

After 36 days the ORION has reached her destination. The station M-8-8-12 doesn't reply, yet permits a landing. When McLane and his team come into the control center Cliff is attacked by a robot yet able to overpower him.

The robot neurosis strikes not only the accompanying professor as odd, because the deployed robots are considered very reliable. Tamara Jagellovsk who had been on guard duty is replaced by Hasso Sigbjörnson, since she's detailed to take care of the robots while the others set up the Overkill system.

Even while at work Helga Legrelle tries to contact stations H5 and Olaf-1. That fails. Aboard the ORION Hasso is meanwhile programming--apparently under a foreign influence--a new course for the ORION. Instead of K-16 to AC-1000, the exoterrist base Alonzo Pietro intended to desert to.

During liftoff McLane notices the course change and sounds the alarm. Tamara takes command as security officer and accuses Hasso of treason, him being the only one who could have programmed the coordinates while alone on the ORION. Only Helga points out that before Hasso Tamara had already been on space observation detail. She could have programmed AC-1000 also. When right into the discussion Mario de Monti walks up to the computer and programs the course to AC-100, it's obvious to the present brain specialist that Hasso, Mario, and presumably Alonzo Pietro, too, have been influenced by so-called telenosis rays of the exoterrists. He confirms this simply by asking Tamara to approach the computer, which picks up the rays and disseminates them in its vicinity. Tamara also programs AC-100.

McLane and the professor expecting the telenosis base on AC-1000, Cliff decides to pretend deserting, yet once there to destroy the base. However, the ORION cannot inform the Supreme Space Bureau, for one thing because the exoterrists might be given a warning through this, on the other hand because the space stations H5 and the intelligence satellite Olaf-1 still aren't reacting.

On Earth it's already known both have been completely eliminated, and all ships in the Vesta sector are sent after the seemingly deserted ORION, among the Hydra, to destroy McLane's ship before she arrives with the exoterrists on AC-1000--

1 - 5 DER KAMPF UM DIE SONNE (THE BATTLE FOR THE SUN)

Scientists have discovered unusual solar eruptions bound to result in climatic disasters--tidal waves, steppe formation, etc.--soon.

The ORION is on its way to examine the primitive vegetation on a few planetoids, after coincidentally discovering some on a small planet previously deemed infertile. While searching McLane and his crew discover an oddly shaped Lancet made of an unknown material.

During examination Atan Shubashi is taken captive by two men. Cliff McLane, Mario de Monti, and Hasso Sigbjörnson have to intervene. Atan is freed and the two men taken captive.

They turn out to be scientists from the planet Chroma. This is where after Galaxy War I, 400 years ago, Neptune colonists have fled after their defeat. One furthermore learns from the two scientists that it is Chroma from which the solar protuberances are controlled. The experiments are necessary because their own sun is gradually cooling down.

McLane takes off to Chroma with a special clearance by Colonel Villa. There is a war to prevent.

Once there the ORION crew is impressed. Chroma is a heavenly beautiful planet. Cliff proceeds in the company of one of the captured scientists to the mistress of the planet. It is the women who rule here; men just perform subordinate tasks as scientists, gardeners, and soldiers.

The mistress, called SHE, isn't easily convinced of the (still) peaceful intentions. Meanwhile on Earth a decision has already been made to attack Chroma.

Moreover Tamara Jagellovsk receives an encrypted message from the Galactic Security Division. Joined by the two captured scientists she flies to Chroma with a Lancet but is arrested and imprisoned there, while the attack is imminent--

1 - 6 DIE RAUMFALLE (THE SPACE TRAP)

VI. The Space Trap

Once more the ORION VIII is given a routine assignment. Surprisingly, however, the crew has to take along a civilian. The writer Pieter-Paul Ibsen has obtained, with his connections to the responsible ministry, a permission for flying with them to gather material for his new novel.

To cap it all Pie-Po, as Ibsen is called behind his back, wants a special present for his birthday, he is celebrating aboard. He would like to fly a Lancet on his own. McLane shows little enthusiasm but eventually gives in.

Something, however, is throwing Ibsen off course, forcing him to emergency land on the asteroid Mura. This is where exiles founded a colony. Their head is the megalomaniac scientist Tourenne. Ibsen is caught to lure the ORION to Mura with his aid and capture the crew.

McLane and his crew are also taken into custody. Tourenne would like to take over the ORION to desert to the exoterrists. Tamara Jagellovsk and Helga Legrelle are able to overpower one of the guards and to free Mario de Monti, Hasso Sigbjörnson and Atan Shubashi.

Back on board the ORION they threaten to blow up the ship and Mura if McLane and Ibsen aren't back aboard on the double. In the end Tourenne is forced to give in. Yet he still has an ace up his sleeve. Eventually McLane has to let his foes aboard, who promises not to harm them. Still the ORION crew is looking for an alternative solution--

1 - 7 INVASION (INVASION)

Once again Cliff is talking to General Wamsler about his disciplinary transfer about to continue another half year. Just then the TRAV (Terrestrial Space Reconnaissance Units) are receiving a distress call from the GSD cruiser Tau by Commander Lindley. They have gotten into a heavy light storm. Aboard among them are the Chief of the Galactic Security Division, Colonel Villa and his staff.

Their power cut, Lindley wants to get from board as quickly as possible to fight their way through the planet Gordon. Colonel Villa doesn't believe the Tau has gotten into a normal light storm but talks in his last radio message about changing gravity fields and gravitation waves.

Safe and sound back on Earth Villa reports to a hearing about the incidents. Regrettably only he and his staff have reached Gordon while Lindley is missing. Villa ostensibly no longer recalls anything like gravity fields. McLane, who near MZ-4 was involved in similar occurrences, is present during the interview. Villa now believing in a normal light storm puzzles him. After all the storm might just as well be a consequence of the gravity field formation. Wamsler and the others, however, whistle Cliff back.

Later the ORION is given an assignment checking space surveillance satellites in the Vesta sector, situated near Gordon. At the last minute take-off is prohibited by the GSD taking on the assignment itself. In the Starlight Casino meets the head of Star Base Surveillance. Colonel Mulligan has just been relieved of his duties by the GSD and is getting plastered.

McLane is becoming more and more suspicious of Colonel Villa. He persuades Tamara Jagellovsk to find out what Villa wanted on Gordon. But first he wants an appointment with her boss. He would like to get a special clearance to Gordon from him, to see Villa's reaction.

While Tamara is caught retrieving the desired data from the Computer, McLane talks to Dr. Heine, who examined Villa after his return. He thinks it's rather McLane who's crazy, not the Colonel.

The ORION is permitted to go to Gordon. Villa even orders chief engineer Kranz, an expert on artificial gravity formation, aboard because the ship is being equipped with an intrinsic force field making it able to resist the gravitational fields. Tamara's absence Villa explains by a special course.

When the ORION locates battleships on her flight it's already too late. Villa and his men have planned the invasion perfectly. They jam all radio traffic, flood submarine bases, etc.

Chief engineer Kranz belongs to the traitors. He takes command over the ORION. While the invasion is moving along TRAV Lieutenant Orderly Spring-Brauner is, as usual, slow in reacting but, for once, appropriate--

STARSTRIDER

Two aliens from another planet arrive on Earth to learn more about the planet by asking three teams of humans, questions about their world.

Starstrider starred Sylvester McCoy more famous for playing the 7th Doctor in DOCTOR WHO and for starring in the third Dr. Who film. Essentially a children's game show with quiz, physical and skill bits to it. A proto-Crystal Maze if you will. Entire programme was set in space with a sage-like galaxy master figure doling out the questions and challenges, with Sylvester McCoy gurning in a sidekick capacity.

Main points of interest: a round where you answered questions while sat on a fairground bull dressed up as a space beast called "the Grunderhunter", and a round where you had to guide a blindfolded teammate to stand on a square grid containing some white squares (for points) while avoiding standing on the red squares (for a penalty).

Starstrider was a children's quiz show that was produced by Granada Television and aired on ITV in 1984 and 1985 and ran for 2 series, the host for series 1 was Roger Sloman and series 2 was hosted by Jim Carter, future Doctor Who actor Sylvester McCoy co hosted both series.

Each week 3 teams of 4 youngsters played over 5 rounds.

Round 1

The teams were asked very difficult questions and 3 members of each team had a series of reference books to look up the answers and the team captains were given the answer through headphones that they were wearing and once they had the answer the captain would press the buzzer and gave the answer, if they were correct they scored some points if they were wrong the other 2 teams continued to search for the correct answer.

Round 2

This was basically a finger on the buzzer round where the team captains were asked questions and whoever buzzed in and gave a correct answer scored the points if not the question was offered to the other teams.

This was replaced in series 2 by a round where a team member is blindfolded and guided through an intergalactic assault course by the other team members.

Round 3

This round had 1 member of each team riding on a rodeo style item (called the Grunderhunter) as used on the fairground while answering questions to score points for their teams.

In series 2 this was regulated to Round 4

Round 4

This was a round called the 'Light Maze' in which a team member was blindfolded and was guided through the maze by the other team members, the maze had red squares and white squares on the floor and if they stepped on a white square they scored 10 points for their team but if they stepped on a red square they lost 10 points.

This was replaced in series 2 by what was Round 3 in series 1.

Round 5

The final round was another fingers on the buzzer round where the team captains were yet again asked General Knowledge questions but this time the round lasted 2 minutes and the team with the most points at the end of the round were declared the winners.

In series 2 the presenters entered the studio through a laserlight tunnel which you see in nightclubs which was new at the time and also in that series the scores were shown using a laserlight.

STARSTUFF

Chris, a young boy of about 12, had a massive computer in his bedroom with a laughable amount of dials and levers that somehow was able to hook up a video feed to the future, where Ingrid lived on a spaceship in a space colony. Ingrid was a girl of about 13, I would guess. Chris would talk to her about what life was like on Earth, and Ingrid would talk to Chris about what life was like in the space colony.

Starstuff was a locally produced 60 minute kid's show taped at WCAU-10 on City Line Avenue in Philadelphia, PA. There was only one season of Starstuff recorded in the summer of 1980, with a total of 18 episodes. It was repeated in reruns for several years after 1980.

There were only a few camera shots on the set. One was Chris's bedroom. One was Ingrid's bedroom on the spaceship. The other was a shot of another area of Ingrid's spaceship, when she would be talking to her Aunt Val and her (unnamed) father.

A reoccurring theme would be Chris hiding the fact that he was able to speak to Ingrid in the future. Knocks on the door and visitors in his room always ended up with him quickly turning off his monitor or simply jumping up and standing in front of it. I don't recall why he was hiding her presence, only that it was an integral theme to the show.

Besides Chris, Aunt Val, and her father, the only other communication Ingrid had was with her Dear Diary, a robot-like globe with dials that would speak back to her in a monotone voice. Audio samples of Dear Diary are included on this page. Ingrid also had a goat named Capricorn.

Chris would frequently be visited by his Uncle Pete, a middle-aged black man who would offer words of wisdom when Chris needed it. I seem to recall him wanting to tell Uncle Pete about Ingrid in one of the episodes, but I can't be positive of it. Chris's mom was never visible, you'd just hear her talking through his bedroom door from time to time as he'd scramble to turn the screen off where Ingrid was shown.

Chris and Ingrid would often play each other short movies. Chris had a VCR-esque machine to show Ingrid his movies, while Ingrid had a record player with 7-inch vinyls that would somehow play movies for Chris. The first segment would generally be an educational skit, and would be segments from the old Kidsworld show. The other two skits would invariably be segments from Laurel and Hardy's Laughtunes. Laurel and Hardy were a favorite -- both Chris and Ingrid loved watching them.

The last episode's cliffhanger entailed Chris and his mom moving, and how he was afraid that he wouldn't be able to hook up to Ingrid at the new location.

The last skit, always shown during the last 10 minutes of the show, was the extremely memorable The Edge Of Space, which was a space-based puppet segment starring Krikles, Zornad, and their robot assistant Giz exploring the universe in their spaceship. It had its own theme song and music, also included on this page. The Edge Of Space was a continuing story every week. From Mark Ritts, lead puppeteer for the show;

"I taped the puppet bits separately, perhaps a half dozen at a time, on a day when the main cast was off learning their lines. So I don't remember even meeting them ... Krikles's voice was a simple, light character voice that I have used years, variously adapted, for a string of characters, including Storytime's "Kino" (PBS). Zornad's voice was a bit of a steal from a favorite comic of mine who used to be a regular on the old Steve Allen Show -- Dayton Allen, whose signature line was "Whyyyyy not??!"

STELLA STELLARIS

Stella, an extraterrestrial from the planet Stellaris, is sent to earth to study the feelings, thoughts and emotions of human beings. With her magical powers she unwittingly creates sheer chaos for a family staying in a magnificent baroque palace in the mountains.

We watched this in school, it was an excellent way to get used to hearing German- yes, it is in German. Though, subtitled versions were available. I really enjoyed watching it, I loved the characters. Though the final pairing surprised me at the time, it makes sense to me now. I remember wishing that my father were an inventor also! It had some very amusing moments in it, and I remember it being quite thought provoking in places. It may have dated a little over the past 10 years, special effects wise, however, I think it's still worth a watch. I still often think of 'Stella Stellaris' when I think of school and German. Quite a nice Sci Fi series.

STEPHEN KING'S GOLDEN YEARS

As with much of King's work, there's an intriguing premise, but an overlong execution. Harlan Williams is the elderly janitor of Falco Plains, a secret government lab. An explosion which kills two researchers leaves Harlan exposed to an unknown chemical cocktail. At first he exhibits no adverse effects - then his wife begins to notice changes in his behaviour and appearance. Harlan is getting younger - the ageing process is in reverse. Naturally the government wants to study him and will stop at nothing to get hold of him, putting a ruthless agent, Jude Andrews, on his tail. With the help of a sympathetic former colleague of Andrews, Terry Spann, Harlan and his wife, Gina, become fugitives and a cross-country chase ensues, before the inevitable dramatic climax.

Always be suspicious of anything with the author or director's name in the title - sure, it's a selling point in a crowded TV universe, but it can also be an admission that the show is so weak it needs a boost from a big name. And that could be said of this six-part series written specially for TV by Stephen King. Take away King's name and you've an OK mini-series memorable mostly for David Bowie's eponymous song that closes each episode. The writer and executive producer for the series was Stephen King, director was Kenneth Fink and the producers for the series were Mitchell Galin and Peter R. McIntosh, the broadcast dates given are for the UK (Channel Four).

STEPHEN KING'S STORM OF THE CENTURY

STEPHEN KING'S STORM OF THE CENTURY

A small village off the mainland is about to receive a huge winter storm. It won't be just another storm for them. A strange visitor named Andre Linoge comes to the small village and gives the residents havoc. He knows everything about them, and when he tells the truth about one of them, that person denies it. The town constable, Mike Anderson, tries to keep everyone in check with the huge storm and Linoge. Linoge keeps telling the people, "Give me what I want and I will go away"...

Storm of the Century is a 1999 horror TV miniseries written by Stephen King and directed by Craig R. Baxley. Promotional material for the miniseries claimed that it was King's first ever story written exclusively for a miniseries, but was actually his second after the not-as-well-known Golden Years. King would later publish the screenplay in book form, with the screenplay format intact.

Produced by Thomas H. Brodek (senior), Mark Carliner (executive), Bruce Dunn (associate), Stephen King (executive), Robert F. Phillips (line). Original music by Gary Chang. Cinematography by David Connell, Film Editing by Sonny Baskin, Casting Lynn Kressel, Production Design by Craig Stearns, Art Direction Randy Moore, Sound Department - Denis Bellingham (boom operator), David Lee (sound), Special Effects Warren Appleby (special effects technician), Chris Bond (composer: Night 1: Godsoe's and Powerlines Sequences), Robert Cribbett (roto/paint artist), Nathalie Gonthier (roto/paint artist), Lucy Hofert (visual effects supervisor), Michael Kavanagh (special effects coordinator), John MacGillivray (key special effects) Boyd Shermis (visual effects supervisor), James D. Tittle (digital effects coordinator: Centropolis Effects), Rundle Troy (key snow effects)

Other crew - John Curry (set electrician), Dylan M. Gross (aerial camera), Juli-Ann Kay (casting - associate: Toronto), Ray McMillan (motion control supervisor), Tracy Shaw (key rigging grip), Giancarlo J. Sini (production controller: Maine), Chris Warren (best boy electric: rigging), Robert 'Bobby Z' Zajonc (aerial coordinator). Special effects were by Gajdecki Visual Effects (GVFX) [ca], Movie Magi, Netter Digital Animation and Frantic Films.

I bought the screenplay for "Storm Of The Century" Friday, and I'm debating whether or not to finish it. I won't ruin it for viewers, but I will say that this stunningly realistic portrait of a small, tightly-knit Maine community torn apart by madness, depravity, and horrific bursts of violence, is, in my opinion, the best Stephen King mini-series out of all of them. (Even surpassing "It", which until now, was my favorite.) Tim Daly is brilliant, Debrah Farentino is good, but it is Colm Feore, as the sinister Andre Linoge, that is the standout in a brilliantly created, suspensefully realized television motion picture experience. * out of four stars. Easily one of the best King has ever written.

Evidence throughout the film suggests that Andre Linoge is some sort of demon.

While retrieving items from his home later in the film, Michael Anderson spells out the name 'Linoge' and tells one of the villagers the Biblical account of Jesus casting a demon out of an afflicted man and into a herd of swine. He recounts that before the swine drown, Jesus asks the demon to identify itself and it answers "Our name is Legion, for we are many." While Anderson explains this, he re-arranges the name 'Linoge' to spell 'Legion'.

Linoge bears a strong resemblance to Randall Flagg, a dark, powerful character that appears in many of King's works (The Stand, The Dark Tower series, and Needful Things to name a few), further affirming he and Flagg are one and the same or that there are many of them. It might also be that both assume the role of "the ultimate evil" in Stephen King's realm of lore, all-knowing and everpresent no matter what the story entails.

At one point, the townspeople have a shared dream of the town found deserted with newscasters comparing it to the vanishing of the population of Roanoke Island. Addressing the residents, Linoge hints that he made the same offer to the people of Roanoke but they refused and thus paid the price, forced to commit mass suicide.

STEPHEN KING'S THE LANGOLIERS

It's almost a pastiche of all those hokey Airport movies, but instead of a terrorist or a storm, the disaster imperilling a plane here is a rip in time. During a Los Angeles to Boston red-eye flight, a group of ten passengers awake from a doze to discover that all their fellow travellers and the pilot have mysteriously vanished. Only the sleepers have survived.

Luckily the plane is on auto-pilot and equally luckily, one of the survivors is a pilot (what are the odds?), enabling them to land. But their problems aren't over yet as they've hopped back into the past which turns out to be just an empty shell. The airport's deserted, food in the cafeteria has no flavour and even the beer's gone flat. What's more, a strange noise is getting ever closer and it's not friendly - the Langoliers are coming!

The stranded group realise their only way out is to retrace their flightpath and try go back through the time-rip. Can they take off before the Langoliers get them?

Mini-series adaptation of a King short story that, at four hours, takes a lot longer to get through than the original! A good cast includes Quantum Leap's Dean Stockwell as a mystery writer, Kate Maberley as a telepathic blind girl, thirtysomething's Patricia Wettig as a lonely schoolteacher and Bronson Pinchot over-acting wildly as a financial whiz tormented by childhood horror stories that the Langoliers will eat up all the bad boys an girls.

So what's a Langolier? Basically, the 're nature's timekeepers, cleaning up the mess we leave behind by literally devouring the past, leaving an empty void. They're like Pacmen with very sharp teeth. There are enough plot twists to satisfy King fans but this mini-series takes too long to unravel them. Even though he comes up with some of the theories, Dean Stockwell in particular spends far too much time looking deep in thought. There's no sense of urgency until it's almost too late - but isn't that so often the way . Mark Lindsay Chapman has starred in a number of TV and Film SF projects, including SWAMP THING.

The story of The Langoliers was dramatised by Tom Holland and was based on the Novella 'The Langoliers' from 'Four Past Midnight' by Stephen King. The producer for the series was David Kappes, the executive producers were Richard P. Rubinstein and Mitchell Galin.

STEPHEN KING'S STORM OF THE CENTURY

STEPHEN KING'S THE STAND

Ambitious mini-series adapted by King himself from his own epic novel about a group of men and women who survive a deadly plague that wipes out most of the population and must now make a last stand against a satanic being. SF? Well, a bit, in that the initial premise has a virulent flu-like super-bug - nicknamed Captain Tripps - escaping at a top-secret chemical-testing lab in the California desert. One infected soldier flees with his family and so the outbreak is carried across the country. And that's the way the world ends - not with a bang but a sniffle.

Ray Walston also starred in MY FAVOURITE MARTIAN. From this 20th century nightmare scenario, King has constructed an almost biblical tale of new beginnings and a classic story of good v. evil, full of demons and prophetic visions. And as well as writing the teleplay, King also serves as executive producer and has a Hitchcock-style cameo as a truck driver. A fine cast is headed by Rob Lowe as deaf-mute Nick Andros and Jamey Sheridan as the satanic Randall Flagg, and includes Gary Sinise as a noble new-age politician, Molly Ringwald as his feisty girlfriend, Laura San Giacomo as the devil's handmaiden, Matt Frewer (surprisingly unconvincing) as a loony pyromaniac, Ruby Dee as God's aged spokeswoman, Ray Walston as a wise old soul, Adam Storke as a rock star and Bill Fagerbaake as a pure at heart simpleton. At eight hours it's a marathon stint and even so telescopes chunks of the book, but remains well worth watching - some scenes are exceptionally well realised, such as a claustrophobic journey through a tunnel jammed with cars and bodies.

King's enormous novel about the holocaust and after, specifically about a plague produced by the military that wipes out most of near-future America, was optioned as a feature film for some years, but nobody could find a way of fitting such a huge story into conventional film length, and the dark subject matter also worried the studios.

The tv solution was probably the best, and it is indeed a well made miniseries, probably Garris's best piece of direction to date, and something of a television milestone. Hovering between SF and fantasy, both book and miniseries focus on character studies as the survivors slowly begin to rebuild, with the democratic good guys restoring a decent sense of community in Denver and the fascist bad guys in Las Vegas planning to nuke them. Both groups have quasi-supernatural guardians, the old black woman Mother Abigail standing for good, and Randall Flagg, the Dar Man, for evil. Some SF fans feel that the supernatural subtext diminishes the story's strength as science fiction, but the story remains an optimistic, populist classic about the endurance of the human spirit after enormous disaster, and the miniseries retains much of this strength. It is available on videotape.

Stephen King wrote the original novel from which this series was based. The executive producers were Stephen King and Richard P. STEVEN SPIELBERG'S AMAZING STORIES

Anthology series which dealt mainly in science fiction stories.

On the face of it, this collection of fantastic tales of the bizarre and the unusual had everything going for it - a remarkable line-up of acting and directorial talent, movie-style budgets and the Midas touch of Spielberg himself. Shame it wasn't more successful. Amazing Stories was largely ignored by US audiences, endorsed with reservations by US critics and has aired in the UK in such piecemeal fashion as to dissipate its potential impact. It doesn't quite deserve the tag of TV's Heaven's Gate, but at around one million dollars per half-hour episode, this most expensive of TV shows of its day certainly didn't live up to its price tag.

Amazing Stories' greatest strength is its visual appeal. With such resources at his disposal, Spielberg could extend the visual frontiers of television beyond what was normal for the mid- Eighties. Each tale had the look of a feature film, with special effects ranging from charming to lavish. In the series premiere, Ghost Train (shown second in the UK), which Spielberg directed, a huge locomotive ploughs through a house, while in the double-length episode, The Mission, again directed by Spielberg and including Kevin Costner and Kiefer Sutherland among its stars, a crippled WW2 bomber suddenly develops cartoon wheels, enabling it to land safely.

Spielberg called Amazing Stories a 'director's series' and certainly enticed some of Hollywood's finest to support his venture. Martin Scorsese, Robert Zemeckis, Clint Eastwood, Joe Dante, Irving Kershner, Burt Reynolds, Peter Hyams, Danny De Vito and Tobe Hooper were among big-name directors lured aboard. As well as directing some episodes himself, Spielberg also contributed many of the story ideas. His privileged status also enabled him to give big-budget breaks to many little-known directors, such as Phil Joanou whose later career included a segment of Wild Palms. As such, Amazing Stories was an expensive experiment, a rare event in a usually conservative medium.

Such worthy motives couldn't counter the series' shortcomings. All too often, the segments were built around an over-simplified premise and one-dimensional characters that never really amounted to much. There's plenty of charm but not enough wonder, much sentiment but little pathos, a few laughs but insufficient irony. Surface without substance.

It's not all bad, though. Scorsese's Mirror, Mirror, about a horror novelist terrorised by a black-caped phantom, is a really creepy little chiller, and The Amazing Falsworth, about a psychic nightclub performer who encounters a serial killer in his audience, has its unsettling moments. Eastwood's segment, Vanessa in the Garden, is unexpectedly poignant, while You Gotta Believe Me, in which Charles Durning plays a man with a premonition of disaster, recalls the paranoia of a Twilight Zone.

Amazing Stories marked Spielberg's return to television - the medium that gave him his first break as a director on an episode of Rod Serling's Night Gallery, and led to success for his supervising producers, Joshua Brand and John Falsey, who went on to create the drama St Elsewhere and one of television's best cult series, Northern Exposure.

In the face of audiences used to seeing recurring characters and familiar settings, short story anthologies will always have a hard time sustaining their place in ratings-led schedules. Spielberg had enough clout to secure a two-year prime-time deal. A lesser man wouldn't have got nearly so far.

Some very famous directors/actors were responsible for directing many of the episodes these included SPIELBERG himself and Robert Zemeckis, Bury Reynolds, Clint Eastwood, Joe Dane, Martin Scorsese, Danny DeVito and Tom Holland. There was no regular cast in the show, except for Ray Walston as the Story Teller who was also the host in the opening credits. There were many guest stars since this was an ANTHOLOGY show, some of the most famous actors to star were Drew Barrymore, Sid Ceaser, Kevin Costner, Beau Bridges, Charlie Sheen, Robert Picardo, who would later go on to play the Doctor in STAR TREK : VOYAGER. Lane Smith (LOIS AND CLARK), John Lithgow; who would soon go on to play Dick Solomon in the popular SF SITCOM THIRD ROCK FROM THE SUN.

John Lithgo also won an Emmy Award for his performance in this episode. Other stars of note are Danny DeVito, Patrick Swazye, June Lockhart who played Maureen Robinson in LOST IN SPACE and Carrie Fisher

SF related shows were 'Fine Tuning' , were a boy invents a TV reciever that allows him to communicate with aliens. 'The Eternal Mind' in which a dying scientist intends on using a process to merge his human mind with a computer. 'Miss Stardust' in which an alien arrives on Earth and threatens to destroy it unless she is allowed to enter a beauty contest.

This anthology series was an attempt to recapture the days of anthologies series of the 1950s and 60s. The show came about at the same time as the new TWILIGHT ZONE. Both shows were similar in nature except that AS had the backing of STEPHEN SPEILBERG, who managed to bring in some famous directors and actors. Despite this many of the stories lacked much interest.

One of the stories was expanded and filmed as a feature film titled Batteries Not Included (1987), and a feature film was released which encompassed the episodes 'The Mission', 'Mummy, Daddy' and 'Go to the head of the Class', the film was titled simply Amazing Stories (1987).

An ambitious attempt to revive the 1950s-60s anthology format -- which came at the same time as actual revivals of The TWILIGHT ZONE (1985-7) and Alfred Hitchcock Presents (1985-6), and a few competitors like The Hitch Hiker (1983-6) and Tales from the Darkside (1984-7), this was less an SF series than its pulp-derived title suggested, more often going for the blend of fantasy and sentiment found in the less scary episodes of the original TWILIGHT ZONE. Kept afloat for two years through NBC having committed themselves, astonishingly, to 44 episodes from the very beginning, AS, despite its large budget and the unusually strong directing talent Spielberg was able to attract (Eastwood, Zemeckis, Scorsese, Bartel, etc.), was unsuccessful. Many disappointed viewers and critics felt that Spielberg had stretched himself too thin, as had Rod Serling with TWILIGHT ZONE , by generating the often fragile storylines for the bulk of the episodes (16 out of 22 in the first season); one such projected episode looked even more fragile when expanded into a feature, Batteries Not Included (1987). Too many of the stories, despite good special effects and performances, led nowhere.

Typical of AS's uneven tone was the extended Spielberg-directed episode "The Mission", a 50min WWII-bomber anecdote presciently cast (Kevin Costner, Kiefer Sutherland) and suspenseful directed, but sinking limply into a ludicrous and irritating fantasy finale. AS did have surprises -- the gritty cartoon episode "The Family Dog", designed by Tim Burton, being perhaps the overall highlight -- but mainly it expressed the diminishing-return whimsy that was beginning to affect even Spielberg's big-screen work. Three episodes -- "The Mission", "Mummy, Daddy" and "Go to the Head of the Class" -- were released together as a feature film, Amazing Stories (1987), outside the USA, and many other episodes have been released in groups of three on videotape. The versions of individual episodes are collected in Steven Spielberg's Amazing Stories (anth 1986) and Volume II of Steven Spielberg's Amazing Stories (anth 1986), both ed Steven Bauer.

No matter how Amazing Stories was judged it was bound to be a letdown. The series was one of three anthology series to debut in the fall of 1985. Of the three, Amazing Stories was the only 'original' one, the other two: TWILIGHT ZONE and Alfred Hitchcock Presents were resurrections of old series. Despite being a new series, Amazing Stories had a lot to live up to since it was produced by Steven Spielberg. Spielberg of course had started out in television, directing such things as one segment of The Night Gallery pilot and the made for TV movie Duel, before graduating to the big screen and such blockbuster films as: Jaws. E.T. and Raiders of the Lost Ark.

NBC had bought Amazing Stories on Spielberg's name and committed itself to two years of the series, an unheard of practice. So unless the series was very, very good it had to fall short of someone's expectations. With no host to introduce the stories the series' only unifying theme was that the stories were 'Amazing'. Some of the episodes were very good. a few were bad however most were just typical television. This was despite the fact that the series boasted an impressive list of both actors and directors, many whom had come to television after success on the big screen. After the two year commitment was up NBC dropped Amazing Stories something they most likely would have done at the end of the first season had they had the option.

The series came to the UK on the 19th April 1992 on BBC1, and has been shown many times on the Sci-Fi Channel. Executive producer for the series was Stephen Spielberg, supervising producer was Joshua Brand and John Falsey, story editor was Mick Garris and the theme was created by John Williams. This has remained Speilbergs only attempt to break into the SF TV industry, which is generally considered not to have succeeded, it did however bring in some of the most famous directors, actors and writers in the industry, a shame it did not reach the success it could have.

Developed by.. Steven Spielberg, John Falsey, Joshua Brand; Executive Producer: Steven Spielberg; Production Executives: Kathleen Kennedy, Frank Marshall; Producer: David E. Vogel; Supervising Producers: □ John Falsey, Joshua Brand; Associate Producers: □ Skip Lusk, Stephen Semel, Steve Starkey, Cheryl Bloch, Cleve Reinhard; Theme: John Williams; NBC/Universal, 30 minutes.

Steven Spielberg may have become a feature film superstar director since the journeyman days when he was directing Columbo, Night Gallery and The Psychiatrist, but years after his feature successes with E. T and the Indiana Jones films, his continued fascination with television led him to Amazing Stories. The vision of the show came up because Steven had ideas and stories flowing out of his head like a water spigot. An opportunity to return to television seemed to be an ideal way of sharing all of those exciting stories with the millions of television viewers.

In 1985, Spielberg was introduced to NBC chairman Grant Tinker and NBC president Brandon Tartikoff by pal Gary David Goldberg, producer of Family Ties. In an unprecedented agreement, Spielberg convinced Tinker and NBC to give him a solid two years and 44 episodes to run his show. Grabbing the title from the science fiction digest magazine that has been running since 1926, Spielberg asked for and got a budget of $750,000 to $1 million per episode. He also was given more lead time to prepare the show and control publicity and marketing. All 22 episodes of the first season were completed by the week the first episode aired, an accomplishment unheard of in television. So jealously did Spielberg guard the show, that NBC did not see their first film print until six weeks before the premiere of the series. Additionally, Spielberg made sure the network had "hands off" in the making of the series so he could work in peace and quiet and not have undue pressures.

Going from features to television is often seen as a step backwards. But not for Spielberg, who saw his return to the small screen as a celebration of the medium. Returning to NBC was a sentimental journey for Spielberg, since his first professional directing job was for a segment of the Night Gallery pilot in 1969. It was also an opportunity for him and his fellow directors to go back and shoot fast again. Many filmmakers say they lose interest in their work if a particular project takes too long to complete.

So unique was the deal that Spielberg was able to attract many of his feature director buddies into doing a half-hour of fantasy television. Industry shakers such as Martin Scorsese, Clint Eastwood, Burt Reynolds, and Peter Hyams signed aboard to direct. "Name" actors such as Kevin Costner, Rhea Perlman, Helen Shaver, Charlie Sheen, Keifer Sutherland, Patrick Swayze and Sam Waterston picked up the scripts. "Steven asked me to do one of the first episodes of the show," says director Peter Hyams, who helmed the episode "The Amazing Falsworth," starring Gregory Hines. "It had a sense of humour, it was not the kind of thing you see on everyday television. Steve Spielberg is simply somebody I personally liked so much and admire so much that I jumped at the chance because he is somebody I like to be with, to work with. It seemed to be such an ambitious thing at the time for television. You take a bunch of disparate filmmakers and try to bring the feature film technique and quality on a television schedule. I think a lot of people in drama think that's too difficult."

Hyams felt that the idea of the show was "a wonderful idea to create something that tried to push the limits of television, to attract actors, directors and writers that we don't normally attract to form a showcase. I felt it was extraordinary." Hyams felt the two-year experiment by Spielberg and company succeeded admirably. "He succeeded because he got Clint Eastwood, Martin Scorsese, Paul Bartel, Phil Joanou, and he had Kevin Costner, Gregory Hines. We had first-time directors, we had veteran directors," says Hyams. The only person who turned down an invitation was Lawrence of Arabia's David Lean, who said he just couldn't shoot that fast. He wanted six months to do a half-hour. Reminded of this, Hyams says that filmmaking brings certain demands to directors.

"It's an exercise in fighting against one's limitations. If you're used to shooting something in sixty days and you only have six days, well, you have to make compromises. You cannot expect the same level of complexity and finish in six days as in sixty days. The question is, what kind of compromises are you willing to make? And what can you do to make the six days better than anybody else? Part of it is fun, part of it is dealing with the craft of filmmaking. And the craft of filmmaking can be hard and not always go your way. And that brings in your innovative thinking."

For Hyams, the only feedback that mattered was Steven Spielberg's. "I think Steven was pleased. That says a lot. That meant the world to me," says Hyams. "I didn't want to disappoint him. The fact that he seemed pleased made me happy. Anytime you get the chance to spend time with somebody that bright and gifted is an exciting time. And I think he's as gifted and intelligent a guy as I've ever worked with in my life." But Amazing Stories was not merely a celebrity fest; it was also a professional training ground for people who had never before worked on television. The series was Spielberg's attempt at a professional film school clique. He wanted a revolving door of talent, experienced and inexperienced.

Mick Garris was a young man who paid his dues by doing film publicity, operating R2-D2 for Lucasfilm, and directing documentaries before Spielberg tapped him as a story editor for the series. After writing nine episodes and making his directorial debut with the episode "Life on Death Row," Garris today reflects on his experiences with the show. "I'm proud of many episodes; some of them I don't think of too well for a number of reasons," says Garris. "Probably I'm happiest with the one I directed, 'Life on Death Row,' just because it was very different from a lot of them. It was very serious and dramatic, and I think I've grown a lot as a director by the experience. It came out really well. It had wonderful performances in there, it's very dramatic, it takes its time and had some genuine suspense. 'Amazing Falsworth' I like a whole lot, too," notes Garris. "Steven and I won an Edgar Mystery Writers of America award for that. That was one of the few suspenseful and scary things made for episodic television, and I'm very proud of that. They did a real good job on that one. Some of them I think came out much less. 'Such Interesting Neighbors' is probably my least favorite of any of them."

On other episodes, Garris points to "both of Steven's shows—I thought 'Ghost Train' was wonderful. I thought 'The Mission' was wonderful. I liked the period pieces; I thought 'Thanksgiving' by Todd Holland was good. Both of Tom Holland's episodes were really interesting. The first one Dante ['Boo!'], was a really good one. I thought that Richard Matheson's script, 'The Doll,' that Phil loanou did with John Lithgow was absolutely wonderful. 'The Doll' was unique in that it was written for The Twilight Zone in 1959 by Richard Matheson. We managed to beat that script for the show. I thought it worked great. There was very little rewriting to bring it up to date. It was very faithful to the original script. 'Dorothy and Ben' was a terrific episode—it had a lot of heart and soul to it. A lot of them worked really well."

In his job as a story editor it was Garris's responsibility to sift through the many different ideas and scripts that were generated for the show. Scripts were written largely in-house or from stories suggested by Spielberg. Garris mainly rewrote scripts to conform to the parameters Steven wanted. "It was an unusual series because most of the story ideas were generated by Steven himself," points out Garris. "The whole time I was on the show, a year as a story editor and another year as a freelancer, I never once spoke to anyone at NBC or Universal about the content of the show. That was dealt with by much higher echelons than me. I never really accepted any scripts. I was involved in either writing or rewriting and doing whatever changes needed to be done to fit the schedule and meet the requirements of the show. Whatever the producers or directors felt was problematic. Basically, I was a script doctor. Scripts were basically in-house and were also handed out to freelance writers. People who wanted to work on the show were excited by the idea of an anthology series."

Garris says that regular brainstorming sessions provided catalysts to many of the stories produced for the show. "In the second season, we did a weekly round table where people would talk about the scripts and critique the ideas. Bob Zemeckis, Bob Gale, Steven, myself, Michael McGill, Richard Matheson, a whole bunch of people, and it was really exciting! Really intimidating at first to a newcomer like myself." Providing an example of what happens on his job on the show, Garris offers the episode "Mirror, Mirror," directed by Martin Scorsese. [It] was a really good script for Amazing Stories, but it was relentlessly dreary and very, very dark. My job as story editor was to do whatever rewriting needed to be done. They wanted a show that was more fun than that. It really started from scratch on the rewrite. I pretty much completely rewrote that episode, not because Joe Minion's script wasn't good, we just felt it needed to be more appropriate for the series."

Not so well known is that Amazing Stories was responsible for not one, but two spinoffs. *batteries not included (1987), a film directed by Matthew Robbins and starring Hume Cronyn and Jessica Tandy, was an outgrowth of an Amazing Stories script. *batteries not included was a tale of young and old tenants in a decrepit apartment building in New York who are visited by a bunch of friendly little blinky-winky flying saucers.

"*batteries not included was indeed an Amazing Stories script that Steven had written, and he offered me the opportunity to adapt it as a screenplay, and he worked with me on it," says Garris. "He very generously gave me the full credit on the original script, although it was going to be written by the two of us. There were so many people involved in the arbitration of that script that he allowed my draft to be submitted with just my name. Again, a generous man."

The second spinoff took a little bit longer. "Family Dog" first appeared as an animated episode of the show. Spielberg liked the idea of the show so much he tried developing it, with director Tim Burton, as a series in the same mode as The Simpsons. As early as 1991, CBS announced the show as a prime-time series. The adventures of an unnamed pooch who lives with the Bickfords and is picked on by their kids, the show was hooked on the dog's wry observations of life in suburbia. Reaction was not so hot, so it took another two years for retooling. And it wasn't until in 1993 that "Family Dog" premiered and ran for 10 episodes. Although Amazing Stories lasted for two years, it was not renewed, and audiences and critics gave it mixed reviews. On why the show did not receive a better reception, Garris says, "I think the main reason Amazing Stories didn't work for the audience was they never knew what to expect each week. One week would be an animated show, another week would be kid-oriented fantasy show, another week a dark thriller. It really was scattered in its approach, and there was no Alfred Hitchcock or Rod Serling, or any identifiable core to the series other than a trip into the fantastic."

With the suggestion that the show advertised "amazing stories" but did not deliver for the most part, Garris disagrees hotly. "I don't know if that's really fair, because you want to keep it within the realm of possibility and believability and [you don't want to] take them to the point of being way too amazing. I think a third of the shows were terrific, and a third of them were OK, and a third of them were not very good. It was so up-and-down, it was very difficult for an audience to link onto. Series television these days relies on an audience getting to know a family of characters on a week-to-week basis. You get to know them, get to like them and feel comfortable with them."

Of his tenure working under the Spielberg banner and of working with Steven himself, Garris has nothing but glowing comments, revealing that he is a fan himself. "Steven's stories, which were all on paper, were very well brought out, with a beginning, middle and end, were well written," notes Garris. "He's really, really terrific in putting his thoughts on paper and presenting them to you verbally. I think my experience with Spielberg was the best. I mean, how can anyone complain about him? The guy's incredibly, creatively generous. He's wonderful to work with. Ideas flow out of him just like hair out of a balding man. He's just so fun and enthusiastic about what he does and sharing that with the people that do it with him. Can you imagine going from [working] food stands to writing for Steven Spielberg and having scripts produced? 'To have my scripts directed by Joe Dante, Robert Zemeckis, Peter Hyams is really unbelievably exciting," laughs Garris. "I worked with Steven off and on for about two years and would do anything he wanted me to do. I will always be grateful to him. I learned a lot. It was my film school."

Garris goes as far as to say that Spielberg is someone "who has suffered the slings and arrows of the prejudices and jealousies [of his peers], but I think he deserves all the success he's had and I would love to work with him again at any time. He's a brilliant guy. Probably the most intuitive filmmaker on the planet." The experience allowed Garris to move further up the hierarchy of the filmmaking business. "It established me as someone who's quite cheap to write, which was certainly new. It opened a lot of doors and aside from the open doors, it provided an incredible learning experience." Garris recently completed a horror feature, Sleepwalkers, and brought to television an ABC mini-series of Stephen King's massive tome The Stand.

Garris feels that the show's unique contrast in using famous, established names alongside noname casts and production people was an ideal combination. "You had reliable filmmakers who, most of them, haven't really worked in television, even to this day, taking feature-quality production values and making television," points out Garris. "Some of them weren't used to the restrictions in time and money, but there weren't as many restrictions on this as there were on many other TV shows. You've got a lot of people with something to prove, trying to do some of their best work on this show. Some of the best shows on Amazing Stories were from the newcomers. If not exactly first-timers, then at least first-time studio people. There was some really good talent discovered on the show. Steven used it as an opportunity to try people out, like Mickey Moore, who did second unit directing on all the Indiana Jones movies. He directed an episode. There were those kinds of relationships on this show."

Actor Timothy Hutton was another one of those first-timers, writing and directing an episode. Previous to that, he had directed rock videos. Other discoveries were directors Lesli Linka Glatter and 23-year-old Phil Joanou. The first season alone had eight first-time directors. Amazing Stories belongs to a very exclusive club of anthology TV shows. Fantasy and science fiction anthology dramas had last been produced in the 1960s, the decade that gave us The Outer Limits and The Twilight Zone. Oddly, Amazing Stories appeared on the tube in 1985 with revivals of Alfred Hitchcock Presents and The Twilight Zone as well as Tales of the Darkside.

On this, Garris muses, "I don't think the Twilight Zone or Alfred Hitchcock revivals, or Tales of the Darkside, had much to do with Amazing Stories. The original Twilight Zone did, though; it's hard to grow up in the 1960s and not feel the influence of the original Twilight Zone, Outer Limits or Alfred Hitchcock. Spielberg was one of those growing up in that era. I certainly was a child of that era as well. No doubt, all of us were influenced. But I don't think it had much to do with the later anthologies. I know I didn't see many of the new Twilight Zones, or the other shows. Everybody had a different approach to the shows that were produced. We were trying to do something in one field, and Twilight Zone was trying to recapture what had been done before. And the Alfred Hitchcocks were mostly remakes of the original stories brought up to date. SO, I don't know if any one of them fed on the other."

STINGRAY

Stingray, an atomic-powered sub equipped with 16 Sting missiles and possessing dolphinlike agility, was captained by Troy Tempest, a handsome, fearless 22-inch chip off the Mike Mercury/Steve Zodiac block. Alongside him were loyal hydrophones operator Lt. George 'Phones' Sheridan, and the enchanting, green-haired Marina, mute daughter of Aphony, emperor of the peaceful undersea kingdom of Pacifica. Pulling their strings at WASP headquarters, Marineville, was the organisation's founder, Commander Sam Shore, a crippled sub veteran who controlled operations from his hover-chair.

The series' bad guys were the tyrannical Titan, ruler of Titanica, and his aquaphibians, a monstrous underwater race who waged war in their mechanical Terror Fish which fired missiles from their gaping mouths. Other regular characters were Commander Shore's daughter Atlanta, Sub-Lieutenant Fisher and agent X20, a hapless Titan spy whose subversive efforts invariably ended in failure and a ticking off from his boss.

Gerry and Sylvia Anderson's third venture in the Supermarionation series, after SUPERCAR (1961) and Fireball XL5 (1962). Though outstripped later, this was their costliest yet, running up a £1 million bill for the 39 half hour adventures. It introduced the men and women of WASP - the World Aquanaut Security Patrol - dedicated to making the undersea world of the year 2065 a safer place.

A running subplot, highlighted by the closing credit sequence, was the unrequited eternal triangle - Atlanta doted on Troy who mooned over Marina.

Though produced for the traditional children's teatime slot, Stingray has enjoyed enduring success with a wider audience. Its visual invention, imaginative flair, characterisation and continuity of detail endeared it to the discerning Supermarionation fans. The first Gerry Anderson series to be shot in colour, it was originally screened here in black and white, but has been seen in colour since 1969.

The 3rd of the SuperMarionation puppet SF series for children and the first in colour, S was also one of the better. Handsome but irascible Troy Tempest pilots the atomic submersible Stingray for WASP (World Aquanaut Security Patrol) and is involved in a love triangle with Marina, lovely but mute daughter of an undersea emperor, and Atlanta, wistful daughter of WASP's crusty commander. Most weeks saw somewhat repetitive undersea menaces defeated, primarily those associated with the evil but incompetent Titans, an "aquaphibian" race. The miniature sets were good (special effects Derek Meddings).

Some episodes were later cobbled together as "films" which probably never saw theatrical release but were shown abroad as tv features. One was Invaders from the Deep (1981), made up from the episodes Hostages of the Deep, Emergency Marineville, The Big Gun and Deep Heat, all written by Fennell. The broadcast dates shown here are for the ATV, London Region, producer for the series was Gerry Anderson, associate producer was Reg Hill, the special effects director was Derek Meddings, the music was created by Barry Gray and the title song was sung by Gary Miller.

AKA: FUUN LION MARU

Fuun Lion Maru (Storm Cloud Lion Maru) takes place in feudal Japan, the time of the samurai and ninja. Such programs were common in Japan at the same time as westerns were popular in the USA.

When the brother of Dan, Shishimaru (Ushio, Tetsuya) is murdered by the evil group Mantle, Dan, Shishimaru steels a rocket pack which gives him the power to "Rocketto Lion Maru" into Fuun (Storm Cloud) Lion Maru. (Although the same actor who played Shishimaru in Kaiketsu Lion Maru plays Dan, Shishimaru they are different characters.)

After cutting the monsters Fuun Lion Maru rests his sword on his arm, then raises the sword to make a slicing motion in the air. As he brings the sword back down to his shoulder the monster explodes. Once the monster is dead Fuun Lion Maru reverts back to Dan, Shishimaru.

Dan, Shishimaru is more of a loner than the other Shishimaru. Although he has friends he normally does not travel with them. His going on without them does place them in danger often, but of course he manages to show up just in time to help them.

For the first half of the series Fuun Lion Maru has a rival, Black Jaguar (episodes 2-8, 10, 11).

During the second half Tiger Jo, Jr. appears (episodes 11, 13-16, 21, 25) to help out Lion Maru.

Fuun Lion Maru battled the evil group Mantle.

Sequel to Lion Maru.

STRANGE LUCK

Most television protagonists seem to have lives in which strange things constantly happen to but they think nothing of it. Chance Harper, the hero of Strange Luck does realise that all of the unusual things that happen to him are not normal for anyone but himself. Chance has had an interesting life, featuring lots of luck both good and bad, often involving being in the wrong place at the right time. Chance always is able to win the instant lottery, has found himself in the position to save numerous people and he has a car which looks like it should be in the junk yard due to the numerous accidents he has had in it.

It all seemed to start for Chance 30 years ago when he was the sole survivor of a plane crash which killed 160 people, including all of his family. He was a small child only about 3 years old at the time. Since no one was able to identify or claim him, he was placed up for adoption and adopted by the Harpers who named him Chance since he was lucky enough to have survived the crash.

Chance is a free lance photographer, a job that allows him to capitalise on the way he always seems to be in interesting places. Most of the work Chance does ends up published in the local paper where his old girl friend Audrey Weston is an editor. Despite their past relationship the pair are still friends. Audrey attempts to give Chance as many assignments as possible, however whenever he gets a regular assignment his luck kicks in and he gets side-tracked.

Chance's luck has had him cross paths with the police on numerous occasions. In the pilot episode he was arrested and sent to Dr. Ann Richter, a police psychologist. Dr. Richter hypnotises Chance which causes him to recall parts of his life which happened before the plane accident. This included the fact that he had an older brother who was not on the plane with him when it went down. Setting out to find his brother. Chance eventually tracks him down and learns that they were half brothers and that Chance always did have weird luck as a child. Their reunion however was short lived since his brother was in trouble and needed to leave town.

The creator of this show Karl Schaffer also created the SF show EERIE INDIANA. This was an interesting show in an indescribable way. Sweeny made a good Chance, but I must admit wondering why he did stuff that he knew would get him in trouble. I guess I don't really believe in luck. The co-executive producers for the series were Kerry Lenbert, John J. Sakmar and Michael Gassutt. Supervising-producer was John Peter Kousakis, music was created by Mark Mothersbaugh, the series was filmed on location in Vancouver, British Columbia in Canada, where so many other modern US SF shows are filmed these days. Writers for the series included Cathryn Mitchan, directors for the series included Greg Beeman.

Scott Plank's acting experience spans the extent of disciplines. His list of movie appearances are Moonbase, American Strays, Marshall Law, Gathering Evidence, Saints & Sinners, Mr Baseball, Panama Sugar and Past Time. In tv terms, he played the lead in three movies of the week, namely Coed Call Girl, Terror in the Tower and Dying to Remember in which he starred with Melissa Gilbert (wife of Babylon 5's Bruce Boxleitner). Other than Strange Luck, he has been a guest star in the tv series The Marshal, had a guest lead in Red Shoe Diaries and appeared in Sons & Daughters. He has been in four tv pilots which never made it into series Angel City, LA Takedown, Desert Rats and The Street and worked in regional, Broadway and off-Broadway theatre.

STRANGE WORLD

"..Exposure to biological weapons during the Gulf War has left scientist Paul Turner-who investigates criminal abuses of science for USAMRIID-seriously ill and at the mercy of a sinister, underground adversary that controls his cure..."

The X-Files" writer/executive producer Howard Gordon presents an exploration of a nefarious world where "big business" funds "big science," and the answers Paul Turner (Tim Guinee) finds lead to more questions than have ever been imagined. After exposure to chemical weapons during the Gulf War, ex-Government scientist Turner spent six isolated years fighting for his life until an enigmatic Asian woman (Vivian Wu) saved him with a miraculous cure... that lasted only temporarily.

Ever since, the illness has regularly returned to ravage Turner's body until the woman mysteriously reappears to provide another dose. After a six year absence, Turner returns to the Army as a Special Investigator in charge of tracking down the Frankenstein's of the world. Turner's belief that the government is too slow and inefficient to protect us from the unchecked advances of science proves to be all too true in this show that features such ripped-from-the-headlines fare as cloning and genetic engineering.

This short-lived ABC television series appeared briefly in the 1999 Fall Television year as a mid-season replacement. We blinked and it was gone, which was regrettable as this young government conspiracy upstart series was starting to get interesting.

Attempting to pigeonhole Strange World, its title changed from Strange Days following objections relating to the Ralph Fiennes movie of the same name, Gordon states, "it's a sort of an X-FILES meets The Hot Zone meets the Fugitive." Defining the difference between Strange World and his previous work, Howard Gordon claims, "X-FILES is all about aliens and vampires," pointing out, "this really is just about us, the monster man is creating himself."

The show shoots in Vancouver, where THE X-FILES used to shoot, and show creator Howard Gordon was one of the original writer-producers on THE X-FILES. Although there are some similarities between the shows, they extend only as far as they do on other genre shows -- STAR TREK and BABYLON 5, for example, are similar shows that are at the same time vastly different. Whereas the focus on X-Files is aliens and other paranormal phenomena, Strange World's arena is hard science and the consequences of pushing science to its most extreme possibilities. It's more about the monsters that mankind is creating than the ones coming from outer space or dwelling in your city sewers.

Although Mr. Moriarty was originally cast as a regular member of the Strange World ensemble, the actor and the producers had some creative differences regarding the tone and style of the show and Mr. Moriarty opted to leave the show after the pilot.

Paul Turner, the protagonist of the show, is himself a Johns Hopkins trained scientist. As far as Strange World is concerned, science is neither good nor evil -- but there are people out there who would use science for their own benefit without thinking of right and wrong. People who, to paraphrase Jurassic Park's Ian Malcolm, are so focused on whether they can do something, they never stop to ask if they should.

The Strange World writers actually know their science pretty well. The writing staff features graduates from Harvard, Yale and Princeton. The show also employs Dr. Ezekiel Emmanuel, the head of the National Institute of Health's bioethics committee, as a consultant. So, although Strange World is a TV show meant first and foremost as entertainment -- this is definitely not high school science class -- the producers do pay close attention to scientific detail.

Character Details:-

Dr. Paul Turner (Tim Guinee) who was exposed to a biotoxin during the Gulf War. At present, his survival is based on a serum provided by a mysterious woman (Vivian Wu) who always knows just when Turner needs another fix. Turner never knows when his body will start to react to the disease, so he awaits packages at the door and telephone calls in the dead of night to get the serum which will put the disease temporarily in remission.

Dr. Sydney McMillan (Kristin Lehman) is an M.D. that works at the VA Medical Center. Sydney nursed Turner back to health when he came back from the Gulf War and eventually they became romantically involved. Sydney is a strong character that appears to care deeply for Turner.

Major Lynne Reese (Saundra Quarterman) is not only Turner's commanding officer but friend. Even though we don't learn a lot about Reese, she appears to be a very strong female character.

Mysterious Asian Woman (Vivian Wu) first appeared to Turner after his initial exposure to the toxin. She saved him then and she continues to provide him with the needed serum to keep the disease in remission. She has a hidden agenda. However, I have no clue what it is just yet. She needs Turner to help her accomplish certain goals and I believe she will only keep him alive as long as he is useful to her.

The Pilot deals with one man's fight to keep himself alive; that man is Paul Turner. In the midst of dealing with his sickness, Turner is summoned to investigate the disappearance of a small child (Jeremy Ballard). The parents are grief-stricken when they have to identify the body of a small boy which appears to be their child. Through a bizarre turn of events, we learn that the government has been conducting cloning experiments for years. Genetic material is being altered and fertilized eggs are being used to create children. We also learn that this young boy is not the Ballard's child because their son is actually a clone who is being kept hidden by Nathan Burke. Who's Nathan Burke? Well, in the past he was Turner's partner at the Army's Medical Research Institute. Burke was also exposed to the biotoxin in the Gulf War at the same time that Turner was exposed. Like Turner, Burke is near death. However, there is no mysterious woman bearing the gift of a life-saving serum in Burke's future. We also learn that Nathan Burke, Jeremy Ballard and the dead young boy are all the same person. They were created by the men behind the project.

Are you still with me? Apparently, the Ballards went to the clinic for invitro fertilization , but the clinic was using the women (without their prior knowledge) as human incubators for implanting embryos that were genetically identical to Nathan Burke to harvest fetal marrow for transplantation. The transplant was a treatment for aplastic anemia. Labor was always induced at 16 weeks. We are even shown the graphic, disturbing scene of charred remains of embryos that were brought to term, but later destroyed. Burke was actually reproducing himself in the attempt to live forever (or at least that's how I understood it).

The group involved with the cloning project started procedures to "erase everything" so they start executing people, one of which is the clone's father. Turner, Jeremy Ballard, and his mother all have their lives spared courtesy of the mysterious Asian woman. At the precise moment that the executioner continues to carry out his instructions, she grabs his arm and knocks it out of the line of fire. The mother has her son (clone) returned to her and they board a train to Montreal, Canada for a new life sans the father. A mother's love transcends all because she doesn't care that her child is a clone, she loves him unconditionally. As stated, "science is changing a lot faster than we expected, faster than anyone realizes". Subsequently Turner is appointed Special Investigator to work with law forces at U.S.A.M.R.I.I.D. on cases involving criminal abuses of science. Is that a mouthful or what?

The final scene of Strange World is wonderfully shot. With only existing light from a streetlamp, we get a tight shot of Turner on the floor of a telephone booth prepping himself for an injection. Sydney is standing over him, watching and waiting.

Strange World's producers have lined up a cast of strong female characters. It is a woman that nursed him back to health. It is a woman that supplies him with the toxin to keep him alive. It is also a woman that not only is his boss, but his friend and ultimately aids in his appointment as Special Investigator.

I liked the Pilot. I liked it a lot. I was confused, but it left me with a strong desire to see the next episode. I like the characters and hope that they will be dissected a little more in future episodes. I think I'm starting to develop a fondness for this show. Strange World is mysterious, dark, exotic and full of energy. It makes you think and it makes you question the world that we live in today.

Okay, here we go! If you don't like nitpicks, leave now. You've been warned :) - - However, what kind of an episode review would this be without nitpicking. The best shows make mistakes. It's natural, we're all human. Here are a few mistakes that I noticed. If I missed any, send me an e-mail and I'll give you credit.

Nei's Nitpicks and Observations:

- Loved the Asian woman knocking the executioner's arm out of range of fire. Did you notice the newspaper that the gun was wrapped in was "The Asian Wall St. Journal".
- The FBI really needs to send some of their agents back to Quantico because after a thorough search of the premises, they obviously did not thoroughly search the room with the pictures on the wall. If they had checked, they would have found the hidden room.
- Speaking of the mystery door, where did that kid come from? Where exactly was he hiding that a whole team of FBI agents couldn't locate him in that small house?
- Note to self: If you're meeting someone to discuss top secret government plans, don't sit at a table next to a huge picture window underneath an illuminating lamp that allows all passerbys to see the exact details of your face.
- Turner must have Superman vision, because he can see through metal. Look at the scene at the end where Turner is looking at the phone booth. It would be impossible at that angle to see anything lying on the ledge underneath the telephone. From that angle, the view is blocked. However, Paul clearly sees the needle and cylinder and runs over to the phone booth.

STRANGE WORLD OF PLANET X,THE

Those viewers who opted to make the trip were transported to The Strange World of Planet X over the space of seven autumn weeks in 1956. The story, penned by actress, novelist and scriptwriter Rene Ray, followed the experiences of two scientists, David Graham and Gavin Laird, whose discovery of the 'devastating' Formula MFX - Magnetic Field X (where X equals the unknown!) - gave them the freedom of Time - the Fourth Dimension.

Two others who came under the influence of Formula MFX were Laird's wife Fenella (played by Trevor Howard's actress wife Helen Cherry), and another woman, Pollie Boulter (played by comedienne Maudie Edwards). As the episodes unfolded, the characters were transported to the strange, eerie world of Planet X - depicted as an abstract, moon-like landscape.

. . . we must go on, they cry, and hurtle to destruction, and they don't care who they take with them.' Its producer, Arthur Lane, called it 'adult science fiction' and paralleled it with Gun Law, 'the adult Western'. The Observer TV critic Maurice Richardson voted it ITV's 'worst serial of the year', and called it 'a poor man's Quatermass'. The serial was directed by Quentin Lawrence who, just a couple of months later, unleashed THE TROLLENBERG TERROR on ITV. (The quote at the beginning is from the TV Times billing for episode four. The previous week's asked: 'Was it just a dream? Or have you been to The Strange World of Planet X?') The producer for the series was Arthur Lane.

STRANGER FROM SPACE

First shown in 1951, with viewers encouraged to write in with their suggestions for what should happen next, the tale of young Ian Spencer and his adventures with a Martian boy, Bilaphodorus whose 'Space Boat' crashes on Earth, gained enough response to justify a second serial the following autumn. That one also featured Valentine Dyal (the Black Guardian in DOCTOR WHO) as a Martian, Gorgol.

Britain's very first science fiction cliff-hanger serial was a fortnightly offering broadcast as part of Whirligig - the children's corner of the box back in the innocent early 1950s. Stranger From Space was a departure for the BBC whose previous ventures into science fiction had been one-off plays - Karel Capek's R.U.R. (1937) and H.G. Wells' The Time Machine (1949). In its modest way it opened the door for a succession of interplanetary adventures for the corporation's various Children's Television slots. (See THE LOST PLANET, RETURN TO THE LOST PLANET, SPACE SCHOOL.) The series was written by Hazel Adair and Ronald Marriott, and the series was introduced by Humphrey Lestocq.

STRANGER, THE (1965)

In the first series, the stranger, Adam Suisse, arrives in Australia to seek help for the people of his planet, Soshuniss, who want to migrate to Earth. He is befriended by Bernie and Jean Walsh, whose father is the headmaster of the local school, and their pal Peter. Intrigued by the stranger's lengthy expeditions to the Blue Mountains, the trio follow him, learning his real identity and meeting a co-emissary, Varossa, as well as taking a trip of their own to Soshuniss.

As the sequel opens, the people of Soshuniss are no nearer a solution, and are unhappy about the way the world - and particularly the Press - have reacted to the visit of their emissaries. As a result they hold Peter hostage on Soshuniss. Happily, a peaceful solution is eventually found - thanks in large part to the Australian Prime Minister.

Science fiction tale from Australia about three teenagers who become involved in an alien's mission to Earth to find a new home for his people. The story was told in two six-part serials, screened by the BBC in 1965 and 1966.

STRANGERERS, THE

Three aliens in humanoid form arrive on Earth to undertake a secret mission - but only one of them, the Supervisor, is familiar with the human way of life. The others, cadets Flynn and Niven, have trouble with even rudimentary things - walking, for one - and speak a bizarre mangled English causing them to take an age saying even simple things. (Or as they would put it, 'spend an unnecessary amount of minutage in verbally disseminating a series of ideas to one or more receptees'.) They also use archaic phrases because they studied English from ancient TV transmissions picked up on their planet. Hence their surnames, acquired from old Hollywood movies. Disastrously, soon after their arrival on Earth, the Supervisor is killed by a truck, leaving the two cadets to fend for themselves, and to carry out a mission the nature of which, because of their lowly status, they are not privileged to know.

On their tail are two bickering alien-chasers, Harry and Rina, government agents (a la Mulder and Scully in The X-Files). Rina is the proficient, by-the-book one, Harry an intellectual dreamer. They soon trace the cadets but the hapless pair always slip through their fingers. Add to the mix the Seedy Man and his cohort Rats, two low-lives who are pursuing the vast riches brought to Earth by the aliens for bargaining purposes, and you have the basis for the storylines. (In a neat bit of casting, Seedy Man was played by Paul Darrow, Avon in the cult 1970s sci-fi series Blake's 7.)

Larger-than-life Scotsman Jack Docherty is a tall man. So tall, that when he laughs, his whole body sways like an oak tree caught in a storm. Jack tends to laugh rather a lot. But then, he has plenty to laugh about at the moment. After his Channel 5 chat show stumbled to an end last summer, his career seemed to have reached some kind of crossroads. Even Jack himself admitted that he didn't have a clue what he was going to do next. Now, all of a sudden, it's all happening for him. Right now, he's got so many projects going on that he could justifiably claim to be one of the busiest men in showbiz. Most notably, there's The Strangerers, an original new production from Sky One, in which Jack and The Fast Shows Mark Williams star as incompetent aliens on a visit to Earth. The 10-part comedy series is written by Rob Grant, co-creator of the fabulously successful Red Dwarf, who describes his new offering as "a genre-crossing, science-fiction road comedy".

The alien adventure begins when three beings in human guise, including cadets Niven (Jack Docherty) and Flynn (Mark Williams) arrive on Earth to complete a swift and simple mission. The pair, whose knowledge of Earth culture is almost exclusively derived from early TV broadcasts - hence their attire and choice of names - try to pass themselves off as convincing humans, but all does not go according to plan. With their utter ignorance of the most basic of human actions, including eating, sleeping and talking - not to mention being pursued by government agents, the police, the Russian Mafia, a pair of murderous pimps and an insane serial killer - the aliens find life on Earth to be a rather more hazardous experience than originally anticipated.

"In many ways", Jack explains, "The Strangerers is an entirely new kind of televisual experience. It's a kind of hybrid it's not really a sitcom, it's not really a comedy series, it's not really a straightforward sci-fi show. It's hard to pin down in a lot of ways that's one of the things that attracted me to it. When it comes to the question of what I do next, all I know is that I always want to do something I've never done before. And I've never done anything quite like this." Apart from anything else, it's the first time he's played an alien. Other than when he was five years old and tied a dustbin lid to his head in an attempt to pass himself off as a visitor from Mars.

"Doing The Strangerers has been great from an acting point of view," he says. "Playing an alien means you can get away with so much. If people say that I'm not acting very well, I can turn around and say, 'No, that's the way the character's meant to be. He's not supposed to be human. He's meant to be acting like a plank of wood.' It means that I can mess up all over the place and claim that's the way the alien character is meant to be. It's the same thing with the dialogue in the series. The aliens use a lot of made-up words. So, if I fumble a line, I can always claim that I'm speaking as an alien would." Given that it's Sky One's new flagship comedy series, expectations surrounding The Strangerers are high. But, as Jack confidently says, people are unlikely to be disappointed.

"One of the great things about this series is that it looks wonderful. No expense has been spared in making it look right. For any sci-fi type of project, that's a really important consideration these days. Back in the days of Blake's Seven and Dr Who, audiences were willing to overlook the cardboard corridors and the shoddy special effects. But viewers are more demanding these days. With The Strangerers, a lot of thought has gone into making it look right and making it look distinctive. "People might say that sci-fi comedy is a well-trodden path, but The Strangerers is different. A lot of that is down to Rob Grant's writing. Rob has got a very peculiar take on the world - his imagination can be quite strange and dark, and he's brought those elements to this series. It's really out there. Some of the time you're not entirely sure what's going on, and you're never really sure what's going to happen next. Personally, I really like it that way. My entire career seems to have been built on the idea that I don't know what's going to happen next."

Originally, Jack was set on a career as a lawyer. "I think I'd have made a very poor lawyer," he laughs. "And a very unhappy one. I'd have been stuck with Mrs McFadgen getting divorced and arguing with Mr McFadgen over who owns the egg poacher, it wouldn't exactly have been Ally McBeal, put it that way." Jack drifted into the world of show business almost by accident. In the early Eighties, he was persuaded by his old chum, Moray Hunter, to take part in a surreal revue at the Edinburgh Fringe. This led to them both writing for Lenny Henry, Vic Reeves, Spitting Image and Smith & Jones, before performing regularly together on TV's Friday Night Live and launching their own sketch show, Absolutely, on Channel Four.

Then, in 1997, coinciding with the launch of Channel 5, Jack was offered the chance to host his own five-nights-a-week chat show for the brand new channel. At first he had strong reservations, but decided that it might be a fun experience. If it was going to fail, he said from the start, then he'd prefer it to be a glorious failure. After two years and more than 1000 interviews, he finally decided enough was enough last June. "Looking back on it all," he says, "I wouldn't regard the chat show as a failure. I'd accept that it didn't work five nights a week, largely because we didn't have the resources to make it work. The budget was so small, we were making around 20 shows for the same cost as one TFI Friday. In that way, it might have failed. But I don't consider myself a failure in the seat. I had some great moments on that show. Interviewing heroes like David Bowie was a wonderful experience. Then again, there were terrible moments too. Like interviewing Max Clifford. During that interview, I practically lost the will to live and wanted to jump off the edge of the building. But, overall, it was a fun thing to do. I always knew that it wasn't something I wanted to do for the rest of my career. There was never a chance of me becoming the next Des O'Connor. There are loads of other things I want to do."

Apart from The Strangerers, Jack is frantically busy on many other fronts right now. A second series of his BBC sitcom, The Creatives, is up and coming. He's working on three new script ideas (two movies and a sitcom). Then there's his production company, Absolutely, which is responsible for shows like Armstrong & Miller and Stressed Eric. All of which keeps him busier than a bumble bee in a treacle pot. Even so, he still finds time to fit in the occasional round of golf and a game of park football now and again - as well as bringing up four kids with his fiancée, Chrisoula. "I don't think seeing their dad on the telly means an awful lot to my kids," he says. "Though they think it's pretty cool that I get to do things like hang out with The Spice Girls. Still, the kids came in pretty handy when it came to researching my role in The Strangerers. It was while watching my two-year-old twins learn to walk that I got the idea of how my alien character should move. I'd better keep quiet about that, though, or the blighters will ask to be put on a salary." He laughs and shakes like a very tall, storm-tossed tree for the last time, before heading off to busy himself with one strand or another of his multi-faceted career. Jack of all trades indeed.

For his brand new comedy series The Strangerers, Rob Grant has created a whole new alien language for his characters. As with 'smegging' from the Red Dwarf series, words like 'spoot' and 'manakanama' look set to become catchphrases in sitting rooms across the country. Get your tongues twisting around some of these phenomenal phrases:

Cadet Flynn - most likely to say

"It is imperative we reach our destination prononomically"

"What are you, a bimplemooose?"

"Well, as they say on Duplefurt, 'you can't get a munningling punda till you've opsulated a transfambulizo."

"6reat flunzenbuns! That's it!"

Cadet Niven-most likely to say...

"The Superviso~s going to be mad as a molten mulambulo"

"What the blazing furrocaks was that?" "Back in a ninitulook"

"Oh I see. Not three glanseks ago it was a good plan"

"I'm not a complete manakanama, you know"

By his own admission, Strangerers writer Rob Grant possesses a somewhat warped sense of humour, "I suppose I am naturally drawn to dark things and weird things," he says. "That's what I find really funny. For me, there's a strong connection between horror and comedy. It goes back to watching Hitchcock movies as a kid. Everybody else would be scared stiff, while I'd be laughing my head off. The Strangerers is no different - it definitely comes out of a warped imagination." For Grant, The Strangerers is the latest exciting chapter in a hugely successful writing career which includes Spitting Image and Red Dwarf. Not only was Grant single handedly responsible for the writing of Tire Strangerers but the series has also been produced by Grant's own independent Taken For Granted Productions in association with Jack Docherty's Absolutely company. As Grant admits, the mighty success of Red Dwarf is a hard act to follow. "It's not that I've set out to top Red Dwarf," he says. "That would be ridiculous. Obviously people are going to make comparisons, but the only connection between the two shows is that they both inhabit the world of sci-fi."

Cadet Niven (Jack Docherty)

The uninformed idiot Desperate to impress, he blur his knowledge and often messes up, with disastrous consequences.

Cadet Flynn (Mark Williams) The reformed idiot. Always the imense, worried one, who more often than not holds the mission together.

The Supervisor (Milton Jones)

His head gets chopped off at the start. so the cadets have to cart it around until eventually it comes back to life.

Mystarious Man /Mike Hayley)

We don't know who he is, where he's from or who his boss is, but he's ready to destroy everything and everybody who gets in his way.

Rina (Sarah Alexander) The organised leader who's as tough as old boots', but not the most intellectual of policewomen.

Harry (Mark Hesp)

Rina's assinant Ha's got a bit of a thing for Rina and there': possibly some romance history there.

Saedy Man (Paul Darrow)

The dodgiest receptionist you're ever likely to meet. His hotel is the perfect cover for the alien when they need a place to stay.

Rats (David Walliams) Seedy man's fawning assistant. A pathetic but hilarious low-reaction character. Terrible things always happen to him.

Great fuzziating meladerms!!! There's something very strange happening down at Sky One.

Well, there will be from 15 February. A Mr Mark Freeland, formerly known as the man who fed The Big Breakfast to millions of people every morning, has coerced, erm, commissioned Rob Grant, one of the creatures responsible for bringing RED DWARF into Earth's orbit, into creating and producing a new type of comedy programme. "What's strange about that?" one might ask. The title, for a start. The show is called The Strangerers, and more it's like no other science fiction nonsense currently on screen in this or probably any other galaxy. Utterly delighted to be the man responsible for unleashing such madness on an unsuspecting viewing public Freeland claims "The Strangerer is our flagship comedy product of 2000, and marks a new era of quality entertainment from Sky Broadcasting. Rob Grant's script just smacked of someone who is genius at doing jokes. The production features a wealth of talent from every area of film making and we think it will appeal to a wide cross-section of viewers - science fiction lovers, comedy fans, sit-com followers, the lot."

Strong words indeed. However, if a few years ago someone had suggested that the satellite broadcasting company would be launching their latest production in the very showcase of the UK's television and film industry - BAFTAs swish haven in Central London - they would have been mocked to the end of Alpha Centarui.

Even stranger than fiction is the motley collection of cast and crew assembled to achieve this genre-crossing phenomenon. Combining the best ingredients that alternative British comedy can provide, including several of the funniest performances including Mark Williams (The Fast Show) ,and Jack Docherty (The Jack Docherty Show), with razer sharp dialogue and some of the stupidest slapstick, sorry, physical humour ever to grace a small screen, The Strangerers will either have you falling off the sofa in hysterical laughter, or hiding behind a cushion in horror and disbelief. The shocked gasp when David Walliams, the appropriately named Rats, is smacked in the fate with a baseball bat is guaranteed to sort the men from the big girls blouses. Love it or hate it, this show is definitely not what you'd call mediocre.

In common with so many other alien seeking-information scenarios like V, First Wave, and the glorious 3rd Rock from the Sun, the basic plot of The Strangerers is that a group of aliens come to Earth disguised in human form with the idea of infiltrating then taking over the planet.

"The idea came to me whilst I was having a pee!" admits Rob Grant. "I get all my best ideas when I'm in the toilet. There's nothing else to do whilst you're waiting to finish, especially in a public area, so I quite often find that ideas just pop into my head." Carrying on as though it was the most natural thing in the world Grant sighs, "Having had a great time working on RED DWARF, which was a science fiction piece without any aliens, the idea came to write a piece that actually had aliens as the main focus."

What distinguishes Grant's creation is that the aliens in this case have gleaned all their knowledge from partial transmissions of half-baked Fifties television and radio shows, and have almost no comprehension of what it means to live in the world as we know it today. Consequently their path to world domination is hampered from the start, a situation made even worse when their Supervisor (Milton Jones) has a little accident just moments after landing and his subordinates are left to carry him around till he gets his brain in gear. Ill equipped but with an endearing sort of innocence that carries them through the most precarious of situations, Cadets Flynn (Mark Williams) and Niven (Jack Docherty) decide to continue with the mission, bring the Master Plan to fruition and gain a spot of promotion into the bargain. Despite having worked with the surreal Mr Grant previously, incongruously shy Mark Williams had no qualms about signing on for another term. "Rob sent my agent a copy of the script back in November 1998 and we both thought it was brilliant. I wanted to get involved right from the beginning." Williams didn't even flinch when he realised the term "from the beginning" meant his character and Docherty's would have to go as far as learning to walk like a human all over again - a task achieved following some expert tuition by Docherty's eighteen month old toddler. "There's that balance thing," the comic elucidates, "the one foot in front of the other then it's, ready steady go! It requires intense concentration."

Following the cadets' progress from Millennium Bug to Man has its own intensity. Watching two grown men trying to do what the majority of us take for granted is funny but quite uncomfortable to behold. Learning a language other than English required a fair amount of effort on the actors' part too, but Williams already had that skill off to a tee. "Studying reams of Anglo-Saxon nonsense at Oxford University must have been an advantage," he quips. Rob Grant didn't study Anglo-Saxon at Oxford University. Rumour has it he was dispatched from his Liverpudlian alma mater because he didn't drink enough, but his love of language has prevailed. "I like turning a phrase," he admits. "Having alien beings whose previous exposure to the English language was piecemeal at best gave me the perfect excuse to make up a whole new set of words."

He says this with a twinkle that suggests he'd have made up another form of verbal communication whether there was a script involved or not. However he insists, "The aliens have their own set of rules from which they've extrapolated what they think is English." Uh Huh! How any being could imagine the phrase "who's bifurating the flangelistic travidorm" resembles the Queen's English as she is spoke beats the "hansomming furzibators" out of me. Until the proposed Strangerers/English dictionary appears, viewers will just have to follow the actors' expressions and body language to gain any insight into what on Earth they are on about, although Jack Docherty is thrilled that he is one of the first people ever to announce, "That leaves me completely down the schwazzlesploop without a glangabazzera!" Gesundheit! Intrigued with the whole 'discovery' scenario Docherty offers, "Niven and Flynn are two children confronted with the world. Their understanding of it is so minimal that they think they know what they're doing, when in fact they have no idea."

One of the first tasks to have our interplanetary visitors screaming "fargle" is how to solve the enigma of sleep. They know they have to do it to appear "normal" to other humans and to recharge their "unfamiliar vessels" batteries but actually doing it requires consummate patience. Typical of most couples, Cadet Flynn drops off straight away whilst the hapless Niven spends a great deal of time and perseverance before achieving his goal. As Docherty says, "The cadets are an original comic duo that obey all those classic double-act rules. They both don't really know what they are doing, but one thinks he knows a bit more."

The Strangerers boasts more than one dynamic duo. Certainly the most pleasing on the eye are Rina (in the delectable shape of Sarah Alexander) and Harry played by Mark (where are my clothes?) Heap. Together they are charged with finding and possibly eliminating our extra-terrestrial guests. "Rina is the leader and likes to get organised" says the bombshell's alter-ego, "whereas Harry is probably the intellectual of the two - not that Rina would ever admit that much. Harry is a complete idiot and is always getting himself into scrapes but although she likes to think she is in the lead, Rina has a soft spot for Harry and would never really want him to come to any harm." Mark Heap's supposition is, "Perhaps Rina gets Harry going a bit, romantically. Off and on, I think he considers it." Not surprising considering her bottom features quite often - "but always within the style of the show," amends the actress.

Least easy on the eye and with an "Eeww!!!" quotient of +10 are cronies Seedy and Rats, played with aplomb by screen veteran Paul Darrow and the aforementioned David Williams. Ineffectually posturing that "here I am, the Richard Gere of England, and they want me to play someone called Seedy", Darrow eventually concedes that, "Seedy is a really, awful, awful character. The more awful he became, the more wonderful I found him. He's a guy who thinks he's the embodiment of John Travolta in Saturday Night Fever but isn't. He sports a wig, he's filthy dirty and smells, yet thinks all women are crazy about him. He always has an eye on the main chance, constantly trying to rip people off. I love him." "Everyone was incredibly supportive, which made it all worthwhile," adds Williams. "Mark Williams was very good at getting performances out of other people. He kept on saying, 'Play it for real, play it as truth.' It was just what I needed to hear. I've never worked on such a collaborative production. At the wrap party we all slept with each other." Like no other science fiction comedy currently on screen on this or any other galaxy? I rest my case!

When a group of aliens come down to investigate life on Earth, probably the last person they expect to see is a member of Blake's 7. But that is exactly who these strange aliens - The Strangerers - have the misfortune to meet. Paul Darrow plays a hotel owner in this new Science Fiction comedy - a role about as far removed from Avon in Blake's 7 as it is possible to be.

It was the actor's Science Fiction heritage that originally got him the part. The series is written and produced by Rob Grant - half of the duo who brought us Red Dwarf - who originally met Paul Darrow at a Science Fiction convention in America. When, some three years later, he offered him a job, Paul was surprised to read in the scripts that his character was called 'Seedy'. "I said to Rob, 'come on I can't possibly play this part, I'm too good- looking! I'm too suave and sophisticated!' He said, Absolutely, but I think it would be fun and I'd like you to do it." Seedy is the sort of character any self-respecting woman would cross the dance floor to avoid. He thinks he's the bee's knees in his loud shirt, medal- lion, fake tan and rather obvious wig. "I said right from the beginning, how are we going to play him?" says Paul. "He can't be in a string vest, we've seen all that before. So I said maybe he thinks he's somebody he isn't. We can stroll off in all sorts of directions, maybe he thinks he's Elvis Presley - I actually played Elvis 10 years ago. But Rob said, 'You've done that'. So I said, 'How about John Travolta in Saturday Night Fever?' He said, 'Yeah, let's go with that'. So he has all the medallions, he has the open-necked shirt and thinks he's God's gift to women."

Seedy also thinks he's on to a nice little earner when the two aliens, played by Mark Williams and Jack Docherty, turn up at his establishment wanting to hire a room. They're a bit weird to say the least. They tip their hats to ladies, they walk as if they don't quite know how their legs work, they talk in the most convoluted form of English known to the western world and they hand out money like sweets. But little does Seedy know they come from an alien planet, are armed with ray guns and are carrying around the severed head and body of their dead mission supervisor. With so much weirdness going on, the scenes between them must have been unusual to film. "Tricky, Paul agrees. "There was one scene I was particularly interested in seeing because it was the very first scene of the series to be shot, which was Mark coming into the hotel. I said to him about two or three days later, 'I would really like to do that again, I think it was awful.' He said 'I wouldn't mind either', because we were so nervous on the first day. But looking at it, it worked rather well. You have to trust the people you work for. If you don't trust them and you don't want to rely on them, then don't do it. And I like Mark and admire Mark. He's a friend, so it was relatively easy from that point of view. I played Seedy for real, I didn't think he was funny at all. And that's the trick, actually, you play it for real, then it's up to the producer, the director, the writer, the editor to decide if it's funny or not. It was tricky in the initial stages but you soon get used to it."

The comedy in The Strangerers often hinges on its peculiar dialogue, but each episode also has at least one comic set piece. In the third episode, Seedy decides to steal the aliens' briefcase by hitting Mark Williams' character, Flynn, over the head with a baseball bat. But he doesn't realize Flynn's image is just a hologram and when he swings his bat, it swipes clean through Flynn's head and whacks his co-conspirator in the face. "It took a very long time to shoot," Paul recalls. "What happened was Richard, the CGI guy, had Mark sitting in the chair and various shots were locked off against a blue screen. Then I swung the bat while Mark was there and stopped it right by his ear, then took it to the other side of his head and carried the swing on. Then Mark was removed and I was allowed to do full swings. With the magic of digital television they put it together to look as if I had gone right through his head. So again it came down to trust because Mark had to trust me to stop that baseball bat!"

By his own admission, Seedy is quite unlike any character Paul Darrow has ever played on television and he obviously enjoyed himself. His performance was also a success with the producer because he kept being asked back for more. "Originally I was only in for one episode, maybe two. When I arrived for filming, Rob said, 'You've got the scripts for episodes three and four haven't you?' And I said, 'No'. He said, 'Oh, I'll give them to you - and by the way you're in six, seven and eight!' I said, 'Oh, fine', and on we went. That was encouraging because he liked what I was doing."

There's a double treat for Blake's 7 fans in The Strangerers because Blake himself, Gareth Thomas, also makes an appearance. But sadly the two don't meet on screen and weren't even on the set at the same time. "I was on location and one of the crew said to me, 'We had your mate in the other day, we got Gareth in to play a cameo role'. It was a pity I couldn't have done something with him."

Blake's 7 may be 20 years old now, but it seems Paul Darrow can never quite leave it behind. There were the recent radio dramas which re-united many of the cast and now he's heavily involved in trying to raise the money to make a brand new television movie. "There are a number of interested parties, Sky being one of them," he reveals. "Assuming all goes to plan, we hope to be shooting it in the Autumn of 2000. That's the way things look at the moment, but many a slip... We have one or two people interested in paying for it, but we also are looking at performers. We already have the writers, the script's almost there, it's just a question of a few tidies. We're all going to get together in January, and by the end of January we will have a workable script and we will be able to work out the budget." If the movie comes off then Paul will be reprising his role as Avon. But even if it doesn't, it seems the actor will always be remembered for Blake's 7. "I'd be dishonest if I said I didn't like it," he admits. "Twenty years later people thank you for it -you can't buy that, can you?"

STREET HAWK

Jessie Mach had been a top motorcycle cop who was suspended from duty for performing daredevil stunts that could get him killed or seriously injured. While on suspension, his partner and best friend is killed and the villains leave him for dead. Jessie returns to the police force at a desk job, something he doesn't really like. However as part of a clandestine operation, which his superiors know nothing about. Norman Tuttle, the inventor of a new state of the art motorcycle offers to surgically repair his shattered leg if Jessie will agree to help test Street Hawk- the new motorcycle.

Street Hawk is not your normal motorcycle. It is able to attain speeds of up to 300 MPH, can leap through the air and has a computer aided particle beam laser cannon capable of blowing things up. Street Hawk had been designed to combat crime that standard equipment would not be able to, however throughout the series' brief run the bad guys continued to be of the variety that could have been caught without the aid of such a device. Throughout all of his adventures Jessie's superior Captain Altobelli has no idea that Jessie was leading a dual life.

Street Hawk had hoped to cash in on star Rex Smith's fame as a pop singer but failed to do so. It was cancelled after half a season.

The role of the Street Hawk motorcycle was played by a number of different Honda dirt bikes (information on the exact models is inconsistent) with modifications; cheaper models with smaller engines were used for stunts. The original design was by Andrew Probert, who also designed the Airwolf helicopter and the Enterprise starship for Star Trek: The Next Generation.

The musical theme was composed by Tangerine Dream.

This series was originally planned for the fall of 1984, Mondays @ 8:00/7:00 CST. However, ABC changed their minds when a summer series (Call To Glory) did well. So it was pushed to mid-season.

Street Hawk was a short lived television series that aired back in 1985 on ABC. It lasted only one season and there was only 13 episodes ever made. The show was about a cop name Jessie Mach who was picked to test a top secret government project called Street Hawk. His partner Norman Tuttle, the designer of the motorcycle, was in charge of the project. Jessie would cruise the streets of L.A. on the bike while Norman sat back at command center guiding Jessie. Together they would fight crime on the Streets of Los Angeles.

Street Hawk made its debut on January 4, 1985 on ABC at 9 PM EST and lasted until May 16, 1985. It's such a shame that this show didn't last longer than it did. Some say the show just came a little too late. All of the other "Super Vehicle" shows such a Airwolf and Knight Rider already had their fans and there just wasn't room left for Street Hawk. The show did however establish a cult following of fans. Who can name one show from the 80's that only lasted 1/2 of a season that has the following that Street Hawk has today? Street Hawk was in my mind far better than both Knight Rider and Airwolf, but the show just didn't get a chance.

Street Hawk had many guest appearance by actors that were not very known at the time but are now very famous. In the pilot episode the main "bad guy" was played by Christopher Lloyd who is famous for the Back to the Future movies. Also in the pilot episode was Robert Beltran who is known from his role on Star Trek: Voyager. In the episode "A Second Self", Jessie's best friend Kevin Stalker is played by George Clooney, who is now a well know actor from E.R. and several movies such as "A Perfect Storm" and "O Brother Where Art Thou". One more famous actor who starred in Street Hawk was Dennis Frantz of NYPD Blue. He played an FBI agent in the episode The Assassin.

Not much is known about the filming and making of Street Hawk. If you have any inside info about the filming or the creation of the show, I would love to hear it.

I have also obtained a copy of an article that ran in Superstars Magazine about Street Hawk. Click here to read it. Thanks go out to Dan for getting me a copy of the article.

Below is an exclusive interview with Andrew Probert, designer of Street Hawk. Andrew came up with the design used in the pilot episode of Street Hawk. Many thanks go out to Daniel (HernesSon) for doing this great interview!!

Who approached you about working on the show?

Unfortunately, I don't remember HOW I got the job. I was coming off of Air Wolf and either heard about this new project & went to them (they were on the same lot, Universal) or they came to me,.....sorry.

How long did it take to design the pilot episode bike?

I don't remember how long it took, but I would guesstimate maybe a week or two.

How much input into it were you allowed to have?

Total input,.....for the first concept. Then, the producers saw some custom bike with ridiculous gold brakes and HAD TO have them on Street Hawk. That design also included a 'chain drive' which didn't work at all for me, on a 300mph system, but it was what they wanted so that's what they got.

Can you tell us a little about what it is like to see your images transferred from drawing board to screen?

It is rare that any of my 'images' go to the screen the way they were originally designed. Producers usually will 'bend' a design, while draftsmen, carpenters, and model makers will, at best, 'influence' or, at worse, change something they don't like (or simply aren't able to understand). Still, my true enjoyment is finding out what the fans think, good or bad, about something that I designed or participated in. I get a kick out of hearing about how close to, or far from, the mark I came; finding out if I met THEIR expectations or not.

Were you happy with the way Street Hawk turned out?

Not really, (beyond the amazing job that the builders did) because my original concepts were designed to accommodate their requirement that Street Hawk be able to go from a dirt bike system to a racing system. In order to have that, I proposed that the bike morph from one to the other. I designed a 'super shaft-drive unit' (that would have covered the difference between the chain-drive dirt bike skeleton and shaft-drive street bike skeleton) along with enclosed racing wheels, to further establish the bike's capabilities. When they insisted on the wild wheels ("because they look cool"), I think it diminished the believability of Street Hawk. Also, the seat was intended to "raise-up" in order to hold the rider in whilst the bike went into Hyperthrust, as per the seatback section line

This exclusive interview with Burton Armus was conducted by Dan Rendell (HernesSon) and took place via email between 14th – 16th February 2005. Credit to Clark M. Van Hoten for making this interview possible and to Mr Armus for patiently answering every question with good humor.

Burton Armus is not new to the industry. A veteran scriptwriter and Producer, he was employed by Universal as a 'troubleshooter' to go in and help ailing shows.

He did this in the early days as a sideline, between working as a NY Police detective. He soon found that more money could be made from writing and producing and finally handed in his badge to work freelance for Universal Studios.

Armus worked on the first season of Airwolf before coming over to do Street Hawk's first season. When the series was not renewed he went to trouble shoot the ailing Knight Rider.

Was Street Hawk tough to produce and did it run to schedule?

Street Hawk was as difficult as are all action/stunt shows and in this case a little more so since the bike was too fragile for the requirements of the stunts and numerous takes and would require a great many repairs and emergency patchwork. Gately was the stunt bike rider and could do almost anything on the bike but keep the pieces attached every time he jumped it. Johnny Moio was the Stunt Coordinator and did a good job putting him through hoops.

A lot of writers came over from Airwolf and Knight Rider to work on Street Hawk. Those shows had already proved to be winning formulas. Why do you think then that Street Hawk only managed to last a half a season?

All of the writers on the show except Harris and myself were freelance and wrote many of the shows on the Universal lot. I also came from Producing the first season of Airwolf and when I left Street Hawk went on to 2 seasons of Knight Rider. The writers were not the cause of the cancellation but rather the fact that the shows lacked a star. Rex Smith was never that as were Jan Michael Vincent or David Hasselhoff.

There was also above the line difficulties with the inexperience of Bellous and Wolterstorff (Ex. Producers) and also too many cooks and nobody wanting to wash the dishes.

If I gave you some names, could you tell me briefly what first comes to mind? Virgil Vogel. Karen Harris. Robert Wolterstorff & Paul Belous...

Virgil Vogel was a wonderful, talented, old timer who knew it all and could also do it all. I think he was 72 or 3 when he did the show and he had the enthusiasm and energy of a twenty year old. He delivered a great product.

Paul Belous & Robt. Wolterstorff were doing their first series. Street Hawk was a character based on a premise by Bruce Lansbury some years before for Universal and now brought to life by the studio with a pilot script by Bel. & Wol. Bruce received shared "Created By" credit and was titled Supervising Producer and although very experienced was not used to any extent by Bel & Wol for reasons of their own.

Karen Harris - I have successfully blanked her from my memory.

Can you tell us a little about the locations used on the show. It was of course L.A Where for example, was Street Hawk Command Centre located, and the Police Headquarters?

Streethawk Command Center and also Police H.Q were located on stage at Universal. The command center was an extravagant and functional set and one of the best I have ever seen. The catwalks, screens, twists and turns gave us many many interesting angles and set ups and gave the scenes with Joe Regalbutto additional life

You produced the series for the most part but also wrote what turned out to be the very last episode. Was the intention to write more?

The start of the season was spent re-writing scripts that had already been purchased. This done, I then wrote one and had another in the typewriter when we were cancelled.

How did Rex Smith & Joe Regalbutto come to be cast for the roles. Were there any other contenders, and do you remember Rex's Screen Test?

Joe Regalbutto was brilliant in this part and is one of the finest character actors in the business, We were lucky to have him since he brought a new life and energy to any scene he was in and was always a total pro.

Rex Smith had come from "Pirates" and somebody, somewhere chose him. I assumed he was the only semi star available at the rate they were paying. He was a little full of himself but over all not a bad kid. His training was music and stage and he just wasn't a series hero. I think he tried to do the best he could. Rex did in fact bring a naivety and youthfulness to the part. What he didn't have was danger. No actor ever made it to any level of stardom if he couldn't make you believe he could be dangerous. Go down your list. There might be an exception or two but Rex Smith was never one of them.

Best person to work with?

There was a hard working Line Producer by the name of Steve Craig who helped keep it all running. The crew was excellent and worked hard.

The reason for the shows flop, in your opinion?

The show never caught on. I had no legs. I always felt the bike was a little too tinny and lacked the bulk and strength of major vehicle as compared to KITT or AIRWOLF, or even BLUE THUNDER. The hero had basically the same flaw. In spite of it, it could have been a lot more and also a hit. What it needed it didn't. Life went on.

What kind of network interference did the production have to face?

Network interference should be the title of a series of 10 novels with addendum's and photographs. Of course there was interference. The networks are staffed with young inexperienced MBA grads who read research reports and then think they know the best way to do a show. They can neither write, act, direct, or involve themselves in the business artistically so they remain jealous of those professionals that earn much more money and are not MBA's. They feel they must tell them the right way to do things. Standard or language and dress codes were never a major problem but the artistic input of the useless executives had to be manipulated and eluded to the best of one's ability or fall into the trap of doing a show that was an obvious piece of shit. The studios came up with a+ format of promising them jobs when they left the network and giving them a one year Development Deal at the studio. Very few of them ever had the ability to get anything on the air or the talent to staff any of the jobs on any production. I assume they went back to selling used cars.

What kind of budget did the show have?

I think the budget was about $850,000 an episode, but that was a studio budget which included studio overhead and not really the amount spent on the show. There is no such thing in Hollywood as a real cash budget and nothing ever shows a profit for disbursement. Amazing but true. Everyone is overpaid up front since there is never a back end to any deal.

How did Tangerine Dream (music) get to be signed up?

If I remember correctly there was some sort of musicians strike at the time and Belous went to Germany for the music score. Therefore TD. As to a soundtrack album, we were not on the air long enough for any music to become popular or known by an audience, as was Peter Gunn or Dragnet type stuff.

Did the 'hyperthrust' sequences in post-production pose any trouble?

Hyperthrust was never a problem. The film raced, and reaction shots to speed sold it.

I've been talking with Andrew Probert who produced the designs that gave the series its hero-bike. I noted there was some difference of opinion originally regarding the look of the bike. The design even changed in the series to accommodate extra guns and missile pods. Any more information on the change?

The bike was always in transition and always in repair. We had a bunch of them designed to do different things but it was never the brute it should have been. They started with a light weight dirt bike for the sake of stunts and kept decorating it with more shit, but it was never a "hero bike" but just a skinny kid with a lot of guns.

So, what in your opinion would have made a better bike?

I always pictured a 1500cc Harley with a full cowling, solid roll bars, and additional armament and weapons.

Was all of the riding done by stunt bikers, or did Rex do any of his own?

Rex could ride the bike and rode before the series, but any (I repeat ANY) stunt riding, even minor stunts, were done by Gately, our stunt rider.

Can you tell us who directed the Title Sequence?

To my recollection the title sequences were shots taken from the first few shows and an experienced editor cut it together along with a lot of input from all.

Jayne Modean was replaced after the pilot by another actress. Was there a problem?

Jayne Modean was a beautiful, fresh looking, talented, young actress who the network thought she was too young looking for the part and she was replaced with a very competent actress who I felt was too old for the part.

Generally, did you experience any problems with any of the Guest Stars?

Guest stars are usually young actors who are happy to be well paid and on network television. They rarely if ever make demands or make trouble.

What happened to the sets ; Command Centre consoles, Maxi Warehouse Billboard, etc?

The set was broken down and sent to the "docks" where pieces of it may have been used as parts of other sets, scavenged, or just plain rotted away.

You mention you had an episode in the typewriter before the show was cancelled?

I think the script I had at the cancellation was a fight show where Rex ends up on the ring and gets the shit beat out of him. Joe Reg.. throws in the towel!

Were there any ideas for the second series?

The studio and network wanted a crime fighter (Batman/Spiderman/Green Hornet) type format for the show and who knows given that mid-season pickup if it would have worked. It made sense since given the parameters of the cast and show structure to keep it light and just the serious side of amusing.

Would you have stayed with the show if it had run for another season?

If the show was re-newed I would not have stayed with the show for another season. I was mainly a troubleshooter for Universal at the time and they would have moved me on to another troubled show as they did. I was assigned to produce Knight Rider which was shut down at that time. I enjoy challenges and hard work but I am a lousy babysitter.

Bruce Lansbury later joined me at Knight Rider for that second season. He was also a lousy babysitter.

Steve Cragg went on to Produce other shows.

Belous and Wolt were never heard from again.

How long, excluding delays, would the average episode take to complete filming?

The show was 7 day First Unit shoot with some 2nd Unit shots added.

Was it a happy crew?

We had a good crew with a good sense of humor and and good work ethics. Happy was not a necessary ingredient. I enjoyed them and liked them a lot better than I did some of the above the line assholes and executives.

Were there any stunts that went wrong?

Not that I recall. The stunt guys were very good at what they did. The unpredictability of the bikes made things quite dangerous though.

There was a scene in one of the episodes ('Vegas Run') where the bike leapt up and did a 360 degree spin in the air in order to survey the surrounding landscape. Are you able to tell us how this was achieved? It looked like some kind of pneumatic rig.

The 360 shot was done with a crane and the front tire and camera rig attached. It worked okay if not used too often.

In an early script that I've seen, the show/bike is called Falconer. An odd title, perhaps with a meaning? How did it come to get changed to Street Hawk?

I don't remember anything about Falconer and cannot attach any meaning to it.

Did basing the show purely in L.A limit the scope for the series at all?

The show was set in L.A. as are most L.A. based shows since no exterior surrounding shots have to be redesigned or re-dressed as they would if we named another city. Stories are stories and if they are well written, performed well, and shot properly they can be filmed in a phone booth or close to it.

When production was drawing to a close what was the feeling amongst cast and crew?

Life went on. Everyone went on to other things.

Can you tell us a little more about the line difficulties you had with the shows executive producers?

The problems with Belous and Wolterstorff were not necessarily with me alone but with many of the older and more knowledgeable members of the crew and staff. B & W were rookies, no experience, limited to no knowledge in the action adventure format and any production but had firm opinions and dictates in all those fields.

Belous, Executive Producer, was on the location which was a construction site in Westwood right on the exclusive Wilshire Blvd, residential strip. The site was rigged for an explosion ['The Adjustor']

Due to production delays they never got to do the explosion and it was cut. Instead of removing the charges and wrapping the company, Belous decided that it was faster (40 minutes) to just blow it up! Under his orders they did so without the usual safety measures and proceeded to blow out the windows on a newly construct Wilshire Blvd. Synagogue, patio windows in the adjoining hi-rise, and spewing shrapnel around the area.

Much yelling. Much money. Much trouble for the whole company.

George Clooney guest starred as Jesse's buddy in the first episode. He of course went on to become an international film/tv star later. You said that you thought Rex Smith wasn't quite "dangerous" enough. Do you think Clooney could have made a good Street Hawk?

George Clooney was a day player and did a good job. He might have been a more capable Street Hawk, or not. Probably yes, but it would not have changed the surrounding facts that left the show as an incomplete product. It had the elements, and co stars, but its failure was at the top.

It's been said that most of the hard-line NY cops on US tv during the early Seventies were caricatures of your own life as a NY cop. In your script "Follow the Yellow Gold Road" there is a character from the Bronx is there any relation to him and yourself?

Any parody or likeness to my past would be in any scripts for the "Kojak" series, (which I did for 4 years) possibly "Streets of S.F.", and maybe "Paris" and some of the more realistic cop shows of that era. Street Hawk was never connected to any factual part of my life and was more of a Western on wheels..

Any memories of working with the late Nicholas Corea?

Nick Corea was a talented friend who jammed at least two lifetimes into one. I had fun with Nick the few times we worked together.

Any last comments, thoughts, regrets ?

I am sorry that the show was not successful. Could it have been? Of course. There is always a chance that time slot, casting, or some other element would have taken it over the top. Didn't happen. That's the nature of the T.V business.. It keeps moving and you go with it or get off.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

The series centred around Ted Stein. Ted was a happy young science professor at a Boston university until one day he learns that he has inherited the Bridgewater Inn in rural Maine from his late grandfather. Ted journeys to the inn hoping to sell it, only to meet Frank the grumpy old caretaker of the place.

Frank reveals to Ted that he is the 231 year-old creation of Ted's great-great Grandfather THE Dr. Frankenstein and that Frank needs Ted to recreate a serum that Frank will soon die without. Ted decides to stay on to help Frank and hopefully make some money by fixing up the inn. This decision does not bode well with Walt Calvin, the local real estate man who had hoped to buy the inn. Also living at the Bridgewater Inn was: Nora, who had run the inn for Ted's grandfather and had hoped to inherit it, Brain her son, and Glenn a permanent guest at the inn.

Struck By Lightening was a short-lived sitcom with an unusual premise that was taken off the air after only three episodes had been broadcast. The series lasted only on 3 episode and was shown on CBS.

SUBMARINER 8823AKA: SUBMARINER 8823 HAYABUSAAKA: KAITEIJIN

Once the most advanced civilization in the Pacific, the legendary Elde culture sank beneath the waves over 500,000 years ago. Though most of the inhabitants were killed in the disaster, a handful survived to set up their own secret undersea kingdom, run on strict scientific and logical principles. One of the Elde, #8823 (pronounced ha-ya-bu-sa coincidentally modern Japanese for "peregrine falcon"), comes ashore and is rescued by Japanese schoolboy Isamu and Dr. Oikawa. Thus 8823 came to protect Isamu and his mentor Dr. Oikawa, who has discovered the important mathematical formula X123.

With the explosion of Jacques Cousteau popularizing oceanography all over the world and the televisual exploits of Lloyd Bridges in Sea Hunt (1957), underwater adventure was in fashion. The idea of a undersea kingdom reasserting its power in modern times would be recycled a few years later in Brave Raideen. Music by Masayuki Yokota.

Saki Asamiya (Saito) is an undercover police officer sent to investigate high school crime. Dolled up in a traditional sailor suit uniform, she fights with a yo-yo that bears the crest of the Metropolitan Police - sometimes flashing it as her victims in the style of Mito Komon.

Based on the 1976 manga by Shinji Wada in Hana to Yume magazine, SD returned for a second season, in which Saki was replaced with Yoko Godai (Yoko Minamino) and gained two schoolgirl subordinates Kyo (Haruko Sagara) and Yukino (Akie Yoshizawa). The third season introduced elements lifted from ninja movies, along with a new lead in the form of actress Yui Asaka. However, Minamino returned to her role in the SD theatrical movies in 1987 and 1988. The stories most recent incarnation came in the form of a 1991 anime series, in which the voice of Saki was provided by Kazue Ikura. Compare to Tennen Shojo Mann and GIRL COMMANDO IZUMI.

There were three live-action series based on Sukeban Deka, all three are included in this database. There has also been a series of comic books and an animated series, some of which have been available in the US, dubbed. The series was based on a comic book. Shigeru (Yamada) likes tinkering with machinery. His friend Akio (Imamura) loves science and sci-fi, while another friend Goro loves ninja comics and judo. Unwisely pressing a button on a machine he finds in a junkyard, Shigeru is transported to the Edo period, where he is thrown into jail by suspicious law enforcers. Luckily for him, the jail is attacked by ninja, and he manages to use his machine to return himself to the present amid all of the confusion.

Akio insists, somewhat redundantly, that Shigeru has found a time machine, and the three boys concoct a series of modern devices designed to impress the ninja. Returning back in time, they impress the chief magistrate with their futuristic wizardry, and Shigeru is appointed as the new town official in charge with dealing with the local "ninja problem". However, Shigeru's first ninja captive turns out to be a pretty girl called Yoko, who pleads for clemency - her family have only turned to a life of crime because the evil government has stolen their land.

The boys leapfrog back and fourth in time in an attempt to stop the ongoing battle between the ninja and the Edo authorities. On one trip, they accidentally bring Yoko with them to the present, and the peasant girl is incredibly impressed to find that the world does eventually become a peaceful place. However, the boys' interference only makes things worse, and eventually Yoko is killed, along with many other combatants in the past. The disenchanted boys return to their own time and throw away the time machine, which mystifyingly takes to the air and paints the sky pink.

Based on a story by Ryu Mitsuse, author of Wipe Out The Town and Dawn in Silver. Music by Katsuhisa Hattori. The series was produced by Kazuo Shibata.

SUPER FORCE

Super Force was a half-hour long syndicated action adventure series which was set in the not too distant future of 2020. The title character, Super Force, was a vigilante who rode a hi-tech motor cycle wearing a super suit which gave him the abilities to capture criminals whom the police force had trouble dealing with. Something the police themselves did not really care for all that much.

The man inside the Super Force suit was Zach Stone, who was a police officer while not being Super Force. Before becoming a police officer, Zach had been an astronaut. He became a hero after risking his life to repair his space ship after it was damaged by a meteor on a return trip from Mars. When Zach returned from Mars he discovered that his father had died and that his brother Frank, a police officer, was killed in the line of duty (while allegedly on the take). Hoping for a chance to clear his brother's name Zach enters the police academy and quickly graduates.

Shortly before graduating from the academy, E.B. Hungerford, a rich industrialist and long time family friend of Zach's is shot and killed. While searching for E.B., Zach meets F.X. Spinner, a scientific genius working for Hungerford. The two of them find Hungerford dead and decide not to report the death: instead they will attempt to fool the world into believing that Hungerford is still alive. They do this by using a computer programme that F.X. has developed to emulate Hungerford. It contains his memories, his personality and his voice print. Since Hungerford was somewhat of a recluse who never saw anyone, the computerised version of him would be able to fool anyone who called him. In addition to the voice, a very rough computer generated image of Hungerford would appear on the monitors when he needed to communicate with Zach and F.X.

Zach soon discovers that the people responsible for Hungerford's death were also the ones who killed his brother. In order to bring them to justice, F.X. equips him with a modified version of the Martian space suit, which has become the Super Force suit. In addition to protection the suit provides Zach, it is also fully equipped with a vast arsenal of weapons. A hi-tech motorcycle is used to get Super Force where the action is. In the cliff-hanger ending to the first season a malfunction in the Super Force suit short-circuits Zach's brain and leaves him brain dead. In order to save Zach, Xander Tyler, an old friend of Hungerford's who is a member of the police force's ESP division is recruited to use her mental powers to bring Zach back to life.

This near death experience leaves Zach with a few new powers, both mental and physical. He soon discovers that he has limited powers of precognition and that he can also sense danger. The experience also leaves him with increased strength which is now equal to that of several men.

For the most part the episodes of Super Force were filled with lots of action. There appeared to be somewhat of a budget problem with the series. This was something that manifested itself during the second season where quite a few episodes featured no new footage of Super Force in action. Most of the time this occurred in clip episodes where all of the expensive action scenes shown were flashbacks to prior episodes. However on one occasion, in The Big Spin, Super Force was turned into a sitcom, complete with laugh track where the hero did not ever appear in costume.

Super Force should also be noted as a series in which two former adult movie stars appeared after becoming 'real' actresses. Ginger Lynn Allen (aka: Ginger Lynn) had a recurring role as Zach's girl friend Crystal, Traci Lords appeared in the series once as an alien sent to Earth to collect specimens for a zoo. When her character returned in a sequel to the episode, and Lords was unable or unwilling to return, a novel explanation was used for her character's change of appearance. Her alien character was not humanoid and was just disguised as one for her mission on Earth. Guest appearance Jeff Phillips, Larry B. Scott.

Produced by Michael Attanasio, James J. McNamara (executive) (1st season), Bruce A. Taylor (supervising). Original music by Joel Goldsmith and Kevin Kiner, Film Editing by John Elias, Other crew - Larry Boyd (developer), John F. Escobar (assistant property master), Janis Hendler (developer), Kimberly Mullen (casting associate), John Patteson (Armourer), Bruce A. Taylor (writer).

Guest stars include :- "As God Is My Witness" (ep. #1.6) 1990 - Jesse Caldwell MICHAEL DES BARRES, JENNIFER HAMMON, JEFF PHILLIPS, 1990 - Gilardi JORDAN WILLIAMS, 1991 - Max Offal JORDAN WILLIAMS.

SUPER INGGO

The first show to bring together popular Pinoy superheroes in a magical tale about a little superhero in-training. Meet Budong, the lovable would-be superhero who was raised by his mother Pacita and his grandmother Lola Juaning. Pacita however, despises superheroes because she blames her crippled state on them. Budong dreams of becoming a superhero himself but what he doesn't know is that he already has what it takes to be one. Budong is indeed destined for greatness that is, if he'll make use of his powers properly and listen well to his teachers.

It's going to be one long but fun journey for Budong as he tries to find more about his true identity while training to be the superhero that everyone expects him to be. Along the way he will meet a lot of friends as well as enemies who will try to prevent him from fulfilling his destiny. Join him in his quest to be the next Pinoy Superhero in Super Inngo.

This Children's science fiction superhero's show, made 120 episodes in its first series, this was achieved by over it's 24 week run, showing 5 episodes per week.

Super Inggó was developed by a group of certified '80s kids, who have started working for TV, led by Liendro Candelaria. Missing their childhood campy heroes and missing the love teams of That's Entertainment, these creative minds pitched the concept of the superserye purely for the fun of seeing their heroes go through marriage and parenthood.

The pilot episode got rave reviews from ABS-CBN top management, so taping went full steam ahead. But the biggest hurdle was when the succeeding episodes all got rejected because they were too "gothic."

Thirty-five half-hour episodes rewritten, re-shot, re-edited and re-scored. The producers saved what they could of the original taped episodes, and shot new takes. Result: a six-month delay. But the most shocking was Mark Anthony Fernandez's hairstyle that changed from short to long in two consecutive scenes - an offshoot of tapings shot so far apart.

The series is followed by Super Inggó 1.5: Ang Bagong Bangis, a continuation of the storyline.

Opening theme "Superhero" by Rocksteddy and Executive producer(s) Shiela Marie A. Ocampo & Emilio Paul E. Siojo.

SUPER TWINS

The story revolves around twin girls named Sha-sha and Tin-tin who transform into teenage superheroines Super S and Super T, respectively. They transform by kissing their special rings. Using their powers, they commit themselves into saving people's lives, defending humanity from the evil Eliazar.

According to the story, the rings are made of a certain metallic stone which once formed the core of a ball of fire called santelmo (St. Elmo's fire). The metallic stone contains the power of the sun. Whoever possesses the santelmo gains extraordinary powers.

But one time a santelmo crashed on earth and broke up in two: the metallic core and the ball of fire. The ball of fire was caught by Eliazar, who could not take in the fullness of the santelmo but gained significant powers from it. The metallic core, which contains most of the santelmo's power, came into the possession of a woman named Ester, who happened to be pregnant with the twins. Later on her husband Manuel wrought the metallic stone into rings. Then as the twins turned seven, Manuel gave the rings to them. Sha-sha and Tin-tin can only transformed by chanting the words: "Kapangyarihan ng Araw!, Taglay ay liwanag, Kambal na lakas, kami ang Super Twins"(The Power of the Sun!, Contains light, Twin Powers, We are the Super Twins!)

But, the story goes, Eliazar later on wanted to conquer the whole world, so he went on to search for the metallic stone as well. And so the search ended up in a saga of encounters with Super S and Super T.

Super Twins is a Philippine TV telefantasya show currently airing on GMA Network's nightly primetime block. The show is part of GMA's First Quarter Explosion and debuted on February 12, 2007.

Production

Super Twins is directed by Dominic Zapata, who also directed past GMA Network telefantasya shows such as Mulawin, Darna, Sugo and Captain Barbel.

Jennylyn Mercado and Nadine Samonte were made to wear sailor costumes, orange for Mercado and blue for Samonte, and face paints plus accessories that matched the color of their costumes. They also underwent training in taekwondo and capoeira for their fight scenes. Samonte was earlier pulled out from another primetime show Bakekang to do Super Twins. Then in the course of the latter show's filming, she got her left arm nearly burned in a fireworks accident.

Dennis Trillo was given a dual role as a hero and as a villain. He was also given training in wushu, kung fu and capoeira for his role as a fight master and mentor of Sha-sha and Tin-tin. His training involved stunts and harnesses, the latter he found the most difficult part to do. He was also made to act under imaginary situations like throwing thunderbolts and getting hit by bullets.

Soundtrack

The opening theme song of the show is a ballad entitled Alinlangan (Doubt). It was sung by pop icon Jolina Magdangal, composed by comedian Michael V. And arranged by Albert Tamayo.

Executive producer is Wilma Galvante

Trivia

Book 1

The Twins's sailor costumes are similar to those from the anime, Sailor Moon.

For some reason, Eliseo's left eye twitches frequently in the series.

Camille Prats' full character name, Drew Barimor, was inspired by actress Drew Barrymore.

The Twins both guest appeared in another telefantasya, Fantastic Man.

The late night gag show Bubble Gang spoofed the Super Twins as "Tsuper Twins", with Ogie and Michael V. Playing "Ten-Ten" and "Tan-Tan", Diego Llorico playing "El-kaasar", and Wendell Ramos as "Magnesia".

The series was made up off 18 stories, each story would usually be 5 episodes long, this is why the episode guide only shows 18 episodes.

Eliseo runs off to save Billy and Drewbarimor from being killed by the Metal Villains

1 - 17 KATRINA'S RESURRECTION

With Eliazar angrier than ever, do Eliseo and the twins have what it takes to defeat the evil that resides in their opponent's heart?

1 - 18 IT'S ALL RELATIVE

Last week, Billy and Drewbarimor shared an intimate ceremony that led to disaster when the bride-to-be was kidnapped by Eliazar! Driven to hunt his brother down, Billy quit the police force and prepared an all-out attack against Eliazar -- letting his friends get hurt in the process!

Meanwhile, a scorned Sha-sha tried to fight Eliazar on her own and became his captive! With the knowledge that Eliseo came from him, Eliazar duplicated the process of separating a person into two, and he succeeded in bringing out Super S from Sha-sha. At Eliseo's camp, Tin-tin felt the painful process of Super S's extraction, and dreamt of her sister killing her.

Unbeknownst to Tin-tin, her dream is about to become a reality when her super heroine persona faces the evil Super S in a fight that will decide who will rule Laro City.

SUPERBOY

AKA: THE ADVENTURES OF SUPERBOY

Superboy was about the adventures of the Man of Steel as a boy, or more accurately as a young adult. Superboy was produced by Alexander and Ilya Salkind, the people who had brought the Christopher Reeve version of Superman to the movie screens. Both were based on the popular comic book character who as everyone knows was rocketed to Earth from the doomed planet Krypton. He was named Clark and adopted by the Kents, a childless couple living in Smallville, Kansas. Clark soon found he had abilities far beyond those of normal men.

Clark adopted the costumed identity of Superboy (later Superman) to use his powers in a fight for truth, justice and the American way. Superboy followed the adventures of young Clark Kent at two different stages of his life. For the first two seasons he was a student at Shuster University (Shuster was one of Superman's creators), while the final two seasons had him working for the Bureau, a government agency which investigated unusual events. With Clark both at Schuster and at the Bureau was Lana Lang, his girl friend from back home. She slowly began to suspect that Clark was Superboy and as the fates would have it in the final episode when she decided to prove it Clark had temporarily lost his powers. Nothing serious did ever happen between them, nor could it since an adult Clark would get a new girlfriend who he would end up marrying.

Superboy's recurring nemesis was also taken from the comic books in the form of Lex Luthor. In Superboy, Lex was presented as a known criminal instead of respected business man who kept his hands clean of his crimes. Other comic book villains who appeared in Superboy included: Bizarro, an imperfect duplicate of Superboy; Mr. Mxyzptlk, a magical imp from the fifth dimension who came here to torment Superboy; and Metallo, a man with an artificial heart powered by kryptonite, the one substance able to kill Superboy.

During his college years, Clark had two roommates. During the first season it was T.J. White, son of Perry White who was the editor of The Daily Planet newspaper which we all know Clark will one day work for. During the second season Andy McAlister was Clark's roommate. During both seasons at the Bureau Clark and Lana's boss was C. Dennis Jackson, while Matt Ritters was one of their co-workers.

Stacy Haiduk would later go on to star in the SF show SEAQUEST DSV. From the team that brought the Superman legend to the big screen in 1978, came . . . Superboy - the Series. The series set out portray a time of transition - both psychological and physical - for Clark who, for the first time, unveils the famous costume to an incredulous world while reciting the immortal creed of 'truth, justice and the American way'.

And it's set firmly in the 1980s/90s - allowing the boy of steel to tackle contemporary ills such as drug abuse, environmental issues, big-city gangs and the homeless. There was no problem about making a TV audience believe a boy could fly. Besides the involvement of Alexander and Ilya Salkind, other Superman 'old boys' made the transition to the small screen, including producer Bob Simmonds, directors Colin Chilvers and Jackie Cooper (who played the movies' Perry White) and Bob Harmon who supervised the flying effects. A wry twist in the first episode had Superboy catch Lana Lang in a fall from a helicopter - as Christopher Reeve had done with Lois Lane in his first Superman film. Clark/Superboy was played by an unknown actor, John Haymes Newton, a 22-year-old former bodyguard.

In Britain Superboy was dropped abruptly by ITV, after just 11 episodes of the first season poor ratings and disquiet over a torture sequence were blamed. Episodes have since aired on Sky. In America however, Superboy flew on for three more seasons with a new actor, Gerard Christopher, in the lead role.

T.J. had gone to work for the Daily Planet, leaving Clark with a new, trouble-prone, roommate Andy McAlister, and Lex Luthor had undergone plastic surgery to age himself 15 years and hide his identity. Superboy's other enemies also became more outlandish than the everyday crooks he had faced during the first season, and included aliens, vampires and witches, as well as a couple of foes from the old comic strips - the tragic monster figure of Bizarro, an attempted Superboy duplicate gone wrong, and Mr Mxyzptlk, the imp from the fifth dimension, who could be returned by tricking him into saying his name backwards.

For the third season the title was changed to The Adventures of Superboy, and Clark and Lana were now working at the Bureau of Extra Normal Matter in Captial City. A syndicated show aimed at younger viewers, The Adventures of Superboy was surprisingly good. It capitalised on the acting talents of it's stars, brought in recognisable villains from the comics, and put its special effects budget to good use, creating convincing looking aliens and monsters. The durability of the show is evidenced by how well it survived the loss of its original Superboy - it went on, gathering momentum, and lasted a full four years (and 100 episodes).

Executive producer for the series was Ilya Salkind, producer was Bob Simmonds, executive story consultant was Fred Freiberger, who was also on STAR TREK and SPACE: 1999, director of photography was Orson Ochoa and the theme was created by Kevin Kiner. The series received its first run between the 7th January - 18th March 1989, for just 11 episodes. A full run for the series would occur later on Sky One.

Gerard Christopher's background is as a fashion model and a star of more than 60 television commercials to fund his education through the University of Southern California where he studied business, screenwriting, directing and cinematography. That's why he was hired as the star, producer and contributing writer on Superboy. He has also been in the films Dangerously Close and Tomboy. He has guested in TV shows Murphey's Law, True Confessions, Melrose Place and Silk Stockings. He starred in the pilot of a TV show filmed in New Zealand, Welcome to Paradise, and more recently has a recurring role in the soap opera Days of our Lives.

The adventures of a younger version of Superman. The last survivor of the planet Krypton, Superboy fights supervillains and crime and stands as a testament to truth and justice everywhere. His alter-ego, Clark Kent, is a journalism student at Shuster University. Later, after graduating from the university, Kent and pal Lana Lang join the Bureau of Extranormal Affairs so he can be on the lookout for where he might be needed.

"Look! Up in the sky! It's a bird! It's a plane! It's-" Whoops. Wrong show. While it has many similarities to its predecessor of the 1950s, The Adventures of Superboy has many elements that were never possible in those days. To start with, the show had a budget that flowed a young, first time-on-camera cast to go outside of studio soundstages. John Haymes Newton (and later Gerard Christopher), Stacy Haiduk and Jim Calvert had characters who were students at Shuster University.

The show witnessed the dramatic debuts of such comics supervillains as MetalJo, Mr. Mxyzptlk, Lex Luthor and Bizarro. Original creations for the screen include Young Dracula, Nick Knack and Neila. Modern-day special effects also allowed for more realistic flying sequences. For John Haymes Newton, The Adventures of Superboy was a chance at experiencing the fantasy of flight. "The first time I flew was in a studio lot with a practice harness. It was pretty exciting because we had a crane that ejected me 60 to 65 feet in the air," says Newton who got to don the famous red and blue costume. The crane rig, handled by Superman films veteran Bob Harman, was versatile and mobile for filming. "It's pretty neat because of the way they were able to move it from location to location. You forget you're on wires after a while. Not in a psychotic way, but in a way that was very freeing. It's a neat feeling. There was one take during one of the early episodes where I actually left off the ground before the wires-I thought I could really fly. I went ahead of the wires," recalls Newton. "The nature of it is you don't do any leaping or jumping-the wires do all the work. You can't even help them. Otherwise, there's a jerk effect, or it's not smooth, or it doesn't look natural. There was a lot of effects involved into just doing it properly and making it believable. I did some research into that as far as weight and balance and [finding] different ways of how to turn, physics and stuff like that. I think the first few times I flew I was more involved in what I was doing ... then really thinking, 'Wow, this is neat, I'm flying.'"

Newton doesn't recall any accidents during his tenure as the orphan from Krypton, but he does say that he almost hit a train once. And like Christopher Reeve before him, his wardrobe was varied for different scenes. There were walking and flying capes. "I felt safe at all times because the flying people had done all the Superman films, and they are some of the best people in the industry," attests Newton. One stunt Newton particularly enjoyed was a motorcycle stunt in "Black Flamingo." "I got to break down some double doors, with a 50-pound snake around my neck and glasses and a beard. It was pretty interesting to do all that, and I got to ride my own motorcycle." Newton also remembers an episode called "Hollywood." "That was a lot of fun, to do a period piece with the period garb and go against gangsters. ... They're throwing guns at me, and I just grabbed the pistol, and because it was a rubber pistol, I bent it. We did that in rehearsal and it worked, so we did it for a take and they used it."

David Nutter, director of that episode, happily recalls this moment also as well. "I wanted to do the same kind of things they did in the original Superman TV series, a 1930s setting," he says. "And that's when the bad guys shot at Superboy at the old abandoned warehouse. After shooting at him, they throw their guns at him. And then he grabbed one and did the obligatory bending of the barrel. That was a fun thing we did." Being cast as the Boy of Steel came about rather quickly. A native of North Carolina who had been working and studying in New York in an acting program for two years, Newton was on a vacation trip home when he got noticed by a casting director working on a film. The director's other chore was Superboy, and Newton immediately got tested.

"It was one of those fluke type of experiences," says Newton dreamily. "It was a pretty weird day!" But, after a year's work, Newton left the show abruptly. Reports suggested he left because of a creative dispute between him and the producers, Ilya and Alexander Salkind, over how Clark Kent would be portrayed. But apparently, this was not the case. "Our salaries were very low," explains Newton. "I was doing a lot of stunts, I was doing two characters ... so, when we came to negotiate at the end of the season, we asked for more money, and they said, 'No!' And it came down to who was going to call the other person's bluff. We came down to a significant amount, and it was between them and Viacom. Viacom and neither of those two would give in to pay us more money. Because they had been going through this back and forth all season long. I was determined not to give in another penny. So, the Salkinds didn't have the money to give. They were really caught in a bind, and so my agents chose to not go back."

As a result, the Salkinds had the unenviable task of recasting the lead role of a successful syndicated half hour show. "They had plenty of time to recast the character, and that's what they did," says Newton. Newton notes that he did spend some time going "back and forth" with the Salkinds concerning the portrayal of Clark Kent. Should Clark be a bumbling idiot (to cover his super identity while around friends) or a normal teenager? "I wanted him to be shy and a little insecure "

, Newton says. "They wanted me to do Chris Reeve's Clark Kent ... not that I wouldn't do. It's just that it copied something that Chris was doing. I got a lot of positive response that I didn't do that. It's obvious that [Clark and Superboy] look very similar. But there's another force coming into play that prevents the audience or prevents people or friends from noticing that I'm this person-Clark Kent as Superboy. There's other things that affect people and how they see you as a person, and the nerdy thing doesn't disguise how you look. It portrays a different person. But I thought the insecure thing was better than the nerdy thing. It gets to be a caricature. If you play somebody really nerdy, it gets to be they're not even real anymore.

"I could have played him more insecure-I could have gone farther with it but the scripts were not written that way.

"There was a Lex Luthor episode where we saw more of it. There were certain episodes where it came out more. But as I say, it's all hindsight 20/20." Newton claims that he's in possession of a letter from the Salkinds asking him to return to the show and offering a price-but a low one, he says. "Why would they send me a letter asking me to come back to the show, if they didn't like the way I was playing Clark Kent?" he asks. "We never had a dispute about this. It was always a friendly discussion. It was never anything vicious. If it came down that they were totally unhappy [with the portrayal], I would have played nerdy." However, Newton adds, "I don't think the audience wanted to watch a caricature on television. I felt they wanted real people. And that's what I did, I thought. What Gerry [Christopher] did or didn't do, I don't know. I'm sure he did a good job, doing whatever choices he made."

Newton does not appear at all bitter about giving up the lead role in an exciting fantasy series. "I went on to do some of the most incredible work of my life after I left the show!" he says. "I went on to TV movies about American Indians; I've done three feature films. I mean, how can you do that if you're doing a TV series? It's very difficult. I've done some incredible regional theatre in New York. I've been doing some writing. I've been asked to do sequels to films that I've completed. I still have a long way to go." Newton reports that his fan mail was stronger after his departure than when he was in the show. "People miss me. I'm not saying they'd rather have me on the show but I'm saying they miss seeing me. It's very nice, the amount of support I got once I left the show. It gradually tapered off because they don't really air the episodes. ... I still stayed with people who originally followed me with the show and keep up with my work." Gerard Christopher was recast as Clark Kent/Superboy and Sherman Howard replaced Scott Wells as the recurring villain, Lex Luthor, from the second season on.

For co-star Stacy Haiduk, as for Newton, The Adventures of Superboy was an opportunity to flex newly developed acting muscles in front of cameras for the first time. "It was all so new to me. I was just so excited to be working," she says. Being constantly saved by Superboy was fun at first, says Haiduk, but "after a year, I felt extremely frustrated because Lana was so predictable. Although it did change in the fourth year.... With Lana's characterization, I felt that, working with writers, Lana became a stronger and more independent woman towards the last two seasons."

Because she was so new to episodic television business, Haiduk says she was grateful for the opportunity to learn and become comfortable in front of the camera. She confesses to being very critical of herself and her acting. Looking back, she says, "I feel good about the work that was done, but I would have made some changes in my performances. Overall, I am satisfied with the end result." Asked to point to a segment that she especially enjoyed, Haiduk cites "The Basement," "because I was able to create a whole new character, and an evil one at that. I also like a few of the earlier shows written by Cary Bates."

But for Haiduk, the most memorable moments working on the show came not from acting scenes or working with a tightly knit production cast and crew, but "watching the reaction of young children when they met Superboy-seeing their faces light up and how excited they would be." Haiduk parts with a final memory of those four years as a fledgling actress. "From a personal point of view, I remember one scene I was really looking forward to. It was a very difficult, passionate scene. When we finally got to it, it was midnight, the crew was exhausted, tension was high because we were now into overtime. I got my orders from the director- 'Do it in one take!' It was a lot of pressure, but I pulled it off, and I actually felt good about my performance. "A week later, I found the scene ended up on the cutting floor," sighs Haiduk, adding philosophically, "That's show business!"

For David Nutter, The Adventures of Superboy was a chance to grow into his directing: craft. He had completed a feature with Don Johnson (pre-Miami Vice) after graduating from college and had been exposed to the seedy world of 21 Jump Street before moving into the Superboy universe. Thanks to an introduction to the Salkinds by an assistant director friend, Nutter would become one of the show's youngest directors (still in his early 20s) and the show's highest recurring director with 21 episodes. "They showed me a couple of shows, and apparently what had happened was when the series first started they had worked with a lot of directors who had done a lot of television for many years," recalls Nutter. "They were very unhappy for the first 13 episodes. So they started down a new path of [hiring] younger people. They started with [fellow director] David Grossman, and they wanted to continue that trend, so they brought me in."

Nutter remembers The Adventures of Superboy as a show "that tried to do pretty big scripts and pretty big stories with no money. It's tough to write scripts in half-hour mode, in a sort of AB-C storyline. I've spent many, many hours cutting scripts and having to cut down time. Scripts were too long. The problem is when you do a series like Superboy, in a half-hour mode, it's tough to develop three or four characters. You have to cut it down to 20 to 22 minutes. There's no time for 'B' stories." Nutter remembers that the Salkinds "were looking for someone else, another person to play the role. Nutter, despite Newton's remarks, still insists that "basically, they didn't like the Clark Kent characterization. John was a kid, rather young, and I'm not sure that series television was the type of thing right for him at the time. He was really good, physically, in stunts, and he was very strong. I think he was honest in his portrayal. [But] I think basically he was a young guy who didn't have a lot of experience.

"There's always a situation with actors and finances, and as far as the situation with the characterization, it was a situation they didn't feel worked." Nutter was pleased to see Stacy Haiduk's growth as an actress. "She was very young at the time the show started, and I got to see her just blossom in the last couple of seasons," he says. "It was amazing. In the first couple of shows she was just a ditzzy redhead. As the show developed, she became a very serious actress." Gerard Christopher as the new Superboy was fresh, Nutter notes. "I think when he started out on the show, his Clark Kent was quite good, but he had problems with the strengths of Superboy. But then as the show went on, he got more comfortable with the character. He definitely had the facial look. He had the charisma that was necessary. There were areas where he could have had more depth, though

The keys to the show's success, says Nutter, were the writing, character scripting and casting. "In the second season, the introduction of [writer] Mark Jones would bring interesting characters that really added to the show. When Superboy came to third and fourth season, the show became more involved with the characters." There were also many supervillains to contend with. Nutter says the show really came to life in the second season with the introduction of Sherman Howard as Lex Luthor. Howard saw (and played him) as Batman's nemesis, the Joker.

The show's gradual character development and increase in production quality happened, says Nutter, when the Salkinds stepped away from the project and Julia Pistor entered to produce. A new director of photography and some others below the line helped change the show's look and tone. But Superman's publisher, in Nutter's view, remained actively involved. "DC Comics always had an idea of how the show should be. It's a situation in which you have to go back and forth and get a lot of 'DC' notes. ... He wouldn't do that, or she wouldn't do that.' They would really tell you how they want the show to be. We had to succumb to those things."

For "Paranoid," Nutter says, "Stan [Berkowitz] originally wanted it to be a situation in which the paranoia was real, with nothing artificial and nothing extraterrestrial involved. DC said there had to be some type of extraterrestrial to make this all copacetic." Both Stan Berkowitz and David Nutter point to third season's "Road to Hell" with Ron Ely as particularly exciting. "He was a perfect choice for that character," says Nutter. "I thought he was wonderful. He made the character as someone with charisma and stature, someone of that nature. There wasn't better casting if we had a lot more money."

Ninety percent of acting is casting, Nutter says. To demonstrate the difficulties of matching character, actor, and circumstance, he offers this behind-the-scenes story about casting the episode "A Change of Heart": "I was working with Miguel Ferrer in Vancouver, Canada. I told him I also worked on Superboy. When I talk to directors about Superboy, they'll sigh and say, 'Yeah, what's that?' but with Miguel, he said, 'Oh my god! That's a great show!' He was a comic book writer, had been in movies, and he really appreciated it. 'I'd love to do that show sometime.' So we talked about the kind of characters he'd like to play in it. And I called Stan Berkowitz and Julia Pistor, and said, 'Listen, Miguel Ferrer would come down and do the show if you could write a character for him.' So, we wrote a character for him. What happened was Lex Luthor was trying to be a good guy. But there was a scheduling problem with Sherman Howard. He couldn't come in." So, with a few keystrokes on a word processor, Luthor was out and new characters were created. In place of a villain turning good, "Miguel and I suggested Billy Mumy as this kind of demented character," says Nutter.

Bill Mumy, the carrot-topped kid in the 1960s series Lost in Space, happened to be a friend and partner of Miguel Ferrer. "The Billy Mumy role [replaced] Lex Luthor," says Nutter. "But what happened was Miguel, who was going to play our lead villain, was shooting On the Air, the David Lynch [half hour sitcom]. They were one day over schedule. So, that one day he couldn't come down to Orlando." As a result, Michael DesBarres, known for a recurring role in MacGyver as the villain Murdoc, stepped in. "Michael DesBarres did a great job. He came in to do the show. Michael was great, and it was a great show." The episode "Paranoid" featured two very familiar faces as guest stars.

On the suggestion of someone at the show's distributor, Viacom, The Adventures of Superboy brought onboard two regulars from the 1950s predecessor The Adventures of Superman: Noel Neill and Jack Larson, who had played Lois Lane and Jimmy Olsen. "There's one point when Jack's possibly the one who did the killing- 'You're after me?'-and he was swiping pencils and papers, back when he was at the newspaper," says Nutter. "When Superboy flies up to the windowsill, Jack looks up and says 'Jeepers!' It was a lot of fun, and both of them were a real treat to work with. Noel hadn't acted in years. And Jack had been on the scene, but doing a lot of writing. We hoped it would work out, and it did."

Although the two acting veterans had not worked for a long time in front of cameras, Nutter reports that Neill and Larson were comfortable working with a stage setting, and the sophisticated shooting style of the 1980s was not too different or difficult for them. "They were used to someone like myself who doesn't just set the camera down and treat it like a stage," says Nutter. After completing some 21 episodes over four seasons, Nutter found the show's demise an emotional and difficult time.

"It was like losing a family member," says Nutter somberly. "It was a very, very emotional time for me, and you know how they say the first time is something you always remember [although] you get bigger and better. There were a lot of people there, and when you do a series for that long, you really develop relationships with people. I'd love to do [a series] again in a situation like that. In the entertainment industry, it's very transitory. You can be a director for two or three weeks on a show and you're gone." Over the four seasons, Nutter saw many changes in Superboy. At the end of the second season, with a desire to add new blood and find new directions for the show, the producers hired new writers, cinematographers, art directors and producers. By the third season, Clark Kent and Lana Lang graduated from Shuster University and together arrived at the Bureau of Extranormal Affairs. This change allowed the characters to escape the campus environment and interact more directly with unusual and extraordinary phenomena in the world-a perfect opportunity for Superboy to intervene. It was also an allusion to Kent's future job at the Daily Planet.

Stan Berkowitz was tapped as the head writer for seasons three and four, under the title of co-producer and later producer. "I was told by Viacom that they wanted to expand the audience for the show," recalls Berkowitz. "Basically, they felt children watched the show. So they wanted to expand it so adults could get into it. I was given examples of movies they liked Robocop, Die Hard-models to follow. They wanted to know what kind of movies I liked. They wanted to make the show darker, more mysterious and adult. Darker visually and in terms of stories."

Looking back, Berkowitz says simply, "Nobody's work is ever perfect." He wishes he could erase some decisions made on individual episodes in the third and fourth year. But he adds, "I wish the show had gotten a little more credit. I think a lot of people didn't want to watch it because of the title Superboy. And, we were trying to get adults! I think adults were going, 'I don't care. It's about a boy.' I think if they had watched, they would have said, 'This isn't bad! There are some interesting themes here.' Instead of treating it as Superboy, we wanted to be Superman without actually saying Superman."

For legal reasons, the name Superman could not be used on the show. Never mind that he was the same character and only slightly younger; man was taboo and only boy was allowed. "It's part of the original, confusing and complex deal the Salkinds had with DC Comics that means they only have the rights to a TV Superboy," says Berkowitz. "Now, there was a [two-part] episode called 'Road to Hell' where we see a full-grown man (played by Ron Ely). And we couldn't actually call him Superman. So, we just sort of avoided that word in the dialogue."

Sometimes, however, things leak out. "In the first version of the credits, which I actually have on tape, it came out as 'Ron Ely as Superman,'" attests Berkowitz. "The casting director had used it. But when the DC [Comics representatives] looked at that, they said, 'No! You can't use that word!' So, they simply deleted that from the copy that went out on the air. But I have a pre-air copy." Critiquing the first two seasons, Berkowitz believes that "they were trying to be Superman. He would be the only anomaly in the universe. I saw a couple of them, and his adversaries were crooked real estate developers and the like. For superheroes, those aren't really very good adversaries. There's one where the adversary was an insane concentration camp victim. You needed bigger villains. Halfway through the season they started bringing in space creatures and things like that." Berkowitz found these stories more interesting but says, "The scripts were poorly thought out."

To produce the show, it was necessary for three partners—a publishing company who owned rights to a character, a production company that held the bank credit line and a French father-son production team—to achieve a mindmelding without emasculating the product they were all creating. "The situation with Superboy is that it's owned by DC Comics, and it was rented out to Viacom so the Salkinds could make a TV series," explains Berkowitz. "They all have a stake in it, and they're all fighting and screaming at each other. And essentially, it was like Solomon's baby. It's like three mothers fighting over the baby. But if Solomon asked them, 'Ok, we're going to chop up the baby, which one of you wants to give in?' none of them gave in. The result was essentially what you saw on the air. By the time I came on the show, Salkind had pretty much dropped out of the equation. And the DC guys backed off a little"—which left Viacom to run the show.

Berkowitz's memories of his experiences on the show consist mainly of "bitching and fighting, screaming," with DC Comics over story particulars—"Can he do this or that?" and "Is this logical or not logical?" Nevertheless, "we got things done. We never lost a day of shooting or anything like that. We never had any major disasters. We were writing all the time." Berkowitz felt that Gerard Christopher, as Clark Kent/Superboy, was "not very good in that [second] season. I thought he was wooden. Clark looked silly. "I think he was too nerdy. The first guy, who was fired, supposedly he was not nerdy enough as Clark, and they made Gerry really nerdy as Clark. And then, in season three, Clark became closer to what he is in the comic books. He was still a guy who got lost in a crowd of two. He was shy. He didn't fight back. In fact, we made a point of him showing him fighting back only once, and that was in "Cat and Mouse," where he goes against the psychiatrist and he stands up for himself. They eased back on [the nerdiness]. If you watch the show, he was maturing.

"I don't think he had much to work with at first," adds Berkowitz. "My initial opinion was that he was not a very good actor. [But] sometimes we can be fooled by that. A guy who seems to be a bad actor can turn out to be a good actor when he gets better scripts." Later, as he got to know Christopher, Berkowitz found that "he was very ambitious about being a producer/director during the whole shoot. But he was so busy acting, there wasn't much time for that. He was best as an actor, I think, when he was playing a bad guy. He was also good as Clark when they gave him enough to do. He always felt awkward playing Superboy because of the costume. 'What do I do? Here's a character that's perfect.'

"I thought progressively, starting with season three, he got better and better. Some episodes like "A Day in the Double Life," I thought, 'This guy is really fun to watch!' There are also points where he plays villains. 'Roads Not Taken, Parts 1 and 2,' particularly ... as the dictator, he was fun to watch. That's why you write-to see your words become entertaining. There's also a 'body swap,' where he played Lex Luthor. He was wonderful. Supposedly Luthor's brain gets into Superboy's body." Regarding Stary Haiduk, as Kent/Superboy's friend Lana Lang, Berkowitz says, "You had to explain stuff from the scripts to her. What's going on, why the characters are doing stuff. The way she'd do best is if you sat down with her and go through everything Lana had to do. Here's why she's doing this, here's why she's doing that. Unfortunately, I didn't have much time for that. For 'Road to Hell,' I took her out to dinner and sat down with the script and went over it line by line. So if she seems special in that, it's because she was sitting down and actually talking about the script at length with the writer."

Because of the show's status as a syndicated show, feedback was bare, and ratings were spotty at best. "The ratings declined as the show got better," says an incredulous Berkowitz. "I don't know what to make of that.

Perhaps it was a bad idea to try to move the show up to adults, because if you have a successful show that children are watching, it probably makes more sense to [leave it that way]." In analysis of specific episodes created during his tenure on the show, Berkowitz cites the two-parters "Roads Not Taken" and "Road to Hell" as particularly satisfying.

"John [Francis] Moore was pitching ideas for the show," says Berkowitz. "He's a friend of Andy Helfer [a writer for the show as well as a DC Comics consultant]. So John said, 'Why don't you have the guy go into a different dimension?' 'What dimension?' 'Oh, it's this cold, weird place and there's this monster waiting for him.' I thought, 'Oh, too hard to shoot that!' But then I remembered an article about alternate worlds. Every time you make a choice, there's an alternate world created where you made the opposite choice. ... Each new world is triggered by you making a different choice. What about that, I said. So we sat down and worked on it. Before John got very far, almost immediately after that meeting, he got hired as story editor on The Flash [1990]. So it's a shared story credit on the scripts. I was pleased. I thought it worked out quite well. There was more humor in the scripts that sort of got deleted by the director during the shooting and cutting of the show."

Another interesting episode was "Obituary for a Super Hero," in which Superboy had supposedly died. The episode dealt with the media's reaction to his presumed death. "It just came to me watching Nightline and being told we had one day to do a shoot," admits Berkowitz. "I thought, what can we shoot? A lot of creativity comes from desperation! A lot of my creativity comes when there's very limited parameters. 'You can't do this, you can't do that, you can't do that, you have only this amount of time to do it.' You start thinking, 'Let's see, what can we do, given those limits there?' I think that show is indicative of that."

After some 100 episodes of the show, with Viacom wanting to end their deficit financing and hoping to recover their investment in syndication, the show stopped filming. The last twoparter, titled "Rites of Passage," had an interesting genesis.

"Mike [Carlin] and Andy [Helfer] had pitched the idea of Superboy going through puberty for a long time, probably even before I got there," recalls Berkowitz. "I was saying, 'What are you talking about? Pubic hair and stuff like this?' and they'd answer, 'No, no, no! He's an alien! All these different weird things start happening to him. His powers go berserk.' How does it end, I asked. 'It ends with the punchline being that it's puberty.' I'm thinking, 'Great!' but you can't end the show that way. So that was put on hold for a while. And then we thought show 100 would be the final show, so we'd graduate him to be Superman. Stop calling a 32-year-old actor Superboy and start calling him Superman. We planned to use the puberty aspects of his powers going crazy and taking him back to the spaceship and all that as a prelude to making him Super man. The script is halfway done and Ilya Salkind says, 'No, no, no! You can't do this. We may go another season, we may go back into production: He wants to wait until he's 40 or something. It seemed like a foolish objection that Salkind had, but we had to obey them. We shaped the show where he went through these rites of passage Kryptonian rites of passage-moving toward manhood, but not quite achieving it." And that's how the show ended.

CAST NOTES

John Haymes Newton (Clark Kent/Superboy): Superboy was Newton's first television series. Afterwards, the actor remained very busy with a TV movie about the American Indians, and lead roles in films such as Cool as Ice (1991)-"I played the bad guy in that and it was good for me to break through the All-American stereotype as Superboy"-and Paramount's 1993 feature Alive. Most recently, he was one of the Untouchables on Fox television.

Gerard Christopher (Clark Kent/Superboy): Christopher has studied at the Juilliard School and appeared in the films Dangerously Close (1986) and Tomboy (1985). His television appearances include Murphy's Law and True Confessions, and he has done more than 60 commercials. Christopher calls his role in Superboy "the opportunity that everybody dreams of. It's a unique experience where you carve out of a slice of Americana." Christopher, in addition to becoming coproducer late into the series, penned two Superboy scripts: "Wish for Armageddon" and "Cat and Mouse."

Stacy Haiduk (Lana Lang): Haiduk appeared in a string of music videos prior to being cast in Superboy. She also had a recurring role on Another World. After four seasons of flying in Superboy's arms, she promptly moved to Aaron Spelling's TV series The Roundtable (1992), before landing a regular role in seaQuest, DSV (1993).

Peter Fernandez (Matt Ritter): "Superboy is the true enigma. He's the UFO that everyone talks about but he's real, he's here. You can touch him. He's the reason for the Bureau of Extranormal Affairs. You can believe that other things are possible." From Hanson, Massachusetts, Fernandez previously appeared in The Cotton Club (1984) and One Life to Live. A theatrically trained actor, he has appeared in dozens of New York Shakespeare Festival productions including Macbeth, Julius Caesar and The Merchant of Venice.

Robert Levine (C. Dennis Jackson): The veteran actor appeared in such classic movies as Splendor in the Grass (1961), Up the Down Staircase (1967), The Hot Rock (1972) and All That Jazz (1979). He also had roles in Dominick and Eugene (1988) and Tootsie (1982). On television, he has appeared in L.A. Law, Thirtysomething, Barney Miller, Taxi and Kate and Allie.

Lex Luthor has plans to bring about the end of the world by detonating a network of "dirty bombs" that will wipe out the population with a cloud of radiation. And he has a plan to get Superboy out of the way as well. Superboy is drawn to an old lair of Luthor's by a hypersonic signal. There he finds Lana has followed him and they discover a computer program, created by Luthor, known as a "psycho-disc". The program allows the user to live out Luthor's life in a virtual reality type environment. Superboy activates the program and becomes Luthor in the VR world. He sees how Luthor lived with an abusive father, and a mother who refused to stand up for herself. The only person Luthor ever loved was his sister Lena. Meanwhile, back in the real world, Lana learns that if Superboy is not removed from the VR world soon, he will be trapped in a never ending loop of Luthor's memories. Lana becomes a part of the program herself, hoping to rescue Superboy. Back at his new lair, Luthor reveals android duplicates of himself and Lena. Strange things begin to happen at the Bureau after a construction project begins. Tools are found twisted and mangled, computers print countless sheets filled with the name "Lisa," and strange noises are heard. While working one night, Lana is nearly blown out of the window by a gust of wind coming from inside the building. She calls in a paranormal specialist and a psychic to investigate and they discover a gun hidden in a retaining wall that is not part of the building plans. The gun fires at the wall, which Lana is standing in front of, all on its own, and Superboy appears to stop it. He smashes through the retaining wall to find a skeleton, which is likely the remains of a clarinet player named Johnny murdered 50 years ago when the Bureau was a grand ballroom called "The Trocadel." The psychic claims the spirit is at rest now, but at night things go insane as the hole in the wall begins to glow and pull things and people toward it. The doors slam shut and won't open. Superboy arrives to free everyone trapped inside and try to quiet the raging spirit, but he fails. Lana, however succeeds by bringing in an elderly woman named Lisa who knew Johnny 50 years ago. SUPERCAR

A wonderfully versatile craft Supercar could travel over land, in the sea and through the air - anywhere in the world. It had folding wings for flights and a periscope for submarine work. The regular cast included Supercar's fatherly inventor, Professor Rudolph Popkiss, a sort of mid-European scientist; his assistant Dr Horatio Beaker, a British boffin with a balding head and a stammer; fearless test pilot Mike Mercury; 10-year-old Jimmy Gibson who was the first person to be rescued by Supercar, after a plane crash; and his pal Mitch, a mischievous talking monkey. They were the good guys. Out to steal Supercar were Masterspy, a devious deepvoiced mercenary, and his weedy, worm-like accomplice Zarin; and their British counterparts Harper and Judd.

Supercar started the run of Supermarionation SF series in 1961, but the Gerry Anderson puppet story was already five years old by then. It all began as they say, in 1956, in a converted mansion in Maidenhead, Berkshire, where the 27-year-old, near-penniless former film cutting-room assistant launched his own company AP Films into its maiden venture, a low-budget puppet project about a character who could stretch his limbs. The Adventures of Twizzle ran for 52 15-minute episodes, closely followed by 52 tales of Torchy The Battery Boy, dazzling the first generation of ITV toddlers. (Both these were scripted by Roberta Leigh who later created SPACE PATROL) Then came a full-scale puppet production, the Western series Four Feather Falls, with Nicholas Parsons and Kenneth Connor among the actors voicing the characters.

Anderson's technique was improving - incorporating moving eyes and electronically controlled mouth movements - and he and his associates, Reg Hill, John Read, and wife Sylvia, were realising the potential of this type of film-making. A new word was coined to set the puppets as a race apart - supermarionation - and Supercar swept it across the screens.

Supercar itself, a seven-foot craft made mostly of lightweight balsa wood, was designed by Reg Hill and cost £1000 to build - a small fortune for a company so short of cash that it used 1500 empty egg cartons stuck on the walls to soundproof its new studio in a disused factory in Slough. Supercar was dreamt up in 1959, but with Anderson's previous backers, Granada Television, shying away from the new project, production was saved when Lew Grade's ITC put up the money. The series was a soaraway success. Its 39 episodes turned the tide for Anderson, selling into more than 100 US markets and more than 40 countries. Indeed, Lew Grade liked the results so much he subsequently bought the company!

This was the first of Anderson's SuperMarionation SF series for children. Supercar, which can also travel under the sea and through the air, was invented by Professor Popkiss and is driven by Mike Mercury (or sometimes the talking monkey Mitch). Constant efforts to steal Supercar are made by Masterspy. Some of the storylines are SF (mad scientists, supermagnets); some are merely crime-fighting. The series was a big success, and sold in the USA. More SuperMarionation series followed.

Producer for the series was Gerry Anderson, special effects were created by Derek Meddings (Season Two), the title song sung by Gary Miller (Season One) / The Mike Sammers Singers (Season Two). The broadcast dates shown are for the London, ATV region).

WR. Martin & Hugh Woodhouse (Season One) and Gerry and Sylvia Anderson (Season Two).

SUPERGRAN

The adventures of a superpowered grannie who fights crime in her community.

As a kid in the eighties I used to love reading the SUPERGRAN books. Accompanied by the TV series with the memorable theme tune (Stand back Superman, Spiderman etc...) sung by Billy Connolly, this Scottish family fun was extremely entertaining. Simple format, Scunner Campbell was the baddy and his podgy stooge 'tub' who always had a cream bun in his face. They were always stopped by SUPERGRAN and her hapless chums. Questionable acting, pointless script and special effects to make any Doctor Who look like Star Wars, but still entertaining enough to keep this seven year old kid glued to his screen. With her hunching over and her quivering she would extend her index and her little finger on each hand with her thumb holding the others in place, this indicated her 'Super hearing' was working. Well I suppose it beats the Bionic Woman's ear. Classic stuff, worth checking the bargain basket in the video store to find an episode.

"Supergran" was adapted for television from the "Super Gran" series of children's books by Forrest Wilson. First shown in 1985 on ITV, "Supergran" was set in Scotland and was about Granny Smith (played by Gudrun Ure) who had special powers after being accidentally hit by the beam from a magic ray machine. The show was broadcast weekly, where Supergran used her special powers against the villain Scunner Campbell and his sidekicks Muscles and Dustin and to fight crime in her home town of Chisleton. Two series, each consisting of 13 half-hour episodes were shown, along with a Christmas special in 1986. The final episode was screened in 1987.

Gudrun Ure, who played the title role, went on to appear in episodes of famous British TV series including "Midsomer Murders" in 1997, "Where The Heart Is" in 1997, and "Casualty" in 2002. Gudrun also played significant roles in the TV series "The Crow Road" and "The 10th Kingdom". Iain Cuthbertson, who played Scunner Campbell, has also done a lot of TV work, appearing in episodes of "Casualty", "Inspector Morse" and "Poirot" as well as the films "Scandal" and "Gorillas In The Mist". Jenny McDade who adapted the Forrest Wilson's books for the screen also went on to write for the TV series "Mr Majeika". Forrest Wilson carried on writing "Super Gran" books, and audio cassette versions are available featuring Gudrun Ure as narrator. Episodes from the show were released on video, but are now hard to find.

She had Her magic bicycle and her skimmer mobile. Billy Connolly singing the theme tune... "Stand back Superman, Iceman, Spiderman, Batman and Robin too... Don't wanna cause a ruckus, but B. A. Barracus have I got a match for you... She makes them look like a bunch of fairies... She's got more bottle than United Dairies... Hang about... Look out... for Supergran..." Guest appearances from the likes of George Best, Geoff Capes, Gary Glitter, Spike Milligan, Eric Bristow, Bernard Cribbins, Willie Thorne, Barbara Windsor and Lulu.

Adapting the Super Gran series of children's books by Forrest Wilson (first published in 1978, there have been ten, at the last count), Tyne Tees scored great success with two long series of Supergran (one word). The stories relate the adventures of a happy and gentle old lady, known as Granny Smith, who, out one day for a stroll in the park, is given great powers when a magic-ray machine - the brainchild of Inventor Black but stolen by the villainous Scunner Campbell - is accidentally fired at her. Granny's life is never the same again as she metamorphoses into Supergran in order to fight the Scunner Campbell, his assistants Muscles and Dustin and other evil elements, and so protect the good citizens of her home-town Chisleton. (Actual location shooting was done in Tynemouth.) The series made especially good use of the latest available effects, courtesy of which Supergran could be seen to pole-vault herself through very high windows, ride through the air on her tricks-laden, two-wheel, multi-winged Flycycle (actually an adapted butcher's boy's bicycle), and whizz around land and sea in her Skimmer mobile.

Each weekly episode was a self-contained crime-fighting story, made additionally watchable by the remarkable array of guest stars who were happy to take part. These included Billy Connolly (who also co-wrote the series' theme music), Michael Elphick, Roy Kinnear, Sheila Steafel, Irene Handl, Burt Kwouk, Pat

SUPERHUMAN SAMURAI SYBER SQUAD

Sam Collins and his friends Tanker, Amp and Syd were members of a garage band named Team Samurai. One day through a freak accident, Sam was pulled inside his computer where he was transformed into Servo, a digital superhero who fights viruses inside the computer. He later recruited the other band member to form the Syber Squad and fight viruses which he was incapable of fighting by himself. The viruses inside the computer were all created by Kilokhan.

Kilokhan was an alien warlord who lived inside computer and who intended on destroying the information highway. Kilokhan was aided in his goal by Malcom Frink in the real world. Malcom was a fellow student of Sam and his friends at North Valley High.

Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad was a series with a similar concept to the phenomenally successful MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS, in which a group of high school students receive special powers to defend the world. Like the Power Rangers, Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad took its action and special effects sequences from a Japanese series. In this case Gridman.

While not inside the computer, the action in Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad was of the teen angst variety occurring at North Valley high. Other regular characters in the series were: Jennifer Doyle, Sam's girlfriend, whom was at first not aware that Sam was a digital superhero; Mrs. Starkey, the manager of the school cafeteria; Elizabeth Collins, Sam's little sister; Mr. Pratchert, the principal of North Valley High; and Julie Pratchert, Mr. Pratchert's daughter and a student at North Valley High.

Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad first appeared as a syndicated series broadcast five days a week in September of 1994. In October of 1994, four episodes of Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad were broadcast Saturday mornings on ABC, as a replacement series for the computer animated series Reboot which had fallen behind its production schedule. All four of the episodes that were run on ABC have been broadcast in syndication. The episodes run on ABC and the dates they were on are: 052 Little Ditch, Big Glitch b:15 Oct 1994, 023 Pride Goeth Before a Brawl b: 22 Oct 94; 009 Lights, Camera, Action! B: 29 Oct 94; 017 Hello Darkness, My Old Friend b: 5 Nov 94.

Superhuman Samurai Syber Squad was a 1994 syndicated television series distributed by DiC Entertainment based on the Japanese tokusatsu series Denkou Choujin Gridman produced by Tsuburaya Production. It was one of two alternatives to the extremely popular Mighty Morphin Power Rangers, which is based off of the sixteenth series in the Super Sentai franchise Kyouryuu Sentai ZyuRanger. The other was a short-lived show named Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters from Beverly Hills.

Transformation Commands

Sam - "Let's Samuraize, Guys!" (most times he proceeds to strum his guitar)

Tanker - "Let's Kick Some Giga-Butt!" (most times he would knock his drumsticks together when saying the phrase)

Sydney - "Pump Up The Power!"

Amp - different phrase every time, meant to be humorous (e.g. "Three For a Dollar!", "With a Cherry on Top!", "With a Side of Fries!", "Shake Well Before Using!", "Over the Lips, Past the Gums, Look Out Virus....Here We Comes!", etc.)

Lucky - "Surf's Up!"

Vehicles

Vitor: An attack jet armed with laser beams and a capture ring used to restrain monsters; it was first piloted by Amp and later by Lucky. On one occasion it was piloted by Sydney.

Tracto: A mini tank; its driver is Tanker.

Borr: A drill tank that can burrow underground; its driver is Sydney. Once it was piloted by Amp.

Zenon: A powerful humanoid robot created when Vitor, Tracto, and Borr combine. When it combines with Servo, they form Servo's upgrade, SYNCHRO, which is armed with a pair of shoulder drill missiles.

Jamb: A dragon head mini-jet which also acts as a bazooka type flame thrower, known as the Dragon Cannon, which is used by Servo. Its main pilot is Sydney.

Torb: A giant jet with various weaponry. Its main pilot is Tanker. Later in the series, Jamb and Torb would just appear as one single jet fighter (in the Japanese version, it was referred as Dragon Fortress) and was piloted by either Sydney or Tanker and eventually just transform into Drago.

Drago: A mechanized Dragon formed when Jamb and Torb combine. It was almost always piloted by Tanker, except for on a couple of occasions when Sydney piloted it. When it combines with Servo, they form Servo's upgrade, PHORMO, which is armed with a pair of laser gauntlets.

Trivia

Neither Amp or Lucky have piloted Drago even once during the series.

When mentioned that Tanker and Syd were the default pilots for the "Drago Jet," the Cafeteria Lady, Miss Starkey, did pilot the vehicle in one episode ("Starkey in Syberspace"), as did a famous basketball player Charles "High Jump" Johnson who was dragged along to fight a Mega Virus Monster when the band used the vehicles to escape the locked high school (in the episode "Syber-Dunk").

There were four American settings used, not including the Japanese footage... they were the Basement (Sam's room), The High School Hallway, The High School Cafeteria, and Malcolm's room.

Compared to other American adaptations of Japanese Tokusatsu series, SSSS actually kept more plot points from Gridman than series adapted by Saban (Such as Mighty Morphin Power Rangers and Masked Rider). One of the major differences, however, was that Zenon and Drago did not have pilots in Gridman, and instead were "Helper Programs" which aided Gridman in battle. Furthermore, Naoto (Gridman's human "host") always entered the computer world with his changing brace, known "Accessor," while Sam rarely used this brace and instead struck his guitar. Due to the greater computer theme in Gridman, there was no need for the guitar.

Mega-Virus Monsters

These are viruses that are drawn up by Malcolm and brought to life by Kilokahn, who sends them into different electronic devices, computer systems, etc. Most of them are dinosaur-like and all are very similar to Kaiju eiga monsters.

Volcano Virus (first appearance: "To Protect and Servo") - This is the very first virus that Servo ever fought. This virus was a creature who mostly crawled on four legs (though once during the battle he was up on two), and he had a shell with two volcano holes built into it, from which he could erupt powerful fireballs. Servo eliminated him with his finisher, the Grid Power Punch.

Blink (first appearance: "Samurize") - a knight-like warrior with skilled fighting techniques. He was sent into the police files in order to create a false arrest. He wielded dual metal combat sticks with pointy ends. When he proved to be too much for Servo, Tanker boarded Drago and went into the system to aid Servo by combining him with Drago to become Servo's upgrade known as Phormo. During this part of the battle, Blink took his two sticks and merged them into one long combat stick. It would do him no good in the end though, because he ended up getting taken out of the picture by Phormo, who used a special Fiery Grid Power that erupted from the gem on Phormo's chest.

Trembulor (first appearance: "Samurize, Guys!")

Krono (first appearance: "Out of Sight, Out of Time")

Plexton (first appearance: "Some Like it Scalding") - a fire virus. He appeared a few different times. He first appeared in the school's thermostat to make the temperature scorching hot. Servo fought him and later the virus retreated from battle. He later appeared alongside his sister, the ice virus Gramm, and battled Servo. Servo tricked the two monsters into attacking each other, causing them to turn on each other and it seemed that Plexton had the upperhand in their sibling rivalry. They were taken down by Servo's sword which had some Grid Power to it while the two monsters were distracted. He then appeared with an armor upgrade and went inside Sam's blow-dryer. After getting blasted by the Dragon Cannon, he was knocked out this time by Servo's main Grid Power. Servo met him once more in "Hide and Servo", and after the battle, the virus again retreated.

Chronic (first appearance: "Money For Nothin' and Bits For Free")

Skorn (first appearance: "His Master's Voice"; voiced by Neil Ross) - deemed as perhaps the smartest of viruses, and one of the only few who could actually talk. His combat skills were similar in technique to both a samurai and a ninja and were up to par with Servo's, and he wielded different weapons in battle, such as a sword, and a pair of nunchakus (which he also turned into a Bo). On one occasion he was taken out by Phormo's Grid Power, and on the other he was killed by Servo when Servo launched his shield/sword combination through Skorn. In the latter appearance, Skorn also had the ability to create multiple clones of himself.

Kord (first appearance: "Lights, Camera, Action") - a giant, four-legged monster who was responsible for trapping Sam inside a video camera. He was at first killed by Servo who used a Grid Power slicer, which he launched at the virus, slicing him up before turning orange and disintegrating. He was later given some upgrades by Malcolm. This time he had blinding floodlights built into his back, and also had the ability to suck out Servo's main power. Eventually, with the help of Xenon, Servo was able to defeat Kord with his Grid Power punch.

Gramm (first appearance: "The Cold Shoulder") - an ice virus, the sister of Plexton. She was sent into Sam's air conditioner, causing Sydney, Tanker and Amp to turn cold against one another. She was destroyed when Servo thrust his sword through the gem on her chest. She later teamed up with her brother against Servo but was tricked into attacking each other causing the two of them to fight. Servo then took this opportunity to destroy them.

Sucker Virus (first appearance: "Amp Loves You, Yeah, Yeah, Yeah!") - a virus with a large mouth that tried to suck Servo inside of him until Sam's friends bailed him out in their vehicles. The Virus was eliminated by Synchro's Grid Power.

Skeleton Virus (first appearance: "Lights, Camera, Action") - a skeletal virus who had a loud howl. He was eliminated by Synchro who used Fire Power.

Unnamed Virus #1 (first appearance: "Que Sera Servo") - This virus was sent into the fortune-telling game that would turn everyone into the opposite of what their future would be. While fighting a cowardly Servo (as a result of Sam becoming a coward because of the spell), he turned Servo briefly evil. Xenon came in to attack them both but was sent out of Syberspace by the virus. After the game was smashed by Amp, Servo turned good (and brave) again and finished off the virus with a powerful kick which had Grid Power on it.

Hock (first appearance: "A Break in the Food Chain") - a deadly virus indeed. He had swords on his arms. He was able to block Servo's Grid Power punch, but as the battle was turned back in Servo's favor, the virus retreated. Servo took him on again in "Sweet and Sour Kilokahn", and the virus again retreated. He later reappeared (in "The Taunt Heard Round the World") with some upgraded armor and was redubbed "The Hockinator". He had a target system in one eye and threw powerful boomerangs at Servo that would knock out at least 12% of his power per hit. Eventually though, he was finally eliminated by Servo's Grid Power. The normal Hock did appear again in the episode "Truant False", inside the school's computer, but was destroyed by an anti-virus system. Then in the episode "What Rad Universe!", Sam, who was in an alternate dimension, became Servo with the help of Malcolm (who in that dimension was a nice guy and a computer whiz) to fight against the Hockinator once again (who was brought to life by Yolanda Pratchert, who was this dimension's Malcolm Frink), and defeated him again with the Grid Power.

Sybo (first appearance: "Mal-Kahn-Tent"; voiced by Glen Beaudin, uncredited) - when Kilokahn took over Malcolm's body, he stuck Malcolm inside this virus, who still had Malcolm's voice. He tried to break out of Syberspace but he was stopped by Servo and was destroyed by his Grid Power. After that Malcolm was back in his old body again. Some episodes later Servo fought this virus again but obviously without Malcolm attached to him. Later, this virus was re-designed by Malcolm with some upgraded armor and a mace ball on his tail. He was destroyed by the Grid Power of Synchro this time.

Troid (first appearance: "Ashes to Ashes Disk to Disk") - a virus with pterodactyl wings who had the ability to fly and attack from the air. He first appeared inside Jennifer's Pom-Poms, causing whoever held them to be trapped inside SyberSpace, to be stored on floppy disks. After a battle with Servo, he retreated. Servo fought him again at the beginning of "My Virus Ate My Homework", and it was very much the same battle, only this time, Servo destroyed him with his Grid Power.

Unnamed Virus #2 (first appearance: "Hello Darkness, My Old Friend")

Sydney's Virus (first appearance: "Pride Goeth Before a Brawl") - As Kilokahn decided he no longer wanted Malcolm creating viruses for him, he decided to enlist the aid of another computer user; that being Sydney. He was able to coerce her to make a virus, which looked like nothing more than a peach-colored, timid creature

Dir Brad Kreisberg

1 - 2 SAMURIZE

Malcolm creates the Blink virus and sends it into the police files in order to cause a false arrest for Jennifer during her date with Sam at the drive-thru theatre.

1 - 3 SAMURIZE, GUYS!

Sam and his rock band, Team Samurai, are on the bill to perform at a concert at North Valley High School tonight, but Malcolm has other ideas. He creates the Trembulor virus to create an impenetrable barrier around Sam's house.

1 - 4 OUT OF SIGHT, OUT OF TIME

In order to make Sam miss a date with Jennifer, Malcolm creates a Mega-Virus that will render time meaningless around the world.

1 - 5 SOME LIKE IT SCALDING

1 - 6 MONEY FOR NOTHIN' AND BITS FOR FREE

Malcolm taps into bank accounts across the country, making him incredibly rich while everyone else struggles to pay for necessities. Of course, he uses his money to bribe his schoolmates into doing embarrassing things. Sam holds himself aloof from this until his little sister, Elizabeth, gets into a car accident and needs surgery.

1 - 7 HIS MASTER'S VOICE

After using a keyboard synthesizer to make fun of Malcolm's voice, Malcolm creates the Skorn virus; a virus with a 'brain and a voice' not to mention a lot of attitude, and sends it into the synthesizer effectively switching Syd and Tanker's voices with each other's synthesized voices!

1 - 8 LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION

Sam learns just how dependent he is upon his friends when he gets sucked into a video camera and nearly goes insane from the prolonged enforced solitude.

1 - 9 COLD SHOULDER, THE

Malcolm creates the ice virus known as Gramm (sister to the fire virus, Plexton) and sends it into Sam's air conditioner for the purpose of having people turning cold against one another. Surely enough, it works on its victims - Sydney, Tanker and Amp. Sam, as Servo, must destroy Gramm in order to break the spell (and in the process, fend off the reserve virus, which is none other than Plexton!).

1 - 10 AMP LOVES YOU, YEAH, YEAH, YEAH!

Amp falls in love with his substitute history teacher, Ms. Tilden. After mistaking an utterly hideous old woman to be the object of their friend's affections, Sam, Sydney, and Tanker institute a scheme to make him forget his crush. Also, Malcolm has a totally unrelated nefarious scheme of some sort. :Op

1 - 11 QUE SERA, SERVO

A fortune-telling game is the culprit in this episode, as once infected by a virus, it causes everyone's personalities to completely reverse. From this spell, Sam becomes a wimp, Tanker becomes a nerd, Amp becomes really really smart, and Sydney....well, you can just call her Wild Thing!

1 - 12 AN UN-HELPING HAND

After earning a 'B' on her report card, Sydney finds that this is the least of her worries when a Mega-Virus takes over her wristwatch and makes her hand go on a petty crime spree.

1 - 13 A BREAK IN THE FOOD CHAIN

Malcolm creates the Hock mega-virus monster and sends him into the food factories for the purpose of stopping shipments of food to the world that needs it.

1 - 14 MA-KAHN-TENT

Kilokahn decides to experiment on himself by taking over Malcolm's body in order to experience life in the real world. He then sticks Malcolm inside of a new mega-virus monster. Sam and the others notice that it really is Kilokahn inside Malcolm's body (while he tries to cover it up to the rest of the outside world), and it is up to Servo to save Malcolm.

1 - 15 ASHES TO ASHES,DISK TO DISK

Using the Troid virus which has been sent into Jennifer's pom-poms, Malcolm is able to make the world around Sam disappear completely when each victim picks up the pom-poms, and the victims end up in syberspace, stored onto floppy disks! Sam is the only person he knows that is left, and comes to the realization that the virus is responsible for the disappearance of everyone he knows.

1 - 16 HELLO DARKNESS, MY OLD FRIEND

Amp is attempting to get in shape for a competition, and Malcolm creates a virus that attempts to knock out all the electricity in the world.

1 - 17 PRIDE GOETH BEFORE A BRAWL

Kilokahn no longer wants Malcolm's help in making viruses, so he turns to the first computer user he can find, which is Sydney. He gets her to create her own virus for Servo to fight. After a bit of confusion, it seemed as if the virus would not cause any harm after all, that is until Malcolm turns the virus fully evil. Sydney, feeling responsible, aids Servo in defeating the virus by piloting the Drago system in order to create Phormo.

1 - 18 TO SLEEP,PERCHANCE TO SCREAM

After Sam has a strange nightmare, Kilokahn seizes this opportunity to send a virus into Sam's alarm clock which freezes it and gives Sam continuous nightmares. How will Sam ever wake up to actually defeat the virus?

1 - 19 JUST BROWN & SERVO

Desperate to prove to Jennifer that he is not totally lacking in any sense of romance, Sam plans a romantic dinner for the two of them. However, when he lets Tanker, Sydney, Amp, and Mrs. Starkey help him out, Malcolm overhears and uses this to his best advantage by sending a Mega-Virus Monster into Mrs. Starkey's egg-timer to make her go insane.

1 - 20 ROCK'N ROLL VIAUCIDE

A Rock n' Roll Virus is created to turn Mrs. Starkey into a heavy Rock n' Roll maniac!

1 - 21 WATER YOU DOING?

Upon having his act for the school talent show, a dramatic reading of Coleridge's "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," shunned, Malcolm decides upon the somewhat thematic revenge of turning all the water in the city into hydrochloric acid. Also, Tanker learns the danger of bingeing on dill pickles, and spends the episode in agony from severe stomach pain, and learns an important lesson about where his limits lie.

1 - 22 MY VIRUS ATE MY HOMEWORK

Sam's report for school is destroyed by Elizabeth, who draws pictures all over it, and Sam feels he is about to face impending doom at school because of this. But that is the least of his worries when Kilokahn, against Malcolm's wishes, releases a mega-virus monster to sound off an alarm system which will apparently trigger warheads throughout the globe. It's up to Sam once again to save the world from certain danger!

1 - 23 BORN WITH A JEALOUS MIND

Sydney wins a date with superstar Chad Williams, leaving Tanker very jealous. Meanwhile, Malcolm attempts revenge at the people of Japan, who made his new hard drive that ate his disk and severely messed up his hand, by sending out a smog virus to harm the people. Sam tries to convince Tanker not to be jealous while there is the emergency of smog in Japan.

1 - 24 CHEATER,CHEATER,MEGABYTE EATER

Malcolm creates a Stupid Virus in order to tamper with the national test scores at high school, and Principal Pratchert accuses Amp of tampering with the scores.

1 - 25 LITTLE DITCH,BIG GLITCH

As the Kord virus runs amok in syberspace, Kilokahn puts Principal Pratchert and the rest of the high school (minus the Team Samurai gang) under his power to do what he orders, via a television screen in the cafeteria.

1 - 26 STIFF AS A MOTHER BOARD

Malcolm creates the Manfu virus and sends him into the school's water fountain, causing whoever touches it to become stiff and unable to move or speak. Unfortunately, that victim is Sam. How will he be able to fight if he can't move? It's up to his friends to help him out on that.

1 - 27 SWEET AND SOUR KILOKHAH

Sydney installs a children's computer program and is able to use it on Kilokahn, turning him from evil to good. When Malcolm discovers the good Kilokahn (and the fact that the good Kilokahn will not bring the Hock virus to life), he is infuriated and attempts to take on life as a good-natured fellow, only to fail miserably.

1 - 28 ROMEO & JOULE-WATT

Tanker & Jennifer are cast as Romeo and Juliet in the school play, much to Sam's and Sydney's dismay. Malcolm revamps the Chronic virus and sends him into the school's stage lights.

1 - 29 THE TAUNT HEARD ROUND THE WORLD

Kilokahn sends out a global taunt (via television) to Servo in order to fight in syberspace (against the revamped Hock virus, now the Hockinator), or else all television stations around the world would be shut down permanently. How would Sam/Servo respond to this taunt?

1 - 30 HAIR IS STAND HEAD IN HAND

Malcolm revamps the Plexton virus and sends him into Sam's blow-dryer. After water is dumped on his head, Sam is forced to use the dryer, only to have it turn his hair into a whole messy field of static electricity!

1 - 31 PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG VIRUS

Malcolm creates a virus for the intent of altering the high school students' new schedules to undesirable classes, as well as putting him in all the same classes as Jennifer.

1 - 32 STARKY IN SYBERSPACE

Sam disguises himself as a girl in order to break into Sydney's club at school, but then is discovered by Mrs. Starkey. After Sam runs out, Starkey snoops around on Sydney's laptop (which Sam had brought) and is accidentally thrust into Syberspace, inside one of the Sybersquad's vehicles! As if that weren't enough, there's another virus on the loose, so it will be a long day for Servo....

1 - 33 TANKS FOR THE MEMORIES

A virus is sent into Tanker's walkman and headphones, while Tanker is using them, causing him to go insane and make obscure quotes, thus distracting him from normal life and the danger in Syberspace.

1 - 34 LOVE ME DONT

Malcolm sends a virus into a music box, hoping that when Jennifer were to open it, she would fall in love with the first person she'd see - Malcolm! Sam is very angry when he feels that Jennifer is hoping to dump him for Malcolm. Unfortunately for Malcolm, however, it's not Jennifer who opens the box - it's Mrs. Starkey! She then falls for an unwilling Malcolm, and a reluctant Sam must destroy the virus in order to break the horrid love spell.

1 - 35 SYBERTERIA COMBAT

Malcolm resurrects the Manfu virus to create a barrier around the high school, which imprisons the gang, who is staying after school. Tensions fly for a bit as the gang, from being imprisoned, starts verbally attacking one another.

1 - 36 HIDE AND SERVO

A power surge is created in syberspace, and when Sam uses the computer to investigate, he, as Servo, is thrust through syberspace in a rapid, endless, and uncontrollable flight! Throughout the day, Sydney keeps hearing his calls for help everywhere she is, though Tanker and Amp don't believe her at first. Until that is, they hear it too and investigate. If Servo is to escape, Plexton awaits him.

1 - 37 OVER THE RIVER AND THROUGH THE GRID

1 - 38 DO NOT REBOOT UNTIL CHRISTMAS

It's Christmas time for the Syber-Friends, and everyone but Malcolm is into the holiday spirit, putting things in for the charity toy drive. Malcolm decides to take his rage out on them by sending a 'special' virus into the battery powered toys and sets it to explode at midnight! How will Sam and the others get out of this?

1 - 39 KILOKHAN IS COMING TO TOWN

After the destruction of their virus, Malcolm and Kilokhan track Servo's home data stack to within a 6-mile radius of Malcolm's computer. Knowing he's close, Kilokhan sends Malcolm out to set up the town with Christmas lights to give Kilokhan the power to pin-point their enemy. When he finds and erases the minds of Tanker, Sid and Amp, he turns against Malcolm. Now determined to help Sam save Christmas and the world, Servo goes on one last mission to destroy Kilokhan, but when he destroys the Samurai vehicles, Malcolm and Jennifer have to watch and hope that Servo can save the day once again.

1 - 40 HASTA LA VIRUS, BABY

Amp is supposedly in trouble and gone from school, and the gang (and Yolanda and Jennifer) recall past experiences with Amp. It's revealed that Amp is back in space at the end (and really was a space cadet!), and later, the gang witnesses the arrival of surfer Lucky London, who would become the newest member of Team Samurai.

1 - 41 GIVE 'TIL IT MEGAHERTZ

Malcolm resurrects the Kord virus and uses him to turn the outside world into a bunch of overly generous people, including the gang of Team Samurai.

1 - 42 THE PRESIDENT'S A FRINK

Malcolm uses the Skorn virus in order to win the student body presidential election over Yolanda Pratchert.

1 - 43 BEEP MY, BEEP MY BABY

Malcolm places a mega monster in Jennifer's portable pager.

1 - 44 FORGET YOU

A virus is created that causes everyone affected to forget everything - even who they are.

1 - 45 LOOSE LIPS SINK MICROCHIPS

Malcolm resurrects Skorn and sends him into Sam's radio show at school, causing the show to apparently reveal embarrassing secrets about people, including Sydney and Tanker's secrets! Sam must face his old pal Skorn and stop him once more in order to stop the leak at the station!

1 - 46 IT'S MAGIC

Lucky decides to incorporate the concept of Sam disappearing into syberspace (behind a curtain) as a part of his magic act at school. Unfortunately, after the first part of the trick works, the second part doesn't, since Sam, as Servo, is stuck fighting the Chronic virus again.

1 - 48 FORIEIGN LANGUAGES

A virus is created for the purpose that, whenever Servo is fighting him, no one will be able to hear Servo's calls for help if he gets into a jam.

1 - 49 TRUANT FALSE

When Hock is sent into the school computer in order to tamper with the summer school program files, the school sends an anti-virus system to destroy him. Then Kilokahn alters the anti-virus to look like Manfu - and turn him evil - to get Servo to try to destroy it, not knowing what consequences would lie in wait should the anti-virus be destroyed....it could mean summer school forever!

1 - 50 LUCKY'S UNLIKELY ADVENTURE

1 - 51 WHAT RAN UNIVERSE!

A power surge in syberspace sends Sam into an alternate universe, where everyone he knows is way different than from the universe he knows - for example, Yolanda is evil and creates viruses for Kilokahn, and Malcolm is a good-spirited guy who likes to help people. Sam must destroy the Hockinator virus in the alternate universe and find a way back home before it's too late.

1 - 52 SYBER-DUNK

Sam, Tanker and Lucky try to get basketball superstar High Jump to come to their school before a big game tonight by telling him there is a charity event. Surely enough, when he arrives, High Jump finds out that it is all a scam, but unfortunately, he (and the guys) can't leave the school because of the Krono virus which created a barrier around the school. Because of this he will likely miss the game, unless Sam, with the help of Tanker and Lucky, and the unlikely help of High Jump, can defeat the virus in order to send High Jump on his way.

1 - 53 PRATCHERT'S RADICAL DEPARTURE

Malcolm decides to use a virus in order to mentally bring Principal Pratchert back to his hippie days, much to Lucky's pleasure.

1 - 54 TAKE A HIKE

While Sam is back home spending time with Jennifer, Sydney, Tanker, Lucky and Yolanda are taking a camping trip out in nature. Malcolm then creates a virus that will sink all the electricity in the world. When the virus strikes, the gang finds themselves in a real dilemma because Sam is not present. Therefore, it's up to Tanker, in the unlikely role of Servo, to save the day!

SUPERMAN

Like the 1978 film, Superman - the Movie, the serial opens with an extended account of Superman's origins, before setting the Man of Steel (former dancer Alyn) against the evil Spider Woman (Forman) who, with her deadly piece of kryptonite and a deadly reducer ray, seeks Superman's death and world domination.

The creation of Jerome Siegel and Joel Schuster was the perfect amalgam of three of the themes that dominated American pulp magazines in the second quarter of the 20th century - the alien visitor from another planet, the super-human being and dual identity. First brought to life in National Comics' Action in June 1938, Superman had the misfortune to be acquired by quickie producer Katzman who, after failing to interest either Republic or Universal in a big-budget package deal, finally secured a low-budget deal with Columbia.

Whereupon Katzman set about slashing the budget until it was virtually impossible to believe in the character. Director Bennet later recounted the story of the artist who offered Katzman really effective animation to show Superman flying at $64 a foot and 'not so effective' animation at $32 a foot; Katzman naturally chose the cheaper. Yet, if compared to the cartoon shorts of Max Fleischer, Katzman's Superman was awful, the serial astonished its creators by turning out to be the highest grossing serial of all time, so powerful was Superman's mystique.

The chapterplay was followed by two equally low-budgeted sequels, ATOM MAN VERSUS SUPERMAN (1950) and SUPERMAN AND THE MOLE MEN (1951) before finally all doubts that a man could fly were dispelled in a trio of big-budgeted extravaganzas, Superman - the Movie and its sequels, Superman II (1980) and Superman III (1983). The producer for the serial was Sam Katzman, the cinematographer was Ira H. Morgan.

SUPERNATURAL

Anthology series based on the stories of Robert Muller. The stories dealt mostly with the supernatural and the paranormal. Set in a Victorian England, the Club of the Damned was an exclusive club of eccentrics. In order to become a member of the club one had to tell a supernatural story to the club's officers. Both Sir Francis and Sir Charles were among the club's officers. If the story met with their approval, the storyteller was accepted into the club, if he did not he was killed.

Supernatural was basically an anthology series with an unusual twist to give the series continuity from one episode to the next. Seven of the eight episodes were based on stories from the Club of the Damned by Robert Muller and the club itself was used to tie the series together. The stories themselves were for the most part reworkings of traditional horror tales with an unusual new twist. Included were reworkings of the werewolf, Frankenstein and vampire tales.

A Saturday night horror anthology series which featured the linking theme of The Club Of The Damned - a society which admits new members by their ability to tell a true life tale of terror.

One of the most memorable episodes (Mr Nightingale) featured Jeremy Brett (under heavy make up) as a pungent puritan who is dragged to his demise after failing to instil terror with his tale of murdering doppelgangers.

The series ran the gamut of traditional monsters - werewolves (Countess Ilona), vampires (Dorabella), Jekyll and Hyde (Lady Sybil) and Frankenstein (Night of the Marionettes).

Though literate scripting and a collection of high calibre acting talent benefited the series, it was let down by static direction and frankly boring plots and has never been repeated since first shown.

Writer Robert Muller also wrote a paperback which featured adaptations from the series.

All episodes were written by Robert Muller except the episode Viktoria which was written by Sue Lake. The series was produced by Pieter Rogers. Episode length was 50 minutes. The series was transmitted on Saturday nights.

SUPERNOVA

Tagline: The day the world catches fire.

A scientific possibility becomes a terrifying reality when the most powerful force in the universe threatens to hurtle home

Nobel Prize-winning scientist Dr. Austin Shepard suddenly disappears from his observatory at the Space Propulsion Labs leaving shocking data behind for Dr. Christopher Richardson. Seasoned news reporter Laurie Stephenson, who has been looking for answers to bizarre sun storm activities, gets suspicious when a scheduled interview with Dr. Shepard is cancelled. National Intelligence Special Agent Lisa Delgado fears that Shepard has been selling his classified top-secret Solar Probe discoveries and has gone into hiding.

The truth is that Shepard has retreated to an island paradise because he knows something that everyone else will soon discover for themselves -- after eons of existence as a rolling inferno, the sun is set to explode in a supernova that will bring about the end of the world in seven short, terrifying days.

Not to be confused with the 2000 movie with the same name, this is a three-hour mini-series that originally aired on the Hallmark TV channel.

It stars a lethargic Peter Fonda as a Nobel Prize winning astrophysicist who discovers that we have somehow miscalculated the age of the sun, and that the sun is a lot older than we initially thought. So old in fact that it is about to go supernova and explode, destroying the entire solar system, and the Earth with it of course. Upon making his discovery, Fonda does what anyone else in the same situation would do, namely not tell a soul and instead go hang around a beach in South Africa with a blonde local waitress . . . (Well, wouldn't you?)

In the meantime a secret American government agency in the guise of Tia Carrere (Wayne's girlfriend from Wayne's World) is trying to get to the bottom of Fonda's disappearance and one of his fellow scientists (played by Luke Perry) becomes involved in the investigation. Pretty soon the sun start going haywire and in true disaster movie tradition countless national landmarks (the Eiffel Tower, the Taj Mahal, etc.) are destroyed by flying chunks of sun plasma (don't ask).

Thrown into the mix are several subplots. There is a secret scheme by a shady government agency run by Lance Henriksen to hide away a small group of specially chosen people in underground bunkers to sit out the coming apocalypse and guarantee humanity's survival (whoever dreamed up that plan probably got the idea from watching When Worlds Collide). We also have a down-on-her-luck investigative journalist trying to get to the bottom of things, and several other characters milling about getting separated from loved ones and then being reunited again as civilization goes for a loop around them.

As if the end of the world itself isn't enough, the climax of the movie involves a subplot about an escaped psycho convict threatening Luke Perry's family. After all, three hours is a mighty long running time to fill and if one has exhausted all the clichés and subplots stolen from Armageddon, Deep Impact and countless other disaster movies then you might as well throw in one stolen from Cape Feare for good measure I suppose.

"Supernova is supposed to be set in Australia, but it is so painfully obvious that it was actually filmed in South Africa . . ."

THE DISC: You get some short interviews with the cast and director, a trailer for the movie itself and for Mysterious Island (a Hallmark Channel movie based on a Jules Verne novel starring Patrick Stewart). The image is presented in widescreen format which gives it more of a theatrical feel and makes one forget at times that one is in fact watching a made-for-TV movie.

WORTH IT? Now don't get me wrong: we here at the Sci-Fi Movie Page are suckers for End-Of-The-World-As-We-Know-It stories and have been hoping for ages now that someone would one day film our favourite End-Of-The-World-As-We-Know-It novel, namely Lucifer's Hammer by Larry Niven and Jerry Pournelle.

No matter how lackadaisical the acting and how cheap and obvious the cheesy computer graphics were, we loved Supernova to bits because . . . well, Supernova is supposed to be set in Australia, but it is so painfully obvious that it was filmed right here in South Africa that we couldn't help but crack a smile. (In several shots they didn't even try to obscure a very recognisable Table Mountain!) We loved Supernova because . . . well, we can never get tired of scenes featuring rioting crowds in which people steal TV sets even though the entire planet is due for destruction in a few days' time. We love Supernova because . . . well, we recognised a lot of those South African locations used. (Driving past a lake area used in the film I actually remarked to my wife one day that I'd shoot a film there. I'm glad that there are location scouts out there who agrees with me.)

SUPERSTORM

Hurricane season is approaching and the southern states of the US are in for a battering. Hurricane Katrina was a Category 4 hurricane, but Category 5s are predicted, and it's expected to be the worst season on record. Set in the near future, where climate change has led to ever-more ferocious storms, this fast-paced drama from the team behind Supervolcano twists and turns as a team of scientists wrestle with sexual tensions, inflated egos, past traumas and the moral and scientific dilemmas that come from trying to alter the course of a Superstorm.

Dan Abrams, a charismatic Princeton Professor; Sara Hughes, a sassy English field scientist; Lance Resnick, an arrogant computer modeller; Munish Loomba, a pained meteorologist; Ralf Dewitt, a fresh-faced research assistant; and Holly Zabrieski, a computing genius, are Project Stormshield. Leaders in their field, they have been asked by George Katzenberg, from the Dept of Commerce, to develop technologies that could alter the course and intensity of hurricanes. It sounds like fantasy, but it's now become a necessity.

In the opening episode, the team are united by the manipulative Katzenberg and set about their work. After months of research, and as hurricane season approaches, they are given clearance to seed a small hurricane; a technique first developed by the discredited Stormfury project in the Sixties.

Sara heads up the experiment - her grandfather was a Stormfury veteran and she's determined to prove his theories were correct. It's Sara's ambition to fly into the hurricane to seed Hurricane Agatha, but, when she develops a cold, Ralf takes her place. However, just as it appears that the seeding has been successful, there's a dreadful accident. Sara is played by Nicola Stephenson, Katzenberg by Tom Sizemore, Dan by Chris Potter, Lance by JR Bourne, Holly by Jana Carpenter, Munish by Cas Anvar and Ralf by Nicolas Wright.

Superstorm is accompanied by a documentary series on BBC Two. The Science Of Superstorms explores the cutting-edge scientific research that informs the drama and features experts who monitor the behaviour of extreme weather around the world.

SUPERTRAIN

This was a series about a deluxe nuclear powered passenger train which could travel from New York City to Los Angeles in under 12 hours. The pilot was about the first trial run of the train. A train full of important world leaders, a madman who kills the engineer and sets the train to full speed and sets the reactor core to overload and detonate.

After the exciting premier, the series became a very tame version of the "Love Boat" series with guest stars each week, just riding a train, the series was cancelled with-in 6 months. Game show fans will recognise that part of this theme's melody was used in the theme for 'Chain Reaction.' FYI, the Chain Reaction theme was actually used as background music on Supertrain before the game show ever existed.

This big-budgeted fiasco sank like the Titanic. A futuristic train carried its passengers into tales of drama, comedy and adventure. The lavishly mounted series (requiring expensive miniatures and luxurious full-sized sets) didn't click with viewers. Edward Andrews, Nita Talbot and Robert Alda were among Supertrain's crew.

Supertrain was a television drama/adventure series that ran on NBC from February 7, 1979, to May 5, 1979. It took place on the Supertrain, a nuclear-powered bullet train that was equipped with amenities more appropriate to a cruise ship than a train, such as swimming pools and shopping centers; indeed, it was so big it had to run on two sets of tracks. The train took 36 hours to go from New York City to Los Angeles. Much like its contemporary The Love Boat, the plots concerned the passengers' social lives, usually with multiple intertwining storylines, and most of the cast was composed of guest stars. The production was elaborate, with huge sets and a high-tech model train for outside shots.

At the time, Supertrain was the most expensive series ever aired in the United States. The production was beset by problems, including a model train that crashed, and while it was heavily advertised during the 1978-1979 season, it suffered from bad reviews and low viewership; despite attempts to salvage the show by reworking the cast, it never took off and left the air after only three months. NBC was never able to make up the production losses (it produced the show itself, at first with help from Dark Shadows producer Dan Curtis), and combined with the US boycott of the 1980 Summer Olympics the next season (which cost NBC millions in ad revenue), it nearly bankrupted the network. For these reasons, Supertrain is usually cited as the worst television flop ever.

Nine episodes were made, including a 2-hour pilot episode.

A portion of the theme music to Supertrain, composed by Bob Cobert, would later be recycled for the NBC game show Chain Reaction, while the Chain Reaction theme itself can be heard during a disco scene on the Supertrain pilot.

There are a total of ten hours, eight 60-minute episodes and one 2-hour movie, of "Supertrain" broadcast beginning Wednesday February 7, 1979 and concluding Saturday July 28, 1979.

NBC originally put "Supertain" as the opening of the network's Wednesday night schedule airing at 8pm (Eastern).

Though "Supertrain" premiered with reportedly decent ratings, the numbers quickly went down. NBC removed the show from its schedule for re-tooling little more than month after its premiere. The first five episodes carried the credit of Dan Curtis as Executive Producer for the series. The "Supertrain" crew for these first five shows included Edward Andrews, Patrick Collins, Harrison Page, Robert Alda, Nita Talbott, Arrika Wells, William Nuckols, and Michael DeLano.

The series returned to the air with a new day and time slot, Saturdays at 10pm (Eastern) on April 7th, 1979.

That night the sixth episode, "Pirouette," featured a new Executive Producer Robert Stambler and a slimed down crew. Edward Andrews, Harrison Page, and Robert Alda were the only surviving crew members from the original five episodes.

The following week, April 14th, 1979 the sixth show added two new crew members, Joey Aresco and Ilene Graff, to the regular cast.

One more change arrives with the last new episode airing, May 5th, 1979...a "laugh-track" is added to the series. No further tinkering and no more new shows at that point, as "Supertrain" left the airwaves after the May 5, 1979 broadcast. Never a good sign when a network removes a regular program during one of the ratings "sweeps" periods.

"Supertrain" returned in June of 1979 and NBC repeated all eight one-hour episodes, concluding the show's run July 28, 1979. The premiere episode, "Express To Terror," fails to be repeated and is the only installment that aired only once on NBC.

Willard Scott, of NBC's Today Show, hosted a program reviewing TV's Greatest Turkeys not long after the demise of "Supertrain." In this special that aired on NBC, "Supertrain" is shown briefly in one of its rolling by shots.

More recently, NBC's 75th Anniversary program featured "Supertrain" in a montage of the network's less impressive programs. Piled in with "Manimal" and "Hello, Larry" was a quick shot of the "Supertrain" logo from the color-tinted credit sequences. Oddly, this logo appears with a yellow background that is not similar to what is found among the opening credits from which it appears to have been lifted.

There is no known U.S. syndicated airings for the series. Certainly the limited number of hours produced would be a major factor, among others, behind it disappearing after its NBC run.

NBC International included "Supertrain" among programs available in its catalog. Those with copies of the series obtained in recent years trading video tapes and DVDs are likely familiar with the Caribbean Super Station. The Caribbean Super Station serving Aruba is at least one place that "Supertrain" was aired sometime in what appears to be the mid-'80s. Big thanks to whomever originally bothered to record "Supertrain" from this satellite service as these copies appear to be about the only one floating about for certain episodes.

The only known U.S. exposure the series received was a run of the "Express To Terror" episode on Lifetime Cable TV in 1987. The Lifetime Cable TV presentation presented the episode with the title "Supertrain" and did not include the on-screen title "Express To Terror" as found on the Prism VHS release.

Tv Guide Review at the time of broadcast follows :-

I suppose I'm out of touch, but the supersized, atom-powered choo-choo in this NBC series isn't my idea of train travel at all.

My adventure fantasies about trains derive from old Hitchcock movies, with somberly lit Pullmans that rumbled through the night, the rhythm of the wheels at once restful and ominous, as the suspense built subtly in meaningful glances between strangers, until the body tumbled out of the coat locker. People used to eat on those trains-trout, usually-and even sleep, tossing in fitful dreams.

Nobody eats or sleeps on Supertrain. They're too busy discoing and fist-fighting. Everything here is bigger, gaudier and noisier, including the passengers.

The design and special-effects people have had a good time, and the train is quite a marvel, cinematically--a gleaming, two-story behemoth complete with gym, swimming pool and fancy suites, and it rockets along through desert and prairie most convincingly. The control booth has video monitors and the disco has cocktail waitresses in silver hot pants.

As we might expect, the stories are less impressive than the gear. It's the usual triumph of technology over art. In the long, two-hour premiere, Steve Lawrence was a talent agent and gambling addict, in debt to a gangster named Big Ed. Aboard the Supertrain, someone kept trying to put Lawrence away-by planting a suitcase bomb in his room, dumping him unconscious into the pool, locking him in a steam room with buddy Don Meredith. Our attention was called to several suspects: a lurking criminal type who turned out to be a traveling salesman, a brutish gangster who whiled away the time abusing his girl friend. This one moseyed on interminable; sometime in the second hour I wanted to get off and catch a bus home.

One episode shamelessly swiped the plot of Hitchcock's "Strangers on a Train." Dick Van Dyke was the smiling psychopath, apparently out to kill the wife of a stranger, to repay a favor. In a final twist, Van Dyke turned out to be a harmless eccentric, which made no sense but possibly eased the writer's conscience about stealing the rest of the plot.

When early ratings proved disappointed, NBC took the series off the air for emergency surgery. The "All New Supertrain" appeared April 14, looking remarkably like the old Supertrain except that the blustery chief operations officer (Edward Andrews) shipped off to recover from mumps and replaced by a fun couple, Joey Aresco as the new chief and Ilene Graff as a singing social director. Zsa Zsa Gabor's jewels were stolen. Our new regulars, with security guard Abe Vigoda, tracked down the obvious suspect. This tale d-r-a-g-g-e-d even more than previous episodes, despite the attempt to glamorize it with models in bikinis and Peter Lawford playing his usual shopworn sophisticate.

I have an idea that may cut NBC's losses: let Salvage-1 haul that train away and sell it for scrap.

SURFACE

What do naval officers in the South Antarctic Sea, a family in Wilmington, N.C., the oceanographic institute in Monterey, and fishermen in the Gulf of Mexico all have in common? They're all about to be the first to meet a new form of sea life -- it's beautiful, the kids may even want to play with it, and it likes to make the water warm. But what they don't know yet is that they are on the verge of a world disaster. "Surface" is a series full of continuously evolving twists that deliver across several long-term arcs.

NBC's original title for this series was "Fathom".

Shows that NBC put on Monday nights at 8:00pm have historically plummeted in the ratings because of powerhouse competitors like Monday Night Football and 7th Heaven but Surface managed to become a surprise hit with ratings steadily climbing each week. Surface was the most over-saturated new series premiere of the fall 2005 season, due to mass re-airing of the pilot during the first week on the Sci Fi Channel. Miles and his family were originally going to be from San Diego. Lake Bell's character was originally going to be called Daughtery Carstarphen. Also, Jay R. Ferguson's character was originally going to be called Richard Beck, then it changed to Richard Owen, and then was finally settled as Richard Connelly. When searching for information on "sea monsters", Miles uses an internet search engine called "JointAxis". This is not an actual search engine and was just made up for the show.

Episode One Trivia

The computer program Miles uses to wake himself up features The Incredible Hulk, a popular comic book character from Marvel Comics created by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby. The Hulk's story is about a man named Bruce Banner who, due to radiation, would turn into a large green monster whenever he got angry. The comic book was turned into a popular show in the 1970s starring Bill Bixby (as Banner) and Lou Ferrigno (as the Hulk) and later adapted into a film by Ang Lee in 2003.

Miles reads a book that contains a passage about a "six-headed sea serpent". This is probably Charybdis, in Greek mythology the child of the sea god Poseidon and earth mother Gaia. Charybdis guarded a narrow sea passage, and reached down from its lair when ships passed to devour six crewmen, one for each mouth. The penalty for failing to make a swift passage was repeated loss of crew members in multiples of six.

Fantastic concepts about strange underwater creatures must toe a delicate line or risk toppling into silliness, and this splashy NBC drama takes that plunge in its very busy premiere. Filled with riffs seemingly lifted out of "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and any number of other Spielberg films, "Surface" actually appears well-positioned to do some business in this timeslot, but if the opener is any indication, this handsome, globetrotting series is going to have a difficult time avoiding a gradual descent into the abyss. It's hard to take a bad shot of Lake Bell, but the show does what it can to diminish her considerable charms by saddling her with a kid (yep, she's a hard-working-scientist single mom) and then shoving her into a submarine

Bell's Laura Daughtery is a marine biologist studying the hot-vent ecosystem, which, she theorizes, is the origin of life on the planet. Shades of "The Beast From 20,000 Fathoms," Laura sees something very big and greenish (no, it's not the Hulk) in the water.

After excitedly describing her sort-of discovery as possibly being "a higher mammalian species," pretty soon faceless military types intrude, and Laura is whisked away to be interrogated by a thickly accented Dr. Cirko (Rade Sherbedgia) and his sidekick. If you're not thinking of Richard Dreyfuss yet, Laura proceeds to quote his "Close Encounters" character directly by asking, "Who are you people?"

Still, that's just one of "Surface's" whirling blades, which include a teenage kid (Carter Jenkins) who, in maybe the dumbest moment in a new show this season, finds what appears to be a water-alien egg and plops the thing in his mom's fish tank. The glass breaks, there's some sloppy scurrying, and by show's end it's still not clear whether it's E.T. in the closet or a hyperactive guppy.

A third strand involves a diver (Jay R. Ferguson) who also witnesses the vague outline of something in the surf, causing a rift with his disbelieving wife and leading him to begin pursuing his own answers.

Originally burdened with the equally inexplicable title "Fathom," producers/real-life brothers Jonah and Josh Pate have crafted a series as wishy-washy as its moniker -- borrowing from the best, admittedly, but a little too freely to feel remotely fresh. And while there are some intriguing underwater effects (though it's never clear what they're showing) in the no-doubt front-loaded pilot, the show offers scant sense of where it hopes to make land.

The best thing about "Surface" thus far is NBC's promopromo campaign, which, sliced into bite-sized bits, actually makes the program look considerably better than it is.

Even so, "Surface" should have a shot at being sampled, and the first hour leaves so many loose ends floating around it just might reel in a fair number of viewers to at least take a second look. A few more moments like that egg in the fish tank, though, and "Surface" has very little chance of hooking an audience for long, unless it's repositioned as the high-spirited comedy that NBC has been seeking.

SURVIVORS

The Survivors was a series created by Terry Nation (who also created Blakes 7 and Doctor Who's Daleks) about the aftermath of a world-wide plague which wiped out 99% of the world's population. The plague was caused by a virus which was accidentally released in the lab and quickly began to spread across the globe. Nearly everyone succumbed to it and almost everyone who caught it died. The series followed the lives of a small number of people living in Britain who either were immune to the disease or managed to recover from it. The picture painted of life after the plague was a grim one indeed.

The Survivors showed just how dependent modern man was on the infrastructure of society. As civilisation has progressed we have become dependent on others to do things for us that we need to survive, farming being a prime example of this.

The road back to civilisation was not an easy one. Things started out hard and gradually got easier. While at first people just looted things left over from before the plague, the essentials of everyday life soon ran out. The survivors began to form small communities outside of the established towns-which would have been invested with lots of unburied bodies- and began to farm. These small communities eventually began to make contact with each other and set out to find ways to replace manufactured goods which were beginning to wear out as well as re-establish electrical power. By the end of The Survivors' third and final series mankind was well on its way back to civilisation as we know it.

The central characters in The Survivors were: Abby Grant, a woman who refused to believe that her son had been killed by the plague and devoted all of her efforts in to finding him. Abby appeared only in the first series. Greg Preston, an engineer who took it upon himself to become instrumental in getting mankind back on the road to civilisation. Greg set off in the third series to establish trade between the various communities and stories often centred around the other characters' efforts to track him down. Jenny Richards, a young secretary, who would become Greg's common law wife. Charles, formerly an architect was introduced in the first series as the leader of a small community who had the crazed notion of keeping all the women pregnant to repopulate the world. By the time he was reintroduced as a regular in the second series he had dropped this idea and become a respected community leader.

A plague wipes out 52,000,000 people in six weeks of terror in Great Britain, leaving only some 7,000 survivors. In the series, we follow one small group of survivors as they attempt to prosper in a post-technological nation. This is similar to "THE DAY OF THE TRIFFIDS", the cosmic disaster novels of John Wyndham, and the inimitable fiction of J. G. Ballard. The series falls flat in making the survivors far too comfortable, and celebrating (rather than warning against) the prospects of a future without technology. This is a hippy head trip, not real science fiction. Even "THE STAND" by Steven King does the job better.

Survivors was created by Terry Nation who saw disaster round the corner and worried about mankind's ability to cope. What if, he queried, the rug was pulled from beneath our complex society based (as it still is) on mutual co-operation and increased dependence on technology. Could impractical modern man adapt to the rigours of survival?

As a notion it was ripe for the 1970s advocates of 'alternative lifestyles', and it was also something everyone could relate to - every viewer could wonder 'what would I do? How would I cope?'

But this wasn't a Good Life vision of suburban self-sufficiency: Survivors depicted a grim, relentless struggle in which even mundane items such as soap or matches became precious. Contemporary critics carped that the heroes were almost exclusively middle class, and took perverse delight in their discomfiture. Certainly, the lead roles of Abby Grant (suburban housewife), Greg Preston (engineer), Charles Vaughan (architect) and Jenny Richards (secretary/young mum) represented the acceptable face of survival, ranged against the bolshie regional and working classes. But the series was, nevertheless, an uncompromising portrait of civilisation in reverse.

Survivors ran for three seasons each with a distinct theme. Initially there was the aftermath and the 'quest' -

Abby's search for her son Peter, the survivors' search for trust, friendship, order from chaos, the need to regroup on the smallest of scales. Season Two saw more settled and established communities forming in rural areas away from the towns which were depicted as plague-pits, rife with pollution and vermin. The challenge they now faced was to acquire-and acquire fast- the skills to replace their diminishing supplies of things they had once taken for granted.

Season Three again took to the road, as the survivors began to explore further afield, to establish links with other settlements and seek out people with the special skills to build a future, through trade, a railway and, ultimately, hydro-electricity. The series, which began on an overwhelmingly gloomy note, ended on an optimistic one.

The producer for the series was Terence Dudley, the music was created by Anthony Issac. The designers for the series were Austin Ruddy, Ray London, Richard Morris, Robert Berk, Ian Watson, Peter Kindred, Paul Allen and Geoff Powell (all season three).

DOCTOR WHO

BLAKES' 7

1 - 1 THE FOURTH HORSEMAN

A virulent flu bug is spreading through the country like wildfire. Abby Grant and her husband David are aware that the flu has reportedly claimed millions of people's lives in China, but they don't think that could happen in England. Abby becomes ill and takes to her bed. Meanwhile Jenny Richards learns from a doctor that this is no flu bug and that hundreds are now dying. Acting on his advice she flees London for the countryside. Abby wakes days later and fears that she may be the only one left alive.

2 - 12 NEW WORLD

There is a much excitement when a balloon passes over Whitecross. However, when the balloon comes down and its occupant is found dead a mystery is left behind. The man is discovered to be a Norwegian and he has in his possession various items that suggests he has been mapping the nation's settlements. When Melanie and Alan meet one of the balloonist's acquaintances, Seth, they learn that the man had been travelling with his daughter Agnes. When Agnes eventually arrives at Whitecross things will never be the same again for our survivors.

Dir Terence Williams

3 - 1 MANHUNT

It is six months since Greg, Agnes and Jack left Whitecross. Seth finds Jack wandering in a fever in some woods and takes him back to his home to look after him. There finds that Jack has letters for Charles and Jenny which are from Greg. Charles, Pet, Jenny, Hubert and the children have moved from Whitecross to Challoner. When they learn the news about the letters, Jenny and Charles go to Seth's home. Jack is delirious and says some unintelligible things about a place called Wellingham, where he and Greg had been. A distraught Jenny is desperate to see Greg again, so she and Charles head off to Wellingham. Pet also sends Hubert on after them. After rescuing a man staked out in the woods and meeting the authoritarian Clifford and the sinister Miedel, Jenny and Charles become worried about the situation in which they have become embroiled.

3 - 2 A LITTLE LEARNING

Jenny is searching for Greg alone. Not far away Greg is travelling with Agnes when they come across an old woman in distress. She introduces herself as Mrs Butterworth and explains that she is being plagued by what she terms 'red indians'. Greg investigates and discovers a community of children are behind the raids on her house. They are led by a tough boy called Eagle who does not want Greg to interfere, despite the fact that many of their number are dying of a mysterious illness.

Wr Ian McCulloch

Dir George Spenton-Foster

3 - 3 LAW OF THE JUNGLE

Charles, Hubert and Jenny are reunited with Agnes, who has become separated from Greg. They visit the Walter's family farm, where Greg and Agnes met Tom Walter and his family some months ago. However, the farm is deserted as Tom's mother, Edith, and her sons Steve and Owen were driven from it, when Tom was away, by former butcher Brod, to a camp by a railway line. Charles, Jenny, Agnes and Hubert are captured and taken there as well. Brod has special plans for Jenny and sees Charles as a threat to his position.

3 - 7 THE PEACEMAKER

Charles, Jenny and Hubert arrive at a settlement based around a working mill. The community there has been influenced and led by former personnel headhunter Frank Garner and Rutna, a young Indian woman. Their guiding principle is the belief that man died (during 'the death') and now needs to be re-born to a new way of life. Frank makes several failed attempts to speak to Charles alone and is clearly uneasy about something. When Charles, Jenny and Hubert's horses are poisoned with yew branches they have no choice but to stay another day.

Wr Roger Parkes

3 - 8 SPARKS

Charles, Frank, Jenny and Hubert are now searching for former electrical engineer Alec Campbell with a view to using his skills to restore electrical power to the nation. However, they discover Alec to be withdrawn and unco-operative and still mourning his long dead wife. When he continues to refuse to help, Frank resolves to take stronger measures which involve some pethadine and Jenny.

Wr Roger Parkes

Dir Tristan De Vere Cole

3 - 9 THE ENEMY

Charles, Jenny, Hubert, Frank and Alec arrive at a settlement based at an old coal mine. The settlement's leader, Leonard Woollen, is anxious to get the mining equipment working again and enlists Alec and Charles's help. Another man, Sam Mead, is opposed to the idea fearing a return to the age before 'the death'. Jenny is becoming increasingly emotional about the absent Greg. Charles pushes her too far in relation to Alec.

Wr Roger Parkes

Dir Peter Jefferies

3 - 10 THE LAST LAUGH

Greg is looking for a Dr. Adams who he thinks is being held captive. He is attacked by four men who steal all his notes on the settlements he has visited. He survives the encounter but runs into further danger when he finds Dr. Adams, who has contracted smallpox. Greg must now wait until the incubation period is over to see if he has contracted the disease.

SWAMP THING

Swamp Thing was a sentient creature that was half man and half plant. He was created when Dr. Alec Holland and his wife were working on a bio-regenerative formula in their laboratory deep in the Louisiana swamps. The lab was attacked by the man who would become Swamp Thing's nemesis, Dr. Anton Arcane. Arcane was a genius in his own right and wanted the formula to bring back his dead wife, deciding to take it when Holland refused to sell it to him. During the attack an explosion occurred. Arcane survived the explosion, Holland's wife was killed and Dr. Holland found himself doused with the bio regenerative formula and fell into the swamp. He somehow merged with the plants of the swamp and emerged as a half-man / half-plant creature with great strength and the limited ability to control the forces of nature in the swamp.

Swamp Thing was set in the town of Houma, which was located near a large swamp area in an unnamed state, most likely Louisiana. Dr. Arcane was a prominent local businessman who was very wealthy and respected by most of the people in the community who were unaware of his true nature. He was very egotistical and thought of himself as a scientific genius, which he was. He treated people as disposable items and many mutated creatures living in the swamp were the results of his failed experiments. His justification was that the end results of his experiments may prove beneficial to all mankind and other people may have to make a few sacrifices. He had bought and paid for the local sheriff. His aid Graham truly respected and cared for Arcane despite the fact that Arcane would do away with Graham if it suited his needs.

Swamp Thing was somewhat an ecologically minded hero, the protector of the swamp. He had the power to control the forces of nature in the swamp. His powers however diminished when he was away from the swamp or when the balance of nature in the swamp was thrown off. Swamp Thing was also weakened by the absence of sunlight. Although the residents of Houma didn't know of his existence, there were rumours of a creature that lived in the swamp. Arcane knew of Swamp Thing's existence and still hoped to get the bioregenerative process away from him, or kill him since he refused to cooperate. Swamp Thing had also befriended several of the people living in Houma.

Among the people Swamp Thing had befriended were: Tressa Kipp a young divorcee who had recently returned to Houma with her young son Jim. She helped run the family boat rental business where Oboe Hartison worked for her. Dr. Arcane kidnapped Jim and shipped him to South America, causing Tressa to leave town for a time to search for him. Her stepson Will came to town and stayed, becoming Swamp Thing's friend and confidante. Kipp met and began romancing Abigail, a genetically engineered woman, with unusual powers. Dr. Ann Fisk was a former student of Dr. Holland's who came to the swamp and met Swamp Thing, she decided to try and find a way to turn Swamp Thing back into Dr. Holland.

Swamp Thing is a half hour cable TV series by MCA/Universal, and made by BBK Productions that aired on the USA Network between 1990 and 1993, and is currently being re-run on the Sci Fi Channel. The series follows the adventures of Dr. Alec Holland, a scientist who was disfigured and transformed in a laboratory accident caused by his arch enemy, Dr. Anton Arcane. Alec seems to have a full time job on his hands as he has to constantly contend with Arcane's demented schemes of acquisition and destruction which invariably threaten Alec and his friends. Of course, not every episode has Arcane as the threat, or even in it (although the ones with him in are by far the most fun.)

Though Alec, or 'Swampy' as he is affectionately known, is the title character, the series spends more time concentrating on the other characters, notably his nemesis, Arcane, and others created specifically for the TV show, such as the Kipp family. Anyone expecting a standard superhero show with said hero constantly flexing his muscles and saving the day, with everyone else pretty much in the background isn't going to get that with this show. By not overusing or formulaising Swamp Thing, his mystique and enigma are preserved throughout the series. One thing to be said about 'Swamp Thing' is that it is not a series that takes itself too seriously. Let's face it, when you're hero is a seven foot tall plant, it's difficult to be taken seriously... so the series often doesn't try! It contains a lot of humour and isn't afraid to stand back and take a good laugh at itself, and only very rarely descends into off-putting camp. Created by Len Wein and Berni Wrightson, he first

AKA: SUN VULCAN

AKA: TAIYO SENTAI SUN VULCAN

AKA: SUN BATTLE TEAM SUN VULCAN

The threat machine empire Black Magma causes the EPDS to decide to establish the Solar Task Force at a summit. From the EPDS's air force, navy, and rangers, Commander Arashiyama assembles three specialists to become Sunvulcan. Harsh training begins. Learning of this, Black Magma attacks the EPDS base, but the Sunvulcan debuts in time to save it. Hellsaturn prays to the Black Solar God and is rewarded with a revived Queen Hedrian, now a cyborg with a mechanical heart and a metallic afro. But plot after plot of Black Magma, even with Hedrian's aid, fails. Following the death of Zeroone, Amazon Killer, a Vader, arrives from space, destroying the Sunvulcan base.

A new Vulcanbase is built. The original Vuleagle, Oowashi Ryuusuke, is replaced by a friend and master of the sword, Hiba Takayuki. The team successfully defends the psychic descendant of the Denzi, the nun Himiko, from Black Magma. Shortly after this, Lightning Galaxer shows up. Sunvulcan devises the New Vulcan Ball, but their attacks are no use against Lightning Galaxer until he becomes the gigantic Lightning Monger. Finally, the trio and their commander go to the North Pole to rescue Arashiyama Miki, and succeed not only in doing so (despite a fake Miki to confuse them), but also in defeating the Omnipotent God, the true leader of Black Magma, by feigning surrender and striking when it lowers its guard.

Alternative Description:

The Black Magma Machine Empire wants to defeat the human race and replace life on Earth with mechanized minions. To defend the Earth, a secret task force is assembled - one warrior each from Sky, Sea and Land, each with special powers. Takano (Godai) is the red-clad Vul-Eagle, Yoshiya (Sugi) is the blue-clad Vul-Shark, and Akio (Kobayashi) is the yellow-clad Vul-Panther, while their vehicles (Jaguar, Cosmo and the Sand Vulcan) can combine to form their ultimate weapon, the Sun Vulcan Robo. In times of great need, the trio also attack with the secret weapons, color-coded American footballs that can be kicked at the enemy for devastating effect.

Their archenemy is Hell Satan (Kusaka), the president of the Black Magma Machine Empire, whose anonymous Machine Men provide the cannon fodder. As well as the obligatory monster of the week. Sun Vulcan also features Queen Hedorian (Soga), paramount baddie from the earlier DENZIMAN series. Following her defeat at the hands of the Denziman Team, Hedorian has been restored to life with an artificial heart, and serves Hell Satan as a faithful cyborg lieutenant.

Based once more "on an idea by Sabura Yade." The next in the super sentai series would be the following years GOOGLE-V. Music by Michiaki Watanabe. Soga would return once more as another invader in MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS.

The series was produced by Susumu Yoshikawa & Takeyuki Suzuki.

The third sentai series and last Toei series with a Marvel copyright (but apparently no Marvel involvement) to date. Smallest team to date, compare it with LIVEMAN. The only series with a change in team leader. Taiyo Sentai Sun Vulcan" was the only team that had 3 members.

Characters and mecha

Earth Peace Defence Squad (a.k.a. Guardians of World Peace)

Vuleagle (Oowashi Ryuusuke; 1-23)

EPDS air force officer. Left to pursue space shuttle research for NASA in America. Special moves: Eagle Wings, Eagle Diving, Eagle Fire.

Vuleagle (Hiba Takayuki; 23-50)

Colleague of Oowashi. Master of kendo. Special moves: Hiba Return sword technique, Secret Sword Style Cross Cut.[Played by Godai Takayuki, also of Western Police and more recently, Kakuranger, as Tsuruhime's father Hakumenrou.]

Vulshark (Samejima Kinya)

EPDS naval officer. Special moves: Shark Washer, Shark Diving, Shark Rolling, Shark Jaws.

Vulpanther (Hyou Asao)

EPDS army officer. Special moves: Panther Galaxy, Panther Claw, Panther Bomber, Panther Mole, Rolling Panther, Panther Throw. (Note that Ryuusuke, Kinya, and Asao were played by actors with those same names!)

The three can defeat monsters with the Vulcan Ball (soccer ball-shaped), the New Vulcan Balls (football-shaped), and the combined Vulcan Sticks. Other team attacks include the Sky Jetter, Scram Hurricane, Solar Kicks, and Vulcan Shoot.

Commander Arashiyama

Commander of the EPDS. Expert at robotics. Designer of the team's mecha.[Played by the late Kishida Shin of Operation: Mystery, RETURN OF ULTRAMAN, and FIREMAN]

Arashiyama Miki

The Commander's daughter.

Sandvulcan

Vuleagle's jeep.

Sharkmachine

Vulshark's bike.

Panthermachine

Vulpanther's bike.

Jaguar Vulcan

Flying fortress. Its jaws open to let the components of the Sunvulcanrobo launch.

Cosmo Vulcan (Vuleagle) + Bullvulcan (Vulshark and Vulpanther) > Sunvulcanrobo (first combining sentai robo) Armament: Solar Sword (Aurora Plasma Return), Vulshield, Vultonfa, Vulhand, Vulcansun, Vulcan Cannons.

Machine Empire Black Magma

An organization worshipping the Black Solar God based at the Iron Claw Castle at the North Pole. Intends to have its Mechahumans rule the world.

Fuehrer Hellsaturn

Mechahuman leader of Black Magma, draped in black. Nothing more in the end than an underling of Black Magma's true leader, the Omnipotent God.

Queen Hedrian (5-50)

Soga Machiko's back, in one of several crossovers in Sunvulcan between that series and Denziman. Such cross-sentai crossovers in the regular TV series continuity have never been tried since.

Amazon Killer (23-50)

Vader field officer who came from space.

Lightning Galaxer (45-49)

Space pirate known as the 'Invincible Electric Man of the Galaxy'. Sought by the Galactic Police. Ends up as the Lightning Monger.

Dark Q

Spy robot able to change its appearance; reminds me of Friday the 13th's Jason.

AKA: STEVEN SPEILBERG PRESENTS TAKEN

Tagline: Some secrets we keep. Some are kept from us.

Beginning with the abduction of Captain Russell Keys, a decorated World War Two pilot, the Keys family find themselves chosen to be 'taken' by aliens for generations. Russell unwittingly passes the legacy on to his son Jesse and then ultimately to his grandson Charlie - but what is it about this family that interests the aliens and keeps them coming back again and again? Meanwhile, intrigued by the discovery of the crash site in Roswell, Captain Owen Crawford begins his own family legacy - to solve the mystery behind alien existence. Crawford, however is a ruthlessly ambitious military man who will stop at nothing to get what he wants - even murder - and both his knowledge of the aliens and ruthless streak are passed on from generation to generation with shocking results.

The Clarkes are a tight-knit family led by Sally, a kind but lonely housewife who spends a night of passion with a handsome stranger, John. She rightly suspects that John is in fact the alien survivor of the Roswell spacecraft and does everything in her power to protect both her family and the mysterious John. Later, when she finds herself pregnant, she realises that her son Jacob is no ordinary child and in fact could hold the key to the future of the planet. All three families intertwine throughout the movie until the ultimate and astonishing conclusion in this gripping, action-packed and special effects laden epic.

Tom Hanks and Steven Spielberg who teamed up to make arguably the best miniseries of all time, Band Of Brothers, join forces again for another major television event. This time the subject matter is of alien abductions and concerns four generations of families between the 1940's and present day. Steven Spielberg Presents Taken is an amazing accomplishment from a team of directors and, features top-notch acting and better than average special effects (especially for television). Another advantage for the series is the taut, finely written script by Leslie Bohem and the smooth, genuine pacing. This series really seems to have a sense of purpose and direction, and does not disappoint.

Steven Spielberg Presents Taken has only a handful of supplements included on a sixth disc. They are basically just five different featurettes running about a total of 39 minutes. Something interesting to note is that the region 2 release of this title which came out on May 5th, 2003 consisted of one documentary called "Inside Taken" and had a running time of 42 minutes. That being the case, it appears the producers of this release cut that longer featurette into pieces to give the appearance of a fuller supplemental package. Ah well, in any case these are pretty straight-forward behind-the-scenes looks at the miniseries and will hold a definite interest for big-time fans of the show. The featurettes are "Inside Taken" (17:23), "The Cast Of Taken" (4:53), "A New Reality" (7:47), "A Singular Vision: The Directors" (4:23) and "Time Warp" (4:32). The best of the lot is probably "Inside Taken", as it provides a larger overview of the miniseries as a whole. Definitely not a bounty of special features.

The promotional materials for Taken contain the following explanation of Clarke's character from script author Leslie Bohem: "The Clarkes, specifically Tom Clarke, came about, in part, because I was fascinated by debunkers and I've never really seen much about debunkers." Bohem must have missed The X-Files, in which agent Scully represented the "debunker" camp not to mention a slew of other films and mini-series drawing on claims of the paranormal, from Signs to Dark Skies. Skeptic characters have often appeared in these fictional stories, and the same thing happens to them virtually every time. Either they get converted outright, or their skeptical stances are otherwise undermined.

I hate to sound thin-skinned, but just for comparison, imagine the uproar if every time a Jew was featured in a film or mini-series he or she converted to Christianity by the end. Indeed, when it comes to fictional representations of skeptics, the screen writers and directors of paranormalist dramas have truly had no shame. Perhaps the most egregious example of a skeptic conversion via fiction, described previously in Skeptical Inquirer magazine, came in an episode several years ago of the flopped NBC television series Dark Skies. The show introduced a fictional version of Carl Sagan, and then made this archetypal doubter of UFO cover-up claims privy to high-level government UFO secrets. The fictional Sagan then goes on to use the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence program (SETI) as a way to find out which planets the aliens are coming from, all the while remaining complicit in a government conspiracy to suppress the truth. The episode came out just half a year after Sagan's death, which is some indication of just how thoughtless and insulting the trend of converting skeptics through fiction can get.

And Taken and Dark Skies hardly exhaust the genre. As previously mentioned, THE X-FILES drew upon the tension between skepticism and belief to great effect. But sure enough, late in the series' run Dana Scully was officially converted from a skeptic into a "reluctant believer." Given the hordes of paranormal creatures that paraded through THE X-FILES, of course, it's hard to blame her. Indeed, several studies have shown that the transition from skepticism to credulity has been a dominant theme of much of our entertainment, particularly in the horror and suspense genres. But when a wide range of fictional representations all converge on a single stereotype in this case, that of the closed-minded skeptic it's a pretty obvious sign that something isn't completely right with our culture.

TALES OF MYSTERY

Anthology series which usually had bizarre tales.

Early sixties anthology series of uncanny and supernatural tales by renowned ghost storyteller Algernon Blackwood. These forays into an at times bizarre imagination were hosted by Scottish actor John Laurie (still best remembered as Cpl Fraser in Dad's Army) whose wide, staring eyes and quietly sinister delivery set the tone for an eerie series.

Though early tales stuck closely to the 'ghost story' theme, the second season saw the series' scope branch out to include some broader-based fantasies. The Man Who Found Out starred Wartes Lloyd Yack as a man seeking for the secret of the universe. He discovers a set of engraved tablets buried in the Middle East, deciphers them and finds that they tell the story of the whole future of humanity. But the secret is too terrible to bear and he dies after reading the message.

Another story, Nephele, concerns an archaeologist who finds the shoes of a slave dancer of ancient Rome and is possessed by their strange power which compels him to 'witness' a tragic drama played out 17 centuries before. The Telephone explored the teasing idea of inanimate objects apparently developing lives of their own. In The Pikesraffe Case an enigmatic lodger offers his landlady the chance to change the whole pattern of her life. And in a Season Three tale, The Insanity of Jones, a man who can see back through time avenges a 400-year-old crime. Among familiar names appearing in the series were Dinsdale Landen, Harry H. Corbett, Peter Barkworth, Patrick Cargill, Francesca Annis, John Barron, and Tenniel Evans.

Tales of Mystery was an early ITV anthology series dealing with uncanny and supernatural stories. All of the episodes were based on stories by renowned author of ghost stories Algernon Blackwood. John Laurie, the series host, portrayed the late author giving introductions to 'his' stories. Tales of Mystery was not the first time one of Blackwood's stories was brought to life on TV. In 1948 Blackwood (then 80 years old) played host to one of his stories for a BBC Halloween special. All stories were written by Algernon Blackwood, the stories were adapted by various writers. Producer for the series was Peter Graham Scott and the executive producer for the series was John Frankau (for season three).

An early anthology series featuring stories of the supernatural by the late Algernon Blackwood, the expert in the uncanny whose ghost stories are ranked among the finest ever written, presented by John Laurie before his later days of fame with Dad's Army.

As described in the TV Times on first broadcast - "There will be plenty of fog, thunder, lightening and strange sounds floating about when the new series starts. Producer, Peter Graham Scott will utilise them to recreate the atmosphere that envelopes each particular episode in its own air of mystery. Each story will contain a twist ending with just the right element of surprise. "

An early series to use special effects such as overlay, inlay, back and front projection, split screen and double image. All three seasons were produced by Peter Graham Scott.

WR. Giles Cooper, Owen Holder, Philip Broadley, Barbara S. Harper, John Richmond, Bill MacIlwraith, Kenneth Hyde and Denis Butler.

TALES OF TOMORROW

Anthology series that dealt with science fiction sometimes from the pulp magazines.

This show featured such stories as The Crystal Egg by H.G. Wells and 20,000 Leagues Under The Sea. Sophisticated science fiction based on classic stories by major authors (H.G. Wells' "The Crystal Egg", Mary Shelley's "Frankenstein", 2-part of Jules Verne's "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" starring Thomas Mitchell and Leslie Nielsen) plus modern stories ("The Monsters" from Mars, "The Dark Angel" immortal, "The Flying Saucer"...). It was transmitted live, with filmed inserts. It alternated with other series in its Friday 9:30-10:00 p.m. slot, and was also aired on radio in early 1953.

Premiering eight years before THE TWILIGHT ZONE. Tales of Tomorrow was television's successful attempt at adult science fiction. Before Tales of Tomorrow, all science fiction was towards the juvenile audience with such shows as: CAPTAIN VIDEO, SPACE PATROL and TOM CORBETT, although occasionally presenting a science fiction story, they tended to deal mainly in horror or supernatural. Like THE TWILIGHT ZONE, Tales of Tomorrow was an anthology series. The world would have to wait a few more years for an adult science fiction series with continuing characters.

The programme was shot live, like most early television shows. This meant that fancy effects could not be used. This also meant that there could not be many set changes during the show. Watching episodes of Tales of Tomorrow today it is interesting to note the ingenious ways in which directors held the audience's attention while the actors moved from one set to another. Often with a quick change of costume on the way.

Working within the restraints of live television and an obviously small budget, Tales of Tomorrow succeeded in presenting entertaining stories that, with the exception of a few scientific ones, stood the test of time quite well. The stories consisted of both original material and adapted classic science fiction works. Among classic stories adapted for television were H.G. Wells' The Crystal Egg, Jules Verne's 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea (the series' only two part episode) and Mary Shelley's Frankenstein (updated to the 1950's). The performers in Tales of Tomorrow consisted of both known faces and up and coming stars. Leslie Nielsen, Eva Gabor, Boris Karloff, Burgess Meredith, Veronika McKavanagh and James Dean all made appearances on the show.

Tales of Tomorrow and the ill-fated Out There stood virtually alone at the beginning of the 1950s as ongoing attempts at presenting a mature level of science fiction for television. Tales of Tomorrow was produced in cooperation with the Science Fiction League of America and exhibited a level of sophistication not approached until Rod Serling and The Twilight Zone captured the public imagination. Reportedly, George Foley's production company obtained virtually all of its story material, the TV rights to some 2,000 stories, through an arrangement with the Science Fiction League. Adaptation assignments were parcelled out to a variety of regular writers. Prospective writers for the series were advised that "the important factor here is the reaction of science-fiction theme on the characters." Owing to the limitations of early television, the casts were generally restricted to one star-rising role and no more than four principal roles.

Then as now, TV science fiction generated an almost fanatical band of followers, prescient of the Star Trek devotees of the current day. In an interview with the New York Times (September 23, 1951), Foley commented on the vehement reactions many of the viewers demonstrated when confronted by futuristic concepts with which they disagreed. "It's amazing," he said, "the different opinions people have on things of the future which may be centuries away."

In order to avoid such controversy, Tales of Tomorrow often sidestepped long range extrapolations. Writers for the series were instructed to keep the action contemporary (even though extraordinary). They were cautioned also to avoid "comedy, bug-eyed monsters, futuristic sets and costumes." The result was, nonetheless, a series of imaginative stories tailored to work within the framework of a live stage play rather than a filmed motion picture presentation. Critics and historians who voice positive reactions to a series like Tales of Tomorrow frequently do so in the context of surprise and admiration that the series was able to transcend its lack of high quality special effects.

In its two years on the air Tales of Tomorrow was not without controversy, prompted in part, we would suggest, by the program's efforts to present a more adult view of the science fiction genre. At least twice, the noted and influential TV critic for the New York Times, Jack Gould, attacked the series for dramatic deficiencies in rather sharp and caustic terms. In a February 4, 1952, column, Gould wrote negatively of one of Tales of Tomorrow's most ambitious efforts, a two-part live adaptation of Jules Verne's Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea. The adaptation by Max Ehrlich occasioned an outburst from Gould, who attacked the entire production as "nothing so much as a soap opera staged in an aquarium." Gould, however, saved his heartiest criticism for "Another Chance." Three days after the play aired, Gould unleashed a broadside against it and the ABC Network. The teleplay, in Gould's words

...was an item of indescribable trash and totally bereft of any dramatic worth. For its climax there was shown the gruesome chok-ing to death of a girl. Then her lifeless feet and legs were dragged around the room as the camera came in for a sustained close-up. The scene was thoroughly unpleasant. The incensed critic culminated his culminations with a veiled call upon the network to exercise "a little housecleaning." Gould's attack may not have had much to do with Tales of Tomorrow folding production some four months later; nonetheless, critics such as Gould did wield considerable influence over the infant tele-vision industry in the 1950s. For instance, Gould's attack on station WABD for airing the Flash Gordon serial prompted station executives to pull the serial from their schedule immediately rather than incur the writer's further wrath. Tales of Tomorrow demonstrated both a commercial and critical viability.

Its willingness to try classic presentations such as Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, Oscar Wilde's The Picture of Dorian Gray and H.G. Wells' The Crystal Egg, along with a generous mix of original stories, infused the series with a sense of pur-pose and direction. Interestingly enough, the several episodes of Tales of Tomorrow we were able to evaluate for the compilation of this present work did not substantiate Gould's criticism, although the two episodes which offended his sensibilities were not among the shows we saw. Our viewing of Tales of Tomorrow suggested a series which operated suc-cinctly and convincingly within the scope of early live television. The violence and horror were suggested to the audience rather than presented literally before the camera's eye. In that quaint age when suggestion, innuendo and intimation were quite sufficient to create a sense of dread and even terror, the wanton, gratuitous and unceasing assault upon our senses as practised by film and television today had no place in the popular culture.

Tales of Tomorrow ran for two full years 84 episodes-under less than ideal circumstances. Its adult approach was almost hereti-cal at a time when juvenile science fiction was the common denominator. As an anthology series bereft of a continuing framework or weekly host, the series faced severe obstacles in its effort to build an audience.

Later anthology series running in the same vein, such as Science Fiction Theatre and The Twilight Zone, recognised the inestimable contribution a host serving as anchor could make. Nonetheless, Tales of Tomorrow clearly demonstrated that science fiction and fantasy, if presented in the proper framework, held a viable appeal for mom and dad as well as for the junior mem-bers of the family. The series was sufficiently well received to convince ABC to try Tales of Tomorrow as a radio series starting on January 1, 1953, but the effort lasted only two months. CBS picked up the radio version but retained the series for only six weeks.

TARGET LUNA

The scene is set on an island rocket station off Scotland (though the open-air sequences were filmed off the Essex coast). Professor Wedgwood, having successfully sent a man into space, has invited his three children to join him for Easter. There the youngsters, Valerie, Geoffrey and Jimmy (plus obligatory pet hamster, Hamlet) find an even more daring experiment in preparation - the first manned rocket round the Moon. At the last moment the pilot, Flight Lt., Williams, falls ill and the experiment looks set to fail. But little Jimmy (hitherto dressed, like every well brought-up astronaut, in school blazer and tie) secretly takes his place and is shot into space.

As an electrical storm cuts radio contact with Earth, Jimmy must operate the rocket's heating system or risk freezing to death behind the Moon. Naturally, the young hero successfully circles the Moon and heads back to Earth (though not fast enough to escape a bombardment of cosmic particles, and not too fast lest he overshoot). Finally, he is talked down to the requisite safe landing.

This 1960 comic-book-style saga sent one young boy to the Moon and launched a family into a trilogy of pioneering space adventures. Despite its SF theme, Target Luna was an unashamedly old-fashioned 'boy's own' fantasy in which a youngster takes centre stage doing all the things grown-ups do (and doing them better). Acted with gusto, it was as wholesome as marmite soldiers and went down a treat in its Sunday teatime slot.

A happy ending, of course, but an even happier beginning for the writers Malcolm Hulke and Eric Paice who took the Wedgwood family further into space the following autumn (see PATHFINDERS). The series (like its three successors) was produced by Sydney Newman, doyen of ABC's Armchair Theatre, and soon to spawn the longest-running science fiction series of all - DOCTOR WHO. The designer was David Gillespie, Sydney Newman, the series advisor was Mary Field.

A seminal piece of family entertainment which was produced by the legendary Sydney Newman and written by Eric Paice and Malcolm Hulke. The series would spawn three sequels with the Pathfinders trilogy (Space / Mars / Venus) before Newman - who would successfully oversee such quality productions as Armchair Theatre, Police Surgeon and The Avengers - would move onto the BBC where he created Doctor Who. Hulke and Paice had unsuccessfully submitted a science fiction series titled The Mirror Planet to the BBC at the start of their careers in 1958, but then had struck gold with This Day In Fear which had been rejected by Associated Rediffusion. The play, broadcast by the BBC in July 1958, starred a young Patrick McGeehan as an architect caught up in the conflicts of Ireland.

Both Newman and the Head of Children's Television at ABC, Mary Field, were aware of the increase in viewing figures for children. They would have wanted to tap into the potential advertiser's revenue this section of the audience could reap. With this in mind when Hulke and Paice submitted their idea it fitted perfectly with Newman and Field's requirements to specifically have children as lead characters. As well as adventure, Newman also required semi-educational elements within the script to capitalise on current events. Sputnik, the first satellite, had been launched by the Russians in 1957 and space and its exploration was grabbing the headlines.

Given a sizeable budget and allocated filming Target Luna was done "as live" from ABC Studios in Birmingham. As such it was never tele-recorded and no episodes exist. Locations, doubling for a remote Scottish Isle, were executed in the Essex countryside and on its coastline. The show captured the important children's audience and their associated families and a six-part sequel was quickly commissioned from Hulke and Paice called Pathfinders In Space.

All episodes were written by Malcolm Hulke and Eric Paice, produced by Sydney Newman and directed by Adrian Brown. David Gillespie was the designer and Mary Field was credited as programme advisor.

TARZAN : THE EPIC ADVENTURES

Tarzan must return to his homeland to stop his arch enemy Rokoff from unleashing the terrible powers from within.

In 1913, Edgar Rice Burroughs launched the adventures of the world's original action superhero, Tarzan, with the novel Tarzan of the Apes. Following the phenomenal success of his first outing, Tarzan went on to star in a further 23 novels and countless comic strips, as well as more than a hundred films and television series. Today, the legendary Lord of the Jungle is undoubtedly one of the world's best-known fictional characters, and is destined to go down in the annals of history as one of the 20th Century's most successful literary creations.

Joe Lara who starred in the first season of the series as Tarzan had previously starred as Tarzan in the US films Tarzan in Manhattan, which was originally conceived as a pilot for a new series. Lara's presence apart, Tarzan in Manhattan had very little in common with The Epic Adventures. While the CBS pilot was something of a typical Tarzan offering, complete with a leading character with a penchant for communicating in monosyllabic grunts, The Epic Adventures strives to stay true to Edgar Rice Burroughs's original vision, as established in his books. Consequently, Tarzan is intelligent, educated and articulate, and his escapades are no longer confined to the African jungle. Joe Lara was the 18th Actor to portray Tarzan. The series is also shot on location in Sun City, South Africa, in order to keep the budget down.

After attending high school in southern California, Lara embarked on a personal tour of Europe, during which he lived in France, Italy and Switzerland. Returning to Los Angeles, he enrolled in drama classes to pursue an acting career, and roles in such screen projects as War Head, Final Equinox, Hologram Man and American Cyborg swiftly followed.

When the series first started in the US the ratings were high and a second season was commissioned, but after Joe Lara left the series at the end of the season one, the producers decided to make a few changes. Including a new Tarzan and even Jane and Cheetah, who hadn't appeared in the first season. Consequently the second season was delayed by months and the fans didn't like the number of changes made to the show, the ratings fell and the series was cancelled. A case of "If it ain't broke, don't fix it".

TATTOOED TEENAGE ALIEN FIGHTERS FROM BEVERLY HILLS

The evil force in Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters from Beverly Hills is Gorganus, the diabolically evil emperor of the planet Molecula. He uses his army of alien monsters to conquer the Earth. He needs Earth since it is a focal point of a system of power portals he needs to rule the universe. Gorganus' confidante is Lechner, a bird-like creature who is always kissing up to Gorganus. Nimbar, the protector of the power portals gives four teenagers from Beverly Hills special powers to combat the aliens. The teens consist of two guys and two girls who do not come from similar backgrounds and would not associate with each other, but at first are forced to work on a class science project. The team consists of Laurie Foster, a popular beauty queen with a penchant for shopping; Gordon Henley, an overachieving member of the young millionaire's club, whose mother is the mayor; Drew Vincent, a liberal vegetarian who likes taking up lost causes, her guardian is Nicole a soap opera star; and Swinton Sawyer a geeky scientific genius who does not have well developed social skills.

The four try to keep their dual lives secret by pretending not to know each other at school. When their powers are needed Nimbar summons them by flashing special tattoos he has given them, they then find the nearest portal and are transported to Nimbar's control room. He then informs them what the threat is. The teens then transform into Galactic Sentinels and battle the alien monsters sent to Earth by Gorganus. The teens' powers are based upon mythological beings and they have the ability to join together and form Knightron, a giant mediaeval knight.

Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters From Beverly Hills was an original live-action series which was released by DiC Entertainment and aired on USA Network from 1994-1995. The show was a low budget attempt to emulate the success of Saban's Mighty Morphin Power Rangers.

What a title! And, yes, what a load of rubbish. This POWER RANGERS pastiche is utter tosh, however much of send-up it's intended to be. Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters from Beverly Hills was a programme with a similar premise to the highly popular MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS. Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters from Beverly Hills features a group of teenagers who have been given special powers in order to battle menaces to the Earth. Unlike MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS which took its action footage from Japanese series. all of the action scenes in Tattooed Teenage Alien Fighters from Beverly Hills are cheaply made in America. This series was shown on Sky One in July 1996.

The show was set in Beverly Hills, California. The four central characters of the show were teens selected by a blob-like brain alien named Nimbar to fight off the monsters sent by evil Emperor Gorganus. In the first episode Nimbar recruits the four high school students and with a touch by his "finger" gives them each a tattoo, based on a constellation in the celestial sphere. When their tattoos flash, this means Nimbar needs them and a portal appears that they can pass through to enter his chamber.

The teens could then stand atop platforms called "transo discs" and transform into world defending sentinels with super powers. When they put their hands together in an interlocking square they form the ultimate sentinel called Nitron.

The four teen characters were:

Laurie Foster, who transformed into Scorpio (played by Leslie Danon)
 Gordon Henley, who transformed into Taurus (played by Richard Nason)
 Drew Vincent, who transformed into Centaur (played by K. Jill Sorgen)
 Swinton Sawyer, who transformed into Apollo (played by Rugg Williams)

In one episode, there was a replacement for Laurie when she was injured badly. He's known as Orion in sentinel mode, his true form. His civilian name was unknown in his duration on Earth (played by Kevin Castro).

They frequently could be seen in a coffee shop owned by Drew's aunt. This was probably an attempt to emulate Ernie's Juice Bar/Youth Center from Mighty Morphin Power Rangers.

One interesting difference between the two shows is that in this show, people noted they were missing. When Drew's aunt confronted her about this and Drew revealed her secret, she brought her to a psychiatrist to help with her "delusions."

The show also featured at least one episode that made a jab at the "monster of the day" convention by showing how tactically unsound the practice is for conquering a planet. The main villain went on vacation and his sidekick tried to conquer earth, and when the monster he sent was about to be destroyed he recalled it and sent another moments later. The heroes were nearly defeated until the main villain returned and re-implemented the "monster of the day" formula.

Trivia

Drew's tattoo is not the symbol for Centaur, but Sagittarius. Similarly, Swinton's symbol is not for Apollo, but Aquarius. It is most likely a mistake made by the creators.

Zsa Zsa Gabor was a guest star.

1 - 1 IN THE BEGINNING

Groganus finally received the map to the focal points of the power portals, earth is the key to these power portals. Groganus then sends ninjabot to make way for the domination of the universe. Laurie, Gordon, Drew, and Swinton are working on a science project for school. But Gordon spills coffee on the device and it opens up a portal to Nimbar: The head protector of the power portals and councillor of the galactic sentinels. Nimbar selects the four to fight Groganus and his army. When they call out their own constellation name they become the Tattooed teenage alien fighters of Beverly hills.

1 - 2 HOW TIME FLIES

Groganus sends the sorcerer out to disrupt time within the sentinel's life. Drew, Laurie, and Gordon first feel the effects when time is sped up and what is present, is really the future.

1 - 3 PERCEPTIONS

Groganus summons slaygar the toxic waste monster and sends it to earth to pollute the earth. Swinton wants to ask Cathy out, but chokes when she approaches him. So Gordon, Drew and Laurie each offer Swinton advice on dating. But Gordon is only in it for the money, Drew is in it for the help on her sociality paper and Laurie is there to keep an eye on both Drew and Gordon.

TEAM KNIGHT RIDER

Five super-intelligent vehicles are driven by five highly trained operatives who take over when conventional law-enforcement agencies fail. In the opener, Jenny (Christine Steel) tests her loyalty to a former Marine commander embroiled in an anti-Government plot. A terrorist group called "Fallen Nation" kidnaps General Stephen Butler, a famous war hero and former senior officer of Jenny. The General mysteriously escapes, and asks Jenny to rejoin his team as he tries to find out more about Fallen Nation. He questions the leadership of Kyle, saying he heard that Kyle hasn't been the same since his "accident". Jenny assures the general that Kyle is just as capable as he was during his days with the C.I.A.

The terrorists cause a state-wide black-out throughout Virginia, and the General's popularity rises as the president is helpless to stop Fallen Nation. Trek and Erica kidnap the General's right-hand man, Lieutenant Davis, whom they suspect is involved with Fallen Nation. He confesses that General Butler himself is behind the blackout, in an attempt to keep the armed forces occupied. The general plans to launch a nuclear missile to destroy Washington D.C., and then use his popularity to become the new leader of the country. Trek and Dante break into the missile launch site, but are unable to stop the launch. Trek manages to have the missile self-destruct by, as he later explains, typing in his mother's birthday and hoping for the best.

Kyle asks Jenny why she left the general to join Team Knight Rider. She only says "I have my reasons". She discreetly tries to use the computer to find information on Michael Knight, but is told she needs higher clearance to access that information. She thought her level-5 clearance was the highest clearance available.

Team Knight Rider (TKR) is a syndicated television spin-off series of the Knight Rider franchise that ran between 1997 and 1998. TKR was created by writer/producers Rick Copp and David A. Goodman, based on the original series created by Glen A. Larson, who was an executive producer. TKR was produced by Gil Wadsworth and Scott McAboy and was distributed by Universal Domestic Television and ran only a single season of 22 one-hour episodes before it was canceled due to poor ratings.

Glen A. Larson has made a welcome return to Knight Rider as producer, making this the second SF show of 1997, the other being NIGHTMAN. Glen A. Larson has so far been involved with eight science fiction shows which are, BATTLESTAR GALATICA, GALATICA 1980, BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY, KNIGHT RIDER, AUTOMAN, TEAM KNIGHT RIDER, NIGHTMAN & THE HIGHWAY MAN.

Cast

Team Knight Rider is comprised of six members:

Brixton Karnes as Kyle Stewart, a former CIA agent and leader of TKR
 Christine Steel as Jenny Andrews, a former Marine and Gulf War veteran. An episode of the series insinuates she may be the daughter of Michael Knight, however the question is never resolved.
 Duane Davis as Duke DePalma, a former Chicago police officer and small time boxer.
 Kathy Trageser as Erica West, a former con artist and thief who was given a second chance to use her skills for law enforcement.
 Nick Wechsler as Kevin "Trek" Sanders, a geeky yet handsome technical genius. His nickname was given to him by his parents who are huge Star Trek fans.

Vince Waldron as Gil, one of the lead mechanics aboard Sky One.
 Rick Copp as Clayton, the head chef aboard Sky One.
 Lowell Dean as Captain J.P. Wyatt, the pilot of Sky One.
 Chris Faulk as the Sky One co-pilot.
 Steve Sheridan as Dr. Felson, the medical doctor aboard Sky One.
 Michael Lexx, as Scott, a mechanic aboard Sky One.
 Steve Forrest as the Shadow, a mysterious person who guides and feeds the team information throughout the season, eventually revealed to be a holographic projection controlled by K.I.T.T.

Other Prominent Characters

Jim Marland is a character that replaced the original series' Devon Miles as leader of FLAG and was responsible for the design and construction of KRO (See other vehicles below). Later, Marland stepped down and gave Stewart complete control over TKR. His mindset since the KRO incident was "One man can be given too much power" and thus the 5 vehicles were created, each with their own weaknesses.

Alan Coates as Martin Jantzen, the criminally psychotic driver of K.R.O.

David McCallum as Mobius, the wheelchair and ventilator bound, criminal mastermind behind season 1's inter-episode subplot.

Jim Fyfe as Dennis, a mechanic aboard Sky One eventually revealed to be a mole payed off by Mobius to infect the cars with a computer virus.

Rainer Grant as Liz "Star" Starwicks, a criminal who later reappears as a member of Mobius's "Legion of Doom".

Jim Paddock as Maxwell "Max Amato" Amendes, a criminal who later reappears as a member of Mobius's "Legion of Doom".

Marta Martin as Kayla Gordon, a criminal who later reappears as a member of Mobius's "Legion of Doom".

Roland Kickinger as Roland Laschewsky, Kayla Gordon's bodyguard.

Team Vehicles

Team Knight Rider uses five different vehicles for their missions; each with its own computer AI system like the original Knight 2000 vehicle.

Tom Kane is the voice of Danté (D.N.T.-1), a modified Ford Expedition sport utility vehicle driven by Kyle, but the truck has enough room to transport the entire TKR team and functions like a mobile command center. Danté's AI expresses himself in a haughty British manner and has no misgivings about making his driver and passengers feel uncomfortable. He is the ad hoc leader of the vehicles (if they'd ever listen to him) and he usually speaks on their behalf.

Nia Vardalos voices Domino (D.M.O.-1), a modified Ford Mustang convertible driven by Jenny. The AI's manner is sleek, sexy and flirtatious. She is also talkative and likes to gossip to the annoyance of the other TKR vehicles.

Kerrigan Mahan as the voice of Attack Beast (B.S.T.-1), or just Beast, which is a modified Ford F-150 full-sized pickup truck with off-road capability and is driven by Duke. Beast's AI has a stubborn and argumentative attitude that talks tough and is not afraid to stand up to a fight. His favorite tactic is to crash through walls and surprise the enemy. Beast does not like to take orders from Duke or anyone else, but he is fiercely loyal and gets the job done. TKR member Jenny is the only one Beast will listen to, and his aggressive nature softens when she is around.

Andrea Beutner as the voice of Kat (K.A.T.-1), a high-tech motorcycle that merges with her twin, Plato, to form the advanced High Speed Pursuit Vehicle, capable of high speeds and incredible maneuverability. Kat is driven by Erica and her AI has a polar opposite personality to that of her driver. Kat is always concerned with rules and regulations and is in constant conflict with Erica's amoral traits. She acts more like Erica's mother than her partner, but she will do whatever is necessary to get Erica out of a jam.

Comedian John Kassir voices Plato (P.L.A.T.O.-1), the other motorcycle that merges with his twin Kat to form the High Pursuit Vehicle. Plato is driven by Trek and, like his operator, Plato is a nerdy brainiac completely consumed by facts, figures and data. Plato likes to quote television commercials and famous movie lines and talks in sort of a code that only Trek can understand. The two have developed a strange symbiotic relationship that the other TKR members can never figure out.

Other vehicles

Linda M. McCollough voices Sky One (S.K.Y.-1), a massive C5 military cargo airplane with special VTOL capability. Sky One acted as TKR's mobile base and vehicle transport, and carries a crew of 65, including the TKR field operatives, the flight crew, maintenance crew, mechanics, fire crew, kitchen staff, and medical staff.

John B. Wells as the voice of K.R.O. Pronounced Crow, an acronym for Knight Reformulation One. He would have ultimately replaced KITT (however the TKR series gives no mention of the Knight Rider 2000 series where the Knight 4000 was KITT's original replacement). KRO is a modified black Ferrari GTS with a highly unstable AI. After events that led to his murdering of five people, KRO was deactivated. KRO's operator, Martin Jantzen, was equally unstable. KRO later escapes to kill his creator and FLAG is forced to destroy him.

K.A., short for Knight Alpha, a prototype vehicle introduced in "Legion of Doom" for a possible European Knight Rider team being prepared for delivery to Berlin. KA is a European-made Ford Ka compact hatchback. KA only speaks German. (He is capable of many languages, but chooses to speak German in protest of the egocentric Americans.)

TED AND ALICE

Alice Putkin (Dawn French) is a jolly tourist officer in the Lake District. Here she leads a sedate, unhurried and romantically-challenged life with her boyfriend, Barry (Owen Teale), the local police constable.

But Alice decides she wants out when on her and Barry's anniversary night, she finds him shooting pool with the lads, leaving her to stew in his dirty laundry.

Here comes the science bit: At just this time, nearby, with spaceship parked in a local lake, Ted (Stephen Tompkinson), an alien from distant space, wanders into town looking for love. Ted is exiled from a world evolved into hermaphrodites, where rare, single-sex creatures such as he cannot find partners.

Over by the lake, a local hermit, known for ranting about alien visitors, is found dead and is dutifully attended by PC Barry. But when Ted and Alice begin hitting it off, the jealous Barry sees an opportunity to pursue this peculiar stranger.

But Barry's not the only one who's in pursuit. An alien-hunting Foundation has also picked up a scent and before long have a plan that could deliver Ted into their fiendish hands...

The caper that follows puts Ted on the run and, aware that time is short, he decides to reveal his true form to Alice. But the Foundation is closing in... Will Alice take off with Ted or stay grounded with Barry?

I really enjoyed this little drama. I loved the mix of humour and drama so that it neither became the nerdish Sci-Fi drama nor slapstick comedy with Dr. Who Papier Mache aliens. Dawn French is always excellent, but for me Stephen Tompkinson stole the show.

TEKWAR

Tekwar was set in 2043 and was the story of Jake Cardigan, a former police officer who had been framed by an unknown enemy and placed in cryogenic prison for dealing in Tek. Tek was an illegal electronic mind stimulant which allows its user to escape the real world. Jake was brought out of his cryogenic state after only four years (before his sentence was up) and placed on parole due to the influence of Walter Bascom, the enigmatic and powerful head of the Cosmos Detective agency. Bascom needed Jake's help to find a missing scientist. Jake agreed to help Bascom out on the condition that Bascom help Jake clear his name. Jake discovered that while he was in the freezer his wife had divorced him, remarried and had turned their son against him. The one person still there for Jake was Sid Gomez, Jake's former partner on the police force who was now also employed by Bascom. Jake's nemesis on the police force is Officer Winger, an android detective who neither likes Jake nor appreciates the fact that he was let out of prison early.

During the course of the first four TV movies Jake was able to both clear his name and regain his son's trust. He also met Beth Kitteridge, the daughter of the missing scientist Bascom hired Jake to find. The two eventually become romantically involved. With the advent of the weekly series several changes were made in the supporting cast. Nika was added as office manager at Bascom's, she was an expert hacker and can usually find whatever information Jake needed to solve his case, William Shatner appeared in the first few episodes as Bascom and then was never seen again although he was frequently referred to. Shatner had taken time off to promote Star Trek Generations and stated he intended to return to his Bascom role, however the series was cancelled before he could. Beth was written out of the series, but the door was left open for her eventual return. Sid was killed in the line of duty. Jake became involved with Lt. Sam Houston a police officer he met in the line of duty. Sam eventually resigned from her position with the police and became Jake's new partner at Cosmos.

This show was created by William Shatner who mostly famous for playing Captain James T. Kirk in STAR TREK. Even before he'd done trekkin', William Shatner had begun tekkin'. The man who capered around the cosmos as Captain James T. Kirk started working on his series of Tek novels to kill time during a strike on the set of the fifth Star Trek movie. Five novels, 1989's TekWar, 1991's TekLords and TekLab, and 1993's Tek Vengeance and Tek Secret, were the result, and four TV movies led to a short-lived weekly series.

Shatner is executive producer, directs and has a cameo role as Walt Bascom, Cardigan's boss at the Cosmos Detective Agency. The anti-Tek hero himself is played by Greg Evigan from the sitcom My Two Dads. The series started in the US in January 1995 and came to Sky 2 in September 1996, though the movies aired earlier that year. Von Flores who had an recurring role of the evil Sonny Hokori, would later go on to star in Gene Roddenberry's EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT.

Tekwar was a series based on the popular series of books written by William Shatner, with Ron Goulart. Before writing the books Shatner had become world famous as Captain James T. Kirk on real Star Trek. To date there have been four novels in the series and together they have sold more than a million copies since the first book. TekWar, was published in 1989. Besides being the basis for the TV series the Tekwar books served as the basis for a comic book series entitled Tek World published by Marvel Comics from 1992 to 1994. In addition to writing the books on which the series is based. Shatner also plays one of the supporting characters in the TV series and was the director of the first episode Tekwar first appeared on television as a part of Action Pack. Action Pack was a syndicated series consisting of two hour long made for TV action adventure movies. Many of the features were part of series of made for TV movies. Two of the segments in Action Pack proved popular enough to become regular weekly TV series, these two were: Tekwar and HERCULES THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS. The Tekwar TV series began airing on CTV in Canada, where it is made, in December 1994 and in the United States on the USA cable network a month later.

Tekwar was pulled from the USA network schedule in July of 1995 with four episodes left unbroadcast. Several of the episodes had been scheduled and were listed in various TV listings. These four episodes were first screened on the Sci-Fi Channel, which is owned by the USA Network. These final four episodes along with the last four run on USA have not yet been run in Canada. Executive producers for the series were William Shatner and Peter Sussman, and the producer was John Calvert. The supervising producer was Seaton McLean and the creative consultant was Alfonse Ruggiero Jr. The production designer was Stephen Roloff, costume designer was Sherry McMorran, the special effects were created by Laird McMurray Services, the music was composed by David Michael Frank and the title song was by Warren Zevon. The series was seen on CTV and the USA Networks.

An engrossing drama about Jake Cardigan, a cop framed, sentenced to the freezer than released, and now setting out, as a private detective, to help rid the world of the creeps that framed him up, drug lord types who sell TEK, an electronic chip that goes into a headset which hooks people on their virtual reality unreal worlds to the point of brain damage or psychosis. William Shatner co-stars as Walter Bascom, the owner of the Bascom Detective Agency. Bascom has ins with some important people and thus gets lots of interesting cases thrown his way, bordering on the edge of police or government interference.

This series has the unusual aspect of killing off the sidekicks for Cardigan at a predigious rate. Well, one is faked being killed so she can go underground to pursue her chase of the TekLords, and another is killed by the TekLords, basically out of spite. Bascom and Cardigan are the survivors, as is the nearly magical VR specialist who can go into the vast cyberspace of the NET and do just about anything she wants. Again, the cyberspace themes are all here, VR terminals (very classy affairs in TekWar, reminiscent of Bang and Olfsen Hi Fi gear), ICE (anti-intruder software), net specialists who are able to get around the ICE and intrude just about at will, and of course the real heavies the TekLords. We also see face masks that allow the wearer to assume the face of the person they desire to impersonate, as well as really hi-tech jail cells ("dooooo-do-do-doo", the sound of a locking cell door).

The USA channel now owns this show, so network TV (UPN) no longer has the rights to show it, a pity for those not connected via cable. Come to think of it, the show hasn't been on the air for awhile...hope its just a summer break and that it will be back in the fall. A new rumor abounds that USA and SCI-FI channels are in heavy negotiation with Shatner and others to get the rights to new episodes. UPN may be involved to since they too have had a hand in making this show popular. Anyone else got the REAL story?

TELETUBBIES

AKA: TELETAPIT (FINISH)

AKA: TELEPUZIKI (RUSSIAN)

Four aliens Tinky Winky, Po, Laa-Laa and Dipsy crash land on Earth in their spaceship, which over time gets covered in grass therefore making it look like a hill. The aliens however discover things about life on Earth whilst also living in their space ship.

Each Teletubbies episode is largely the same - the sun, in the form of a giggling baby's face, rises over Teletubbyland and the four Tubbies emerge from their dome shaped hillock at the behest of a giant windmill and they watch a short film [twice] on one of the TV sets on their stomachs. The Tubbies then do a dance or play a game before a voice trumpet announces that it's "time for tubby bye-bye."

The British television phenomena of the late 1990s was the Teletubbies, a massive commercial success all over the world, together with a huge merchandising franchise, the teletubbies always came along with controversy. Due to the fact that the aliens used a strange baby language, which people were concerned would confuse children and at worst influence them not to take properly.

Despite this kids loved the show and so did many adults who joined in when watching the shows with their children. When the series was first shown in the US it was classed as having Gay tendencies due to the way the Teletubbies spoke and acted towards each other. The show has been ridiculed by most of the adult community, but despite this the show was a major success. Despite having a small budget the show is surprisingly produced well for what it is.

Various famous voices joined in for the cast including Tim Whitnall (MIKE AND ANGELO), Eric Sykes and Paula Wilcox (QUATERMASS). Script supervisor was Mary Pyke, Music was by Bob Hartley, designer was Alex Clarke, head of production was Sue James, the producer was Anne Wood.

A special 25 episodes entitled Teletubbies Advent Calender, was broadcast approaching Chritmass 1999, on BBC2 after the usual 10am broadcast of the show.

Cheaper than drugs, though probably not much safer, Teletubbies was the childrens TV phenomenon of the 90s. It's difficult to comprehend the fuss a childrens TV show can generate when irate parents fail to grasp what it is that appeals to their offspring, a truism that was never more ably demonstrated than in the strange case of the Teletubbies. The relentless repetition was all part of the charm and the lack of any real explanation for what we were watching made it the most surreal kid vid since the hey day of The Magic Roundabout. Why did the sparkly windmill inspire a Tubby frenzy? Why has the sun got the face of a manic, giggling baby? What on earth is that Hoover, Noo Noo, doing there? And just what are the Teletubbies anyway? Answers were rarely forthcoming but it hardly mattered. Teletubbies is fabulously weird entertainment for anyone of any age - a true psychedelic classic!

TERMINATOR : THE SARAH CONNOR CHRONICLES

AKA: THE SARAH CONNOR CHRONICLES (working title)

Prompted by the return of the Terminators into their lives, Sarah and John decide to stop running and focus on stopping the birth of Skynet. They are aided by Cameron, a Terminator who poses as a student at John's school and whose mission is to protect John. Meanwhile, FBI Agent James Ellison pursues Sarah and John with the belief that Sarah is deranged.

On November 9, 2005, Variety reported that a television series based on the Terminator franchise is being produced by C2 Pictures, which produced Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines, in association with Warner Bros. Television. Fox Broadcasting Company had also joined the project by making a commitment to the pilot with Josh Friedman set to write the pilot and to serve as an executive producer for the series. Among the executive producers are C2 Pictures' Andy Vajna, Mario Kassar and James Middleton.

The series, initially titled The Sarah Connor Chronicles, will focus on the character Sarah Connor, who is on the run with her son after the events of Terminator 2: Judgment Day. Regarding the character, Middleton says, "She has the weight of the world on her shoulders and also has to raise a teenage son who may be the salvation of humanity." Friedman comments that the series will contain fewer action sequences due to the smaller budget of television in contrast to feature films.

Fox Broadcasting greenlit production on August 28, 2006, after Warner Bros. Television hired David Nutter to direct the pilot. The series was among seven new TV shows picked up by Fox on May 13, 2007 for its 2007-08 television season.

In a June 20, 2007 interview, Friedman said the show will avoid the "Terminator of the Week" plot device and that Sarah, John, and Cameron will have other threats than just Terminators. Skynet will also come into play as the series progresses. Furthermore, Friedman stated that the events of Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines occur in an alternate timeline from that of the TV series. In addition to having planned the entire story arc for the first season, Friedman has a rough idea for the plot of the following three seasons.

At the 2007 summer Television Critics Association press tour, Fox Entertainment Chairman Peter Liguori said that certain aspect of the pilot, involving a Terminator posing as a teacher attacking John at school, would be changed following the shooting at Virginia Tech.

The casting process of the series took 16 weeks during which the producers auditioned actors not only from America but also from Australia, Canada, and England. Over 300 actresses auditioned for the role of Sarah Connor, the heroine of the Terminator series.[citation needed] Series creator Josh Friedman described the actress he was looking for was someone "who embodied that spirit and who was believable in that role and not just some glammed up, Hollywood, actressy thing". After a friend recommended English actress Lena Headey for the role, Friedman watched her audition tape, and thought she was "a tough, tough woman". Headey was officially cast on November 7, 2006.

On December 7, 2006, the actor cast in the role of 15-year-old John Connor was announced to be Thomas Dekker. Regarding the Terminator films, Dekker says, "They are like my favorite films when I was younger. So it's very ironic that I'm getting to do this. And I know for the younger generation and for myself, John was equally important to me as Sarah was, and I know a lot of the people that I hear from really, really care about John."

The remaining two principal cast members of the series, Richard T. Jones and Summer Glau, were announced in January 2007 and February 2007 respectively. Jones likens his character, an FBI agent, to that of Tommy Lee Jones in The Fugitive. Moreover, he is allowed to improvise a few lines to provide "a little bit of comic relief" to the show. Unlike Dekker, Glau had not seen the Terminator films prior to being cast as Cameron Phillips, whose role in the series was initially kept concealed but was later revealed to be a Terminator sent from the future to protect John. Friedman had previously wanted to cast Glau in a pilot he wrote four years prior to The Sarah Connor Chronicles but she was already committed to Serenity. Glau admitted she felt "intimidated" by the role because the character is comprised of both human and robot characteristics.

The role of Cromartie, a Terminator sent back to kill John Connor, first went to Owain Yeoman, who appeared in the pilot. The trade press reported on September 24, 2007, that Garret Dillahunt has joined the show in that same role.

TERRAHAWKS

The format was familiar enough. In the year 2020, a crack fighting force, the Terrahawks, are dedicated to saving Earth from attack by an evil intergalactic adversary - in this case Zelda, the witch-queen of Guk. An android with a face like a pickled chestnut and a horrible harridan's cackle, Zelda was assisted by her equally ugly cronies, inept son Yung-Star and bitchy sister Cy-Star .

Heading the Terrahawks was Dr Tiger Ninestein, one of nine clones created from an American-Austrian professor called Gerhard Stein. On his team were daredevil pilot Mary Falconer, pop-singer/pilot Kate Kestrel, Japanese computer genius Lt: Hiro, and Lt. Hawkeye, an American athlete with computer-assisted eyesight. They were aided by a battalion of silver spherical robots called Zeroids, commanded by Sgt. Major Zero.

From their secret base, Hawknest, in South America, the Terrahawks foiled every dastardly plot and fiendish monster that Zelda could throw at them.

And these being the `sophisticated' 1980s, it was all done with plenty of tongue-in-cheek humour. Sgt. Major Zero was played by Windsor Davies in his fruitiest It Ain't Half Hot, Mum voice and there was a nod to the pink star of Thunderbirds with Hudson, a posh-talking Rolls-Royce, which drove itself and changed colour with its moods.

Terrahawks was Gerry Anderson's return to puppetry after his forays into live-action TV. And, 14 years on from 1969's The Secret Service, Anderson coined a new word for a new sophisticated technique - Supermacromation. These puppets had no strings attached. Deployed at a cost of £5m for the first 26 episodes, the Terrahawks were packed with advanced electronics and operated by hand - in some cases, more than one pair.

Despite its impressive array of hardware and some imaginative baddies, Terrahawks relied too much on elements from series past, but without ever coming close to re-creating their charm. It did run for three seasons on ITV, between 1983 and 1986.

Using more advanced puppets than in all his SuperMarionation series, with more electronic movements built in, this was the last of Anderson's SF puppet series for children, made after he had been working for some years with live-action tv (> SPACE: 1999). The Terrahawks are an elite special force who must save Earth from the depredations of Zelda, the Android witch-queen of Guk. To help, they have the silver Robots the Zeroids, commanded by Sgt Major Zero, who has a funny Sgt-Major voice. Most of the old Anderson ingredients are shuffled about in this attack-from-space series, but the results are tired and self-parodic.

The series producers were Gerry Anderson and Christopher Burr, associate producer was Bob Bell, the music was created by Richard Harvey and the special effects designer was Stephen Begg. The main writer for the series was Tony Barwick, but other did include Gerry Anderson. Nearly all episodes written under an assortment of feline pseudonyms, such as Cubby Dreistien, Kit Tenstein, Koo Garstien, T.I. Gerstein, Effie Linestein, Claude Backstein and other puns, including Sheik Spearstein, Manny Pheakstein and Sue Donymstein.

3 - 10 TIME WARP

Mary barely escapes the destruction of Spacehawk and arrives on Earth just in time to witness the bombing of Hawknest and the death of Ninestien. She wakes up, her experience apparently a dream, but little does she know that she was merely the first victim of Lord Tempo's "timebomb", which soon finds a more suitable host in the form of Zero. Zero's inferior will power prevents him from resisting the timebomb, and it spreads through all of the Terrahawks's electronic systems, creating a possibly fatal time delay which Zelda capitilizes on.

3 - 11 OPERATION ZERO

Zero has a malfunction when he is put under the knife for an operation. He experiences a nightmare beyond his comprehension as Zelda finally infiltrates Hawknest, whilst Tiger and Mary experience an identity crisis.

Wr Tony Barwick

Dir Tony Bell

3 - 12 THE SPORILLA

Crystal, Hawkeye, and Ninestien travel to the distant moon Calisto to reapiir a tracking station, but instead must face Zelda's deadly Sporilla.

Wr Donald James

THEY CAME FROM SOMEWHERE ELSE

It wasn't quite a sitcom, neither was it sketch comedy. It plundered soap opera, SF adventure, gory low-budget horror and surreal comedy ranging from the gentle to the viciously black to produce an affectionate send-up.

The setting was the present-day new town of Middleford which was transformed into a living nightmare with the arrival of an American stranger. Innocent shoppers are sucked down drains, giant prawns stalk the sewers, goldfish attack their owners, sofas consume policewomen, it rains liver.

Six-part science fiction comedy series written and performed by a Brighton theatre group who adapted it from their own stage show. They Came From Somewhere Else came from TVS, but showed up on Channel Four. The series was produced by John Dale. The series was set in the fictional town of Middleford which was actually Milton Keynes.

THIRD ROCK FROM THE SUN

3rd Rock from the Sun is a sitcom about an alien intelligence-gathering team sent to Earth to learn about our planet. The aliens look nothing like us and have adopted human form in order to fit in (we never see their true form!) The aliens take on human forms and identities and form something of a dysfunctional family. The expedition and 'family' is headed by Dick, the egotistical high commander. Under him are: Sally who is a highly trained military officer who resents the fact that she had to take the woman's form. Tommy a top intelligence officer who back home was one of Dick's elders. but on Earth he has taken the form of an adolescent boy. The fourth and final member of the expedition to Earth is Harry, a man who is something of a dim bulb even when compared to the others in his party.

Unlike other television aliens who come to Earth the aliens in 3rd Rock from the Sun have no unique abilities or alien super powers to set them apart from the rest of mankind. Their original mission was to come to Earth and after taking on human form learn about our society. They are all terribly naive about human customs and much of the comedy the show sets out to generate comes from this. They are all also extremely stupid, although they can be forgiven for not knowing about the ways of our society they also tend to be ignorant of many other things. The mission was supposed to have been a relatively short one, however Dick decided to lengthen it for personal reasons. After landing on Earth he somehow manages to get a job as a professor at a university in Ohio. There he meets Dr. Mary Albright, an attractive middle-aged woman who is also a professor there. He immediately gets the hots for her and decides to stay on Earth to pursue her. She however thinks he is really strange and does not really want anything to do with him.

If you want to make some wry observations about the human condition, and throw in a few laughs along the way, just make an alien on Earth' sitcom. Every decade should have at least one - in the Sixties it was the homespun philosophies of My Favourite Martian, in the Seventies the frenetic ad-libbing of Robin Williams in Mork and Mindy, while the Eighties saw fit to leave the wisecracks to a furry puppet in Alf.

Now for the Nineties we have 3rd Rock from the Sun, described by its creators, Saturday Night Live's Bonnie and Terry Turner, as 'Carl Sagan meets the Marx Brothers'. That sounds thoroughly pretentious, but really 3rd Rock is fun, in a predictably dumb sort of way, with some smart one-liners and good performances, particularly from John Lithgow. He stars as the high commander of a quartet of extra-terrestrial explorers who assume the guise of an 'ordinary' American family.

The series was shown on NBC in the US and was first premiered in the UK on Satellite broadcaster Sky One, with BBC 2 following suit several months afterwards. Kate & Allie star Jane Curtin shares top billing as the straight woman - she's Dick's office mate and love interest. Completing the regulars are Elmarie Wendel as the Solomons' eccentric landlady and Simbi Khali as Dick's secretary.

Due to scheduling between high rated sitcoms 3rd Rock from the Sun has managed to obtain decent ratings prompting NBC to renew the series. Despite the fact that most other shows of this calibre get cancelled after only a few weeks. The series was first shown in the UK on Sky One on the 19th April 1996, the series has also been seen on BBC2.

Executive producers for the series were Bonnie Turner, Terry Turner, Caryn Mandabach, Marcey Carsey, Tom Werner, Linwood Boomer, Joe Fisch. Music was by Ben Vaughan. Another semi-regular guest star for the show was child actress Larisa Oleynik who played the title role in the SF children's show THE SECRET WORLD OF ALEX MACK.

Wayne Knight, who plays Officer Don, has starred in numerous big films, including, Born of the Fourth of July, JFK, Basic Instinct, Space Jam and Toy Story 2, as well as his role in American sitcom Seinfeld. Simbi Khali has appeared on stage in Colored Museum, For Colored Girls. . . , A Midsummer Night's Dream and Trolius and Cressida. Her future film work includes A Vampire in Brooklyn, A Thin Line Between Love and Hate and Plump Fiction. Elmarie Wendel in addition to her stage work has been in the feature films Going Under, The Immortalizers, Transplant and Rumpelstiltskin.

Season Five: According to executive producer Terry Turner "Vicki (Jan Hooks) is having the Big Giant Head's baby, and it will pass for human" (at least as a baby, it won't need a hairpiece!). Dick's escapades include developing a fondness for swearing and taking on an insurance company after a car smash while Harry discovers what it is like to go on the dole. David Hasselhoff is set to guest star in one episode, but don't let that put you off!

1 - 13 DICKS THEY ARE A CHAGIN'

Harry joins a CD club and finds the responsibilities of membership overwhelming. When Nina tells Dick that Stanford has no graduate records on him and Dick reacts defensively, Dr. Albright observes that it's virtually impossible to get a straight answer from Dick about his past. As Dr. Albright reminisces about her wild, rebellious times at Berkeley and Mrs. Dubcek contributes some colorful recollections, Dick chides Tommy that, as information officer, he failed to brief the crew on the crucial sixties decade. Dr. Albright becomes convinced that Dick is actually Manny Rosenberg, a sixties activist whom she knew briefly and who has been in hiding from the FBI for decades. Dick denies this but soon realizes that his presumed identity has somehow made him more attractive to Dr. Albright. Later, at Dr. Albright's apartment, Dick thinks that they'll at last be having sex, but Dr. Albright angrily reveals that she and Manny had an upsetting encounter that she still hasn't gotten over, and she asks Dick to leave. But they share a warm moment afterward with confessions that they both used Dick's "Manny" identity to serve their own ends.

Wr Michael Glouberman, Andrew Orenstein

Dir Robert Berlinger

1 - 14 ASSUALT WITH A DEADLY DICK

After visiting the mall, the Solomons' car radio is stolen. Reporting the crime to the police doesn't get the radio back, but Sally does find some common ground with a police officer. Dick enjoys his new ATM card until he's mugged at the ATM machine and Sally starts to implement security measures. Dick orders Tommy to join the Basketball team, but he just isn't cut out for it.

Wr Michael Glouberman, Andrew Orenstein

1 - 15 DICK LIKE ME

The Solomons discover that everyone on Earth has roots but them. During a chat with Tommy's teacher Mr. Randell, Dick learns that the teenage isn't "fitting in" at school. "Of course I'm not fitting in," snaps Tommy, "to fit in, you have to be something." The question is, what to be? Dick grabs an anthropology book for the answer. "It's loaded with every possible genre of human," he marvels. "It's like a catalogue. We can take our pick." Dick picks the Italians because, according to a swooning Dr. Albright, they're the sexist people on the planet. Meanwhile, Sally's swooning, too -- for Mr. Randell.

Wr Joe Fisch

Dir Robert Berlinger

1 - 16 I ENJOY BEING A DICK

Dick dons a dress to infiltrate Dr. Albright's women-only study group, Sally and Harry get jobs at a pancake restaurant and Tommy ponders telling August the truth about where he comes from.

Wr Christine Zander

Dir Robert Berlinger

1 - 17 FORZEN DICK

A snowstorm -- the Solomons' first -- spoils Dr. Albright's trip to Chicago, leaving her stranded in a truck stop with Dick.

Wr Linwood Boomer

Dir Robert Berlinger

1 - 18 SELFISH DICK

The ever-present influence of television turns the Solomons' first trip to a hospital into a madcap exercise in fantasy versus reality. After Mrs. Dubcek cuts her finger, and the sight of blood leave Sally unconscious, Harry and Tommy rush them to the hospital, where the smell of sterile corridors and the gleam of surgical scrubs remind the aliens of the exciting work of their favorite TV doctors -- work that they practice on several unsuspecting patients. Meanwhile, Dick has work issues of his own when Dr. Albright finally gets her long-coveted private office.

Wr David Sacks

1 - 19 FATHER KNOWS DICK

Dick decides the reason Harry's "odd" is because he lacks a father, and sets out nurture the suddenly rebellious Harry -- who then learns that he has a "thing" in his head, a communications device the others knew about all along. Meanwhile, sparks fly when Sally meets the hostile mother of her boyfriend.

Wr Bob Kushell

Dir Robert Berlinger

1 - 20 SEE DICK RUN

Dick cuts up at a Japanese restaurant, but the big news is that he's there with Dr. Albright, who has finally agreed to date him. But just as they finally consummate their attraction, Harry receives bad news from the home planet: Dick has been replaced by a less benign duplicate, who traps him in the basement and takes charge of Dr. Albright.

Wr Bill Martin, Mike Schiff

Dir James Burrows

2 - 1 SEE DICK CONTINUE TO RUN (2 PARTS)

While Dick is trapped in the basement, Evil Dick begins a plan to impregnate all women in Ohio.

Wr Bill Martin, Mike Schiff

Dir Robert Berlinger

2 - 2 HOTEL DICK

Aghast at the treatment of aliens in a hit science fiction movie, the Solomons attend a science fiction convention to try to set the record straight -- and Sally's first experience of hotels get her hooked on room service.

Wr Bob Kushell

Dir Robert Berlinger

2 - 3 THE BIG ANGRY VIRGIN FROM OUTER SPACE

Relationships are in jeopardy: Sally and Mr. Randall are fighting, and Dick suggests that sex will solve their problem; Harry goes on a video blind date; and August tests Tommy's loyalty.

Wr Christine Zander

Dir Robert Berlinger

2 - 4 MUCH ADO ABOUT DICK

When Albright is afraid to be seen with Dick in public as a couple, the Solomons discover the human obsession with what other people think. In the end, Dick and Albright come out with their relationship at a faculty party. Meanwhile, sparks once again fly when Sally runs into Officer Don and decides she is going to be a cop, but Dick forbids it; and Tommy is frustrated by not having transportation.

3 - 8 TOM, DICK AND MARY

Tommy tells Dick he'd really like to meet a woman closer to his real age, say someone like Angie Dickinson. Sally says it's time for her to go out and look for a real job. Dick thinks Harry's watching far too much television and orders him to give it up for a week. Tommy goes to Mary's to return her magnifying glass that Dick has broken, and Mary observes how immature Dick is. They start talking and are immediately engrossed in a discussion about the Aztecs. Their mutual attraction is obvious. Sally is hired as an assistant by Webber, a man who's very impressed by her appearance and couldn't care less about her lack of typing skills. Dick is wild with curiosity when Mary has a lunch date with a mystery man named Tom. August tries to resume her relationship with Tommy, but he tells her he's seeing someone.

Tommy asks Dick if he's still interested in Mary, and Dick pretends he couldn't care less; Tommy couldn't be happier. Sally likes her new job, but she's already been advised that she must learn to respect her co-workers. She takes this advice so seriously that when her boss starts hitting on her, she somehow thinks she's at fault. She goes to see Nina who quickly explains that her new boss is a creep and she's the one being harassed. Dick shows up and begs Nina to tell him who Mary's been seeing; Sally tells him that right now Tommy's at Mary's house. Dick rushes to Mary's and confronts Tommy who tells him that this is the happiest he's been since he arrived on this planet. He tells Dick that it's too late, that Dick already gave him the all clear. He tells Dick to leave or he'll call the cops. Sally threatens Webber with violence, and she loses her job. Dick shows up at Mary's again and starts fighting with Tommy over Mary. Mary tells Dick to grow up, but after putting up a good fight, Tommy tells Dick that he can have Mary back. Mary has no idea what's going on and is even more puzzled when Tommy tells her there's no hope for their relationship.

3 - 13 36! 24! 36! DICK (A 2 PART STORY)

Venusians disguised as gorgeous babes plot to plunder Earth of its riches in an uproarious episode that climaxes at Super Bowl XXXII in San Diego. When hordes of beautiful women start showing up in sleepy Rutherford, Ohio -- and seem enthusiastic about dating average Joes like Dick, Harry, Tommy, and Officer Don - Sally suspects that something's amiss. Before she can warn anyone that the women are really Venusians bent on dominating Earth, they discover her and force her to become one of them. The Solomon men embark on a country-wide search for Sally that ends at the Super Bowl, where the lethal lovelies have planned to unleash their most devastating weapon yet -- the ultimate beer commercial, designed to enslave mankind into coughing up the rest of their pricey consumer goods. In the supervixens' lair, the Solomon men seem defeated, but with the help of Sally, who only pretended to turn against them, and Venusian Mascha [Cindy Crawford], who's been won over by Harry's simple charms, Dick and company jam the commercial broadcast, explode the mother ship, and convince the supervixens that a career in modeling might suit them. Meanwhile, Albright and Nina's plans to attend the Super Bowl are thwarted when the Solomons steal their tickets to gain access to the Venusians, and back in Rutherford, Officer Don throws a decidedly low-key Super Bowl party.

3 - 16 PORTRAIT OF TOMMY AS AN OLD MAN

Tommy, tired of having to handle all of the "kid" duties [when in reality he's the oldest member of the mission], decides to retire. After he spends some time at a retirement home, he changes his mind, realizing that a big part of what makes you old is acting -- and being treated - like your old. Dick, thinking that Mary is anguished because she never got a chance to fulfill her fantasy of becoming a torch singer, tries to help her to realize that dream. He learns that sometimes the choices we make between two career paths can be right on the money. 3 - 19 JUST YOUR AVERAGE DICK (A 2 PART STORY)

John Cleese puts his zaniness to good use in a two-part guest shot as a new professor who's even nuttier than Dick. And smarter. He's hotshot Dr. Liam Neesam, and he's a little too good at everything he does. He makes his first appearance in Part 1, as Albright (Curtin) is getting fed up with the fact that Dick -- and the rest of the Solomons, for that matter -- are "weird." "It's like being around the Addams Family," she moans. So Dick sets out to make his brood "average," and succeeds so completely that Albright finds him boring. 3 - 20 EAT, DRINK, DICK, MARY

The Solomons wind up their third season -- and perhaps their mission on Earth -- with a romantic dinner party that turns predictably raucous. The chef is Tommy, who has just "come out" as a gourmet. The guests: Dick and Mary, Don and Sally and Harry and Mrs. Dubcek's amorous daughter Vicki, who is back in his life. The trouble is, Vicki's jealous ex-boyfriend is hot on her trail. He's also hot to "put a hurt" on the competition and kidnaps Harry just before he transmits a message from the Big Giant Head. 3 - 22 SALLY AND DON'S FIRST KISS

Sally turns to romance novels for inspiration when it's time for her first kiss with Officer Don. Unfortunately, whether they try it on a windy, moonlit bluff or in the Solomons' kitchen, the kiss just isn't special enough. Sally becomes resigned to breaking up with Don, but when she goes to the police stable to tell him, the magical combination of horses, thunder, lightning, and Don's newfound forcefulness combine to make Sally realize Don's the guy for her after all. Dick is perturbed because Lucy the cafeteria lady charges him -- and only him -- for crackers. Realizing he has no control over her inexplicable dislike for him allows him to free himself from being bothered by her unjust treatment. Harry graduates from night school, and he and fellow classmates Mrs. DeGuzman and Larry reminisce about all the great times they had together during their ten-week enrollment.

3 - 23 WHEN ALIENS CAMP

Dick takes the family camping as a mission bonding activity. At the campsite, the family and Mary all become angry with Dick -- the family because he lies about bringing Mary along after he tells them it's "family only," and Mary because he tells her the family doesn't mind she's coming along. After they all cast him out, Dick goes off by himself and attempts to form a new society with a troop of Beaver Scouts he encounters. The Solomons assume Dick is lost and set out to find him. They (especially Sally, who resents her command being usurped) initially reject Mary's offers of help in finding Dick... until they realize she knows a lot more about the outdoors than they do.

3 - 24 THE TOOTH HARRY

Mary is asked to appear in a new Pendelton University promotional video. Dick whines until he is also allowed to participate. Unfortunately, neither of them shares the director's vision of what their "performances" should be like, and they are unceremoniously replaced by other "actors" (including Tommy). Harry volunteers to drive Nina to the dentist. A romance develops, but fizzles when the money Harry leaves under Nina's pillow as a Tooth Fairy reward is misinterpreted, and Nina, highly offended, throws him out. Officer Don gives Sally a key to his apartment, but his glee soon turns to gloom when she starts seeing the place as less of a love nest and more of a one-woman party zone that she can trash whenever she wants to. When Don calls her attention to her inconsiderate behavior, she apologizes -- but he still takes back his key.

4 - 4 COLLECT CALL FOR DICK

After Dick almost bites into a "Fuzzy Buddy" in a fast-food restaurant burger, he becomes obsessed with the collectibles. Meanwhile, Tommy goes overboard on school spirit when he becomes the basketball team's mascot. The Solomons confront the collector mentality when they discover Fuzzy Buddies -- highly collectible small plush animal toys. Sally enjoys the thrill of the hunt and the prospects for financial rewards, Harry just thinks they're cute, but for Dick it's deeper -- he enjoys the sensation of collecting until it gets to be like a drug for him, and his family and friends have to do an intervention. In an effort to instill "pep" into Tommy, the basketball coach forces him to become the team mascot, "Hootie the Owl." Initially contemptuous, Tommy finds that folks (especially cute cheerleaders) dig him when he's in costume, and the power goes to his head. When the team loses, Tommy, high on school spirit, tackles the coach, landing him in the principal's office.

4 - 5 WHAT'S LOVE GOT TO DO, GO TO DO WITH DICK

Dick, frustrated because busy dean Mary never seems to have time for him, finds himself increasingly enchanted with his new officemate, Jennifer. Confused by his feelings, he vows to resist the attraction, but it's too much for him -- they kiss. Sally tries to fix Nina up with Don's friend Eric, then takes it as a personal insult when it doesn't turn out to be a love match. She schemes to bring them back together, but the only passion she manages to ignite between them is their rabid dislike for each other -- hardly a satisfying victory for Sally. 4 - 6 I AM DICK PENTAMETER!

Dick tells Mary he thinks they should see other people, and she laughingly agrees, not knowing he already has a candidate lined up--new officemate Jennifer. Dick is fascinated by Jennifer's intoxicating giggle, her adorable penchant for rhyming, and the brave way she copes with her numerous food allergies. Just as a furious Albright learns of Dick's new dalliance, he begins to grow less and less enchanted with Jennifer's eccentricities (particularly the rhyming), and to regret ever having ended things with Mary. The idea intrigues Sally, who decides to pose---which infuriates Don, who chooses to cancel his lifetime subscription. As for Dick, he encourages Sally, but becomes apoplectic when he learns that Mary posed for art photos 20 years before. And Harry? He simply takes off his clothes. 4 - 9 HAPPY NEW DICK

As the New Year approaches, Dick is in despair because he feels he hasn't accomplished anything all year. Meanwhile, Don gives Sally a necklace, then earrings, for Christmas but she wants more. Dick, pondering the significance of New Year's Eve, fears that he's done nothing of consequence in 1998. When he mistakenly thinks it's midnight a few minutes early, he embraces Mary and dances with her in the snow -- a perfect moment that he later realizes was not only his most meaningful act of 1998, but also a lovely way to start 1999. Harry hires Larry and Mrs. DeGuzman to work at Happy Doug's Bar with him, but they're both so dang lazy, he fires them both on New Year's Eve. Officer Don gets upset that Sally takes advantage of his nice-guy nature, and he lays down the law -- her cutesy, little-girl cajoling will no longer work on him. Sally realizes that with her feminine appeal comes a great deal of responsibility for using it benevolently, and she vows to do better in the New Year. The Big Giant Head grants Sally's three-year-old request for a "gender reassignment" - and switches her body with Dick's. Meanwhile, Harry takes over Happy Doug's bar while Doug is on vacation. Responding to a three-year-old request from Sally that she be given a male body, the Big Giant Head switches Sally's body with Dick's. Each of them has to cope with all the thorny details of gender reassignment, including such specifics as how to deal with men's catcalls, and where to find cute shoes in Dick's size. Plus, each of them has to successfully maintain the other's romantic relationship. They each get as far as a kiss, but before things go any further, their request to switch back is granted, leaving them both far more knowledgeable about what it's like to be a member of the opposite sex. Also, vacationing Doug leaves

But acquiring an extended family proves to have its drawbacks when Dick, Sally Harry and Tommy go to Indiana with Mary to meet their new relatives and discover the reason why the real Richard Solomon dropped out of sight 43 years ago. While Harry immediately clicks with crotchety Uncle Abe, Cousin Jacob is decidedly frosty to Dick. 4 - 12 DICK AND TAXES

After three years on the planet, the Solomons finally learn about an organization called the IRS. They also learn that they owe it $9500. What to do? Dick's idea: "We can lie." Dick's never paid taxes, and after trying to fill out the forms himself, he enlists Mary's help. When he sees how much he owes, he decides to be the only American ever to think of the brilliant idea of cheating on his taxes. When Dick gets an audit notice, Tommy has to fudge an explanation for what each family member has been doing for the past six years. The auditor, however, doesn't buy any of it -- even the "we're aliens" defense, which he's heard before. The Solomons agree to pay their hefty tax bill, and thank their lucky stars their true identities are still a secret. As part of the tax deception, Sally pretends she had a failed home business -- a hair salon -- but when she puts up the sign, women start pouring in. When Sally tells Officer Don she can't take living with Dick, Harry, and Tommy anymore, he assumes that she wants him to propose. Sally realizes, however, that what she really wants is to start living as an independent woman, and they tearfully break off their engagement. When Dick has a tenant-landlord dispute with the Dubceks, he casts Harry out of the family for consorting with the enemy. The situation escalates to the point where Dick, frozen and filthy, is reduced to squatting in his apartment without benefit of heat or lights. The feud ends when Dick realizes he was so preoccupied that he didn't pay attention to an important milestone in Sally's life -- her all-too-brief engagement. 4 - 17 Y2DICK

Dick, who's never figured out computers, decides it's time to get plugged in. He discovers e-mail and the internet, and withdraws completely from the physical world, relying on take-out food, chat rooms, and live video feeds, and shutting out people, fresh air, and sunlight. When Mary tries to drag him away, he knocks over a Big Gulp cup, shorting out his system. Venturing outside to find the fuse box, Dick realizes that his computer wasn't keeping him connected to the world -- it was keeping him separated. Sally and Tommy go to buy a new TV set, but the more they learn about the available technology, the less satisfied they are with each purchase they make, until they've upgraded themselves into near-bankruptcy. Sadder but wiser, they return their expensive audiovisual equipment to the store. Also, Harry's all for trying to have a baby with Vicki, until the whole medical-science part of it makes it impossible for him to get in the mood. He tells Vicki it's the natural way or no way, and, turned on by his primal-ness, she agrees.

4 - 18 DICK THE MOUTH SOLOMON

Sally meets a suave Italian-American man at a restaurant. He woos her, and when she learns he goes by the name of Sammy "The Butcher" Marchetti, she and Tommy are thrilled because they assume he's a mobster. Sammy asks Tommy to run errands for him, and Tommy's excited to be working as -- he assumes -- a bag man for the Mob. When Sally and Tommy learn that Sam's not actually a Mafioso but a real butcher, his appeal fades, and they both lose interest in him. Mary, concerned that she and Dick need to work on their communication skills, convinces him to go to a couples retreat. To her dismay, her good intentions get turned around as everyone there -- including Harry and Vicki, the poster children for public displays of affection -- embraces Dick for his openness, and criticizes Mary for her emotional unavailability.

4 - 19 CITIZEN SOLOMON

Now that Sally's moved out and won't clean for them anymore, the male Solomons decide that it's time to get a maid. They hire Mary's cleaning woman, Cathy, an inscrutable woman who makes their place sparkle. Overwhelmed by the results, the Solomons begin thinking of Cathy less as help and more as a treasured family member -- despite the fact that Cathy gives them no encouragement to do so. Meanwhile, Sally, jealous of the guys' affection for Cathy, decides that she'll turn the tables -- if Cathy can "steal" Sally's family, Sally can steal Cathy's. Finally, Cathy, tired of the Solomons' intrusion into her private life, quits. Also, Tommy joins the staff of the school paper and is made editor, displaying a penchant for unearthing scandals both real and imagined. Busy with his new duties, Tommy assigns ex-girlfriend August to review Alissa in "My Fair Lady." August's review is unflattering but honest, and Tommy, true to his journalistic ideals, decides to run it. When confronted by a tearful Alissa, however, Tommy buckles, shifting blame to his "biased" ex-girlfriend's desire to destroy his happiness.

4 - 20 ALIEN HUNTER

A mysterious woman, Charlotte, turns up in Dick's life, claiming first to be auditing his class, then to be writing an article about him, then to be an "intellectual groupie." She charms Sally, Tommy, and Harry, who are happy to oblige when she offers to help plan the surprise birthday party that Dick has demanded they throw him. Dick is too busy having his ego stroked, and the family is too busy being grateful for her help, to wonder what Charlotte's real story is -- which they regret when they learn she's an alien hunter, come to dissect Dick's brain with the help of her hulking son, Ned. Although Charlotte's called all the invitees to tell them the party's canceled, they begin showing up anyway, interrupting the skull-cutting process. Ned ties them all up in Mrs. Dubcek's basement. Sally, Harry, Tommy, Don, and the others run upstairs just as the FBI arrives to capture Charlotte, a well-known crackpot who has mistakenly thought any number of innocent citizens to be aliens. Dick's faculty nemesis, Dr. Vincent Strudwick, writes a physics book that's hailed as a work of genius. When Dick realizes that writing a better book would expose him as a superior alien being, he seeks another means of getting even, finally seizing on Strudwick's displeasure at learning that his teenage daughter Alissa is dating dreaded Solomon spawn Tommy. Dick manipulates Alissa to cause trouble between her and her father, and the conflict comes to a head at the taping of a TV panel show about Strudwick's book, which erupts into Jerry Springer-style fisticuffs. Meanwhile, Sally and Don, feeling "lonely" since their breakup, find themselves succumbing to "ex sex." 4 - 22 NEAR DICK EXPERIENCE

When Sally, Harry, and Tommy narrowly miss being crushed by a chandelier at a restaurant, their near-death experience fills them with a new reverence for life -- and fills Dick with jealousy that he wasn't able to share this deep experience. The newly enlightened trio volunteers at a soup kitchen for the homeless, and Dick signs up for a wilderness hiking trip with Mary, hoping like the dickens that he'll lose his footing and find serenity via a near-death experience of his own. While Dick is trying desperately to have his own near-miss with death, the others learn that their new appreciation for every leaf, every bird, and every fellow man is fading rapidly with the passage of every hour. Sally, Tommy, and Harry have just about returned to being their blasé, uncaring selves just as Dick joins them on the roof, bursting with news about how he's just managed to escape death's clutches in a car accident. 4 - 23 DICK'S BIG GIANT HEADACHE (A 2 PART STORY)

The Big Giant Head announces his plans to visit the Solomons in person to chastise them for their poor mission performance. Dick tells Sally to move back in, orders Harry to stop trying to father a baby with Vicki, and tries to prepare Mary for the arrival of his old "college chum," worrying privately that the supreme leader might not find her to have been a suitable use of his time. The family goes to the airport to meet the Big Giant Head (William Shatner), a drunken good-time charlie who's taken the name of "Stone Phillips," and who, in short order, moves in and takes over their lives. Dick quickly loses favor with Stone, who's unimpressed both by his choice of girlfriend and his leadership skills. Stone is, however, quite taken by everything about Sally, especially the length of her legs and the shape of her torso, and decides to make her the High Commander instead of Dick. Meanwhile, Harry keeps trying to avoid Vicki, but eventually he tells her that they need to cool the baby thing for a while, and she runs away from him in tears. Also, although he's initially unenthusiastic, Tommy plans to attend the junior prom because it's so important to Alissa. Tommy can't decide where to go to college, and Dick is really pushing Pendleton: when it's all said and done, Princeton and Pendleton both serve fish sticks. Dick says he'll give Tommy a personal tour of the campus. Harry wants to go too but the other aliens remind him that he's not going to college. Meanwhile, Sally's upset that Don's not included in a newspaper article on Rutherford's ten most powerful men; she can't fathom how this is possible. Sally says maybe she's let Don down; maybe she hasn't thrust greatness upon him. It's time to rebuild him into the powerhouse he's never dreamed of being. On campus, Mary tries to help Dick recruit Tommy, but Tommy just wants to sit in on a class. Sally decides to throw a power brunch to turn Don into a success; she invites everyone on the top ten list plus other important townspeople. At the brunch, she wangles an assistant's job for Don with Gus DeMarmel, president of DeMarmel lunchmeat; never mind that Don has absolutely no business experience. Since Don already has a job, Sally tells him to take the night shift and be an assistant during the day shift. After sitting in on only one of Dick's classes, Tommy tells him that he's a terrible teacher, much worse than Tommy imagined. Don starts his assistant's job, and Sally couldn't be more proud. Insulted by Tommy's remarks, Dick says he's forbidden to go to Pendleton. Tommy's delighted, so Dick then informs him that he will, in fact, be going there. Tommy asks Dick what his problem is. Dick's so bad at teaching that Tommy thought he knew. Don is crazed at work when Harry and Sally show up, and he has no time for them. Tommy talks with Mary, and she confesses she feels guilty about trying to recruit him, because Pendleton's a clown college. Harry convinces Sally that Don is blowing her and is now in search of a trophy wife. Sally says she made Don, now she can break him. When Dick proves unsuccessful at teaching some kids to play hopscotch, even Mary agrees that he's a bad teacher. Sally sabotages a project Don's working on, and he gets fired. And when Dick tells Tommy he plans to quit teaching, Tommy reminds him that no matter how good or bad a teacher he is, his real job is to be high commander.

The candidates have materialized in the closet and are ready and waiting. Both aliens are sold on Christie, an extremely efficient young woman, until they meet the incredibly handsome Bryce. Sally's bowled over by Bryce and hires him on the spot.

Harry's upset, but he's quickly overruled. Meanwhile, Dick drops Tommy off at his dorm, and they reminisce about all the missions they've been on together. Sally's loving every minute that Bryce is around, but after Bryce's first day on the job, Dick decides to go get Tommy and bring him back. Tommy's already enjoying college and flirting with girls. Dick arrives and tries to convince Tommy to come home and go to Pendleton if he must go to college, but Tommy says he's not leaving. He does manage to convince Tommy that to impress the girls and really make a name for himself he has to come up with an outrageous freshman prank. Dick convinces him to literally turn the chancellor's office upside down, nailing everything from the filing cabinet to the ficus tree to the ceiling. Dick pulls the fire alarm as a final touch and locks Tommy in the office. At last it hits Tommy that Dick's trying to get him expelled. Back at the apartment, Sally has given up trying to be subtle and is openly hitting on Bryce, who's very uncomfortable. Dick's disappointed when the Chancellor merely issues Tommy a warning for his offense, telling Dick he doesn't want to stifle youthful exuberance and reminiscing fondly about a few of his own college pranks. He even suggests that Tommy might like to meet his daughter. Harry and Bryce confront Sally with the charge of sexual harassment in the workplace. Sally pretends that she's sorry and offers to resign; she heads toward the closet, but at the last second she shoves Bryce in. That evening Dick goes to see Tommy in his dorm room and tells him he's making a big mistake, but Tommy refuses to come home. Dick has to confess that he didn't want Tommy to grow up; Tommy replies that parental love, at its best, is the only love that leads to separation, and Dick realizes that it's time for him to go. The Solomons, without Tommy, are on the roof. Sally and Harry tell Dick that Bryce is gone; he didn't work out. 6 - 8 RED, WHITE & DICK

After attending a football game and observing how enthusiastically the crowd sang "The Star Spangled Banner," Dick observes that humans have a deep love for their country of origin. They'd better get with the program or they'll look very suspicious. He assigns Tommy the study of the documents that created this country. Harry will cover anthems and epic poetry. Sally will do a microfiche search. Harry is put in charge of equality, since clearly it is one of the foundations of this country. Mary contributes that America offers so many freedoms: press, speech, assembly. Her family came over on the Mayflower. Nina says her family came over on a different boat but surely hooked up with Mary's family shortly after they arrived. As equality leader, Harry makes rulings on everything from who gets new shoes to the size of their ice cream sundaes. In class, Dick demands that the students stand up and say the Pledge of Allegiance. Sally is comfortable with the idea that all the aliens treating each other as equals, that decisions are being made for her. Tommy, however, is worried that their losing their individuality. They even address each other as numbers instead of names, and Harry makes a daily equality speech. Dick comments that they all look great in their gray uniforms and high heels. He tells the other aliens that he and Mary are on the same wave length. To Mary it doesn't matter if you're from Sweden or outer space as long as you're and American. At this point Tommy informs Dick that Dick's Canadian: it's on his passport. Tommy thought it would look weird if all four family members were from the same country. How, Dick asks, is he going to tell Mary that she's sleeping with the enemy? Later, Dick tries to engage Mary in conversation about Canada, everything from Celine Dion to Canadian bacon, but she doesn't respond. Meanwhile, the Solomon home is looking a lot like the Soviet Union as Harry, taking his position of power way too seriously, has begun rationing household items. Tommy can't have toilet paper, because today Harry's distributing potatoes. Tommy demands toilet paper, and Harry offers a light bulb. Sally, who has sided with Harry, chastises Tommy when he dares to criticize the system. Dick comes in and tells everyone that they have to help him become an American citizen, but it's determined that he'll have to apply for citizenship. Harry and Sally have become so threatening that Tommy decides the only safe thing is to play the game. He loves America, and he loves Harry! Dick goes to take a citizenship test, but his chances don't look good. Tommy declares a revolution and makes such a moving speech that Harry goes over to his side. The Rutherford Garlic Festival is underway, and hotel rooms are at a premium. Since Dick's gone on the dig, the other aliens decide to rent out his bed. Soon the Solomons' apartment becomes "The Inn at Solomon House" with Tommy and Sally committed to giving their guests outstanding service in hopes of earning four stars in the Crown Travel Guide. Harry's not enthusiastic about the new venture, because he gets to do all the dirty work. At the dig, Dick's disenchanted when Mary gives him a trowel, a brush and an air bulb and tells him to carefully dust the sediment in one square foot of land. Dick grudgingly gets to work and later complains that he's been working five hours and all he's found is a pointy rock. Mary's astonished when she identifies his "pointy rock" as a spear head. She sadly confesses that she's been going on digs for years and has never found anything. She's had to buy the artifacts in her office and has even gotten some from eBay. She says she would have killed to have found the ceremonial wedding moon that Dr. Powell, the leader of the dig, uncovered earlier. Dick tells her not to worry; he's sure she'll find something. Harry's fed up with his new job and resigns; he shows up shortly afterward and wants to register as a hotel guest. If he can't be a guest, he'll write a negative letter to the Crown Travel Guide, so Sally and Tommy reluctantly allow him to register. Harry immediately becomes guest from hell, demanding constant massages and tickets to "Les Mis." Back at the dig, Mary sees little point in continuing, because she's sure she won't find anything, but Dick insists she go on. He slyly plants something where she's been digging, and soon she unearths a wedding moon identical to the one found by Dr. Powell. She's ecstatic until it's revealed that, in fact, it is Dr. Powell's, and she's accused of being a thief. She's furious with Dick, but he assures her he was only trying to make her feel better. Sally can't bear another minute of waiting on Harry hand and foot, so she announces that she too is quitting and will be registering as a guest. Tommy says nothing doing. She adds that one of these days Dick will leave Mary and go back where he came from. Dick immediately decides that he should devote himself to locating his successor, someone worthy who will wait in the wings until Dick has gone. Later, Sally tells Harry that if the psychic talked about Dick's leaving the planet, she must know they're aliens; they have to kill her. Dick takes Mary to a singles bar in search of the perfect replacement, but he acts so strangely that the bartender thinks Mary's a hooker and asks them to leave. Harry and Sally set about hatching wildly unrealistic plots designed to do away with the psychic. Nina tells Dick about Gary Hemmings, a visiting lecturer who's dying to substitute for him. Dick talks with Gary and offers him the chance to replace him; Gary thinks he's being offered a staff position at the University. Gary's a bit puzzled when Dick insists that he meet Mary, saying that if Mary doesn't like him it will never work. Harry and Sally visit the psychic. Harry gets her in a headlock and smears honey on her blouse. Unfortunately, he's forgotten to tell Sally that his plan involves killer bees, so she can't supply them at the crucial moment. Dick, Gary and Mary meet in a restaurant, and Dick embarrasses and puzzles Mary as he attempts to play matchmaker. Harry and Sally re-visit Rita, who wants to throw them out, but they manage to get her to talk about herself, and she confides that she's always pictured herself dying during a passionate night of lovemaking. Harry's not sure he's up to doing the job, and Dick shows up and says he needs to speak to Rita first. He wonders how much time he has left; Harry tells Dick that however much time he has from now on, he's just a temp. Dick tells Gary he has the job and will probably be in the sack with Mary that evening. Gary protests that he won't sleep with Mary to get the job, and Dick says that sleeping with Mary is the job. In that case, Gary, who only wants a chance to teach physics, is having no part of it. When Mary finds out what's been going on, she's afraid that Dick might be dying, but he explains that he was just spooked by what the psychic had to say, and now he's decided he doesn't want to be replaced.

THREE MOONS OVER MILFORD

Three Moons Over Milford is a quirky drama set in a picturesque small town in Southern Vermont. Shortly before the series begins, an asteroid hits the Moon, shattering it into three fragments, threatening to eventually fall to Earth and end life as we know it. Thus, the threat of an eventual "Judgment Day" causes many people to question their lives and live them to extremes: quitting jobs, indulging vices and basically living as if each day were the last.

In a way, there is something reassuring about "Three Moons Over Milford," a slightly off-center but likable dramedy set in a small Vermont town. The premise is that the moon has split into three parts and there is at least the possibility that, at any moment, one of those parts could veer from its orbit and careen into the Earth, pretty much putting an end to any debate over intelligent design.

This, in turn, pushes Milford residents to quash their inhibitions and do things they wouldn't ordinarily do. After all, the next day could be their last.

But think about it. In real life, global warming threatens the planets with species extermination, violent storms and massive flooding. Screwball terrorists, maybe with nuclear weapons, threaten to obliterate large segments of the population. New strains of drug-resistant bacteria could wipe out humanity. In California, geologists predict that the big one is right around the corner. So it is more than a little reassuring to think that, despite all this, there would be no real urgency about life and no cause for alarm except for those three darn moons.

In this eight-episode series from Howard Chesley and Jon Boorstin, Elizabeth McGovern stars as Laura, the pampered and aloof wife of a Bill Gates-style entrepreneur. Spurred by the three-part moon, her husband renounces his former life in favor of spirituality and meditation. Then he disappears entirely, just as his company teeters on the financial brink.

Evicted from her modernistic mansion, Laura, her genius son, Alex (Sam Murphy), and her bratty daughter, Lydia (Teresa Celentano), relocate to smaller quarters. Laura takes a job as the receptionist for Mack (Rob Boltin), the easygoing town lawyer who resembles the title character of "Ed" enough to be a fraternal twin. Meanwhile, Lydia accidentally burns down the school, and Alex falls for Claire (Samantha Leigh Quan), a young woman who doesn't realize her new beau is only 16.

There's a "Picket Fences" quality to the show, mostly because of its eccentric characters. But unlike "Fences," in which producer David E. Kelley wrestled with thorny ethical and political issues, "Milford" is partial to whimsy. Despite setting the school ablaze and then lying about it, Lydia gets off with light community service. Her mom even scolds townsfolk who judge the girl too harshly.

Although McGovern is the big name attached to the project, the most appealing performances are given by Boltin, who plays a quintessential nice guy, and Murphy, who shows the many facets of his rebellious teen character. Exec producer James Frawley, who directed, mixes interesting angles with conventional shots just enough to keep the show visually vibrant.

Major characters

Laura Davis

Mother of the Davis family, who struggles with the emotional strain and major changes occurring in wake of the moon incident. Her husband, Carl, a local industry leader, abandoned the family after the moon incident to live in a yurt some distance away from the family home, and has since left the country to climb the Seven Summits. Shortly thereafter, funds are discovered missing from Carl's company, and the family's property and assets are seized, leaving the previously pampered Laura at loose ends to provide for her family. Laura is played by Elizabeth McGovern.

Albert "Mack" McIntyre

A small town, down-to-earth lawyer who helps the Davises in Lydia's arson case. A growing attraction develops between Mack and Laura Davis, which is nudged along when Mack's meddlesome mother hires Laura as Mack's secretary in order to drive a wedge between Mack and an old flame. Mack is played by Rob Boltin.

Lydia Davis

Teenage daughter of the Davis family. Her attempt to use a Wicca ceremony to save the Earth resulted in the accidental arson of the local high school. Even though she continues to defend the event as an accident, she is known as the "fire starter." She moves to a new school, where she is allowed nothing flammable and starts to fall in with a bad crowd. She is played by Teresa Celentano.

Alex Davis

Sixteen year-old son of the Davis family, Alex is a math prodigy who struggles with vehicular issues. He becomes romantically involved with the 29-year old Claire. He sold his brand new motorcycle to rent a house for him and his family right next door to Claire. He is played by Sam Murphy.

Claire Ling

29-year old computer analyst who shares an attraction with the younger Alex Davis. She lives next door to Alex and the rest of the Davis family. Claire was unaware of Alex's true age until recently, and thought he was an undergraduate taking time off from MIT. While still unsure of the relationship after discovering his real age, she finds herself still attracted to Alex. She is played by Samantha Leigh Quan.

Michelle Graybar

An opportunistic real estate agent whose business-as-usual attitude flies in the face of the pending disaster. She is played by Nora Dunn.

The moon has long been the subject of speculation, credited with romances, blamed for tragedies and occult occurrences. Our big rock in the sky affects our tides and emotions, and many believe that a full moon causes a rash of strange behavior and freakish accidents. So what if there wasn't just one moon, but three?

In ABC Family's new dramedy, Three Moons over Milford, that is the situation when a giant asteroid slams into our moon and splinters it into three parts, all hanging in the sky ominously close to one another. In the series, the result is a sudden increase in odd behavior a woman washes her car in the nude, a businessman gets a bright red mohawk, a man and woman get married with her in a tux and him in a bridal gown. Those who don't succumb to the weirdness must deal with a prevailing fatalism among their fellows, heightened by scientific conjectures about when the pieces will plummet to Earth and kill everyone. It may come in a few weeks or a few dozen years, but many believe the end is near.

The moons have an especially devastating effect on Milford, a quiet little town where, at one time, neighbors knew one another and the local coffee shop served plain coffee for just 50 cents. All that changed when mega-corporation Syndeck located its headquarters in town: strangers arrived and coffee went up to Starbucks' prices. The moon's break-up turned life in Milford upside down: now, citizens call anything out of the ordinary some three moons thing.

New arrival Laura Davis (Elizabeth McGovern) finds her life unraveling as a result of the asteroid. Her husband, the founder of Syndeck, abandoned her to climb the seven tallest mountains in the world. Unfortunately, he left her penniless and alone with their teenagers, Alex (Sam Murphy) and Lydia (Teresa Celentano). As if dealing with impending annihilation isn't enough, Laura is now a broke single mother. Her difficulties were compounded by the fact that most of her neighbors hated her husband, and her by association, for wrecking their peaceful burg with big business. Superficially friendly towards her, the townsfolk were quick to turn on her as a result of her children's behavior.

In the pilot episode, Laura's kids served as a focus for her troubles. Lydia and a couple of friends accidentally burned down the high school while performing a Wiccan ritual in the gym one night. Though Lydia's intentions were good, as she hoped the ritual would reunite the three parts of the moon, she was blamed for the fire. For his part, Alex met Claire (Samantha Leigh Quan), an engineer at Syndeck who mistook the 16-year-old for a college man (understandable as actor Murphy looks far older than his character), and wanted to jump his bones once she realizes that he is a computer whiz. Alex, convinced the end is near, felt this was his only shot at losing his virginity, so he was more than happy to play along with Claire's misconception.

Even as her kids floundered, Laura met Mack (Rob Boltin), town attorney and future love interest. He managed to get Lydia a mere slap on the wrist (community service and a public apology) on arson charges and hired Laura as his secretary. Let the sexual tension begin.

Yet another quirky small town series, Three Moons over Milford offers conventional characters: newly divorced mother, troublesome but good-hearted kids, and attractive love interest. Imagine the Gilmore girls moved to Twin Peaks and you get the idea. Moreover, the invariably light dramedic tone is too familiar.

The most interesting aspect of the show is the three moons, but they came into being before the action started: everyone in town had adjusted to the loss of the moon as we know it. A far more interesting opening to the series would have been to start with the asteroid's impact on the moon, allowing viewers to see initial reactions to the celestial event, say, the missing husband's transformation from corporate maven to world adventurer.

Though the premise has merit (the moon's influence on our lives, literature, and religious beliefs is considerable), its filtering through predictable television formula makes Three Moons old already.

Three Moons Over Milford got off to a slow start on August 6, 2006 on ABC Family. The ratings were less than spectacular (1.6 million viewers) -- especially compared to another original ABC Family series, the very popular Kyle XY series. Unfortunately, despite having an original concept, Three Moons' ratings didn't get any stronger as the rest of eight episodes aired.

The last original episode aired on September 24, 2006 (a cliffhanger entitled "Goodnight Moon").

THRESHOLD

The series stars Carla Gugino as Dr. Molly Caffrey, a high-level government crisis management consultant from the Blackwood Institute whose job is to create contingency plans for use in emergencies ranging from natural disasters to nuclear war. In order to have "all bases covered", one of her plans, code-named Threshold, is developed for dealing with the unlikely eventuality of first contact with aliens. After the crew of a U.S. naval vessel reports an encounter with an UFO, and many members of the crew subsequently die, the Threshold protocol is activated.

Caffrey's Threshold plan calls for the formation of a secret government task force known as the Red Team. As a result, several top scientists are seconded: Dr. Nigel Fenway (Brent Spiner), an individualistic NASA-employed microbiologist; Lucas Pegg (Robert Patrick Benedict), a somewhat unsure-of-himself aerospace engineer on the eve of his marriage, and Arthur Ramsey (Peter Dinklage), a mathematics and linguistics genius whose libido makes up for his lack of height. Caffrey's government liaison is Deputy National Security Advisor J.T. Baylock (Charles S. Dutton), while freelance paramilitary operative Sean Cavanaugh (Brian Van Holt) serves as the "muscle" of the group (and apparent potential love interest for Caffrey). Daphne Larson (Catherine Bell) was added to the team in the episode "Outbreak". Caffrey's team works under absolute secrecy, their activities not even known to the Vice-President, or the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The alien fractal pattern symbol featured throughout the series. Threshold learns that the aliens are attempting to rewrite the DNA of the human race using, in part, an audio signal that somehow alters some people's body chemistry in such a way that they become alien themselves. Central to all this is a fractal triskelion-like pattern that keeps appearing -- in blood, electronic signals, and even the pattern made by city lights. Its significance has yet to be revealed, though Arthur Ramsey interpreted it as representing a DNA pattern in a triple helix formation (like the alien DNA).

Series episodes presently focus on Caffrey and her team as they learn more about the signal, the fractal pattern, and the aliens; often, their work requires them to impersonate different U.S. Government agencies. Compounding the situation is the fact that Caffrey, Cavanaugh and Pegg were exposed to a small part of the signal, which while not (as yet) infecting them, has nonetheless altered their brains, causing the trio to have bizarre, linked dreams, and also receive messages from the aliens with Caffrey, in particular, experiencing frightening, often violent hallucinations. Individuals experiencing these visions have been referred to as "dreamers" by the Threshold Red Team.

An ongoing subplot of the series is the emotional impact Threshold has on Caffrey herself, as she is required to make life and death decisions on an almost daily basis.

Threshold was a science-fiction drama television series that first aired on CBS in September 2005. Produced by Brannon Braga (best known for his work on the Star Trek franchise), the series focuses on a secret government project investigating the first contact with an extraterrestrial species. This series was often referred to as a reverse X-Files, with the main characters of the series seeking to cover-up the truth about first-contact instead of uncovering the conspiracy.

The series was first shown on Friday nights, but was moved to Tuesday in an effort to boost ratings. This plan backfired, with the show registering a sharp drop in its ratings on its first Tuesday night showing on November 22, and CBS cancelled the series on November 23.

Trivia

In "Trees Made of Glass, Part 1", Gunneson (William Mapother) is shot in the chest four times by Caffrey. William Mapother previously played Ethan Rom on Lost, who was killed by four shots to the chest.

In "Trees Made of Glass, Part 1", there is a reference to Klingons. Brent Spiner is best known for playing Lt. Commander Data in Star Trek: The Next Generation and the subsequent films. Executive Producer Brannon Braga, and writers Mike Sussman and Andre Bormanis are also known for their work in the various Star Trek series.

According to an October 2005 interview with series producer David S. Goyer for About.com, the plan was for Threshold to change its title to Foothold in a second season and Stranglehold in a third season as the series progressed.[4] The interview suggests that Foothold and Stranglehold are escalations of the Threshold protocols. It may be possible that they are the two other classified contingency plans (besides Threshold) that reporter Janice Tam mentions in "The Order".

Executive Producer Brannon Braga wrote a second season episode of Star Trek: Voyager called "Threshold." Threshold is the first CBS television series to utilize "streaming video" to re-air new episodes after the original airdate. Each new episode will be posted on the CBS website five days after its original airdate and remain accessible there for three days. Nancy Tellem, president of the CBS Paramount Network Television Entertainment Group, stated that "the goal here is to recruit new viewers to 'Threshold,' help existing viewers catch up if they've missed some episodes and drive more traffic to CBS.com." Survivor and The Amazing Race both utilize a similar method for post-show interviews and discussions.

As mentioned in the "Revelations", Revelation 15:2 eerily matches the dreams of the glass forest: "I saw something like a sea of glass mixed with fire, and those who overcame the beast, his image, and the number of his name, standing on the sea of glass, having harps of God."

In "Progeny", Dr. Fenway (Brent Spiner) uses the alias Dr. Martin Wrigley. Both Fenway and Wrigley are the names of professional baseball stadiums (Fenway Park is the home of the Boston Red Sox, Wrigley Field is the home of the Chicago Cubs). Moreover, Brent Spiner is a Chicago Cubs fan and Dr. Fenway has previously indicated a love of baseball.

Since the Big Horn incident (up until The Crossing), there have been roughly 33 known exposures to the alien signal (not counting dreamers). Of those 33, 10 suffered a bad reaction to the signal, deformed and died. The remaining 23 survived exposure and became an infectee. Of those 23, 3 are at large (the remaining Big Horn crewman), 13 have been killed and 7 have been captured by Threshold.

THUNDER IN PARADISE

Spence and Bru were a pair of former Navy SEALs who took on a variety of high risk jobs for whoever could pay them their 85000 a day, plus expenses fee. For this fee the client which sometimes would be the Navy, would get both their services plus the use of Thunder which was a high tech speed boat which had a variety of features not found on your common everyday speed boat. These included such things as a missile launcher, an effective anti theft system, a stealth system which shielded the boat from both radar and sonar, as well as a state of the art computer system which talked back to the boat's occupants.

Thunder was the prototype of a boat that Spence had designed with the intention of selling it to the military. The cost of developing Thunder had proven an enormous financial drain on Spence who was in a dire financial state when the series began. To solve his money problems Spence found himself marrying a rich girl, Megan Whitaker. Megan knew exactly why Spence was marrying her and she herself had ulterior motives for wanting to marry Spence. She had inherited the luxurious Paradise Beach Motel from her father, but in order to keep the hotel for herself and out of the hands of her uncle Edward Whitaker, she had to get married.

However soon after Spence and Megan got married. Megan was killed in an automobile accident. This left Spence with the hotel and custody of Megan's 9-year-old daughter Jessica. It also made Uncle Edward quite unhappy. Spence managed to work out a deal with Edward in which Spence would be able to adopt Jessica, he liked the kid and she adored him, while Edward would get to run the hotel until Jessica turned 21 at which time she would inherit it.

Thunder in Paradise's star was Hulk Hogan. a professional wrestler turned actor (although there are those who might say pro-wrestling is acting). It is thus not surprising that quite a few pro-wrestlers found their way into guest roles on the series. Steve 'Sting' Borden appeared several times as Hammerhead, a former Navy SEAL gone bad.

Filmed at Epcot Centre and Disney's Grand Floridian Beach Resort. The show was designed to run in Syndication, but since it lasted only one season the show would not reach the expected 100 episodes for full syndication. The series was first seen on WPWR in the US.

DVD Release

On September 26, 2006, Lions Gate released a 3-disc Thunder in Paradise Collection that contained Thunder in Paradise ("Thunder In Paradise" Parts 1 & 2), Thunder in Paradise II ("Sealed with a Kismet" Parts 1 & 2), and Thunder in Paradise 3 ("Deadly Lessons" Part 1 & 2).

Filming Locations

The Thunder in Paradise pilot movie was filmed in and around the historic Don Cesar Hotel in St. Petersburg, Florida during April of 1993. When the series was picked up for a full season, the production company then moved to Disney-MGM Studios near Orlando, where the primary filming location became the Grand Floridian Resort at the Walt Disney World Resort. Other filming locations at Walt Disney World included Disney's Old Key West Resort, and EPCOT, used heavily due to the wide variety of futuristic and architectural styles available at that theme park. The destruction of the school featured in the two-part episode "Deadly Lessons" was an actual controlled demolition of a school building in Central Florida that the production company agreed to perform in exchange for filming rights.

THUNDER MASK

Earth is threatened by a series of beasts, including devils, fire-breathing Parajudon, vampire shark Samera, and zombie lord Gyadabiran. In the tradition of ULTRAMAN, only the mild-mannered Japanese youth Koichi (Sugawara) can save us, when he transforms into the giant superhero Thunder Mask.

Plot # 2

Space Archeologist Prof. Katase, uncovers a ten thousand year old article which prophesizes the coming of a demon lord called Deganda, who will use his powers to destroy mankind. The book also tells that a hero/savior will also awaken to save mankind. Prof. Katase goes to the location where the hero's capsule lies dormant and revives the hero called 'Thunder Mask'. Thunder Mask takes on the human guise of Inochi Kosei and joins the 'Science Team' to battle the forces of Emperor Bem King, and his minion Evil Lord Deganda.

ASTRO BOY creator Osamu Tezuka's Tezuka Pro studio had long planned to move into live-action, but went bust shortly after completing the pilot for Devil Garon. Several staff members from Tezuka Pro's abortive live-action division formed the new Hiromi Pro, clearly with Tezuka's blessing - Thunder Mask was reputedly "based on a manga by Osamu Tezuka," through the creator did not begin publishing it in Shonen Sunday until the week after the TV show started. The most likely explanation is that the all-new story was deliberately initiated after the collapse of Tezuka Pro for copyright reasons.

The presence of some incredibly strange samurai-style pseudonyms among the crew implies that there was more trickery behind the camera - conceivably Hiromi Pro was calling in favors with fellow ex-Tezuka Pro staffers, who were now under contract elsewhere.

The manga serialization ended in January, shortly before the series itself. Japanese sources list a 29 episode production schedule of which only 26 were made, a curious number since it would have been a strange TV company indeed that wanted Hiromi Pro to run three episodes over a traditional second season.

Characters

Thundermask

Thunder Mask Statistics:

Height (Metric): Variable: 180 cm - 40 meters

Weight (Metric): 150 Kilo - 40,000 Tons

Height (American/British): Variable 5.9 Ft. - 131 ft.

Weight (American/British): 330 pd. - 9,842 Tons

When humans first started appearing on Earth, the Evil Lord Deganda saw this as an opportunity for conquest and set off towards our galaxy. Witnessing this, the citizenry of Thunder Star send one of its heroes to stop the conqueror. However, they underestimated the difference in time between the galaxy systems (One Hour of Universal Time = 10,000 years of Earth Time) and both are plunged into deep hibernation. When Evil Lord Deganda is the first to awake and begins his conquest, Prof. Katase goes to awake Thunder Mask as foretold in his research.

In addition to extraordinary physical properties and superhuman senses, Thunder Mask's powers include energy weapons such as his 'Thunder Shoot', 'Thunder Arrow', and 'Thunder Beam'. He also utilizes various 'kakatou waza' (special attacks) such as his 'Thunder Chop', 'Thunder Kick' and 'Thunder Punch'.

Evil Lord Deganda

Hails from Deganda Star which is eternally shrouded in black darkness and which emits poisonous gases. He commands an army of 'Majuu' beasts which have the properties of various Terrain vehicles, object and weapons (Tanks, Missiles, Tires, Gas Tanks, Planes, etc.) He has vast Psychic Powers that enable him to masquerade as human. His cape can repel various forms of energy and his scepter can fire deadly forms of energy. His golden necklace can be used to suffocate enemies and his claws can slash through most materials.

His serves the equally diabolical Emperor Bem King who has vast dark magic abilites. N/A on the Shukan Shonen Sunday Manga Series by Tezuka Osamu. Originally planned as a film, a pilot was planned with the title 'Majin Garon' (Demon God Garon). However, Mushi Pro suffering financial problems, scrapped the project and the development team of this project ended up being transferred to one of Mushi Pro's film divisions, Hiromi Pro. There, the 'Majin Garon' project was scaled back and redeveloped into a Tokusatsu Program we now know as 'Thunder Mask'. While the original pilot 'Majin Garon' was never aired, pictures and photos of the project are available (the 'hero' is decidedly more wicked looking). Tezuka Osamu also did a manga based on the original pilot.

Episode #19 - is possible the most outrageous in the series. The story details the life of a 'Paint Thinner' drug addict who has basically overdoses and becomes the Majuu 'Shinna Man'.

The series was produced by Yoshikazu Morita, Hiromi Saito and Kazuo Horie.

THUNDERBIRDS

A future family performs rescue operations undersea, in the air, and in space, with really nifty keen vehicles. This animated puppet series for children was one of the most elaborate (and perhaps the best-loved) of all such Gerry and Sylvia ANDERSON productions, and the first designed for a 1hr timeslot.

The 4th of their SuperMarionation shows to be SF, it involved International Rescue: based on a secret Pacific Island, this was a future air-, space- and undersea-rescue service which utilised a variety of spectacular vehicles (a spaceship, a submersible and a heavily armed pink Rolls Royce among them) and was run by the Tracy family with the help of Lady Penelope, their glamorous London assistant, Parker, her Cockney chauffeur, and Brains, a stuttering bespectacled genius.

Boasting an unusually large regular cast - both of characters and creations - the series centred on the exploits of a secret organisation called International Rescue, run from a hidden base on a remote Pacific island by former astronaut and multi-millionaire Jeff Tracy and his five sons, named after the first American astronauts. Using a remarkable range of five supercraft, they performed heroic feats of rescue against the odds anywhere in the world - and sometimes out of it, too.

The protagonists - mechanical and marionette - were:

Thunderbird 7 - a silver-grey scout craft whose 7000mph top speed enabled it to be first at the scene of a crisis. Piloted by Scott Tracy, eldest son and decisive rescue organiser. Thunderbird 2 - a giant green freighter designed to carry heavy rescue equipment to the danger zone in a range of integral pods. Piloted by Virgil, a reliable and steady character who worked closely with Scott.

Thunderbird 3 - an orange spaceship piloted by Alan, the impetuous youngest brother, also an expert motor racing driver and 'romantic lead'. Thunderbird 4 - a yellow, underwater craft, carried to rescues in one of Thunderbird 2's pods. Controlled by Gordon, enthusiastic and a bit of a joker. These four craft were based at International Rescue's island HQ, but completing the quintet was the space satellite Thunderbird 5, the organisation's eyes and ears in outer space where it monitored every frequency on Earth, automatically translating any SOS into English and transmitting the alerts back to Earth. On duty in Thunderbird 5 was the patient and solitary figure of John Tracy.

The other 'star' of the show was a shocking pink, six-wheeled Rolls Royce, FAB 1, equipped with a formidable battery of gadgets including TV and radio transmitters, retro-rocket brakes, hydrofoils, oil slick ejector and a machine gun housed behind the radiator grille. It was owned by Lady Penelope, International Rescue's chic blonde London agent, and driven by Parker, Lady P's auffeurilant manservant, a droll Cockney ex-con with a talent for safe-blowing.

Other regular characters were Brains, the bespectacled, hesitantly spoken scientific genius; the Hood, principal villain and master of disguise, dedicated to getting his hands on the secrets of the Thunderbirds; Kyrano, the Hood's half-brother but loyal servant to the Tracys; Tin-Tin, Kyrano's daughter and romantically linked to Alan. Lastly, there was Grandma Tracy who looked after Jeff and the boys.

Perhaps the best of the puppet series created and produced by the Anderson's. 2 feature-film spin-offs, also with animated puppets, were Thunderbirds Are Go (1966) and Thunderbird Six (1968). One of the most popular TV series ever, Thunderbirds has become engrained in the popular culture of more than one generation.

Gerry Anderson's seventh puppet series and the fourth in the Supermarionation saga, it was television's first one-hour puppet series with the big wide world of family prime-time as its prize. Anderson had originally intended it to continue the half-hour format established by SUPERCAR, FIREBALL XL5 and STINGRAY, but his ATV backer Lew Grade - who was paying the piper to the tune of some £38,000 an episode - insisted on hour-long stories. It meant adding new footage to 10 episodes but gave unprecedented scope for plot development, characterisation and technological invention.

Although the Tracy 'airwalk' became the butt of countless affectionate jokes, Thunderbirds did continue AP Films' progressive ingenuity in the puppet world - each character had a variety of heads to reflect their different moods - and in 1966 the series won a Television Society Silver Medal as 'work of outstanding artistic merit'.

First screened on ITV from October 1965, the series enjoyed repeat ITV runs during the 1970s and 1980s, before being picked up by the BBC for a network run in 1991. Two feature films were made for United Artists - Thunderbirds Are Go (1966) and Thunderbird 6 (1968) and in 1986, a Japanese-made cartoon series, Thunderbirds 2086, cashed in on the name, Thunderbirds continued to push up AP Films' production costs, swallowing around £1m. But it also made a fortune, notching up advance world sales of £350,000 even before it was screened here. The 32 episodes have been seen in 66 countries, and, indeed, are still being seen somewhere.

Producers for the series are Gerry Anderson (Season One) and Reg Hill (Season Two), associate producers were Reg Hill (Season One) and John Read (Season Two). The director of photography was John Read (Season one), supervising special effects director was Derek Meddings, art director was Bob Bell and the music was created by Barry Gray. The dates listed here are for the ATV, London region. The script editor was Alan Pattillo, and the character visualisation was by Sylvia Anderson.

The voice cast were all experienced character actors and several were already (or became) regular Anderson performers. David Holliday (the original voice of Virgil in Series I) was the only real American cast in any voice role in the series; all the others were British, Australian or Canadian.

Versatile Australian actor Ray Barrett provided the voices of John Tracy and The Hood, as well as many other one-off characters. He had worked for Anderson before, voicing both Commander Shore and Titan in his previous series, Stingray. Thanks to his extensive experience in live radio back in Australia, he was adept at rapid changes from one voice to another and he could also perform both English and American accents convincingly. By the time Thunderbirds began, Barrett was already a minor star on British TV, and since his return to Australia in the Seventies he has become one of the nation's senior film and TV actors. Although Sylvia Anderson or Christine Finn usually took responsibility for female guest characters, Barrett made an exception when he voiced the elderly Duchess of Royston in "The Duchess Assignment", to the hilarity of the other cast and crew.

Veteran Canadian actor Shane Rimmer (Scott) went on to appear in and occasionally write scripts for many subsequent Anderson productions. Rimmer has an extensive list of prominent TV and movie credits, but he is probably best known for his appearances in several James Bond films, and for his role as Capt. G.A. 'Ace' Owens in Stanley Kubrick's Dr Strangelove. Rimmer has appeared in many action, thriller and science fiction films, including Star Wars: A New Hope, and is often cast in military or political roles.

David Graham, one of Anderson's longest serving voice actors, had previously worked on Four Feather Falls, Supercar, Fireball XL5 and Stingray and was also one of the original voices of the Daleks in Doctor Who in 1963.

The popularity of the series led to the production of two full length feature films, with financial backing by United Artists. In 2004, a live action adaptation of the series was released, almost 40 years after the original series aired.

Several companies, including Matchbox and Dinky were licensed to produce die-cast metal and plastic toys based on the Thunderbird vehicles. They proved hugely popular and were one of the best selling merchandising lines of the decade. Original Thunderbirds toys are now expensive and highly sought after collectors' items. Many toys were made by Matchbox in the 90s to coincide with a revival of the TV series, including a Tracy Island playset and also the new movie, though they were generally marketed outside the US and in Canada. Toy company Vivid Imaginations produced toys to coincide with the release of the 2004 live action movie in the UK. As of 2007, Japanese companies such as Konami and Takara were still producing new Thunderbirds toys based on the original series vehicles, including a very expensive Thunderbird 2 model with lights and working motorised legs which lift the fuselage, exposing the cargo pod. Also to be noted is that Blast Entertainment is releasing a Thunderbirds game for the Playstation 2, for release in Europe due for July 2007.

The series has become a cult British institution, popular with both children and adults. Part of its appeal is that it is not particularly child centric - indeed it features no children as main characters, and was intended to be prime time entertainment for the whole family. Famously, in 1992, a re-run on the BBC led to a shortage of Tracy Island models in the run-up to Christmas, prompting children's programme Blue Peter to come to the rescue by demonstrating how to build a home-made version.

A 2001 public information film in the UK featured the Thunderbirds characters, showing FAB1 being wheel clamped and towed away because Lady Penelope had not paid the road tax.

While not as gory as the later Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons, puppet characters do die and there is massive destruction on a grand scale. In one episode, "City of Fire", the world's tallest skyscraper burns and then collapses with a family trapped within the burning ruins, in another, "Terror in New York City", the Empire State Building collapses (followed by an adjacent skyscraper) trapping two men in the rubble. Many themes covered in the series are still relevant today; passenger jets are sabotaged ("Trapped in the Sky"), hijacked ("Alias Mr. Hackenbacker") and one sinks to the ocean floor with the flight crew trapped aboard ("Operation Crash-Dive"), and in another episode a nuclear reactor explodes due to sabotage ("The Mighty Atom").

Today, the series is frequently repeated on BBC Two in the UK and RTÉ Two in Ireland (when the series was broadcast on BBC Two in 1991-92, this was actually the first nationwide screening, since British television was much more heavily regionalised in the 1960s, and ATV only operated in certain areas). Thunderbirds is also quite popular in Japan, where it was first broadcast in 1966 by NHK. For approximately three years (2000 - 2003) the satellite channel Boomerang UK broadcast uncut episodes daily, meaning that the complete run of 32 episodes was screened about 34 times. Thunderbirds was also syndicated on the now defunct US cable television network TechTV from August 5, 2002 through June 20, 2004. In Australia, the Channel 9 Network screened the series many times over in the 1970s and 1980s during the Saturday morning timeslot, and on weekdays during school holiday periods. The original (uncut) series was also re-broadcast several times on the Australasian Foxtel cable network in the late 1990s and early 2000s. The Australasian Foxtel cable network now plays Thunderbirds on the new Sci-Fi Network on weekdays. Channel 9 still broadcasts Thunderbirds at 6:00am (30 minute episodes over a 2 weekends) on a Saturday, 40 years after the show premiered. It is currently shown in the US in High Definition on Family Room, one of the VROOM television networks.

Modernising attempts

Some versions screened on the Fox Network and in US syndication in the 1990s used re-recorded voices and music, much to the annoyance of long-time fans. Even more widely disliked was Turbocharged Thunderbirds, a revamped version of the show which briefly aired in syndication from late 1994 to mid-1995, which replaced the original dialogue with "ironic post-modern" jokes, and live action introductions suggesting the events of the series take place on some strange alien "Thunder world" (with the two teenaged "hosts", the so-called "Hack Masters", controlling the action from a studio set resembling the interior of Thunderbird 5 and referring to Jeff Tracy as "Mr. T"). Gerry Anderson was reportedly furious and the new version of the series quickly disappeared.

In 2000, the series was remastered with Dolby Surround sound for DVD release. Gerry Anderson, who had not received any royalties on the show since signing away the rights in the late 1960s, was employed as a "remastering consultant". A North American DVD release occurred in 2002.

In September 2005, a QuickTime video file titled Thunderbirds IR was released on several P2P networks. It opens with music by Barry Gray and a few clips of the classic Thunderbirds 1 through 4 launching, then shows several scenes from an intended new Thunderbirds series from Carlton Television. The trailer made with a combination of computer-generated imagery and puppetry depicts scenes including internal sets, external settings, and a sleekly-redesigned Thunderbird 1, Scott Tracy, The Hood, and the rescue of a falling lighthousekeeper. Scott Tracy is seen to walk, and perform a backflip (making the tongue-in-cheek remark "Look, no strings!").

The trailer stated that a new Thunderbirds series would be coming in 2005 from Carlton Television and displays a phone number. The series was developed by Carlton with David Freedman as executive producer and David Mercer who was heading the Children's Department at Carlton at the time. Greg Johnson and Bob Forward were lead writers and Asylum did all the set builds and puppet work. Tim Field was line producer. Dave Throssel and a small team from The Mill TV Dept did the CG work. Steve Clarke directed the short. Gerry Anderson met the Carlton team in the early days of development and gave his full blessing. However, when Granada and Carlton merged, the series was shelved until further notice.

References

In 1991, Gerry Anderson himself directed a video set to the song "Calling Elvis" by the British band Dire Straits. Clips of the Thunderbirds vehicles were used in the video, and several Thunderbirds puppets - most notably the Jeff Tracy puppet - were taken out of storage and reused.

In Nick Park's A Close Shave, an animated film starring Wallace and Gromit, Wallace's mounting of his motorbike is a parody of how Virgil Tracy gets into Thunderbird 2 and takes off. In Curse of the Were-Rabbit, the eyes in the portraits on the wall flash like those of the Tracy brothers.

In 2004, South Park creators Matt Stone and Trey Parker produced a full length feature film Team America: World Police (2004) which lampooned the original series. Team America's marionette humour drew heavily for its inspiration on the quirks and foibles of Gerry Anderson's Supermarionation techniques, whilst managing the not insignificant task of paying respect to the original. Recalling the wanton spirit of destruction from the series, they depicted the destruction of the Eiffel Tower, The Pyramids, and the Panama Canal. Although it departed from the 1960s television series in terms of the graphic sex and constant profanity. It also earned glowing reviews from many critics, as well as favorable comments from Anderson himself. [citation needed]

A Japanese anime production, Nadia: The Secret of Blue Water features a craft that looks much like Thunderbird 2 which takes off from a hidden launching pad on the side of a mountain, to music similar to that of Thunderbirds.

The TV series Stargate SG-1 200th episode (appropriately titled 200) contained a supermarionation scene similar to Thunderbirds.

The Planet Express Ship from Futurama and the Olympic Carrier from Battlestar Galactica episode "33" both bear similarities to Thunderbird 2. However it is unclear if these are intentional homages or coincidences.

The cover of the Honor Harrington novel Field of Dishonor features a craft that resembles Thunderbird 2.

The Thunderbirds theme is used as the background theme music to the game 'Slipped Disks' on Challenge's dubbed version of Japanese game show Takeshi's Castle

At the beginning of the Beastie Boys' performance at Live Earth in London, the famed Thunderbirds "countdown", usually heard in the intro, was manipulated and used for the band's introduction.

Parodies

An early Thunderbirds send-up was the sketch entitled "Superthunderstingcar", performed by British comedians Peter Cook and Dudley Moore in the mid-1960s for their BBC TV series Not Only... But Also. This sketch was closely imitated by the Australian satirical series The D-Generation in the mid-1980s.

In 1989, Thunderbirds FAB was a live stage production using two actors who walked as if they were puppets and wore large hats representing Thunderbirds 1 and 2.

In the ReBoot episode "Nullzilla", Phong says, "F.A.B." to reveal a secret room that looks nearly identical to the Tracy lounge. When the characters leave the room for their machines, one wall flips, another turns and the sofa descends, just like the lounge in Thunderbirds. Pastiche music in the style of Barry Gray's Thunderbirds music support this parody.

In 1998, the US cable TV network MTV aired a six-episode puppet series called Super Adventure Team. It featured marionettes, as well as hand puppets with rods. The series was created and produced by Dana Gould, who is now co-executive producer on The Simpsons, and Rob Cohen. Disputes over the budget of the series caused its cancellation by MTV after only six episodes. It has never been released on DVD nor repeated on MTV.

Saturday Night Live aired a series of puppet animated shorts called the "Golords" (with the tagline "Golords Go!") in 1997 and 1998.

"Ton Ton Der Birds" was a very scary bit on a Mexican variety show with vaseline smeared on everyone's faces, wires sticking up from them everywhere and an uncanny simulation of puppets by humans.

In the Sonic X anime series episode "Emergency Launch! Tornado X", one of Dr. Eggman's Badniks is a spoof of Thunderbird 2, the only variation being that the cockpit area is a robot head. Pod 4 ejects and instead of launching a Thunderbird machine, releases a series of missiles at Sonic.

Imitations

Interster (Afrikaans, "Inter-star") was a weekly science-fiction supermarionation-style television show made for children and shown by the SABC in South Africa from the late 1970s.

In Sonic X, X-Tornado's launch sequence resembles that of the Thunderbirds machines. In addition, E-90 is based on Thunderbird 2. Also, in the same episode, background music similar to the Thunderbirds theme played every now and then (this is only in versions retaining the original BGM). Blue Typhoon's deck has two rows of trees similar to those lining Thunderbird 2's runway. In episode 59, the spaceship piloted by the Chaotix resembles Thunderbird 3.

The catchphrase from D.I.C.E., GTR, has the same effect as F.A.B. In Thunderbirds.

Capcom's Megaman franchise includes several references to Thunderbirds. In the SNES game Megaman 7, the second Wily fortress boss, Gamerizer, is a turtle-like robot with heavy similarities to Thunderbird 2, including its signature pods (which send out smaller enemies). Also, in one episode of the anime Megaman NT Warrior, Yai flies a pink private jet that she enters in a similar fashion to Virgil Tracy and Thunderbird 2. Also, her friends enter the craft in a way similar to how Thunderbird 3 was boarded.

Thunderbirds 2086, was an anime spin-off series produced by ITC Japan in the early 80s. The series retained many of the core concepts of the original series but updated them to depict more modern vision of the future. International Rescue was now a vast organisation employing thousands of people and 17 Thunderbird vehicles, many of which were strongly reminiscent of their original series counterparts. The series is not considered canonical with the original series due to the non-involvement of Gerry or Sylvia Anderson.

Virgin Trains has sixteen class 57 locomotives named after characters or vehicles from the series due to their main use rescuing broken-down or stranded trains, and the fact that they are constantly ready for use. The use of the name Thunderbird for this type of train was common well before this though.

In 2000, Twenty65 released a CD album featuring four variations on the Thunderbirds main theme.

Brains stutters out the company that is the subject of the advert. "Thank you Brains", says Lady Penelope calmly, her car teetering on the edge of a cliff.

A 1992 advert for Kit Kat chocolate bars saw Scott "having a break" on the Thunderbird 1 launchpad while Jeff becomes increasingly irate: "Thunderbirds are go. Thunderbirds are go. Thunderbirds GO!"

Around the same time, there was a Pizza Hut advert which featured Virgil and Gordon flying Thunderbird 2 to the Thunderbirds Theme Song with Virgil saying "Can you turn it down a bit?" with Gordon pressing the wrong button and dropping Pod 4 responding with "What now?" to be followed by the then popular phrase "Now we.Hit the Hut". This was part of the promotion with Pizza Hut for the re-release of Thunderbird in 1992 with special edition drink cups and lids featuring Thunderbird 1, 2, 4 and FAB1.

1 - 7 30 MINUTES AFTER NOON

On his way home to celebrate his third wedding anniversary, Thomas Prescott is forced into an unexpected detour after picking up a hitchhiker. Upon dropping the man at what is supposedly the home of the hitchhiker's doctor, Prescott finds himself thanked with an explosive device clamped to his wrist and not much time to remove it before it detonates. The hitchhiker informs his confused victim that the key is hidden in his office and instructs him to leave the device in a file cabinet once it has been removed. Racing against both time and the police, Prescott does as he's told, but he's trapped in an elevator while fleeing the now-burning building. International Rescue has been monitoring the happenings and decides that now is the time to spring into action. But have they sat on the sidelines too long? Will they arrive in time to pull Prescott from the bottom of the elevator shaft in which he's trapped, or will the fire prove too much even for International Rescue's advanced equipment? Adding to their troubles, will they learn why both man and building were targeted in the first place before the criminals can strike again? After plunging to the bottom of the burning elevator shaft, the man, though injured, is eventually saved by International Rescue. When it's discovered that the explosion targeted government files on gang activity, the FBI is called in, and International Rescue removes itself from the case -- for now. When a British agent named Southern infiltrates the gang responsible for the blast, he and two other men are dispatched to a plutonium storage facility with a familiar calling card -- explosives attached to their wrists. Once inside the heavily fortified building, Southern turns on his companions in hopes of capturing the operation's ringleader, but is himself captured by one of the facility's robot guards and locked inside with the bombs. Can International Rescue save the agent and get to the explosives before half of England is destroyed? And will the gang again manage to escape, free to continue its destruction?

2 - 2 PATH OF DESTRUCTION

A South American construction project is nearly under way, and the final testing of the newly invented Crablogger -- a powerful forest-clearing machine -- has proven successful. To celebrate the event, and to go over plans one more time, the project leader takes the Crablogger crew out to eat. Had they noticed the deplorable conditions inside the kitchen, the men would surely have passed on dinner and gladly gone to work hungry the next morning. The foreman wisely orders the steak, but the Crablogger crew each chooses the house special. Apparently the only thing special about it is its ability to cause food poisoning. One man gets violently ill before work the next morning, which makes him the lucky one. The other two seem fine and proceed with the project, but it isn't long before they succumb to their illnesses. They both pass out at the controls, leaving the massive machine to gobble everything in its path. When it's determined that the Crablogger is headed straight for a new dam, International Rescue is called to the scene. They arrive in time to cut through the machine, but lack the knowledge to initiate the shutdown sequence. She unfortunately encounters nothing but trouble along the way, whether it be from a stubborn security guard or an accident victim she feels compelled to assist. Will she be able to get the code from the Crablogger's inventor, who is by now at home fast asleep? She'd better, because the fuel in his creation is potent enough to blow 50 square miles sky-high, taking Brains and Virgil with it. Can International Rescue stop the deadly Crablogger in its tracks?

Noah's obsession with the holodeck lands him in trouble again when he overstays his allotted time in the VR program. Dr. Pretorius, his teacher and a member of the North Col Triumvirate, must impose the penalty of punishment duty topside in the Impact Winter blizzards. He must also remind Noah of the necessity of order in North Col and his responsibility within the small community that survives in this underground research centre, after the Nemesis comet.

But whilst his mother and father, Liz and Simon, and his sister Becky sleep, Noah's inquiring scientific drive and his fascination with the now extinct animals, forces him back to the holodeck. A power glitch from his PH-Ts fuses with two on duty holocops, resulting in a bright white light that engulfs him and he is gone—arriving in what he believes is a holodeck programme. But the sun is too hot and the holograms are real. They are the Nomads and this is Haven.

1 - 2 TAO'S SECRET WEAPON

The Nomads, led by Arushka and with Noah as their prisoner, narrowly escape capture by the marauding Protectors, who are gathering workers for the Thunderstone Mine.

In the safety of their cavern, the Nomads question Noah. All he wants is to return... back to the future and his home in North Col, where his family and Dr. Pretorius are bewildered and concerned by his disappearance. Where is he? Is he dead?

As Jett, Sutch and the Protectors follow their leader Tao's orders, and close in behind the wheels of their menacing vehicles, the Nomads take Noah with them into the night. The chase intensifies until Noah, using his technology, foils Tao's new weapon, the Sentinel.

As the Nomads sleep, Noah emerges into the dawn of a new day. Surveying Haven's beauty as he tries to activate the PH-Ts, Noah is tackled. A prisoner again, but whose?

1 - 3 TWIN BROTHERS

Noah is being marched across the alien landscape of the Red Desert, his unimpressed captor, Sundance, tossing the PH-Ts away. Suddenly they have company, Sundance's twin brother and Protector—Sutch! In the Keep at the Thunderstone Mine Tao watches the confrontation on his screen, as Jett arrives and takes Sundance prisoner using her net gun.

Noah makes a run for it and arrives at the Sentinel Camp where he discovers a humiliated Sundance.

Noah cannot leave him—their dramatic escape and destruction of the Sentinel has added further fuel to Tao's anger.

Meanwhile, the Nomads travelling the Deep Road are hoping to reach safety. Noah and Sundance join them but Noah discovers his PH-Ts are gone! He will never get them back, he will be trapped here in this hostile place. Looking around him in the tunnel, he sees something familiar—he realises this is the ruin of North Col. He has been wrong—he is not in the past but in the future! What happened to everyone, to his family?

1 - 4 ESCAPE FROM THE HOLLOW MOUNTAIN

The Nomads are making their way apprehensively along the Deep Road. Arushka shows Noah the mural of the Wild Things, a hand painted depiction of a Noah's Ark of animals, wondrous creatures that no longer exist. Their fear of the Deep Road is validated when Noah's mini PC is found smashed and the mural vandalised. Something or someone is there!

Tao speeds across the Red Desert to where Jett and Savage have discovered a magnificent prize—a perfectly preserved big rig truck—The Beast. This find is what Tao has been waiting for, now he will be able to move ahead with his greater plan. Noah and the Nomads emerge into the Red Desert as the fired up Beast—blasted out of Hollow Mountain—bears down on them. Sundance bravely draws it away and they all watch in horror as the Beast gets to him before he can escape. The Beast turns around to pursue the Nomads, but they have disappeared, seemingly into thin air.

Has Sundance been captured? Noah has his PH-Ts, but what good are they without a power source? He could be stuck here forever!

1 - 5 TRAPPED

As Arushka and Chip arrive at the Thunderstone Mine to rescue Sundance from the Protectors, Noah joins them. This could be his ticket home, a chance to access power. Tao, whose plans are constantly thwarted by the Nomads, wants them caught! He has the Beast and will be the master of the desert.

leaving Chip on guard Noah and Arushka get into the Mine. Covering themselves in Thunderstone powder they make their way into the tunnel. Arushka creates the diversion that Noah needs and then escapes to return to Chip who has been joined by a very alive Sundance.

Arushka decides that she cannot just abandon Noah and she returns to the Mine, walking into a trap. Now she and Noah are Tao's captives. the distraction caused by Arushka's arrival gives Noah the chance to grab his PH-Ts. he powers them up and the two of them white-out. They have arrived... somewhere... a trumpeting sound makes them and they turn and they find themselves face to face with their first real animal—an elephant!

1 - 6 THE LION

Noah and Arushka stare gob smacked at the huge creature before them. This is a circus. It is 1999 - they have gone back too far! Arushka doesn't hear or care about Noah's concerns—these are real animals not just images on a wall. She never wants to leave. Noah tells her in a couple of years the animals and everything else will be gone when the Nemesis Comet strikes. Noah sets off to find a power source, leaving a saddened Arushka to look around. All of the animals are amazing but when she meets the beautiful circus horse Moshi she is totally captivated.

As Noah drags Arushka away from the circus they meet Sophie and Mingus, a pair of animal liberationists set on freeing the circus animals. Whilst trying to prevent the animals from escaping Noah and Arushka are caught and accused of the break-ins.

In North Col a quantum aberration convinces Becky that Noah may have time-travelled.

Tao in the Beast roars across the Red Desert telling Jett about his latest weapon—the mobile Sentinel tracking device. they can run but they cannot hide!

Noah and Arushka are being escorted to a waiting police car when a lion escapes. the crowd panics but an entranced Arushka is captivated by the beauty of the King of the Jungle.

1 - 7 MOSHI, THE HORSE

The lion is on the bonnet of the police car as a horrified and amazed crowd watches Arushka calm him. She achieves instant star status when she gestures the great Beast back into his cage.

Ivana arrives with Moshi and speaks quickly with Arushka. She understands the future Arushka comes from and asks Arushka to take Moshi with her. Using power from a nearby news van Noah activates the PH-Ts and in a flash of white light Arushka, Noah and the beautiful black horse Moshi are gone!

Instantly they reappear in Haven and the first animal brought through time has arrived!

Becky, experimenting with her own PH-Ts shrieks with delight as she witnesses their time journey. He's alive! Pretorius quizzes Becky.

Lost without Arushka's leadership the Nomads, spotted by Tao's mobile Sentinel are captured as they flee to safety. Noah, Arushka and Moshi launch into a rescue mission. Noah hijacks the Beast while Arushka liberates her friends. The Protectors are closing in on Noah when Arushka and Moshi gallop into the fray and scoop Noah from the Beast and on to freedom!

Arushka fears that Moshi must not be the only animal in the future of the world. She tells Noah if he helps her she will help him get to a power source to effect his escape home. What choice does he have?

1 - 8 THE SECRET ENTRANCE

Tao has a plan to capture the Nomads with the help of his Sentinel he will trap them in their own lair! In the Beast he watches on the screen as Arushka and Chip release Moshi and Noah and Geneva head towards the Mine. he and Jett race across the Red Desert chasing the signal, closing in.

Noah and Geneva manage to hide just in time, thwarting Tao. But inside the Beast Sutch continues to record the Sentinel's readings, logging the caverns entrances. Tao outlines his plan to Sutch and orders more Protectors and supplies of Thunderstone. He will get them this time!

Having secreted himself in a Protector vehicle returning to the Beast, Noah is shocked as a hand grabs him. Its Sundance. But now they are both trapped as protector guards surround them!

1 - 9 SABOTAGE

Still trapped under the Beast trailer, Noah and Sundance see Arushka approaching on Moshi. Tao, impressed with their bravery, and interested in Moshi steps out to confront her, giving Noah and Sundance the chance to get inside the Beast trailer and sabotage the map co-ordinates that would lead to the capture of the Nomads. With the mission accomplished Noah and Sundance say their farewells, Noah heading off to the Keep and power.

Tao dispatches the Protectors, offering a reward, to whoever captures Noah. the glittering prize of a vehicle all the incentive they need. Alone Tao tries to contact the Master. No answer—he storm out.

With the Nomads safe again for the moment, Arushka heads to the Mine where Noah is Jett's captive.

Quick thinking gets Noah and Arushka into the Beast trailer. Accessing the power source, Noah grabs Arushka's hand, they white-out as a volatile Tao rips the door open. Where are they?

1 - 10 ALIENS ON THE FARM

Noah and Arushka white-in arriving in some bush country abundant with wildlife, and to Arushka's delight, horses. Her reverie is shattered as gunshots ring through the air. An outraged Arushka runs to the noise and confronts Bully and Mac who are trying to cull kangaroos. Not happy at being interrupted they warn Noah and Arushka off. They are saved from these lads only to be imprisoned by their saviour, Duane an alien fanatic. This time they will have to believe him, he has proof!

In Haven the Shadowmaster has contacted Tao, demanding that he make the capture of Noah his first priority. Travelling to the Deep Road, Tao forces Ferris, a young timid boy, into spying on the Nomads. He wants to know where they hide!

Free again Arushka and Noah prepare to leave. But things go terribly wrong and Noah arrives back in Haven in the company of dozens of animals and birds and the sheepdog Dolly, but without Arushka. Arushka is alone and trapped in the past!

1 - 11 FRIENDS IN THE PAST

Tao has dispatched his Protectors to Noah's arrival co-ordinates, this time there will be no escape. Arushka, still trapped in the past and hunted by Bully, Mac and Duane, saves Mac from being trampled by a wild Brume. Awed by the mystical effect she has on the animal they listen to her story. Duane and Mac agree to help her. But Bully standing alone is not to be trusted. The Protectors close in on Noah but Dolly sends them scattering, terrified as they have never seen a monster like this dog. Noah must get to a power source and go back and save Arushka... who is with Duane and Mac rounding up horses when Noah whites-in. in a race against time, Bully having called the police, Noah powers up his PH-Ts and he and Arushka, now astride one of the horses white-out. Tao is preparing to demonstrate his dominance over the animals that have his troops cowering when Noah, Arushka and the horses arrive in a whirlwind of light and dust and power. The Protectors again run scared from these strange Beasts. More animals have arrived in Haven!

1 - 12 ESCAPE FROM THE PROTECTORS

Arushka now has the horses she wanted. No more animals Noah wants to go home. Bidding them farewell he heads off towards the Mine. On the way a brave and loyal Dolly saves him again and his journey must be abandoned.

The Shadowmaster exerts his power. Tao must mine more Thunderstone! He orders Tao to leave Noah to him, he has a plan!

The Nomads have made their way back to the Cavern, but unknown to them, lurking in the darkness, following and watching their every move is Ferris.

The Triumvirate summon Noah's family and Dr. Pretorius to appear before them. the charge is one of unauthorised scientific experimentation. North Col's strict laws must be obeyed if they wish to remain part of the community.

As the sun rises on a new day Noah wakes from a dream of a world full of animals. he forges a pact with Arushka—together they will save animals from past and bring them to the future, to Haven.

1 - 13 THE ELECTRO-NET

In the middle of the Red desert a furious Tao stands before a burning effigy of himself. Unguarded the Beast Trailer looms behind. Noah and Arushka enter it and begin the first of many risky sorties to access the power they will need to bring back the wondrous collection of animals that will fill the magnificent landscape that is Haven.

With the mission accomplished it is time for Noah to leave but Tao's tightened security will make this the most dangerous attempt of all for Noah.

Ferris, fleeing from an unexpected meeting with Dolly and her new-born puppies, is captured by an equally nervous Savage and Rork. They gather up the puppies and Ferris and head to the Keep where Tao is demonstrating the Electronets—his latest weapon in his war against the Nomads and now the animals also. Using this distraction to his advantage Noah sneaks in but is himself a victim of the Electronet. Tao has finally captured Noah, who still a little stunned, refuses to talk. But Tao has Dolly's puppies and unless Noah co-operates he will harm them with the Electronet!

1 - 14 TAO'S FORCE

Noah has been forced to give in to Tao, who would have used the destructive Electronet on Dolly's puppies. A prisoner in the Keep, Noah discovers Ferris, retrieves his PH-Ts and with Feris help escapes. Only to find Arushka, the opposite direction. Noah has to stop her, he tries to smash the Net but is zapped and thrown to the ground, unconscious.

The captive miners are galvanised into action and while the battle rages Sundance and Chip get Noah out, but Ferris is caught and this time he'd better tell Tao where the Nomads hide!

Tao's army, spearheaded by the Beast races towards the Nomads cavern. Noah and the Nomads are trapped, Jett's Thunder-oil smoke machine will flush them from their network of tunnels. This time there is no escape!

1 - 15 THE WEAPON

Noah and the Nomads are forced from safety by the Thunderstone smoke that continues to billow out of the Cavern, they are surrounded by Protectors and trapped by the Electronets. if captured they will be unable to stop Tao. Noah, their only hope, must return with technology to fight the Electronets.

Using the power of the Electronets he takes Geneva's hand and they white-out... arriving in the raging blizzards of Topside North Col where they succumb to the freezing conditions.

Now that Noah has gone Tao frees the Nomads, he just wanted Noah. He has called a truce, but why? Found by Dr. Pretorius and nursed to health Noah and Geneva are called before the Triumvirate for a preliminary hearing. There are a lot of questions that require answers and as there is no evidence to prove time-travel the matter will need to be investigated in depth. Noah placed under house arrest and a frightened and confused Geneva is seized by a Holocop and led from the holodeck, a prisoner.

1 - 16 MEETING WITH THE SHADOW MASTER

Sundance, jumped by Sutch in the Deep Road, is lost to the Devils run. As he fights the rapids to stay alive the Nomads search unsuccessfully for him. Ferris now accepted as one of them, delivers a distressing message from the Shadowmaster that Noah and Geneva will not return to Haven so there will be no weapons. Their battle has been lost before it even began! Who is the Shadowmaster and how did he know Noah was back in North Col?

Sundance is rescued by the peace loving Sandtribers who take him over the Mountains of the Mist and to his first breathtaking vision of the ocean. Meanwhile, the Shadowmaster is ordering Tao to speed up his efforts in locating the Thunderstone Motherlode, he must find it, it is the future of Haven!

A disempowered Dr. Pretorius manages to have Geneva released into Noah's custody and convinces the others that a demonstration of time-travel will settle the matter. Geneva prepares for her journey home but something goes wrong and Noah fails to white-out. The Triumvirate accuse him of lying. Both he and Geneva will now pay the price for breaching North Col law!

1 - 17 LIES AND SECRETS

Noah and Geneva are found guilty. For Noah this could mean 5 years without any privileges and for Geneva, exile Topside where she must try and survive the Impact Winter. the Triumvirate sentences them to work detail until they reach their conclusions.

Arushka finds a groggy Sundance who was returning home from the Sandtribers and was zapped by and Electronet. She is outraged—Tao has lied, there was a truce! Realising that he has been found out, a furious Tao seeks out Ferris, and forces him to lie to the Nomads. To tell them it was a mistake, a disobedient Protector, it will not happen again.

Becky breaks Noah and Geneva out of the Discipline Centre and takes them to Dr. Pretorius who gives Noah a pair of PH-Ts. He can take Geneva home at last.

1 - 18 THE SILVER WINGS

Dr. Pretorius leads Geneva and Noah through a Topside blizzard to his secret retreat where there is power. Armed with the PH-Ts and Dr. Pretorius' Silverwing weapon, which will defeat Tao's Electronets, Noah is ready to take Geneva back to Haven.

Arriving they stare in awe at their surroundings, it is the ocean and it is truly magnificent. Turning at the sound of a familiar voice they are stunned to discover that Becky has somehow managed to accidentally travel with them. After a rest good food and the company of the Sandtribers the trio commence their journey home.

Coming across an Electronet, Noah makes a discovery that will have serious consequences—Tao has activated the nets but the Silverwing weapon is faulty and ineffective against them.

With Becky's help repairs are made to the Silverwing but he test comes when the Nomads discover Tao has targeted horses as his first victims. Noah and the Nomads can only hope that the Silverwing will work. Noah throws it, it flies through the air, passing through the nets and returns to land at his feet. The horse escape unharmed through the Electronets. It has worked! They are triumphant!

1 - 19 TAO'S NEW WEAPON

Tao sits in the Beast watching his anger rise, as one by one all of the Electronets are destroyed. The Silverwing has saved the animals. Noah, his sister Becky and the Nomads have won the battle but not the war.

The Shadowmaster arrives, interested only in results. Tao convinces him that using the maserguns he can get rid of the Nomads then nothing will stop them finding the Thunderstone Motherlode.

In the cavern as the Nomads sleep, Chip sneaks out. It doesn't matter what Arushka says, he must go and help Sundance at the Mine. He teams up with him just as Tao is demonstrating the maserguns and panicking, tries to make a run for it before Sundance can stop him.

Meanwhile Noah, Becky and the Nomads begin their trek to the ocean, unaware that Chip has been captured by Tao.

With Chip his prisoner Tao instructs Sundance that unless the others surrender, Chip will be history. In a race against time, Moshi carries Arushka and Noah across Haven. they will have to give Tao what he wants. Themselves!

1 - 20 THE SERUM

With Noah and Arushka safely imprisoned in the Beast, Tao roars off leaving Chip alone under the relentless sun of the Red Desert. Sundance and Becky, on a rescue mission find him, exhausted and thirsty but alive.

A smug Tao, with Noah his captive audience taunts him... just get to the point! Tao produces a disk that he claims was found in the ruins of the old holodeck. Noah will watch it only if Arushka is with him.

The end of North Col unfolds, his family's suffering because of his illegal time-travel, the horrors of the rat carried disease, rabies, sweeping through the panicked citizens. Is he responsible?

Noah believes he is the only one who can save his people—he must return. But if I am the only survivor, asks Noah, what happened to me? Tao has one more piece of information... you reappear, he says, as the Shadowmaster.

1 - 21 RATS IN NORTH COL

Tao offers Noah a share of a vaccine against the rabies virus and power to return to him to North Col. With Noah gone and the maserguns to rid Haven of the animals, he is now free to find more Thunderstone.

Noah and Becky return, but where is everyone? What is happening? Was Tao right? They find Dr. Pretorius who confirms Noah's fears, rats have been seen in North Col. Producing the vials of vaccine given to him by Tao, Noah tells Dr. Pretorius everything.

Until the vaccine can be tested Dr. Pretorius advises them they must hide, there's nothing he could do if the Triumvirate found them.

In Haven, Tao has the breakthrough he needs, a lead to a strong concentration of Thunderstone in the mountains. But the Sandtriber presence there must be eliminated. Marshalling his Protector forces, they move out in convoy. Nothing can stop him now!

1 - 22 THE TRIBUNAL

The thought that he could be the monstrous Shadowmaster tortures Noah. He waits anxiously for results as Simon continues to test the vaccine.

When Becky produces the disk she took from Tao detailing apocalyptic future events Noah calls for an Open Forum in which the citizens of North Col can decide on this evidence for themselves. If he can convince them to listen, he may be able to save them.

Tao feels they are near the source of the Thunderstone—the Motherlode! He will not be hindered by anyone or anything. As he prepares to fire on some horses the Silverwing swoops through the air, disarms his masergun and returns to Sundance. The beautiful animals are safe. An enraged Tao orders his troops to move in, get them. Faced with the Protectors new weapons the Nomads are surrounded!

Noah has failed and he and his family are placed under house arrest. With Becky's help he eludes the holocops escaping to Dr. Pretorius retreat only to be confronted by the Shadowmaster. This time the nightmare is real.

1 - 23 FUTURE VISIONS

Noah cannot believe that he is, or that in the future he will become, the creature that stands before him. The Shadowmaster tells Noah that it is time he learnt the truth. They both white-out of North Col and arrive in Haven.

The Shadowmaster challenges Noah—was it right to bring the animals to Haven? They outnumber the humans and will continue to breed. Good, says Noah defending their rights, their place in the laws of nature.

The Shadowmaster lauds the wonders of Thunderstone, its power will bring the human race back to his former greatness! It cannot be wasted on animals. If I am to become what you are, says Noah, why can't I change the future and so change myself? What is happening to me? To the Nomads?... But he is back in North Col.

Back to rats scurrying everywhere, panicking citizens who don't see, as does Noah and his family, that the rats are in fact an illusion they are holograms. Into this pandemonium the Shadowmaster appears and laughing mirthlessly, removes his mask revealing himself it is Dr. Pretorius he is the Shadowmaster!

1 - 24 THE HEARING

The Daniels family are blamed for the rabies virus and the North Col community will not listen as Noah tells them the rats weren't real but holograms. Matters worsen when it is discovered the vaccine held as evidence has been stolen. Simon's subsequent collapse causes everyone to panic... he has a virus!

Liz finds that the disk given to Noah by Tao is nothing but a series of sophisticated computer generation images. Who is responsible for this dangerous hoax?

Noah returns to Haven to collect more vaccine to save his father. But the Mine has been abandoned. Tao has moved everyone to the Mountains of the Moon in search of the Motherlode.

Noah makes his way across the Red Desert. He must save his friends and get the vaccine before it is too late! Inadvertently a Kestrel gives Tao the answer he has been searching for. Now the Shadowmaster and Tao stand, transfixed—before them is the secret of life, youth, and absolute power - it is the core of the Nemesis Comet- the pure Thunderstone Motherlode!

1 - 25 "EPISODE 25"

While the unsuspecting citizens of North Col are preparing for their journey to Haven, Dr. Pretorius is assuring Tao that a labour force will arrive soon. Becky's suspicions are aroused she sees Dr. Pretorius behaving strangely. As she explores a deserted North Col she discovers that Dr. Pretorius has the missing vaccine. Captured by the Shadowmaster she is forced to join the others in Haven.

Noah struggles with the Shadowmaster unmasking him as Dr. Pretorius. Noah is not the evil Shadowmaster. Forced by Dr. Pretorius to listen to his great vision of a new Haven they arrive at Tao's base camp just as the recaptured Nomads are herded in.

An argument erupts between Tao and Pretorius and to prove his authority Dr. Pretorius exiles the Nomads - through time into the snowy blizzard of North Col.

1 - 26 FINALLY FREE AGAIN

In a Topside blizzard the bewildered Nomads make their way into North Col where Geneva guides them to the holodeck. Through a combination of deduction and good luck the Nomads propel themselves forward in time to Haven where their reappearance is monitored by Sutch.

Sutch, who is under instructions from Dr. Pretorius to take Noah and Becky to a place they can never return from, instead reunites them with the Nomads. He too will now join them in their battle to defeat the Protectors and Dr. Pretorius. Together they formulate a plan to destroy the Thunderstone.

Noah and the Nomads move on the unprotected Thunderstone Motherlode. As Sutch and Sundance hijack the Beast and liberate the enslaved work force, Noah, Becky and the other Nomads spread salt out at the Motherlode base. The showdown has begun!

Tao and Dr. Pretorius move to protect their Thunderstone, their future. Tao, now revealed to be a hologram himself has targeted Noah but Becky's quick thinking saves him. Tao flickers wildly and disappears! Dr. Pretorius, his life's work destroyed pleads with Noah who, raising a Masergun, ignited the salt and with it the Motherlode. The war over, Noah throws down the Masergun. Behind him Dr. Pretorius is left engulfed by the flames.

Tranquillity in Haven, the Nomads and animals are free. Noah, his family and the citizens return to North Col—there must be a past so there will be a future. As Noah hangs up the PH-Ts he smiles with the memories he will hold on to.

In Haven Arushka rides proudly on Moshi. Before her the landscape is filled with the animals of the world. They will live free once more.

2 - 1 THE OLD PEDDLER

In Haven of 2085, Arushka rides Moshi, her black mare, through the Riverlands. She's inspecting the contented Animals which she and Noah have transported to the future to avoid extinction. Dolly follows at a distance... But we see the faithful sheepdog distracted and lured away.

Above the North Col of 2020, the Impact Winter produced by the Nemesis Comet still prevails. Noah discovers Dolly, terrified and half frozen in the blizzard. How had the dog travelled back through time and who sent her?

Arushka returns to the compound, where the Nomads now live as a settled community. With their enemies vanquished and the contentious mineral Thunderstone wiped from the face of the Earth, Haven is a peaceful place. An eccentric old peddler, Monsoon, visits with gossip about the comings and goings of new settlers and about the weather, which in Haven has lately been extreme and unpredictable.

Dolly discovered in North Col by the authorities, is condemned to banishment in the snow. To save her, Noah breaks the new rules which ban time- travel. He breaks into the sealed Holodeck and used the PH-Ts to return again, with Dolly to Haven.

He arrives at the height of the storm and helps the Nomads save their hut from a lightning felled tree.

Then there's time for a reunion. But the Dolly mystery is unexplained and some unidentified figures are watching them through the trees.

2 - 2 QUICK SAND

Noah is quick to notice that there is a dissent among the Nomads. Now they're no longer on the run from a common enemy there's a restlessness.

Old Monsoon visits with his wares and tall tales and wheedles an invitation to stay the night. In the morning, Noah discovers he's taken the PH-Ts and he and Arushka set off to the get the precious time travel device back.

Meanwhile in North Col, Becky tries to cover for Noah's absence by producing the Noahgram, a hologrammatic version of himself which Noah has recently created. Its behaviour creates bizarre situations that the ruse is quickly discovered.

Chip, annoyed at being left behind, determined to catch Monsoon by himself. Against Kwan's warnings, he saddles up Moshi, Arushka's majestic black mare.

Arushka and Noah catch up with Monsoon and demand the PH-Ts returned, but the crafty old man denies having seen them. Meanwhile, Chip is having trouble with Moshi—but he hears the rattle of Monsoons pots and pans in the distance and manages to spur the horse on ... into the woods.

All is silent and there is no sign of Monsoon, but something in the bushes frightens Moshi. She rears and Chip is thrown into a pit of quicksand. The frightened horse bolts, leaving ship alone and helpless, sinking further into the quagmire. What could have frightened Moshi so much shed leave a Nomad in Peril?

Alerted to the danger by Moshi, bridled but riderless, Noah and Arushka race to Chips rescue. But they're too late... As Chip disappears below the sand four strangers to Haven haul him out—Myah, a barbaric looking young woman and her three brother, Rorden, Tod and Lyal. Not only have they saved Chips life, they also have the PH-Ts, which Rorden reluctantly relinquishes. The Nomads and the new family pledge a wary friendship.

With the PH-Ts returned, Noah must face the fact that there is no source of power for them in Haven. How will he get back to North Col?

2 - 3 BROKEN DREAMS

As dry electrical storms prevail in Haven there is growing concern about the changing climate. Noah devised a plan to harness the lightning, which stokes most often on Razorback Ridge and so powers the PH-Ts.

Monsoon wins back favour in the Nomads compound by bringing in a wounded animal and half of a weathered amulet. Kwan produces the other half, given to him by his long lost mother. With the prospect of reuniting with her Kwan bids the Nomads farewell. Though his homes are dashed, the heart-broken Kwan has too much pride to return to the compound.

Monsoon, meanwhile is spooked by a visit to the family. It seems these people can communicate with each other telepathically.

Up on Razorback Ridge, Arushka insists Noah test the PH-Ts before using them on himself. The stand-in scarecrow is burnt to cinders as lightening is channelled into the PH-Ts. Nevertheless Noah ignores all protests, reconfigures the equipment and successfully time-travels back to North Col.

Noah's family are relieved to see him but the North Col authorities thrust him into the detention centre for breaking the time travel ban.

Myah is lurking in the North Col sludge pipes. How and why has she accompanied Noah on his time travels?

2 - 4 IS NOAH BANISHED?

Myah makes herself known to Becky and Russell, a clumsy classmate whose suspicion is quickly supplanted by infatuation with the stranger. When the news is conveyed to Noah he realises he must take her back to Haven immediately. But how to escape the detention centre in order to do it? Russell reluctantly agrees to help by taking Noah's place in the cell. Bamboozling the Holocops, Becky smuggles Russell in and Noah out.

Meanwhile in Haven, Lyal pays a visit to the Nomads compound. his bullying and arrogance infuriate Sundance and he gladly accepts when Lyal and his brothers who secretly use their telepathic powers against him.

It's memorial day in North Col. Syndia, the most officious member of the ruling Triumvirate, is giving her address. With everyone distracted the two fugitives make it up to the holodeck. Myah shows an over zealous interest in the workings of the Holodeck as Noah successfully white lights them out.

By now Russell has been discovered. A furious Syndia strides into the detention centre and sees the impostor. Noah is now in deeper trouble than ever.

Back in Haven he and Nomads view Myah and her brothers with increasing suspicion.

2 - 5 BECKY'S TRICK

Syndia, still fuming, pronounces banishment for Noah when he returns.

In Haven, Noah is awaiting the next lightning strike. Myah pleads with him not to leave, making vague promises of power and success. She is left behind angry and frustrated, as Noah white lights out once again.

Noah arrives home secretly and employs a radical plan to avoid banishment. He uses the PH-Ts to travel 24 hours back in time to the detention cell.

In the re-run yesterday, Syndia storms in and finds Noah safely locked away, rather than discovering Russell.

Back in today, Becky is delighted with the success of their plan, but Noah is shaken by its implications. He swears never to use time travel technology to change history again.

Meanwhile in Haven, Geneva falls into an animal trap- who would make such a thing in Haven? Chip runs off to alert the others and doesn't see the herd of wild brumbies approaching. While Lyal and Rorden muster the animals towards the trap, Tod, the youngest of the family, discovers Geneva and places himself between the trap and the stampeding animals. He manages to divert them and pulls Geneva to safety. When they spot the Nomads approaching, Rorden and Lyal flee.

Tod is brought back to the compound as a prisoner. As a hunter of animals he is an enemy to the Nomads. But his boyish charms are not lost on his warden, Geneva. She is convinced Tod has learned his lesson and successfully argues for his release.

At their campsite, Myah rips into her brothers for getting on the wrong side of the Nomads. They need them... but for what?

2 - 6 LAST WARNING

There has been no rain in Haven for a long time and Arushka is worried about the animals.

While checking up on them she sees Rorden, the most eccentric of Myah's brothers, scurrying out of the rocks below Razorback Ridge. She and Sundance return to the spot to investigate. They discover Rorden's Grotto, filled with weird equipment.

Meanwhile Myah is conducting a few investigations of her own. Once again she uses the Nomads good will to her advantage and is snooping around the Beast, an old vehicle still filled with gadgetry of its precious owners, the protectors.

The brothers return to their cave and catch the unsuspecting intruders. Arushka and Sundance have no means of escape, locked in a primitive cage. What is the strange family up to?

Above North Col, Noah finds a pair of modified PH-Ts, exactly where Dolly was found in the new. Somebody, sharing his knowledge, must have sent her deliberately. Risking the inevitable censure, Noah once more travels to Haven to find the truth.

The Nomads have received a message from a friendly Kestrel. Noah and the gang embark on a mission to rescue Arushka and Sundance. In the struggle between the Nomads and the Brothers, Sundance is recaptured. And now Rorden has got hold of the PH-Ts. At last, he says, dangling them in from of the caged Sundance, I have a human subject for my experiments.

2 - 7 DISCO FEVER

Rorden prepares to send Sundance on an experimental time trip. In a failed rescue attempt, Chip is caught up in the white- light along with Sundance.

The two boys arrive in the a present day Dance Club. Chip is fazed by his surroundings, but Sundance finds the rhythm of the music intriguing and has soon caught the eye of a pretty girl.

Myah returns to find the brothers in a panic. She is furious about their inept behaviour. Not only have they damaged the Family's relations with the Nomads almost beyond repair, but Myah is forced to ask for Noah's help in retrieving Sundance and Chip.

Noah's assistance is not cheap- Myah has to answer his questions. Myah reveals that she and her brothers come from the Silver City, a future metropolis- the pride of Haven in 2235. Noah extricates Chip and Sundance from the Dance Club, just in time to avoid the wrath of a jealous boyfriend.

On Razorback Ridge, Myah and her brothers are part of a welcoming committee, but the Nomads want nothing to do with the meddlesome family.

2 - 8 THE MYSTERIOUS VALLEY

Drought conditions in Haven are at a crisis point. Desperate to give the precious animals the best chance for survival, Arushka and the Nomads attempt to must them from the vast, parched high country.

A scrub fire breaks out and the frightened animals are scattering when Myah and the brothers appear, offering help. Together with the Nomads they manage to herd the Animals to a lowland area where there are still a few patches of pasture.

Arushka and Noah warily agree to hear Myah's suggestions for a more permanent solution to the drought. She explains that in the Silver City of 2235 their father was in charge of a weather control system and that they have landed here as a result of Rorden's fallible experiments with time- travel.

Rorden unveils the futuristic blueprint for a rain machine and Noah is astounded to realise the building of such a thing is feasible. But with Thunderstone eradicated from Haven there would be no source of power gigantic enough to drive this machine from the future.

Back in North Col, Becky discovers a storeroom filling with steam. She is struggling with valves and overrides switches when Liz, her mother, comes to the rescue. Something is wrong with the exhaust line, which Liz believes could indicate serious problems with North Col's foundations.

In the Haven compound the Nomads are mulling over the impasse with the rain machine. Monsoon arrives with tales of a distant valley, high in the mountains beyond, where the Nomads have ever ventured. Legend has it that it is home to a huge cube of pure Thunderstone. The Nomads agree on an excursion there. They have to find out if the Thunderstone cube is more than a myth. It could be the key to saving the animals.

The relentless trek upwards in the heat seems to be fruitless. The thirsty Nomads eventually find the mystical Valley of Chazon, but instead of a Thunderstone Cube, there is a great lake in the valley floor. Arushka collapses by the shore in despair when she discovers that the clear blue lake is salt water.

2 - 9 NEW HOPE

Arushka, Noah and Sundance notice a curious resonance about the Valley. Even Dolly the sheepdog senses it. Noah discovers that the whole atmosphere is electrically charged. Sundance volunteers to swim and discovers a square blue object at the bottom of the lake!

But how can the Nomads move the enormous Thunderstone Cube? Arushka is determined to overcome any obstacle and end the drought. She and Noah use the PH-Ts to travel back to the valley- in a time before the lake filled its floor. After all, in the past Noah and Arushka have moved elephants in time, what's to stop them transporting the cube to present day Haven? Noah tunes up the PH-Ts but the cube resists the white light and Noah and Arushka find they haven't moved it at all. Clearly something bigger than the PH-Ts is required.

Much of the technology required to create the rain machine is what also enables the PH-Ts. Its all to do with the manipulation of sub-atomic particles of light. If Noah could build the PH-T technology into the Beast, an old truck sitting in the Nomads compound, it could be converted not only into a larger time machine, but also a rain machine.

First Noah must travel back to North Col and gather the components he needs. In exchange for access to the rain machine blueprints Myah insists that Rorden accompany Noah.

In the Holodeck, Noah enlists Becky's help to keep an eye on Rorden. Noah sneaks down to the storeroom to assemble more equipment. But he is unaware of the dangerous fault in North Col's exhaust line. Noah and Rorden narrowly escape discovery, leaving poor Becky to face the music once again.

Back in Haven, Noah contemplates the most difficult task of his life. Can he turn the Beast into an effective time/rain machine, driven by the Cube, or will Arushka's hopes for the animals be dashed forever?

2 - 10 THE BAD SURPRISE

Myah instructs her brothers to co-operate fully in the task of converting the Beast. Old rivalry sparked between Lyal and Sundance. Geneva tells Tod of her misgivings about bringing Thunderstone back into their lives. She's seen how harmful the valuable material can be when it falls into the wrong hands.

Noah, working under immense pressure, finally finishes converting the Beast. The Nomads and the Family pile into the vehicle and Noah transports them back in time, to the Valley of Chazon.

While the whole party is busy manoeuvring the Cube onto the Beast's roof, the brake shoes give away. Geneva is trapped in the cabin and the Beast picks up speed and hurtles towards a cliff. She refuses to jump to safety and abandon the time/rain machine upon which the future of Haven rests. With quick thinking and courage she manages to avert disaster.

The Beast, with the Cube secured on its roof, is white-lighted back to Razorback Ridge in present day Haven. At Noah's command a great blue beam is thrown to the heavens. Clouds roll into the sky and amidst crashes of thunder and swirling winds, the rain begins. A lyrical montage shows us the animals relief, waterholes starting to fill and water trickling into dry creek beds.

Back in North Col, Becky and her parents are concerned. Structural damage is worsening but Syndia persists with the cover up. Liz plans to confront her at the next triumvirate meeting.

At the compound, Noah and the Nomads fall contentedly asleep, listening to the raindrops on the roof. But up on the Ridge, the family are silently taking possession of the Beast. Rorden struggles to activate the machine- but why?

The next morning Arushka and Noah are out riding Moshi, inspecting the relief on the land and animals when... Arushka is thrown from her horse in an ambush and Noah is taken prisoner by Lyal and Tod. Myah is waiting in the Beast and delivers Noah an ultimatum.

2 - 11 EVACUATION

Myah tells Noah the truth. She and her brothers stole the precious Thunderstone Cube from the Silver City. As punishment they were banished through time forever. But they secretly rigged the banishment program so it would send them to the very same place and time as the Thunderstone Cube- Haven. Noah realises he's been tricked into furthering the Family's evil master plan. The Beast is now a super weapon, able to rain down destruction anywhere, starting with the Silver City. And since Rorden can't work it, they'll take Noah, by force.

The disintegration of North Col is now obvious. Syndia proposes evacuation, but Becky and her parents know nobody can survive in the snow. Maybe Noah will have a solution...

The Nomads besiege the Beast and after a struggle recapture it.

Becky arrives to tell Noah of North Col's plight. He whites the Beast out, leaving Myah frustrated.

Noah and the Nomads arrive to witness the total collapse of the MALL. On the snowfields above, Noah angles the Beast's beam downwards and the whole colony morphs back to the safety of two weeks ago. Now Noah and the Nomads must deal with Haven.

But as they leave North Col, Myah and the Brothers white in. Myah tells Becky and her parents, that if they want to see Noah alive again, they must accompany her back to Haven.

Back at the Compound, Noah and Arushka contemplate the Cube under a full moon. The prismatic affect the Cube has in combination with the moonlight reveals some astonishing secrets to Noah. Thunderstone has the property of annihilating itself!

If he took the Beast back to the year of the Nemesis Comet, he could use the beam to disintegrate it.

There would never be an impact... and there would never be a super weapon.

2 - 12 THE SUPER WEAPON

Myah and her brothers hold Becky and her parents hostage. But when Noah is about to give himself up, another Noah enters the grotto. Becky has brought the Noahgram! Myah releases them, believing it's the real Noah.

Back at the compound, Noah states his plan to destroy the comet. Liz reminds him that if he does hell alter the future. There will be no Haven. A vote is taken: Noah should stop the comet for the greater good. Myah having seen through the Noahgram, arrives at the Compound to see... Noah and Arushka white-out. They arrive in the year 2002 at Cortillo Plain. This is the command site for the rocket attack on the Comet, which is already on course for Earth.

They confront General Cardell, the commanding officer. He must abandon the plan to use rockets. It won't stop the devastation, but Noah can bring a safe alternative from the future. Cardell dismisses them as cranks.

In Haven, Geneva accidentally gives away part of Noah's plan to Tod.

Noah tries to warn the world of the imminent mistake on television, but Cardell stops the broadcast.

Pursued by security vehicles and helicopters, Noah and Arushka race in to an empty hanger where they white out, leaving the General Cardell absolutely confounded.

Back in Haven, its decided the Nomads must take the Beast to Cortillo Plain and themselves preempt the rocket strike.

Liz wont go, since at Cortillo... shed meet herself. Simon, Noah's father and Becky elect to stay with her, but she and Noah quietly confer: there may be a way they can all be reunited.

The Nomad and Noah pile in with Moshi and Dolly.

The Beast appears on Cortillo Plain and we reveal Myah and the brothers clinging on to the trailer.

They've made the journey as well!

2 - 13 BEFORE THE COMET

The Nemesis Comet is hurtling pass the moon towards Earth. It is so close now it can be seen looming in the skies above the General Store, where the Nomads refuel the Beast.

The Nomads head straight for the Cortillo Plain Installation. Sundance, an uneasy rookie driver, steers the Beast across country and through the Installations security fencing.

Meanwhile, Myah and her brothers have commandeered a security vehicle and are sneaking past the installations guards in a more subtle fashion.

In the Operations Room General Cardell ignores a young scientists warnings about the disastrous effect his rockets will have on the Nemesis comet. The young scientist is Noah's mother! This is an added problem for Noah and Arushka, who are hiding in the shadows. If they don't get the young Liz on a helicopter and back to safety or the underground research facility, Noah might not even be born.

Its less then an hour till the rockets are launched and the Nomads are heading for the radio telescope. Arushka is on Moshi, riding alongside the Beast. Myah and the brothers, having failed to waylay Noah at the installation, are in hot pursuit in the security van. Arushka wheels them off course, causing their vehicle to overturn on the rocky desert plain.

Noah aligns the Beast's projector with the Radio Telescope Reflector. Myah, dishevelled from the crash, is determined to stop Noah from saving the Earth from impact and wasting the precious Thunderstone Cube. Arushka wrestles her away from the Beast's controls, leaving Noah free to make frantic last minute adjustments.

As the rocket launch countdown nears zero, Noah hits go, sending the beam skywards. The Nemesis Comet is shattered and its blue rock dissipates harmlessly into space.

While everyone else is staring at the spectacle in the sky, Myah and her Brothers look down in horror. They are literally disappearing!

And in Haven the Daniels and Monsoon watch the animals disappear and the landscape change. Now!... says Becky and dons the PH-Ts Noah left for her.

The Daniels and Monsoon arrive at Cortillo Plain for a brief reunion with Noah and the Nomads before Noah makes a final command and they all white out together—side-stepping time to somewhere in the future.

3 - 1 "EPISODE 1"

It is the year 2020 where Noah Daniels is famous for making the first colonisation of space possible on a far off planet named E-Delta. Noah's comfortable existence is shattered when a gang of vengeful kids travel back to Earth through space and time - using the wormhole technology he invented - and kidnap his best friend Arushka.

3 - 2 "EPISODE 2"

Arushka is held captive on E-Delta, where the Bioplex structure is the only thing that stands between the inhabitants and their hostile environment. You can't last long outside without an oxygen pack and, during the time of the red giant sun, you can't last at all. Drako, handsome leader of the E-Delta kids, advises Arushka to get used to her new home, she's sixty million light years from Earth and any hope of rescue. Noah and the Nomads have other ideas.

3 - 3 "EPISODE 3"

Noah meets Curly, a grizzly old hologram who tells him why the E-Delta kids want revenge against Earth and their mortal enemy - Noah Daniels himself! He and Chip must break Arushka out of the Bioplex and get back to Earth before anyone discovers his identity. Meanwhile, on Earth, the animals in the Wildlife Reserve are under threat with Arushka away.

3 - 4 "EPISODE 4"

Drako and his gang make another raid on Earth, this time targeting the Horizon Foundation where Noah works. They are surprised by Arushka, on her swift horse, Moshi. She stops Drako from taking Noah back through a wormhole and, in the confusion, a young member of the raiding party is left behind. Clio is alone and terrified by the strange beasts in the Wildlife Reserve.

3 - 5 "EPISODE 5"

Noah has been put under surveillance by Horizon Foundation security - for his own protection. In the Wildlife Reserve the Nomads begin to teach Clio about animals, while she shows them that not all E-Delta kids are bad. When Drako returns for Clio, the protective Nomads follow their new friend through the wormhole to E-Delta. Arushka and Kwan are taken prisoner, but Moshi is left outside the Bioplex with a wall of sand approaching.

3 - 6 "EPISODE 6"

Clio and Curly join forces and help Kwan and Arushka rescue Moshi. Drako returns to Earth and delivers Noah an ultimatum: the safe return of his friends in exchange for a canister of Thunderstone. He double crosses Noah, taking the canister and destroying Earth's only wormhole transporter.

3 - 7 "EPISODE 7"

APRA commences construction of a robot drone which will deliver the E-Delta kids' revenge on Earth. Arushka is furious when Drako brings animals from the Wildlife Reserve through a huge wormhole. How will they survive on E-Delta? Meanwhile, Noah and Liz are "borrowing" equipment from the off-limits LAB in order to construct a makeshift wormhole transporter.

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 8 "EPISODE 8"

Mr. Greenway confesses to helping Drako steal the animals and gives Noah the final clue he needs to piece together what Drako has in store for Earth. Arushka and Kwan's plan for getting themselves and the animals back home goes horribly wrong when Drako decides to take Moshi out for a ride.

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 9 "EPISODE 9"

Moshi saves Drako from being trapped outside the Bioplex under the red giant sun. Ivan loses confidence in Drako's leadership and dishes out his own punishment to anyone who helped Arushka escape with the animals. Noah and Arushka prepare to return to E-Delta to rescue their friends and put a stop to Drako's evil plan. Kwan must continue to pretend he stayed behind on E-Delta on purpose. How long will it be before his true loyalty is discovered by Ivan?

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 10 "EPISODE 10"

While the young Nomads set up camp in a cave shelter, Noah and Arushka infiltrate the Bioplex. The key to Drako's strike on Earth is the Thunderstone canister. In the process of seizing it, Noah meets a hologrammatic version of himself at 45 years of age, who sheds some light on why the E-Delta colony went bad.

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 11 "EPISODE 11"

Noah and Drako are put in an uncomfortable situation when a wormhole opened by Liz brings them back to Earth alone. Ivan seizes the opportunity to assume leadership and take over the strike on Earth. Drako must reassess his opinion of Noah when he saves him from drowning. The two boys, once mortal enemies, strike a deal that will benefit E-Delta and save Earth from destruction.

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 12 "EPISODE 12"

Noah must find out what happened to the lost parents of the E-Delta kids to keep Earth from being put under attack by E-Delta. Little does he know that Ivan has imprisoned drako along with the other nomads. Ivan sends the robot drone, with the canister, through a wormhole to the thunderstone ring surrounding earth. noah and his family shelter from a hail of falling rocks, the first sign that the asteroid belt is spiralling in towards the planet Earth.

Dir Mark DeFriest

3 - 13 "EPISODE 13"

Noah discovers the secret to making E-Delta fertile, but first he must stop the Thunderstone Ring from crushing Earth. The strain of executing the strike on Earth has made E-Delta unstable and the kids are evacuated from the Bioplex in the hope that salvation will arrive before the red giant rises. Noah must bring the thunderstone ring through space-time in a crazy attempt to save two worlds and right past mistakes.

TICK, THE

The life of a superhero is not easy. There are not enough dangers. However, someone must fight evil and protect good. The few who face this challenge have to leave behind comfort, security and a little sanity. Jumping from roof to roof in one single jump, the mysterious blue justice defender The Tick (Patrick Warburton, Seinfeld) patrols The City, and his limited knowledge of human life doesn't interfere with his desire to protect society. The frustrated and well behaved accountant known as Arthur (David Burke) left his job to join The Tick as The Moth, and now they're a crime-fighting duo. Arthur has always secretly wished being a superhero. Well, not so secretly, since he used his moth outfit (which looks more like a bunny) to work. On this fight against injustice The Tick also counts on Batmanuel (Nestor Carbonell, Suddenly Susan) a lovely latino superhero who never promotes himself without a worthy cause. His kryptonite is Captain Liberty (Liz Vassey), the government's number one weapon on the battle against supervillains.

The Tick died a quick death after its November 2001 Fox debut, doomed by its contra-Survivor timeslot and by the network's habit of airing bonus episodes on off days. Network mishandling aside, the live-action superhero parody may have been too strange to survive. Based on Ben Edlund's cult comic-book series (previously adapted as a Saturday-morning cartoon), and produced by Edlund with Seinfeld writer Larry Charles and Men In Black director Barry Sonnenfeld, The Tick presents Patrick Warburton as an overstuffed, blue-clad, heavily askew champion of justice. Warburton plays the hero as childlike and boisterous, with a springy monotone voice that overtly references Adam West's Batman. The character's over-articulation dead-ends into his limited intelligence: The worst epithet Warburton can think to call a robber is "Mr. Taking Stuff." Most of the nine completed Tick episodes consist mainly of Warburton casually hanging out with his hero pals: meek David Burke, slacker lothario Nestor Carbonell, and patriotic bombshell Liz Vassey. On the DVD collection's pilot-episode commentary track, Sonnenfeld admits that he considered Seinfeld a touchstone for the kind of show he wanted to make, and the "also-rans sit around talking" approach probably helped sink the series. The tone of the live-action Tick shares a little of the stale funk of the feature-film bomb Mystery Men, and the show is nowhere near as lively as either the Tick comic or the cartoon, which had more crime-fighting and a richer parade of colorful characters. Even Warburton's non sequitur outbursts aren't as surreal as those of his pen-and-ink counterparts; he never even shouts out the Tick's trademark battle-cry, "Spoon!" But for all The Tick's failings, it was better than most of its broadcast competition two years ago, and it was improving right up until it was yanked off the air. The interplay among the four principals was maturing, and the writers began to play with structure and subject matter, basing entire episodes on a super-villain's trial or a hero's funeral, and focusing on how heroes pursue personal relationships. In the end, the show was becoming a warm representation of professional camaraderie, and how four messed-up people learn to get by. Its demise was explicable, but that doesn't mean fans won't miss the sweet, dim Warburton. Still, the hero himself understood that "everything dies... even potatoes."

Trivia

When Family Guy started its fourth season, Peter Griffin made a list of shows that Fox canceled over the previous decade. Among the shows was the live action version of The Tick.

Apart from The Tick and Arthur, The Terror and Arthur's sister, Dot, are the only characters to appear in the comic book, the animated series, and the live-action show.

The "Big Blue Bug" lines, such as The Tick's speech bubble on the live-action series DVD cover, are references to New England Pest Control, a Providence, Rhode Island based extermination business which is locally famous for its large blue termite statue.

Based on the comic book "The Tick".

Episode Nine, "The Terror" never aired during the shows original run, but was included in a later DVD release.

When it is revealed to Arthur, Captain Liberty and Batmanuel that The Tick is working without a superhero license, he and Arthur go down to the DMV to obtain one. Only one problem -- The Tick doesn't know his date of birth, his social security number or his real name. In a quest to find out who he really is, Arthur does a search, which unites The Tick with a woman who claims to be his wife -- but is she the real thing? Meanwhile, Captain Liberty tries dating as a regular woman. And Batmanuel attempts to make the papers

1 - 5 ARTHUR NEEDS SPACE (A.K.A. ARTHUR NEEDS HIS SPACE)

Arthur runs into an old high school crush of his. Stacy Waxman is her name, and Batmanuel advises Arthur to keep his suit on no matter what, since Stacy seems to be attracted only to The Moth, not Arthur. Arthur schedules a date with Stacy, but he has a hard time getting rid of The Tick, who doesn't understand why he can't tag along. It's up to Captain Liberty and Batmanuel (who were trying to prevent nude photos of Captain Liberty from being printed in an adult magazine) to explain to The Tick what sex is even if he can't understand it. On patrol, The Tick watches a documentary on insects and how they kill and eat their mates after sex. He rushes back home, fearing Stacy might have killed Arthur. The Tick ruins his date, but fortunately, Stacy was after the man inside the suit. Meanwhile, Batmanuel saves Janet from being demoted while answering to hero court.

1 - 6 THE BIG LEAGUES

The Tick and Arthur are invited to join the League of Superheroes, an all-male, all-white organization that Captain Liberty and Batmanuel had been looking forward to join for a long time. Seeing Arthur and Tick being invited and not them, they decide to take action against the League for discrimination. They think they'll win the case, until they discover that Batmanuel's lawyer is the secret identity of The Champion, who is president of the league. Arthur and Tick eventually quit to support their friends. And once they discover the true identity of Steve, they settle for an amount of money that makes the League go bankrupt.

TIGER SEVEN

AKA: IRON MAN

AKA: IRON MAN TIGER 7

AKA: TETSUJIN TAIGA 7

AKA: TIGER SEBUN

The Primitives of the Mu Empire ruled the Earth until humans drove them underground. 14,000 years later a research team led by Professor Takigawa discovers an ancient temple. The professor's son, Go, is attacked by a Sand Primitive Sand Grudge. To save his son's life the professor performs heart transplant surgery, replacing Go's heart with an ancient artificial heart, he also gives his son an ancient pendant. The Mu Primevals attack again, everyone on the research team is killed, except for Takigawa, Go who vows to avenge the death of his father and friends.

Using the tiger-faced pendant to activate the powers of his artificial heart Takigawa, Go can transform into the super warrior Tetsujin Taiga Seibun (Iron Man Tiger Seven) with the words "Tiger Spark".

For the first 7 episodes Tiger 7 appeared without the red scarf. In episode 8 the scarf belonged to Takigawa, Go's girlfriend. After she was murdered by Stone Primitive, Go started wearing the scarf as a memorial to her. The scarf stays on him when he transform into Tiger 7.

Most of Tiger 7's special combat techniques come from his "Fight Glove": His most used technique is the "Tiger Cutter" karate chop. With "Tiger Hawk" his glove hand pierces the monster's body. He can throw his glove which becomes a sharp boomerang, "Tiger Glove Cutter". He can throw a powerful "Tiger Punch". He can also produce a powerful "Kick". In one instance he used a bladed weapon, "Tiger Slicer".

Tiger 7's belt gives him the power to heal wounds (his own or others), "Tiger Buckle Energy". If someone's heart has stopped beating Tiger 7 may be able to save them if he reaches them in time, by biting them and releasing "Tiger Energy" into their body. However, this puts a great strain on him. Tiger 7 can release all his energy in a single blast with "Buckle Energy Red Zone".

Tiger 7 can spray a gust of wind from his mouth, "Tiger Hurricane". His eyes fire a yellow beam, "Tiger Eye Attack". Tiger 7's most powerful weapon uses the jewel in his head, "Tiger Point". With it he absorbs light from the sun, converting it into a powerful laser, "Tiger Head Beam".

Takigawa, Go rides a Suzuki motorcycle which is equipped with rocket boosters, allowing it to reach speeds other motorcycles cannot match. When he transforms into Tiger 7 the motorcycle transforms into "Spike Go". Although is probably supposed to be happening all the time Spike Go is not actually seen until episode 6. Spike Go is faster than ordinary motorcycles and can fly. Spike Go comes drives itself to Tiger 7 when he roars. Spike Go can shoot flame and smoke. Using Spike Go, Tiger 7 performs the "Tiger Hurricane Top" attack, in which the monster is smashed under Spike Go's front wheel.

Takigawa, Go works with a group of scientific researchers who become an Anti Mu Primitive group, Professor Takaidou and his students(?): Kitagawa, Shiro; Hayashi, Sanpei; and Aoki, June (the only female). The child in this series is June's younger brother Jiro. June and Jiro are orphans, raised by Professor Takaidou who promised their father he would take care of them before the man died. Aoki, Jiro discovers that Takigawa, Go is Tiger 7 at the end of episode 9. Professor Takaidou eventually figures it out too but none of Go's other friends seem to notice the tiger pendant he wears or that Go and Tiger 7 wear the same red scarf. Kitagawa, Shiro is especially mean to Go believing he is a coward, who runs away when the monsters show up.

Nanjou, Tatsuya (Takigawa, Go) also starred in Henshin Ninja Arashi (1972-1973) as Hayate (Arashi). The music for Tetsujin Taiga 7 was composed by Kikuchi, Shunsuke, best known for his music for the original Gamera movies and classic Kamen Rider TV series and films.

TIME BUSTERS

A group of kids have to go through time searching for different objects. The kids are trying to prevent Time vandals from tampering with history.

This UK SF game show was just another excuse for a bunch of kids to go running around (usually a country estate) finding odd objects which are set around the houses whilst being given clues on how to find them. The game shows was hosted by Michael Troughton son of Patrick Troughton who had starred as the second Doctor in DOCTOR WHO. The series was shown on BBC2 in an 9.40am early morning Sunday slot.

TIME EXPOSURES

Time Exposure chronicles the lives of Elsie Makay Solms, a well of woman who lives with her four grand children, (Jessica, Mark, Winston and Anne) and her very proper butler Bradshaw in an Victorian house. The house is not your typical home, for in the basement is a light that causes whoever steps into it to be sent back in time. The grandchildren have been told to stay out of the basement, which off course they do not do.

The kids and the adults spend most of their time travelling into the past, however on occasion famous historical figures come into the present. Midway thought the series' run Clare, Mark and Jessica's mother, and Christopher, Bradshaw's streetwise nephew, join the cast.

Time Exposures is one of the most ambitious programmes chronicled in this database. It was something that is unheard of today: a locally produced drama series. Time Exposures was made even more of a challenge to produce due to the difficulties involved with the effects work required for a science fiction series. The series was made at CHEK TV, the CTV station in Victoria, British Columbia, Canada.

Being an Canadian produced show there often was an emphasis on important Canadians. Thus when Percy ends up on the Titanic (the destination of all good TV time travellers), he gets to meet the founder of the town of Prince Rupert who survived the disaster. Not all of the famous people presented however were real, some fictional characters like Sherlock Holmes and Romeo and Juliet were also encountered by the time travellers.

The story structure of the show is somewhat akin to that of a soap opera in that more than one plot is going on at any given time. It is thus somewhat essential to watch the episodes in order since one story is starting while another is winding down. Continual character development also makes viewing the show in order essential.

Due to good writing on a lot of effort on the part of the production team Time Exposures manages to be enjoyable despite an obviously low budget. The series' cast consisted of unknown performers, however several actors from the series have since had guest spots on other shows being made in British Columbia. Due to the small pool of actors available for guest roles, often a guest star would reappear on the show in a different role. Time Exposures was meant to run its course over one season since the events of the final episode do not leave an option for an exciting second season.

An half hour documentary entitled : The Making of Time Exposures was also produced. The episodes may not be titled. No on screen titles appear and inquires to CHEK TV about episode titles remain unanswered.

TIME EXPRESS

Time Express was a short-lived series similar to Fantasy Island but with a time travel twist. Each week the series' guest stars, selected by the head of the line, would board the mysterious Time Express, a train- with the ability to journey back in time. The passengers would then be taken back in time to a turning point in their lives where they would be given an opportunity to change a significant event in their lives. Jason and Margaret Winters played hosts to the disbelieving passengers and explained to them the opportunity they had been given.

"Fantasy Island" meets "The Time Machine" aboard the "Starlight Express." Possibly based on a particular "TWILIGHT ZONE" episode about an ad exec who gets off a train and encounters his childhood self in a Carnival. Or then again, possibly not. Each episode carried passengers back in time aboard a gleaming Time Express train that rode the clouded skies of time, to give them a chance to change their pasts by altering some key decision in their lives. This is, according to modern physicists, one of the things that can NOT be done, even if you have a time machine. They theorise that you can participate in the past, but not change it. Be that as it may, this is really a series related to the science fiction subgenre of "parahistory" or "alternate history" where a changed event has spawned a whole new present in which, for instance, the South won the American Civil War, or Japan and Germany won World War II, or I.

Distinguished husband and wife duo Vincent Price and Coral Browne starred as the host and hostess aboard a mysterious train that transports its passengers back into the past. Thus, an assortment of travellers were able to relive crucial moments, alter previous decisions and create a new and, hopefully, better future. The Time Express made just four journeys, episodes were scheduled on BBC 1 in 1979.

The producer for the series was Leonard B. Kaufman, the music was created by Richard Hazard, the series was shown on the 27th November - 18th December 1979.

On another train aimed at the heart of fantasy, a mysterious couple (Vincent Price and Coral Browne) guided passengers back in time where they could change their domestic and professional mistakes.

TIME RIDERS

The four-part children's adventure started Drop The Dead Donkey's Haydn Gwynne as Dr B. B. Miller, an eccentric time-travelling scientist. But instead of a De Lorean, the leap into the past was made on the back of a 750cc Yamaha motorbike, in a sequence heavily borrowed from the movie, even down to the bike leaving a 'trail of fire', before vanishing into thin air.

Like so many others before her, B. B. is a maverick, working alone with a grant from the Ethereal Research Foundation, but clashing with her narrow-minded boss Prof. Crow, who wants her lab turned over to 'proper scientific research'. Carrying on regardless, B. B. sends a motorcycle helmet back to 1834, to the courthouse that once stood on the site of her lab. When she retrieves it, it's being clutched by Ben, a young Victorian urchin who was about to be sentenced to death for stealing a loaf of bread.

Saving the lad from Prof. Crow who wants to turn him into a research guinea pig B. B. and Ben ride back in time to 1645 where they become embroiled in the English Civil War, hunted like foxes, and wind up being condemned as witches before escaping back to the future in the nick of time.

Throughout, B. B. remains effortlessly optimistic in the face of danger. Unfortunately, the mix of humour, adventure and eccentric characters - including James Saxon and Julie T. Wallace as a barmy and sadistic pair of aristocrats - never really gelled and Time Riders only rode out the one series.

TV's short-lived answer to Back to the Future - with a fraction of the budget and even less of the style. The producer for the series was Alan Horrox, the designer was Haydn Pearce and the music was created by Debbie Wiseman. The series was first seen on ITV.

TIME TRAVELER

Losing consciousness in a laboratory, Kazuko (Shimada) wakes up with a memory of the scent of lavender and finds herself lying outside in the snow in what appears to be the following day. She witnesses a badly aimed showball break a window and injure one of her classmates and then finds herself just as suddenly returned to the present. When the events she witnessed come true the next day, her classmate Kazuo Fukamachi (Kinoshita) reveals that she has inhaled a chemical he had made - his real name is Ken Sogol and he is a time traveller from the future, stranded in the distant past of his world until he can somehow find a chemical that move its user forward rather than back in time.

One day Kazuko receives a telepathic distress call from Ken, in which he claims to be trapped in August, and in Hokkaido. Kazuko obtains some of the lavender chemical to help him, but realizes that she does not know how to initiate the time-leap required. On the advice of her teacher Mr. Fukushima (Hamada), she visits a psychiatrist, who determines that she only leaps in time when she has an unexpected shock. Fukushima dutifully threatens her with a stick, causing the desired effect and allowing her to rescue Ken.

Ken finally completes the chemical he requires, only to discover that the cleaning lady has sniffed it herself. They track her 27 years back in time, to a World War II hospital, where she is intent on using the Forward chemical to bring her dying daughter back to the future. However, her body disappears, and Ken explains that she has been erased because she broke one of the cardinal rules of time travel. Soon after, Ken reveals that he intends to return to his own time and that he is going to wipe out the memories of his friends. Though Kazuko forgets all about him, the scent of lavender always makes her feel nostalgic, for reasons she can't quite recall.

Time Traveller is the very first of the NHK juvenile drama series, a hundred TV serials made for the children of the first generation to grow up with a TV in the home. Based on the 1965 story Toki O Kakeru Shojo (Girl Across Time) by Yasutaka Tsutsui, this perennial favourite has also been adopted into a 1983 movie starring Tomoyo Harada, a feature-length TV special on Fuji in 1985 (starring Yoko Minamino), the later TV series GIRL ACROSS TIME, and yet another film in 1997, starring Nana Nakamoto. Its most recent appearance was in January 2002 as one of three short TV specials under the umbrella title of Morning Musume Loves Stories. Featuring starlets from the titular girl group, the story shared the screen with adaptations of Smart-San and Yasunari Kawabata's novel The Izu Dancer. The series was produced by Kazuo Shibata.

TIME TRAX

The series starts in the year 2193, where police officer Darien Lambert has been unable find a number of criminals whose trails lead to Washington DC, then vanish. Clues presented when a captured criminal vanishes from police custody lead Darien to Dr. Mordicai Sahmbi. Sahmbi is a respected scientist who had been working on time travel before funding for his project was cut off. He has however developed a working time machine, known as Trax. Trax is not perfect. It has two main faults: 1) It can only transport something to a point in time 200 years in the past and later return them to 2193. 2) A human being can only be subjected to the time travel process twice, one round trip, further exposure to the machine produces extreme cellular damage and possibly even death. In order to obtain further funding for his experiments Sahmbi used Trax to send criminals to the past, where no one would look for them, for a large fee.

Sahmbi himself manages to escape into the past after being captured and it is decided that Darien will follow him to bring Sahmbi and the other fugitives back home to justice in the 23rd century. Darien's only help in his mission comes in the form of Selma, an ultra-advanced (even for 2193) computer that is disguised as an AT&T Universal card (talk about product placement!). Selma has been programmed with all of the details of the fugitives and all 20th century knowledge. Selma also has the ability to access 20th century computers and tele-communication lines. She appears to Darien as a holo-graphic image of a middle-aged woman, however only when no one else is present. Darien's only weapon, which is disguised as a car alarm, consists of a stun gun and a pellet shooter with the ability to reverse the effects of Trax and send time travellers back to the 21st century.

Sahmbi establishes himself in the 20th century and slowly begins to build a power base, often enlisting the aid of the criminals he sent into the past, while butting heads with Darien. Darien, while always on the look out for Sahmbi, spends most of his time tracking down the other fugitives, there are over a hundred. Most of the time he discovers that the criminals from the future have taken up a life of crime in the 20th century, and winds up sending them back home. Occasionally he finds a fugitive who has reformed and has become a productive member of 20th century society, in these instances he allows the fugitives to remain in the 20th century. Darien also discovers that there are a few people who Sahmbi sent into the 20th century who were not criminals, but rather people who desired a simpler lifestyle.

1st Season Opening - "It began in the future. A scientist turning to evil, a time machine called TRAX, criminals who vanish, and a lawman with a mission. He has one weapon and a computer called Selma. With her, he will travel to a time more innocent than his own. Now he is among us, a special breed of man, travelling through our world, searching for fugitives from his own, knowing he cannot go home until he has found them all. His name is Darien Lambert and this is his story."

2nd Season Opening - "It began in the future. A time machine called TRAX, criminals who vanish, and a lawman who must pursue into the past. Now he is among us, a special breed of man. He has one weapon and a computer called Selma. With her, he will travel through our world, searching for fugitives from his own, knowing he cannot go home until he has found them all. His name is Darien Lambert and this is his story."

Character Information -

Darien Lambert - Born in 2160, he was abandoned at birth by his parents. He grew up in an orphanage and led a solitary life; he loved American history and greatly admired the US Marshals of the old West. He graduated first in his class from the International Police Academy at West Point and soon became one of the top Fugitive Retrieval Police Officers on Earth. He began having trouble, however, as fugitives whom he tracked to Washington City began mysteriously disappearing.

His arrest record declined sharply over a period of years, due to Sahmbi's TRAX machine. After Darien fell in love with Sahmbi's assistant, Elissa, who agreed to help him nail Sahmbi, she got killed by the TRAX machine while Sahmbi escaped to the past. She died in Darien's arms, begging him to stop Sahmbi. Having lost the only thing in his life that mattered to him, Captain Lambert pursued Sahmbi to the year 1993, to capture him and all the other fugitives who had been escaping Lambert for years.

Mordecai Sahmbi - Nobel Prize-winning scientist who, with the aid of Elyssa Chang Knox, invented TRAX [Transtime Research And eXperimentation], a time machine which sends people 200 years into the past. Due to the limitations of TXP, the chemical which aligns molecules for transport, the machine is limited to this 200 year arc. The funding for the project was cut for this reason. Sahmbi, wishing to continue his time travel research, resorted to teleporting criminals back to the past in order to fund his work. He became extremely greedy and would tempt anyone who would pay his price.

SELMA -Specified Encapsulated Limitless Memory Archive, a holographic supercomputer issued only to the five top police captains on the force. She is programmed to look like a picture Darien drew of his mother when he was a boy and she contains all printed material since Guttenberg's Bible. She can interface with any 20th century electronic system and can perform complete biological and materials analysis provided she is in contact with the specimen. She responds to her Captain's commands only and may only exercise initiative if Captain Lambert.

Harve Bennett is an almost legendary figure in SF tv production and writing, and fulfilled both those roles on THE INVISIBLE MAN (tv series 1975-76), THE BIONIC WOMAN (tv series 1976-8), GEMINI MAN (tv series 1976), THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN (tv series 1973-78), among others, and also on most of the STAR TREK movies: his metier being the creation of populist, action-packed, comparatively routine SF adventure.

This more of the same, and runs in syndication to independent tv stations. In the year 2192 police officer Captain Darien Lambert (Midkiff) finds that major criminals are disappearing, and discovers that megalomaniac physicist Dr Mordecai Sahmbi (Peter Donat) is sending criminals back in time to the 20th century, indeed to our present day. He follows them thre. Apart from the time travel, and a few super-scientific accessories for Lambert (including Selma, a mainframe computer contained in something that looks like a credit card and can project a female hologram in visual mode, played by Elizabeth Alexander), most of the action is not especially science fictional, and is more concerned with running down criminals hiding out in our time.

There is a degree of humour in Lambert's attempts to adjust culturally to 20th-century customs. Lambert has superpowers by our standards (IQ 204, runs the 100 metres in 8.6 secs, can use "time stalling" to slow down visual perception and thus react faster) but these are not unusual, we are told, for the 22nd century. TT has been popular according to surveys with young men. The series was filmed in Australia, and some post-production is also Australian.

Time Trax was one of the first run programmes produced by Warner Bros for a syndicated programming block known as PTEN (Prime Time Entertainment Network). The PTEN was formed for a group of independent TV stations anxious to get first run network quality programming at an affordable price. Time Trax was made in Australia to save money. Time Trax had a simple premise of a police officer from the future who has journeyed to the present in order to track down fugitives from his own time.

Dale Midkiff stars as the brave - but stiff - Captain Lambert, and Peter Donat has a regular guest role as the scientific mastermind behind the time bandits, now organising the fugitives from the future to establish a power base in the past. There's some attempt in the pilot to depict a hi-tech 23rd Century landscape, and with a racially turbulent age when Lambert, as part of a white minority, is abused as a "Blanco". But from there on the effects are mostly 20th Century.

The executive producers for the series was Harve Bennett, Gary Nardino, Jeffrey Hayes and Grant Rosenberg, line producer was Darryl Sheen. The UK premiere for the series was on the 16th July 1994 on ITV, the series didn't however last very long, when it was shown on ITV. Time Trax would be soon left to the afternoon and late night schedules until The Sci-Fi Channel showed the series in Europe.

TIME TUNNEL, THE

The Time Tunnel is the most fondly remembered of Irwin Allen's four science fiction series, yet it is the one that receives the least exposure today. This is due to the fact that it has fewer episodes than any of the others. The Time Tunnel tells the tale of two American scientists travelling through the endless corridors of time, never knowing where they will land next.

The time machine that sent them on this endless journey was known as the time tunnel. It was developed in a huge underground city beneath the desert at an undisclosed place in the American west. As the series opens funding for the time tunnel is about to be cut, with the project itself near completion. In order to prove that the project works and that funding should continue. Dr. Tony Newman (the younger one who wears a sweater), decides to test the device on himself and lands on the Titanic. When it becomes apparent that Tony can't be brought back home. Dr. Doug Phillips (the older one who wears a suit) uses the time tunnel to join Tony on the Titanic, bringing 'proof' that the ship will soon sink. Needless to say they are unable to prevent the ship from sinking and just before they were about to perish they are rescued by the scientists back at time tunnel control. Unfortunately they can not be brought back home, ending up instead in another time period at a crucial point in history.

Episodes tend to follow the same pattern. Doug and Tony arrive in a new time period just before an important historical event. They are mistaken as spies and captured, often by the good guys, who refuse to believe that Doug and Tony know what they are talking about. They manage to escape or talk their way out of the situation and perhaps resolve a conflict before the folks back home lock in on them and transport them to another era. Doug and Tony are never able to change the disasters that they know are about to occur. They also are always back in their original clothing at the start of each episode, regardless of what they were wearing when the time tunnel locked onto them to transport them to the next time period!

Most of the episodes occur in the past allowing ample use of stock footage from old movies to be used to suggest the various time periods. Landing our heroes in the future (or meeting up with aliens in the past) became a perfect opportunity to get some more use out of old Lost in Space props and sets.

Dr. Tony Newman and Dr. Doug Phillips worked in a ultra-secret government research lab underground in Arizona, and their laser-powered system threw them into the past before the system could undergo the proper final configuration audit. Trapped in history, they could jump from one time to another, but were unable to get home. Dr. Ann MacGregor and Dr. Raymond Swain kept trying to save them from the lab, but again and again our heroes tried to change the outcome of events, such as Abraham Lincoln's assassination, or the sinking of the Titanic (episode #1) or Marie Antoinette's beheading, and were always ironically prevented from so doing. Sometimes they were in the distant past 1,000,000 B.C. or so, sometimes in early history (the fall of Jericho), sometimes in meso-American history (Cortez vs. Montezuma), and once in the far future of 1,000,000 A.D. The past was more commonly used than the future, because stock footage is cheaper than new production.

Rather more fantastic episodes featured Merlin and the vengeful ghost of Emperor Nero. Writing, performances and sets were dire. 2 novelizations are The Time Tunnel (1967) and Timeslip! (1967) by Murray Lienste.

Episode Compilations

Aliens From Another Planet (Chase Through Time & Visitors From Beyond the Stars), Kill or Be Killed (The Day the Sky Fell In & Kill Two By Two).

The series executive producer was Irwin Allen, director of photography was Winton Hoch, the special effects were created by L.B. Abbott, and the theme was composed by Johnny Williams. The series received its first UK premier on the 9th July 1968 on the BBC.

"Two American scientists are lost in the swirling maze of past and future ages during the first experiments on America's greatest and most secret project-The Time Tunnel. Tony Newman and Doug Phillips now tumble helplessly toward a new fantastic adventure somewhere along the in-finite corridors of time." For anyone growing up with television from the mid-1960s, Irwin Allen's contribution to the cultural shock has been virtually inescapable. For around a decade, hardly a week passed when one of his science fiction series wasn't playing . . . somewhere. The Time Tunnel was his third offering (after VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA and LOST IN SPACE) and followed the time-travelling adventures of two scientists, Doug Phillips and Tony Newman into the past and, occasionally, the future, while back in the lab their colleagues watched and waited to pull them back in the nick of time.

The series began with a scientific premise-the invention of a machine that can transport people back and forth through time. Pressed by fears of losing their government grant and over-anxious to test it out, Newman steps into the tunnel and is thrown back into the past, landing on the deck of the Titanic. While he tries- unsuccessfully-to persuade the captain to change course (and history), his scientist colleagues send Phillips to help him while they figure out a way to bring both men back. A last-minute rescue is achieved. Thereafter, the series became virtually a guide to the hot-spots of history, from the Alamo and pearl Harbour to Krakatoa and the Little Big Horn. The tunnel itself was the most impressive effect in the series, a striking two-tone vortex that seemed to stretch into the back of the TV set. But commercial success didn't come and only 3 trips were made.

Time Travel TV series were pretty thin on the ground when The Time Tunnel was conceived. Anthology series such as THE TWILIGHT ZONE and THE OUTER LIMITS had dabbled with the theme, usually to produce personal stories about the futility to change destiny, while the large majority of time travel feature films had been about adventures in the future. Those that featured encounters with famous figures from the past had usually been done as comedies (When Knights Were Bold, Time Flies, Where Do We Go From Here? Etc.). On television, a fifties series called You Are Here had presented viewers with semi-educational 'news reports' from great moments in history, while TV hero CAPTAIN Z-RO was an early prototype for QUANTUM LEAP's Sam Beckett (affectionately parodied in the QUANTUM LEAP episode Future Boy and knowingly acknowledged in the shows final episode). Britain's beloved DOCTOR WHO, although at the peak of mass market popularity, had not yet crossed the Atlantic.

Somehow it has become accepted wisdom that the series was a ratings failure, an assumption repeated in numerous books and articles. It wasn't. Although it had only lasted one season, and rating did decline, The Time Tunnel was tentatively renewed until new management came in at ABC and cancelled all the borderline shows to demonstrate a 'new broom' mentality.

The Time Tunnel was replaced by the Legend of Custer, another 20th Century Fox show which employed a number of Irwin Allen's contributions but was quickly cancelled. Legend of Custer (created by STAR TREK's Sam Peeples) picked the wrong time to try to produce an often unintentionally hilarious whitewashed picture of this notorious historical figure. Paradoxically, The Time Tunnel, had produced a far superior and factually sound portrait of Custer in the episode Massacre.

In direct contrast to the easy launches Voyage and LOST IN SPACE enjoyed, The Time Tunnel - scheduled to follow The Green Hornet on Friday nights - had numerous obstacles to overcome. With the half-hour Green Hornet starting at the same time as hour-long shows THE WILD WILD WEST on CBS and Tarzan on NBC, the dice were loaded from the start, and the Time Tunnel found itself competing not only with the back end of these two successful shows but also the popular Hogan's Heroes on CBS and the first half of THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. on NBC. Consequently, The Time Tunnel had four different top rated shows to take on, all of them of interest to the same target audience, and in the days before video recorders.

Two American scientists from the year 1968 tumble through time and space and land in different eras. The scientists are part of project Tic Toc, a $12 billion tunnel that can send people into 'past and future ages.' Located miles beneath Arizona, the time tunnel staff try to return the scientists to 1968. Cast: Dr. Tony Newman (James Darren); Dr. Doug Phillips (Robert Colbert); Dr. Ann MacGregor (Lee Meriwether); Gen. Heywood Kirk (Whit Bissell); Dr. Raymond Swain (John Zaremba); Narrator (Dick Tufeld).

Created by: Irwin Allen; Developed for television by: Shimon Wincelberg, Harold Jack Bloom; Associate Producer: Jerry Briskin; Executive Producer: Irwin Allen; Director of photography: Winton C. Hoch; Special Effects: L.B. Abbott; Music Theme: John Williams; ABC/Twentieth Century-Fox; 60 minutes. "Time Tunnel is destined to become the most ambitious, spectacular and expensive project in television." That's what Twentieth CenturyFox said weeks before the series premiered. Time Tunnel was rumored to be one of the biggest and most original TV series in years.

From a production viewpoint, The Time Tunnel seemed to fulfill the prophesy. The series featured a subterranean city under the Arizona desert. The 800-story complex housed over 12,000 people, all engaged in the effort to conquer time with a huge spiral drum called the time tunnel. In reality, the time tunnel was a giant-sized prop capable of spitting out sparks. A 30-foot-high miniature was used to simulate the rest of the complex, complete with ramps, moving elevators, blinking lights and a stunning power core. Optical effects then placed real people on the walkways. The most startling effect was the weekly tumble of Newman and Phillips through time's kaleidoscope of shimmering colors. Initially, producer Irwin Allen was going to have old movie footage superimposed over the actors as they fell through the centuries. Allen hated the result, which he said "looked like dirty soup." Colorful animation was substituted to represent time passages.

Inspired by a novel by Murray Leinster called Time Tunnel, Irwin Allen commissioned writer Shimon Wincelberg to script a pilot whose story had nothing to do with Leinster's novel. Wincelberg's script was later revised by Harold Jack Bloom. "There's no limit, either in space or time, as to how far we can go with Time Tunnel," proclaimed Allen. "We're planning stories built around Appomattox, Dunkirk, the American Revolution, Columbus' discovery of America, the storming of Troy, the Babylonian revels, the glory of Rome and the majesty of the Incas. We can go from the days of the early caveman to the height of the ancient Egyptian civilizations."

The premiere episode has a senator (Gary Merrill) threatening to cancel the time project unless a man can be transported back in time. Tony Newman uses himself as a test subject and ends up on the Titanic in 1912. Doug Phillips goes to his rescue, but since the tunnel hasn't been perfected, the science team can't retrieve them. They can only transfer them to one time zone after another. The series began its run in a fiercely competitive time slot (Fridays at 8 p.m.). In its first few months, Time Tunnel proved surprisingly tenacious. A nationwide poll of high school students placed the series, along with Star Trek and That Girl, as the most popular new show of the season. Reviews were equally encouraging. Daily Variety found the pilot episode, "elaborately wrought and well scripted ... the sets and special effects are outstanding." The World Journal chimed, "tastefully made and suspenseful."

The lavish pilot, however, gave way to more conventional stories and production. Beyond their strong loyalty to each other, the characterization of the two time travelers was minimal. Tony became known for his trademark-green turtleneck sweater, and Doug for his 1912 business suit. Although peace-loving scientists, the pair demonstrated impressive fighting ability and rarely expressed scientific interest in the history that unfolded around them.

Each episode ended with a freeze-frame cliffhanger as the time travelers materialized in their next adventure. Thomas Moore, president of ABC at the time, was hopeful of Time Tunnel's chances. "It was a very promising show. The writing, directing and acting were, perhaps, less important than the special effects," he says, "but it was amazing what Irwin Allen accomplished on his budgets. Sometimes he went over budget and Fox executives ran to us. They would cry and cry and cry. They thought he was going to break them!"

Moore reveals that Time Tunnel was deliberately aimed at younger viewers. While older viewers were attracted to CBS and NBC by personalities such as Ed Sullivan, Red Skelton and Bob Hope, ABC turned to "action, suspense and adventure as our niches," says Moore. "The early 1960s was a time to experiment, and we felt that next to sports, nothing worked better in the medium than science fiction. We believed the genre was of interest to teenagers and viewers in their twenties." Moore points to Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea and the high-rated first seasons of Outer Limits, The Invaders and Land of the Giants as successful examples of ABC's strategy.

Not everyone was taken with the series. When the pilot was unveiled at the 1966 World Science Fiction Convention, science fiction novelist Jerry Sohl recalls many attendees booed at certain scenes. "The kids at that convention took their science fiction seriously," says Sohl. "In the pilot, you see the desert lift up and a car goes underneath. Then the desert closes up again. That scene was booed. The kids were thinking, 'Is that necessary?' The show had too many special effects. You didn't need such an elaborate set-up for a time travel series. In the movie The Time Machine, Rod Taylor had just a little machine. Here you had a desert that lifted up at a 45 degree angle and then slammed over you. That's hokey. It turns you off if you're a science fiction fan."

Writer Ellis St. Joseph was far more impressed by the pilot but says that Twentieth Century-Fox's library of stock footage proved more important to Time Tunnel's conception than creative inspiration. "From a practical standpoint, it was a brilliant idea. The studio backlot had everything from ancient Babylon to the Hawaiian Islands. The centuries were built next to each other. Allen knew more about producing a series under budget than anyone else in Hollywood. He was extremely severe in his budget restrictions, but if you knew what he wanted, he was fine. If he didn't respect your talent, he could be arrogant and contemptuous."

Lee Meriwether played Ann MacGregor, one of the scientists dedicated to returning Tony and Doug to the tunnel. "I loved doing the show, but it was one of the most difficult acting jobs of my career. While Robert Colbert and Jimmy Darren were spinning around in time, Whit Bissell, John Zaremba and I were at the tunnel, tracking their whereabouts and trying to bring them back." Meriwether had to visualize what she was seeing on the tunnel's view screen. "We were really looking at little round dots placed on sticks in the tunnel. Since Robert and Jimmy's scenes were filmed before we shot ours, the director could tell us how close the pirate's knife was to Robert's throat or how close Jimmy was to stepping on a land mine. It wasn't the easiest acting job!"

Her most vivid memory is of the segment "Pirates of Deadman's Cove," where a pirate (played by Victor Jory) dangles her over the time tunnel's power core. "Ann was always getting into some kind of danger. In that episode, it was real! I still carry a small scar on my right thumb from Victor Jory's pirate knife. I got a scraped knee on that show, too."

James Darren insisted on doing many of his own stunts, and by mid-season, he had smashed his head on a rock, been burned in an explosion and taken some bruises in a spear fight. One stunt that Meriwether wanted to do was floating through time. "I longed to do the time tunnel tumble," she says. "That would have been fun. It would also have been interesting to play one of Ann's ancestors, perhaps an evil one. Robert Colbert and I also thought that Doug and Ann should have had a romance, but it never came to be."

The actress saw Irwin Allen as a "witty man whose bark was worse than his bite. When he directed the pilot, he climbed a tall ladder and sat there banging a pail with a hammer. It made a horrendous noise, but that was his way of generating energy for everyone on the set. It worked! There was a method to his particular madness." "Loyalty was very important to Allen," says Robert Mintz, who served as post-production coordinator, "and he rewarded it generously. He had a permanent staff of six people. He kept them on his payroll whether he was in production or not."

Mintz got first-hand knowledge of Allen's methods early on as assistant editor on Allen's 1960 film The Lost World. "There was an actors' strike, and rather than shut down production, Irwin brought in a dozen lizards and shot 'dinosaur' fights with them until the last lizard was dead from exhaustion. Irwin never missed a beat. "Irwin also had a keen mind, which was never more evident than in the projection room when he watched the dailies. God help you if you were not paying attention when Irwin asked you a question. During one screening a sound effects man fell asleep. When the lights came up, he was snoring. Irwin played a little spider-and-the-tly game with him, much to everyone's amusement and much to the mortification of the effects editor. He woke up, sputtering all of the wrong answers to Irwin's questions. Irwin was a showman through and through."

Although Time Tunnel went everywhere from 1 million B. C. to 1 million A.D., the writers weren't required to study history or science. Weeks after it premiered, disappointed viewers wrote to TV Guide to complain about the series' lax historical and scientific standards. "Irwin had a favorite saying," says writer Bob Duncan, who scripted nine episodes with his wife, Wanda. "That was, 'Don't get logical with me!' There was absolutely no pressure on the writers to make their scripts historically accurate. For our scripts on "The Alamo" and "Devil's Island," we did considerable research to ensure the authenticity of the settings. When the series entered that strange combination of space aliens woven into historical stories, there was no longer a need for accuracy."

Like all of the writers, the Duncans were encouraged to use old movie footage to help plot their stories. "We sat through hours and hours of footage," recalls Duncan. "We selected clips that would work best in our stories. This gave the episodes millions of dollars worth of production value."

Some story ideas were rejected because of budget. Leonard Stadd's script dealing with the Marie Celeste (a sailing ship found adrift in the Atlantic in 1872 with its crew and passengers missing) was deemed too expensive to film. "My idea was that a giant squid had grabbed the people," says Stadd. "Tony and Doug explore the ship and end up battling the creature. During the story's pre-production meeting, the special effects guys were discussing how they could make a giant octopus tentacle. Irwin got very disturbed. Finally he said, 'No, it won't work. I used an octopus tentacle on Uoyage and it cost me $30,000!' The production guys couldn't convince him that they could make one for just a few hundred dollars."

Ellis St. Joseph wrote one of the series' most popular segments, "The Day the Sky Fell In." The travelers land in Hawaii, 1941, hours before the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. Tony's father was listed MIA after the attack, and he tries to unlock the mystery of his father's disappearance. It ends with a tearful scene between Tony and his dying father. "I was thrilled by the concept of a son going back in time and trying to save his father," says St. Joseph. "The ending, where the father dies in his son's arms, was tremendously moving. I watched that scene with playwright William Inge. He was teary-eyed at the end. The episode was a big success with Irwin Allen, and he asked me to stay and write more."

St. Joseph went on to write "The Walls of Jericho." "I went to the Bible for inspiration, but my ambition got the better of me. I wrote an epic screenplay rather than a teleplay." St. Joseph found out, too late, that a TV budget couldn't accommodate his grandiose storyline. He was also disappointed in the guest cast. "The script was first-rate, but since many of the actors couldn't play it, it didn't move people. However, Rhodes Reason as Joshua was superb, and Abraham Sofaer as the father played his role with great dignity, intelligence and pathos."

St. Joseph's script left Jericho's miracles open to interpretation. Is it a cyclone or the hand of God that brings down the walls? The time tunnel staff draw different conclusions. "It was daring for TV to question the Bible," says St. Joseph. "You had General Kirk, Dr. Swain and Annfundamentalist, agnostic and atheist-contesting their convictions. I got away with it by leaving the matter unresolved. Dr. Swain reaches a compromise between Kirk and Ann by saying, 'Anything that creates faith is a miracle.'"

Time Tunnel also attracted a wide range of actors. Joey Tata, who had worked for Irwin Allen in the past, had to fight to play the role of Napoleon Bonaparte in Reign of Terror. "Irwin put a big ad in the trade papers that read, 'Irwin Allen is looking for Napoleon!' says Tata. "I'm thinking, 'I gotta get a chance at this.' I asked Larry Stewart, the casting director, for the role, but Larry and Irwin didn't feel I was right for it. So I called up Larry using a French accent. He told me to come in. When he saw me, he said, 'Joey! it's you!' Larry called up Irwin and gave me the phone. I pretended I was an actor named Pierre and did my French accent for Irwin. He invited me to his office. When I walked in, he looked up from his desk and said, 'Tata? You were the actor doing the accent? You conned me! You crazy actor. Get outta here. You've got the part.'" Actor Victor Lundin played a volcano-worshipping native on Krakatoa in "Crack of Doom."

"Jimmy Darren and I were going to have a fight scene. I said to Jimmy, 'Jimmy, I know you like doing your own stunts, but I'll use a stunt double.' Well, Jimmy was really swinging, and he splattered the stunt guy's nose all over the set. That could have been me! I had just had my nose broken on another show." Lundin also recalls some directorial juggling during filming. "Our director, Bill Hale, was a nice young guy, an actor's director. Apparently he was taking too long because Irwin Allen came down and reamed Bill out in front of everyone. Irwin took over and almost kicked Bill off the set. Irwin was a very petulant guy. If you crossed him, that was it."

"Irwin Allen was not only a character, he was a genius," claims Australian actor Michael Pate, whose episodes included "The Last Patrol" and "The Walls of Jericho." "He was the one who made everything happen. He was kind and considerate to his staff but gently ruthless when it came to getting things done properly. He would allow his directors great liberties, but if they didn't get it right, he took over. Time was always money."

Another actor, Jan Merlin, was best known as the buddy of Tom Corbett, Space Cadet in the 1950s. In "Visitors from Beyond the Stars," he was an alien who takes over an Arizona town in 1885. "I had never heard of a science fiction western before," says Merlin. "It was weird to be out west as a silver-skinned alien. After they dabbed the makeup on me and Fred Beir, we noticed our eyeballs had changed to yellow-pink. I didn't care for the way we were told to play the aliens. It was the same tired version of aliens we've seen since the Saturday matinee days."

Time Tunnel began its run as one of the season's highlights. In November 1966, ABC categorized the series as "the network's unsung hero" for its competitive sparkle. But by January 1967, the series had lost its punch. The writers were encouraged to write aliens into the show to boost ratings. "The series was running out of available stock footage, and the plots drifted into the alien invasion vein," says Bob Duncan. "It shifted from its original and better format. Personally, I found the alien episodes, including the ones we wrote, to be silly in the extreme."

Lee Meriwether agrees. "It weakened the series to take it into the future. The more farfetched the premise, the less credible the episode." Meriwether claims the historical episodes got the best audience response. "We got letters from teachers who used Time Tunnel to stimulate history research in classes," she says. "To do more than just entertain with my acting was always my dream, and Time Tunnel gave me that chance."

By early February 1967, rumors were rampant that the series wouldn't be renewed for a second year. "My then husband, Frank Aletter, was starring in a series called It's About Time," recalls Meriwether. "He had a ratings list framed on his dressing room wall. Both of our series were listed waay down at the bottom of the page. We were not a ratings threat to any show that season."

Among young people, Time Tunnel still had a loyal audience. Network research showed viewers up to the age of 18 enjoyed the series. A poll by TV Radio magazine in January 1967 ranked Time Tunnel as number seven out of 40 shows as most popular new series of the season. The show's popularity among young viewers frustrated the National Association for Better Broadcasting, who said, "Time Tunnel's pseudo-scientific stories and complicated gadgetry and silly, involved plots make it unsuitable for children." In an interview with the L.A. Herald Examiner, James Darren responded to the criticism by saying, "Time Tunnel is a service. We give youngsters lots of entertainment and pique their interest in history. We've tried to make the stories as logical as possible. With our budget, it's a little like re-making the Bible for a nickel per

1 - 2 ONE WAY TO THE MOON

Doug and Tony land 10 years in the future on the Mars Excursion Module during liftoff. Their extra 335 pounds of weight endanger the mission by putting it over the weight allowance. Everyone believes the time travellers are spies except one man, Harlow. They are forced to land on the moon for a refueling stop, but the ship crashes. One of the other men, Beard, kills Harlow. Beard is a spy. To further confuse matters, ten years in the past at Project TicToc, Beard and another spy, Brandon, are visiting the complex. Brandon sabotages the tunnel and then tries to escape, but Beard shoots his superior to bolster his own cover and his own role remains undiscovered. In the future, Doug and Tony manage to blow up the "future" Beard, but the MEM takes off without them. As they are stranded on the moon, their air running out, the Tunnel scoops them up and sends them on their way.

Dony and Toug arrive in 1910, where a local town is in a panic over the arrival of Halley's Comet. Tony is caught in a cave-in near two hundred miners, while Doug is unable to get help from the superintendent, Henderson, who believes they're all doomed because of the comet. Doug digs out Tony on his own, and tries to convince the local astronomer, Ainsley, who has everyone in a panic. While Tony tries to set up a rescue, the Project team try to send Doug a radioscope through the Tunnel. That plan fails, but Doug makes a primitive radioscope and shows Ainsley the gravitational forces that will cause Halley's Comet to deviate. Ainsley convinces the townspeople they are not doomed, and everyone teams up to rescue the miners. Meanwhile the Tunnel sucks in Halley's Comet and the power flow almost sucks Jerry into the Tunnel before they can cut the plug.

Tony and Doug land in the Japanese Consulate in Honolulu on December 6, 1941, and see three men burning files. They talk their way out and Tony goes to find his father, who disappeared during the bombing. Cmdr. Newman is initially skeptical, but Tony convinces him with family knowledge no one else could know. The Japanese agents get wind of Tony and Doug's knowledge, capture the pair, and interrogate them for information. They don't break, and manage to escape. Meanwhile, Cmdr. Newman is at Naval HQ checking out Tony's warning, and the Project staff realize that if the young Tony (who was also present at Pearl Harbor) isn't rescued, then "their" Tony will vanish. Tony manages to convince the housekeeper, Mrs. Neal, to flee to the mountains with her child and Tony, and then he goes to rescue his father. They head to Naval HQ but a barrage hits and Cmdr. Newman is killed. An unexploded bomb lands, and the Project staff use the Tunnel to delay it long enough for the travellers to get clear. The bomb goes off, eradicating Tony's father's body and bringing time full circle.

1 - 5 THE LAST PATROL

Tony and Doug land in the War of 1812 in Louisiana, and steal some clothing that happens to have passed from General Jackson. They are captured by the British forces, led by Colonel Southall. In the present, the Project people bring in Southall's descendent, a British general. His ancestor has a reputation as a butcher by sending his men into the strongest flank of the American forces. In the past, Col. Southall forces Tony to lead one of his men to the enemy lines, get a report, and send up a signal rocket of which flank he should attack. Tony and the scout get captured, escape, and prepare to send the signal. Meanwhile, General Southall insists on returning to the past. He's dying of cancer, and Kirk reluctantly grants the general, an old friend, his last request. The present Southall helps Doug escape and then confronts his ancestor and manages to convince him he is from the future. Doug helps Tony but the signal rocket goes astray and the attacking British are wiped out. Tony and Doug arrive on Devil's Island in March 1895, where they are taken into custody as escaped prisoners. Doug manages to escape and hold the Commandant at gunpoint to convince the man he is a stranded American, but the Commandant plays along until he can get the drop on him. The Project team plan a recovery which goes awry (again), hauling in the prisoner Boudaire. General Kirk tells Boudaire that they cannot escape with Captain Dreyfuss, one of the prisoners, because historically Dreyfuss never escaped at that time, so taking him along would prevent the success of any escape attempt. Boudaire is returned but is shocked by the experience and doesn't remember his instructions. Tony and Doug stage an escape but realize that they have been led to do so so that they can all be "shot while trying to escape." Boudaire recalls that Dreyfuss must remain. TIMELAPSE

Timelapse was an Australian series concerning a contemporary man who is killed, cryogenically frozen and then revived 12 years later in the year 1991. The man out of his time is Douglas Hardy, an electronics engineer. In 1979 he become aware of a plot by Dakin, the leader of the opposition party in New South Wales, to take control of the government and form a military dictatorship.

Dakin does not want this knowledge to be made public so he has his right hand man MacKeil, kill Hardy. Twelve years later, in 1991. Dr. Fallon and his assistant Miss Parker revive Hardy who had been cryogenically frozen shortly after his death. Dakin, know in power and well on his way to setting himself up as dictator of Australia, has not intention of letting Hardy reveal what he know about his ultimate goal.

So Hardy not only has to deal with social changes that have taken place in the twelve years that he was dead, and the continued threats to his life, but he also has to deal with the fact that his widow, Dell, is about to be engaged to MacNeil, the man who killed him.

Timelapse has not been seen since its initial screening in Australia. This is too bad since reviews of the program in both Variety and The Sydney Morning Herald were quite favourable. Writers and directors for the series are unknown.

TIMESLIP

Timeslip revolves around the adventures of two children, thirteen year old Liz Skinner and fourteen year old Simon Randall. One day Liz and Simon encounter a time hole and fall through it, ending up in the year 1940. There they meet Liz's father as an 18 year old. Their subsequent adventures would have them meeting older versions of themselves and of Liz's mother. All of Liz and Simon's travels would be in the 20th Century and they always managed to run across Commander Traynor who was up to some form of no good.

Few series, let alone a children's drama, can claim to have started with a lesson in scientific theory. Yet that was how timeslip began in 1970, with ITNs science correspondent Peter Fairley demonstrating the programs concept of time travel. Sitting in a transparent sphere intended to represent the Universe, Faley bounced a balloon back and fourth to convey the idea of a bubble of information moving around in time and in which someone could be carried into the past and into the future. It was a measure of how seriously this intelligent 26 part ATV series took both itself and its audience, thought it was never po-faced about it. Devised by Ruth Boswell (later to produce another time travel series THE TOMORROW PEOPLE), and her husband James, Timeslip took its young heroes, Liz Skinner and Simon Randall, through for exciting adventures in time.

Timeslip was an innovative British series which was loosely based on a new theory of time by Professor Fred Hoyle, Hoyle had caused controversy of his theory on the origin of the universe. He was somewhat surprised when he learned that his latest idea was being considered as the basis for a TV series and he appointed his son to act as a scientific consultant on the show.

The effect of the barrier itself, which played an important part in the series was achieved using a split screen process whereby the same film was used twice, each time with a different half masked, thus allowing a character to apparently vanish into thin air.

Among the regular cast, Spencer Banks, who played Simon went on to star in two further ITV series - a spy drama, TIGHTROPE (1972) and another time adventure, THE GEORGIAN HOUSE (1976). He also appeared in Crossroads...

Derek Benfield who played Frank Skinner, became a familiar face to adult TV audiences in the BBC saga The Brothers, while Iris Russel had been 'Father' in one episode of THE AVENGERS. Timeslip was fully networked (thought with ATV running ahead of the other ITV regions by three days) and enjoyed a successful repeat run in 1973-74.

The script editor for the series was Ruth Boswell, the producer was John Cooper and scientific advisor for the series was Geoffrey Hoyle. Most of the episodes were made in colour except for episodes 1.22 and 1.23 which were filmed in Black and White. The designers for the sets were Gerry Roberts and Michael Eve. The first two stories "The Wrong End of Time" and "The Time of the Ice Box" were introduced by Peter Fairley.

Shown in 26 weekly parts, Timeslip was intended as a serial to be watched as a whole. While it comprises four distinct stories in different settings, each with its own title, the segments dovetail neatly into each other, both in terms of chronology and a continuity of unparalleled complexity. In line with its status as a children's serial, resources were limited. Much of the production was studio bound, stretching designers who had to recreate a jungle or Antarctic tundra in ATV's Elstree studio in Eldon Avenue. The music was from stock and the title sequence consisted merely of a yellow cut-out of the show's logo lit from a rotating source. Efforts were concentrated on the writing and in casting competent actors in the leading roles.

The success of a children's series often rests on young shoulders. Believable character writing also helps, of course. Liz Skinner was the shows fifteen-year-old heroine, thrown into these adventures along with family friend Simon Randall, the archetypal speccy kid who does his homework rather than chase after girls. The confused and constantly hinted at romance between the two is a source of amusement, whilst most watching today would peg the characters as being much younger, even if Cheryl Burfield looks far older than Liz than does Spencer Banks as sixteen-year-old Simon.

A picture strip in the first issue of Look-in magazine ran until December 1972, keeping alive a series that ended when intended. Ruth Boswell's move to Thames scuppers any hopes for its return, and Victor Pemberton's stated intention to revive the series for the Nineties appears to have come to nothing. While the brattish fun of THE TOMORROW PEOPLE returned for a three year revival in 1992, it seems that the complexities of Timeslip will remain resolutely in their own time phase.

TIN MAN

In this bizarre, post-modern version of L. Frank Baum's novel 'The Wonderful Wizard of Oz' and the classic movie based on the book, 'The Wizard of Oz', Zoey Deschanel stars as DG, the main character who finds herself trapped in a place called the O.Z. or the Outer Zone. There she searches for her parents and is joined in her travels by Glitch, a man who has had half of his brain taken away because of something he knew, Raw, a member of a species called the "viewers" who read emotions and heal, and Cain - a "Tin Man" (which was the name of the police force in the O.Z. before the witch, Azkadellia took over, taken from their sheriff's tin badges) who seeks revenge for the damage done to his heart.

Tin Man is a three-part television miniseries from RHI Entertainment and Sci Fi Pictures original films originally broadcast over three nights on the Sci Fi Channel between December 2, 2007 and December 4, 2007 at 9 pm Eastern. All three parts will be re-airing on Sunday December 9, 2007 one after another from 5 pm Eastern to 11 pm Eastern on the same channel. The series is an epic re-imagining of L. Frank Baum's The Wonderful Wizard of Oz that gives the story a heavy science fiction/fantasy emphasis and gives only allusive references to most of the original story.

Cast and characters

Zoey Deschanel as DG , the heroine of the story [2] (analogous to Dorothy Gale), a young woman who, like the original Dorothy in The Wizard of Oz, finds herself in an unfamiliar realm after a storm. She finds and befriends several inhabitants of the O.Z. who have suffered under Azkadellia's rule while searching for her missing parents. As she travels, she finds herself discovering places she has dreamed of and drawn all of her life. She learns her "parents" are actually robots who were programmed to raise her, and then explain things to her once it was time for her to return. Her real mother is the former Queen of the O.Z. who sent DG away after Azkadellia, her sister, tried to murder her. DG must travel in search of a powerful emerald that will enable her to defeat Azkadellia and free their mother. As she travels, DG continues to remember more of her past life and begins to develop her own magical powers. Eventually it is revealed she has an ancestor named Dorothy Gale that her parents named her after. (Dorothy Gale was "the first slipper" - i.e., the first person to "slip" over from the real world into the O.Z.). Dorothy Gale is associated by DG with the mysterious "Gray Gale", and she has the Emerald of the Eclipse. DG is played by Rachel Pattee as a child.

Neal McDonough as Detective Wyatt Cain (analogous to the Tin Man), a former police man, a.k.a. "Tin Man", of the Mystic Man's protection detail. He joined a resistance movement against Azkadellia's rule, incurring her wrath. After his family was captured by Azkadellia's Longcoat soldiers, Cain was locked in a tin suit of armor for years while the scene of his family's torture was played repeatedly. Despite his seemingly cold nature, he agrees to lead DG and Glitch to Central City and acts as their guardian. Along the way, he learns his family had not been killed by Zero. He finds their new home, but it is too late. He finds the grave of his wife.

Alan Cumming as Glitch, or Ambrose (analogous to the Scarecrow), a man with a zipper on his head whose brain was taken by the sorceress because of something he knew, earning him the name of Glitch. He was once named Ambrose, a brilliant inventor and the former adviser to the Queen. When Azkadellia began her coup, he destroyed the blue prints of the Sun Seeder machine to try to protect it from Azkadellia, but she removed his brain so she could get the plans directly from them instead. Though he sometimes forgets his name and repeats himself, he also has moments of clarity in which he can remember things clearly.

Raoul Trujillo as Raw (analogous to the Cowardly Lion), a man DG rescues from being another creature's dinner. Though somewhat human in appearance he has an animal-like nature. Raw is a "viewer" with empathic and healing abilities who ran away from his people out of fear.

Kathleen Robertson as Azkadellia the Sorceress (analogous to the Wicked Witch of the West), a powerful enchantress who imprisoned her own mother and assassinated her sister to take over the rule of the O.Z. Her rule has been tyrannical and she uses her Longcoat troops to kill anyone who opposes her. She also has markings on her chest that contain flying bat monkeys, which she commands at will. When she learns DG is still alive and back in the O.Z., she sends her Longcoats out to kill her. She is building a machine to destroy the O.Z. As children, Azkadellia and DG were close sisters who loved each other. When they were exploring a cave, Azkadellia was possessed by an evil witch who had been sealed inside, a plot twist that reveals that Azkadellia herself is not evil; it is not her, but the witch's spirit who desires to kill DG. DG eventually realizes this, and struggles to free Azkadellia from the influence of the witch. Azkadellia is played by Alexia Fast as a child.

Richard Dreyfuss as the Mystic Man (analogous to the Wonderful Wizard of Oz), a former leader of Central City that aided DG's mother in smuggling her out of the O.Z. He is addicted to Azkadellia's vapors, a euphoria-inducing mist. He regains some of his senses after seeing the sign on DG's hand. He sends her to the Northern Island where Lavender Eyes is located. He also makes Cain swear to never leave DG's side on his honor as a Tin Man. Azkadellia captures him, and eventually kills him for refusing to cooperate.

Anna Galvin as Lavender Eyes (analogous to the Good Witch Glinda), the true Queen of the O.Z. Who has been imprisoned by her daughter, Azkadellia. She is DG's real mother who sent DG away to protect her after Azkadellia killed DG. She poured all of her power into DG to save her life, leaving her helpless to stop Azkadellia's later take-over. She then asked the cyborgs of Milltown to take DG to the Other Side and raise her there in safety.

Blu Mankuma as Tutor (analogous to Toto), a shape-shifter who was once the teacher of magic to DG and Azkadellia. As a child, DG mispronounced his name/title and called him Toto. After Azkadellia took over the O.Z., Tutor was imprisoned in her dungeon. Azkadellia frees him under the condition that he attach himself to DG's group as a spy so she will know when DG finds the emerald. He drops magical discs that record events and are picked by Azkadellia's Mobats (winged monkeys) and taken to her.

Shawn MacDonald as Lylo, a seer enslaved by Azkadellia. Azkadellia uses his abilities to read the minds of any one she wants information from, using electric shocks to torture Lylo if he disobeys or is struggling with an assigned task. He also has some abilities to see into the future or far off places, which is how Azkadellia first learns that DG is still alive. Azkadellia uses him to try to read DG's magically locked memory, but the effort kills him.

Callum Keith Rennie as Zero, a Longcoat who is promoted to leader after General Lonot is killed for failing to capture DG. He led the band of Longcoats who tortured Cain and his family and locked Cain in the tin prison.

Doug Abrahams as General Lonot, the commander of Azkadellia's Longcoats until Azkadellia executes him after his failure to capture DG. He was once the queen's loyal commander of the 4th guard, but he betrayed her to Azkadellia.

Ted Whittall as Ahamo, or Seeker, DG and Azkadellia's father. "Ahamo" is "Omaha" (where DG was sent) spelled backwards. He was also a native of Nebraska who, while ballooning, was caught up in storm and found himself in the O.Z. He fell in love with Lavender Eyes and stayed in the O.Z.

The three-night miniseries Tin Man deconstructs The Wizard of Oz and is best enjoyed if you've never seen the 1939 Judy Garland movie. But is there anyone out there who hasn't? Everything good about Tin Man is the invention of scripters Steven Long Mitchell and Craig W. Van Sickle; everything bad in it is an attempt to nod or wink at L. Frank Baum's first Oz tale, from 1900.

In Tin Man we are introduced to the "O.Z." no, not a fairy-tale land where Adam Brody and emo bands cavort in bliss, but the "Outer Zone," an alternate universe under siege by the dark magic of the sorceress Azkadellia (Kathleen Robertson, the smooth face from the unfunny IFC sitcom The Business). Plopped via tornado into the O.Z. is DG short for Dorothy Gale, the gingham-and-pigtails girl in The Wizard of Oz, but played here by Zooey Deschanel as a glowering tomboy.

DG soon meets Glitch (Alan Cumming), who has a zipper in his skull after a brain removal; Raw (Raoul Trujillo), a cowardly beastie; and Wyatt Cain (Boomtown's Neal McDonough) as an ex-cop they're known in the O.Z. as "tin men." I don't have to explain the Wizard of Oz parallels here, do I? And there's a little dog named Toto except in Tin Man he's a shape-shifting human (Blu Mankuma), also known as Tutor.

This being Sci Fi Channel, the whole Oz template is darker and more, well, science-fiction-y. DG and her pals need to find the "emerald of the eclipse," a jewel whose power will free the O.Z. of the evil force embodied by Azkadellia. And whatta body: The kickiest innovation of writers Mitchell and Van Sickle is to have Robertson swan around in a succession of low-cut gowns revealing tattoo-like markings just above her breasts, drawings that come to life when she thrusts her chest forward. The figures soar off her skin to become the flying-monkey kind of creatures we know from the 1939 Oz.

Unfortunately, Robertson's heaving bodice is her most expressive aspect; this miniseries needed a villain with a wicked sense of humor, but she and the rest of Tin Man are dour and punitive. There's violence and torture courtesy of Azkadellia's Nazi-like "Longcoat" brigade. And there's the overworked theme of abandonment (DG seeks her family back home; Cain the Tin Man mourns his family, long ago snatched up by the Longcoats).

The title is a bit of a puzzler, though: McDonough's character isn't the central one, Deschanel's is so why use Tin Man? Sci Fi Channel could have called it Stargate: DG and probably drawn more viewers

1 - 1 PART 1

DG (Zooeey Deschanel) is a waitress who has never felt like she fit into her small town life. Her dreams are plagued with strange visions of places she's never seen and a lavender-eyed woman warning her that a storm is coming. These dreams are realized when the sorceress Azkadellia (Kathleen Robertson), tyrannical ruler of the Outer Zone (O.Z.), sends her soldiers through a travel storm to kill DG, inadvertently dragging DG and her parents into the O.Z. Mistaken for a spy, she is captured and meets Glitch (Alan Cumming), a man whose brain has been removed by Azkadellia.

When Azkadellia's Longcoats attack the rebels holding them prisoner, DG and Glitch manage to escape. DG wants to find her missing parents, so Glitch suggests they take the old brick road. Along the way, they discover Cain (Neal McDonough), a former policeman ("Tin Man") who had been locked in a tin suit for going against Azkadellia. Though reluctant at first, he agrees to take them to Central City where DG might get some answers about her parents. As they travel, they rescue an empathic creature named Raw (Raoul Trujillo), a scruffy looking person.

They soon come across a place called Milltown, where DG is reunited with her parents. There she learns that her "parents" are actually cyborgs tasked with raising her since her mother feared for her life. They send her to Central City to meet the Mystic Man (Richard Dreyfuss), who has a message that will help her find her real mother.

The Mystic Man turns out to be little help, having had his mind affected by "vapors" created by Azkadellia. When he sees the symbol on DG's hand, though, he recovers enough to give her a message. He sends her to the Northern Island, an ice-covered mountain hiding a castle. When DG and her group arrive, DG learns that she is actually a princess, the daughter of the former Queen. They also learn that Glitch was actually the Queen's former adviser. Raw utilizes his powers to show her a vision of the past. In the vision, after her mother kisses her goodnight, her older sister Azkadellia kills DG using dark magic to usurp the throne. Her mother resurrects DG by pouring some of her own power into her, telling her that the "Emerald of the Eclipse" is needed to stop Azkadellia.

Azkadellia finds them at the castle and captures them all. She demands DG lead her to the Emerald's location, but DG can't remember. During an escape attempt, Cain is separated from the group and fights with Zero (Callum Keith Rennie), the leader of the Longcoats and the man who imprisoned him. Zero implies that Cain's family is still alive just before shooting him, sending him flying out of the castle to fall through the ice lake several floors down.

1 - 2 PART 2

DG is interrogated by her sister - eventually they learn that her memories are secured by magic, so she is locked up while another method of learning the location of the Eclipse Emerald is worked out.

Back at the frozen castle, Glitch finds the Tin Man passed out in the snow and takes him to the truck to recover from hypothermia. They journey back to rescue DG, where Glitch exhibits knowledge of martial arts and defeats several long coats.

DG is rescued by Toto, who lets Raw out of his cage. They meet up with Tin Man and Glitch and escape the castle. Toto reveals himself to be a shape shifter, who was her magic tutor from her childhood. Together they set off to the south, where the Mystic Man told her to seek answers before he was killed.

Toto is revealed to be a spy as he leaves behind an object for the Sorceress' flying monkeys to find.

DG remembers more of her past as they approach the southern lake country, and her magic abilities start to emerge.

Tin Man discovers that his wife and son survived and made it across the chasm - on the other side he finds an abandoned house, his wife's grave, and a tin suit eerily similar to his own. He fears that his son Jeb is trapped inside, but when he opens the suit, he finds it empty.

As they come to a fork in the road, one of the flying monkeys is spotted - Tin Man shoots and kills it.

As they come to location of the former southern castle, DG remembers what happened when she was a child. She and Azkadellia would explore the woods in the Lake Country of the O.Z. together, gathering apples. One day, she and "Az" found a cave in these woods, from which the sound of a crying girl emanated. Venturing inside after DG, Azkadellia lights a lantern with her magic to reveal an inscription on the cave wall, written in the picture language of the ancients. She translates the message as "At the dawn of time, good battled evil, and the light conquered over the darkness," followed by "something about an evil witch." Going further into the cave, they hear the girl's crying from inside a giant stone head. They crawl through its mouth and find a young girl who transforms into a menacing old woman. The old woman attacks, frightening DG into letting go of Az's hand and allowing her to seize and possess Az. DG flees back to their mother, crying, and sees Az approaching. Their mother asks Az whether she is all right, and the girl replies, "I've never felt better," but on her back there appears a symmetric bat-like marking.

DG is horrified by her recovered memory. "All the terrible things that have happened, they were all my fault!" she exclaims. Meanwhile, Azkadellia sends the rest of her mobats forth in search of DG.

In the conclusion, DG and the others find a lakeside gazebo where DG is able to summon a magical recording left by her mother, the deposed queen, by skipping a stone across the lake. DG's mother instructs her to go in search of the Gray Gale and the Emerald, seeking Ahamo in the Realm of the Unwanted. Toto reveals that Ahamo is DG's father. Once DG and her companions have departed, Azkadellia arrives in pursuit. She replays the recording just as DG did. As she deliberates, she is addressed by the wicked witch persona within her, and converses aloud with her. The witch promises that she will never abandon her host as her father abandoned her, and Azkadellia goes in search of Ahamo.

Cain exposes Toto as a turncoat, finding the discs he has been using as "bread crumbs" to transmit images back to Azkadellia. Toto explains that for fifteen years, he was imprisoned, but that Azkadellia came to him, offering amnesty if he would spy on DG for her. He agreed to save his life, biding his time for a chance to change loyalties back to DG. Cain and DG are both skeptical, but DG convinces Cain to save his life, saying that "we're all looking for second chances here."

The companions locate a portal in the ground and venture below into a domain of night, where they encounter a dancing fortuneteller. Cain bribes and threatens this mystic until she agrees to arrange a meeting with the Seeker, who can lead them to Ahamo. The fortuneteller betrays them to Zero, leading to the capture of Cain, Glitch, and Raw, while DG and Ahamo escape. The fortuneteller demands a reward for aiding in the capture of the fugitives, but Zero tells his men to kill her instead. He and his contingent march the men towards Azkadellia's tower, but the Longcoats are attacked by resistance fighters en route. One of these is Cain's son, who helps him extract information from Zero, but is appalled that Cain ultimately spares him and locks him inside a suit of armor like the one he was in. "If you haven't got heart, you haven't got anything," Cain tells his son.

While initially furious at her father for abandoning her and her mother, DG learns from him that he has been separated from her mother since she was taken to Earth, because, as he reports, he has been in hiding, preparing for her return. Ahamo reveals that he was swept to the O.Z. by a storm that blew his balloon off course from Nebraska, and met Lavender Eyes when he first arrived. After DG uses her magic to make a compass point to the Gray Gale, Ahamo takes her there in his balloon. Passing through a magical portal, DG finds the mausoleum of Dorothy Gale, her "greatest great-grandmother" and the "first slipper" who traveled from Earth to the O.Z. DG is directly descended via her mother from Dorothy, whose apparition gives her the Emerald, saying, "the Emerald of the Eclipse is in your hands now."

Before DG can escape with it, Azkadellia takes the emerald from her and entombs her in a sarcophagus of green marble within Dorothy's mausoleum. After DG escapes she and her friends are reunited, and make plans to sneak inside Azkadellia's tower. While Glitch, Cain, and Raw attempt to stop the anti-sunseeder, DG goes in search of her sister.

As the eclipse of both suns of the O.Z. nears totality, Azkadellia uses the emerald's power to attempt to lock the eclipse in place, putting the O.Z. under permanent darkness. Princess Azkadellia, possessed by the evil witch, stands in the beams of the eclipse. DG tries to reason with her, encouraging her sister to fight back, invoking her memories of their staunch love, and reminding her of intelligence, compassion, and courage. Finally, Azkadellia clasps hands with DG, who pulls her free of the beam, separating her physical body from the spectral form of the old witch, and taking the emerald she wears with it. Once evicted from Az, the old woman says "Have the little witch! I care not, for the heavens do my bidding!" but realizes that Azkadellia has the emerald and attacks the sisters. Az joins with DG, their combined magic shielding them against the witch's attack until DG's companions are able to reverse the Sun Seeder pulse, causing her to melt.

The royal sisters are reunited with their mother, the queen, and with their father. The O.Z. has been saved from perpetual darkness.

TO HUNT A GENIUSAKA: OKHOTA NA GENIYA

Mikhail Kovalenko (Dmitri Maryanov) is a journalist who covers criminal themes for a commercial television channel based in Moscow. Very talented in his work, he is charming and successful. His spare time is filled with interesting friends and fulfilling pastimes, when not spent with his beautiful and much beloved girlfriend. When a fellow journalist, environmentalist Bogdan Sokorov, mysteriously dies, Mikhail decides to investigate. He is soon drawn into a plot by a maniacal criminal to kill a famous Ukrainian microbiologist, Dr. Igor Shokhin (Leonid Kulagin), who, while researching ways to combat biological weapons, has discovered how to make the human body immune to all infectious diseases. To save this scientist, Mikhail will need to draw on all the skills and know-how he acquired in the military when he served in a special anti-terrorism unit.

This 16-episode mini-series is based on Russian author Valentine Bardzinsky's novel of the same name, "Okhota na geniya" (To Hunt a Genius)", the first book in his ongoing "Tsenturion (Centurion)" series of crime novels.

TOKUSOU SENTAI DEKARENJA

AKA: INVESTIGATION SQUADRON DETECTIVE RANGER

AKA: SPECIAL INVESTIGATION BATTLE TEAM DETECTIVE RANGER

The story begins when Banban Akaza arrives on Earth. He is transferred to the S.P.D. (Special Police DekaRanger) Earth branch by his commander. By that time, the mysterious intergalactic terrorist organization, Alienizer, turns its destructive attention to Earth, helping the criminals there. It's up to the DekaRangers to stop them and bring them to justice. The SPD of Earth are stationed in the DekaBase under the command of Doggie Kruger

As a person who has viewed the entire Super Sentai series since its inception in 1975, DEKA-RANGER stands as one of the best shows of the sub-genre. From the sharp opening theme song to the charismatic Doggy Kruger (Deka-Master) to the insidious Agent Abrela, this show hits all cylinders in terms of music, acting, storyline, and visual SFX. The fact that the main 5 are top-notch actors helps, along with a great supporting cast, and practical usage of the mecha (giant robots) in the series without going into overkill. For the male fans of the series, the two actresses (Kinoshita Ayumi as Jasmine / Deka-Yellow and Kikuchi Mika as Umeko / Deka-Pink) are quite striking looking and for new starlets, are able to hold their own in scenes requiring skills other than their obvious physical beauty. Forget the Americanized POWER RANGERS S.P.D.--DEKA-RANGER will blow it away.

The footage from the show was used to create Power Rangers: SPD.

Characters

DekaRangers

Banban Akaza (Akaza Banban) / DekaRed : Nickname, "Ban". He was training in space until he was assigned to the Earth Unit. He has a chaotic, but fiercely loyal personality. It took awhile before he gained Hoji's trust. Irritates Hoji by calling him 'aibo', which translates to 'buddy' or 'partner'. He has a special martial arts technique called Juu Kun Do ("Way of the Gun") when he blends his martial arts skills with his gunfire. At the series finale, Banban became the leader of the Fire Squad. In Magiranger vs. Dekaranger, Ban returns to help his old team when Jasmine get kidnapped. He gains a upgrade called the Battle Riser Mode, where Murphy becomes a suit of armor and powerful sword for him to use in the fight. Also, since then, he and Mari Gold are together now.

Houji Tomasu (Tomasu Hōji) / DekaBlue: Nickname, "Hoji". The most professional member of the team, Hoji tends to be arrogant of his skills. He is an excellent sniper with superb accuracy when shooting. He clashed with Ban from the beginning, but it was later revealed that Ban had replaced his commanding officer as DekaRed and Hoji had a hard time accepting it. But he eventually returned Ban's friendship. He has a sister, who gets married later in the series.

Senichi Enari (Enari Senichi) / DekaGreen: Nickname, "Sen-chan". He's the brains of the team with a remarkable ability to think things through. Oddly, he does his best thinking when he's upside down, calling this pose the "Thinking Pose". Has a bit of a crush on Umeko, but doesn't show it outright.

Reimon Marika (Marika Reimon) / DekaYellow : Nickname, "Jasmine". A psychic (ESPer), as she can pick up sensory impressions of others through handling an object or visiting a location her target has touched or been to. Jasmine wears gloves to help control her powers when she doesn't need to use them. She's a calm, collected individual, though in the past considered suicide by letting an Alienizer kill her because of the depression her inability to control her powers had caused. Was rescued and recruited by Doggie. Is tight friends with Umeko, forming an unbeatable tag-team.

Koume Kodou (Kodō Koume) / DekaPink : Nickname, "Umeko". She tends to be a ditz, but has a good heart, and can often bring the team together under the most dire of circumstances with her perkiness. She spends every moment she can in a bubble bath. While Doggie Krueger is the leader of Earth's DekaRangers, Umeko is the "field leader" (or so she wishes). She is a master of disguise (a trend throughout most pink rangers in sentai).

Tekkan Aira (Aira Tekkan) / DekaBreak : Nickname, "Tetsu". A super elite SPD officer with the gold badge sent to earth to fight the Hell Siblings, an elite group of alienizers who have already destroyed 79 planets, Earth being their next target. An alienizer named Jeaneio killed Tetsu's parents when he was about five years old. Tetsu was raised by the Space Police off-planet. He pilots the DekaBike. His catchphrase is "Nonsense". His fighting style is Seiken Accel Blow ("Justice Fist Acceleration Blow"), a style of Kempo that all elite SPD officers (or "Tokokyou") use when battling very deadly Alienizers and better handling the Bracethrottle.

SPD Staff

Doggie Kruger (Dogī Kurūgā) / DekaMaster : Nickname, "Boss". An alien from the Planet Anubis, he's a member of the Shep-Tribe & the much decorated commander of Earth's SPD unit. He was a legend in his day as a DekaRanger, earning the nick-name "Hell's Guard Dog" (Jigoku no Banken). Doggie is a tough leader and being honorable, he will do anything to save the ones he cares about. He seems to have feelings for his assistant Swan, panicking whenever he hears that Swan has an admirer. He also occasionally assists the DekaRangers as DekaMaster, wielding the powerful D-Sword Vega. In Magiranger vs. Dekaranger, he fought Wolzard for a short time and they were equally matched. His fighting style is of Ginga Ittoryuu or Galaxy Sword and was chosen by his Sensei to learn of the secret technique, Vega Impulse.

Swan Shiratori (Shiratori Suwan) (1-50) / DekaSwan (36): Nickname, "Swan-san". She is Kruger's assistant from the Planet Chiinyo, though Swan herself is half human. She's the one who provides the DekaRangers with their arsenal. Swan can henshin into DekaSwan, although she was only able to do it twice in the series. Her surname is a pun, since it can be translated as "white bird" which fits a swan. She's also a close friend of Miyuki Ozu/MagiMother.

Lisa Teagle (Risa Thīgeru) / DekaBright(40): Referred to as "Chief" by Tetsu. She's a top rank SPD officer with a gold badge like Tetsu from the Planet Lumiere. In fact, she is Tetsu's mentor. She trained Tetsu to be passionless and efficient: the kind of police officer most people think as the "perfect officer". All that was put in jeopardy when he came to Earth. She's on equal ground with Kruger and Swan, and could have taken Tetsu away with her.

Mari Gold (Marī Gōrudo) / DekaGold(Movie): Her nickname is "Marie." Exclusive to the movie, she arrived from Planet Leslie. She pretended the singer Mari Utahime (Utahime, a pun for "song princess"), and had entered an alien's bar. She had feelings for Ban. Her time morphed was very brief, as her SP License malfunctioned. Her name is a play in marigold. Magiranger vs. Dekaranger indicates that she and Ban are now together.

K-9 Unit 'Murphy': Mechanical dog use to track criminals and objects using his enhanced sense of smell. Can move extremely fast, and is loyal to his friends (especially Umeko), often detecting when they're in danger from great distances and running to assist. When given the Key Bone, Murphy transforms into the D-Bazooka, a powerful weapon which can be used by the DekaRangers. Has a tendency to try and show dominance over Doggie by raising his leg and releasing coolant fluid on Kruger's feet. In Magiranger vs. Dekaranger, Murphy becomes a suit of armor for DekaRed in Battlizer Mode.

Director General Horus/Numa O: An alien from Planet Horus, & Supreme-Commander of the entire SPD.
Porupo: Ban's former instructor.

Buntar: An old friend of Kruger's from Planet Torto. He trained the DekaRangers to assume S.W.A.T. Mode.
Gyoku Rou: Ban's predecessor from Planet Leon. He was originally assigned as DekaRed for Earth but then he had an injury saving them. He was later preparing his own team, the Fire Squad, when he returned. By the finale, Ban joined his new team known as "Fire Squad" while Tetsu seemingly took Ban's place on the original DekaRanger team.

Others

Amy (12): Amy is a huge baby who was thought to be lost but was really kidnapped by the Alienizer. Her cries are create shockwaves capable of destroying cities. Also, her species are actually giant creatures; however, use devices to shrink themselves when traveling. In this case, her pacifier was her shrinking device and when she accidentally drops it, she grows into a giant.

Beetonin (18): An Alien from Planet Zoina who crashed landed in Kyoto in the Feudal Era Japan. He was cared for by Ban's ancestor and shinsengumi member, Akaza Banoshin, who taught him the ways of bushido and samurai conduct. Beetonin ended up in present-day Kyoto, confused by the changes and attacking the DekaRangers on assumption that they were invaders thanks to Aburera. In reality, his species ages slower than humans; according to Jasmine, a 60,000 year difference. Fortunately, Ban defeated him with Doggie's D-Sword Bega and Beetonin realized the truth.

Arsenal

SP Shooter: Each Dekaranger has a SP Shooter, one of the weapons they put on their regular hostlers when not in ranger mode.

D-Whopper: Every Dekaranger has a D-Whopper built into his or her belt buckle to arrest criminals. Tetsu has his own gold colored version of the D-Whopper.

SP Arms: The badges. Divided into SP License (DekaRangers), Master License (DekaMaster), Swan License, & MariGold License. Since the License is a Dekaranger's life, losing it for even a second is a great offense, as told by Kruger in Episode 5, which also humorously demonstrates the impracticality of hand-held Henshin devices.

Change Mode: The "Change" option transforms the DekaRangers into their ranger uniforms or to SWAT mode.

Phone Mode: The "Phone" option serves as basic communication allowing the Rangers to contact each other or the Academy, as well as summon the Pat Machines.

Judgment Mode: The "Judge" option allows the Dekaranger to judge Alienizers from a higher court. If it lands on a blue O, the suspect is innocent and is to be set free. If it lands on a red X, the criminal in question must be "deleted" ("terminated") on the spot.

D01 Magnum & D02 Magnum: DekaRed's personal sidearms, they can function separately or be combined into the Hybrid Magnum which holds great firepower and initiates the attack, Hybrid Charging Shoot.

D-Knuckle: A knuckle weapon which increases an individual's punch.

D-Rods: Baton weapons shaped after jittes. The weapons are used by Hoji and Sen. Hoji's finisher with the weapon is called Blue Finish and Sen's finisher is called Green Cut. When combined with their D-Knuckle, it creates their D-Arms. In this case, Hoji uses the D-Sniper and Sen is equipped with the D-Blaster.

D-Stick: Baton weapons shaped after foils. The weapons are used by Jasmine and Umeko. When combined with their D-Knuckles, it creates their D-Arms, the D-Shot. With the D-Shot, they enable the team up attack, Twin Cam Shot.

BraceThrottle: DekaBreak's personal changer which allows him to change into Dekaranger uniform. When the throttle is turned it enables for DekaBreak to use specialized punch based attacks. Also has a built in Communicator and Judgement Mode functions as well. In given times, the device is also used as a life support system and fire extinguisher. DekaBright has one of her own, although it's design is different.

Throttle Techniques

-Kousoku-ken "Lighting Fist"/Chou Kousoku-ken "Super Lightning Fist": Speed Increase (Tetsu's Technique)

-Goriki-ken Power Fist/Chou Goriki-ken "Super Power Fist": Strength Increase (Tetsu's Technique)*

-Dengeki-Ken "Electro Fist"/Chou Dengeki-ken "Hyper Electro Fist": Electric Shockwave (Tetsu's Technique)

-Shakunetsu-ken "Fire Fist": Fireball Attack (Tetsu's Technique)

-Tatsumaki-ken "Tornado Fist": Cyclone Blast (Tetsu's Technique)

-Funsha-ken "Impulse Fist": Fire Extinguisher (Shared Technique)

-Raigeki-ken Thunder Fist: Electric Punch (Lisa's Technique)

-Bougo-ken "Barrier Fist": Force Field (Lisa's Technique)

Deletion Techniques

-Seikan Accel Blow Ougi Hissatsu-ken "Sonic Hammer": Flying Punch Finisher (Tetsu's Default Deletion Attack)

-Seikan Accel Blow Ougi Kosouku-ken "Lightning Upper": Uppercut Finisher (Active while Tetsu is using "Super Lightning Fist." Used to delete Jeaneio)

-Seikan Accel Blow Ougi Senkou-ken "Plasma Fist": Rushing Punch Finisher (seen in DekaRed vs. DekaBreak)

-Shining Fist: A Rapidfire Punch attack when being launched from the MagiLamp Buster. (seen in Magi vs. Deka)

-Seikan Accel Blow Ougi Shikou-ken "Highest Hammer": Energy Punch Finisher (Lisa's Default Deletion Attack)

D-Sword Vega: A sword wielded by DekaMaster. A sword at first that has metal that is blunted but when DekaMaster activates it, silver metal is revealed. D-Sword Vega has two Judgment finishers.

-Ginga Ittoryuu Ougi "Vega Slash": Powerful slice attack that defeats Alienizers.

-Ginga Ittoryuu Ougi "Vega Tornado": Seen in Episode 22: Mad Brothers. DekaMaster creates a circle with his sword and spins it repeatedly until a tornado is created. The attack is then focused on the opponent with an upward slash, which blows them away.

-Ginga Ittoryuu Ougi "Vega Impulse": Shown in Episode 44: Mortal Campaign. DekaMaster uses this move in which he lifts his sword up and as it goes down, the blade extends slicing his opponent in half and in the process destroys him/her.

D-Revolver: A high-powered beam machine gun that the Dekarangers use when they are in S.W.A.T. Mode. It's power is far greater than the Hybrid Magnum. When used at it's full power it has the ability to delete Alienizers. The Dekarangers also use D-Revolver with the DekaWing Cannon.

DekaVehicles: Vehicles that the Dekarangers use as transportation. Each is named after a certain breed of dog. Machine Doberman: Car used by DekaRed and DekaYellow. Can travel at 500 km/h.

Machine Bull: Car used by DekaGreen and DekaPink. Travels at 350 km/h.

Machine Husky: Motorcycle used by DekaBlue. Travels at 300 km/h.

Machine Boxer: Motorcycle used by DekaBreak. Travels at 330 km/h.

D01 Smasher & D02 Smasher: DekaGold's personal sidearms. It is not clear if the weapons can combine, but the weapons themselves are similar to the D-Magnums, except it cannot combine.

Battle Riser: Exclusive to Magiranger vs. Dekaranger. A weapon provided to him as a member of the Fire Squad. Enables DekaRed to enter "Battle Riser Mode", enhancing his agility and fighting ability to superhuman levels with Murphy transforming into his armor complete with a rocket booster pack, siren lasers, and a flaming sword rifle, which enables the deletion attack.

Mecha

Super Dekaranger Robo: When Dekaranger Robo combines with DekaBike through the Riding Dekaranger Robo formation, it can create the Super Dekaranger Robo. It can use its jet engines to maneuver at superhuman speeds and where it can perform its finisher, Gatling Punch, where it strikes with a variety of high speed punches, and Dynamate Upper, a powerful uppercut punch.

PAT Machines/Dekaranger Robo: The five machines that are dispatched from the DekaBase. They can combine to form Dekaranger Robo, which stands 45 meters tall, weighs in at 4600 tons and power of 15,000,000 hp (11 GW). It carries the Judgement Sword (performs the Flying Crash attack), the GyroWarper (giant handcuffs) & the Signal Cannon (Has normal gun, catch rope, and water cannon functions). Its finisher is where it can use its Signal Cannon at full power for its Justice Flasher attack. Unfortunately, it was destroyed by Abutrex near the finale, but eventually rebuilt to assist the MagiRangers in a fight against two Alienizers and a Hades Beastman.

Pat Striker: Wheeled Police Car - can use it's Stiker arms to manipulate objects and combine with the Judgement Sword to create Driving Sword enabling Pat Striker to destroy Kaijuuki by running into them. Pat Striker becomes Dekaranger Robo's head, main torso, and upper legs.

Pat Gyzer: GyroCopter - armed with the Gyro Vulcan guns and GyroWarper. Pat Gyzer becomes DekaRanger Robo's left foot.

Pat Railer: Armored Trailer - carries the blade of the Judgement Sword and Signal Cannon into battle. Pat Railer becomes DekaRanger Robo's right foot.

Pat Armor: Armored Hovercraft - armed with Light Flash that blinds its target and becomes the handle of the Judgement Sword. Pat Armor becomes DekaRanger Robo's right arm.

Pat Signer: Sign Car - Equipped with a giant version of the Judgement Scanner, which determines if a person is guilty (red X) or innocent (blue O). Pat Signer becomes DekaRanger Robo's left arm.

DekaBike: A giant motorcycle (the first of its kind in Super Sentai history) piloted by DekaBreak. It can also become DekaBike Robo, which possesses two Sleeve Sword jackknives and can initiate its Sword Tornado finishing move. It can be rode on by Dekaranger Robo, known as Riding Dekaranger Robo, where it can use the Dekaranger Robo's Signal Cannon for its Riding Justice Flasher attack and through this formation it can combine with the Dekaranger Robo to form Super Dekaranger Robo. Though DekaBike is never seen flying in Earth's atmosphere, it is capable of interstellar flight, and is used as a means of interstellar transport on several occasions. It was destroyed in the finale when Tetsu set it to remote control and had it ram into the DekaBase Robo with Agent Aburera at the controls in a kamikaze attack, which only proved to be futile. However, like DekaRanger Robo, it was rebuilt to help the Magirangers in a fight against two Alienizers and a Hades Beastman.

DekaBase: The DekaBase is the primary headquarters for the SPD Earth Branch, and base of operations for Doggie Kruger. But it can transform into a rover vehicle, Dekabase Crawler for mobility and the DekaBase Robo, which is twice the size of its fellow mecha. It uses its Finger Missiles and Knee Brace Beams to attack enemies, and then finish them with its Volcanic Buster attack (the younger Browgul could withstand this attack, however). When the PAT Machines are docked inside it, the DekaBase Robo can achieve 200% of its normal power output.

Blast Buggy: Exclusive to the Dekaranger Movie. One of the remaining Deka vehicles on Planet Leslie that was found and piloted by DekaBreak. Can combine with Dekaranger Robo to create Dekaranger Robo Full Blast Custom. When combined it splits into the Blast Shield and Blast Launcher (Double Barrel Gun). Attacks are Spinning Blast, (planting the shield on the ground to spin around and fire in all directions) and Full Blast Custom finisher (placing the launcher on the shield to fire a supercharged shot).

Patrol Wings/DekaWing Robo: Created by Swan for cases involving aerial and outer space battles, since it is better equipped for midair combat. Designed to be used with the DekaRangers' S.W.A.T. mode. Armed with its two P.A.T. Magnum Guns and can transform into the DekaWing Cannon to finish its opponent.

Alienizer

Generic name given to criminal aliens. Take note that normal aliens who are not criminals are just called aliens.

Agent Aburera: An Alienizer agent who came to Earth, offering his services to the alien criminals there. He was rumored to be the first Alienizer to come to Earth. He provides the various types of androids and Kaijuuki, caring about nothing except the money he gets. He can open his cape to reveal bat-like wings, and can transform into and control a flock of alien vampire bats, whose bite can make an alien grow into a rampaging giant. Over time, he starts taking the DekaRangers' interference personally and managed to take Dekabase (via Abutrailer) to use the Dekabase Robo for the purpose of destroying the city, a plan that was revealed to have been in the works since the very beginning of the series. However, he was killed off by the Dekarangers, thus bringing him to justice.

Igaroid: The highest rank out of all the mecha-ningen (robot humans). Uses a sword to attack.

Batsuroid: An android that leads the Anaroids. Can use hand-mounted gun to blast enemies.

Anaroids: Androids that appear from the grenades thrown by a Batsuroid.

Minor Alienizers

Baransu (1): A giant alien who had a bus and it's occupant for ransom when the four DekaRangers arrive at the scene at the beginning of the series. He was easily defeated and arrested. Brought in by four of the PAT Machines.

Don Moyaida (1-2): From Planet Diamante, he was charged with homicide, vehicular homicide, & terrestrial resource burglary. He piloted the Fancrusher and could disguise himself as a human. Killed by DekaRed.

Hell Heaven (3): From Planet Gurowza, He was charged with kidnapping for profit-making & murder in Star-29. Under the employment of Kevekia, he piloted the first version of Devil Capture to distract the DekaRangers. Killed by DekaBlue.

Kevakia (3-4, 28): From Planet Ricomo, he used HellHeaven to keep the DekaRangers from getting in the way of his kidnapping a girl from a rich family for ransom. He was able to digitize himself, traveling the internet to emerge from other computers. He piloted the 2nd version of DevilCapture. Killed by DekarangerRobo.

Beitorun (5, 28): A rhino-like Alienizer from Planet Anri, charged with mass-murder on five planets. Working for Manomarku of Planet Doretoku, he turns humans into a red liquid gasoline for a share in profits his employer is to make. He even committed bank robberies to get the money Manomarku needs to perfect his work. His armored body was hard to penetrate until K9 Unit Murphy came to the rescue. Killed by the D-Bazooka.

Kazas (6, 28): Charged with murder & planet invasion, she and her younger sister Yoshimi were about to steal the Earth's supply of water. But Yoshimi had second thoughts at the last minute and was killed for it. She had another alien, Buraidi, take the blame until Sen-chan uncovered the truth. Like other members of her race, she can use water in various ways like using it to secrete healing liquid from their stalks to heal herself and others or use high-power water streams she emits to slice through concrete and steel like butter. Killed by the D-Bazooka.

Dagonail (7-8, 28): A 10,708-year old Cthulian, however he acts just like a child. His crime was turning people into dolls. Manipulated a lonely little boy with the power to teleport objects into helping him. He piloted the 34-Embanzu. Killed by DekarangerRobo.

Shake (9-10, 28): Arrested on the charges of mass-murder via explosives, he is a genius bomb manufacturer. He broke out of prison with a bomb. He piloted the 1st version of Shinobi Shadow. Killed by the D-Bazooka.

Gigantes (11): Charged with wide-area homicide, he was an old academy buddy of Houji's named Vino, who retired from the Space Police and reconfigured his body into a gun-for-hire, having grown disenchanted by the life of a Deka and lured into the life of a criminal by the money he was able to earn with his skills. As his name states, he can enlarge himself. Hired by Ben G to assassinate Doggie Kruger. Killed by DekarangerRobo.

Ben G (13, Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): From the Planet Kajimeri, Ben G swore revenge on Kruger for his face being damaged. Charged with mass-murder & infiltrating SPD, he kidnapped Swan as part of his revenge. But this only forced Kruger to assume his role as DekaMaster. He had a Batsuroid pilot the 1st version of Terrible Terror to keep the DekaRangers at bay. Killed by DekaMaster.

Fary (14): From the Crystal Planet, he was charged on counts of burglary & homicide of many SPD officers. As his body could not take sunlight, he was after a mineral called 'Lunar Metal' so he be able to roam freely in daylight. He had a Batsuroid pilot Devil Capture to keep the DekaRangers busy while he obtained his prize and ate it, enabling him to move freely in the light of day. But his victory was short lived as he was soon defeated by the DekaRangers. Killed by the D-Bazooka.

Meteus (15-16): A brutal figure from Titan, who was after a little android girl named Flora in the DekaRanger's custody, so he could use her to control a giant machine monster named Gigas. He used a Batsuroid to pilot the 1st version of Cannon Gladiator and attack the DekaBase while he captured Flora and managed to control Gigas. But he was killed by DekaMaster and Gigas was destroyed by DekaBase Robo.

Gigas (15-16): Killed by DekaBase Robo.

Iaru (17): Charged on medical violations & homicide, he posed as a restaurant patron. His species could grow stronger when drunk. Umeko was able to drink some of Iaru's sake in order to be able to keep up with his movements, but passed out shortly afterwards. Like Giganis and Buraidi, he could enlarge himself. Killed by Dekaranger Robo, with DekaMaster as the replacement driver for Pat Signer.

Jinche (19): Wanted in seven planets on charges of burglary & vandalizing, he tried to escape deletion by switching bodies with Houji in order to take control of DekaBase Robo. Piloted the 2nd version of Shinobi Shadow. Killed by the D-Bazooka.

Baizugoa (20): A destroyer of worlds, he set up a bomb to destroy Earth. Part of his MO was playing a game of 'find the bombs' with the SPD units in the worlds he destroyed, and became infamous because of it. Piloted the 2nd version of Cannon Gladiator. Killed by DekarangerRobo.

Hell's Siblings (21-23): From the Styx Planet, they are wanted on 79 Planets on charges of marauding and murder.

Camille/Succubus (21-23, Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): One of the Hell Siblings, drains the lifeforce out of those she touches. Adopted a human guise called Camille. She first wanted to devour Jasmine, but was interested in the girl's ESP and wanted her as a partner/pet instead. She was the first to pilot the GodPounder robot. Succubus was mortally injured by Blitz during her fight with DekaBreak. Despite her injury, Succubus survived long enough to revive her brother by transferring all the life energy she had absorbed into him.

Bon Goblin (21-22, Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): He is the middle child, the strongest & hungry. He could enlarge himself. Killed by DekaBike Robo.

Blitz (21-23, 28): The eldest brother. He also piloted GodPounder second. Cold and ruthless, he even uses/attacks his younger siblings, not caring if they die or not. Killed by Riding Dekaranger Robo.

Algolians (Movie): They stole a deadly virus that transformed anyone infected into living robotic slaves, in order to sell the vaccine for it at a high price, once they release it. They themselves are living robots, known collectively as "Gas Drinkers".

Volgar: Leader of the Algolians. Piloted KillerTank. Killed by Dekaranger Robo Full Blast Custom.

Brandel: Killed by DekaGreen.

Winsky: Killed by DekaBlue.

Zeen: Killed by DekaYellow & Pink.

Gordom (24): He tricked another alien into holding a city block ransom with a bomb by kidnapping his child and making him believe the DekaRangers did it, allowing him to rob the bank in the confusion. Piloted the 2nd version of Terrible Terror. Killed by DekaBike Robo.

Byooi (25): Killed by Dekaranger Robo & DekaBike Robo.

Durden (26): The owner of an illegal fight club gambling operation who was also selling an illegal steroid, Megagesterine. Killed by Super DekarangerRobo.

Jilvan (26): A huge boxer in the illegal fighting club who had a 2,000 match winning streak. Upon consuming Megagesterine, he bulks up even more with large wing-like horns growing out of his arms and neck. His streak was ended by Houji, who figured out his weakness.

Biiring (26): Another fighter who took in Megagesterine as well. Fought by Houji & Tetsu. Resembled a giant lizard.

Miribal (27, Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): Murdering thief from Planet 48. He uses wind-based attacks. Had a partner named Niwande who helped him rob criminals to raise money to help orphans, until he got reckless. Killed by Super DekarangerRobo.

Balipen (28): A copycat criminal who not only committed the crimes of Kevakia, Beitorun, Kazas, Dagonail & Shake, but took on their forms as well. He piloted another version of the GodPounder as Blitz and was killed by DekarangerRobo.

Jeaneio (28-29, Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): Charged with taking the freedom of over 1,000,000 people on 124 planets by trapping them in his own mirror world, he abducted all the DekaRangers minus DekaRed & DekaBreak. He had a Batsuroid pilot Megaria in order to abduct DekaRed in DekaBike Robo in a cleverly setup trap. Learning that Jeaneio was the one who killed his parents, Testu avenged their deaths by killing Jeaneio with Lightning Upper.

Kazakku (Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): From Planet Ginjifu. Attempted to build an interdimensional tunnel between his dimension and that of the Abarangers, so that he could resurrect Dezumozorlya. Killed by the team effort of Super Dekaranger Robo & KillerAbarenoh.

Jakkiru (31): An hitman charged with homicide. Hired to assassinate the girl from episode 3-4 by a rival from the girl's family. Killed by Super DekarangerRobo.

Sanoa (32-33): An mass-murderer with ties to the mafia, he took DekaBreak and DekaMaster hostage. Killed by the five Dekarangers with the new S.W.A.T. armor.

Zootaku (32-33): The scatterbrained partner of Sanoa, he was the first to acquire Muscle Gear, a powerful exosuit with the ability to turn its wearer invisible. Killed by the five Dekarangers with the new S.W.A.T. armor.

Ginega (34): A mobster who has command over Decho and Sirogar. His father was a member of the government counsel. Murdered countless innocents via Kaijuukis in a specialized 'game' they set up with a rare jewel. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Decho (34): Ginega's loyal follower. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Sirogar (34): A narcissistic follower of Ginega. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Raja (35): He killed a detective's daughter 13 years ago. He also charged on 103 count of burglary. He piloted the second version of Night Chaser. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Haimaru (36): He worked with Swan and was jealous when she was chosen for the police scientific criminal investigation laboratory. Created the Frankensaurus which moved with a remote control operated by him. However he was confronted by DekaSwan and she was able to shutdown his dangerous Haimaru reactor after Agent Aburera set it to explode. Afterwards Haimaru wanted to die but Swan stopped him and after a stern lecture from Doggie Kruger, Haimaru was arrested by Tetsu for his crimes.

Claud (37): He was charged on counts of mass murder & inhuman experimentation, taking the nutrients from his victims in order to cure his sister of a deadly disease. He posed as a boy with a flower. Killed by DekaBlue.

Ganjava (38): Charged with burglary and child abduction, killing the child's parents so he could utilize her natural abilities to manipulate locks. Piloted the 4th version of Cannon Gladiator. Killed by S.W.A.T. Mode DekaRed.

Mimi (39): She created a youth potion by stealing young women's souls though their dreams. She targeted Umeko. Mimi piloted the final version of Magaria. Killed by the teamwork of S.W.A.T. Mode DekaYellow and DekaPink.

Korachek (40): An arsonist in 4,103 cases & with 3 charges of planetary incineration. He is of the Pyrians, flame-based beings who sometimes wear protective suits to move freely in places like Earth. The Dekarangers were unaware of this until Tetsu figured out his weakness and was able to strike Korachek with his Super Impulse fist attack. Korachek also has a giant sized version of his suit. His body temperature was 2,500 degrees Celsius and then when he becomes giant, it increases by 500. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Jingi (41) An assassin who has made more than 1,000 kills in his career. He was hired by Don Blacko to kill Don Byanko, but was insulted by his employer and killed him, as well. Considers his skills far beyond those of a typical killer, and gets murderously angry whenever someone questions or insults his abilities. His chain on his head can send someone to another dimension, what that dimension leads nobody knows. Killed by DekaWing Robo.

Don Byanko (41): A white-tigerish member of the mafia. Rival of that of Don Blacko. Attacked and killed by Jingi.

Don Blacko (41): A catus-like rival member to Don Byanko. He hired Jingi to kill Don Byanko, deleted, as well, by him.

Nikareida (42): Murdered an astronomist and posed as him to help bring the Buragoris to Earth. Destroyed by S.W.A.T mode.

Buragori Bros. (42-43): Two Mecha-size creatures brought up by Nikareida. Not sentient. Was part of a big payroll of Aburera's. The first was destroyed by Super DekaRanger Robo, and the second was destroyed by a group effort of all four Deka Robos.

Biscus (44): Old friend of Kruger's. They trained together, but Biscus was too out of control and likely to abuse any power he had. Had a sword similar to Kruger's. Showed up on Earth during Christmas to steal Deka badges for Agent Aburera. Killed by DekaMaster's Vega Impulse, a secret technique ironically taught to him by their trainer.

Mashu (46): A con-artist who married 273 times under aliases & killed his wives by using Psycho Mushrooms to manipulate their feelings. He targeted Umeko as his 274th wife. However a suspicious Sen-Chan uncovered his plan and when he confronted Mashu, Mashu's plan was ruined when he unknowingly bragged about his evil intentions in front of her. Killed by S.W.A.T. Mode DekaPink.

Terry-X (47): An alienizer who absorbs the lifeforce of ESPers and turns them into plasma batteries. Was confronted by Hoji and Jasmine a few years back when they were novices and almost killed them (specifically wanting to absorb the lifeforce of Jasmine due to her being an ESPer) but they were rescued by their senior, Gyoku Rou, aka Earth's original DekaRed. This was the fatal accident that paralyzed Gyoku Rou and forced him to retire. Killed by DekaWingRobo.

Jerifesu (48-49): Jellyfish like alienizer who possessed human beings and took control of their bodies.

Possessed Ban, forcing Tetsu to risk Ban's life to get rid of Jerifesu. Was used as a distraction to keep the Dekarangers busy so Abunera could invade the DekaBase. Piloted second version of Million Missile. Killed by Super DekaRangerRobo.

Angol (49): An Alienizer that Abunera broke out to use the Abutrex while Abunera and the others took control of the DekaBase. He was killed by DekaWing Robo (Piloted by DekaBreak).

Uniga, Ganimede & Sukira (49-50): Alienizers that Abunera broke out from prison to help him invade the DekaBase. They managed to take down DekaMaster, but were killed by the assembled Dekarangers. Uniga was killed by DekaYellow and DekaPink, Ganimede was killed by DekaBlue and DekaGreen, and Sukira was killed by DekaBreak.

Biljik (Magiranger vs. Dekaranger): Giant mechanoid from Planet Chigukade. He picked up a restaurant that the Magirangers and Umeko were in and began eating it. Was captured by the Dekarangers' mecha, only to be eliminated by his partner Babon.

Babon (Magiranger vs. Dekaranger): Biljik's partner. He worked with Apollos/Agent X so they can obtain the Heavenly Flower Brooch. He uses missile barrels on his shoulders and an arm mounted blaster. Babon eliminated Biljik for being captured. When the Dekarangers faced Babon, none of their attacks fazed him, because of the Madou circle on his chest, but the Magirangers could damage him and almost killed him, if it weren't for Ban trying to destroy him with his new Battlizer. Babon kidnapped Urara and Jasmine went after him. Babon was going to exchange the girls for for the Brooch, when he fell in love with Hikaru & Tetsu in girls' outfits. He and Apollos piloted Apotrex before its destruction. He was beaten by MagiShine & DekaBreak's "DekaBreak Shining Fist" attack. He and Apollos were killed by a combined team attack that was powered by the Brooch.

Kaijuuki

The robots usually provided by Aburera himself, either the owners pilot them to fight the DekaRangers' robots, or use them as a distraction with help from a Batsuroid. (This is a grand departure from the other Sentai series, and is comparable to the situation in Bioman. In that case, there were no monsters-of-the-week, having instead five and later three recurring human-sized commanders that would pilot different giant-sized robots-of-the-week.) While "Kaiju" is usually taken to mean "strange beast" ("Giant Monster"), the characters for "Kaijuuki" are "strange heavy machine".

Fancrusher (2): Destroyed by DekarangerRobo.

Devil Capture (3-4, 12, 14, 30, 36) Most were destroyed by DekarangerRobo. The final version which was destroyed by Dekaranger Robo and DekaBike Robo was actually being used by Haimaru to gather data on both robots.

34: Embanzu (7-8, 34) Destroyed by DekarangerRobo, DekaWing Robo.

Shinobi Shadow (9-10, 19): Destroyed by DekarangerRobo, DekaBase Robo.

Terrible Terror (13, 24): Destroyed by DekarangerRobo, DekaBike Robo.

Cannon Gladiator (15-16, 20, 31, 38): Swallowed by Gigas, Destroyed by DekarangerRobo, Super DekarangerRobo and DekaBase Robo.

Big Drawer (18, 44): Destroyed by DekaBase Robo.

GodPounder (21, 23, 28): Destroyed by DekarangerRobo & DekaBike Robo.

KillerTank (Movie): Destroyed by DekaRanger Robo Full Blast Custom.

Hunter Jet (25, 46): First version destroyed by DekaBike Robo. Second version disabled by DekaWing Robo (With Umeko detaching Patrol Wing 5 and crashing it into Hunter Jet) and then used by Sen to lure Mashu into his trap, which confirmed his suspicions about Mashu.

Ultimate Devil (26, 34, 41): Destroyed by Super DekarangerRobo, DekaWing Robo.

Megaria (29, 39): First version destroyed by DekaBike Robo (Piloted by DekaRed). Second version destroyed by DekaWing Robo (With DekaBreak as the replacement pilot for Patrol Wing 5).

Barettobyuu (Dekaranger vs. Abaranger): Piloted by Kazakku. Destroyed by the teamwork of Super Dekaranger Robo & KillerAbarenoh.

Night Chaser (30, 35): Destroyed by Super DekarangerRobo, and DekaWing Robo.

TOM CLANCY'S NETFORCE

Following the assassination of his mentor, Steve Day (Kristofferson), Alex Michaels (Bakula) assumes command of Netforce - an elite FBI agency created to police the Internet and prevent acts of electronic terrorism. While investigating his predecessor's murder, Michaels learns of a plot to destroy the 'Net and throw the world into complete chaos. As he draws closer to the mastermind behind the scheme, Michaels finds himself marked for death by a lethal assassin.

Former QUANTUM LEAP-er Scott Bakula attempts to prevent a global catastrophe in this hi-tech cyber thriller. Billed as a dangerously believable portrayal of the 21st Century, Netforce is the brainchild of Patriot Games author Tom Clancy, and explores the pitfalls and possibilities of a world dependent on the Internet.

Considering its two-and-a-half hour running time, Netforce wouldn't seem to have a lot of plot to hold viewer's attentions. But the glossy mini-series makes for consistently entertaining viewing, thanks to its intelligent scripting and solid performances, as well as some electrifying set-pieces. Clancy's depiction of the early 21st Century is both thought-provoking and fascinating, while the ever excellent Bakula brings a welcome Human touch to proceedings.

Netforce is not without its bugs, though, Clancy's intriguing hi-tech hi-jinks are weighed down by a routine romantic subplot and cliched Bill Gates-style central villain. And the long-awaited final showdown is nothing short of pure melodrama. Even in a world driven by the Internet, it seems, Soap Opera conventions will still have their place. But despite its shortcomings, techno-philes should feel free to point their browsers to Netforce. For its commentary on the Internet alone.

This mini-series first hit the UK on Rental video, on the 7th July 1999, as a single two-and-a-half hour "movie".

QUANTUM LEAP

TOM CORBETT, SPACE CADET

Set in the 24th Century the series dealt with the lives of three cadets: Corbett, Astro and Manning (who was later replaced by Thistle) as they attempted to graduate from the space academy and become members of the prestigious Solar Guards.

Unlike its contemporaries CAPTAIN VIDEO and SPACE PATROL, episodes of Tom Corbett, tended not to involve mad scientists and alien invasions. Rocket expert Wiley Ley was a technical consultant so the series tried to be a bit more scientifically accurate. Tom Corbett episodes tended to deal with survival in outer space and other worlds, battles against ordinary criminals (in space) and conflicts between members of the crew.

Conflicts most often arose between Roger Manning, a braggart bully type, and Astro, a Venusian. Corbett often got between them as a mediator. In the third season of weekly episodes Manning was replaced by T.J. Thistle, a cadet who felt the whole universe was against him since he was shorter than everyone else. The three cadets, under the supervision of Captain Strong, spent time in both the classroom and on real missions of a non critical variety in outer space on board their ship the Polaris. Often times contests would be held between various cadet crews, with rivalries developing between Corbett's group and that headed by Cadet Rattison.

There was probably no introduction more stirring than the one used to introduce the Tom Corbett, Space Cadet shows to its viewers and listeners in the early 1950's. The deep, thrilling tones of Jackson Beck, the catchy marching tune, the quick sharp harmonics of the organ that punctuated the countdown. Tom Corbett, through most of its TV career had it all; good writing, excellent costumes and sets, the best live visuals in television, and a superb cast. Even the original 15 minute format was a plus, building within its limited framework a brisk pace with many sustaining and suspenseful moments.

Corbett, of all the kids space exploration shows has the most unique broadcasting history. It may have been the only TV program to ever broadcast live over all four major networks (Dumont being the fourth). Twice the show went into a hiatus of eleven months and five months, only to come back as strong as ever. Even as late as 1957 the show was again being considered for revival after being off the air for more than 18 months.

The merchandising and ad agencies behind the show certainly were a factor in the success of the show, and indeed the success of the many items of merchandise gave us the pulse of the success of the show. Tom Corbett made inroads into every possible merchandising area imaginable: books, comics, comic strips, toys, premiums, records, games, and other items. Only Captain Video managed to monopolise one area that Tom Corbett didn't reach: the silver screen with the making of the Captain Video twelve chapter serial play.

Yet, strangely enough, the show was probably the most "earthbound" of all the kids space exploration programs. The story editors built the show around situations with which the audience was totally familiar, throwing them in the future and outer space. The crew of the Polaris seldom travelled outside the Solar System, and seldom encountered a true alien being during the five year history of the show. Much of the action centred around problems encountered at the Space Academy, or while in training aboard the Polaris. While in training manoeuvres the Polaris crew might encounter a meteor shower, an engine malfunction, a lost spaceman, a sick crew member, or a rescue mission. Once in a while the crew might struggle against space pirates, claim grabbers, killers, escaped convicts, colony uprisings, and mutinies in outer space. And on occasions the cadets were asked to become a courier service in delivering vaccines, emergency supplies or secret documents to one of the other planets or their satellites.

Some of the best action centred around Space Week, used several times during the series, in which various crews of the Space Academy vied against each other for top honours, and the prestige of being acknowledged as the reigning winners as the best crew at the Academy. Highlighting the contests were races; in outer space, in space suits, or amongst the various vessels, including the Polaris, Vulcan, Ceres, and Pallas crews. The crew of the Vulcan, headed by Cadet Eric Raddison (Frank Sutton) was a primary advisory of the Polaris crew. Tensions were especially livid between Eric and Roger Manning. Co-ordinated Space manoeuvres were also an opportunity for new encounters in outer space between the Polaris and Vulcan crews, causing some volatile and classic conflicts during the programs too brief history.

The producers readily borrowed their themes from old westerns, and stories of the early pioneers, their subjects were culled from boy's books and magazines, and the movies that the young boys in their audience had favoured for the past 50 years. The Space Academy was a school for young men at about highschool or early college level, a school of the future, and from this point the building of all their story themes were easy; the writers wrote about pioneers, rescue missions, and discovery, and about the problems of young men and their peers in this future world.

I must confess that I've always liked my science fiction full of robots and mutants and aliens of indescribable description, and that is why I enjoyed STAR TREK and STAR WARS, and why I'm enjoying DR. WHO now. And while Tom Corbett was striving away from the above, and toward believability, it still became my favourite show in the early 1950's, and I'm sure it was the characterisation of the shows main actors that did it for me.

The portrayal of Roger Manning by Jan Merlin was powerful and important. When Merlin left the show I felt that it signalled the beginning of the end of the shows success. The schoolyard conflicts between Roger and Astro with Tom acting as mediator was classic, and the kids in the audience related to this more than anything. It was an important piece of today in tomorrow. The character of Roger was an easy reference point for the viewers. He was not unlike the schoolyard bully, the loudmouth, the braggart. But Merlin's interpretation was deeper, for Roger, unlike most bullies and braggarts, was loveable. He was a rogue, always quick to boast of his accomplishments and downgrade those of Tom and Astro, but he was also hiding a soft heart, and a courage that he often tried to disguise with the hard callus of bravado.

As complicated as the Roger character was, the Astro character was deep. Born of terran parents on the planet Venus, Astro comes to earth almost like a stranger in a strange land. Quiet, sometimes brooding, Astro is the anticendant of Spock, lacking only the self-controlled, scientific mind of our half Vulcan friend. The Astro character as portrayed by Al Markim is clearly that of an introvert, a person not always sure of his true worth and talents. Almost humourless, Astrols quick temper would often succumb to the jibes of Roger Manning. Astro was a born engineer, strong, good with his hands, and not always able to handle the harmless repartee of Roger, except with his fists. Except for Roger, Astro would have been the easy going frontiersman, an innocent, not aware of the bullies, tyrants, pranksters, and hoodlums. Astro may have been an alien of sorts, but he, most of all represented us. His role was the one that was easiest for us to associated with, and that was his strength.

And finally there was Tom Corbett as portrayed by Frankie Thomas, probably the most difficult roll of all, and played by a master. Frankie Thomas must have had all the qualities of Tom Corbett, and it was easy to see why he was the star, and why Tom Corbett was the focal point of the show. Corbett was a leader, full of ideas, easy going, smooth, happy, strong, cool, handsome and popular; the kid everyone looked up to. He exuded confidence and leadership. Corbett was the natural pilot of the Polaris, and when it came to book work and execution behind the controls, Corbett had no peers. But occasionally even Roger could get to him, and Tom would blow his stack - er, jets.

Frankie Thomas possessed an extraordinary screen presence. He had all the poise and self confidence of a Gary Cooper, Clark Gable, or Clint Eastwood. He was born to be a leading man, and just as it seemed Basil Rathbone was born to play Sherlock Holmes, Thomas was born to play Corbett, and Corbett would be his most famous roll. Frankie Thomas was never adequately used in Hollywood, though his credentials as a stage star were superior to most who made the jump from the stage to the Hollywood film factories.

Frankie Thomas's movie credits include Tim Tyler's Luck, and several Nancy Drew films. He also appeared in The Major and the Minor, and several "Little Tough Guys" films. When the program moved over to NBC in December 1954 it was without Jan Merlin. He was replaced in the Polaris crew by T.J. Thistle, as portrayed by the talented Jackie Grimes, who had already had a journeyman career in radio and television playing in such shows as Henry Aldrich and Superman. But somehow the Thistle part did not come off as successfully. The basic idea seemed to be that Thistle bore a chip on his shoulder because of his size, and this story idea culminated in the episode entitled "A Mighty Mite", which was the first of the Tom Corbett episodes to become available on video tape.

The Kraft people clearly did not give Corbett the same budget priorities as it did its landmark KRAFT VIDEO THEATER. Use of sets were often minimal, and the series was hurt, I think by a watered down introduction without the use of the talents of Jackson Beck.

The last Tom Corbett show was broadcast on June 25, 1955, and the TV Guide listing for that date indicates that the boys finally graduate from the Space Academy. As yet a kinescope of this show is not available to confirm their graduation, and for all we know "the boys" may still be at the Space Academy struggling through the trials and tribulations of all boys; growing up, becoming men in the last and greatest frontier of all. Frankie Thomas does recall the last line used on the show. When asked by his fellow cadets where they're headed as he rev's up the motors of the Polaris, Tom Answers further than we've ever gone before".

Somewhere in the 24th Century, young Tom Corbett ("Tex" in the novel) entered the Space Academy (of the Interplanetary Patrol, in Colorado, in the novel) along with verbally aggressive pal Roger Manning (Matt in the novel) and cerebral Astro from Venus, with all hoping to graduate to the Solar Guards. Aboard the good spaceship "Polaris" they adventured throughout the solar system, and plot complications were based on the dangers of meteors or radiation rather than mad scientists or evil aliens (a fatal flaw in "Captain Video"). We do know that Program Advisor Willy Ley, a noted ex-German space expert and science writer, brought "hard science fiction" concepts such as asteroid belts, artificial gravity, and anti-matter to the series. I discussed this with Willy Ley when I met him in New York in 1959. We made a $5 bet, which I promptly lost, but that's another story. The series only lasted three months at CBS probably due to budgetary concerns or disappointing sales of the now-collectable merchandise and moved to a couple of years at ABC. NBC merely aired kinescopes of episodes as a summer replacement for Victor Borge.

The show was televised live, like "CAPTAIN VIDEO" and "BUCK ROGERS", but unlike these competitors, the special effects were also live. Although technically a children's show, this was a high-water mark in television science fiction, and a significant precursor to STAR TREK. The episode guide only includes the episodes which were shown on a weekly basis, since the episode titles for the shows which were shown daily are unknown.

Tom Corbett, Space Cadet had one of the most unusual broadcast histories of any programme in television history. It premiered on CBS on 20 October 1950 as a 15 minute programme broadcast live three times a week on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. At the start of the new year (1951) the show switched over to ABC continuing to be run three times a week until 26th September 1952. Very little information on these episodes is available. Some of these daily episodes were edited into half hour episodes, given new framing footage and run on NBC during the summer of 1951 as a replacement show for Victor Borg.

After an absence from the TV screen for almost a year, Tom Corbett returned in late August of 1953, as a weekly Saturday morning series appearing fortnightly on DTN, these episodes alternated with THE SECRET FILES OF CAPTAIN VIDEO. In May of 1954 the series left DTN only to return to NBC in December as a Saturday morning show. It would remain on NBC with new episodes until its cancellation in June of 1955, the last of the live science fiction shows to leave the air. It is thus one of the few shows to air on four US networks, and the only one to air on two at the same time. In addition to the televised episodes a short lived radio series on the ABC network was also produced, this ran from January to June of 1952.

Tom Corbett differed from the heroes of the other pioneering American space operas in that he was just a cadet, a 24th Century teenager doing the best he could. Loosely adapted from Robert Heinlein's 1948 novel, Space Cadet, the series aired in America from 1950 to 1955, appearing on all four U.S. networks of the day. Like many SF shows of the time, individual episode credits are sketchy at best, however some of the writers are listed below.

Tom Corbett, Space Cadet became one of the most successful of all the science fiction series of early television. Along with Captain Video and Space Patrol, Tom Corbett literally created the "space opera kick," as it was referred to in the 1950s. Based (more or less) on the novel Space Cadet by Robert Heinlein, Tom Corbett was easily the most scientifically accurate of the entries. It was also, unquestionably, the program with the most complicated broadcast history. It premiered on CBS on October 2, 1950; some sources indicate that the series was called Chris Colby, Space Cadet and then Tom Corbett, Space Cadet starting with the second broadcast. The "premiere" episode we viewed, however, does not substantiate this; the "Tom Corbett" name appears to have been in place from the outset. Nonetheless, one immediate change which is documented was a switch in one of the show's lead actors. Michael Harvey had been hired to play the part of Capt. Steve Strong; however, reportedly on the first broadcast, Harvey froze, the terror of every actor performing before a live audience. Harvey was replaced by Edward Bryce, who retained the part throughout the series.

After three months, Tom Corbett, Space Cadet departed CBS for ABC, where it ran from January 1, 1951, to September 26, 1952. During both of these runs, Tom Corbett was presented in a traditional three-times-a-week serial format with plot lines sometime taking weeks to run their course before switching to a new story. In the summer of 1951, NBC elected to air Tom Corbett, Space Cadet as a replacement for The Victor Borge Show, which had gone on summer hiatus. Half hour episodes were created from kinescopes of the ABC serials and new connective scenes were shot of Tom Corbett (Frankie Thomas) tying up loose ends of each story. NBC's summer version of Tom Corbett ran from July 7, 1951, to September 8, 1951. Meanwhile ABC continued to run its version of Tom Corbett, giving the series the distinction of airing simultaneously on two networks. ABC also generated a radio version of Tom Corbett on its radio network.

The radio series aired from January 1, 1952, to June 26, 1952, included the TV cast and was sponsored by Kellogg's Pep. The familiar voice of Jackson Beck was heard in the announcer's role. The radio version ran in half-hour segments on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Tom Corbett, Space Cadet was one of the few television shows to make the reverse trip to radio. Coincidentally, one of the handful of other shows to make a similar journey was Tom Corbett's chief rival Space Patrol, as well as a short-lived version of the adult science fiction series Tales of Tomorrow. Tom Corbett next turned up on television as a DuMont program, airing every other Saturday from August 29, 1953, to May 22, 1954. During its DuMont stint, Tom Corbett alternated with The Secret Files of Captain Video. The series relied on a 30-minute, self-contained format.

In its final season, Tom Corbett, Space Cadet found itself back on NBC; this time the show was sponsored by Kraft Foods and utilized a 30-minute format. NBC reportedly ran a radio simulcast of the show. This final version ran from December 11, 1954, to June 25, 1955.

The internal format of Tom Corbett remained essentially the same throughout the run of the series, even with the various changes in length, network and sponsor affiliation and the inevitable cast and crew changes. Script editor Albert Aley once described to an interviewer the basic structure of the show:

Put Frank Merriwell in a spacesuit and throw in The Three Musketeers, and you'd be getting at the general idea. Merriwell and his sidekicks operated out of Yale. Corbett and his sidekicks operate out of Spaceport, at Space Academy in the year 2352. Space Academy is the West Point of the Universe. The Universe is at peace in 2352. Space Academy is the instrument of the Solar Guard, the peace-enforcement unit of the Solar Alliance. Earth people have colonised Mars, Venus and Titan, a satellite of Saturn. Tom Corbett, along with two other Space Cadets and an officer of the Solar Guard, takes off in his rocket-powered spaceship, the Polaris, to maintain peace on the colonised planets and to explore the possibility of colonising others.

This working vision of the series, as outlined in an extensive New Yorker piece (March 1, 1952), remained constant throughout the various television and radio incarnations. Tom Corbett deliberately eschewed spectacular and romanticised nonsense and opted instead to create stories fabricated on legitimate scientific possibilities as they might conceivably exist 400 years in the future. Allen Ducovny, who produced Tom Corbett, touted his show's plausibility.

The basic appeal of Tom Corbett is its realism. Our stories are not in the realm of fantasy. The action is within the limits of physical possibility. It has believability. No disintegrate rays. No mad scientists. No lobster men from Neptune. It is our policy to show the process of interplanetary travel, and the conditions on the planets we travel to, as accurately as science can today.

In a sense, the Polaris was a legitimate forerunner of the U.S.S. Enterprise. Not only did the program rely on fundamental science, but the writers were consumed with a healthy interest in creating identifiable characters. Four hundred years in the future, humankind was still grappling with a schizophrenic nature: greed, envy, revenge and the nobler instincts of courage, self sacrifice and commitment to a moral ideal. The crew of the Polaris was led by Tom Corbett, played by Frankie Thomas. Corbett was the ideal against which young viewers could measure themselves. Tom was bright, always prepared to take a chance in a just cause, courageous, willing to face up to mistakes and try to rectify them whenever he could. Corbett also believed in something beyond his own existence. In an age when television was expected to provide healthy role models, Corbett was close to perfect. When Corbett's senior commanders Capt. Strong and Cmdr. Arkwright put in an appearance, it seemed clear that Corbett was destined to go up the ranks just as these veteran officers had done with distinction and honour. And if, from time to time, Corbett seemed a little too much of a good thing—a little too humourless and a little too by-the-book—his team-mates were on hand to provide a humanising relief.

Cadet Roger Manning (Jan Merlin) was arguably the most complex of all the cadets to spend time aboard the Polaris. Superficially at least, Manning appeared to be a big mouth, an opportunist, something of a troublemaker, and prone to cut corners and disobey orders whether it would serve his purposes. Inevitably, Manning's negative attributes would lead the wayward cadet into trouble and his companions would have to help extricate him. Most viewers knew someone like Manning, though as the series progressed Roger's positive qualities slowly manifested themselves in spite of his efforts to appear the cynical, rough-edged character he wanted the world to see.

Manning's courage was never in question, nor was his ability to perform his duties. Whenever one of his companions was in trouble, Roger would use his skill and courage to help solve the problem, while maintaining an outward cynicism to divert attention from his actions. Roger was even known to offer a gruff apology on occasion. Uncomfortable displaying the sorts of qualities inherent in Corbett's makeup, Manning preferred to deny that he possessed those same selfless qualities. Illustrative of Manning's character is an exchange between Roger and Astro taken from "Operation Starlight." On a planet 100,000,000 years behind earth on the evolutionary scale, the Polaris team meets up with a herd of dinosaurs heading in the boys' direction. Astro has severely sprained his ankle and appears to be doomed:

ASTRO: I'm afraid I'm just so much dead weight.

ROGER: When were you any different, you Venusian ape? But don't worry. Just hang on to Uncle Roger and I'll get you outta this.

The third original Polaris team member was the Venusian, Astro. Astro's desire to serve in the Solar Guard was almost as strong as Corbett's. Astro was the most withdrawn and introspective member of the Polaris unit. Portrayed by Al Markim, Astro was much more an enigma than either Tom or Roger. While Tom and Roger seemed oblivious, if not immune, to self doubt, Astro seemed plagued with introspective questions about his own worth as a cadet. Like his two compatriots, Astro had courage as well as initiative and resourcefulness. However, whenever a script called for one of the Polaris crew to undergo psychological trauma, it was usually Astro who drew the assignment and then had to fight his way back to self-confidence.

Murray Robinson, writing of Tom Corbett in Collier's magazine (January 5, 1952), succinctly defined the appeal of the three cadets: The charm of the Space Cadet show... is the fact that the boys, products of the wonderful twenty-fourth century, still act like American youngsters circa 1951. They squabble, brag, show jealousy and generally behave like typical teenagers.

Other cadets filled in from time to time on board the Polaris, but none had the appeal of the original trio. When Jan Merlin left the series at the end of the 1952 season, he was replaced by Jack Grimes in the role of T.J. Thistle. Thistle was as self-conscious in his way as the withdrawn Venusian. Thistle's small physical stature often haunted the cadet, making him question whether he was up to duty in the Solar Guard. Nonetheless, Thistle's doubts didn't keep him from carrying out his responsibilities as a member of the Polaris crew.

The Tom Corbett writers took the time to nurture the characterisations of the young cadets, a decision which strengthened the series immeasurably and, combined with plots born of careful scientific consideration, produced an entertaining and highly regarded program. When television later turned its back on juvenile science fiction in favour of adult reality based science fiction, it wasn't far-fetched to imagine Tom Corbett having grown up to serve along side Col. McCauley or Dr. Glenn Barton. The same couldn't be said for the Video Ranger, Cadet Happy or Captain Z-RO's protege, Jet.

To insure the "science" aspect of the science fiction in Tom Corbett, the series employed Willy Ley, the noted rocket expert, as a consultant. Ley took his responsibilities seriously, scrutinising each script, frequently requiring revisions whenever writers Jack Weinstock and Willie Gilbert got overzealous and tried to move the series too deep into the quagmire of unsupportable fiction. Ley's behind-the-scenes influence was crucial to the two opening signatures for Tom Corbett, Space Cadet. The signature at top (four frames) was shot entirely on film and used for the first several seasons. The signature at bottom (four frames) featured titles superimposed over film of a V-2 rocket launch, followed by a star background. This signature was used for the last season, which was sponsored by Kraft. series, providing the same kind of legitimacy that Truman Bradley's presence afforded Science Fiction Theatre.

For example, when Weinstock and Gilbert were developing their dinosaur story, they intended to set the Polaris down in a sea of lush green grass. Ley nixed the idea, arguing that a planet 100,000,000 years behind Earth's development would not have green grass. "Green growth came much later in Earth's history," Ley argued.

Another example of Ley's influence on the show was his more or less ongoing argument with the writers over collisions in space. According to Ley at the time. The writers are always wanting their ship to hit something out in space. Thank God I've got them to stop hitting asteroids for a while. The possibilities of a spaceship's encountering an asteroid in its path, you know, are so slight as to be negligible. The writers were overdoing it. They wanted to hit an asteroid practically every week. "Please, boys," I told them. "Only once or twice a year."

During the ABC run of the series, the typical Tom Corbett script began with the outline of an idea between writers Weinstock and Gilbert, who would then submit their concept to producer Allen Ducovny and script editor Albert Aley. Ley then entered the picture to evaluate the scientific merits of the plot and to offer any changes he thought were needed. Weinstock and Gilbert would take a week to turn out their script and it would then be handed over to George Gould, the director of the series. A week later the play would go out live over the ABC hook-up.

Tom Corbett ran until the juvenile science fiction "kick" played itself out. As late as 1957 the series was reportedly being considered for revival. The program's influence on the popular culture of the early and mid-1950s was enormous. Not only had Tom Corbett been a TV and radio series, but also a newspaper comic strip syndicated in 84 newspapers nation-wide as well as a series of hardback adventure novels published by Grosset and Dunlap. Additionally, the program sponsored dozens of commercial items including lunch boxes, records, space helmets, View-Master sets, electronic walkie-talkies, suspenders, comic books and watches (not to mention the many premium give-aways crafted by the pro-program sponsors). Expressions popularised on the show became integral parts of adolescent speech. Phrases such as "spaceman's luck," "go blow your jets" and "great rings of Saturn" may have confounded segments of the population, but the appeal of Tom Corbett was always to that portion of the public open to possibilities.

Sponsors: Kellogg's Cereals, Red Goose Shoes, John C. Roberts Shoes and Kraft Foods. Seasons: Five. Total Episodes: Unknown (15-minute, black-and-white), 57 (30-minute, black-and-white).

Signature

The opening signature of Tom Corbett, Space Cadet was rewritten when the format and sponsor changed. The most compelling signature came during the initial stage of the series when Kellogg's Pep ("the build-up wheat cereal") sponsored the show and it ran as a 15-minute, three-times-a-week serial. The switch to a 30-minute, self-contained once-a-week format occasioned a more prosaic opening signature.

The 15-minute format featured filmed sequences of rockets lifting off from launching pads. On behalf of Kellogg's Pep, the voice of Jackson Beck invited the audience "to rocket into the future" with Corbett. Frankie Thomas's voice was then heard counting down to blast off. Beck then repeated his sonorous introduction of the name "TOM CORBETT...SPACE CADET!"

The 30-minute format featured an announcer placing the series "in the year 2354 A.D." Like the 15-minute format opener, this signature referred to Corbett's time as "the age of the conquest of space."

For many years I believed Tom Corbett was based solely on Robert Heinlein's Space Cadet. A letter dated June 9th, 1977 from the Heinleins confirmed that the book was sold as a TV series in the early 1950's. The similarities of the characters in Space Cadet and the Tom Corbett TV show were reinforced by the Grosset and Dunlap juvenile series published from 1952 to 1956. The books were reissued in many editions up to the early 1960's which resulted in the books becoming most available "resource" to fans. Video's of the shows were almost non-existent.

My research and observations were published in a Tom Corbett fanzine in the 1970's with an article outlining the similarities of RAH's book and the characters in the TV show. Ted Hake published an expanded version of the Heinlein article in his Collectibles Monthly newsletter (Vol 2 No 11/12 April/May 1979).

Life being what it is, this viewpoint was a simplified answer to the real development of the character and not the complete picture. The development of Tom Corbett evolved from at least TWO major sources, Joseph Greene's early radio, comic and TV scripting and Heinlein's influence on the Grosset and Dunlap juvenile series books.

Research by Geoffrey Tolle and others "uncloaked" Joseph Greene's contribution in the development of Tom Corbett. Many of the scripts and story lines of the early Tom Corbett shows were developed from works written by Mr. Greene. The Tom Corbett Timeline that accompanies this page outlines a lot of the early work.

JOSEPH GREENE

Joseph Lawrence Greene was a writer of science fiction, mystery, pulp fiction, newspaper strips, comics, radio and TV scripts. He was associated with many of the Golden Age of comic books, starting in the late thirties, when he was a ghost writer for some of the most famous of comic characters of the era (The Green Lama, Spunky, Golden Lad etc.). He was an editor for Grosset in the sixties (possibly the 1950's), where he worked his way up to managing editor and acting editor-in-chief before leaving the company in 1972. In 1959 he began the Juvenile SF series Dig Allen - Space Explorers for Golden Press. While in semi-retirement during the late '70's and 80's, he independently published almanacs, several about astrology and one called the American Elsewhen Almanac.

Much of what we know of Joseph Greene's work is through the files his son Paul Greene has kept. These serve as the basis of the research along with observations from other sources.

The first appearance of Tom Ranger (future Tom Corbett) was in the form of a January 16, 1946 radio script submitted to Orbit Feature Services Inc. The working title was the Space Cadets whose hero was named Tom Ranger of the Space Cadets.

A Tom Ranger and the Space Cadets newspaper strip was developed for syndication in October 1949. The first two week plot is almost identical to the first few weeks of the Tom Corbett newspaper strip published by the Field Enterprise Syndicate in September 1951. Roger's counterpart, Bruce Howard, tricks Tom Ranger into breaking Academy rules and later gloats over his trick. He is also designated as "senior cadet" of the unit.

All of these elements were pulled together in the first broadcast of the Tom Corbett Show on October 2, 1950. The first draft of the TV Show stars Chris Colby, aka Tom Ranger - changed at the last minute to Tom Corbett, in an adventure with Men from the Darkside (Mercurian Invasion). The same lead story for the 1951 Tom Corbett Space Cadet Newspaper strip and the same story written by Rockhill Radio using characters named in Joseph Greene's 1949 Newspaper strip and The Men from the Darkside. Both of these events link the early concepts of Tom Ranger developed by Joseph Greene and concepts that developed into the Tom Corbett Space Cadet character we remember.

Joseph Greene's Tom Ranger, Space Academy and the "Space Cadets" ideas are early influences of the Tom Corbett TV show. The Grosset and Dunlap books published two years after the first TV show, would be patterned after Heinlein's Space Cadet. The rest is history. Or is it? What other influences have contributed to Tom Corbett? The Academy stands ready to document more.

ADDITIONAL NOTES:

Joseph Greene used an interesting naming nomenclature for his spaceships throughout his works. Tom Ranger's first ship was the Space Arrow from the proposed radio series in 1946 , the Golden Arrow in the proposed 1949 newspaper strip and the Silver Arrow in the first Digby Allen novel FORGOTTEN STAR in 1959. The Silver Arrow was found in the Graveyard of Space, a reference to the early Tom Ranger comic strip. In a discussion on who wrote the Grosset and Dunlap Tom Corbett series, Author Jeff Carver reports that "...Jim Frenkel used to work with Joe Green at G&D, and he swears that Joe Green was Cary Rockwell".

TOMMYKNOCKERS,THE

The small town of Haven becomes a hot-bed of inventions all run by a strange green power device. The whole town is digging something up in the woods, and only an alcoholic poet can unfathom the secret of the tommyknockers.

King's standard routine of ancient horror stalking a small town is, for once, given a forthright science-fictional rationale. Thoroughly competent melodrama.

Produced by Jayne Bieber, Original music by Christopher Franke, Cinematography by Dan Burstall & David Eggby, Film Editing by Tod Feuerman, Casting by Judith Holstra. Production Design by Bernard Hides, Art Direction by Dianne Cheek Blasco & Kim Sinclair, Makeup Department - Richard Malzahn (key hair stylist), Maggie Maxwell (makeup supervisor), Marty Wereski (hair stylist - makeup artist).

Production Management - Jane Gilbert (unit production manager), Assistant Director - John Martin (second assistant director), Chris Webb (first assistant director), Sound Department - Myron Nettinga (sound effects editor), Fred Schultz (sound mixer), Special Effects - Tad Pride (visual effects supervisor). Other crew - Virginia Bieneman (script supervisor), Terry Blythe (assistant editor), Lynn-Maree Danzey (music editor), Taryn Dechellis (costume consultant), Marjory Hamlin (production accountant), Maude Heath (key grip), Scot J. Kelly (associate editor), Darrin Keough (first assistant camera), Michael S. Murphy (additional editor), Joan Petch (unit manager), Edgar Rothermich (music producer - music recordist), Jesse Silver (matte artist), Peta Sinclair (assistant costume designer). Caroline Skakel (location manager), Francina Smeets (additional casting), Danny Thompson (gaffer), Dennis Williams (mechanical props supervisor), David Williamson (camera operator). Special effects created by Perpetual Motion Pictures.

Jimmy Smits is hilariously miscast in probably the worse King mini-series to roll down the pike. It's not one of King's better novels, IMO: very preachy, with a unlikeable cast of characters. The movie takes all of this and goes several steps worse. There is the obligatory happy ending (Smits' character doesn't make it like in the novel, but Bobbi survives), the inclusion of some real aliens (the whole point of the novel was that we are the aliens, and we didn't need to see some ancient corpses getting up and walking around), and generally a lot of fore-shortening of the character development of anybody else in the film. If nothing else, King's novel excellently explores the small-town mentality of its Maine inhabitants, but the movie cuts all of that out, giving us the likes of Robert Carradine and Traci Lords instead sigh. If you thought the original, non-director's cut version of Needful Things was bad, you'll wince at what they do to King's characterizations in Tommyknockers.

What could you expect of a 3-hour TV adaptation produced by Konigsberg/Sanitsky Company and helplessly directed by John Power? Right: a total failure. All the writer's characterizations have been killed by Lawrence D. Cohen, who populated his script with cheesy cardboard characters and cheap visual effects. John Power seems to be satisfied with the first result of each episode, because, possibly he thinks that he is a wonderful director. Not at all. I feel like I have been cheated by producers: I have wasted 3 hours of my time watching these Sleepwalker-like (check the movie "Sleepwalkers", by Stephen King too) aliens, who live in a cheap miniature of a spaceship, deep under the ground. I promise, you won't miss a lot if you just skip that movie.

The Tommyknockers has been released in the US on DVD on the 8th September 1998, using 1.33:1 ratio, 30 chapters, 2 sides, surround sound, sub-titles in French and Spanish, in wide screen pan and scan.

Notes : At the time of his performance in The Tommyknockers Jimmy Smits was best known for his role as Victor Sifuentes in LA Law, a part which he played for six years. More recently he has played Detective Bobby Simone in NYPD Blue, a role that lasted for a further four years and won him five Emmy nominations for Outstanding Lead Actor. He will soon be seen in Star Wars - Episode II: Attack of the Clones as Senator Bail Organa - Princess Leia's adoptive father.

TOMORROW PEOPLE, THE (1973)

The Tomorrow People were completely telepathic, possessed telekinetic powers and had the ability to teleport themselves instantaneously from place to place - a process catchily known as 'jaunting'.

From their secret base - called The Lab - off a disused tunnel of the London Underground, The Tomorrow People looked out for one another's emergence and dedicated their amazing powers to saving mankind and the world from diverse alien threats. In this they were aided by TIM, their talking biotronic computer, and various friends, including Ginge and Lefty, a pair of leather-jacketed motorcyclists.

As the opening story revealed, The Tomorrow People weren't always Homo Superior. They all began as plain Homo Sapiens (affectionately referred to as 'Saps') and the evolution into a Tomorrow Person was called 'breaking out'. You, too, the theory went, could be a latent Homo Superior. Over the series' first eight seasons, Tomorrow People came and went, with departing stars explained away as representing Earth on the Galactic Trig, a kind of huge space complex, staffed by super-intelligent beings from all over the Universe.

The group's leader, John, was the only member to last the series' distance, though Elizabeth (played by black actress Elizabeth Adare) joined in Season Two and stayed to the end. The other longest-serving recruits were Stephen (four seasons) and Mike (five seasons), the latter being played by actor/singer Mike Holoway of the Flintlock pop group.

This 1970s children's adventure series introduced a new breed of youngster - Homo Superior. Described by creator/writer/director Roger Price as the next stage in human evolution.

Produced by Thames Television to fill the vacuum left by ACE OF WANDS, The Tomorrow People was touted in the popular press as ITV's answer to DOCTOR WHO, and though the series spanned six years, its weekday tea time slot meant it never gathered the adult following of the Time Lord. Moreover, what had begun as an intelligent, innovative 'thinking kid's' series declined into increasingly humours action. Strictly for the Saps. A revival of The Tomorrow People was made in 1992, with former Neighbours Star Kristen Schmid in the lead role as Adam.

The Tomorrow People was a children's adventure series about the exploits of a group of young people who were homo superior's- the next step in human evolution. Homo superiors had advanced mental powers such as telekinesis. ESP and teleportation (known as jaunting) that set them apart from normal homo sapiens. Although they have powers which normal people lack, they also lack something that normal people have. Tomorrow People lack the ability to kill another person, even in self defence. The Tomorrow People operated from a secret base in London and aided by their computer TIM they defended the Earth from various mad scientists and would-be alien invaders. They also sought out other Tomorrow People who would gain their next step in evolution when they reached adolescence. The Tomorrow People also became the Earth's representatives in the Galactic Federation - a intergalactic United Nations. The earlier episodes of the series were somewhat more Intellectually written, as the series progressed stories became increasingly juvenile.

The Tomorrow People were repeatedly rerun on the Nickelodeon cable network in the United States in the mid 1980s. The series proved popular enough for Nickelodeon that the network became one of the financial backers of a new series of The Tomorrow People when the series was revived in the 1990s. This new series is chronicled in the next entry.

The producers for the series were Ruth Boswell (Seasons 1-3), Roger Price (Seasons 1 and 4) and Vic Hughes (Seasons 5-8). The script editor for season four was Ruth Boswell and the title was done by Dudley Simpson. From season two onward each episode had its own title, but the stories are known collectively by the titles given here. The shows scientific advisor was Dr. Christopher Evans.

WR. Brain Finch, Roger Price and Jon Watkins. With Roger Price having written most of the episodes.

1 - 1 THE SLAVES OF JEDIKIAH (1-5)

The Tomorrow People - John, Carol and Kenny - have discovered that a teenager called Stephen is about to manifest his powers. They trace him to hospital, where he was taken after collapsing from the shock of his new abilities. Carol teleports into his room to make contact, and begins to teach Stephen how to control his telepathy. They are attacked by Ginge and Lefty, two bikers acting under instruction from the mysterious Jedikiah.

1 - 2 THE MEDUSA STRAIN (1-4)

Five hundred years in the future, a spaceship comes across the shape-changing robot Jedikiah, floating in space. The captain, Rabowski, repairs it. In the present day, Stephen is trying unsuccessfully to develop a photograph of something he saw in hyperspace. Carol and Stephen jaunt into hyperspace to see if they can locate anything unusual. Back on the spaceship, Rabowski shows Jedikiah his captive, Peter, whose telepathic abilities are being negated by an alien creature known as a Medusa. Jedikiah tricks Peter into operating Rabowski's Time Key, and they travel back to the Tower of London in the present day, and steal the Crown Jewels. When Carol and Stephen jaunt back to the Lab, they find that everyone is frozen.

2 - 1 THE BLUE AND THE GREEN (1-5)

Stephen's classmate, Robert, paints an accurate picture of Rexal 4, an alien world. Recognising it from his travels, Stephen tells John and Tim, and mentions that he thinks his teacher, Elizabeth, is breaking-out. The following day, Elizabeth witnesses Stephen in the act of jaunting home and hears him telepathically talking to John and Tim, but is convinced that it is a trick. The next day Robert's picture 4 has changed from a bright, sunny landscape to a dark and stormy picture. Investigating back at the Lab, John and Tim find similar instances of pictures that change, causing serious disturbances amongst schoolchildren. Stephen witnesses aggressive behaviour amongst his schoolmates. He takes John to meet Elizabeth, but she refuses to believe him and tries to leave, but as John jaunts in front of her to stop her, it triggers her breaking-out. She tries to run away again, but Stephen jaunts right in front of her. She panics and jaunts away, out of control.

2 - 2 A RIFT IN TIME (1-4)

John and Stephen both share strange dreams of Peter, the Time Guardian, running through a forest, and showing them a vase. The two of them look through thousands of pictures of vases, eventually finding Peter's, which is owned by Professor Cawston, and looked after by Professor Garner. Stephen tricks Professor Gamer into bringing the vase to him. He grabs its lid, and jaunts back to the Lab with it. The lid has strange markings which are designs for a Neutron Interton. The Tomorrow People build the device: a small disc. Nothing happens when Chris and Elizabeth pick it up, but when Stephen picks it up he disappears.

2 - 3 THE DOOMSDAY MEN (1-4)

Stephen goes under-cover to investigate a military organisation called the "Doomsday Men". The leader's grandson attends Glen College, which Stephen discovers is a training ground for Doomsday Men, and that its head, General McLelland, is planning a suicide mission. After Stephen is asked to join the organisation by Douglas, he discovers that the mission, "Operation Silver Thread", is to prevent the signing of a peace treaty. Stephen is summoned to the gym, where he has to fight several boys with a sabre.

3 - 1 SECRET WEAPON (1-4)

Prof. Cawston discovers that a gypsy boy named Tyso is about to break-out, and arranges to show him to the military. While attempting to contact Tyso, Stephen sees through his eyes, and recognises Cawston. He jaunts to the professor's office, but he refuses to help. Later, at the demonstration, Tyso's powers are watched by Col. Masters and Tricia Conway. Prof. Cawston subsequently contacts the Tomorrow People, telling them that Tyso had disappeared. John, Stephen and Elizabeth jaunt to Tyso's caravan, where they are told by Tyso's mother that his father had sold him to Col. Masters. The trio then arrive at Cawston's office, where the professor tells them that the colonel wanted him to join his research group. However, Trish, a telepath, has read the professor's mind and warned Masters about Stephen and Elizabeth. John realises that they must find Tyso within two to three days, otherwise the strain of breaking-out will kill him.

3 - 2 WORLDS AWAY (1-3)

Ambassador Timus Irnok Mosta visits the Tomorrow People in their Lab, and asks for their help. He takes John and Elizabeth to the Great Pyramid of Chaeops in Egypt, and tells them that the pyramids were built by the alien Kulthan. Hidden behind a secret panel is a Psi-Damping transmitter, used to prevent telepathic abilities operating on Earth. Timus asks the Tomorrow People to travel the planet Peeri, to deactivate the Psi Damping Transmitter there, and to persuade the Kulthan to leave. Unlike standard Galactic Agents, the Tomorrow People are not reliant on their telepathic powers, and are perfect for the mission. Arriving on Peeri, John, Stephen, Elizabeth and Tyso set up base in a cave used by Tikno, one of Mosta's clone brothers. They rescue a girl, Lenda, from a hunt, but Tyso gets his foot stuck in a man-trap, and some hunters approach.

3 - 3 A MAN FOR EMILY (1-3)

A spaceship arrives in orbit around the Earth, containing the Momma, Emily and Elmer, members of a matriarchal society. Based on television signals, they believe that Earth is like a wild west film. Tim tracks the ship into orbit, and John and Elizabeth jaunt near to it to investigate. The Momma tells Elmer to go to Earth to get fresh food supplies. When the Ship stuns and captures Elizabeth, John jaunts back to the Lab. Elizabeth awakens, and is accepted as an equal by the Momma and Emily. On Earth, shoots a shopkeeper when he is collecting food. Tim intercepts police reports, and Stephen jaunts to the shop, using his telekinesis to heal the proprietor. Elmer finds a pub, treating it like a western saloon. Elizabeth discovers that Elmer must return to his place of arrival, where the doozlum pin is located; she also finds out that the Ship controls the people on board. John and Stephen jaunt to the pub, but are unable to transport Elmer away, and the police arrive.

4 - 1 ONE LAW (1-3)

Mike, a new Tomorrow Person, uses his telekinesis to open a neighbour's door. Meanwhile, John, Stephen, Elizabeth and Tyso return from the Galactic Trig, arriving in a dusty and cobweb-covered Lab. Mike's neighbour, Mister O'Reilly, is visited by two heavies, Two Tone and Slow, who want money that O'Reilly owes from gambling at Lord Dunning's betting shops. Unable to pay, O'Reilly tells them about Mike's ability to open locks; he brings Mike to meet them, and they trick him into showing his power, and then blackmail him into helping them break into the National Victoria Bank. After opening the locks and overriding the alarm systems. Mike tricks the heavies, locking them in the vault. His laughter is heard telepathically by John, Elizabeth and Stephen, who decide not to contact him in order to reduce the problems of breaking-out. A police inspector, Burke, releases Two Tone and Slow, but they refuse to talk. The next day O'Reilly asks Mike to his flat, as Lord Dunning wants to meet him.

4 - 2 INTO THE UNKNOWN (1-4)

When Tim detects a signal from a drifting shuttlecraft, John and Stephen investigate and find a young humanoid alien called Kwaan. They take him to the Lab, where he tells them that he left the Father-ship to get help from his home-world of Regiorra. Kwaan communicates with the planet's ruler, Tirayaan, who sends power to the shuttlecraft. Mike, John, Stephen and Kwaan return to the shuttlecraft, but it has drifted too far off-course and Kwaan will be unable to return to Regoraa, and so he decides to return to the Father-ship, which is trapped near a hole in space. As they approach the Father-ship the Tomorrow People lose communication with Tim and Elizabeth, and are unable to jaunt due a force-field.

5 - 1 THE DIRTIEST BUSINESS (1-2)

After an attack on the lab by the SIS, Mike tries to help a girl who may become a Tomorrow Person escape from the KGB.

5 - 2 A MUCH NEEDED HOLIDAY (1-2)

After the Death of Pavla, the Tomorrow People decide to go on holiday, so Timus sends them to do an archeological dig on the planet Galia. There they run across two escaped slave boys.

5 - 3 THE HEART OF SOGGUTH (1-2)

After Mike's band, 'The Fresh Hearts' plays at a gig, a man named Jake asks Elizabeth if he could become the band's manager. This offer excites the band, but Elizabeth thinks that Jake is a cheat and a fraud. At a rehearsal Jake asks Mike to play his drums to the special rhythm on a metronome, but the cleaner working in the room starts to act very strangely, and has to be taken outside to recover. Jake says it is their music that affected her, and arranges for music television producer Mike Harding to watch the band play that evening. Harding is impressed, and arranges for them to play live on television. Elizabeth discovers that Jake is actually Professor James Marsden, leader of a religious sect known as the Hearts of Sogguth. She persuades John of infiltrate the group, and he is initiated into them, but thinks they are harmless. Jake gives Mike the Heart of Sogguth drum to play, but warns him not to play the special rhythm. Elizabeth takes John to watch the Mike's band play at the disco, and they are introduced as the Hearts of Sogguth by Jake. Mike plays the drum to the special rhythm affecting everyone in the room except for Elizabeth. She jaunts onto the stage and stops Mike, but then finds that John is acting very strangely. Elizabeth jaunts back to the Lab, telling Tim that she thinks that John and Mike are under someone's control.

6 - 1 THE LOST GUARDS (1-2)

John lets Mike take his first solo glider flight, but while in the air a girl, Hsui Tai, contacts him telepathically, and he loses control of the glider. Just in time, John manages to jaunt inside the glider and regains control. Hsui Tai tells Matsu Tan, a Shansu monk, that she believes Mike to be the lost god Kishnu. After Tim is unable to find a reason for Mike's blackout, Elizabeth contacts John and Mike while on a mission for the Galactic Federation. Matsu Tan and the Sage discuss Hsui Tai's contact with Kishnu, and decide that he must be found so he can be 're-born'. John lets Mike take another solo flight, and Hsui

Tai tries to contact 'Kishnu' again; Mike manages to keep control and lands safely, and remembers the names 'Hsui Tai' and 'Kishnu'; he and John are convinced that Hsui Tai is a Tomorrow Person, and Tim finds some newspaper articles featuring the names, and claims that the Shansu sect kill the 'Child Gods' when they reach maturity so that they can be re-born into a new body. John and Mike try unsuccessfully to make contact with Hsui Tai, who, meanwhile, is told by Matsu Tan that it is time for her re-birth. John and Mike attempt to reproduce the conditions when Hsui Tai first made contact by flying John's glider again, but the weather conditions are too dangerous. Mike sneaks back to the glider and tries a solo flight, just as the ceremony of Hsui Tai's re-birth begins; she makes contact with Mike and he loses control of the glider, crashing it.

6 - 2 HITLER'S LAST SECRET (1-2)

The driver of an army Major knocks down and kills a young boy who looks fourteen years old and wears a Nazi uniform. In the Lab, John shows Hsui Tai a baby rat that is over seven years old - they normally only live to three or four - and explains that he is repeating an experiment the Americans tried, which stopped the aging process before maturity, causing the normal repair processes to work more efficiently, and giving the subject longer life. Tim shows them film of Adolf Hitler inspecting the laboratory of Professor Friedl, who was carrying out the same experiments in the 1940's. Mike arrives wearing parts of an SS uniform, which John tells him in disgust to take off before going out. Meanwhile, in an SS bunker, leader Karl Brandt gives a speech to his cadets in order boost their morale following the escape of one of their number; the cadets have been in the bunker for thirty-three years, since the defeat of Germany at the end of the Second World War. The cadets look after the sleepers, people held in suspended animation. Mike goes to a cafe without his uniform, but three youths wearing SS uniforms and calling themselves 'Storm Troopers' attack him for being in their meeting place. Mike returns with a black eye to the Lab, where John tells him that there were gangs of young people all over the world who have developed a fascination for Nazi uniforms. One of the SS cadets finds some fluid leaking from the suspended animation equipment, and the inside person is dead. Tim receives a call on the special telephone line from Major Hughes of the SIS Special Squad, and John sends him a matter transporter to bring him to the Lab. The Major tells them about the boy being killed: German records show that he was born in 1930, and should have been forty-seven, and he also appeared in the film of Hitler Tim showed earlier. In the bunker, Karl decides to wake up Professor Friedl to ask his advice. Mike returns in uniform to the café, where the 'Storm Troopers' are better disposed to him, telling him that they believe that Hitler is not dead, and will return to lead them. Back at the Lab, John tells Mike that Hitler is actually a shape-changing alien criminal called Neebor, who is on the run from the Galactic Federation. Meanwhile, the SS cadets bring 'Hitler' out of suspended animation.

6 - 3 THE THARGON MENACE (1-2)

When a small spaceship crashes into the Pacific Ocean region on Earth it causes an Earthquake, which is felt in the Tomorrow People's Lab. The spaceship is piloted by two Thargons, Flynn and Sula, who have escaped from the fleet's main 'Thick Ship' in a short-range 'Slim Ship', which they have deliberately crashed into the Earth in order to bury it, and so escape detection from space. Believing the crash to have been caused by a meteorite, Tim traces the impact point to the island of Tarpin, part of the Melosean chain of islands. Mike and Hsui Tai jaunt to the island, but when Flynn and Sula decide to raise the ship to the surface, Hsui Tai is blinded by the engines. Back at the Lab, John repairs Hsui Tai's eyes. A military airplane spots the 'Slim Ship', and its pilot reports back to the dictator General Papa Minn, who orders Major Marcos to investigate with troops. John, Mike and Hsui Tai return to the island and meet Flynn, Sula and Thing, the ship's computer, and are told by the aliens that they are on the run from the ruthless Thargon Overlords for opposing the massacre of their slaves. Flynn warns the Tomorrow People that the Thargon Overlords will destroy the Earth when they find Flynn and Sula there.

7 - 1 CASTLE OF FEAR (1-2)

At a hotel near Loch Ness, the barman, Angus MacDuff sees a ghost. At the same time, the Tomorrow People see the ghost in their dreams, and think it may be another Homo Superior attempting to communicate. At the Forbes hotel, the proprietor's son Andrew suggests to his father, Bruce that they advertise the place as haunted, and he shows him that he can create a ghost. But Bruce thinks that the ghosts are the Devil's work, and warns Andrew not to make them again. Andrew talks to some American researchers, lead by Dr. Gail Mayer, who are staying at the hotel while they look for the Loch Ness Monster. Andrew creates an illusion of the Monster in the Loch in front of the researchers; the image is also seen by John, Elizabeth, Mike and Hsui Tai. The researchers are very excited and contact the media. The Tomorrow People see the reports, and theorise that a member of the Loch Ness research team may be breaking out and telepathically transmitting images. John, Elizabeth, Mike and Hsui Tai jaunt to the hotel. Bruce is furious when he finds out about his son's creation of the monster, and locks the boy in the cellar.

8 - 1 WAR OF THE EMPIRES (1-4)

Elizabeth and Timus are negotiating with a representative of the Sorsons - a race of advanced non-humanoid aliens - to try to end the war between them and the Thargons, but their attempts are unsuccessful. Elizabeth contacts the Lab and tells her fellow Tomorrow People that the Galactic Federation is powerless to prevent the Sorsons and Thargons entering Earth's area of closed space. After the Sorsons land on the moon and begin construction of a base, the President of the United States of America sends a space-shuttle to investigate. Tim detects the arrival of the Sorson and Thargon spaceships, and John and Mike decide to jaunt up to try to stop any fighting; but the battle begins before they can act, and the American space-shuttle is caught in the middle. John and Mike save the crewmen, Evans and Ricardo, by using matter transporters to send them back to their base; however, despite contacting both fleets, they are unable to prevent the battle from ending.

TOMORROW PEOPLE,THE (1992)

Like the old series, the new one was about a group of young people who were part of the next step in human evolution. They had a variety of telepathic powers including telepathy, teleportation and the ability to sense when one of their team was in danger. One of the Tomorrow People, Megabyte, also possessed a power that the others either did not have or did not use: telekinesis. Megabyte's telekinesis was limited to only working on computers. They also possessed the inability to kill another person, even as an act of self defence. The Tomorrow People banded together and used their powers to better mankind. Most often they wended up saving the world from some mad scientist or would-be megalomaniac who wanted to take over the world.

The new Tomorrow People had their base of operations in an alien spaceship which was on an uncharted island somewhere in the Pacific. No explanation was given as to how the spaceship arrived on the island or how the Tomorrow People knew of its existence. The head of the new team was Adam Neuman, who was much more easy going than his predecessor on the original series. Adam was portrayed by Kristian Schmid, Kristian had become quite familiar to British audiences as a regular on the Australian soap opera Neighbours.

The Tomorrow People, is a revival of the 1970s British series of the same name about a group of youth with abilities normal people do not have. Roger Price, who created the original was involved in the first two years of the new version. The revival has been updated for the 1990s. The new version was produced in Britain like the original, however the new one was an American co-production with the American cable network Nickelodeon which had continuously re run the original series during the 1980s.

The producer for the series was Roger Damon Price and Alan Horrox (Season Two & Three), executive producer was Alan Horrox. Lee Pressman and Grant Cathro are well known to children's TV series having created MIKE AND ANGELO, and Pressman created DELTA WAVE, Roger "Damon" Price, did off course create the original TOMORROW PEOPLE. The designers for the series were Mark Tidesley and Jon Henson. A number of famous actors appeared in the show which were Christopher Lee and Danny John Jules (star of RED DWARF). The theme for the show was created by Tim Pitt and Bobby Boughton for season one and Andrew Philips for seasons two and three.

All of the new series apart from the Tomorrow People's spaceship HQ, is filmed on location. This sets it apart from the 1970s series which was largely a studio show. Even the characters' houses are real, and not studio sets. For example, Lucy's house is really where one of the writers lives.

TORCHWOOD

Captain Jack Harkness, the former Time Agent and con man from the 51st century last seen traveling with the Doctor (from the series Doctor Who (2005)), ventures to early 21st century Cardiff. There, he becomes a member of Torchwood Institute, a renegade criminal investigation group founded by Queen Victoria to battle hostile extraterrestrial and supernatural threats.

Whilst investigating a murder, they use a special glove from an alien world designed to revive dead people, unknown to them however a police officer, Gwen Harper has been observing the team and she soon discovers that some very strange things are going on around this team known as Torchwood. She investigates and finds the headquarters of Torchwood, and eventually Jack asks Gwen to stay and work for the team, after he realises that they have forgotten what it take to be human.

Throughout the second season of the new Doctor Who series, a plotline developed along the lines a mysterious group called Torchwood based on Earth. And so the the second spin-off from Doctor Who was born (the first being the 1 episode series of K9 and Company). The idea of a mysterious organisation based on Earth investgates strange and alien goings on, is not new to Doctor Who, in fact the idea is properly a direct rip-off of U.N.I.T. that featured in many of the 1960s and 1970s Doctor Who episodes.

"Torchwood is a British sci-fi paranoid thriller, a cop show with a sense of humour," says Davies.

"It's dark, wild and sexy, it's the X Files meets This Life. It's a stand-alone series for adult audiences which will have its own unique identity."

The cast includes John Barrowman as the enigmatic Captain Jack Harkness - the ever watchful heart of the Torchwood team, guarding against the fragility of human kind.

Eve Myles plays Gwen Cooper - initially an outsider whose first meeting with Torchwood sparks a burning curiosity to get to the truth, throwing her into an unfamiliar but exciting world.

Burn Gorman plays the raw but charming medic Owen Harper and Naoko Mori is Toshiko Sato, the team member who specialises in all things computer, surveillance and technical.

BBC Three Controller Julian Bellamy announced the series as the "centrepiece" of the channel's 2006 autumn schedule.

"Torchwood is just the sort of cutting-edge, ambitious drama of real scale we're seeking on BBC Three," he said.

Torchwood is a BBC Wales production for BBC Three written by Russell T Davies and Chris Chibnall, with contributing writers including PJ Hammond, Toby Whithouse and Helen Raynor.

Following the sucess of the first season, the show has a "sort of" promotion, from it's BBC Three home on Satellite Television to mainstream television on BBC Two.

In 2002, before the revival of Doctor Who, Russell T. Davies began to develop an idea for a science-fiction/crime drama in the style of American dramas like Buffy the Vampire Slayer and Angel. This idea, originally titled Excalibur, was abandoned until 2005, when BBC Three Controller Stuart Murphy invited Davies to develop a post-watershed science-fiction series for the channel. During the production of the 2005 series of Doctor Who, the word "Torchwood" (an anagram of "Doctor Who") had been used as a "codename" for the series while filming its first few episodes and on the 'rushes' tapes to ensure they were not intercepted. Davies connected the word "Torchwood" to his earlier Excalibur idea and decided to make the series a Doctor Who spin-off. Subsequently, the word "Torchwood" was seeded in Doctor Who episodes and other media which aired in 2005 and 2006.

The series is set in Cardiff and follows the Welsh branch of a covert agency called the Torchwood Institute which investigates extraterrestrial incidents on Earth and scavenges alien technology for its own use. To paraphrase Torchwood Three's commander-in-chief, Captain Jack Harkness, the organisation is separate from the government, outside the police, and beyond the United Nations. Their public perception is as merely a 'special ops' group. The events of the first season take place some time after the Doctor Who series two finale, and just before the series three finale.

The main writer alongside Davies is Chris Chibnall, creator of the BBC light drama show Born and Bred. Other writers include P.J. Hammond, Toby Whithouse, Doctor Who script editor Helen Raynor, Cath Tregenna, and Doctor Who cast member Noel Clarke, who gained acclaim for his screenplay for the film Kidulthood. Russell T. Davies wrote just the first episode.

In a 17 October 2005 announcement, Stuart Murphy described Torchwood as "sinister and psychological...As well as being very British and modern and real." Davies further described it as "a British sci-fi paranoid thriller, a cop show with a sense of humour. Dark, wild and sexy, it's The X-Files meets This Life." Davies later denied ever making this comparison, instead describing the show as "alleyways, rain, the city". As Torchwood is a post-watershed show that is, after 9 p.m. it has more mature content than Doctor Who. Davies told SFX: "We can be a bit more visceral, more violent, and more sexual, if we want to. Though bear in mind that it's very teenage to indulge yourself in blood and gore, and Torchwood is going to be smarter than that. But it's the essential difference between BBC One at 7 pm, and BBC Three at, say, 9 pm. That says it all instinctively, every viewer can see the huge difference there." According to Barrowman:

"I don't do any nude scenes in series one; they're saving that for the next series! I don't have a problem with getting my kit off. As long as they pay me the right money, I'm ready to get out my cock and balls." Davies also joked to a BBC Radio Wales interviewer that he was "not allowed" to refer to the programme as "Doctor Who for grown-ups". The first series includes content never before seen or heard in the Doctor Who franchise, including lovemaking scenes (in episodes such as "Day One" and "Out of Time") and use of extreme profanity in several episodes.

Torchwood is filmed and set in Cardiff. The makers of Torchwood deliberately portray Cardiff as a modern urban centre, contrasting with past stereotypical portrayals of Wales. "There's not a male voice choir ... or a miner in sight," said BBC Wales Controller Menna Richards. Conservative MP Michael Gove described the debut of Torchwood as the moment confirming "Wales' move from overlooked Celtic cousin to underwired erotic coquette."

The team's headquarters, referred to as the Hub, is beneath Roald Dahl Plass in Cardiff Bay formerly known as the Oval Basin. This is where the TARDIS landed in the Doctor Who episodes "Boom Town" and "Utopia" to refuel, and is the location of the spacetime rift first seen in "The Unquiet Dead". The Hub itself is around 3 stories high, with a large column running through the middle that is an extension of the fountain above (which in turn acts as an emergency escape route from the Hub).

As a spin-off of long-running British cultural artifact Doctor Who, Torchwood's launch into British popular culture has received much positive and negative review, commentary and parody following the hype of its inception, especially in regards to its status as an "adult" Doctor Who spin-off as well as its characterisation and portrayal of sex. The series initially attracted record high ratings, which later dropped to a degree, but ensured the programme at least a second series.

In April 2007, Torchwood beat its parent series, which is also made in Wales, to win the Best Drama Series category at the BAFTA Cymru Awards. The awards, given by the Welsh branch of the British Academy of Film and Television Arts, celebrate the achievements of film and television productions made in Wales. Eve Myles won the Best Actress category at the same awards, ahead of Doctor Who's Billie Piper.

Torchwood explores several themes in its narrative, in particular LGBT themes. Various characters are portrayed as sexually fluid; through those characters, the series examines homosexual and bisexual relationships. Although the nature of their sexual flexibility is not explicitly discussed, characters like Jack, Ianto, and Toshiko offer varying perspectives on orientation.

Through the use of repetition, in particular of thematically important lines, and by drawing parallels between characters, the show also delves somewhat into existentialism, the value of human life, and the corrupting nature of power.

Captain Jack Harkness returns to his team in spectacular fashion, walking into the middle of a hostage situation involving his team and an alien Blowfish, shooting the intoxicated Blowfish in the head. At the hub, the team question why he left them, and he simply responds that he belongs at Torchwood. They then are alerted to a death near a multi-storey car park, where the team detect energy from the Rift on the corpse. Jack, to even his surprise, gets a hologram message on his wrist device from a person he recognises, and leaves the team to talk to him.

The person is Captain John Hart, a fellow Time Agent and former lover of Jack. He is responsible for the death, and a public disturbance at a nightclub. After a brief fight at the nightclub, John tells Jack that the Time Agency was disbanded and he has since undergone several rehabilitation programmes, before the team catch up with Jack and are introduced to John. John accompanies the team back to the Hub, where he tells the team of three cylindrical devices scattered throughout Cardiff, which he explains are radiocative cluster bombs, and he requires help to diffuse them. Thusly, they split into three pairs: Jack and Ianto search an office block, Owen and Tosh search a warehouse, and Gwen and John search the nearby docks.

It is clear that John has an ulterior motive; first, he paralyses Gwen and locks her in a crate. He then finds Owen and Tosh, shooting the former in the hip. Finally, he confronts Jack, who realises that the bombs are an elementary 51st century confidence trick. Jack throws the device over the building, and John pushes him off the roof in retaliation.

John returns to Torchwood, where he takes a pyramid-shaped object from the Blowfish in the morgue. The team, including Jack, who survived due to his immortality, hold John at gunpoint, where he admits that the "bombs" will simply triangulate the location of a diamond he stole off a former lover. However, by using the devices and the pyramid, he discovers there is no diamond; John's former lover anticipated dying, and thus set a trap to kill her murderer.

Unwilling to be murdered, John handcuffs himself to Gwen and flees towards the car park. Gwen formulates a plan to use the Rift to kill Hart, but at the penalty of her own life. The team catch John on the car park where he entered and inject him with the team's DNA, thus confusing the device set to kill John. John then agrees to free Gwen and leave, but before leaving, tells Jack that he "found Grey", visibly disturbing Jack, who just asks his team to get back to work.

2 - 2 SLEEPER

Two burglars break into a flat owned by a woman called Beth and her husband. There is a struggle and the burglars say they are sorry and then that is a flash of light. Soon, Torchwood are on the scene investigating the fate suffered by the burglars. Beth cannot remember events and is taken into custody by Torchwood, who suspect she is an alien. When they take her to a cell, she passes a Weevil and it cowers in her presence. Captain Jack, after flirting with Ianto, decides to take drastic measures and subject Beth to a mind probe. Despite no initial reaction, the probe eventually uncovers alien technology buried under the skin of her right forearm. It emerges that she is an alien 'sleeper agent', yet to be activated and oblivious to her real identity, having been given memory implants.

Around Cardiff, other sleeper agents are suddenly activated, with their right arms transforming into bayonet-like weapons. They carry out a series of suicide bombings at key locations such as a telecommunications center taking out the Cardiff phone lines, killing the Leader of the City Council who is in charge of the city during emergencies, and taking out a military fuel pipeline, paving the way for their leader - a former doting husband - to head for an army base containing nuclear warheads. Beth manages to escape and is found with her ailing husband at the hospital. She struggles to remain human but accidentally stabs her husband in his bed. Jack and Gwen manage to apprehend her and convince her to help them track the locations of the other sleeper agents.

Captain Jack manages to find the leading sleeper agent at an army base moments before the agent can detonate the nuclear weapons that are held within. Jack is stabbed in the process and the agent warns him that there are others of his kind on Earth before blowing himself up. Jack, Gwen and Beth barely escape from the explosion. Back at Torchwood, Beth tells Gwen she cannot live knowing that one day she will not be herself anymore. She uses the weapon in her arm to threaten Gwen, forcing the others to shoot and kill her. Beth uses her last piece of humanity to kill herself. The episode ends with Gwen telling Jack that if more agents come, Torchwood is prepared against them.

2 - 3 TO THE LAST MAN

Tommy Brockless, a young First World War soldier, shell-shocked from his experiences in the trenches, is the key to saving the world. He is taken into custody by Torchwood in 1918 - Torchwood having been told to do so by his future self - and held in cryonic storage until the time comes for him to save the world. He is awoken one day each year for a medical check-up, a "day out" and as a precautionary measure in case he is needed. A time slip is set to cause 1918 and the present to bleed together at an unspecified time, and when this happens it is Tommy who will be "stitching" the fragments of 1918 back to their rightful place in time.

It is 2008 when this eventually happens and fragments of 1918 are appearing in an old abandoned hospital. Before the team realise that this is the year it will happen, Toshiko becomes unavoidably infatuated with Tommy, and the two share a brief romance. Owen, noticing this and having experienced something similar (cf. "Out of Time"), warns Tosh about the eventuality of saying goodbye. When Tommy is told what he must do - a process resulting in him not seeing Toshiko again - Tommy initially refuses to partake. However, with encouragement from Toshiko, he begins to see the bigger picture and agrees. Upon one such time slip, Tommy tells Torchwood employees from that era that they must take him into custody. Then, with the next time slip, after a tearful goodbye, Tommy goes back to his own time. After some further psychically-transmitted encouragement from Toshiko, Tommy turns the key in his Rift manipulator device, dragging all of 1918 back with him.

TORCHWOOD DECLASSIFIED

Torchwood Declassified is a documentary series created by the British Broadcasting Corporation to complement the British science fiction television series Torchwood. Each episode is broadcast on BBC Three on the same evening as the broadcast of the weekly television episode (typically after the same-day repeat).

Continuing the tradition of its parent, Doctor Who Confidential, Torchwood Declassified covers themes presented in the just-broadcast episode, as well as providing behind-the-scenes access and footage. Each episode is ten minutes long, compared to Confidential's 30-45 minute length. Following transmission, the episodes were all available for viewing on the BBC's Torchwood website, but were later removed from the site after the end of the first series.

TOTAL RECALL 2070

Low enforcement officer David Hume, struggling to retain his humanity following a memory implant in what is mostly a crime free society (presided over by mega-corporation ReCALL) but is ever more dependent on science and technology, is unwillingly teamed up with an android who wants to become more human, while he finds he is growing apart from his wife, who embraces the world's advances.

Loosely based on the Schwarzenegar movie, the staff for the show include some notable names such as Art Mantorsterilli (NYPD Blue) and Jeff King (Due South), the visual effects for the show were done by Gajdecki Visual Effects who also produced the effects for STARGATE SG1. The series began airing in the UK on Sky One starting 22nd September 1999.

Anyone remember HOLMES AND YOYO, what an incisive, postmodern comment on the endless of buddy-buddy cops shows and films that was - a satirical stab at the good cop/bad cop, white cop/black cop, male cop/female cop, fat cop/dog cop formula, featuring a cop and a robot cop. Sheer sitcom genius. Or, at least it would have been if it hadn't been crap.

But you can't keep a good idea down. And so with Total Recall 2070 we get TV's second police pairing in which 50% of the partnership is artificial. But this time round laughs are thin on the ground. This is not just SF in any old future. This is a Philip K. Dick/Ridley Scott inspired future. So, as you can guess it's pretty grim. And it rains a lot.

The pilot for Total Recall 2070 is a superb slice of small screen SF. Not faultless, but more intelligently scripted than most (despite some dumb moments), and boasting superb production design which captures the feel of Blade Runner incredibly effectively on a much smaller budget. The trouble is, it's hard to see how it can maintain the high standards on an ongoing weekly basis. But more worrying is the fact that, by the end of the pilot, the basic series set up seems to be little more than a cop show, in which the moody mumbling David Hume, and Data-esque Ian Farve are set to hunt down rouge androids every week. But you never know. The show could have a few tricks up its sleeve. There's certainly evidence that it might; the pilot leaves enough unanswered questions at the end of its 90 minutes to suggest that the series has come prepared with a built-in arc plot. . .

The first thing you'll puzzle over, however is why it's called Total Recall and not Blade Runner. The basic plot involves androids going haywire and demanding extended memories, while the reality in which it exists is all huge, flickering advertising hoardings, neon lights, rickshaws and streams of electric blue light cutting through dusty rooms. But ReCALL the company who messed with Arnie Schwarzbarger's mind in the movie, is linked into all of this, and looks set to be big bad Corrupt Corporation, Inc for the rest of the series - the powerful, manipulative enemy our heroes will no doubt seek to expose.

The show's main pluses are its highly impressive production design and Karl Pruner as the android Ian Farve. While the character as written is hardly original, Pruner's performance is subtle and playful, contrasting nicely with the more stock character traits of Michael Easton's growly cynical David Hume. It's also peppered with some very strong, memorable, well-played, set-pieces, more dramatically harrowing than you'd expect from TV science fiction; this is gritty, adult stuff, and there's sex and female breasts on show to prove it.

On the downside, all the best scenes in the pilot seem to be swiped directly from the two films that inspired it; you wonder where the show will go when it's used up all the best ideas. Dialogue with a tendency towards corn whenever the characters discuss their "relationships" doesn't help either. But the main problem still has to be that, despite all the impressive SF trappings, this looks like it's just another buddy-buddy cop show. Let's hope it isn't, and it takes a cue from the cop/alien pairing of ALIEN NATION - otherwise, it'll get very boring, very soon. The music for the series was done by Zorin Boris.

Guest stars in the series include Anthony Zerbe, veteran actor and recently the baddie in Star Trek:

Insurrection plays Tyler Hume, David's father; David Warner clocks up his umpteenth genre appearance as Dr. Philip Latham, a brain implant specialist; the very recognizable Henry Gibson plays Belasarius, head of a robot-hating company; and Damon D'Oliveira who plays almost-regular background 'tec Moralez had a stint on EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT as Sahjit Jinnah.

TOTALLY DOCTOR WHO

Science Fiction documentary with interviews with the stars of the 2005 Doctor Who TV series.

Totally Doctor Who is a children's television series produced by the BBC to accompany the science fiction series Doctor Who. The first episode was broadcast on 13 April 2006.

The first series of the programme ran concurrently with the 2006 series of Doctor Who. Presented by Barney Harwood and Liz Barker it aired on BBC One at 5:00 p.m. on Thursdays as part of the CBBC strand, and was repeated at 6:30 p.m. on Fridays and then again on Saturdays on the CBBC Channel, just prior to the BBC One airing of the new episode of Doctor Who. There was no Totally Doctor Who episode in conjunction with the 2006 Christmas special.

The second series of Totally Doctor Who ran concurrently with the 2007 series of Doctor Who. It aired every Friday after the broadcast of that weeks' Doctor Who, at 5:00 p.m. on BBC One. In this series Kirsten O'Brien replaced Liz Barker, who left television presenting to become a full time mother.

Regular features

Behind the scenes

The show features 'behind the scenes' segments detailing the creation process of certain parts of a recent Doctor Who episode: for example, underwater filming for a weightless scene in "The Impossible Planet", or documenting the making of a TARDISODE.

Companion Academy (Series 1)

In the "Companion Academy" segment, a number of children compete in the style of a reality show to win a day behind-the-scenes during the filming of Doctor Who. The competition was originally restricted to 7 to 12 year olds, but was subsequently extended to include ages 13 and 14. One of the judges for this segment is Clayton Hickman, current editor of Doctor Who Magazine.

Finale

At the end of the programme the presenters and guests review the show. The two presenters then show a preview of the next new episode of Doctor Who.

The Filing Cabinet (Series 1)

The filing cabinet contains letters, drawings and creations made by the viewers. It has a weathered, wooden-looking exterior, with Gallifreyan text on the front and is designed to look like the Doctor's TARDIS. It also has the properties of a TARDIS because it appears to be bigger on the inside (however, it is quite obviously fed through the wall; made ever more obvious by the fact that the wall behind it is semi-transparent). If a piece of work is featured on the show, its author receives a Totally Doctor Who branded mug.

Handprints (Series 2)

This is a viewer competition where every week, handprints are made from the cast and crew in very hard clay. Then, every week, the cast or crew member who made the handprint, sets a question referring to the next episode of Doctor Who. The winner is announced on the 13th episode of Totally Doctor Who and will win all the handprints made.

The Infinite Quest (Series 2)

One segment in the 2007 series of Totally Doctor Who featured the first twelve parts of an animated Doctor Who story titled "The Infinite Quest". The cartoon stars David Tennant and Freema Agyeman, voicing the Doctor and Martha respectively. Anthony Head voices a character named "Baltazar - Scourge of the Galaxy", and Toby Longworth also provides voices. The cartoon is produced by Firestep, written by Alan Barnes and directed by Gary Russell. The thirteenth and final part was shown in an omnibus broadcast on 30 June 2007, the day of the Series 3 finale.

Interview

Every week there is a different guest who is interviewed during the programme, for example David Tennant.

Monster Special (Series 2)

Totally Doctor Who have made a monster special, set to be shown on CBBC1 on 15 June 2007. The special includes a baddie top ten rundown. And in Team Totally, the teams make monsters of their own in a prosthetics challenge.

Team Totally (Series 2)

Two teams of three battle it out for a "money can't buy Doctor Who experience". The two teams are Team Time Lord (Alia, Sara.M.S and Cody) and Team TARDIS (Chris, Molly and Daniel). Every week they complete a task, e.g. Story boarding, the winners are rewarded with 2 points whilst the runners-up are awarded 1 point. Molly Kabia (of Team TARDIS), played an unnamed female character in the interactive Doctor Who mini-episode 'Attack of the Graske'. However Molly never revealed this to any of her teammates [citation needed]. In the final episode, the prize was revealed as a weekend trip to Blackpool to meet David Tennant whilst he was there to switch on the Illuminations. Both teams also received framed art, depicting their team with the Doctor and Martha in the same art style as the show's opening titles.

Who Goes There? (Series 2)

In this challenge, the back-lit silhouette of a Doctor Who monster is shown. Viewers are encouraged to identify the monster from its shadow, and write or email the programme with the correct answer, in hopes of winning mugs and sweatshirts.

Who-ru (Series 1)

The title is a pun on the word guru. It is a Doctor Who trivia challenge between two children or a child and an actor, with a prize from one of the guests (usually a signed script or promotional photo) though both contestants receive a Totally Doctor Who goodie bag for taking part. The format of the challenge changed after the first episode, in which the loser had to give the winner a cherished possession.

TOUCHED BY AN ANGEL

Touched by an Angel is a series which revived the concept from Highway to Heaven, of an angel who is on Earth to help people. In Touched by an Angel the angel is Monica. Monica is an apprentice angel who has just been promoted to caseworker, a position in which she is now sent to help people who are at a crossroads in their lives. Accompanying Monica in her efforts is Tess, Monica's heavenly supervisor who oversees Monica's work and occasionally assists her. The pair travel across the country in a Cadillac convertible finding people in need and helping them. Monica, being new at her job, has been known to make the situation worse with her well-intentioned efforts, which are not always by the book. This causes Tess to be tough with her.

Touched by an angel is a very similar show to QUANTUM LEAP in the respect of somebody, in this case an angel, is sent back to Earth people put their lives right, but this time without the help of time travel. Actress Roma Downey who plays Monica is actually a British actress, who puts on a very rough Irish accent for the role.

Touched by an Angel was a troubled series even before it reached the air. The series had its format slightly changed, in the original version Monica was assigned to help and protect destiny tots, children who were destined for greatness but had some obstacle to overcome in order to achieve it. The series in its altered format looked as if it were headed for cancellation. Touched by an Angel was taken off the air three months after it premiered. Ratings however picked up when reruns appeared during the summer of 1995 and Touched by an Angel got a reprieve from heaven and was renewed for another season, where it has become a success. Touched by an Angel, was the highest rated drama series on CBS as of 1998. The executive producer for the series was Martha Williamson.

TRACKER

Tracker premiered in syndication the week of October 15, 2001. There's been a prison break. Over a hundred dangerous convicts have escaped. They're led by Zin, the smartest and most ruthless felon known to man. But these criminals aren't from any world we know they're from planets that could eat us for lunch. Zin devised a wormhole in space that transported all of them to Chicago, where they've set up shop and now traffic in every kind of criminal activity imaginable. They have powers that are no match for us: the ability to take the form of any human or animal, super-strength and speed, superior intelligence, and something even more frightening - each one of them is a different kind of alien being - and they each have powers that are individual, unique and immense! But the prison has sent help. A TRACKER.

His mission is to capture each and every one of them, dead or alive. He teams up with Mel, a hard luck girl who is finally on the road to salvation. Mel is the owner of a Chicago pub, The Watchfire, located downstairs from the Tracker's base of operations. The Tracker and Mel are a kick-ass couple, an alien and an earthling. Fighting the evils of the universe and, at the same time fighting something even stronger - an attraction to each other.

Tracker was Adrian Paul's second sci-fi/fantasy show, his first being the very popular HIGHLANDER: THE SERIES.

A beautiful, twenty five year old woman stands by the side of her car, watching helplessly as steam billows out from under the hood. She sees a man in the distance walking toward her. Thank God help has arrived. But, as the man gets closer, she realizes he is dressed in nothing but his underwear and seemingly out of his mind! This is the initial meeting between MEL PORTER, a feisty and intelligent owner of a landmark bar in downtown Chicago, and COLE, an alien from a far off solar system who has come to Earth to track down over two hundred alien fugitives who escaped from an interplanetary prison and landed in Chicago.

Welcome to "TRACKER," a romantic action comedy with an extraterrestrial twist that follows Cole as he brings otherworldly convicts to justice. Being new to Earth, Cole is the ultimate fish-out-of-water, and must rely heavily on Mel, and her London-born, sexy barmaid, JESS, who explain to him the complex details of life on this planet.

Before our series begins, a brilliant scientist named ZIN engineers the jailbreak from SAR-TOP prison, located a hundred light years away from Earth. Zin creates a wormhole, which allows almost spontaneous travel from the Migar solar system to ours. The wormhole ends in Chicago, where Zin and the escapees have taken over the bodies of human beings and blended into society, but still retain some of their alien otherworldly abilities.

With an army of escaped alien convicts, Zin creates a criminal empire, not unlike the mafia, which he can rule over as Godfather supreme. However as Cole will discover, Zin may have a larger agenda in mind than running illegal enterprises for profit, an agenda that might carry interplanetary implications.

So, Cole must find the fugitives and stop them before they can carry out their plans. To do so, he will need both Mel and Jess's help and constant guidance.

"TRACKER" will combine science fiction action with wonderfully fresh visuals and socially relevant themes. Each week, the show will mine the fish-out-of-water humor, which will occupy space with wit and irony. It will examine the bizarre but highly entertaining relationship between Cole and Mel, as well the slowly growing romantic possibilities between the two. All in all, "TRACKER" will present a delightful peek into the human condition as it comes smack up against an alien one.

The underwear clad gentleman Mel Porter meets on the road that fateful afternoon, is not really a man. He's both more and very different. Cirron, his home world, revolves around a sun light years away and his true form is more a figure of light than flesh and blood. Why and how he came here is a mystery, one that will have Mel digging through old family records and learning why her grandmother's bar is called "The Watchfire". Tracker is a job description and a calling for Daggon. In the worlds of the Migar Alliance, those who outlaw themselves are clever, strong and have abilities far beyond those of the usual Terran criminals. Unfortunately for us, when 218 aliens are sent through an experimental wormhole by a scientist with a scheme of his own, Daggon has his work cut out for him. He'll be up against the essence of the worst wearing the bodies of humans who had nothing to do with Zin's ultimate plan. Mel Porter is a restless woman who is trying to find answers to her own questions. The generations old bar in the heart of Chicago's Criminal Courts district is a legacy, but is there more to it than that? Who is this man with the gift of turning discarded bits and pieces into electronic equipment the FBI and CIA combined don't have? Perhaps even more important to Mel, why is she so drawn to him?

There's been a prison break. Two hundred and eighteen dangerous convicts have escaped. They're led by Zin, the smartest and most ruthless felon known to man. But these criminals aren't from any world we know - they're from planets that could eat us for lunch. Zin devised a wormhole in space that transported all of them to Chicago, where they've set up shop and now traffic in every kind of criminal activity imaginable. We are virtually defenseless against their extraordinary powers: the ability to take the form of any human or animal, super-strength and speed, superior intelligence, and something even more frightening - each one of them is a different kind of alien being - and they each have powers that are individual, unique - and immense! But the prison has sent help. A Tracker. His mission is to capture each and every one of them, dead or alive. He teams up with Mel, a hard luck girl who is finally on the road to salvation. Mel is the owner of a Chicago pub, The Watchfire, located downstairs from the Tracker's base of operations. The Tracker and Mel are a kick-ass couple, an alien and an earthling. Fighting the evils of the universe - and, at the same time fighting something even stronger - an attraction to each other.

1 - 1 "PILOT"

An alien security officer comes to Earth to track fugitives from his planetary system who have taken over the bodies of Earthmen. Unfortunately, while they enter human bodies and thus have a knowledge of humanity, the alien bases his physique on a poster of an underwear model for the Cole brand. Thus the alien ("Cole") is pretty much clueless about humans and human physiology. A passing bar owner, Mel Porter, takes pity on him and takes him back to her hotel. "Cole" quickly cobbles together some Earth technology to track one of the escapees, Rhee, who killed his wife and child. He defeats Rhee thanks to his "time-stop" abilities and removes her essence from the human body she inhabits. He also meets Zin, a scientific genius and alien who masterminded the escape. At the end Mel takes on Cole full-time at her bar while Cole prepares to track more of the escapees.

1 - 2 CLOUD NINE

Using his extrasensory powers, Cole figures out how Zin got his confederates into Chicago: by taking over the passengers on a train. Although Cole taps into the station's camera, he can't get a clear look at who they are. Meanwhile, an Inixian named Kaden is distributing an alien drug not only to his fellow criminals, but to humans as well. One of Jess' friends has a heart attack induced by the drug. Cole tracks the gas emissions caused by the drug production and follows Kaden to one of his traveling drug-clubs. Displaying a new ability to temporarily change his body, Cole duplicates one of the guards and manages to get close enough to Kaden to capture his life force.

1 - 3 ROSWELL (AKA AREA 51)

Two brother/related Orsians, Raahm and Saahm, are trying to track down something from the Roswell crash site. Cole manages to capture Saahm, and uses his essence to intercept the mental transmissions from his "brother" with the aid of Earth-Jello. Following the messages, Cole tracks Raahm to Area 51 and tries to stop him from breaking into the military base and grabbing a crystal map. Raahm tells his brother to contact Zin so they can sell the map, but Cole intercepts the message. The two meet in the Roswell cafe, and after a confrontation meet out back to fight. Cole is vulnerable to cold, including a special spray can that Raahm has rigged up. However, Cole falls into a cloud of steam and revitalizes, and proves triumphant. However, Raahm no longer has the crystal map. Cole departs, unaware that the local waitress found it where Raahm hid it and it is now part of her Roswell "alien" collection of toys and gimcracks.

1 - 4 TRUST

Cole is in the middle of pursuing Trof (an Enixian) and about to lose his life when a concealed alien, Nestov, comes to his aid. Cole captures Trof and then prepares to capture Nestov, who asks for his help. Nestov's host, Darian Fawley, was on the train returning with money from a kidnapping when Nestov and the others took over the people on the train. Now Nestov has the money but the rest of the kidnappers are after him because he gave the money to Zin. Cole agrees to help. The kidnapping is still underway, with the kidnappers holding the girl ransom for yet more money. Cole and Nestov track down the girl, only to discover that she had created the whole scheme along with Nestov's host body to get money from her rich father. Cole captures the girl and her accomplice, but lets Nestov go in appreciation of his help...and as a future resource in his attempts to capture the other prisoners.

1 - 6 THE BEAST

A blind man is led into the middle of an intersection and left to be run over by his German Shephard. While picking up Mel from an aborted date, Cole senses the presence of one of his prisoners, and soon determines the German Shephard has been taken over by one of the last arrivals on the train: Medoran, Zin's bodyguard. Zin is putting his bodyguard to use, killing a councilwoman who stands in the way of his desire to have a district of Chicago rezoned. Cole tracks down the dog, which can shift forms into a werewolf-like humanoid, and manages to capture it.

1 - 7 WITHOUT A TRACE

Mel is talking with Det. Bruno, and how he's being taken off the investigation into the mysterious disappearance of her boyfriend, restaurant owner Rod Archer. Cole overhears the conversation and takes on the form of Archer. Mel is understandably upset, but then realizes what Cole has done. Cole can't reverse the transformation, and decides to investigate Rod's disappearance. Several folks working for gangster Marco Sylvestri start gunning for "Rod", and then Rod/Cole gets grabbed by the Feds and dropped off at a home 50 miles outside Chicago, and informed he is a member of the witness protection program. Rod and the Feds faked his death so he could testify against Sylvestri. Rod has started up a new life, which includes a wife and newborn child. One of the Feds is a mole, and tells Sylvestri of Rod's location. Cole and Mel anonymously get Rod and his family out of the house. Cole-as-Rod takes his place, and fakes being killed by Sylvestri. While grabbing a piece of evidence and sending the Feds anonymous information that will convict the gangster once and for all. Mel decides not to confront Rod, and Cole finds a way back to his "normal" form by rebuilding himself from the original underwear-model picture.

1 - 8 CHILDREN OF THE NIGHT

Cole spots a face on a milk carton of a missing boy, whom he recognizes from the video recording he took from the train station. He and Mel investigate and determine that an alien Odulian is inhabiting the body of the 15-year-old boy, and is luring unsuspecting teen street kids for his experimentation. The boy and another alien in a doctor's body are trying to extract chemicals for Zin. The Odulian, an aquatic creature, dodges their first attempt to capture him by taking refuge in Lake Michigan. Cole determines the alien needs certain elements to survive, and normal lake water won't suffice because of its high zinc content. Cole tracks down the source for the proper chemicals the alien needs, and finds the base where the alien is performing his experiment. The doctor escapes but Cole captures the Nodulian in a net to prevent him getting back to the water, then extracts the alien life essence.

1 - 9 BREACH

Cole is pursuing an alien Nodulian, Kres, who is a "courier"/smuggler. Kres is captured by U.S. government agents and taken into custody. Cole eludes them and uses satellite photography to locate the military base they've taken Kres to. Cole breaks in and discovers Kres is being tortured by Dr. Connelly, who knows that he is an alien. The government knows all about the energy burst that brought the escaped prisoners to Earth, and that Kres has deserted "his" human wife and family after being possessed. Kres is susceptible to heat, being an Nodulian. Cole is captured and subjected to the same treatment, which reenergizes him. Connelly realizes that and cools him down. Cole manages to escape using hypertime, but is captured with a fire extinguisher when Connelly lowers the base's air temperature. Kres has escaped from his cell and using an experimental hypertime simulator that Zin created, manages to free Cole. Cole has Mel download a virus into the base's computer, destroying all records of him and Kres. When they try to escape, Kres is shot and Cole is forced to take Kres' life force, leaving the host body dead. At the end we find out that Connelly's superior is in Zin's pay, and Connelly is shipped off to the Arctic. As a subplot, Mel finds out her grandmother, who ran the bar, used it as a speakeasy and had a rather...wild reputation. Along with her grandmother's diary, she also finds a metal triangle that suggests her father and grandmother may have had connections to Cole's homeworld.

Joshua Keene, who works in a real estate developer's office, leaves a message for his grandfather's answering machine, and is then confronted by a mysterious man who hauls him up to the roof and drops him to his death. The grandfather, Wahota, an elderly Indian tracker, comes to Chicago and believes his son's death was not a suicide as the police claim. After he talks to Joshua's boss, Logan Dunn, the same mysterious man tries to kill him, only for Cole to intervene. Dunn (who we later learn is a DESSERTIAN) and the other man are both alien prisoners involved in some real estate scam for Zin. Cole confronts the killer, Marak (who is a VARDIAN and a old friend of ZIN'S), and imprisons his life energy as Wahota looks on. Wahota is pretty cool with the whole thing, and he and Cole team up to take out Dunn. Dunn flees into the woods, where Wahota's tracking skills prove useful. When Cole is caught in a strangle-

1 - 12 TO CATCH A DESSARIAN

With Nestov's help, Cole captures Vesser, who was using Nestov to hire supplies for a theft. A Desserian thief named Zareth is planning to steal something during an art exhibit. Through Det. Bruno, Mel manages to wrangle an invite for her and Cole, although Vic thinks she was using it to set up a date with him. Cole is unable to locate Zareth, and then an assault team led by Max break in. Cole doesn't believe Max is Zareth, and sneaks off to investigate. Bruno is shot and critically wounded. Mel manages to grab a cell phone and call for help, while Cole discovers that the brunette who was the curator's escort is Zareth. Zin set up the theft with Max and his men so that Zareth could break into a vault and steal an ancient Egyptian statue containing an alien map of some sort. Cole intercepts Zareth but she fends him off with her chameleon powers and a can of nitrogen. Zareth shoots Max so that the police can arrest his men, providing a distraction for her to escape. However, Cole uses hyper-time to catch up to her and capture her. He vows to investigate why Zin wants the map so badly. 1 - 13 THE MIRACLE

A young girl, Jamie Swenson, miraculously recovers from an illness and subsequently heals an electrocuted boy. This catches the attention of Cole, who investigates. Jamie has been taken over by Lontoria, a Cyrrhonian prisoner (of the same race as Cole). who escaped from Satrap. She was a political prisoner who thought Zin would give her a second chance on Earth, and she's been attempting to help humanity once she arrived. Zin (passing as a movie producer) wants her to use her powers for his own ends, and the local sheriff is another of the escaped prisoners. Cole is conflicted because he and Lontoria were friends. Meanwhile, the local priest, Father Creighton, believes that "Jamie's" powers are God-given, and tries to give her refuge in a church. Zin and the sheriff go after Jamie and Cole intervenes, defeating the sheriff but being fatally wounded by an energy gun Zin employs that was based on Lonotnio's weapon research. The U.S. government project devoted to detecting aliens (from "Breach") is back in action. They are keeping the body of Wes Tarber, previously inhabited by the Nodulian Kres alive, and bring Zan (disguised as a "Dr. Armstrong") in to revive him. Zan succeeds by injecting it with the essence of Ramel, who didn't get a body in the original takeover because there weren't enough humans on the train. Zin needs access to files in the complex and revives Ramel to get in good, but kills the general he's bribing when the general gets antsy. Meanwhile Cole is analyzing Mel's grandmother's key, which apparently opens some kind of "door" beneath the Watchfire. Ramel attacks Cole, who killed his brother previously, but Cole escapes. Cole sneaks into the complex, and finds out that a Vardian ship piloted by an "Arkin" crashed into Lake Michigan. A "Dr. Milos Sandborn" interrogated the alien and then disappeared before giving his files to the government. Zin wants the files and needs Ramel to help search. Nestov shows up to help, and they evade capture. Nestov warns Cole that Zin has created a gun that permanently nullifies Cirronian energies, turning them into normal humans for good. The two break into one of Zin's bases and steal it...only for Nestov to turn around and shoot Cole with it! He also takes Mel captive and ties them up, then invites Zin into the Watchfire and gives him her grandmother's key. They manage to get free and when Mel wields the Collector (which can only be triggered by Cirronian energies) she activates it! Cole finally figures out that Mel and her ancestors were part of a Mygar breeding program. She "jump starts" him back into his energized state, while Zin unearths the vault beneath the Watchfire and goes down into it. Mel and Cole defeat Zin's henchmen (with Mel using the Collector on one of them!). Nestov reveals he was actually planning a triple-cross, and was hoping Zin would leave. Unfortunately, Cole determines the Vardian device is a universal-destroyer unit that Zin plans to use to gain absolute power in the Mygar system. TRANSPARENTAKA: SATORAREAKA: TRANSPARENT: TRIBUTE TO A SAD GENIUS

In near-future Japan, the entire country becomes involved in a coverup. The government reveals that certain individuals with genius-level intelligence are vitally important national treasures, and should be afforded all possible help in getting on with artistic genius, and inventions that bring massive foreign investment into Japan. There's just one snag: the geniuses have a crippling side effect to their high IQs, which causes them to inadvertently broadcast their innermost thoughts to everyone around them. Were they to find out, the embarrassment could destroy them - consequently, the "transparent" are kept separate in remote small towns, each of which receives tax breaks if the inhabitants conspire to pretend that nothing unusual is going on.

Kenichi (Odagiri) is one such transparent, a brilliant biotechnician who has annoyed his minders by pigheadedly insisting on a career as a surgeon. His handlers try desperately to conceive of a way for him to change his mind - each day that he practices as a normal doctor is another day he won't be inventing new vaccines, while the hospital staff will never permit him to fully qualify because his telepathic affliction makes it impossible for him to keep bad news from his patients. Eventually running out of options, the government sends in Yoko (Tsuruta), an undercover military psychiatrist whose job is to change his mind at any cost.

Although dramatic parallels are most obvious in FROM THE HEART, Transparent's origins lie in story by Bayside Shakedown director Katsuyuki Motohiro. However, the underlying theme of Transparent, that Big Brother is busily watching the hero's every move, actually owes more to The Truman Show (1998). The series was produced by Akihiko Yokose, Koichi Tota and Tetsuya Kuroda.

I recently acquired this little gem which is next-to-impossible to find over here in the United States. I wasn't prepared for a full 8 hour miniseries split up into four parts! I realize a lot of early 80's Italian films began as miniseries and were later cut down to feature length and sometime rescored for their American release, such as CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS, MARCO POLO, HEARTS AND ARMOUR, and YOR THE HUNTER FROM THE FUTURE, but to my knowledge this film never appeared on American TV despite the top-notch cast.

Basically this flick is what you'd expect from the title and director (if you've seen any of Margheriti's early 60's space operas). Some kid ventures off into space in a ratty old spaceship with a ragtag crew of cut-throat pirates legged Long John Silver in search of a long-lost treasure on a remote planet. The film follows the original novel pretty closely though it drops a few characters and adds a few others. Mostly the outer-space twist on the whole story works to the film's detriment, with lots of silly changes like the fact that the blind man Pew's walking stick is instead a motion sensor.

As I said before, the cast is uncommonly great for such an obviously low-budget effort. Anthony Quinn stars as Long John Silver, David Warbeck is the doctor, and Phillippe Leroy is Squire Tralaney. On top of that we have Ernest Borgnine as Billy Bones, Biagio Pelligra as Pew, and among the pirates such familiar faces as Giovanni Lombardo Radice, Bobby Rhodes, Al Yamanouchi, and Sal Borgese! It's a wonder it seems no one has heard of this movie, as it really isn't that bad at all. Though at times it does feel awfully long and drawn-out, the special effects are much better than Margheriti's 60's offerings, though they range from excellent to marginally terrible. The Hispaniola spacecraft only looks about 2 feet tall in some shots and a lot of the astronauts floating in space look suspiciously like barbie dolls. The dubbing isn't too great either especially with Giovanni Lombardo Radice who's dull voice doesn't go at all with his over-the-top sleazy performance as the head mutineer. There's a wealth of impressive sets and some escapist fun (like the climactic battle in Dinosaur Valley), but too many goofy effects and weak action scenes to make it any better than so-so. I couldn't help but enjoy spending a good half a day sitting through this though. Margheriti injects a lot of the fun into this film in terms of strange camera angles, like shots from behind small objects or up at the actors from floor level. This was his second to last science fiction film, as his last would be the unfairly critically snuffed ALIEN FROM THE DEEP which he shot in the Phillipines for Franco Gaudenzi.

TREMORS

Perfection Valley, Nevada is a quaint little town. The inhabitants live peaceful, tranquil lives. Most of the time. Perfection is home to the Graboid, El Blanco. El Blanco is a 30-foot worm creature who hunts prey by sound. It is an endangered species, so as long as El Blanco is around, Perfection can't be bulldozed by any greedy developers. To protect their home, the people of Perfection must co-exist with El Blanco, dealing with him when necessary as well as other strange situations that come their way.

"Tremors: The Series" is campy fun, 50's B-Movie silly, and I don't expect great effects quality from it. I watch it because the ensemble seems to be gelling (No Gelling' Commercial jokes, please. :p). The characters are growing on me, and it beats the hell out of the abomination called "Scare Tactics." Of course, that probably means that "Scare Tactics" will be renewed for umpteen seasons and "Tremors: The Series" will be cancelled

Though I like a good cheesy giant tunneling worm movie as much as the next guy, I've gotta admit I've only watched the first of the movie series that's the basis for Sci-Fi's Tremors: The Series. I enjoyed that initial outing for its tongue-in-cheek tone and canny use of low-budget conventions, but I couldn't really see the need for a return to it. Sure, Michael Gross' right-wing wacko Burt Gummer was amusing the first time (particularly since we all knew the actor as soft-speakin' liberal dad on Family Ties), but too much exposure to the guy could be deadening - like remaking First Blood with Dale Gribble in the lead.

So if any of the honchos at Sci-Fi had asked me about the wisdom of buying a new series based on the S.S. Wilson & Brent Maddock creations, I'd have said (after first chastising 'em for not holding onto Mystery Science Theatre), "Why bother? The setting is restrictive; the monsters may look cool but have minimal personality; and there's only a limited number of times you can make the word 'Assblaster' sound funny (I don't know what that exact number is, but I'm sure it exists)." But that's why I'm not living in Hollywood, pulling down the big bucks, because they went and shot the show, anyway.

Like the first flick, Tremors: The Series is set in Perfection, Nevada (the name's ironic, kids!), a desert hellhole plagued by all manner of tunneling monsters - Graboids, Shriekers and Assblasters, for starts - with a minimal human population of rugged individualist types, all eager to somehow profit from the creatures' presence. Gross' Gummer has made a small living starring in survivalist videos, while onetime hippie Nancy Sterngood (Welcome Back Kotter's Marcia Strassman, returning to the persona that once led to her recording the Summer of Love single, "The Flower Children") crafts and sells sculptures of the area beasts. Town newcomer Tyler Reed (Victor Browne) has shown up after purchasing Desert Jack's Graboid Adventures from one of the earlier movie characters - and has dreams of pulling in big bucks with this tourist attraction. (Yeah, the guy's a sucker, but he's a former race car driver, so he's good for a fast-pace getaway.) The entire area ringing Perfection has been placed under government supervision by the Department of the Interior, since its biggest baddest giant worm, El Blanco, is an endangered species. As a result, we get the inevitable Big Gummint bureaucrat, W.D. Twitchell (Dean Norris), skulking around the desolate town.

That last bit of plotwork seems a bit - oh, I dunno, dated (Can you see the Bush Administration giving a rat's ass about an ugly monster that's an endangered species? Particularly when there are developers around, eager to turn the area into New Reno?) But, clearly, scripters Wilson & Maddock mean us to see the denizens of Perfection as pioneer entrepreneurs, striving to both live alongside and exploit the area's larger-than-life inhabitants. Also part of Perfection's population: a canny shopkeep (Lela Lee) and a former chorus girl/present rancher (Gladise Jiminez). Thirty years ago, you probably would've seen Barbara Stanwyck in the cast, but today the best we can do is stars from old sitcoms.

The show's debut, first broadcast last Friday, pretty much established the rules of the game: lots of bits with folks standing around talking about dangerous the area monsters are, interspersed with scenes of the ground trembling or moving towards our characters like something out of a Bugs Bunny cartoon, plus the sporadic puppetry monster attack. Half of the jokes are at the expense of "anti-social paramilitary paranoid" Gummer, but none of 'em are as bright or surreal as the ones offered weekly on King of the Hill.

TRIBE, THE

Billed as "Lord of the Flies for the millennium", this teen drama series is more Swallows and Amazons meets Mad Max, as gangs of resourceful, war-painted children and teenagers try to cope after a mystery virus wipes out the world's supply of adults. With no parents, teachers or fixed mealtimes, anarchy rules. The children survive by forming tribes, of which the warring Locusts (led by Ebony and Zoot) is the most unpleasant. There is also the Demon Dogs, who are a rival cyber gang. A more uplifting example is set by young Bray and Amber, whose tribe has an idealistic view of how future society should look.

CLOE is found wandering the streets of the burnt-out city by AMBER and DAL. LEX, RYAN and ZANDRA meet with ZOOT, leader of the notorious LOCUSTS - but their negotiations to join the gang turn sour. They make a narrow escape: their companion GLEN is taken prisoner, and not seen again. CLOE leads AMBER and DAL to her companions SALENE, PATSY, PAUL and their dog BOB. LEX, RYAN and ZANDRA approach the newly-formed group, aiming to steal their food - but are set upon once more by the LOCUSTS.

AMBER's group hide in a nearby shopping mall. The LOCUSTS are distracted by the appearance of a rival gang, the DEMON DOGS - and LEX, ZANDRA and RYAN escape once again, this time to pursue Amber's group into the Mall. As they advance threateningly, they are caged between the security grille doors by JACK, who claims to own the Mall. JACK invites the others to sleep in the furniture shop. As captors and captives settle down for the night, we see BRAY moving silently through the dead city.

A mysterious figure is watching the group as they wake for the first time in the Mall. AMBER tells DAL they cannot abandon the others - the children would never survive alone. They decide to form a new Tribe of their own, make a home in the Mall, and in sharing supplies and resources, forge a safer future. They must first face a dilemma: what to do with the prisoners? If they are forced out into the city, they might lead the LOCUSTS to the Mall in revenge; but if they can be trusted, could they join the newly-formed Tribe?

AMBER offers LEX a choice - to join the Tribe on their terms or take his chances on the streets - but he is unrepentant. The confrontation between them is interrupted by PAUL - he can "feel" an intruder in the Mall. AMBER and DAL go to investigate. They return without having found anything, but decide they must allow the others to join them for sheer strength of numbers. LEX reluctantly agrees, and he and RYAN go looking for the intruder; the mysterious figure of BRAY leads them out onto the city streets, and then gives them the slip. By the time LEX and RYAN return, BRAY, who has doubled back, has made friends with the rest of the Tribe. LEX does not believe he should be allowed to stay, but is overruled. However, LEX seems to be proven right when they wake the next morning to find BRAY gone - along with precious food and water. As LEX and AMBER argue, BRAY returns to the Mall - bringing with him the very pregnant TRUDY.

With much action and gritty angst centred on peer pressure, young viewers will be gripped (while their parents run screaming from the room). The series was first shown in the UK on Channel Five, showing two episodes on a Saturday and Sunday, in April 1999. Executive producer as Raymond Thompson, Executive in charge of production was Geoff Husson, the producer was Declan Eames. Other executives include Aky Najeeb (for Cloud 9), Nick Wilson (for Channel 5 (UK)). The scientific advisor was THE PAWS DRAMA FUND.

This show was funded both by Cloud 9, and New Zealand production company, where this series was filmed and Channel 5, the UK broadcaster of the series. It appears the Cloud 9 were asked to produce the series on behalf of Channel 5, so it is feasible to suggest that this is in fact a British show, but since all of the cast and locations are Australian, the principle country remains Australia.

The initial impression when you watch this show is to suspect that its cheaply made, but this is not the case, the series is nearly trying to show more than their budget will allow. This is not necessary a fault, because the scripts are sound and the production values are high, the most important thing with such a production however, is to have a good cast, which many shows of this kind fail to have. The Tribe however has a good set of Actors and Actresses. But the cast is large for a show of this kind, many of the stories reflect the mental states of many of the characters which may demonstrate a longevity in the format.

An original idea, this is not, since many other SF shows have used this premise, such as THE SURVIVORS and THE LAST TRAIN, its also strangely reminiscent of Canada's THE ODYSSEY (aka THE SHY BOY), with a mix of Lord of the Files thrown in.

The cast and details of the actors follows:

Bray - Bray is the Eco-Warrior charming, sensitive and strong. His inner strength provides a reason and a solution for everything. Dwayne Cameron - Dwayne is 17 years old and has trained at O'Grady's Drama Academy. His experience in television drama includes roles in Amazon High and One of Them. He has also appeared in several television commercials. Dwayne played the part of Chris in Jessica's Diary , a screenplay in the Cloud 9 series William Shatner's A Twist in the Tail.

Ebony - Ebony is the beautiful leader of the evil Locusts. Ebony knows how to fight for what she wants. Meryl Cassie - Meryl is 14 years old. She has trained in drama at the Young People's Theatre and Nathan Homestead. Her experience in front of the camera includes numerous photographic shoots as well as extra work on Hercules and Shortland Street.

Lex - Lex is The Tribe's very own 'lion' - with strength, beauty and pride. He is battling with Bray to be leader of The Tribe. Caleb Ross - Caleb is 17 years old. As a member of the Whangeri Amateur Opera and Dramatics Society he has had a variety of stage experiences including roles in Evita, Godspell and Peter Pan. In 1994 Caleb played the part of Brett in the New Zealand feature film Avondale Dogs. His recent television work includes playing Temecula in XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS and Logan Patterson in Shortland Street. Caleb has also had roles in HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS and Plainclothes.

Amber - Amber is the one with the motherly instincts in The Tribe. Beth Allen - Beth is 14 years old and has been acting since 1993. She was a member of the PAS Children's Theatre and appeared in Pinnocchio and Hairy Maclary at Auckland's Aotea Centre. She has been in several television commercials, had a guest role as Eva in the television drama Riding High and played Young Julie in the feature film The Ugly. Beth was a core cast member in Cloud 9's The Legend of William Tell, in which she played Princess Vara. This was followed by a lead role in William Shatner's A Twist in the Tail - The Green Dress.

Trudy - Trudy is a beautiful yet troubled soul. Antonia Prebble - Antonia is 14 years old. she last appeared for Cloud 9 as Jem in A Crack in Time in the series William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale. Prior to this Antonia played the lead role in the television drama series MIRROR, MIRROR. She has theatre experience having appeared in Starchild in 1994 and The Magical Kingdom of Thingymijig in 1993. Antonia studied ballet for 8 years and also plays the flute, the recorder and guitar.

Zandra - Zandra is straight out of Vogue Magazine - she's always wearing make up and looking trendy. Amy Morrison - Amy is 14 years old and has had a variety of experience in front of the camera. She has appeared in a number of television commercials and has had roles in Shortland Street and HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS. Her film work includes The Joker and Jack be Nimble. Amy played the part of Jessica in Jessica's Diary, a screenplay in the Cloud 9 series William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale.

Zoot - Zoot is the respected leader of the evil Locusts. Daniel James - Daniel is 17 years old. He has a range of experience in television including roles in XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS AND HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS. He was a member of the cast of Cloud 9's Enid Blyton Secret Series in 1996. Daniel has theatre experience including roles in Auckland Opera's productions of Carmen and The Magic Flute. He has recorded a variety of voiceovers and has appeared in several television commercials.

Jack - Jack is the little inventor, always trying to create new gadgets to improve the world the Tribe now live in. Michael Wesley-Smith - Michael is 15 years old. He has studied drama for four years at school and has taken several drama courses. Michael has had roles in a number of radio plays for Radio New Zealand such as Yellow Bride and The Baby Farmer. Michael was a member of the guest cast in the Cloud 9 production of The Legend of William Tell.

Ryan - Ryan is simple - and kind of clueless! Ryan Runciman - Ryan is sixteen years old and has acting experience in a variety of media. He has had roles in film, television commercials and television drama as well as being experienced in voice over work and stills photographic work. Ryan is also a trained singer and tap dancer. Ryan played the part of Darren Hunt in the Duellists, a screenplay in Cloud 9's previous production, William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale.

Ti-San - Ti-San is the mystical philosopher and attracts The Tribe with her aura! Michelle Ang - Michelle is 15 years old and is a trained ballet dancer. She has been a guest artist with the New Zealand Royal Ballet, having danced for the in Giselle, The Nutcracker Suite and Romeo and Juliet. She is a member of the McDonald's Young Entertainers Super Troupe. Michelle made her television drama debut in Cloud 9's previous production William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale - The Green Dress.

Salene - Salene is a goody two-shoes and always makes sure everyone is happy with her. Victoria Spence - Victoria is 14 years old. She has experience as a stills photographic model and has appeared in several television commercials. Her drama work includes a lead role in The Joker as well as parts in Memory and Desire, Shortland Street, Jack be Nimble and Mother Tongue. Victoria played the part of Zoe in William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale - The Duellists.

Cloe - Cloe is loveable and sensitive but she's easily frightened. Jaimee Kaire-Gataulu - Jaimee is 11 years old. She has a variety of experience in film, radio and television. She has had roles in the short films Clown Story (1996) and The Birthday (1994) and she played the lead in the short film The Kiwi and the Water Melon (1993). Her television work includes roles in The Visitation and XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS. Most recently, Jaimee has worked as a reporter on What Now for KVNZ. She has recorded several radio commercials and has a weekly radio spot with Wellington radio station, the Breeze.

Dal - Dal is a young boy full of hopes and dreams and always thinking of others. Ashwath Sundarassen - Ashwath is 12 years old. He has participated in drama at school, has learned Bharat Natyam (an Indian classical dance) for four years and has also learned Indian classical music. Ashwath has recently been a member of the children's chorus in a production of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolour Dream Coat that toured New Zealand.

Patsy - Patsy is like all little girls - she's cheeky but so cute it really doesn't matter. Sarah Major - Sarah is 10 years old. She has recorded radio commercials and provided voices for a cartoon series promo. Sarah has appeared in television commercials, the short film Flying and as Gaela's daughter in HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS. Sarah has appeared in William Shatner's A Twist in the Tale - The Magician in which she played the part of Emily Watson.

Some of the questions which are show poses are, Where did the virus come from? , no-one knew. Was it from deepest space or some nation's scientific experiments gone horribly wrong? Only an intensive enquiry could answer that. But there was no-one left to hold such an enquiry. The children left behind were too busy surviving too worry about what had thrown them from a cozy, hi-tech world into a primitive hell of anarchy, fear and danger. No adults to rule or protect them. The children of the world were on their own. Their task - to build a New World in their own image.

In a world without adults there are some ups and some downs. The good points would appear to be no school, no rules, no set bedtime and no dress code! The bad points include no doctors, no electricity, no telephones, no industry... in fact, the list goes on. Much of today's technology like television, telephones, computers and transport systems depend heavily on two really important things - power and people. It needs power to run: without electricity your TV and computer won't work. It needs people: without mechanics or operators things break and stay broken.

In a world without adults the power stations and oil rigs would stop supplying electricity, petrol and gas. In a world without adults, there would be nobody to keep the phones working, drive the cars or develop new technologies. Giving the world a chance. With no power stations, petrol for cars or heavy industry there would be a dramatic reduction in the amount of pollution. With much fewer people on the Earth there would be less need for intensive farming or fishing. And less people means less of everything, really. So over time the forests would grow back. Animals which are currently being hunted close to extinction may well get a break and repopulate the jungles. Mother Nature would take over again and fix the problems that we find so hard to fix right now.

The first series finished in the UK with a special 30 minute behind the scenes look at the series. The second series began on Sunday 14th November 1999, in the UK, the second series was made in 60 minute intervals as opposed to the first series' 30 minute intervals. So what happens next? What is the future? You've seen the end of Tribe Series 2 - and what a cliffhanger. But where do things go from here?

The Chosen and the city

Have they won? Surrounding the Mall Rats and other Tribe leaders, what will the Guardian do? Will he convert them to worship Zoot? Will he take over the city? Will the Tribe leaders and Mall Rats put up a fight to try to overthrow the Chosen? What will happen to the city - will a peaceful new world emerge as favoured by the Mall Rats - or are things about to take a turn for the worse with the Chosen in charge - and "power and chaos" to rule again?

EBONY

What about Ebony? Will she try to rescue Bray and the other Mall Rats or leave them to their fate at the hands of the Chosen? Doesn't she still love Bray though? What is her agenda - what is she after?

TRUDY AND BRADY

What is going on? Is Trudy really the Supreme Mother? Is she sincere when she talks about Zoot and power and chaos? Or is this just a ploy - perhaps she has to "play along" with the Guardian in order to ensure she has access to Brady, whom she loves more than anything else in the world. Will Trudy rejoin the Mall Rats - or is she lost forever to Zoot and "power and chaos"? What about Brady? Can Brady be saved from the Chosen or is Brady's destiny to follow in her father's footsteps?

BRAY

Will Bray survive the crash in the go-kart? If he survives that, can he survive the wrath of the crazy Guardian and Chosen Tribe? Does Bray still love Danni? Will he try to save her from the Chosen or does he have other challenges of greater urgency?

A mystery There has been talk that a former member of the Mall Rats is making a surprising comeback. Who is it? Where have they been? What do they want? What will be the effect of their return on the other Mall Rats - and the future of the city as a whole? Lex and Tai-San Poor Lex - can he also survive the crash of the go-kart at the end of Series 2? What about him and Tai-San? They may be married but do they really share the deep bonds of love? Will their love last or turn out to be nothing more than a temporary thing?

The Mall Rats

They've been through so much together - survival, creating a New World, loves, jealousies, friendships, betrayals. What will the future hold for them? Can Dal, Ellie, Jack, Alice, Patsy, Chloe, KC, Ryan, Cloudy and the others survive the threat of the Chosen? Can they stay together as a group and try to change the future again for the better by creating a New World? We'll be able to look into the future when Tribe 3 hits television screens from the autumn of this year.

Until then, keep the dream alive.

Jack is asked to organise a surveillance operation at Ebony's party.

2 - 22

Bray's rejection of Salene down prompts her to leave the Mall. Trudy and the Chosen few plan to ostracise Ebony.

2 - 23

A guilty Tai-San breaks up with Lex. Salene is pregnant and Danni and Bray wrongly suspect Ebony of treachery.

2 - 24

Lex blurts out a proposal of marriage to Tai-San. Ebony is expelled from the Mall Rats, but this proves to be the least of her worries.

2 - 25

EBONY's out of her depth. PATSY dives for cover. Praise Zoot - the evil GUARDIAN commands his CHOSEN followers to find their little 'friend' before she blabs. The Mall Rats toast the happy couples. But ALICE, feeling glum, leaves the party and the Mall. JACK gets uppity. SALENE acts like an abandoned wife and hits on ????. DANNI gets a grip while SALENE loses hers - temporarily. Surprise!! RYAN's the happiest man in Venice. SALENE's not. She just needs a bit more time. RYAN understands - he doesn't suspect a thing! PATSY returns to the Mall, shocked by the murder of EBONY. CLOE ignores her, but TRUDY's been very worried. Traumatized PATSY breaks down in sobs. TRUDY slips up ... and PATSY is confused. ALICE returns to the Hotel. Unaware of EBONY's fate, she walks straight into the clutches of the GUARDIAN and his evil CHOSEN, who hold the MILITIA captive. Either they all join up for the Great Crusade, or they get huffed off the roof. ALICE is defiant, but the GUARDIAN is adamant. She will kneel down and serve the Mighty ZOOT! TRUDY finally calms PATSY. They don't have to worry about right or wrong any more: ZOOT decides for them. LEX's got a hearty appetite but RYAN's not himself. JACK's not being kind to DAL. MAY gives SALENE relationship advice. You either have to tell your man the truth or sleep with him. SALENE feels caught between a rock and a hard place. ALICE demands to know where EBONY is. But the GUARDIAN is determined to break her - if she worshipped ZOOT she'd never have to be "Sad Alice", not ever again. Not-so-sad ALICE remains defiant. The GUARDIAN casually reveals that EBONY is dead. PATSY has nightmares about her role in the murder. SALENE takes the plunge and beds RYAN. PATSY gets a very large surprise from a very unghostly presence. EBONY haunts PATSY - and she's real mad, too. SALENE retches. Is that old bull-mania back? RYAN's new wife explains: she just had one bevy too many on her bridal night! PATSY blubbers. EBONY demands answers. TAI-SAN and LEX are blissfully happy in their newly-weddedness and mutually-beddedness. But what's wrong chez RYAN and SALENE? Scary TRUDY asks her little helper to look after baby BRADY while she goes visiting. PATSY's scared. EBONY sneaks into the Hotel in search of ALICE. BRADY's crying, but her babysitter's in another world. CLOE changes some soaking nappies - and discovers the baby is not at all what she seems! CLOE tears off to tell mega-responsible BRAY and DANNI about the little BRADY who isn't - but the MALL RAT leaders, like Elvis, have already left the building to head to the Gathering. It never rains but it pours. Everything's clear as mud to CLOE now! EBONY frees ALICE - with the unconscious assistance of AXL - but she's not going back to help any of those ungrateful loser-RATS, thank you very much! ALICE makes her way back to the Mall alone, as Huckleberry EBONY lights out for the territory. PATSY confides in CLOE. The ORPHANS, DEMON DOGS, ROOSTERS and other Tribal Leaders are nothing but sitting ducks, now they've been Gathered together in one place ... Evilily smiling TRUDY returns - and the girls run for it. It's time. DANNI goes into the meeting place alone - BRAY's got a reluctant security person to rark up before he follows. Back at the Mall, TRUDY advances her plan. CLOE and PATSY arrive outside the meeting place, out of breath and in with a chance. BRAY is horrified - DANNI's in there! But it's too late. The GUARDIAN and his CHOSEN appear from nowhere and surround the building.

Let us prey The Tribal Leaders are held - a captive audience. Praise be to Zoot! Security expert LEX advises BRAY to sit tight and wait. It's the only way to save his girl. CLOE and PATSY need to warn the others back at the Mall. But evil Trudy's everywhere. Be afraid; be very afraid - for the future is upon us, and ZOOT wishes to free the world from tomorrow. Back at the Mall, peace and tranquility reign - sort of. "BRADY"'s not eating - and neither's SALENE. United the Tribal Leaders stand, but divided they fall. Will all DANNI's principles go up in smoke? - This is getting to be far from a gas. ALICE arrives at the Mall on a search and rescue - for the CHOSEN are back. Surely ALICE must be mistaken, says poisonous TRUDY sweetly. While the kids are left in a quandary, ALICE stomps off to locate her little sister. But the sinister hooded ZOOT worshippers have already infiltrated their home. ELLIE and ALICE are captured whilst JACK, hiding, can - or is it will? - do nothing to save them. Supreme Traitor TRUDY tries to convince the remainder of the Tribe that ALICE is working for EBONY. But PATSY enters and reveals all - a beat too late. See ya, and thanks for everything. DANNI's defiant. She's counting on BRAY coming to rescue her, but unfortunately so is the GUARDIAN. LEX, RYAN, and BRAY return to the Mall to find JACK paralysed by self-hatred. He's a yeller belly! The battered and bruised WOLF is dumped on the MALL RATS' doorstep with a message from the CHOSEN. They have until noon tomorrow to give themselves up. Captive at the Hotel, the MALL RATS rally together – they mustn't give up hope. Prisoner PATSY is summoned by the Supreme Mother – pity about that test of faith you failed, PATSY dear. WOLF blows his cover: it was all made up. Hero JACK to the rescue! Praise be to Zoot: DANNI gives in. JACK's cooked up a plan to save the world – and DANNI and ELLIE, of course. Smokin'! Are the GUARDIAN's intentions toward BRAY honourable? Once BRAY gives himself up to save DANNI, he'll be reunited with his glorious brother – in Heaven. But has the Supreme Mother got a different kind of eternity in mind for her first true love? LEX tries to mobilise the people. But they're not moved. BRAY stomps off to do a better job. Baddy-two-shoes TRUDY has all the power. If BRAY doesn't show, then DANNI's history. And time's running out. DANNI is escorted to the poolside, to the beat of a ceremonial drum. JACK's a very bright spark, but will his plan backfire? BRAY finally moves the people with a moving speech. Is everyone about to give up without a fight!?! DANNI's pretty head on a spear may give everyone pause for thought. BRAY displays once more his flair for the dramatic - but does he give himself up at the last moment? Surely it must be obvious to the honest ECOWARRIOR that the GUARDIAN will not honour his side of the bargain? Suddenly the smoke hits the clan as the MALL RATS' army attacks. Brave JACK rescues those MALL RATS held captive. Yayee for the people who were prepared to be moved! The GUARDIAN, TRUDY and their elite guards withdraw. But BRAY is hot on their heels, whilst commander LEX commandeers a dune buggy and scouts on ahead. SALENE finds RYAN badly injured. You can't die on me now, RYAN – I'm going to have a baby!!! – Say that again, sweet SAL? Down by the sea, the MALL RATS' army advances. The CHOSEN are trapped. That psycho GUARDIAN is prepared not only to kill but to die for what he believes ... but is he prepared to be made a fool of? PATSY sand-pies him. Hey, what's that strange ominous rumble ominously rumbling over the horizon? To hang with this! TRUDY does a Lady Godiva. All Hail the Supreme Mother! LEX and BRAY go for a little ride. BRAY's always been one for a headtrip and LEX has always been the bomb. Above the beach, a troubled EBONY watches as events unfold below. VIA CON BABY!

TRIPLE FIGHTER

The alien Devila and his gang from the evil planet Devil attempt to conquer the earth; fighting against them is three Hayase brothers, each of whom transforms into Red Fighter, Orange Fighter, and Green Fighter. And when they find their attacks are not so effective on their enemy (as always), the three Fighters morph into one hero, Triple Fighter."

Alternative Description.

Desiring to rule the empire universe, invaders from Planet Devil use an army of "Demon Monsters" to carry out their bidding. Down on Earth, The Space Attack Team (SAT) is formed to protect the world from the Demons - the Japan bureau of the SAT comprises the three siblings Tetsuo (Takizawa), Yuji (Onokawa), and Yuri (Fue), who are actually alien agents from the friendly Planet M. Transforming into the Green, Red and Orange Fighters, the three agents save the planet from regular monsters-of-the-week, in the style of the same studio's ULTRAMAN.

Triple Fighter

The Hayase Trio can use "M" Star Technology to become the Triple Fighter. Tetsuo becomes Green Fighter, Yuuji becomes Red Fighter, and Yuri becomes Orange Fighter. Each of the Fighters has their own unique abilities:

Green Fighter who represents Wisdom, has incredible strength centered around his "Green Arms". He can deliver powerful punches.

Red Fighter who represents Courage, has great kicking abilities. His kick attacks include his "Hurricane Kick" and "Red Fire".

Orange Fighter who represents Heart (Love) is a skilled marksman. She has great acrobatic capabilities "Orange Jump" and can deliver devastating punches called her "Orange Punch".

When the need arises (as it usually does) they can also combine themselves to form the even more powerful, single entity know as Triple Fighter. With a command of "Triple Fighter", the trio jump and join into the air, forming a circle whereby they can "henshin" and merge into a single entity, the powerful Triple Fighter, who has the combined abilities of all three. In this form, they are practically invincible. Their main attack is the "Triple Kick".

SAT

SAT (Space Attack Team) was formed by the Hayase Trio to combat the forces of the Demon Star Empire. Based in Paris, France SAT is the first line of defense against all Intergalactic Invasion. Using vehicles and weaponry created by Tetsuro using "M" Star Technology, they battle the various agents sent by the "Devils".

Among the vehicles they use are the SAT Car, the SAT Buggy, the SAT Cycles No. 1 and No. 2.

They are also aided by the sentient computer Bulcomm who seems to have taken a liking to Yuri.

DEVILS of the Demon Star Empire

The Demon Star Empire is a vast army of conquerors who have plundered many planets in the galaxy. They are a sadistic and evil race of monsters who utilize "cyborgs" as their main agents of destruction. Having discovered Earth, they send a conquering party deep beneath the Earth's surface, where they build a vast underground base within the Earth's core. From this subterranean headquarters they launch their devilish attacks.

Japanese Plastic Doll & Toy Manufacturer "Bull Mark" sponsored the show and may have also influenced the designs of the characters. The way the series ended was somewhat unique in that it left the story with an open-ended finale. Having been defeated the "Devils" flee Earth and set their sites on another planet called "Aura". The Hayase Trio bid Earth farewell and head out into space to chase after the "Devils". The base car that was used for the "Devils" transport vehicles was the Subaru 360.

The series was produced by Akira Tsuburaya and Takeshi Shimizu. 26 episodes were made, (130 Chapters Each Episode would be split into five 10 minute chapters and shown 5 times a week to complete one Episode somewhat similar to a Serial).

TRIPODS, THE

The Tripods was a British series which set out to adapt the popular children's trilogy of books written by John Christopher. The programme however was cancelled after its second series and the story remains to this day unresolved on TV. Set in the late 21st century, the series is a coming of age story centring around Will Parker, a 15-year-old British youth and his friends.

As The Tripods opens we learn that society in the 21st century is much different than it is today. Mankind in the 21st century lives a much simpler lifestyle with a technological level somewhere around that of the 19th century. This change however was not one of choice. The Earth was invaded and conquered by alien beings who keep mankind under control by using the 'cap'. The 'cap' is an electronic device that gets implanted on everyone's head when they turn 16. It allows the aliens to track people's movements and more importantly prevents them from putting up any further resistance to the conquering aliens. The aliens themselves are non-humanoid and not seen, their presence is made known by the Tripods - huge three-legged walking tanks, much like the ones described in H.G. Wells' War of the Worlds.

The first series of The Tripods adapts the first book in the trilogy where Will Parker is approached by an old vagrant named Ozymandias.

He is told that there are uncapped people living in a place called the White Mountains and that these people are attempting to free mankind from the Tripod's reign. Will is told that he is welcome to join them if he can make it to the White Mountains, which are in continental Europe. Will decides to accept the invitation, and along with his cousin Henry, they embark on their journey. On the way the pair befriend Jean Paul, an inquisitive French youth who decides to join them on their trek. They also face assorted dangers from both the Tripods and the Black Guards, a Gestapo-like organisation of humans who enforce the Tripods' laws. Will also manages to fall in love and become engaged to a French girl, who gets carried off to live with the Tripods in their city. The first series is rather slow moving and drawn out with the alien invaders rarely seen.

What the first series lacked in showing us the alien, the second series more than made up for. Adapting the second of the three books, the second series details the boys' acceptance into the society of free men and their plans to infiltrate the Tripods' city to learn more about their enemy. Will and Fritz, a German youth with a bad attitude, win at the games. The games are an athletic event sponsored by the Tripods in which the winners get to serve the Tripods in their city. Once inside the boys discover that the aliens are from a dying world and are hoping to colonise the Earth. However since they are unable to breathe our air, they are constructing machinery which will change the atmosphere into one they can breathe. In the process wiping out all indigenous life. The series ends on a cliff-hanger, with Will who has gotten out of the city and reunited with Jean Paul, who had waited for him outside, making it back to the White Mountains to discover the free men's city destroyed.

It was supposed to be the adventure story to cap all adventure stories - a £1 million BBC family science fiction serial spread over three seasons, a saga to woo the Saturday teatime audience for years to come. In the end, BBC1 controller Michael Grade pulled the plug two-thirds of the way through, as poor reviews and lousy ratings persuaded the corporation to cut and run. And unlike the 1985 axe Grade dangled over Doctor Who, there was no reprieve. The TV story of The Tripods remains unfinished. Adapted by Alick Rowe and Christopher Penfold from John Christopher's trilogy of the same name.

The series was generally well acted and its special effects scenes with the Tripods well-realised. Extensive location filming made appealing use of the settings (including Portmerion, where THE PRISONER was filmed). Its downfall lay in the relative brevity of the original work and an overall lack of incident, especially in the crucial first season, when the metal monsters themselves were seen all too infrequently, their presence felt more off stage than on.

This cliff-hanger however was to remain unresolved as far as TV audiences were concerned. Episodes based on the third book chronicling the free men's fight and eventual victory over the alien invaders were never produced. In 1989, several years after the series was cancelled a fourth book in The Tripods saga was published. The latest volume is a prequel to the trilogy and tells of the Tripods' initial invasion of the Earth and how mankind was defeated.

The broadcast dates are for BBC1, the series has also enjoyed a repeat screening on U.K. Gold in 1994-95. The producer for the series was Richard Bates, the music was created by Ken Freeman, the video effects designer was Robin Lobb and Jon Mitchell. The visual effects designers were Steven Drewett, Kevin Molloy (Season One), Steve Bowman, Simon Taylor and Michael Kelt (Season Two). Designers for the show were Victor Meredith (Season One Eps. 1-8), Martin Collins (Season One Eps. 9-13 - Season Two Eps. 1-4, 11-12) and Philip Lindley (Season Two - Eps. 5-10).

1. Fifteen years in options

Like most of the best in British television, The Tripods was a labour of love by many hands, but it was also the long-cherished ambition of one man: Richard Bates, the eventual producer, who bought up the rights to the trilogy as early as 1969. In British television, producers are responsible for casting, budgets, artistic style, commissioning directors and writers and even final video editing. The partnership of producer with script editor, a sort of managing screen-writer, is the nearest thing a programme has to an "author".

Richard Bates is now most famous in the television world for having produced The Darling Buds of May (1991-3), a hit adaptation of his father H. E. Bates's 1958 novel, a gentle comedy of country living. But he landed his first major job in television as the story editor of The Avengers (1961-1969), midway through its second season in 1962. He took over from John Bryce, who stepped up to become its producer, and they effectively created what we now think of as the show, bringing in writers like Brian Clemens, Roger Marshall, Terrance Dicks and Malcolm Hulke. (Only one episode of the first season now survives in the archives and it tends to be forgotten that the original, far less quirky concept ever existed.) Bates remained associated with the show throughout the establishing partnership of Patrick Macnee and Honor Blackman: the Cold War as performance art, The Avengers is a suave mixture of spy thriller, 60s glamour-parade, surreal romp and quirky science fiction. Like The Tripods, it's hard to file under any one category.

In 1965, Bates launched Public Eye (ABC and Thames). Written by Roger Marshall and Anthony Marriott, this grim private-detective saga featured a private eye on the margins of crime and anarchy, himself at one point convicted and jailed: it was a hit, and ran for seven seasons until 1975. In 1968, Bates was also responsible for A Man of Our Times, a vehicle for George Cole by the distinguished playwright Julian Bond.

When the Tripods books were published, at the end of the 60s, Bates immediately fell in love with them:

I think what appealed to me about them out of all the science fiction that was being written... was the intriguing notion of a futuristic world, devoid of the technological sophistication of our twentieth-century Westernised society, against which background [John] Christopher relates a gripping adventure story with a very necessary, but quite small science fiction element being provided by the dominant Tripods. He was to remain clear throughout the production that he wanted to make a science-fiction story that wasn't really science fiction at all. This was exactly John Christopher's own view:

It's an adventure story. For me, it goes right back to my mother reading me to sleep at night with Swiss Family Robinson, and things like Coral Island which I read later.

And Christopher was to approve of the TV production, asking for minor changes to be made in a few places (which he recalls as being politely ignored) but broadly happy with the treatment of The White Mountains, at least.

It was fifteen years before the Tripods project was finally sold, after tortuous renegotiations of the screen rights, during which time two other groups also tried their luck. Bates secured the books' fourth option while working at the BBC. At the time he was working on the creation of Tenko (1981-85), a drama about women imprisoned by the Japanese during World War Two, memorable as having featured one of the strongest casts of British women character-actors ever assembled; and One By One (1984-87), the wry adventures of a zoo vet, which never quite supplanted the enduringly popular All Creatures Great And Small (1978-80 and then revived 1988-90).

Bates had consolidated his credentials as a producer of serious, straight drama at the ITV companies in the 70s with the acclaimed The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (1978), adapted by Alick Rowe from Muriel Spark's classic novel (1961) of the life of an Edinburgh schoolmistress in the 1930s. Bates and Rowe had already worked together as producer and screen-writer on Intimate Strangers (1974), and their partnership was to continue with The Tripods, too, with Bates initially commissioning a (much shorter) script of the first book, The White Mountains, initially for the Southern region of ITV. Southern lost its license and the project lapsed again.

Years before, Bates had interested a director, David Reid, in the books; and in 1982 Reid was Head of Series and Serials at the BBC. The producer had finally found a definite home for the production.

2. Pre-Production

Formal pre-production, and the spending of serious money, began in 1982. The project was now a series and the BBC stipulated that it had to be a long-running serial, with 13-part annual series, and that it had to be shot on videotape rather than film. This was a considerable challenge, pushing it to what Bates called "the frontiers of known video technology". The story has to convincingly show, among other things, hundred-foot-high machines which have to be agile enough to pluck human figures from the ground, and Paris as it might be if it were abandoned to ruin for a century. Without some kind of image manipulation, it would be absolutely impossible.

It was a very complicated production to do because although the techniques were tried and tested in the film industry, it was all new on video. In 1982 there were only three Paintboxes in the country.

Looking back from the 1990s, he commented that

At the time, someone even said to me that I should wait ten years for computer special effects technology to advance... The BBC even treated it as a sort of training exercise, getting their people valuable experience in using Paintbox and ASO.

The Quantel Paintbox allowed video images to be glued or merged together using a frame store: before this major advance, colour separation overlay or "Chromakey" would have been essential. (For some idea of how this might have wrecked a show like The Tripods, see the 1975 Doctor Who serial "The Invasion of the Dinosaurs".)

Difficult special effects were planned as much as two years ahead: it was to take eighteen months even to build the model of the City for series 2. A budget of roughly 1 million pounds per series was allocated, which made it one of the most expensive programmes ever mounted by the BBC. Christopher Barry, one of the directors:

...we were able to do things -- expensive home and Swiss locations, prolonged FX studio time, etc. -- that were not usual on Doctor Who, for instance. The freedom to let us schedule realistically in order to get it right was a joy that I, as a director, was extremely grateful for and which contributed greatly to the final look of the programmes.

Money was drawn in from international partners (the Seven Network Australia and Fremantle International, a New York distributor) but creative control retained by the BBC: Bates was determined not to be pressured into increasing the science-fiction element of the show. He assembled a team which quickly came to share his dedication to the project:

Indeed many people worked on each series for a whole year -- more than six months of planning followed by three months shooting and three months post-production. It was the most dedicated production team I have ever had the pleasure of working with and their enthusiasm without exception ensured that we completed the programmes on schedule. But not on budget.

Bates himself says that "It damn near killed me," and the other main players were as caught up as himself. Ken Freeman, for instance, recalls an obsessive period in which he "ate, slept and dreamt Tripods".

Episodes were to be 25 minutes long and to run on Saturday afternoons, a traditional format going back to the rise of adventure series on commercial TV, which Doctor Who had originally been commissioned in 1963 to fight off. The Tripods was to use these episodes rather unusually, typically with many short scenes and a clear division at the half-way mark (perhaps to facilitate commercial breaks when the show was sold abroad). But as with Doctor Who the episodes could be grouped in twos and threes for production purposes, each group with its own cast and locations.

The first series, of 13 episodes, was planned in two blocks: roughly speaking, Alick Rowe adapted the initial 8 episodes from the already-written script. These would follow the book of The White Mountains closely and were intended to grab an audience as a fast-moving action serial. (Viewers of the resulting episode 2 may be slightly surprised by this description.) The remaining 5 episodes, of new material not in the book, would make a gentler exploration of the characters. Since the length of the series, as compared with the books, is so often talked about, it's worth reiterating that it was the BBC serials department which insisted on a 13-episode run.

The two production blocks used two different crews, from the director and designer down; and with different suites of music, the division point (near the end of episode 8) is quite visible. Inevitably there was little direct contact between the two crews, but visual continuity is maintained, with post-production editing being especially careful. (For instance, careful glimpses in episodes 4 to 13 establish for the record that the hand grenades are still being carried, despite a history including confiscation, exhibition in court as evidence, being used in a game of throw-and-catch by madmen and even being washed clean of mud by unsuspecting farmers' daughters.)

The scope of the original Southern Television script survives, in a sense, in the US laser-disc release of series 1, which compiles down the first production block but edits out almost all of the second.

3. Casting

As with most series featuring young actors, the lead roles were cast by a marathon trawl through hopeful 17 and 18-year olds. (The novels call for younger children, but anyone under 16 would have been unable to work through the filming schedule for legal reasons.) About 400 candidate Wills, and 300 candidate Henries, were considered throughout three eliminating rounds of auditions. It was a difficult process and the production team were nervous about the outcome. They were in the tricky position of making a drama not entirely for children in which the hardest of the acting would fall on the least experienced actors. The character of Will, for instance, appears in almost every scene. There were bound to be gauche moments and awkward deliveries here and there. Whoever they did choose would become a lot more experienced in a hurry, but how natural would they become? Richard Bates was never quite sure that the ideal casting had been reached, but like the rest of the crew, he felt that it worked out well in the end.

The Tripods was careful to cast nobody without solid television experience. The survivors were John Shackley (of Liverpool), who had previously appeared in the five-part Channel 4/Yorkshire drama One Summer (1983), who was to play Will; and Jim Baker (a Londoner), with several television credits in children's programmes and a small part in The Barchester Chronicles (1982; an acclaimed adaptation of Trollope). Both actors had a drama-school background, though John Shackley had made his himself, by forming a young actor's co-operative at the Liverpool Youth Theatre. Shackley saw a notice in The Stage that juvenile leads were being sought, and sent photographs of the co-operative members to Richard Bates, who was interested in one of the members, Vic McGuire (who later starred in Carla Lane's sitcom Bread). Bates, together with the directors Graham Theakston and Christopher Barry, then auditioned Shackley himself, twice, finally awarding him the part in spite of his lack of an Equity card [i.e., membership of the professional actor's union].

I was given a great thick pile of scripts to read, which was a bit daunting as I was used to getting the text of a play in a little Penguin book.

His reading of the part (interviewed 1984):

someone who doesn't look before he leaps. He is also very phlegmatic, very cynical and he lets his heart rule his head. Most heroes are perfect... if anything he is a failure, but he is doing right.

Ceri Seel (from the Welsh border country) was invited to audition for the part of Beanpole on the strength of his role as William in The Bagthorpe Saga, a production for BBC Children's TV. Though he had always enjoyed school drama, he hadn't intended to be an actor, and would have preferred music as a career.

Christopher Barry recalls "thinking at once that he was a brilliant find, absolutely filling my impression of what Beanpole should be like". Seel's views on the main characters:

I really like the character [of Beanpole] -- though I think in the book he's more sensible than he's written in the series. Henry is a bit selfish. Will is a bit throw-away, a bit brash. Beanpole is like a father-figure; he stops them getting at each other; he keeps cool and detached, has all the ideas, gets them out of scrapes. And he's an inventor -- he prefers machines to people. The only problem with Beanpole is that because he's French they wanted me to do it with a slight accent. I didn't like it and some of the things I had to say and do I didn't think fitted Beanpole. But I got used to it: that's the thing about acting, you have to do what they want.

(Seel's French accent is a sort of compromise: not too annoyingly French, not too English, but whatever it is, it's quite endearing and doesn't grate.) John Christopher several times visited the set and approved of the casting:

Richard [Bates] has been quite brilliant in choosing these boys. I don't mean that they look exactly as I imagined them. Indeed, I originally visualised Will as slight, wiry and excitable, whereas the actor is bigger and more phlegmatic. (These differences reflect differences in the script from the book's treatment of the same characters.)

Other castings included Pamela Salem, an experienced genre-TV actress who had appeared in, for instance, The Onedin Line (1971), Blake's Seven (1978), Dr Who (several times) and All Creatures Great and Small (1978), and a few films (she was Miss Money Penny in Sean Connery's reprise of James Bond, Never Say Never Again). She was to play the Countess, alongside Jeremy Young as the Count: Young has a similar television background. Both had widely travelled through European stage productions.

Their screen daughter, Eloise, was to be played by Charlotte Long, an actress who should have had a promising career ahead of her: she had already played the lead role in two BBC Children's TV productions (adaptations of Enid Blyton schoolgirl books: Schoolgirl Chums and St Ursula's in Danger) and had appeared in three films. She was a keen horse-rider, to Gold Cup standard, a talent made use of in the programme, and was in real life the younger daughter of a Viscount.

Only weeks after her filming for The Tripods was completed, Charlotte Long was killed in a road accident, when a lorry crashed into her car on the M4. The tragic irony was lost on nobody involved with the production. The politician Alan Clark, whose home (Saltwood Castle) was presented as the Chateau, puts it rather movingly in his Diaries (Friday 12 October 1984), written after watching the broadcast of her final scene, a year later:

But that evening an unsettling experience. The last episode of Tripods. Little Charlotte wandered around Saltwood, everything so beautiful and timeless. Then she was "claimed" by the Tripods -- remote, sinister, not of this world. She ascended, higher and higher (on that great lamp-engineers' lift, which made such a mess of the moat when they were shooting). Sadly she waved, and called her farewells. On its own the scene was curiously, unexpectedly moving. Now, with the knowledge that she had, at that time, been less than three weeks away from death... it was unbearable.

She had also just played the lead role in Ted Willis's radio play Death May Surprise Us. It remains only to note that the silent cameo appearance of Eloise in series 2 is made by another actress (Cindy Shelley).

TROLLENBERG TERROR, THE

Much of the drama centred on a small Alpine hotel, nestling in the ominous shadow of the peak, where a mind-reading act, the Pilgrim Sisters, found themselves drawn in to help Prof. Crevet ward off the advance of the Ixodes - tentacled, brain-like creatures from another world.

Quentin Lawrence, who directed the series, repeated the trick for a 1958 film version, also called The Trollenberg Terror, which included rather more graphic horror sequences such as gruesome close-ups of severed heads and melting flesh. Laurence Payne starred in both versions - though in the movie Forrest Tucker played the hero, a UN scientific investigator called Alan Brooks - while Stuart Saunders reprised his role of Dr Dewhurst, an early victim of climber George Brett who is taken over by the alien powers.

Suspense and horror combined in a 1956 six-part tale of malevolent alien influences at work around the Trollenberg mountain in the Swiss Alps. Rosemary Miller, who played Ann Pilgrim in the series, found stardom just a few weeks later as Nurse Roberts in ATV's pioneering medical soap Emergency Ward 10. The producer for the series was Quentin Lawrence, the designer for the series was Tom Lingwood. The series was shown on ITV.

Quentin Lawrence would later work on the 1958 film version (which was scripted by Jimmy Sangster) of this forgotten ATV serial. In the Swiss mountain village of Trollenberg climbers are mysteriously disappearing on the mountainside. Meanwhile an observatory detects a cloud on the mountainside which gives off radioactive readings and never moves.

One of two English sisters who form a psychic stage act receives a premonition of great danger associated with the mountain. As the cloud starts to move down the mountain, killing people along the way, the astronomers realise they are dealing with an invasion of aliens who have come from a dying world and have selected the mountainside's cold as the environment which most resembles their home planet.

The film version made in 1958 by Eros Productions increased the gore quota considerably and is also known as The Crawling Eye in America.

Action TV(website) received an email from Ric Cooper in January 2006 which shed some interesting details on the writing of the series: "Peter Key, credited as the writer, was in fact a team of three: George Kerr, Jack Cross, and my father Giles Cooper. They set up Peter Key as a limited company, a daring thing to do in the '50s, but it ended up as our family company when my father started achieving serious success on TV under his own name, with Maigret, and then various classic series and adaptations such as Sword of Honour and Madame Bovary, as well as his own original plays including Unman Wittering & Zigo"

Peter Key had also written for the 1956 adventure series The Adventures of Sir Lancelot. Glynn Owen was also seen in Out of This World (The Imposter), R3 (The Critical Moment), Doomwatch (The Web of Fear), Blake's Seven (Spacefall and Cygnus Alpha) and Dr Who (The Power of the Kroll).

Quentin Lawrence would later produce The Ghosts of Motley Hall and direct episodes of The Invisible Man (1958), Redcap, Danger Man, Catweazle, Doomwatch and Strangers. Micheal Anthony was born in 1911. Apart from being the father of actress Lysette Anthony his other notable cult TV appearances include The Persuaders! (The Old, the New, and the Deadly), Jason King (A Deadly Line of Digits) and The Saint (The Death Game). He passed away in 1998.

Sarah Lawson, who played Sarah Pilgrim also appeared in the 50's version of The Invisible Man, Danger Man (Time To Kill), The Avengers (How to Succeed at Murder), The Persuaders! (Nuisance Value), Callan and The Professionals. Raf de la Torre was born in France in 1909 and died in 1975.

Rosemary Miller, who portrayed Ann Pilgrim, found fame directly after this production in the soap Emergency Ward Ten as Nurse Pat Roberts. Frederick Schrecker was born in Austria in 1893 and died in 1976. Ronan O'Casey would later turn up in an episode of The A Team (The Spy Who Mugged Me). The alien menace is finally revealed in this episode.

Laurence Payne would also star in the film adaptation of The Trollenberg Terror. He would later star in Dr Who (The Gunfighters and The Two Doctors) and as Sexton Blake in the 1968 ITV production of the same name.

Stuart Saunders would also later reprise his small screen role in the film version of The Trollenberg Terror. One of his last roles before his death in 1988 was as the Governor of Santa Maya in Whoops Apocalypse.

15,000 years ago the Nomes crashed to Earth in a scoutship from the Starship Swan. Generations of them have come and gone with the passing years and the changing countryside. Suddenly faced with extinction, the ten surviving Nomes, guided by their reluctant leader Masklin, must face many exciting adventures during their search for a new home and hiding place in the big, bad world of the humans.

This 13 part fantasy series based on Terry Pratchett's best-selling book of the same name, was shown on ITV in the 4.25pm slot. It was a peculiar mix of live action and puppetry animation, which never quite caught on.

TURNABOUT

Turnabout was a one joke show about a husband and wife who exchanged personas. Sam Alston was a macho sportswriter and his wife Penny was an executive at cosmetics firm. One day Penny bought a Buddha statue from a gypsy who claimed that it had magic powers. The statue in fact did have magic powers which it proved by granting the couples' wish that they could change places with each other by placing Sam's spirit into Penny's body and vice versa. The statue however didn't grant their wish of returning to normal.

Sam and Penny thus had to try and behave as normally as they can in their attempts to live each others lives. They also try to keep the big switch a secret which was not all that easy especially from their nose neighbours the Overmeyers.

Based on the Thorne Smith novel of the same name, which was also made into a movie in 1940.

TWICE IN A LIFETIME

The series centered around an individual who had reached the end of their life in one timeline, and due to circumstances seen by their advocate or the judge, been given 3 days to travel into their past and convince their younger self to make a different choice at a pivotal point to affect a different outcome.

Twice in a Lifetime is a television series from 1999 to 2001.

The series was created by Steve Sohmer. A unique concept to the series was that each episode featured a different guest star in the leading role, while series regulars played a supporting role.

Season One featured Gordie Brown as Mr. Jones, and Paul Popowich played the role of Mr Smith in Season Two. Al Waxman, who played Judge Othniel, died shortly before the end of the series.

Andrew Airlie, Daniel Baldwin, Corbin Bernsen, Yannick Bisson, Richard Burgi, Gordon Currie, Patrick Duffy, Ron Glass, Kate Jackson, Steve Landesberg, Cloris Leachman, Dale Midkiff, Donna Mills, Martin Mull, Michelle Phillips, Kim Poirier, Markie Post, John Schneider, Janaya Stephens, and Reginald VelJohnson, were among the guest stars on Twice In a Lifetime.

The Canadian-produced series aired on CTV in Canada and Pax in the United States.

Ten episodes were directed by scifi veteran David Winning; including The Trouble with Harry, Moonshine Over Harlem and It's a Hard Knock Life.

Veteran television producer Barney Rosenzweig (Charlie's Angels, Cagney and Lacey) oversaw the first season of Twice.

Video Service Corp released A 2 Volume collections of Twice in a Lifetime, with each volume featuring 2 episodes.

TWILIGHT ZONE, THE (2002)

Tagline: Check Your Reality at the Door.

This is the third series to have THE TWILIGHT ZONE title, I guess it's a case of try and try again. This version has better production values than its 1985 brother, and more interesting storylines, but never attains the originality of the first TWILIGHT ZONE series, and hence was cancelled after only one series.

A second revival was attempted by UPN in 2002, with narration provided by Forest Whitaker and theme music by Jonathan Davis (of the rock group КoЯн). Broadcast in an hour format with two half-hour stories, it was cancelled after one season. The critical and audience reaction to this revival was generally not very good, although reruns continue to air in syndication.

Noteworthy episodes featured Jason Alexander as "Death" wanting to retire from harvesting souls, Lou Diamond Phillips as a swimming pool cleaner being shot repeatedly in his dreams, Susanna Thompson as a woman whose stated wish results in an "upgrading" of her family, Usher as a policeman being bothered by telephone calls from beyond the grave, Katherine Heigl playing a nanny to an infant "Adolf Hitler", she drowns with the baby to change history, but a maid from her employers buys a beggar's baby as a replacement who grows up to be Hitler.

The series also includes remakes and updates of stories presented in the original Twilight Zone television series, including the famous "Eye of the Beholder". One of the updates, "The Monsters Are On Maple Street", is a modernized version of the classic episode similarly called "The Monsters Are Due on Maple Street". The original show was about the paranoia surrounding a neighbourhood-wide blackout. In the course of the episode, somebody suggests an alien invasion being the cause of the blackouts, and that one of the neighbours may be an alien. The anti-alien hysteria is an allegory for the anti-communist paranoia of the time, and the 2003 remake, starring Andrew McCarthy, replaces aliens with terrorists. The show also contains a follow-up episode to the events of the original episode "It's a Good Life". Bill Mummy returned to play the adult version of Anthony, the demonic child he had played in the original story, with Mummy's daughter, Liliana, appearing as Anthony's daughter, a more benevolent but even more powerful child. Cloris Leachman also returned as Anthony's mother. Mummy went on to serve as screenwriter for other episodes in the revival.

The Twilight Zone revival series tended to address contemporary issues head-on; i.e. Terrorism, racism, gender roles and sexuality.

Other guest stars include, but not limited to: Jessica Simpson, Eriq La Salle, Jason Bateman, Method Man, Linda Cardellini, Jaime Pressly, Jeremy Sisto, Molly Sims, Portia de Rossi, Jeremy Piven, Ethan Embry, Shannon Elizabeth, Jonathan Jackson, Amber Tamblyn, Usher Raymond and Elizabeth Berkley.

The complete series was released on DVD by New Line in a 6-Disc boxset on September 7, 2004.

TWILIGHT ZONE, THE (1958)

Anthology Series - The Twilight Zone is a place where strange things happen to people.

What is the Twilight Zone?

The Twilight Zone was a science-fiction/fantasy anthology show with a different theme each week. It was a show where good guys were cosmically granted a second chance and bad guys often received their comeuppance. The characters were normal, much like you or me. To quote Buck Houghton, "Rod always wrote about people and circumstances that you knew. Then he twisted it." The show was not a monster rally or a spook show, but one of ordinary life gone a little ca-ca.

What times did it air originally?

For the first three years (1959-62) it aired on Friday nights at 10:00pm EST. Some of the shows that it was up against over those three years include The Detectives, Gillette Cavalcade of Sports, Michael Shayne, and Target: The Corruptors. During the fourth year, it aired on Thursday nights at 9:00pm EST. It faced some tough competition from My Three Sons, McHale's Navy, and the second half of Dr. Kildare. For its final year, it was moved back to Friday nights at 9:30pm EST. It went up against The Farmer's Daughter and Harry's Girls.

Who were the three core writers on the show?

They are Rod Serling, Richard Matheson, and Charles Beaumont. Together they wrote (or were credited with, in Beaumont's case) 127 of the 156 episodes that aired. After the Twilight Zone, Serling would go on to create another anthology show called Night Gallery. Matheson would continue to write science-fiction stories, including a script for The A-Team. Beaumont tragically died at the age of 38 on February 22, 1967, due to a degenerative brain condition.

Is it true that Beaumont didn't write all the stories that he is credited with?

Sadly, yes. OCee Ritch ghostwrote Dead Man's Shoes because Beaumont had too many assignments going on at one time. Later the reasons would become more dire. Jerry Sohl ghostwrote The New Exhibit, Living Doll, and Queen of the Nile and John Tomerlin ghostwrote Number Twelve Looks Just Like You in their entirety, although all these shows were credited to Beaumont. By this point, the disease that would later claim Beaumont's life was already starting to affect his life to the point where writing clearly and competently was becoming impossible to do.

What kind of ratings did The Twilight Zone pull?

Although it attracted a loyal cult following, the Twilight Zone was never a mainstream ratings winner like Gunsmoke or The Beverly Hillbillies. It never finished in the top 35 shows for any of the five seasons it was on, but it never was near the cellar either. It always rested near the middle of the pack. In general, a large portion of the audience of the day were professional people such as doctors, lawyers, and such. Another large segment of the audience was teenagers, which totally surprised Serling.

Who were the main sponsors of the show?

The first year the show was sponsored by General Foods (the primary sponsor) and Kimberly-Clark (the secondary sponsor). For the second season, Kimberly-Clark dropped out and was replaced by Colgate-Palmolive. General Foods dropped out for the third year, and they were replaced by the American Tobacco Company. Naturally, Serling did the plugs for the tobacco ads, one of which is presented on the home page.

Because they were late in finding a sponsor for the fourth season, the show was pulled from the lineup and did not return until January. There is no information on who sponsored the fourth and fifth years.

What is The Time Element? Is it a long-lost pilot?

Serling had written a time-travel story for The Storm back in 1951, which he then expanded to a full hour and submitted it to CBS in 1957. CBS bought the script and then shelved it until Bert Granet, producer of the Westinghouse Desilu Playhouse, bought it for use on his show. Granet had to virtually beg the sponsor to be allowed to shoot it. It aired on November 24, 1958, and it was the most popular production they did that year. Thanks to that and the positive reviews, CBS realized that Serling may have been on to something.

Was Where is Everybody? the original pilot?

No, it was not. Originally, Serling wrote a full hour pilot called The Happy Place, a cheerless little piece about executing old people. Naturally, it was considered abnormally depressing and Serling was asked to try again. Serling agreed, and a couple of days later he returned with the half-hour Where is Everybody?

Who was Buck Houghton?

Buck Houghton was probably just as important in making the Twilight Zone a classic series as Rod Serling was. He had been a producer for MGM for six years before signing on to produce the Twilight Zone. He was the guy that performed many of the behind-the-scenes duties that are required for a show to gel. He was a perfect match for Serling, and for three years their partnership was incredible.

Why were there seven fewer shows the second season?

In between the Zone's first and second year, CBS was taken over by Jim Aubrey. He was more interested in the bottom line than quality, a sad characteristic of many of today's television executives. In addition to killing most of CBS's prestigious dramatic shows and replacing them with inane comedies, he continuously yanked around with the budget for the Zone. That year, they were close to $65,000 an episode. Without those extra seven shows Aubrey saved close to half a million dollars on production, a fact he must have just loved. Another one of his cost-cutting measures was the introduction of videotape.

What is the deal with the videotaped episodes?

Since videotape was cheaper than film, Aubrey convinced Serling to tape six shows rather than film them in another misguided effort to save money. However, the disadvantages of using videotape far outweighed the positives. The entire show had to be shot on a sound stage. Except for the use of stock footage, there were no exterior locations. Since the Zone thrived on finding alternative sites to film shows (such as Death Valley and Lone Pine), this was a major liability in storytelling. Another handicap was the limitation of camera setups and angles due to editing problems. Shows such as The Eye of the Beholder and The Howling Man could never have been pulled off on videotape. Thankfully they abandoned videotape after this six show experiment. Later, Serling would call the experience "disastrous."

Is it The Eye of the Beholder or A Private World of Darkness?

Technically, the official title is The Eye of the Beholder. It was changed at the last minute from A Private World of Darkness and both phrases appear in Serling's narrations. In the syndicated version of the show, the title appears as Darkness, but in the version on Treasures of the Twilight Zone, the title appears as Beholder. I assume that the syndicated version is simply a production mistake, mainly because all the evidence points to Beholder as being the right title.

Why did Houghton leave after the third season?

After the third year, The Twilight Zone was tardy in finding a sponsor for the next year. As a result, it was not on the CBS fall schedule. Houghton was then offered an excellent job with Four Star Productions that he could not possibly refuse. When CBS decided to bring back The Twilight Zone in January, Houghton was already hard at work at The Richard Boone Show and had no intention of leaving.

What happened to Serling after the third season?

Serling was offered a chance to teach at Antioch college in the fall of '62, an opportunity he seized after CBS put the Twilight Zone on hiatus. He continued to teach after CBS picked up the Zone as a mid-season replacement, meaning that his involvement for the fourth season would be greatly diminished. In the past, Serling was a key part of the development of the episodes, but not any more. He was clearly fatigued.

What Where did the Twilight Zone go from September to December of '62?

Straight to oblivion. Because the show could not find a sponsor for the fourth season, it was put in hiatus, a decision that drove away Buck Houghton and, to a lesser extent, Rod Serling. In its place, CBS programmed Fair Exchange, an unusual show in its own right (it was an hour-long situation comedy). It only lasted a half year, and in January 1963 the Twilight Zone was brought back as a mid-season replacement with new producer Herbert Hirschman.

Why are the fourth season shows rarely seen?

You can chalk that up to the hour length of the shows. Even markets that showed two shows back-to-back rarely played the hour shows. The Sci-Fi channel had been good in regards to exposing these episodes, but during the past few years they have been relegated to marathons and daytime block themes.

Why are Serling's narrations for season four shot with a gray background?

Instead of integrating himself into the proceedings like the previous two seasons, all of Serling's narrations for season four he performed against a gray background. His teaching at Antioch College prevented him from visiting the sets regularly. Instead, when he would fly in for other business, Hirschman would film several narrations at one time.

Why did the title switch from "The Twilight Zone" to just "Twilight Zone"?

Definitive articles are overrated. The same move later worked for (The) Pink Floyd.

Why did Hirschman leave during the taping of the fourth season?

His contract expired at the beginning of 1963. Instead of re-signing with CBS to continue producing the show, he accepted another offer that was too good to pass up. He was offered the chance to produce Espionage, a spy drama that was going to be made in London. The opportunity of going to live and work in Europe, which he had never done before, appealed to Hirschman. He was replaced for the rest of the year by Bert Granet. Ironically, he was also the producer of The Time Element.

Why did the Twilight Zone return to half-hour shows for the fifth season?

CBS expanded the Twilight Zone to a full hour in an attempt to increase the ratings and draw more attention to the show. That did not happen. In general, the quality of the writing suffered, there were fewer memorable episodes, and the ratings did not improve. CBS simply cut their losses and brought back the half-hour format.

Was the Twilight Zone pre-empted the night of November 22, 1963?

Yes. All programming that night was cancelled in the wake of the Kennedy Assassination. The episode scheduled to air that night was Night Call. It was postponed until February 7, 1964.

Why did Granet leave during the taping of the fifth season?

Granet was offered a quarter of a million dollars to take over The Great Adventure, another show for CBS that was wildly over budget. Since Serling could not offer a comparative amount of money, Granet took the offer and left. William Froug was brought in to replace him.

Why was a short French film made into a Twilight Zone episode?

Mainly because the Twilight Zone also happened to be wildly over budget with one episode to go. To compensate, Froug bought the rights for the short film An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge for $10,000. It was a shrewd move not only from the money angle. The film was a Cannes Film Festival winner and would also go on to win an Oscar. Not only that, but it fit perfectly into the Twilight Zone format.

Why are The Encounter and An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge not in the syndication package?

The reason for Occurrence not being included is fairly clear. While it is still a fine episode, and one of the best of the fifth season, it was mainly conceived as an answer to the budget problem and not technically a "Zone" show. Also, CBS does not have the rights for the original film, nor most likely will they ever. The reasons for The Encounter are far murkier. There was never any official stance given as to why it was never included, but many people believe it has something to do with the anti-Japanese sentiment that weighs the episode down.

There is also the implication of there being a Japanese-American traitor at Pearl Harbor who helped the Japanese destroy the base. Either of these situations probably resulted in several complaint letters that resulted in non-syndication. It could probably get cleared in today's climate, but then that would break CBS Video's monopoly on the episode.

Why was the show canceled after the fifth season?

CBS president Jim Aubrey claimed that he was sick of the show. He was sick of it by the end of the second season, since it was the antithesis of the crap that he was in favor of producing. However, cancellation at that point would have proved impossible. But by the end of the fifth season, most everyone involved with the show had fatigued and was losing their inspirations. The last season was clearly the show's worst, and in the end Serling decided to let the series die with dignity.

'There is a fifth dimension beyond those known to man. It is a dimension vast as space and timeless as infinity. It is the middle ground between light and shadow, between the pit of his fears and the summit of his knowledge. This is the dimension of imagination. It is an area we call . . . The Twilight Zone.' One of the most revered fantasy series ever made, The Twilight Zone received its first network run in Britain in 1983 - some 23 years after its American debut. Until that season of 39 episodes on BBC2, this country's exposure to The Twilight Zone had been confined to sporadic runs on a handful of ITV regions back in the 1960s.

Yet few series have bequeathed a more treasured legacy of ideas and style, and it still stands as the role model for the anthology genre. Its trenchant parables on humanity draw the viewer in by quietly tugging at the sleeve of his imagination and, through fantasy, explore human hopes and despairs, prides and prejudices, strengths and weaknesses, in ways conventional drama never can.

The Zone was created by Rod Serling, a butcher's son from Binghamton, New York, whose writing talent had flourished in the early days of TV drama, winning him three Emmy awards. A relentless, prolific writer, Serling himself wrote the majority of the show's 156 scripts. Said to have suffered from insomnia, he kept a tape recorder by his bed to dictate ideas that came to him as he tried to sleep.

The series' other major contributors were Richard Matheson and Charles Beaumont and each had his own distinctive style. Where Serling's tales tended to be more whimsical and sentimental, Beaumont's were darker and more disturbing, while Matheson wrung every nuance of suspense out of his carefully structured stories. But all the episodes were topped and tailed by Serling's memorable, measured narration.

On the acting side, The Twilight Zone featured many young, now established stars, from Star Trek's William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy and George Takei, to film giants such as Charles Bronson, Lee Marvin, James Coburn, Burt Reynolds, Telly Savalas, Roddy McDowell, Robert Redford, Burgess Meredith, Mickey Rooney and Dennis Hopper, plus Jack 'Quincy' Klugman and Peter 'Columbo' Falk.

The Twilight Zone premiered in America on 2 October 1959 and its original five-season run lasted until 1964. The UK debut was in the humble Border region, on 27 January 1963, but it was a year before episodes appeared in other regions. Seasons were scarce until BBC2 revived it in 1983. Since then it has played on Channel Four from 1986 and on the satellite channel Bravo and, most recently, the Sci-Fi Channel.

One of the greatest TV shows in history, due to the genius of Rod Serling and the superb writing of genuine science fiction authors, all backed by excellent casting of the varied teleplays. I've got plenty to say about this show, but will defer for now to the listed hotlinks and the excellent reference book "The Twilight Zone Companion" by Mark Scott Zichree.

The Twilight Zone is the most enduring science fiction anthology series. It premiered in the late 1950's. during an era when the anthology series was dying out as a viable TV genre and ran for five years The Twilight Zone was created by Rod Serling, who wrote more than half of the series' episodes and served as the host for the series.

Before The Twilight Zone, Serling was a distinguished television writer who had won six Emmy awards for his television dramas. The most famous of these being Requiem for a Heavyweight, which had appeared on Playhouse 90 in 1956. Serling was known for writing stories which took sides in issues, something that TV advertisers did not like. Hoping to find a way in which to tell the stories he wanted to with as little advertiser interference as possible. Serling decided to make a series of science fiction stories. Such a setting would allow him to tell stories with an impact that would not be allowed in a real world setting.

A pilot episode of The Twilight Zone appeared as part of Desilu Playhouse and received good enough ratings that Serling was able to sell The Twilight Zone concept to CBS. Serling served as host to the series and he would submit most episodes to the audience for approval. The stories varied widely in content. They ranged from pure science fiction to modern morality fables. One thing that was constant in all of the stories was that there would be a plot twist towards the end which would change the whole story's perspective. The Twilight Zone also featured performances by many actors whom would later become big name TV and movie stars.

The Twilight Zone, while moderately successful, never became a big hit for CBS. The series was constantly losing advertisers who did not understand the show they were sponsoring. (This was in a time when one advertiser would be the sole sponsor of a programme.) After three seasons. The Twilight Zone was cancelled. It returned the following TV season as a mid-season replacement series expanded from its original 30 minute length to an hour. The hour long episodes, which are infrequently rerun, were on a whole not as good as their half hour predecessors. They often seemed to be nothing more than half hour long stories padded to fill up the additional time. When The Twilight Zone returned in the fall of 1963, for its fifth and final season it also returned to the half hour format.

The Twilight Zone did however become a success in syndicated reruns. It is one of a handful of black and white series that is still regularly rerun today. The series also spawned a feature film in 1983. which featured remakes of three of the better episodes as well as one new story. An accident on the set of the film resulted in the death of actor Vic Morrow. It also was revived as a TV series in 1985, a series which is chronicled elsewhere in this volume. In 1994, a special The Twilight Zone Rod Serling's Lost Classics movie was run on TV. This special was comprised of contemporarily made stories which were produced from a pair of stories that Serling had written while The Twilight Zone was in production, yet never made it to the screen.

Five episodes were not included in syndicated reruns for a variety of reasons, some legal. Three of these episodes: Miniature. Sounds and Silences and A Short Drink from a Certain Fountain were shown in a special anniversary salute to the programme in 1984. An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge was a special independent production shown as a Twilight Zone only during its original network run.

The series did receive its first UK run in the Border region on the 27th January 1963. The series executive producer was Rod Serling, producers were Buck Houghton, Herbert Hirschman, Bert Granet and William Froug. The special effects were created by Virgil Beck and Bob Waugh. The theme was composed by Bernard Herrmann, Marius Constant and Jerry Goldsmith (STAR TREK). Most of the episodes were the standard 30 minute time slot show, but the fourth season of the show was one hour episodes totaling 18 episodes.

The various actors to have appeared in the Twilight Zone include Martin Landau (SPACE :1999), Burgess Meredith (BATMAN), Patrick Macnee (THE AVENGERS), Dick York, Lee Waggoner, Roddy McDowall (PLANET OF THE APES), John Carradine, William Shatner (STAR TREK), Agnes Moorehead, Jonathan Harris (LOST IN SPACE), Bill Mumy (LOST IN SPACE, BABYLON 5), Cliff Robertson (BATMAN), Simon Oakland (KOLCHAK : THE NIGHT STALKER), Charles Bronson, Jonathan Winters (MORK AND MINDY), Peter Falk, Lee Marvin, Dean Stockwell (QUANTUM LEAP), Donald Pleasence, Bill Bixby (THE INCREDIBLE HULK, MY FAVOURITE MARTIAN), James Doohan (STAR TREK), Robert Duvall, Julie Newmar (BATMAN), Tim O'Conner (BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY), Wilfred Hyde-White (BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY), Burt Reynolds, Mickey Rooney, Telly Savalas, Richard Basehart (VOYAGE TO THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA), Jackie Cooper, and George Takei (STAR TREK).

The gem in the crown of anthology television remains The Twilight Zone. All anthology shows produced since then have been measured against this series, and inevitably come up short.

' The Twilight Zone was, first and foremost, a writer's show. Three writers provided the bulk of the scripts for the series: Charles Beaumont, Richard Matheson, and Rod Serling. Rod Serling was not just a writer for The Twilight Zone-he was the show's creator, and the face and voice most associated with the series. Rod Serling was born on Christmas Day, 1924, in Syracuse, New York. He grew up in another New York town, Binghamton, with his parents and his younger brother Bob.

Rod Serling joined the army right out of high school in 1945. Despite his late entry into World War II, he saw action in the Philippines as a para-trooper and was wounded. He found himself drawn toward writing while attending college on the G.I. Bill. In 1948, he married his wife, Carol. After winning a radio script contest, Serling turned pro. He had a short on air career and started submitting script after script to radio dramas all over the country. Soon enough, he shifted his endeavours to a newer broadcast medium, television. One of his earliest sales, the 1953 drama "A Long Time Till Dawn," starred James Dean before Dean made it big in films.

By 1955, the freelancing Serling had sold seventy- one television scripts of varying quality; his seventy-second, "Patterns," was performed on January 12 of that year as part of the Kraft Television Theatre. This drama of a business power struggle, which starred Ed Begley, Everett Sloane, and Richard Kiley, catapulted Serling to critical and popular success, making his career overnight (after years of hard work on his part, as is usually the case). The show was even repeated a month later, which, in the television of those days, meant that it was performed live for a second time. Above all, it meant that Rod Serling would never be out of work again. In fact, he managed to sell many scripts that he had written years earlier in college.

Financially successful, Serling received another critical boost in October 1956 when the second episode of a CBS series called Playhouse 90 was aired. "Requiem for a Heavyweight," starring Jack Palance, stands to this day as one of the classics of early television, and swept the television awards for that year. Other Playhouse 90 successes followed: "The Comedian" and "The Dark Side of the Earth" in 1957 were followed by the next year's "The Rank and File" and "A Town Has Turned to Dust." In 1959, his auto-biographical drama, "The Velvet Alley," aired. That year also saw another landmark in Rod Serling's meteoric career: he began work on a half-hour science fiction series called The Twilight Zone.

Some people thought that this was a step down for such a highly regarded writer. Interviewer Mike Wallace went so far as to ask Serling if he'd given up writing anything "serious" for television. The first Twilight Zone story, "The Time Element" was an hour-long expansion of a half-hour script Serling had written in college. It involves a man who travels back in time to Pearl Harbor on December 6, 1941, but cannot convince anyone of the imminent Japanese attack.

It was a struggle to get the story on the air, as the time traveler (played by William Bendix) dies at Pearl Harbor and is erased from all the years that follow. Even once the show was aired, host Arnaz felt obliged to come out and explain the story rationally, opining that the man's psychiatrist dreamed the entire story! But reviews and public response were strong, and Serling had another winner on his hands.

Serling still had to sell The Twilight Zone with a pilot; "The Time Element" now belonged to the Desilu company. Bill Dozier, CBS's West Coast honcho (TV was still based in New York in those days), put Bill Self on the Zone scene. The first script, "The Happy Place," was too downbeat, so a second script, "Where Is Everybody?" was approved; this story of a man driven mad by an isolation experiment was filmed with Dan Duryea in the key role, and The Twilight Zone soon had a sponsor, General Foods. The pilot was aired and the series debuted on October 2, 1959. "Where Is Everybody" is actually a fairly weak story, but it was simple and easy for the network brass to understand. With the network complacent, Serling went on to write stories that were a bit more challenging than a man having a hallucination.

The series was a success. Week after week, viewers saw Jean Marsh as an android providing company for a lonely prisoner in space; David Wayne as a hypochondriac who makes a deal with the Devil; Gig Young as a man who returns to the scene-and time-of his childhood; and more. These and the rest of the first seven episodes were scripted by Serling; but the third, "The Last Flight," was written by another mainstay of The Twilight Zone, Richard Matheson. Richard B. Matheson (named after the nineteenth-century British explorer whose name had already been assumed as a stage name by the Welsh actor now famous as Kichard Burton) was born on February 20, 1926, in Allendale, New Jersey. After growing up in Brooklyn, Matheson, like Serling, served in the army during World War II. After majoring in journalism at the University of Missouri, Matheson embarked on a career in fiction, selling his first story, "Born of Man and Woman," to The Magazine of Fantasy & Science Fiction. A prolific career in the genre ensued, and Matheson was drawn to California when Universal made the classic film adaptation of his novel The Shrinking Man (with the adjective Incredible inserted; adjectives sold movies!) in 1956.

No less a writer than Stephen King cites Matheson as a major influence. Matheson's I Am Legend was made into a movie twice, cheaply but somewhat faithfully as The Last Man on Earth star-ring Vincent Price, and later as the Charlton Heston vehicle The Omega Man. Matheson's own scripts include Roger Corman's Poe "adaptations" such as The House of Usher, The Raven, and The Pit and the Pendulum. In fact, not only does Matheson continue to write to the present day, but his son is also a respected writer. Matheson's first Twilight Zone episode, "The Last Flight," involved a World War I pilot who abandons a companion to his fate at the hands of German pilots. The pilot winds up at a modern-day air force base, where he reassesses his actions and returns to his own time to sacrifice his life.

The next episode, "And When the Sky Was Opened," was scripted by Serling from a story by Matheson, and involved astronauts (including Jim Hutton) who return to Earth and vanish, even from the memories of others. "The Hitchhiker" was adapted by Serling from a radio play that was originally performed by Orson Welles in the 1930s. In fact, Serling was on an adaptation roll; however, in some cases he improved on the original, notably in the case of "Time Enough at Last," which marked the first of Burgess Meredith's appearances on The Twilight Zone; this was the episode where he plays the bookish clerk saved from his tedious life by a nuclear war, only to break his glasses, rendering him unable to read.

The thirteenth episode, "Perchance to Dream," was an original tale by the highly original Charles Beaumont, the third of the great triad of Twilight Zone writers. A good friend of Richard Matheson's, Beaumont had met Rod Serling a few years earlier, and had endeared himself to Serling by unabashedly saying that "The Velvet Alley" was the worst piece of writing he'd ever encountered.

On January 2, 1929, the man who would later adopt the pseudonym Charles Beaumont was born Charles LeRoy Nutt in Chicago. Stories of his strange family background are quite famous; among other things, his mother made him dress as a girl when he was a very young boy (later the source of his tale "Miss Gentillbelle"). Fortunately, the young Charles wound up being raised primarily by five aunts who, although themselves eccentric, did not suffer from his mother's problems in coping with reality.

A teenage science fiction fan, Charles Nutt dropped out of tenth grade to join the army-but was discharged after three months for back problems. After that it was one career after another: acting, science fiction illustration (as Charles McNutt), pianist, radio disc jockey, dishwasher, animator (at MGM) and comic book editor, all the while writing stories that his agent, Forrest J. Ackerman, was unable to sell until Amazing Stories bought his tale "The Devil, You Say?" in 1950.

In 1954 he broke a top short story market, Hugh Hefner's Playboy, and was soon a regular contributor to that top-paying magazine. Television script work also joined his repertoire and he wrote for such diverse programs as One Step Beyond, Suspense, Wanted, Dead or Alive, and Have Gun, Will Travel. (He also scripted the truly atrocious B-movie Queen of Outer Space, which he always maintained was a parody that no one, except himself, realized was a joke.)

Beaumont died in February 1967 at the tender age of thirty-eight. He had been acting strange for a couple of years, and drinking heavily, but it turned out that his real problem was a degenerative disease of the brain similar to Alzheimer's. In the short years between the onset of his disease and his death, he often could not write. Another writer, Jerry Sohl, helped Beaumont meet his Twilight Zone contractual obligations by ghosting scripts for him.

Beaumont's first Twilight Zone script was "Perchance to Dream," based on his own short story of the same name. Here, a man tells his psychiatrist of a recurring dream in which he is being lured to his death by a gorgeous woman in a carnival fun house; ultimately, he dies in the dream, leaving the shrink with a dead man on his office couch. Then Serling was back as scripter with a tale in which Ida Lupino played an aging movie actress, along the lines of Nora Desmond, who manages to somehow escape back into her old movies-literally.

The next episode, "The Four of Us Are Dying," was scripted by Rod Serling from a short story by another writer whose name would be linked with The Twilight Zone: George Clayton Johnson. Johnson was born on July 10, 1929, in Cheyenne, Wyoming. He grew up in a dysfunctional family-divorced parents, alcoholic mother, etc. . . . After years of slip-ping behind in school, the fourteen-year-old Johnson was placed in a state orphanage, only to be returned to his mother a year later.

At sixteen, Johnson was on his own and a year later he joined the army. He learned drafting, which enabled him to support his new family in California after his discharge. Writing soon became his calling. In the second season of The Twilight Zone, he wrote an original script for the series that launched his career in earnest.

Before that, his short story "All of Us Are Dying" was adapted by Serling as "The Four of Us Are Dying." In Johnson's story, a man is seen differently by everyone: each one sees him as the person they desire most strongly to see, which works to his advantage until he meets a man who has harbored murder in his heart for a decade or more. In Serling's adaptation, the man can change his face at will. Matters become complicated and he is killed by an old man who thinks that he is the son who betrayed his family's moral values. The catch was that the main character was portrayed by four main actors (including Ross Martin of future Wild, Wild West fame) as well as several more in a flawlessly executed, single take sequence of him shaving before a mirror.

Some shows belong to the stars. A few belong to the writers. Charles Beaumont, Richard Matheson, and Rod Serling owned The Twilight Zone. The next episode, a Serling original, was "The Purple Testament," in which an American officer in the Philippines during World War II can see a strange light on the faces of those men in his company who are about to die. Following this was "The Monsters Are Due on Maple Street;" Serling's tale of suburban paranoia. This tale was the author's statement on Red-baiting and other forms of prejudice common in the fifties and sixties. The fact that it does this through the metaphor of alien invaders makes it just as relevant thirty years later.

A fine Charles Beaumont script, "Long Live Walter Jameson," came next. Kevin McCarthy portrayed the title character, a historian who is about to marry the daughter of his older associate, Professor Kittridge. Kittridge spots Jameson's exact double in a book of Civil War photographs, and eventually learns that Jameson is two thousand years old, having achieved immortality through alchemy. Determined to go ahead with the marriage despite Kittridge's strong protests, Jameson gets ready to elope, but is killed by a very old ex-wife who also seeks to stop the wedding. Jameson ages rapidly and fades into dust under Serling's epilogue.

The first season continued with scripts by Serling, Matheson, and Beaumont, as well as adaptations, including another George Clayton Johnson story, "Execution." The next-to-last episode of the first season, "The Mighty Casey," involved a robot being tested as the new pitcher for a down-and-out base-ball team. The team's manager was originally played by actor Paul Douglas, a good actor with a reputation as an ex-drinker. Douglas didn't look too good during shooting, leading all involved to suspect that he had fallen off the wagon. Douglas had actually been undergoing a worsening heart condition, and died mere days after the episode was filmed.

On top of this tragedy, the footage of Douglas was unusable owing to his obvious physical problems appearing quite clearly on the footage. Eventually, most of the episode was reshot with Jack Warden as the manager, making as much use of existing footage as possible. The network wouldn't bail out the episode and the cost of the new footage came out of Serling's pocket. The Twilight Zone soon garnered considerable awards: Directors Guild and Producers Guild Awards, as well as a Hugo Award. Serling also won an Emmy Award for outstanding achievement in drama.

The second season kicked in with a string of Serling scripts, including another Burgess Meredith outing, "Mr. Dingle, the Strong." Meredith's neb-bishy character is granted superhuman strength as an experiment by a two-headed Martian. He uses his powers in such silly ways that the aliens take them away before Dingle can cash in-but then two Venusians decide to give him a leg up by multiplying his intellectual powers by three hundred. "The Eye of the Beholder" is one of the most famous Twilight Zone's. A disfigured woman is sent to a ghetto for being deemed unsightly by the state. The final twist is that by our standards, she is quite attractive, as is everyone else in the ghetto. The norm of this society is what we would consider hideous.

Matheson checked in with "Nick of Time," where William Shatner becomes obsessed with a fortune-telling machine in a roadside diner. This was followed by Beaumont's "The Howling Man," a great episode where an American traveler refuses to believe monk John Carradine's claim that the prisoner in the abbey is really the devil-until he lets him go and discovers the awful truth that he has let evil loose upon the world. Another episode, "The Prime Mover" brought George Clayton Johnson back to the Zone; he sold the idea for an unpublished story to scripter Charles Beaumont for six hundred dollars but received no screen credit because of an oversight by the show's producer. After a few more Serling-penned episodes, Johnson finally debuted with his first script, "A Penny for Your Thoughts." Here, Dick York played a man whose lucky toss of a coin lands on its side and stays there-endows him with the ability to read people's minds. He finds, however, that what someone may be thinking does not necessarily mean that they are liable to actually commit that act-a distinction that leads to some poignant humor.

A real highlight of the second season was Richard Matheson's "The Invaders," starring Agnes Moorehead in a silent struggle against small but deadly invaders from space. Performed largely without dialogue and just with sound effects, we don't discover until the climax that the invaders are actually astronauts from Earth who have landed on a world of giants. One of Serling's best of the season was the Art Carney vehicle "Night of the Meek." A drunken department store Santa gets a chance to be the real thing. (One viewer objected to having Santa portrayed as a drunkard, but this guy obviously missed the point.) Serling showed that he could indeed still write "serious" stories as the plot dwelt on how miserable Christmas is for the poor and the downtrodden. The third season had the usual plethora of Serling scripts, as well as George Clayton Johnson's "Nothing in the Dark" (in which Robert Redford plays Death), Charles Beaumont's "The Jungle" (a New Yorker is hunted down by denizens of the jungle he destroyed with an African hydroelectric project), and Johnson's "A Game of Pool" (where Jack Klugman must defeat ghostly pool shark Jonathan Winters in a game for his life.) This season also marked the debut of scripter Earl Hamner, Jr., who would later create The Waltons.

A pair of Serling adaptations are real standouts. The first, based on a Jerome Bixby story, was "It's a Good Life," starring Billy Mumy as Anthony, the child who maintains complete control over a small town and wreaks a horrible fate upon anyone who offends him. (This was later remade by Joe Dante in The Twilight Zone movie.) The second was based on Damon Knight's "To Serve Man." The title of the story is also the title of the book left by seemingly benevolent aliens-which turns out actually to be a cookbook. Future James Bond nemesis Richard "Jaws" Kiel portrayed one of the towering aliens in this outing. George Clayton Johnson scored again with another classic episode, "Kick the Can," where an old man portrayed by Ernest Truex learns how to become young again and leads off his retirement home companions to a literal second childhood. Sadly, his oldest friend is too bitter to accept the notion. Ray Bradbury's "I Sing the Body Electric" was also adapted, by Bradbury himself. This was Bradbury's sole contribution to The Twilight Zone, a series which clearly owed much of its inspiration to exactly the type of stories that had launched Bradbury to fame in the fifties.

There were some clunkers, of course; Serling really fell flat in "The Gift," which is marred by embarrassingly stereotyped portrayals of Mexicans. This was offset by the truly fine Serling episode "The Changing of the Guard," starring Donald Pleasence as an aging schoolteacher convinced that his life has been meaningless-until the ghosts of his students convince him otherwise. With the advent of the fourth season, The Twilight Zone lost both Serling as producer (he remained as writer and narrator) and the definite article, becoming merely known as Twilight Zone. It also became an hour-long show, a move CBS hoped would boost ratings and advertising revenue. What did happen was that the stories were too long and were generally padded out-the strength of the series had been the concise, compact short-story quality that packed a lot of punch in a relatively small package.

Still, there were good scripts; the series kicked off the season with Charles Beaumont's "In His Image", about a disturbed young man who discovers that he is a robot. Another Beaumont script, "Miniature," starred Robert Duvall as a shy man who ultimately finds happiness with the beautiful inhabitant of an antique dollhouse. Unfortunately, this fine realization of a superb Beaumont script was never syndicated because of a lawsuit claiming plagiarism by a writer who had submitted a story about store dummies who come to life. (Obviously the man had never heard of Pygmalion!) The suit was dropped, but "Miniature" was never shown after its initial air date except in recent years in special airings by stations who carry the syndication package of The Twilight Zone.

The rest of the season proceeded with scripts by Serling, Beaumont, Matheson, and other writers. The problem with the hour episodes was not (generally speaking) bad story ideas but the fact that the stories generally didn't fit the Procrustean time slot provided by CBS. For strictly commercial reasons, CBS cut Twilight Zone back to a half-hour show when they renewed it for its fifth and final season.

GROWING OLD In its last season, Twilight Zone began to show its age, prompting many to suggest that it was begin-rung to feed on itself. This was frequently true, but even so, the last season included one of the all-time classic episodes: Richard Matheson's "Nightmare at 20,000 Feet." Directed by future Superman director Richard Donner, it was a suspenseful drama star-ring William Shatner as the man who sees a gremlin on the wing of the plane he is riding through a fierce storm. Matheson was quite pleased with it, too, even though he didn't care for the monster makeup; he thought that the man who played the creature looked more like his original idea without any makeup on!

This also marked the point at which Jerry Sohl began ghosting scripts for the ailing Charles Beaumont; Beaumont received sole credit on screen, but all of his fifth-season episodes were either coplotted with Sohl or written completely by Sohl. The season ended with "An Occurrence at Owl Creek Bridge," a wordless French adaptation of the Ambrose Bierce story. By buying the rights and incorporating this short film as a Twilight Zone, the show went from being over budget to coming in actually under budget. The film also won the Academy Award. ,

With the fifth season drawing to a close, CBS did not renew Twilight Zone. The show's ratings had not really been bad, but Serling himself wasn't terribly interested, and passed on an offer from ABC to do a similar series with a different title. What he had in mind was a proposal for a series he wanted to call Rod Serling's Wax Museum, but the executive at ABC trying to win Serling over was too keen on having a monster-a-week show like The Outer Limits, and this notion came to naught. In a bad business move, Serling sold the rights to the entire Twilight Zone series to CBS in the sixties, unwittingly handing over vast future syndication profits which he himself should have retained. But work was still available for a writer of Serling's caliber; he won an Emmy in 1964 for a drama he penned for Chrysler Theatre, "It's Mental Work."

Close on the heels of this came another short-lived CBS series, the thoughtful Western series The Loner, which starred Lloyd Bridges. Serling also worked extensively as a host for television shows, an advertising spokesman, and as a narrator (such as his work for French oceanographer Jacques Cousteau's television documentaries). Various critically acclaimed television scripts followed, as did 1967's Planet of the Apes; Serling did three drafts based on Pierre (Bridge on the River Kwai) Boulle's novel before a final draft, by Michael Wilson, reduced the civilization of Boulle's ape-populated world to a more budgetary feasible primitive level. A Twilight Zone situation also befell Serling when his 1966 TV movie The Doomsday Flight, about a mad bomber's attempt to destroy a commercial airliner, was aired. This program logged in second in that entire television season's ratings, but it also provoked a rash of copycat bomb threats against practically every major airline. Serling was overwhelmed by this horror, which, happily, consisted only of threats and no real bombs.

In November 1969, the pilot for Night Gallery was a ratings success for NBC. It featured the directorial outing by a young director named Steven Spielberg. When the series was picked up, Serling declined a production role, and soon found the net-work boosting the horror on the show. Serling hadn't realized that by not producing the show he would lose creative control. By the time he did, he was contractually obligated to the series. Still, he stuck with it through its two seasons (the first as an hour show, the second season half that), hosting it like The Twilight Zone and winning Emmy nominations for "They're Tearing down Tim Riley's Bar" and "The Messiah of Mott Street." When Night Gallery was syndicated, it was cut into half-hour segments. On June 28, 1975, Rod Serling died after a ten-hour heart operation following a heart attack. He left behind a legacy of fantasy that would remain firmly etched on the psyche of generations of American television viewers. In 1983 Twilight Zone: The Movie appeared in movie theatres. Produced by Steven Spielberg, the movie presented new versions of "Kick the Can" , "It's a Good Life" and "Nightmare at 20,000 Feet," as well as one new story. Unfortunately, the movie did not do the original series much justice.

Treating the 1983 movie as something of a pilot, in 1985 CBS chose to revive The Twilight Zone as a color, prime-time series. What they failed to realize was that by using that title, the audience would be bringing certain expectations to the series, which the network should have at least attempted to live up to. Instead the producers decided that what Rod Serling had done was "old-fashioned" and that since twenty years had passed they should do something new and different. But audiences didn't want new and different and the ratings soon began to slide. Some excellent shows were done, though, including an adaptation of the Arthur C. Clarke story "The Star," an adaptation of the Robert McCammon story "Nightcrawlers," Harlan Ellison's "Palladin of the Lost Hour" (which won an Emmy), an adaptation of the Stephen King story "Gramma" and the George R. R. Martin story "The Road Less Traveled," about a Vietnam draft dodger who meets his parallel-universe self who served in Vietnam and whose life was shattered as a result. In spite of wanting to be new and different, the new Twilight Zone succeeded best when it produced stories more in keeping with the kind of thing Rod Serling had done best in the sixties.

A third version of The Twilight Zone was all but sneaked into syndication as, with virtually no fan-fare, the color episodes were syndicated along with a couple of dozen new episodes. But with the almost sole exception of Harlan Ellison's "Crazy As a Soup Sandwich," the made-for-syndication episodes were pretty thin. The other problem with the syndicated version was that some of the 1985-86 prime-time Twilight Zone episodes were longer than a half hour, but every story was edited to fit the half-hour slot of the syndication form, including "Palladin of the Lost Hour," which may never again be seen in its original broadcast form. The new Twilight Zone of the eighties failed to capture the imagination or establish a reputation for continuous wonder the way the old Rod Serling series had. People will always remember the on-screen presence of Rod in those original episodes and will forever elevate them in the hearts and minds of Serling's legions of fans.

Hammering together a set for a crime show is simple: Go to the studio's storage lockers and pull out a used table, desk and chair. In The Twilight Zone, set "between the pit of man's fears and the summit of his knowledge," the crew had to make not only their own props, but often their own worlds. Producer Buck Houghton recalls when a Twilight Zone art director walked in with the script "Little Girl Lost." He showed Houghton a page where it said, "INTERIOR: LIMBO." "He asked, 'What's that supposed to be, Buck?' I said, 'It's up to you.'" The art director went off and created a fourth dimension for the episode (about a young girl who tumbles into a strange world). "He broke his neck to make a limbo set," says Houghton proudly. "That's challenge and response. That's what the scripts were full of."

When Rod Serling created The Twilight Zone, he was one of television's hottest writers. He had already won Emmy awards for his dramatic teleplays for Patterns (1955) and Requiem for a Heavyweight (1956). However, The Twilight Zone fulfilled a long-standing dream of Serling's. "I wanted to do a series of imaginative tales that weren't bound by time or space," he said at the time. Rather than relying on gadgets and gizmos, The Twilight Zone illuminated the strengths and weaknesses of humanity. Man was generally conceded as being worthy of respect and full of potential. However, when his uglier traits rose to the surface in the twilight zone (often manifested as prejudice and greed), he was subject to a well-deserved and often ironic drubbing in that boundless realm.

The Twilight Zone was the first adult, primetime fantasy series. In lieu of lavish special effects, the series told simple stories of ordinary people caught up in the bizarre. Concerned with the world around him, Serling made sure his stories had something to say about humanity and its environment. Serling's unofficial pilot for The Twilight Zone was a one-shot drama titled "The Time Element." Broadcast on Desilu Playhouse in 1958 the story starred William Bendix as a man who dreams himself back to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941. Mail response from viewers was overwhelming, and CBS commissioned Serling to develop a weekly Twilight Zone series. Serling wrote an official pilot, "Where Is Everybody?" with Earl Holliman as a man trapped in a deserted town. The network was impressed and immediately put The Twilight Zone on the 1959-60 schedule.

Buck Houghton, producer of the series' first three seasons, was confident the series would find an audience. "The scripts I was handed were thoroughly entertaining and thought-provoking," he says. "That was my standard of what was going to please the average TV viewer. After all, I was a perfectly average fellow, minding my own business, when I was asked to read the first scripts. Fantasy or not, they were damn good." One of the advantages The Twilight Zone offered to Serling was more freedom from censors. "It's true that Rod felt what could be said between two Martians couldn't be said between two senators," says Houghton. Using fantasy, Serling was able to slip in political and social themes without having them ravaged by nervous censors. However, it was the "what if" premise of the series that appealed to Houghton. "I wasn't a science fiction fan, although Twilight Zone wasn't science fiction. It was tales of imagination. There was no science hardware involved, no magic machines, no interstellar travel. It was about people with common problems who encountered fantasy. What would it be like if you could go back to the town where you were born and raised, and see that it's just the way it was at the time? That's something you can relate to very easily, and that was the key to the show's success."

During the first three seasons, Serling dedicated himself fiercely to the series. "The bulk of the episodes were written by Rod," notes Houghton, "and by the end of the third year, he was getting a bit pooped! We also had some fine scripts from people such as Richard Matheson and Jack Neuman. As a producer, I knew how lucky I was to be getting these kinds of scripts. You hardly ever ran into that calibre of writing."

The entire production crew of Twilight Zone also recognized that they were working on a quality show. "From the assistant propman to the cameraman, they worked their ass off," says Houghton. "They wanted to do the scripts justice, and that made a lot of difference in how the episodes looked. The crew was absolutely thrilled to see how the shows were going to come off."

Houghton recalls "Eye of the Beholder", with Maxine Stuart as a beautiful woman shunned in a world of pig-faced people. "Our director of photography, George Clemens, was delighted with the challenge of doing that show. You don't realize the faces of the doctors are hidden until you see their ugly mugs in front of you at the end. George and director Douglas Heyes worked that out together before filming." Twilight Zone also attracted a wide range of top stars, including Ida Lupino, Ed Wynn, Robert Cummings and Mickey Rooney. "On occasion an actor's agent would tell our casting director, 'Oh, he doesn't do TV' We'd give him a copy of the script anyway, and the agent would call back, 'He'll do this one!' We got a lot of positive effect out of the first-rate scripts by Rod Serling."

According to novelist Ray Bradbury, Serling was uneasy about doing Twilight Zone without input from science fiction writers. "Serling came over to the house one night and told me what he was doing," says Bradbury. "He said, 'Can you suggest some writers?' I said 'Sure!' I went down to my basement and came back with paperback copies by Richard Matheson, Charles Beaumont, George Clayton Johnson and John Collier. I said, 'These are good people. And you can use me, too.' The series went on shortly afterwards, and it's been running ever since."

Unfortunately, Bradbury's one script for the series, 'I Sing the Body Electric,' resulted in an episode that didn't meet his expectations. The story was about a robotic grandmother who raises a widower's three children. "Rod promised me that he would buy a couple of my scripts and that he would touch them. 'I Sing the Body Electric' turned out okay, but they took out the most important scene. In my script, the father asks the electric grandmother, 'Why are there electric grandmothers?' She gives him a moment of truth: She can do something no mother ever can. She can pay attention to all of the children equally. Only a machine could do that, and since the father may never find a new wife, somebody has to look after the children. The electric grandmother is the substitute for the mother that isn't there."

"When I saw that this scene was cut from the episode, I was furious! I called Rod the next day and said, 'For God's sake, why didn't you tell me?' He apologized and said that there hadn't been time to film it. I said, 'I had all of my friends come over to the house, and we sat down to watch the show, and the most important scene is gone! I don't want to work on the show anymore.' I told him that I couldn't trust him [as producer]." The experience didn't get in the way of Bradbury's high regard for the series in general. "That series is going to run on forever," he says. "Wherever I go, people tell me how much they like The Twilight Zone." The series became a critically acclaimed show early on, but it was never a mainstream hit. The sponsors were looking for weekly ratings in the 24.0 range. Twilight Zone managed a sturdy seasonal average of 19.0 in its first (and strongest) year. Its viewers included an enthusiastic audience in the 12-15 audience range. The late Twilight Zone writer Charles Beaumont said at the time, "Maybe that's because kids are hungry for the full play of their imagination while their elders are inclined to fear it."

"We were always on the edge of getting canceled," notes Houghton. The directors of Twilight Zone ranged from veterans who had worked in the silent film era (Mitchell Leisen, John Brahm) to young directors who cut their teeth in live television (Don Siegel, Richard Donner). Ralph Senensky was relatively new to directing when he helmed "Printer's Devil," one of the hour-long episodes produced during the fourth year. Burgess Meredith played a sinister newsman whose headlines predict the future. "I was very proud of the way it turned out," says Senensky. "Burgess Meredith told me that director John Huston called him the day after the episode aired, commending him on the show."

Even as a TV viewer, Senensky was impressed. "The series was a true television classic. They're timeless morality plays. Each show was like an, Henry short story. It'll continue to play on and on. I'm not sure that things that are being done today will be around in 30 years." Another young director, Robert Butler, recalls meeting Rod Serling during the days of Playhouse 90 in the mid-1950s. "Rod was a hardworking guy, willing to do anything to make his scripts better. However, he insisted on revising them himself. He was very paternal about his work. He was a fiercely principled, highly original guy. His sense of reality was a little quirky and ironic."

Butler directed one of the series' most controversial segments, "The Encounter" (written by Martin Goldsmith). The two-character story has an ex-Marine (Neville Brand) and a Japanese gardener (George Takei) dealing with their respective prejudices while cleaning out an attic. The episode wasn't included in The Twilight Zone syndication package, but was released on video in 1993. "Some people thought that it was racist," says Butler. "The American-vs.-the-Japanese theme could have been too volatile. It wasn't your typical TV "Neville Brand was this beer-drinking Marine, getting a little smashed as he goes over his old World War II mementos. Throw into this environment a Japanese gardener who wants to borrow a pair of clippers. These two characters are drawn into the attic by the fates and reLive World War II. It's dark, it's down, it's antagonistic and it's a very harsh show. Both of them die at the end. I'm sure it was considered too hot to handle."

Butler, however, doesn't feel the episode compromised itself. "It's raw conflict, and it gave both the actors and myself a terrific opportunity. We didn't have to spend time on any production linguistics. We spent time on developing the theme, the characters and the drama. For me, it conveyed a tragic circumstance. How unfortunate that these two people should meet in peacetime and rekindle that same volatility. Each of the individuals is a fine person, but the fates have thrown them together. Physically, it was a small show—two individuals in a small attic—but it was also huge because it dealt with the nature of fateful, inevitable conflict. These men had been stained by history, and they were unable to be harmonious with each other. That was the tragedy."

Butler recalls that a misunderstanding developed while shooting the show. "There was either something in the script or the character I don't recall which—that I felt needed some clarity. I talked to producer William Froug about it. He got very impatient with my position, and we argued about it. He was left feeling that I simply didn't like the show, period. I simply wanted to be clear on a story point, but I remember being misunderstood. In any case, the episode turned out to be a terrific little piece." Butler also directed "Caesar and Me," with Jackie Cooper as an unemployed ventriloquist browbeaten by his murderous dummy. "Jackie thought it would be interesting to play the character as a naive Irishman. He was very effective."

Butler's most challenging job was to bring the dummy to life. "We had him on a dolly so that when we filmed him from the hip up, we could make the dummy pace back and forth across the room, weaving his spell over Jackie. I was aware that the episode was quite derivative of earlier Twilight Zones. There had been one with Cliff Robertson ["The Dummy"], and there had been the classic British film Dead of Night that also used the talking dummy theme. But on its own terms, the script was well written."

Actors on Twilight Zone found themselves acting in scripts that were not only entertaining but had a point of view. In a TV era where the most popular shows were westerns, Twilight Zone offered a refreshing switch. In the episode "The Shelter," Larry Gates played a doctor who ushers his family into their homemade bomb shelter when atomic war appears imminent. He's the only person in the neighborhood with a bomb shelter, and his frightened friends turn into savages when try to force their way in.

"It was a first-rate script by Rod Serling," marvels Gates. "It dealt with the insanity of believing that one could escape from a nuclear holocaust. My character of Dr. Stockton believed he was doing the most reasonable thing with his shelter, but it turned out he had hopelessly misjudged the results of his actions. The story embraced the dilemma of trying to protect a few while others were going to be destroyed. It ended with the psychological destruction of all. A valid dramatic work must be formed around a dilemma from which there is no escape, and 'The Shelter' qualifies."

"We had a wonderful cast," Gates adds, "and an excellent director [Lamont Johnson], a happy company and crew and a fascinating script." Surprisingly, Gates, who effectively portrays a decent man forced into an uncompromising situation to ensure his family's self-preservation, is critical of his own acting. "When I saw the episode years later, I didn't like my performance. I thought I had overacted. But the script, direction and cast made it work. The Twilight Zone in general was remarkable because it didn't rely on gimmicks. It was motivated by ideas and actions that involved and stimulated the audience. Rod Serling was a marvelously creative writer."

Actor John Anderson made several trips into The Twilight Zone and considers them among his career's highlights. "The series was highly touted because Rod already had an incredible track record. Everyone wanted to be on the show. It was like a feather in your cap. I was fortunate to do four episodes." Anderson's first visit was as an airline pilot in "The Odyssey of Flight 33." A freak tailwind propels a commercial jet airliner back to the prehistoric era, and later to New York, 1939. The episode ends with the crew preparing for another time jump, hoping this time they'll return to their rightful era. "We looked damn serious doing that show," laughs Anderson, "but we had a blast filming that. The guys playing my co-pilots were great. The director [Justus Addiss] had trouble getting us settled because we were having so much fun. When you see me looking out at the dinosaur, I'm really looking at the poor director. As soon as he'd yell, 'Cut,' we were cracking jokes again."

The light-heartedness was one way for the actors to deal with their cramped environment. "We were confined to this little cockpit. Whenever the director said, 'There's a dinosaur,' we had to pretend that it was out there. I saw the episode recently, and I was amazed I was able to spew out that technical gobbledygook." Anderson followed this up with "A Passage for Trumpet," where he played the musically oriented archangel Gabe, who gives a sad trumpeter (Jack Klugman) a second chance. "That was my favorite episode," he says. "It was a great script. The relationship between Klugman's character and Gabe was touching. There's a wonderful ending. I'm walking off into the shadows, and Klugman says, 'Hey! I didn't get your name.' I turn and say, 'Call me Gabe.'"

The episode required that Anderson and Klugman learn how to fake playing a trumpet. They wrote a special music piece for the show. Neither Jack nor I played trumpet, so CBS went to the trouble of sending their musical director to my house with a cassette of the song and the sheet music. On the sheet, it told me what trumpet valves to press as the tape played. I worked my butt off, learning to play it by pantomime. Later, Jack and I, who are old friends, started rehearsing the scene, and I said, 'Jack, how did you do with the trumpet practice?' He said, 'What practice?' I said, 'Klugman! Are you telling me that you didn't even practice? You're gonna fake it?' He said, 'For Christ's sake, Anderson, who's gonna notice if we're hitting the right valves or not? If the audience is busy looking at our fingers, then we're really in trouble.' I said, 'Jack, you SOB! I worked my butt off to learn the finger ing!' and he laughed. But Jack was right. Fact was, you couldn't tell if I'm faking it or if he's faking it."

Anderson also did one of the hour-long segments, "Of Late I Think of Cliffordville." "All I remember was that Albert Salmi, who played this devilish character, had to laugh maniacally whenever he pulled a devious deed. However, Al couldn't laugh on cue. All David Rich, the director, could get out of him was a very heavy, totally unconvincing, 'HA! HA! HA!' "David, a wonderful man, came up to me and said, 'John, what am I going to do with Al? I can't use that laugh.' I said, 'Jesus, David, I don't know, but it sure ain't working, is it?' I suggested that they lay down a sound track of somebody else's laughter. That's what they must have done , because you sure as hell couldn't use what ol' Al was giving 'em!"

Anderson remains gratified by having been a part of The Twilight Zone. "We had no idea that it would become a way of life for two generations of people. It elevated for a brief time the quality of TV. It still does. A week doesn't go by that somebody doesn't say; 'Hey, I saw you on Twilight Zone.' Twilight Zone was a very rare experience." Actor Liam Sullivan starred in "The Silence," playing Jamie Tennyson, a compulsive talker. A fed-up tycoon (Franchot Tone) makes Jamie a wager: If Jamie can shut up for a whole year, the tycoon will pay him half a million dollars. Jamie accepts the offer. However, he wins the bet only because he has his vocal cords severed.

"Rod Serling was a short, tough ex-paratrooper with an extraordinary gift for offbeat plots that dealt with the human condition in a positive way," says Sullivan. "The long speech I had in the opening sequence was three pages. The day of shooting, Rod came up to me and asked if I could memorize an additional page of dialogue on the spot. It was going so well, he wanted to lengthen the scene. I said if he could write that fast, I could memorize it. He went off into a corner and started scribbling. He handed me the sheets off his notepad. I picked a corner and started memorizing. He was very pleased with the results. "Rod was a very quiet fellow on the set," Sullivan adds. "He let the director take over in most things. He was a terrific writer, and after that experience, I was a Twilight Zone fan."

By the end of the third season, the network wanted to spice up the series. Their suggestion was to increase the show to 60 minutes, and initially Serling was excited over the prospect of fleshing out the stories and characters in an hour format. The resulting ratings, however, were barely passable, and the reviews mixed. Serling himself was not enamored with the final result. The fifth and final season returned to the halfhour length.

Larry Stewart was casting director for the final year. "Twilight Zone was a brilliant series " , says Stewart, "and Rod was an incredible, prolific man. He'd come in at 9 a.m. and say, 'On my way over here, I was thinking, what would happen if everybody suddenly walked out of Boot Hill in an Old Western town?' He'd go in his office, close the door and by noon, he had completed a teleplay. We usually shot his first draft. I had never seen anybody write that fast." Stewart recalls that Serling's favorite actors included "Jack Klugman, and Royal Dano, who had a spooky persona. We generally had small casts on Twilight Zone, so actors knew they'd be getting a good part. It was the half-hour equivalent of Playhouse 90. It attracted what we'd call New York actors. Being a New York actor was a status symbol that didn't make a hell of a lot of sense. An actor is an actor, but at the time, Hollywood was impressed by actors who made the trek from New York."

Stewart was on hand when TwilightZone got the ax from CBS. The final season had averaged a solid 18.4 rating, a dramatic improvement over the previous season's average of 16.3. Nevertheless, the brass wanted a change. When ABC expressed an interest in picking up the series for a sixth year, Serling met with network president Thomas Moore. "Moore wanted the show, but he wanted Rod to change it significantly," recalls Stewart. "He wanted it to be all science fiction and horror, and to have the name changed to Witches, Warlocks and Werewolves. Rod said no, and that was the end of it. Rod was a man of incredible integrity. He wasn't about to screw around with Twilight Zone."

The series was canceled after 156 segments. CBS reran some of the episodes during the summer of 1965. The series then pole-vaulted into the lucrative world of syndication, where it has remained a fixture ever since.

Several episodes have also been released on videotape. The very words "Twilight Zone" have seeped into everyday language as a reference to anything weird or bizarre. Of the series' continued popularity, Buck Houghton says, "I'm delighted, for Rod's sake, that a good, quality show endures."

Serling remained interested in reviving The Twilight Zone long after its demise. Even after Serling's death in 1975, there was talk of updating the show. Without Serling, however, it would be in name only. The 1983 film The Twilight Zone: The Movie opened to mediocre box office returns. In 1985, CBS launched a new, short-lived version of The Twilight Zone (see pages 486-503).

"I saw damned few of the new Twilight Zones," admits Houghton of the 1985 series. "I didn't want to be in the position of being asked what I thought of it. I did have an earlier experience when CBS wanted to revive the series. I talked to various writers about a new Twilight Zone-like show, which would have been under another title but touched the same nerve. I was surprised by how few of them got the point. They came in with scripts about things that you couldn't possibly imagine happening to the average person."

That ill-fated revival didn't come to pass, but Houghton was invited to make an appearance in the Twilight Zone film. "I had a cameo in the remake of one of our original episodes, 'It's a Good Life' [a young boy uses his mental powers to keep a small town under his control]. The set of the home had curved tops to doors, and the fireplaces were figure eights. It was unlike any house you've ever seen. Once again, I knew that they just didn't get the point of Twilight Zone."

Actor John Anderson likes to relate a Twilight Zone-ish memory from 1974. "My wife and I used to make an annual trip out to Death Valley. A couple we knew from New York had opened up a little opera house. That night as I was preparing to go onstage, the husband, Tom, said to me, 'Oh, John, by the way, an old friend of yours is going to be out in the audience watching the show tonight-Rod Serling.' Well, I was delighted, and I looked forward to seeing him. But just before the show, we scanned the audience and no Rod. I was disappointed and went on with the show."

"During intermission, I went outside for a smoke. As I lit up my cigar, I could see Death Valley's bleak desert landscape in front of me. Suddenly, a guy 10 feet away lights up a cigarette. I thought, 'Who the hell is that?' He stepped out of the shadows and said, 'Hi, John.' It was Rod. He had arrived late. We chatted under the pale blue moon, looking out over the weird, forbidding landscape. "He said, 'You know, the other night they showed one of my favorite Twilight Zones. It was the one with you as the airline pilot. It was so good.' I said, 'Rod, they were all good.' He asked me if I still received residual payment for them. I told him that I didn't. We rapped a while and Rod said, 'John, I'll talk to you after the show.'"

"When the show was over, I said to my wife, 'Come on! We gotta get outside. Rod Serling was out there.' She said, 'He was?' I said, 'Yeah.'" So we went outside and no Rod. I ran around calling his name. Tom came out and asked what was going on. I told him about Rod. 'Well, where is he?' Tom asked. We all looked around, but there was nothing but the moon and the desert.

"The fact was, Rod was a very private man. He didn't like to be fawned over. My reading of the situation was that he had arrived late, sat down quietly in the back, and when the show was over, he left. After we had our talk, he probably thought, 'If I stay around and wait for John, the lights will come on and everybody will be all over me.' So he left. That's all I could figure. He died about six months later. I told Carol, his wife, about it and she was amazed. It was a very strange experience. No one else even saw Rod at the theater that night. It's my word that Rod and I had that quiet chat." John Anderson chuckles. "You know, it was just like The Twilight Zone!"

CAST NOTES

Rod Serling (Host): Born 1924. Serling was one of the most prolific and acclaimed writers of live television drama in the 1950s. He later co-wrote the film Planet of the Apes (1968) and provided narration for many documentaries during the 1970s, including the Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau specials. Serling died from complications following heart surgery in 1975.

TWILIGHT ZONE,THE (1985)

Anthology Series - Inside another dimension known as the Twilight Zone strange things happen to normal people.

What's in a name? Everything, as far as this 1980s revival of a television icon is concerned. It's not been a runaway commercial success and has never achieved the heights of critical acclaim reached by Rod Serling's original, but while it lacks his cohesive presence it's not at all bad. Some stories are excellent and many are a sight more entertaining than much of today's prime-time TV.

Many of the industry's top names have brought their talents to bear - casts have included Bruce Willis, Danny Kaye, Elliot Gould, Tom Skerritt, Ralph Bellamy, Richard Mulligan, Martin Landau and M. Emmet Walsh, while Joe Dante, John Milius and William Friedkin are among the directors. Besides many original scripts, the series culled short stories from leading SF writers as well as indulging in a few remakes of tales from the old Zone.

The first package was duly bought for Britain by ITV and has since circulated round the regions like a game of pass the parcel, with different episodes unwrapped and screened, each to his own, almost at random. 'The advent of 24-hour TV inevitably made more room in the companies' schedules and The Twilight Zone has been an uncomplaining lodger.

Kudos to Harlan Ellison for quitting his $5,000/week position as Creative Consultant when the network censors objected to his passionate defense of a superb Christmas episode based on the creepy but ultimately pro-diversity story "Nackles."

1st and 2nd season episodes have had Robin Ward redo Charles Aidman's narration for syndicated reruns. The Twilight Zone was the first of three genre anthology series to begin production for the 1985-86 TV season. It was a reworking of the original series offering a variety of science fiction and fantasy stories, often with a surprise twist ending. The new series was in colour and made without the late Rod Serling at the helm. Serling was not replaced with a new host, instead the series remained hostless with only an anonymous off-screen narrator. Stories were a mixture of adaptations of famous science fiction tales, new stories and a few remakes of classic Twilight Zone episodes.

The new series started its run on CBS with hour-long episodes, each containing two or three stories of varying lengths. This gave the writers much more flexibility with their stories, allowing them to have as much or as little time needed to tell their tale. During the series' second season, several of the episodes were presented as half-hour episodes with one story apiece.

After 35 episodes, which presented 80 stories. CBS pulled the plug on the series. A second revival was soon enacted for first run syndication. The plan from the start was to produce only 30 new half hour episodes in Canada on a smaller budget than the CBS episodes. These 30 episodes would then be combined with the CBS ones, now edited into 64 half hour segments. Making 94 episodes available for rerun syndication. Since the CBS episodes were of varying lengths they had to be altered to fit into a 22 minute segment (30 minutes less commercials). Many of them were cut, some worse than others, and several of the stories were omitted from the syndication package entirely. Two of the longer episodes, Her Pilgrim Soul and Message From Charity had footage originally cut from them restored to pad them out into two part episodes. This third season of syndicated episodes premiered in the fall of 1988.

The executive producer for the series was Philip DeGuere, supervising producer was James Croker, producer was Harvey Fraud, executive story consultant was Alan Brennert, story editor was Rockne S. O'Bannon. The creative consultant was Harlan Ellison, the special effects co-ordinator was M. Kam Cooney. The new main title theme was created by Grateful Dead and Merl Saunders. The series was first seen in the UK on the 17th October 1987 on Scottish Television (ITV).

Various actors who have visited this new Twilight Zone include Bruce Willis, Meg Foster, Robert Duncan McNeil (STAR TREK : VOYAGER), Danny Kaye, Helen Mirren, Martin Landau (SPACE : 1999), Gary Cole (CRUSADE), Pam Dawber (MORK AND MINDY), John Carradine, Elliot Gould, John De Lancie (STAR TREK : THE NEXT GENERATION), Andrew Robinson (STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE), Terry Farrell (STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE), Tim Russ (STAR TREK : VOYAGER), Fred Savage, Brent Spiner (STAR TREK : THE NEXT GENERATION).

A continuation (twenty years later) of a science fiction anthology created by Rod Serling that explores the darkest depths of an individual as he crosses over into "the twilight zone." Short tales of surrealism, morality plays, personal nightmares and flights of fantasy characterize the show. Creator: Rod Serling; Executive Producer: Philip DeGuere; Supervising Producers: James Crocker, Anthony and Nancy Lawrence; Producer: Harvey Frand; Line Producer: Ken Swor; Associate Producers: James Heinz, Mark Michaels, Howard Brock, Hali Paul; Executive Story Consultant: Alan Brennert; Story Editor: Rockne O'Bannon, George R.R. Martin, Martin Pasko, Rebecca Parr; Creative Consultant: Harlan Ellison, James Crocker; Narrator: Charles Aidman; Main Title Theme: The Grateful Dead and Merl Saunders; CBS/MGM TV; 60 minutes.

Take a classic television series from the early 1960s—a series that happens to bear the indelible stamp of one very hardworking and creative genius named Rod Serling—and usher it into the 1980s. It could have been a very intimidating task for any producer. But when Philip DeGuere and James Crocker were handed the assignment of reopening that door into The Twilight Zone, they felt it was a wonderful idea. "When the opportunity came, I was very happy it was offered to me," says DeGuere. "All TV producers at one point have a strong desire to do an anthology series. When you do a lot of TV series, you have the same cast, the same basic premise and the same kinds of stories, week after week. It's easy to become creatively tired of production. But an anthology show is a different set of characters and a different set of stories every week. And particularly a show like the way I envisioned the Twilight Zone, which was to have multiple stories with varying lengths begin every hour—it would be the ideal additive to that kind of standard form of television."

To update Twilight Zone for the 1980s television viewing audience, CBS chose a man who had been very successful in producing several shows for the network. Philip DeGuere had created Whiz Kids and Simon and Simon and had even forayed into fantasy with his 1979 mysterious TV movie Dr. Strange, based on the Marvel Comics character. The timing was ideal. Over at NBC, Steven Spielberg (who co-produced the feature Twilight Zone in 1983) had begun Amazing Stories, and Alfred Hitchcock Presents was revived for NBC. There was also Tales of the Darkside and HBO's The Hitchhiker. As a result, TwilightZone suddenly had anthology competition to contend with.

Although the keeper of the Twilight Zone is no longer with us, DeGuere acknowledges his presence hung over the show. "Not only did we feel his shadow, we put his shadow in the main title!" quips DeGuere, referring to the quick insert of Serling's black-and-white figure in the surreal, kaleidoscopic opening credits. "Although I'm sure I felt intimidation from time to time, I thought it was a significant challenge. It was my feeling that Twilight Zone was very much a product of its time.... The stories we would deal with would be significantly different, considerably more modern, and we would have the benefit of technological advances in terms of special effects. No one would look on the new show unkindly and compare it to the old show." DeGuere confesses that if anything troubled him, it was the competition he faced from other network shows. "As a producer I was considerably more intimidated by what was going on with Amazing Stories.

It was a show that not only had the benefit of Steven Spielberg's truly astronomical budget from NBC and Universal; it was the understanding in the industry that Spielberg would be attracting feature people. I felt, therefore, that since we were operating under a considerably more normal television series budget, and since I didn't have the benefit of Mr. Spielberg's famous name, or his familiarity with other famous people in the industry, the most important thing for us to do at the outset of the show was to ground our credibility as securely as possible in the world of science fiction and fantasy literature. To try to create the best possible scripts and then go on the assumption that, competitiveness being what it was, the quality of our scripts would serve to attract the kinds of stars and directors and other personnel in town that would allow us to effectively compete for the audience against Amazing Stories." DeGuere believes he was successful. He feels he was able to attract people who were almost entirely established in features or in the literary field to work on the Twilight Zone. "Generally, in developing the first season, I don't think any better writing staff has ever been assembled for a television series!"

Assembling a writing staff that did not usually cater to television screenwriting was that first step towards recreating The Twilight Zone's unique style and trademark. In many cases he successfully coaxed well-known authors who had never written for television to sign aboard his ship, including the controversial and boisterous Harlan Ellison and novelists Steven Barnes and George R.R. Martin. Screenwriters also adapted works by horror novelists Robert McCammon and Stephen King and science fiction authors Robert Silverberg, Theodore Sturgeon, Arthur C. Clarke, Henry Slesar and Ray Bradbury. Rockne O'Bannon, who contributed many scripts, became the Boy Wonder discovered on Twilight Zone. (O'Bannon later would write Alien Nation for the big screen and return to television with Sea Quest DSV.) Other writers on the "dream team" included Alan Brennert and the duo of Martin Pasko and Rebecca Parr.

In the acting department, The Twilight Zone boasted an impressive first year, with seasoned performances from Melinda Dillon, Morgan Freeman, Elliot Gould, Danny Kaye, Donald Moffatt, Fritz Weaver, Bruce Willis and many others. Being involved in a dramatic anthology show for network television puts any producer in an unusual position. Every script, cast, writer and director is different on each and every episode of the show. For Twilight Zone, even the terminology was changed: Because occasionally more than one story would be told in a given one-hour slot, each "mini-movie" created was not an episode, but a "segment" of the show.

"We were developing scripts to a certain level," explains DeGuere. "And when everybody determined that [a script] was ready to film, we'd shoot it. We would do it without being sure what episode of the series a particular segment would go into. We didn't know how segments would be combined to air on a particular night. It was a real jigsaw challenge when we edited the show. We had to come up with two or three segments that would make up an hour show. [We hoped] none would be too severely truncated. I can't think of any television series that's been done with a problem quite like that!"

Scenes and moments were frequently cut out to make a segment fit into a given slot time. "We were cutting our legs, throwing a lot of money into the cutting room floor-some segments were too long to fit into their slot on the hour." Scripts don't necessarily determine story length, says DeGuere. "You really can't tell until you've edited. The script is a guideline up to a point. A director will impose a pace on it, for example." DeGuere notes that the unpredictability of timing is another challenge that makes an anthology series more interesting to do. "On a formula show, if you've done them enough times to be aware of actors talking at a certain pace, that certain kinds of scenes play a certain way, then you have an idea what to shoot for. Sometimes you'll go over, but other times you'll get pretty close. But if you go into something entirely new, you have no idea how it's going to play until you get to the other end-the cutting and editing. It was really quite a challenge to get them all to fit into an hour."

With so many variables to keep track of, DeGuere admits he occasionally suffered memory overload. "After we had five to ten episodes in the can and we had five or six in pre-production, five or six in post-production and we would be actively writing five or six with ten or twenty in development stages, I began to discover I was having trouble remembering people's names!" he says with amazement. "I would have difficulty remembering the name of my secretary or the people working on the show, or people who were friends of mine! I made a comment about this to our writing staff and discovered the other members of the writing staff were having the same kind of trouble! We realized we had so many stories with so many characters with unique names in each story, while we were struggling to keep track of all these stories in our heads, the available memory for names in our heads was being used up! It became terribly embarrassing when you run into someone and you don't know who they are! I'd draw a blank on people's names. There was a weird kind of gymnastics involved to keep all that straight. You'd consistently find yourself in a situation when you say 'Hi!' to somebody but their name wouldn't come to the tip of your tongue!"

Out of the 80 stories produced for the two seasons from 1985 to 1987, DeGuere is happy to discuss examples of what he considers the show's finest offerings. First, he cites his adaptation of Robert McCammon's short story "Nightcrawlers" directed by William Friedkin, who's best known for The Exorcist-as an example of stretching the envelope on television. "The original story was quite graphic, violent and rather frightening," recalls DeGuere. "I adapted it almost word for word from the short story and quite literally put it on screen. What resulted was, in my opinion, one of the scariest and one of the most realistically gripping and violent stories for network television that has ever been produced."

Despite the storyline of a Vietnam veteran (actor Scott Paulin) having a very violent flashback of the war, the network did not offer objections to the treatment because at the time CBS was very supportive of the project. "Although they were concerned about the graphic nature of the violence, the show we completed was the show I wanted!" DeGuere says proudly. But on the next week, Twilight Zone was preempted. After that, DeGuere remembers, production of the show, for "completely arbitrary, meaningless reasons," was accelerated. As a result, there was a loss in viewers. "We went from a 30 share to a 22 share or something like that. From that point on, the series never achieved an audience level higher."

DeGuere feels that "Nightcrawlers" was a show designed for a 10 p.m. audience, and that the 8 p.m. airing may have contributed to the decline of audience. "What I think happened was that you get 8:00 or 8:30, it's family hour, people are watching shows and kids are still awake.... To have this very gruesome, violent, frightening thing come on and kind of grip you-I mean, there wasn't even a commercial in the middle of the show-was simply too much!" explains DeGuere. "The television audience wasn't properly prepared for it. It was considerably more graphic and disturbing ... and it wasn't what they had come to expect. A significant portion of the audience simply didn't want to be challenged like that. It's the end of the week, and you're supposed to put your feet up and relax."

Nevertheless, DeGuere still loves to entertain people by turning off all the lights in a room and turning on "Nightcrawlers," especially if they haven't seen it before. Actor James Whitmore, Jr., played the sheriff in "Nightcrawlers." He remembers the experience as "bizarre and spooky! I loved it!" With Friedkin on helm, and the prestige and budget of the team behind them, the episode was "wonderful to be in. It was like being in a big, multimillion dollar feature film!

"I'll never forget the first night [of filming]," Whitmore continues. "The opening shot of that episode was me driving along in the police car. They had rain machines set up for a quarter of a mile of the road. Rain towers. I can't see anything. The character I was playing doesn't wear glasses, so I couldn't wear my glasses. I'm driving down this road, and I thought, 'Now, this is not a TV show at all! This is a feature film! This is crazy!' "It was a fun experience. I like the show. I've had a lot of folks since say that they thought it was a damn good show. It was a crazy, interesting shoot. I don't know if it was too intense! Stuff they put on TV nowadays, you just turn on the news and you see stuff that you wonder, 'How do they put this on TV?'" Two other episodes, "A Message from Charity" and "Her Pilgrim Soul," DeGuere considers in many ways, "some of the very best we'd ever done. I thought Alan Brennert was one of our best writers."

William M. Lee's short story, "A Message from Charity" was first published in 1969. It's the tale of a modern-day teenage boy who, feverish with illness, finds himself in a psychic bond with a seventeenth-century New England girl who is also in the throes of a fever. The two share their senses of sight and taste, and communicate telepathically. It's the story of a boy and a girl exploring each other's worlds, centuries apart, only for her to be accused of being a witch because of his modern-day ideas and surroundings. Kerry Noonan, the actress who played the young girl Charity, recalls working on Twilight Zone as an enriching experience. Getting the lead role was an exercise in speaking up. She was auditioning for a smaller part, but upon reading the script, she immediately wanted the lead.

"I'd always been a history buff and had subjected my younger sister to endless games of 'olden days' in which we'd be Puritans or pioneers or Amish. I'd read extensively about Puritan New England as a kid," says Noonan. "I plucked up my courage and asked the casting director, Gary Zuckerbrod, if I could read for the lead." Zuckerbrod and another man hemmed and hawed, reluctant to allow her to audition for the role of Charity. To discourage Noonan, they begged off to a meeting for an hour. "I'll wait!" she said eagerly. After reading for the part, Noonan remembers, she was anxious for a week, trying not to wait by the phone. When her agent finally called, the verdict was that she was too old for the part.

"I was so depressed," she laments. "But a week later, I got a call from my agents that Twilight Zone had a casting emergency. How quickly could I get to CBS Radford studios?" Noonan did an additional reading, for a group of people she didn't recognize except for Zuckerbrod. When Zuckerbrod gave her another page to be read, she noticed one man grimacing and remembers thinking that she had better be good. As she studied the lines outside the room, the grimacing man came out and told her, "We don't need to hear any more—you're hired. Go get fitted in wardrobe, and you start Monday."

The emergency had arisen because the woman originally slated to play Charity, Family Ties' Justine Bateman, was fired. Producers discovered they were not satisfied with her as a girl from another century. "Charity" director Paul Lynch recalls Kerry Noonan as being "terrific" in this segment. "The big difference was that Kerry was a good actress and Bateman wasn't." Noonan remembers pointing out dialogue inaccuracies to the writer and producer of the episode, Alan Brennert, who's since become a good friend. In turn, he gave her freedom to change any dialogue she found grammatically incorrect.

Noonan's first day of shooting involved three difficult sequences: a scene with a Squire (who accuses her of being a witch) in a cabin, a drunk scene and a goodbye scene to the boy Peter Wood (Duncan McNeill). "The Squire scene was hard because it was the scene with the most at stake for my character," recalls Noonan. "Gerry Hiken was terrifically slimy as the Squire—wonderful to work off. Gerry taught me a great deal by example while I worked with him that morning. I knew intellectually about the difference between master shots and close-ups, but it helped to watch him and match him as we shot. He got smaller and more intense as the camera got closer, and so did I. He really made my skin crawl in that scene.

"The drunk scene was hard for me because, although I was very familiar with playing comedy on stage, I had not done a comic scene on film yet, and was unsure of how 'big' to make it. Paul Lynch was encouraging of me, and so it went fine." The goodbye scene, "was difficult to do in two ways; technically it was a difficult shot, and emotionally it was a big scene. Bradford May was circling the camera round me as I did the scene, shooting it all in one continuous shot, so I had to be aware of the camera and do things like hitting the pillow at a precise moment, in coordination with the camera, or the whole shot wouldn't have worked. We did many takes, but finally it came out right. Also, I had my worst nightmare come true: Brad explained the complicated camera moves on where I had to be at each mark, and then said, And when your head hits the pillow, we'd like tears-out of the left eye, if possible."

Noonan reacted the way most of us would when asked to generate tears on demand: She began hyperventilating. "If I know I must be in tears at a certain moment, I panic!" says Noonan. "I was off in a corner, trying to make sure I'd cry-and wondering how to do it `out of the left eye!" and worrying that my emotional commitment to the scene wasn't good enough." But whenever she was asked how she was doing, the response was, "Great! We love it. Keep it up!" "A Message from Charity" was filmed at CBS Radford (now MTM Television) with exteriors at the Disney Ranch, with the exception of the town square scenes, which were done at Burbank studios. The only sets built especially for the episode were the interiors of Charity's house and an airplane wall for Peter Wood's view outside an airplane.

Filming outdoors was fun for Noonan, but the hardest aspect of an exterior segment was being body-miked for a gardening sequence. As she hoed away she was telepathically communicating with Peter. The camera was at a distance, and MacNeil stood with the cameras and shouted his lines to her. "My inclination, both naturally and as a stage actress, was to project my voice to reach him," says Noonan. "The sound man had to keep reminding me to talk in a low tone of voice.... It's odd to do a scene where your partner is far away, shouting to you, and you answer in a very quiet voice! But I got used to it." After completing the principal photography of "A Message from Charity," Noonan later received a call to loop (redub) some dialogue. Airplanes that flew over the location had interfered with some dialogue from the outdoor scenes. Almost all of her exterior dialogue, as well as Gerald Hiken's, was looped.

Looking back, Noonan is very pleased with her work on "A Message from Charity." "I got some nice industry attention, and lots of fan mail for it. I felt I knew the character inside and out, and playing her was a joy, and easy from an emotional point of view. I always remind myself to take risks in casting sessions. The only reason I got to do this wonderful role was because I spoke up and asked to be considered for it. I think the script was probably one of the best I've worked on for television. I think most of the Twilight Zone scripts were very good, and Alan Brennert's were some of the best of the lot."

Director Paul Lynch cites conversations between Peter Wood and Charity Paine as his favorite scenes of all the Twilight Zones he's directed. "Peter and Charity, when they talk, it's a good time. She's back in New England, and he's in the present. I think they worked great." Lynch says that he gave Noonan little direction for the episode. "She was so good, she didn't need it. She just did the character on her own." In transition from the original airing on CBS to syndication, "A Message from Charity," like another episode, "Her Pilgrim Soul," was expanded to fit into two half-hour segments. Director Paul Lynch believes four minutes were added for the syndicated version. The expansion included bits of scenes cut from the original air.

Another change that occurred on the way from network to syndication was made not just to "Charity," but to every CBS episode that entered syndication: Charles Aidman's narration was looped over by Canadian Robin Ward's. Many people, Brennert included, prefer Aidman's work as a narrator. Robin Ward is the Canadian actor who starred with Keir Dullea in The Starlost (1973). Of his participation in Twilight Zone, Ward says, "About 500 actors sent in tapes, and I was asked to audition. To my amazement, I got the job! From what I saw of the series, it was terrific. With residuals coming from the show, I hope fervently that it lasts in syndication." The fact that Canadian actor union residuals were cheaper than those in the United States played a role in Ward's choice as a narrator.

Another episode on DeGuere's list of favorites is "Her Pilgrim Soul," a unique entry. It is a story without violence, conflict or even an antagonist. Unabashedly, it is a love story. Wes Craven, director of seven episodes, calls "Her Pilgrim Soul" his favorite. "It certainly has gotten the widest, most positive audience response," says Craven. "It was particularly pleasing for me to direct something that was so far away from what I had directed in the past, since it didn't involve any threat, and was instead clearly a love story." Written by producer and writer Alan Brennert, who earned a Writers Guild nomination for the script, "Her Pilgrim Soul" is said to be his tribute to a woman he once loved. Directed by Wes Craven, of Nightmare on Elm Street fame, and starring Kristoffer Tabori, Midnight Caller's Gary Cole and Anne Twomey, "Her Pilgrim Soul" tells the story of young computer scientist Kevin Drayton and his partner, Daniel, who are tinkering with a three-dimensional holograph device.

One day, a human fetus appears suddenly on the holograph. Unable to rid the holograph of the fetus from their computer, they shut down. Restarting, they are haunted again by the fetus, which grows into a young girl, Nola Granville. With some information they have learned about the girl, Daniel goes out and searches for the truth of young Nola, while Kevin stays, not only to study the rapidly growing and aging woman/ hologram, but to fall in love with her.

"Pilgrim" had the difficulty of being an intensely dramatic piece absolutely dependent on the chemistry between the two leads, and yet the technical problems associated with making the woman translucent initially called for the two never to be on the same set at the same time!" says Craven. "I refused to allow that, however. There was enormous difficulty in shooting her scenes. In almost all cases the camera had to be locked down when she was filmed. Then, once a take was attained that I liked, I was required to shoot the set again, this time with a green cylinder placed where she sat, and a third time with nothing there, for the film plate of what would be showing through her and her cone of light, from the set behind. If a second character had to pass through the area she occupied, well, that was a fourth pass. Therefore, three to four times as many takes were required for any single given take involving the woman. It was murderous on our schedule."

But Kristoffer Tabori, who had to act in those scenes with Anne Twomey, was grateful he wouldn't be acting to empty air space. "That's why Wes is a really good director," remembers Tabori. "He understood that there are incomparable things that happen and that are essential about the transactions of human beings that can't be calculated, and they must be given space for. And I always felt that with all the technical problems in that piece, the split screen and all that nonsense, he recognized that the story would work with people [in the scene]. To get that investment, you have to give them the space and time for them to do their work. I always felt that most TV directors neither know very much about human behavior nor do they know very much about the instrument of an actor, nor are they very concerned about it. They consider it a bit of a liability to deal with the actor. But a director like Wes really recognizes [that having two actors working with each other live on set] is crucial to the event coming off. I thought his respect for us, his care for us, his real interest in what we're bringing and how to use it, was great! I thought it was wonderful."

Tabori also remembers, "I was really happy when I got this episode. The story interested me. The movement of the protagonist was something I connected with, and I had a strong feeling for how to play the character. I felt the script had the danger of being sentimental, and the way to avoid it was to identify in the screenplay ... what the real germ of this story was. And when it went off that center, it tended to take refuge in sentiment instead of what I think was the interesting, painful and trenchant story."

Tabori says he felt "really invigorated! I recognized I had a part that had some real muscle to it, and it was something that was active, interesting, attractive and appealing. I worked very hard on the script. ... I connected with it very strongly, and I [wanted to provide] a healthy aspect of an actor's contribution to a project. I remember having a very good relationship with Wes. I would come up to him with specific suggestions and he would agree. I think that's really good. In the best of circumstances, that's what a director should do, facilitate the process of on-set changes.

"I'm always trying to think about what's the story really about? What's really the journey of the character? How do we keep protecting it? I get sidetracked by details." This very creative atmosphere, while not unusual for television, was very new in Tabori's experience for one reason: "This is the only episodic show I can think in the entire memory of my career-and I've been an actor for 20 to 25 years-where it seemed to me that the pact was getting it right instead of getting it done. I was amazed!"

Long after completing "Her Pilgrim Soul" Tabori continues to be reminded of his stint inside the Twilight Zone. "People are always coming up to me," he says. "I'd forgotten about it, and people come up to me and praise it. 'It's my favorite Twilight Zone episode ever!' or, 'That's one of the best pieces of television!' And it's amazing, the impact that little show has had! People really like that episode. It's very emotional. It's a very personal love story. It's very immediate in how it addresses the problems in what [Kevin Drayton] is going through. People have responded very strongly. I must say, I'm more than amazed."

Wes Craven, in recalling his tenure on the Twilight Zone, said that "Her Pilgrim Soul" was not the only episode with technical difficulties. "Shatterday," with Bruce Willis, is another example.

"Bruce was required to play both sides of a split personality. Again there were complicated scenes requiring multiple passes, to film both sides of his conversation. Further, a second actor needed to be found to play opposite both of Bruce's characters, to give him someone to respond to dramatically in any given scene." Craven believes that Twilight Zone's unique stamp comes from the fact that "Western art looks at our human reality through tunnelvision glasses, seeing almost exclusively what is experienced rationally, linearly and apparently. But the spectrum of human consciousness is phenomenally broader than that. The great thing about Twilight Zone was/is that it acknowledged that other area-the deeply subjective, 'acoustic' non-linear arena of our 'other realities': dreams, hallucinations, premonitions, daydreams, visions and gave it voice. The final unique stamp in the original, of course, was Rod Serling." Craven's retrospective opinion of Twilight Zone's revival is that "it was a moment of fine quality, wrapped around a show that was at once experimental and firmly rooted in a great tradition.

"Serling was a unique and powerful presence for the original Twilight Zone-compelling to look at and hear, and a gifted writer too-so that the tremendous disparity of subject matter had a central anchor that the new Twilight Zone did not." So, how could the updated Twilight Zone have been better? "If Serling had been cryogenically preserved!" quips Craven. Working on the show for Craven was a creatively satisfying and creative stint. "There were so many positives. I received the chance to work with actors and actresses I'd never had access to before, with truly gifted writers, and with a really fine crew—from Bradford May onward they were exceptionally committed and gifted, and were great to work with. I'll always have a warm spot for Philip DeGuere for giving me that chance."

Craven recalls that the most amusing moments on the set usually came during the last several days of any given episode's filming. "Almost always we were behind schedule," Craven moaned. "The Twilight Zones were filmed like small features. Much care was given to every detail, directors were encouraged to shoot at feature level—and then there was the matter of cinematographer Bradford May's smoke.

"Brad shot beautifully, and he loved the look smoke gave to his lighting, and so would routinely smoke every set. Heavily. That meant all the sets had to be closed, so there were no errant winds carrying away the atmosphere, and there was a very limited window of ideal smoke-time. The process went like this. First, all the doors to the stage would be closed. Then the entire stage was smoked—smokers chugging away in every corner until the whole stage looked like London during its foggiest. Then we would come in and rehearse (cough, cough), then prepare for the shots.

"Now, the set itself had to be resmoked, and then, we waited ... until the smoke thinned (you must never be able to see the smoke), but not too much. Then, if all was well, the take. But often, halfway through the take, the smoke would thin too much. We'd have to cut, or else the smoke wouldn't match. More smoke, then another take. After each take, we'd have to resmoke, then wait for the smoke to settle. "The amusing part was watching the faces of the line producer and his staff as they'd line up on the last days, when we were out of time and money and still shooting—looking at their watches, chain smoking—waiting with all the rest of us for the smoke to be ... just ... right!"

"Paladin of the Lost Hour," shot from Harlan Ellison's teleplay of his short story "Paladin," was another important accomplishment for Twilight Zone. It starred the legendary Danny Kaye as well as Glynn Turman, an actor who's since starred as a regular on the NBC sitcom A Different World.

"Paladin of the Lost Hour" is a story of a lonely old man, Gaspar, paying respects to his deceased wife at an out-of-the-way cemetery. When he's assaulted by two hoods, a young man, Billy Kinetta, rescues him. Touched and grateful for Billy's help, Gaspar persuades his way into Billy's apartment. There, under a rainstorm, Gaspar learns of Billy's Vietnam experiences. A buddy had lost his life saving Billy from an explosion, leaving Billy filled with grief through the years. Billy's emotions touch Gaspar. In the end, Billy discovers Gaspar's old timepiece is not an ordinary watch. Set perpetually at eleven o'clock, the watch carries the 'the last hour' of time. Gaspar is the guardian, a paladin. Armageddon will never come as long as the arrows stay from midnight. And Gaspar is looking for someone to carry on his work.

Sadly, "Paladin of the Lost Hour" was Danny Kaye's last acting performance before he died. But the script earned Harlan Ellison a Writers Guild award, and the short-story form won the fan-voted Hugo award. Glynn Turman recalls the experience as a good one. Ellison had written the roles specifically for him and Kaye. He thinks that "it was a fine script. It was a different project. As it goes for science fiction, it was a very touching story."

Turman says that Billy Kinetta, the tortured Vietnam veteran who eventually meets his war buddy thanks to Gaspar's watch, was a man who wished he could have done something differently, given time. "He wished he had a chance to make amends, and wondered what he could do if he the way the network was handling it. From a creative point of view, it was allowed to sink into a somewhat inglorious conclusion."

As the show was finishing its two-year run on CBS, a foot got into the closing door. Someone else picked up the show in 1988 and moved it, with a different production staff, to Toronto, where 30 episodes were filmed for syndication (see pages 504-513). CBS episodes were thereon remixed, recut, and in some cases eliminated, to form a package with syndicated episodes. Robin Ward's narration was mixed in "for uniformity" as an MGM executive put it. DeGuere says he has never seen any of the syndicated episodes and calls the repackaging the last indignity thrown upon him and his hard-working and idealistic staff. was on Saturday. We talked a lot about it afterwards. Then we had a rehearsal on Sunday. Peter and I spent a lot of time discussing what he would do. What's organic that Peter could utilize for his performance? I didn't want to do post-production on it, I wanted him to create the sound of the voice, and so we worked on that, and for the most part, that's what Peter was able to accomplish.

"He had to play three characters at once, slipping in and out of the real guy, the real guy who's faking the trance to make money, and really channeling for the demon. Very challenging for an actor to know how far to go, how far to swing. Everybody just doesn't all of a sudden go, 'Oh, my god!' "It's remarkable how many people I talk to have a real predilection for accepting the idea of trance-channeling. There are those who have a strong belief and leaning towards the spiritual world. Going all the way from horoscopes, to being psychic, all that stuff. I found out there's a world out there who make money off it."

Regarding anecdotes connected to the production, Bradshaw grins and said, "We're shooting with Peter in the television studio with Jeanne, a real interviewer, a celebrity in her own right in Toronto. Peter's a very funny guy, so we thought, we gotta play a trick on him here. He was [elsewhere] doing something so we told the whole crew ... if Peter screws up here, everybody was to walk right on stage, while he's doing this scene, and start applauding. So, we're shooting and he doesn't know what's going on, and all of a sudden, we've got 50 guys up on his stage applauding. Quite funny. Shooting was ... technically, very difficult ... trying to figure out 'He shouldn't go here' or 'Should he walk over here?' It's dialogue and choreography."

In another episode for Twilight Zone, a remake of George Clayton Johnson's "A Game of Pool," (a classic from Rod Serling's days) Bradshaw once again faced a technical challenge: "You talk about action films. We got two guys in one room for the whole show! How do you make that interesting so people would watch?" The actors involved, Maury Chaykin and Esai Morales, replaced the classics' Jonathan Winters and Jack Klugman, respectively. Oddly, "A Game of Pool" wound up using Johnson's original ending-not used in the classic episode-in which the young pool challenger lost. Twilight Zone was in the midst of a Los Angeles writers' strike at the time, so this script was bought.

"I knew that the actors would be all-consumed by this game of pool, and by [the challenge of] making them look like they're real pool players," says Bradshaw. "Good enough; we played pool in downtown Toronto. Maury hadn't played much pool before, but I think he still had the knack for it. While Esai Morales didn't know how to play pool, he was quite good and quite excited." As Bradshaw says, these stories primarily consisted of choreography and dialogue, and this episode was no exception. "We were able to get a pool expert. I'm no expert, [but] at least I was able to play a little bit to figure out where the balls would go, where he would stand, where I would want him to stand, what he would have to do. So, we did have two continuity people on that show because after every shot, we had to redo it. The balls had to be set up at the table again, exactly like they were, so we had to know in case we had to come back tomorrow or even one shot to the next.

Maury Chaykin, who played the legendary pool shark Fats Brown, says he had the flu throughout the production and doesn't remember much about it. "I was aware that it had been done before with Jonathan Winters and Jack Klugman," he says. "I did see it; it popped off the television before I did the segment. I watched it and was not intimidated by it at all. Primarily because I felt that it wasn't very good. The acting wasn't very good. I don't know if the acting in ours was very good either, but I was not very impressed by Jonathan Winters. I mean, I didn't think he was very good. It was early in his career. I guess he started out as an actor, and you can imagine someone with his talent, his enormous talent, confined within a script. A lot of incredibly talented people, when they're confined to doing scripts that aren't really suited specifically to them, don't really shine or they're not great in them."

Despite the fact that his mind "was somewhere else" during the shoot, Chaykin did get a chance to work on some moves on the table. "It's very funny. I remember learning some pool tricks, and there were some shots that were made on camera. I'm not a pool player. I play a little now, but I was surprised I got that good, making moves on camera. But no, I'm not a good pool player." In contrast to Chaykin's opinion, director Bradshaw admires the original take on the story by Winters and Klugman. "Great performances, I really enjoyed that. I thought they did a great job. Performances were just great, and I thought, 'How in hell are we going to measure up to that?' I liked the original ending."

Brad Turner's stint in directing "Acts of Terror" gave him a rare opportunity to tell a story that could have deep meaning for viewers. "Acts" wasn't just entertainment. It was a gripping, emotional story of a man (played by Kenneth Welsh), frequently and willfully beating his wife (Melanie Mayron). One day the wife receives a gift from her sister: a small silver statue of a dog. In times of need, the dog comes alive to save her from the vicious husband. "It was a very classic Twilight Zone story. It was imaginative," says Turner. "Wife-beating is a very contemporary problem that's come to the surface. That part of it I really liked. The challenge was to make the story a compassionate story about one individual's tale. Technically, the challenge is to make it believable.

"What I wanted to happen was to have the compassion between the dog and her-the dog is really an extension of her-to be a part of her. What was really nice about it was that Melanie Mayron likes dogs and actually had a dog in New York at the time. She had a full-sized poodle. We talked at length about it during the first rehearsals. She felt she was relating more to her dog than her husband!" laughs Turner.

Turner says that the story (by J. Michael Straczynski) has two parts: "The first part is that a cousin needs her. The second part is, she loves this man. She somehow can't shake the fact that she loves him. And he still wants it to be war. And what we're trying to do is tell the audience that the reality is she loves this guy. So, why get beaten? The dog comes alive as part of her and says, 'You can't do this anymore!' My idea was that she found the internal strength to say, 'I'm leaving.' For many, many people that's a very hard thing to do. That's amazing: 'I'm leaving.' I hope one female audience member finds some strength from that show. I thought, maybe, 'Oh, I'm just telling a story for television. [But] I'd better believe there's somebody out there who found the strength from that show.' It's very strong in terms of subject. It's very strong in terms of how it's presented. But there are moments in there where you realize, this guy can actually be kind of nice." And that's chilling.

Director of photography Andreas Poulsson remembers that in "Acts of Terror," Turner wanted a shot from the point of view of the dog as it approaches the truck; the viewer doesn't see that it's a dog until the camera reverse-cuts from inside the truck and he's barking against the window. "We had very little time," said Poulsson. "It was very simple. It was just myself, running with the camera through the woods, and I think given the fact that the technology of it was very simple ... it was very effective in heightening the suspense of that sequence."

Turner says he has not received any feedback from viewers regarding this segment of Twilight Zone, but he remembers the crew's reaction in a private screening. Crews are normally cordial and somewhat boisterous during screenings. There may be shots that are funny to them but not to the average viewer. Because they're the ones who create the shows and are on set, crews usually have a different perspective than the television audience. "There's baggage that audiences never know about that happens and when something's funny," says Turner. "[But] the crew saw it, and ... just after the first five minutes, they fell silent, and the whole entire screening was absolutely dead silent. It sucks you in. It's the kind of story that really affects you, because [the wife] is so badly affected by it."

When asked why Twilight Zone is such a cultish, famous and successful show, Turner says, "It's an anthology show that is based on an individual's strengths or weaknesses and how normal, average people are driven to limits and how they recover. It's how they've learned or grown from the experience. The audience relates to the neighbor down the street, or the person I work with, or the guy in government.

"I always felt that when you were going to sit down and watch Twilight Zone you would actually learn something from it, something about life. You might agree or disagree with it, but it would definitely cause a reaction."

The challenge for anyone on any new version of Twilight Zone is doing the show without the presence of the show's creator and spirit, Rod Serling. "It'll never be the same without Rod. It's definitely not as good without Rod. As a host, we definitely miss him. But there were shows, in terms of writing, that were just as good as his stuff." With nine episodes to his credit, Paul Lynch has the distinction of having worked on more new Twilight Zones than any other director (that's if you count the CBS years and syndicated episodes together). Lynch's facility for working in either Toronto or Los Angeles certainly was an advantage in this regard. Lynch remembers that a syndicated episode, Harlan Ellison's "Crazy as a Soup Sandwich" provided some substantial weights for his directing muscles to heft.

"It was the longest schedule of any of them," sighs Lynch. "Six days. It was based on a Harlan Ellison short story. It was very stylized; it was done like a comic book and shot like a comic book, with strange angles and multicolored lighting. Because it was that kind of story, and it was hyper-real in the sense that it wasn't like the '30s, '40s or the '90s. It was just in no-man's-time. So in effect, we were sort of the pre-runner of Dick Tracy in the sense of the wild colors and the kind of look that they got. We created our own world, with strange angles and camera moves and things like that, so it was great fun to do. "Of course, it had this creature in it, this monster. I had worked with the actor Gerry Robbins before, and so we brought him in and he played this creature. He's huge. He's, like, seven feet tall. Anthony Franciosa was in it, and Wayne Robson, and they were wonderful. It was done like a combination of comic books and old '40s movies. It was great fun."

"Crazy as a Soup Sandwich" is a sell-your-soul-to-the-devil tale in which flaky, spineless Arky Lockner is fleeing from a demon to another man, Mr. Lancaster, for help. It's a story that reminds poor Arky that you just can't get out of selling your soul. Before filming "Soup Sandwich," Lynch recalls, he met with Ellison for a consultation on the script. "We chatted a little bit about it. He was very specific. To Harlan, he wants it exactly the way he wrote it. And of course, we couldn't get it exactly the way he wanted because of production things. We had to drop a scene because we could not afford to do it, and he was rather upset about it. But it just wasn't possible in six days. We didn't really need it. But because he wrote it, he was really pissed off about the cutting of the scene.

"In the course of [the story], Mr. Lancaster is going to solve Arky's problem. He leaves his henchmen and girlfriend behind. The cut in the show is, he's back and he's got this box. The way Harlan wanted it was (to show) that he went outside and he dug up the box." A later suggestion was to have him retrieve the box from a safety deposit box at the bank, but this idea, too, was dropped. "There was no way to do it in the schedule we had. But I remember Harlan was pissed off.

"In the script, they go to a store that sold devices for doing dope-pipes and paraphernalia. I think, originally, when he wrote the script, it was a long time ago. It just dated the whole thing. We found a beauty parlor that was great and had the look and feel of a strange time period. A beauty parlor seemed like a better idea. But because it wasn't his idea, he didn't like it." As a consequence, explains Lynch, Ellison did not completely like the finished product. "Because we didn't do the scene of his dope emporium and we didn't do the scene at the bank. You know Harlan: Unless you do it word for word, you can't do [it justice]. He didn't really hate it; he just didn't necessarily agree with all the things we did, because he wanted it his way, and we couldn't do it his way because of budget restrictions. In his world you should spend millions of dollars to do it exactly the way he wants it. But you just can't do that. But we came as close as we could, and we certainly kept it in the spirit of what he was trying to do."

In 1990, as the first issue in a series of original stories from the Twilight Zone, Now Comics created an adaptation of Ellison's "Crazy as a Soup Sandwich," drawn by well-known industry artist Neal Adams. Receiving a copy during his interview, Lynch—who had never seen or heard of the comic—is surprised and excited. "I used to be a cartoonist when I was a kid and I remember writing to Neal Adams," he says. "Being a cartoonist, I used to collect comics, and I have an original Neal Adams-signed Ben Casey strip. How strange! Small world!"

Lynch says that the comic is a reflection of the script "in every word and in every way." He believes Adams must have viewed the episode to do the adaptation because of various things that matched—despite the fact that Lancaster's fetching-the-box scene is restored here as a bank sequence, and the beauty parlor is once again a dope emporium.

"If you look at the comic book and the show, the design of the little room they're in, with the triangle on the floor, and all of that, it's very similar to my beauty salon," explains Lynch. "The way [the emporium sequence] was staged in the comic book and how I did it in the show was very very similar, so it was kind of interesting. [You'll find] a lot of similarity if you see the show and you see the comic book." Before getting cast in "Rendezvous in a Dark Place" as Janet Leigh's son, Canadian actor Malcolm Stewart was in Los Angeles acting in a CBS television series, Almost Grown. As Stewart tells the story: "I was at Universal and I happened to be doing a scene with a girl; I'm having a shower and she comes in the shower like the Psycho scene. Jokingly, with a sponge, she's singing the Psycho music to scare me. The minute we finished doing that scene, I got a call from my agent, who said, 'Would you like to fiy up to do a Twilight Zone?' And I said, 'Sure!' [And my agent said,] 'You're working with Janet Leigh!' Amazing coincidence!"

When Stewart actually got to the Toronto soundstages, he told Leigh about the coincidence. Then, he says, he asked her "so many questions about what it was like working with Alfred Hitchcock. It took seven days and 70 shots to do that [Psycho] shower scene to get 30 seconds of film. Uncommon! Unbelievable! Nobody shoots like that anymore! So, that's what I remember about Twilight Zone. It's not the script, but working with Janet Leigh."

When told that Twilight Zone would be coming to Canada for production, Andreas Poulsson, an experienced cinematographer of many television shows and documentaries, was excited. "I was always a big fan of TwilightZone," says Poulsson. As the director of photography on the show, Poulsson's job was "to serve in telling the story. In reading and analyzing the script, seeing the locations, and discussing with the director, we come up with an appropriate look for the film and if there's any special effects and that sort of thing. You know, we're in the business of storytelling, and the cinematography serves to tell the story as much as any other element that a director makes.

"I don't think that a cinematographer necessarily should put their own stamp on it as much as serving the needs of the story. My style, the things I prefer in myself, especially in the case of Twilight Zone, is that Twilight Zone is generally suspense and it has a spooky aspect to it. [You want to] shoot in a low-key, dark-contrasty look as opposed to a bright look. The normal situation before it builds up to the supernatural element, is you start out with very ordinary people in very ordinary circumstances, and then all of a sudden something extraordinary happens. So you start with a very normal, everyday look and suddenly everything turns strange, and the look should suggest and complement that."

As one of his favorite sequences from the 11 episodes he photographed, Poulsson cites a segment of "The Helgrammite Method." "It's a sequence where Miles Judson [played by Timothy Bottoms] has his nightmarish dream. I think [it] was very successful. I was quite pleased with that. It was very high, looking straight down at him." Poulsson refers to a sequence where, after having taken the alcoholism cure and having a tapeworm that absorbs alcohol grow inside of him, Bottoms is on the kitchen floor in sheer, screaming agony as the camera zooms in from high above. "We crane down and tighten up on the area of the stomach" where the worm was undulating and quivering, says Poulsson.

As for working with Bottoms, "He was fantastic. He's the kind of actor you talk baseball with one minute and then he gets into the role the next minute and he's in character. He's amazingly quick." Another segment of note was "The Call", with William Sanderson. "[It's a story] about a lonely man who gets a call from a woman. And it turns out to be a sculpture in a museum. At the very end, she summons him, and he breaks into the museum in order to be with her. But he triggers the alarm, and by the time the guard finds him—and it's the final image of the story-he turns into a statue next to her. And love was finally found in the Twilight Zone. I think that was very, very effective and exciting, too."

What Poulsson admires about the syndicated version of The Twilight Zone is its emphasis on story over gimmickry. "You would think it would be very heavy on special effects. One of the amazing things about the series is there was relatively very little special effects. And of what special effects there were, they were very simple. It was really [no] more than shooting it in 35 [mm film] and locking down the camera so they could superimpose things on the film. Really, it was extremely simple, and yet very effective. The only one with sophisticated special effects ... was the last one filmed ["Crazy as a Soup Sandwich"].

"For me, that's one of the strengths of the Twilight Zone-the scripts and the characters. It didn't really need all that fancy special effects. One thing that impressed me about the scripts, when I first read them, was something that's always been true to Twilight Zone (the original series with Rod Serling): ... They're very, very strong in story, characters and situations. You know how, in the beginning narration, you can define and set up the story and characters with just a few simple sentences? That's always been one of the things I loved about the Twilight Zone. I think ... they've succeeded in continuing that tradition. I think that was one of the most satisfying and fun projects I've been involved with. I kept asking, 'We should do more!' We should have kept going! It was a wonderful concept. Each episode is one individual movie. It's not like series television where you shoot the same characters every week. Here, we're making a whole different movie every episode."

TWO TWISTED

Two Twisted is an Australian TV mystery drama which premiered on the Nine Network on 14 August 2006. Narrated by Bryan Brown, who also produced the series' predecessor, Twisted Tales, each episode of the series contains two short half-hour stories, that have a twist ending. Also present in each episode is a link or connection between the two tales.

Rather than draw on a pool of experienced writers the producers of the series issued a call to up and coming writers to submit screenplays. Some 2400 entries were received and from these, 14 finalists were chosen. Directors were chosen in a similar fashion. A mix of experienced and emerging directors were chosen to shoot each episode.

Each episode was shot over a period of four days with each director given another four days to edit.

This genre is too easy to abuse. For those who grew up on Hitchcock or Twilight Zone, there is much that might disappoint. The tales could be predictable, or boring, or too cheesy.

Brian Brown has surrounded himself with some of Australia's finest actors.

The scripts are tight. The tales ambiguous to the end, but not after.

It was once said of the Korean movie industry that the discipline of good story continuity wasn't present. That unexplained events would escalate and so a killer would be outside of the private abode of a pretty victim without the viewer ever knowing why the victim was targeted, how the killer found the victim, why extreme violence was required, why no one benign existed. So Two Twisted tales treads dangerous grounds .. using continuity within its language of exposition. The difference being that Two Twisted's continuity issues are deliberate and explained.

Episode Pair Links

In each pair of episodes in Two Twisted, there is a link between them (Like an object or a name that's in both episode). Here are the links in each pair of episodes:

There's Something About Kyanna & Finding Frank

Mid way into the first episode, the camera moves over a book titled Trespassers.

About the same way through the second episode, the main character Frank, looks at a picture. Behind it is the same book, Trespassers.

Call Back & Heart Attack

Toward the end of the first episode, an ambulance blocks the road as it tends to a fallen bicyclist.

In the second, the lead male suffers a heart attack while on his bike, the same model seen in the previous episode.

Von Stauffenberg's Stamp & A Date With Doctor D

In the middle of the first episode, an offer was made to buy the barbershop.

In the second, Rolly broke a coffee cup that had underneath it a corporate proposal to buy the barbershop in the first episode.

Soft Boiled Luck & Arkham's Curios and Wonders

Near the start of the first episode, a red cube puzzle is used as "a cognitive test for the shrinks, part of the psych report".

In the second, the puzzle is seen in Vincent's bedroom, on a shelf, beside a plasma ball. The puzzle is never shown in clear focus during the episode, but is seen in the "Rik Bitta" segment for the week.

Flash Exclusive & Delivery Man

Man and Van which visits the first woman to deliver groceries are the same ones in the next episode.

Jailbreak & Saviour

In the start of the first episode, the doctor is stitching up a man as Jenkins walks in.

This same man is the immortal man in the second episode.

Love Crimes & Grand Final

In the start of the episode, Vince Colosimo's character sees a note on the fridge from 'Mason', stating that he will be late at basketball training.

In the second episode, Dan's friend is called Mase (obviously short for Mason), and plays basketball, so it's the same boy.

U.F.O.

UFO's format was similar to Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons, that of an alien force attacking an Earth defended by a powerful secret organisation. But this one was set in the 'near-future', 1980. The premise: for ten years a dying, sterile race has been raiding Earth in search of human organs to keep itself alive. All that stops our planet from becoming one giant body bank is SHADO - Supreme Headquarters Alien Defence Organisation - operating from a secret base beneath the Harlington-Straker film studios (actually MGM in Borehamwood, where the series was made) which act as a cover for SHADO personnel led by ex-USAF colonel Ed Straker. SHADO also has a centre on the Moon - base for its interceptor craft and the first line of defence against marauding pyramid-shaped UFOs. Its hi-tech resources include SID - Space Intruder Detector - a sophisticated computer satellite, submarine/aircraft called Skydivers and a range of tank-like SHADO mobiles to pursue UFOs that reach Earth.

The aliens themselves were rarely seen - and nothing was revealed of their possible origins. But they were shown to have a liquid environment inside their space helmets for interstellar travel - a womb principle that Anderson told TV Times he devised after hearing of genuine scientific experiments involving keeping a dog alive underwater for an hour by filling its lungs with a special combination of water and gases.

The series had one of the biggest semi-resident casts for any TV show, though not all the regulars appeared in every episode. In fact, only one had a 100 per cent record. That was Commander Straker, play by Canadian actor Ed Bishop - the voice of Captain Blue in Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons. His right-hand men were Col. Alec Freeman and Col. Paul Foster, the former played by Special Branch star George Sewell who had also appeared with Ed Bishop in Doppelganger. UFO also boasted one of television's shapeliest regiments of women, dressed to kill in tight-fitting catsuits and mauve wigs. The glamorous commander of Moonbase, Lt. Gay Ellis, was played by Gabrielle Drake who later went on to head a very down-to-earth ITV outpost - the Crossroads motel.

With UFO Gerry Anderson finally cut the strings that tied him to his Supermarionated puppets. He'd filmed with live action in The Secret Service and made the jump with his 1969 feature film Doppelganger, but UFO was his first fully flesh-and-blood TV series. It was a natural development, and one which offered the chance to dust off many of the props, vehicles and costumes lying around after Doppelganger (aka Journey to the Far Side of the Sun). All the same, production costs were high - around £ 100,000 for each of the 26 hour-long. Although many of Century 21's regular writers were used on UFO, script editor Tony Barwick was responsible for 12 of the 26 scripts. There were notable contributions, too, from David Tomblin and Terence Feely.

This was a more adult science fiction show than the Supermarionation adventures, often edgy and downbeat in its plots and characterisation. Straker, for example, was shown as having a broken marriage behind him. ITV, though, didn't know how to take it. First screened in September 1970, it didn't get a network launch and was buried by many regions. A planned second series, with the emphasis switched to Moonbase, turned into Space: 1999 - but that's another story.

Set in the then-future 1980, the premise was that an international military command was set up to defend Earth from Unidentified Flying Objects. This New World Order strike force was SHADO -- Supreme Headquarters, Allied Defence Organisation. Produced in England, this series mocked American priorities by giving the commander, Edward Straker, a cover identity as a movie producer. John Brosnan ("Future Tense", p.299) notes that this first non-puppet series by Gerry and Sylvia Anderson had "a cast [that] seemed to be trying to imitate puppets, particularly Ed Bishop...)

Before this series the Andersons had been best known for their SF tv puppet series, such as THUNDERBIRDS. In this first live-action tv series from them the actors certainly resembled puppets, and the make-up, apparently deliberately, reinforced the effect. Set in the NEAR FUTURE (1980), UFO tells how SHADO (Supreme Headquarters Alien Defence Organisation), headed by Commander Straker (Ed Bishop), fighters against hostile, telepathic aliens in flying saucers (>UFOS). Meddings's special effects were impressive, though some of the props, costumes, etc., were recycled from the Andersons' first live-action production, the film DOPPELGÄNGER (1969; vt Journey to the Far Side of the Sun).

The bland scripts, though more sophisticated than those of the SuperMarionation puppet series, were typical of Anderson productions (see also SPACE 1999), possibly because the Andersons underestimated children's intelligence. Many of the stories, about elusive disguised aliens, were reminiscent of episodes of The INVADERS (1967-8). Though there were only 26 episodes, lack of enthusiasm by the commercial networks led to a gap of more than 2 years between first and last. Ties are *UFO  (1970; vt UFO-1: Flesh Hunters 1973 US) and *UFO 2  (1971; vt UFO-2: Sporting Blood 1973 US) by Robert Miall (Jonathan BURKE).

UFO was filmed in two blocks of episodes. The first block consisted of episodes: 1-2, 4-8, 10-11, 13, 15-17, 19-22 & 25. The second block consisted of episodes: 3, 9, 12, 14, 16, 18 23-24 & 26. Characters marked '*' only appeared in the first block, of episodes. Many characters who had secondary roles in the first block were given more predominant roles in the second block, to take their places. UFO was the first live action series produced by legendary British TV producer Gerry Anderson. Anderson had made a name for himself during the 1960's by producing many popular science fiction puppet series, including THUNDERBIRDS, SUPERCAR, FIREBALL XL-5, STINGRAY, JOE 90 and CAPTAIN SCARLET AND THE MYSTERONS. UFO had a premise which was similar to one of the puppet series. Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons. Both series were about organisations devoted to defending the Earth from alien invaders.

Produced in 1970, UFO was set in the then near future of 1980. The show told the story of a secret organisation known as SHADO (Supreme Headquarters Alien Defence Organisation). SHADO had been created in the 1970's to fight off a race of humanoid aliens who were coming to Earth from their dying home world to raid our planet of its resources. Included among the resources which they needed were human organs which they used to transplant into themselves SHADO was internationally funded and huge sums of money were spent developing the technology needed to defend the Earth from aliens once there was proof of their existence. Both the alien's and SHADO's very existence was kept secret from the public in the hopes that doing so would prevent wide scale public panic.

SHADO's base of operations was in a secret underground complex located beneath the Harlington-Straker film studios in the outskirts of London SID (Space Intruder Detector) was an unnamed satellite which was SHADO's early warning system. Once SID detected a UFO coming towards the Earth. SHADO's defences would come into action.

The first line of defence came from the SHADO moonbase. Once a UFO was detected, the moonbase would launch its three interceptors. The interceptors were fast one man spacecraft, each equipped with one huge missile. They would attempt to intercept and destroy the *UFO*s before they got to Earth. If the interceptors failed and the UFO made it to Earth, the alien craft then had to face Skydiver. Skydiver was a submarine with a fighter airplane (Sky 1) in its nose. If the *UFO*s made it past Skydiver and landed on the surface, SHADO mobiles were dispatched to the scene. Mobiles were heavily armoured vehicles which would attempt to destroy the UFO and if possible capture the ship's crew.

In charge of SHADO was Ed Straker. Straker was formerly an American Air Force Colonel. with degrees in astrophysics and lunar science from MIT. Straker was totally committed to his job and gave up his wife and family for SHADO. He also passed himself off as the film studio executive in charge of the studio which SHADO HQ was located beneath. Straker's chief aides were Colonel Alec Freeman, Colonel Virginia Lake and Colonel Paul Foster. Foster had been a test pilot who saw a UFO being shot down and was recruited into SHADO while trying to discover what he saw. The SHADO moonbase was under the command of Gay Ellis who along with her staff all wore purple wigs.

The aliens were very close in appearance to humans. a similarity that went more than skin deep since human organs could be used as transplants Their skin however was green, this colourization may have been caused by the green oxygenated liquid which the aliens breathed while travelling in space. Once removed from this liquid and exposed to the Earth's atmosphere the aliens would quickly grow old and die. The aliens' technology was much more advanced than our own They were aware of Shado's existence and seemed able to infiltrate SHADO with ease. It was almost as if the aliens were playing a game of cat and mouse with SHADO, and that if they wanted to they could wipe SHADO out. No effort was ever made by either the humans or the aliens to communicate with each other.

The production values on UFO were first rate. The special effects and model work were the best to appear on TV up to that time and still hold up very well. Use was also made of stock effects footage from Doppelgänger (aka Journey to the Far Side of the Sun) a feature film produced by Anderson shortly before UFO went into production.

Although UFO is still quite popular with science fiction fans, the series never was able to find its audience when it was first on. This may have been due in part to the fact that Anderson was known as a producer of children's TV programmes, and TV station programmers treated UFO like a children's show, a classification which UFO on the surface might fall into. UFO did however deal with a number of adult themes such as adultery and drug use and was clearly aimed at adults. What was to be a second series of UFO metamorphosed into what eventually became the first series of SPACE: 1999, but that's another story.

NOTES: The original U.K order made little sense continuity wise. Episodes from the two production blocks were run all mixed up. The series did not receive good treatment from ITV and was never run on the same time and date in the different ITV regions. Two episodes remained unaired until the series was rerun in 1973. The ATV broadcast dates and order are shown here, as it was the first region to begin broadcasting the series.

The series was first released in the US in the autumn of 1972, and the British screen dates are for the ATV, Midlands region (ITV). The executive producer was Gerry Anderson, producers were Reg Hill and Gerry Anderson, script editor was Tony Barwick, special effects were created by Derek Meddlings, and the music was by Barry Gray. Famous actors to have appeared in UFO include Windsor Davies (TERRAHAWKS), Lois Maxwell, Philip Madoc, Stephanie Beacham, Stuart Damon (THE CHAMPIONS) and George Cole. Century 21 fashions by Sylvia Anderson, the art director was Bob Bell and the lighting cameraman was Bernard Stafford BSC.

UFO was filmed in two shooting blocks at two studios, due to an unexpected closure of the first studio after 17 episodes had been filmed. There was a 6 month period spent waiting for soundstages to become available at the second studio, and since many of the actors were not contractually obligated to stay with the series, they went and found jobs elsewhere. The episodes in the second shooting block are missing many of the regulars from the first block, including Col. Alec Freeman, Lt. Gay Ellis, Lt. Keith Ford, Capt. Lew Waterman, and Lt. Joan Harrington. Many of these characters were replaced with new ones, Col. Virginia Lake was added to replace Col. Freeman, and Lt. Nina Barry was promoted to replace Lt. Ellis.

To determine which episodes were filmed in which shooting block, see the production order listed in the first 17 episodes were filmed at MGM Borehamwood studios from May to December 1969, while the remaining 9 were filmed at Pinewood studios from May to September 1970. There were a few other significant character/cast changes made while the series was in production. Capt. Peter Carlin was originally intended to be a main character, but was dropped early in the production because the actor's agent feared he would become typecast as a sci-fi television series actor. Col. Paul Foster was added after a few episodes had been made to give the series a more youthful and appealing male lead. Dr. Jackson was added because the producers liked the actor, and the actor playing Dr. Shroeder had become ill. And Interceptor pilot Mark Bradley was dropped because the producers didn't think the actor's abilities were up to their expectations.

There are a few bloopers as well in the show. Probably the most noticeable is in "The Long Sleep", when Straker refers to a "Miss Ross". The original script gave Catherine a last name of "Ross", but this was changed to "Fraser" prior to filming -- unfortunately, one occurrence of "Ross" managed to slip by everyone involved in the production! In "Identified", Lt. Ford tells Straker that he's been with SHADO for two years. Yet, during a flashback in "Confetti Check A-OK", we see that he was with SHADO ten years ago! In "Reflections in the Water", there is a major battle at the end, and 4 Interceptor missiles are shown to be fired, which is somewhat surprising, since there are only 3 Interceptors with 1 missile each!

In "Confetti Check A-OK", there is a shot of Straker's futuristic car pulling up to General Henderson's office. The problem is that this is a flashback scene, and was long before Straker had a futuristic car! In "Computer Affair", Astronaut Mark Bradley and Gay Ellis have dinner together and are drinking a 1984 vintage wine. While not technically a blooper, many fans regard this as a mistake, as this episode seems to be early in SHADO's history, which would put it in the 1980-1981 time frame.

Also not technically a blooper, Lt. Ford's voice has obviously been dubbed over with another actor's voice in the episode "The Square Triangle". Actor Keith Alexander was often out of the country during UFO's production, and most likely another actor was brought in to redub his voice due to a problem with the original sound recording made on the set.

Most of Gerry & Sylvia Anderson's series only lasted 39 episodes or less, as financier Lew Grade was more interested in the prospects of making a brand new series than continuing an old one. So when UFO finished filming 26 episodes in the fall of 1970, it wasn't even expected that there would be more episodes. And sure enough, Lew asked Gerry to start filming the detective/crime-fighting series "The Protectors".

UFO began broadcasting in England as the final episodes were being filmed, and the local stations didn't quite know how to schedule it, as they were expecting another Gerry Anderson children's program, but instead got something that had a lot of adult content. As a result, different stations showed it at different times, and moved some episodes to late night or refused to show them at all. As one might expect, ratings were not very good.

ITC saw the American market as being very important, and UFO was first broadcast there two years after filming had been completed. In the biggest markets of New York and Los Angeles, UFO did very well in the ratings for the first several months. It did so well in fact that CBS was thinking about ordering a second season. As a result, Gerry Anderson and his team began pre-production on a sequel series which would take place in the year 1999. The battle with the Aliens would have escalated, and SHADO HQ would have been moved to the moon in a much larger moonbase. Models, sets, costumes, and scripts were prepared, but then UFO's ratings began to fall in America, and Lew Grade decided to cancel the project. However, Gerry pitched the idea to use this pre-production work for a brand new series, and SPACE: 1999 was born.

After more than 25 years since UFO finished production, a film production company in Australia has begun exploring the prospects of creating a brand new series based on UFO. This series would most likely be based in the present, and feature Ed Bishop in the role of "General Straker". Negotiations over rights and financing are currently underway, and if all goes well, production could begin in late 1997.

There is certainly nothing onscreen to indicate a direct link between UFO and any other Anderson production. However, there has been a lot of publicity & fan conjecture about a shared "universe" of events in the various Anderson productions. In fact, prior to SPACE: 1999's premiere, ITC circulated some background information which included statements saying that Moonbase Alpha was an evolution of the SHADO Moonbase, that the Aliens had stopped coming to the Earth around 1990, and that the Hawk fighter was a replacement for the Interceptor. Not all fans have chosen to believe this though.

However, there are certainly a lot of similarities between UFO and many of the other Anderson productions due to the same group of people working on them. Notable among these are Gerry Anderson & Reg Hill (producers & series concept), Sylvia Anderson (fashions, casting & series concept), Tony Barwick (script editor & writer), Derek Meddings (vehicle design & special effects), Barry Gray (music & sound effects), Bob Bell (art director & set design), and David Lane and Alan Perry (directors). Many of UFO's regular and guest cast also worked in other Anderson productions, either as actors or voices for puppet characters.

There are also some similarities between the story elements in UFO and other Anderson productions. Organisations protecting against danger is a common theme, and was the basis of the earlier puppet series STINGRAY, THUNDERBIRDS, and CAPTAIN SCARLET. Other familiar plot elements in UFO are the secret organisation (THUNDERBIRDS) and an ongoing battle with Aliens (CAPTAIN SCARLET). UFO also has a lot in common with the Anderson's 1968 live action movie Doppelganger, aka Journey to the Far Side of the Sun. This film features several UFO cast members and many elements that would be later reused in UFO, like the futuristic automobiles and jeeps, the astronaut suits, and the models of a launch facility and rocket.

INVASION: UFO is a 90 minute movie created by compiling scenes from several episodes of UFO. It is not the pilot movie for the series, and in fact was produced ten years after UFO was made! The episodes used for the compilation are "Identified" (32 mins), "Computer Affair" (25 mins), "Reflections in the Water" (27 mins), "Confetti Check A-OK" (5 min), "The Man Who Came Back" (1 min), and ESP (less than 1 min). A new title sequence was created, and additional music was added or overlaid onto the existing music. There are some fans who find this compilation movie enjoyable, while others think it is cheesy and vastly inferior to the original episodes. Oddly enough, INVASION: UFO has been broadcast more frequently than the original series in many areas, and in England, five of the original UFO episodes used to make the movie cannot be released on home video because the movie has exclusive video rights! Although INVASION: UFO was the only English-language UFO compilation movie, there were 5 dubbed Italian UFO compilation movies which were released in Italian theatres in the early 1970's. Three of these are currently available on home video in Italy.

To people who don't follow or have access to British film, TV, theatre, or radio productions, it would appear that practically everyone who appeared in UFO never worked in show business again! This is certainly not the case however, as many of the major UFO players, like Ed Bishop, Mike Billington, George Sewell, Wanda Ventham, and Gabrielle Drake have continued working in British productions. When UFO was first released, it was expected that Ed Bishop would become a major star, but unfortunately this did not happen. However, Ed has found steady work in England with voice-overs, stage plays, and radio dramatisations. He has also been quite active in UFO fandom and has appeared at many science fiction conventions in London and elsewhere.

Mike Billington followed UFO with the leading role in the BBC historical drama THE ONEDIN LINE, a part for which he is probably best remembered for in England. Since then, he has done some television work and concentrated on teaching method acting in America and England. George Sewell and Gabrielle Drake have continued working in British television and theatre, while Wanda Ventham has appeared in many British television series. A few of the regular cast members have passed away since the filming of UFO. These include Grant Taylor (General Henderson), who was ill during the filming of UFO and passed away shortly after the series had finished production, and Vladek Sheybal (Dr. Jackson) and Norma Ronald (Miss Ealand), who both have passed away in recent years.

Excluding the previously mentioned videos, there has been a fair amount of UFO merchandise released all around the world, most notably in Japan, England, and Italy. Naturally, most of this merchandise came out in the early 1970's, and is difficult if not impossible to find today. However, new products were released in the 1980's and 1990's, some of which can be easily found today. Perhaps the most popular items have been the various model kits and die-cast models of the various SHADO vehicles and such. These were mostly produced by IMAI, BANDAI, and DINKY, and include things like the Interceptor, the UFO, Skydiver, Sky One, the Mobile, the Lunar Module, the Lunar Carrier, Moonbase, Strakers car -- even Lt. Ellis! Quite a few of these can still be found today, although they can be a bit pricy.

As for books, there were originally two English-language novelizations, a British "UFO Annual", several comics, and many Italian photo-novelizations. In the early 1980's there were two Japanese visual guidebooks released, and yet another one in 1993 called the "UFO Super Guide". There have been a few UFO-related books released in recent years, including the "UFO & Space: 1999 Book" (series guides), "21st Century Visions" (Derek Medding's book on Anderson special effects), and "The Gerry Anderson Memorabilia Guide" (a guide to all Anderson merchandise). The FANDERSON club (see FAQ#23) also recently released a booklet full of UFO pre-production drawings.

As for magazines, most of the English language ones which cover UFO are from England. Magazines like SIG, CENTURY 21, TV ZONE, TIME SCREEN, and SFX have had articles of interest to UFO fans, and many of these are still available as back issues. Interesting UFO information can also be found in fan club publications, like SHADO-USECC's COMMUNIQUE newsletter and FANDERSON's FAB magazine.

A number of miscellaneous items were also released in the early 1970's, including trading cards, comics, puzzles, viewmaster reels, lunchboxes, colouring books -- even a UFO board game was released in Italy! Most of these items are very rare today, and must be obtained second-hand. FANDERSON currently sells some photos, audio tapes from UFO conventions, plus an excellent one hour video documentary on the "Making of UFO". Many UFO photos & slides have been available over the years, but the selection and number of merchants selling them today appears to be very small. There was no official UFO soundtrack released, although some of the original music has been released on FANDERSON mini-albums in the past, and a few fans have somehow acquired copies of Barry Gray's original studio recordings. And finally, ITC publicity materials, scripts, original models, and other rare items are owned by a few hard-core fans, and are generally not for sale!

In 1980, a secret organization called SHADO (Supreme Headquarters Alien Defense Organization) battles hostile alien creatures from a dying world. SHADO's control center is hidden beneath the Harlington-Straker film studio, which controls moonbase, a fleet of submarines and land mobiles.

Created by: Gerry and Sylvia Anderson, with Reg Hill; Producer: Reg Hill; Executive Producer: Gerry Anderson; Century 21 Fashions by: Sylvia Anderson; Special Effects Supervisor: Derek Meddings; Music: Barry Gray; Director of Photography: Brendan Stafford; CBS/ITC Entertainment; 60 minutes.

UFO was an action-packed series loaded with spectacular hardware: A moonbase that launched interceptor spaceships; a fleet of submarines that launched missile-carrying aircraft; SID, a satellite with a booming British voice that announced the trajectory of incoming UFOs; and vehicles that included Commander Straker's bubbletop car (actually a modified Zephyr-Zodiac MK 1V).

On the bad guys' side was a seemingly inexhaustible supply of alien flying saucers that zoomed across the galaxy with masochistic determination. Most of the saucers were blown apart by the interceptors before reaching Earth. A few of the hostile marauders did land on Earth to kidnap unwitting humans. The aliens couldn't live in Earth's atmosphere long, however. After a few days, their bodies aged and their spaceships began to deteriorate.

UFO was the first live-action series created by the husband-and-wife team of Gerry and Sylvia Anderson. Previously, the English couple had produced such children's adventure programs as Thunderbirds and Captain Scarlet. These Super Marionation puppet series enjoyed huge international success.

UFO benefited from a no-nonsense approach to its subject matter. Despite the comicstrip premise, many plots had a remarkably adult subtext. The photography was first-rate, the editing exceptional and the theme music exciting. Conceptually, the show's weakest link was the aliens. They traveled millions of light years across space, clad in red spacesuits and breathing green liquid, to raid human beings of their body organs. It was an unpleasant and impractical premise. For the aliens to get away with a couple of hearts and a lung didn't seem to justify the weekly destruction they faced from Earth's defenses. In later episodes, the aliens' motives for attacking Earth grew murkier. The concept of Earth as an intergalactic grocery store gave way to a straight "us or them" conflict as the aliens tried to destroy all of mankind. Portraying a weekly war on a TV budget was a formidable task. Dozens of alien saucers were created exclusively for the series, and dozens were blown up by the special effects men. This became too expensive, and the technicians learned to rely on quick editing to insert shots of exploding magnesium rather than destroy any more saucers.

Before UFO began production, ITC Entertainment hoped that the series could be sold to one of the American networks. With this in mind, Ed Bishop was chosen as the lead. Bishop had moved to England from America in the early 1960s and had worked for the Andersons in their 1969 film Journey to the Far Side of the Sun. Bishop portrayed Straker with a steely determination. Beneath the cool exterior, Bishop hinted at a sensitive, tragic man who had been given the job of saving the universe at any cost. His dedication ultimately cost him his marriage and his son's life. When one character suggests Straker go home and get some rest, Straker bitterly replies, "What home?" SHADO became his total existence.

"Straker was one of those guys who had a singleness of purpose," says Bishop. "In his life, there was very little grey. Everything was black and white, right and wrong. He put everything through his own personal sieve and it came out the way he wanted it. With a hard-ass like Straker, you could throw anything at him and he would field it. Nothing fazed him. He was also one of those guys who was constantly in turmoil. If you removed the turmoil, he'd find another source of turmoil to satisfy him. Straker always came to the fore under great pressure."

The female characters on UFO were caught between a futuristic vision of equality and the leering sexism of the 1960s. Women controlled moonbase, and they did their jobs coolly and efficiently. On the other hand, they were dressed in skin-tight leotards and wore purple wigs and aberrant eye shadow. The most heroic female character was on Earth, Col. Virginia Lake (Wanda Ventham). She could compete with the men in the most hazardous of missions, but she retained a dignified femininity. "It was very important to me to have women characters represented as strong and courageous as opposed to being merely decorative," says Sylvia Anderson. "However, as I was a lone voice at the executive level, I was by no means happy with all of the female characters. They were written by an all-male team of writers. For the time, I felt UFO made some steps forward."

The first 18 episodes of the series were filmed in early 1969 at MGM studios in England. The remaining eight episodes were shot at Pinewood studios later that year. Prior to filming, an enthusiastic Gerry Anderson interviewed UFO experts and solicited scientists' advice on the liquid-breathing biology of the aliens. When the series premiered in England, it boasted the largest regular cast in TV history. However, several key actors didn't last the season. Peter Gordeno, who played submarine Captain Peter Carlin, was soon dismissed from SHADO duty. "Peter was considered a nonactor" by executive management, says Sylvia Anderson of the singer and dancer. "Therefore, his contract was not renewed. I, personally, thought that was a mistake. His character was interesting [Carlin's sister had been killed by the aliens], and Peter's personality overcame his lack of acting experience."

Straker's right-hand man, Alec Freeman, was characterized with a quiet sensitivity and humor by George Sewell. He was also phased out by the season's end in an effort to sell UFO to America for syndication. "The American networks found George Sewell not as attractive as their second leads in America normally were," says Sylvia Anderson. "As a result, I cast Michael Billington [Col. Foster] to replace him." The third major change was the loss of Lt. Ellis (Gabrielle Drake) from Moonbase. Drake left the series to pursue other acting jobs.

Straker's foil during the series was his superior, the gruff General Henderson. Some of the series' best scenes were provided by the clashes between the two men. The late Grant Taylor played Henderson, and it was to be his last role. "Grant was a terrific guy," recalls Bishop. "He was an Australian actor who came to England during the early 1960s. He had been a boxer, football player and star athlete. He was a magnificent actor, but his career never really took off. He was still a very employable actor, and he was wonderful as General Henderson. Grant was a very uninhibited guy who lived life to its fullest.

"After we shot the 18 episodes at MGM, we had a holdover for four months before filming resumed at Pinewood. When Grant showed up, he had lost half his body weight. He was gaunt, thin and drawn. He had cancer. He was no longer the gregarious guy who was on the set six months earlier. He was now very quiet and rarely spoke to anybody. He did his lines and sat in a chair, reading a book. If you'd go over and try to talk to him, he was very monosyllabic. It was totally unlike him."

Realizing he only had weeks to live, Taylor invited his closest friends to a last dinner party. "He gave a farewell party," says Bishop, "He said to everybody, 'Look, I'm dying. This is the last time you'll see me, so say your goodbyes.' That's the way Grant went out, with a sense of style. He died either just before UFO finished filming or immediately after. It was certainly the last job Grant ever did." Under the action-laden premise of the series were some surprisingly adult dramas dealing with the sacrifices SHADO demanded of peoples' lives.

Unlike many science fiction series, UFO improved as it went on, breathing life into its limited format with stories of time warps, mindaltering drugs and undersea alien installations. In the ultimate surreal adventure, "Mindbender" . Straker finds himself in a nightmare world where SHADO is merely a TV show. The episode follows Straker's travels from set to set in his effort to find reality. It offered an intriguing look at the UFO sets and studio background. "The strengths of UFO were the special effects and the visual presentation," says Bishop. "Sylvia Anderson was largely responsible for how the show looked. The main weakness of the series was our format. It was a very narrow channel. Every week the aliens came, we went on red alert and scrambled to meet them. That was the basic formula. If you compare that to Star Trek, where the universe was their oyster, you realize how constricting UFO was."

Having seen a few of the episodes recently, Bishop observes, "As an actor, the stories I liked the most were ones about Straker's personal relationships. The breakup of his marriage and the story about his son. Give me the beautiful Suzanne Neve [who played Straker's wife] anytime over a radar screen! Yet, seeing them now, I don't feel those personal elements on UFO worked that well."

Bishop's favorite episode was "Sub Smash," where the commander struggles to survive in a capsized sub after a UFO attack. "When I first accepted the role of Straker, I said to myself, 'I'm going to act the part as if I don't know the ending of the script.' Because you can usually see behind a hero's eyes. They know they're going to be back next week, so any danger they face is qualified. I wanted to get away from that.

"In Sub Smash, Straker really thinks this is the end, and I tried to convey that." With only minutes of air left, Straker begins to hallucinate. "Straker never mentioned religion, but as he's sitting there, dying, he says a simple line of, 'We wait for the day of resurrection.' It was an interesting facet of Straker to play, but there was great controversy over that. People said, 'No, No! That's pretentious. It's horseshit.' The guy who did the post-production hated it so much he tried to drown it out with music!"

UFO scripter Terence Feely recalls the show as well made and satisfying to work on. "It was certainly ahead of its time. It shared something with TV's The Prisoner in that Gerry Anderson found it easy to take on lateral thinking and the surreal. Gerry has a mind that understands the powerful logic of the surreal." Feely, who later wrote for Anderson's Space 1999 series, says, "UFO was easier to write for than Space 1999. UFO gave me an opportunity to write better plots, while Space 1999 had better characters. That's often the choice in science fiction." The writer didn't resent the special-effects nature of both series. "The effects were a blessing. They can cover a multitude of writing blemishes."

UFO premiered in England in 1970, but its scheduling broadcasts were erratic. Science fiction was generally regarded as children's fare, and TV programmers were baffled by UFO's adult content. Some episodes were broadcast in late evening slots to protect younger viewers from their intense themes.

As UFO endured a choppy and ineffective run in its native England, the series' 26 episodes were enjoying a highly successful 1970-71 broadcast in Canada on the CTV network. America held its option on UFO until the fall of 1972, when the episodes began a major launch on 91 United States markets, five of them owned by CBS. A successful North American run could have revived production of the series. UFO premiered to good ratings. Most Americans were unaware that the episodes were over three years old, and the series' deft camerawork, sharp editing and futuristic presentation gave the show a contemporary look.

Ironically, as UFO made a splash in America, its star, Ed Bishop, was also in the United States, toiling away at odd jobs. "We finished filming UFO in 1969," he says, "and frankly, my phone didn't ring. I didn't get any offers of work. It could have been that when the show was over, people in the busi-ness presumed that, 'Oh, Ed just did a big TV series. He's not interested in the sort of bread and butter acting jobs we used to give him.' Also, UFO was not a successful series in England. I think a lot of people thought I was lousy in it. So for a time, I didn't make any money, and I had a young family to support. My wife was very supportive. She became a schoolteacher, and she helped considerably but I had to do something." In 1972, Bishop decided to try his luck in America. With only 200 dollars in his pocket, he boarded a plane for America, his arrival coinciding with UFO's launch.

"I had one important asset," he says. "A very dear friend of mine had a wonderful apartment in Central Park West in New York. I stayed with him while I called up agents, trying to get work." Between acting roles, Bishop supported himself by doing odd jobs. "I'm quite good at what you call self-help-electricity, plumbing, wallpapering, and construction. I did that between acting appointments." It led to one of the strangest events in Bishop's life. "This story serves as a moral for anybody who is dazzled by the glamour of showbiz," he says.

"I got a wallpapering job in the Bronx one Saturday morning. A very nice couple wanted me to wallpaper their kitchen for 75 bucks. So I arrived with my bucket and paste. I began what was a slow, fiddly-like job. I was there all day, and around 6 p.m. the couple and their teenaged daughter went into the living room to watch Td Meanwhile, I concentrated on getting this wallpapering job done. At 7 p.m., I heard this music from the TV I stopped working and said, 'My God!

That's the UFO theme music!' I got off my step ladder, put down my bucket and peered into the living room. They were watching me on UFO. I didn't know whether to laugh or cry. I probably did both. It was so bizarre! Here I am, the leading guy on this TV show, and I'm wallpapering their kitchen. When I finished at 9 p.m., they paid me my 75 dollars and off I went. To this day, those people don't know who I was! It's just as well," Bishop laughs. "If they had known, it would have been extremely embarrassing!" When Bishop returned to England in the mid-1970s, work had picked up for the actor. UFO concluded a successful run on American TV in 1973. In March 1973, TV Guide critic Cleveland Amory gave UFO a negative review in his column. Viewers angrily protested his swipes at the series. Amory later admitted that UFO generated a surprising amount of favorable mail.

Gerry and Sylvia Anderson waited to see if the American affiliates were interested in a second season of UFO. Though the series had been filmed four years ago, many of the props had been stored, and some of the cast was available. The late Tony Barwick, UFO's story editor, wrote several scripts in case UFO was revived. However, affiliates were more interested in the creation of the Andersons' Space 1999 series, which began an American run in 1975. "A second season of UFO was highly anticipated," says Sylvia Anderson. "Had it continued, it would have been set entirely on the moon. This is, of course, what did happen with Space:1999." UFO vanished from most screens after 1975. Ten years later, the show slowly sizzled back into the consciousness of British and American audiences. Isolated reruns sparked fan clubs, and several successful conventions in England reunited the UFO cast. Episodes of UFO were also released on video, and the series enjoyed a run on America's Science Fiction cable channel. The series found tremendous success in Japan, where toys based on the series' hardware continue to sell well.

"UFO didn't receive the acclaim and popularity it deserved during its first run," acknowledges Sylvia Anderson. "Science fiction wasn't highly regarded in the creative world of British TV. In other words, it was ahead of its time." In Anderson's view, the series holds up well today, but she notes the show's weaknesses included "some substandard scripts and a lack of subtle direction." Ed Bishop says, "UFO had the moonbase, subs and planes to protect England from UFO raids. In many ways, it was like the battle of Britain all over again. But that premise also restricted the show. It was too confining. I would have liked to have seen, in a second year, that storyline expanded somehow." Bishop has been a guest at several British UFO conventions in recent years. He's gratified by the series' sustained popularity. "The spectrum of questions from the fans is amazing," he says. "They ask very astute and perceptive things. It's flattering to meet people who remember your work."

The fan reaction has made Bishop ponder the possibility of a UFO film. "I think there's a very good feature film struggling to get out of the ashes," he notes. "I'd be interested in being a part of that. There was still a lot of mileage in ol' Straker." Bishop doesn't feel a UFO revival would require all of the hardware. "It could simply be about some of the characters on UFO and what became of them. Did they defeat the aliens? Was SHADO shut down? It would be interesting to find out what became of Straker. Maybe he's an alcoholic living in Sydney, Australia, or Elephant Breath, Wisconsin. He tells everybody about the SHADO days and nobody listens. People are going, 'Oh, here comes that nut case again! Give him a drink!' Someone with a corkscrew imagination could write a good film script. I think there's certainly a creative vein there, waiting to be dug."

CAST NOTES

Ed Bishop (Straker): Born 1936. After graduating from the Boston University Theatre Division in 1960, Bishop moved to England. He provided the voice for Captain Blue in the Gerry Anderson puppet series Captain Scarlet in the 1960s. His film credits include You Only Live Twice (1967) and 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968). He's one of England's top voice artists.

Michael Billington (Foster): Born 1948. Billington played Barbara Bach's Russian boyfriend who is killed by James Bond at the beginning of The Spy Who Loved Me (1977). He later came to America to co-star in the ill-fated series The Quest (1982). He returned to England, where he became a schoolteacher.

Wanda Ventham (Col. Lake): Born 1938. Ventham made news headlines in 1992 during her starring performance in the stage comedy It Runs in the Family. A middle-aged audience member leaped up on stage and claimed she was his mother. The actress used good humor to get the man offstage, and the show went on.

Gabrielle Drake (Lt. Ellis): Born 1945. Her first acting role was on stage at the age of six. A businesswoman and stage actress, Drake was one of the stars of the English hit series The Brothers in the mid-1970s. She spent three years playing the boss on the soap opera Crossroads (1985-88).

George Sewell (Alec): Born 1924. Sewell caught UFO producer Gerry Anderson's attention in 1968 when he co-starred in his film Journey to the Far Side of the Sun. He also starred in the successful English crime drama series The Branch. He continues working as a British character actor.

Peter Gorden (Capt. Carlin): A former ballet dancer, Gordon continued acting after UFO and had a featured role in the 1980s film Carry On, Columbus.

Vladek Sheybal (Dr. Jackson): Born 1932 in Poland. Sheybal often played a bad guy, as in the James Bond film From Russia, with Love (1964). His later appearances included the mini-series Shogun (1980). Sheybal was also a writer and director. He died in 1992.

ULTRA GALAXY : GIANT MONSTER BATTLE

AKA: ULTRA GALAXY : DAIKAIJYU BATTLE

Ultra Galaxy: Daikaijyu Battle is the 22nd entry in the Tsuburaya Productions' long-running Ultra Series. It is an adaption of the video game Daikaijyu Battle: ULTRA MONSTERS. The show first aired on December 1, 2007.

Leading character Rei is played by 25-year-old Minami Shota. He has been a regular stage actor in the last few years, and also appeared in the TV drama series PRINCESS PRINCESS D (Purinsesu Purinsesu D, 2006) for TV Asahi, the live-action adaptation of the manga Princess Princess (Purinsesu Purinsesu) by author Mikiyo Tsuda.

Rei's fellow ZAP SPACY companions are Captain Hyuuga, Kumano, Haruna and Oki.

Kumano is being portrayed Mitsutoshi Shundo, popular among fans for his role as the human alter-ego of Dark Mephisto, Shinya Mizorogi, in the TV series ULTRAMAN NEXUS (Urutoraman Nekusasu, 2004). He also appeared in several episodes of Tsuburaya's HD mini-series series BIO PLANET WOO (Seibutsu Suisei Wuu, 2006) for NHK.

Another Ultra series veteran, Hiroyuki Konishi, appears as Captain Hyuuga. Konishi previously appeared in the movie ULTRAMAN TIGA: THE FINAL ODYSSEY (Urutoraman Tiga Za Fainaru Odessei, 2000) as Nagumo. The latest Ultra-starlet Saki Kamiryo, playing the part of Haruna, also appeared in episode #17 of ULTRAMAN MAX (Urutoraman Makkusu, 2005). Finally, 23-year-old Tooru Hachinohe plays ZAP member Oki. Acting as a representative for McDonald's in Japan in 2006, he went on to appear in the movie PLEASE GIVE ME A WONDERFUL NIGHT (Sutekinayoru Boku-ni kudasai, 2007) earlier this year.

The staff for ULTRA GALAXY: GIANT MONSTER BATTLE includes ULTRAMAN NEXUS writer Kenichi Araki who will be serving as both main writer and series organizer, GODZILLA MOTHRA & KING GHIDORAH (aka. GMK, Gojira Mosura Kingugidora Daikaiju Sokougeki, 2001) writer Keiichi Hasegawa, and making his directorial debut is Yuuichi Kikuchi, previously the special effects director for GODZILLA AGAINST MECHAGODZILLA (Gojira tai Mekagojira, 2002) and ULTRAMAN: THE NEXT (Ultraman, 2004).

Character

Rei : A mysterious man who joined as a member of ZAP SPACY, and summons and battles a monster using the Battle Nizer.

Haruna : The subcaptain of Space Pendragon. She is a strict ace pilot and is Hyuga's right-hand man. Her real name is Jun Haruna Oki : The rookie crew member of Space Pendragon. He is a cheerful youth who has knows a lot about monsters. His real name is Koichi Oki.

Kumano: The engineer of Space Pendragon. His real name is Masahiko Kumano.

Hyuga : The captain of Space Pendragon. He is hot-blooded man who is excellent in martial arts and has overcome many hardships all over the universe. His real name is Hiroshi Hyuga.

Reimon

Reimon : It is a mysterious giant similar to Ultraman.

ZAP SPACY

ZAP SPACY : It is an organization which mainly mines energy resources using a spacecraft and supports planet reclamation.

Ship

Space Pendragon: The space transport ship of ZAP SPACY. The lower part is equipped with the variable cargo.

Dragon Speeder Alpha : It is Small fighter jet separated from the nose.

Dragon Speeder Beta :It is small fighter jet separated from the top part.

Equipment

Battle Nizer : It item allows Rei to summon a monster through a system called MonsLoad . Rei shares his body with the monster, such that when the monster gets injured, Rei also gets injured.

Try Gunner : It is a multifunction gun which the ZAP SPACY crew uses.

Music

Opening theme

"Eternal Traveller" by Project DMM

Ending theme

"JUMP UP" by Lekkazan.

ULTRA Q

AKA: URUTORA Q

"For the next 30 minutes, your eyes will part (sic) from your body, and going into the mystery zone".

Hoshikawa Airlines pilot Jun Majome (Sahara) moonlights as a science fiction writer, occasionally finding inspiration by investigating strange phenomena in the company of his co-pilot Ippei (Saijo) and lady newspaper photographer Yuriko (Sakurai). The trio can also call on the advice of Professor Inchinotani (Egawa), a venerable scientist.

Gomess, a modified Godzilla costume, awakens from hibernation at a tunnel construction site, and the only thing that will stop him is the prehistoric bird Ultra, his natural Nemesis. In this world, there are many occurrences that cannot yet be explained by known science. Humanity is in peril. Monsters are emerging because the balance of nature has been destroyed by man. More monsters have been brought to earth by invading aliens. Jun and his friends keep running into one oddity after another, and it's up to them to save the world, without superpowers.

As audiences grew for Japanese domestic television after the 1964 Tokyo Olympics, the TBS network dabbled in reproducing the successes of other channels. After KRT's successful duplication of THE ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN with its MOONLIGHT MASK, TBS looked to the new show of the moment, the NTV broadcast of THE TWILIGHT ZONE, for a new direction. Snatching the second season of the THE TWILIGHT ZONE for itself in 1964, TBS then imitated its U.S. import with this homegrown production. Produced by Eiji Tsuburaya, whose greatest previous success had been as the special effects technician on Godzilla, the first planned episode of the new series was the enjoyable camp Mammoth Flower, which featured a giant plant like an oversized triffid, extending its roots around central Tokyo, and only defeated by Jun flying overhead in his Cessna and dropping an acid bomb.

However, producers soon discarded THE TWILIGHT ZONE emphasis on stories with twists in the tale or nature run wild - thought Mammoth Flower was eventually incorporated into the series as a broadcast episode #4. The original plan to imitate Rod Serling's show was shelved for a while, and eventually dusted off as UNBALANCE. Meanwhile, the untitled project in development was named in the honor of "Ultra C", the name of a difficult gymnastics move that had entered Japanese slang in the wake of the Tokyo Olympics.

The Ultra Q(uestion) series proper preferred to introduce at least one costumed monster each week that would then cause havoc while the investigators looked on. Plots included creatures awakened from prehistoric sleep, alien invaders, and everyday animals exposed to scientific widgets or potions that turned them into gigantic monsters. Forces of nature such as Gorgos the rock monster rubbed shoulders with creatures such as Mongura, formed when a garden variety mole ingests royal jelly extracted from mutant bees.

Even the more traditional thriller plots have a monster connection - it is not enough for the newly inaugurated "Inazuma" train to run out of control in episode #10, the incident has to be caused by M-1, an escaped artificially engineered lifeform that soon grows into a monster. Similarly, a story that clearly started out as a "ghost ship" chiller along the lines of the Flying Dutchman, is soon ppped up with the arrival onboard of a giant bird.

With a long 15 month production schedule that swiftly used up Tsuburaya's supply of monster suits as fast as the effects department could make them, later episodes soon brought back monster "favourites" for repeat performances, or cameos with slightly altered appearances. The search for monster-free plots led to one of the series' most memorable stories, in which Yuriko investigates the "1/8 project", and discovers that it is a science experiment designed to miniaturize the population of Japan in order to free up more living space and allow the better distribution of food.

Needless to say, Yuriko is soon miniaturized, allowing the producers to shoot an entire episode in which her fellow investigators get to stomp around a model city looking for her. The ending of that episode features Yuriko waki at the teeming population of the city below. . .

The later Ultra Q episodes also used several more monster-free episodes that were originally filmed for the abortive UNBALANCE, including a tale of demonic possession in which the only "Monster" is a psychic schoolgirl. However, TBS wanted more monsters, forcing Tsuburaya to come up with a means of defeating a terrifying menace each week. The straightforward answer was to find a superhero who could deal with them on equal terms. Accordingly, the 28th episode, a complicated tale about an innocuous looking train that could travel through time and relative dimensions in space, was dropped in favor of a pilot episode for a new show. Utilizing a new version of the Ultra Q credit sequence and part of the series name in order to break the audience in gently, the new series was ULTRAMAN. Ultra Q was brought back as a color movie in 1990.

Notable Guest Appearances by Susumu Fujita, Akihiko Hirata, Seizaburō Kawazu, Akira Kubo, Senkichi Omura, Sachio Sakai, Kazuo Suzuki, Yoshifumi Tajima, Jun Tazaki, Yoshio Tsuchiya. Original music by Kunio Miyauchi. Produced by Eiji Tsuburaya. Other crew: Special effects directors - Teisho Arikawa, Hajime Koizumi & Hajime Tsuburaya.

Ultra Q was the name of the show that preceded Ultraman. It was the first show Tsuburaya Productions produced. Unlike its successors, mentioned below, Ultra Q did not deal with an alien super-hero. Instead, it was a cross between the miscellaneous Japanese monster movies and the American shows THE TWILIGHT ZONE and THE OUTER LIMITS, with a slight mix of THE X FILES thrown in for good measure. Ultra Q involved the exploits of a pilot & science fiction writer, a news photographer, and an Air Service pilot investigating strange phenomena and raging monsters.

As a result, there was no "Ultraman" named "Ultra Q." Ultra Q did, however, contribute several monsters, including the most famous, the small Pegila, who appeared twice in Ultraman, once in Ultraseven, and as a robot helper/comic relief in the animated The Ultraman.

As a side note, in the 90's Tsuburaya Productions recreated Ultra Q in movie form for modern audiences. Long-time fans of Ultraman and Ultraseven might recognise the actors playing three detectives investigating the murders that form the centrepiece of the movie's plot. They are Susume Kurobe (Hayata from Ultraman), Shoji Kobayashi (Captain Muramatsu from Ultraman) and Sandaiyu Dokumamushi (Arashi from Ultraman, and Furuhashi from Ultraseven ... he used to be known as Iyoshi or Ikichi Ishii).

ULTRA SEVEN

AKA: ULTRA 7

AKA: URUTORA SEBUN

Ultraseven was a slightly different looking Ultra-hero. The show didn't explain why he came to Earth, although the back-story created later by Tsuburaya Pro. described him as a cartographer mapping out the Milky Way, who decided to visit Earth for an extended period. Ultraseven saved the life of Jiro Satsuma, after he fell off a mountain. Inspired by Jiro's purity of soul, Ultraseven decided to model his human form (which he created himself ... unlike Ultraman, he did not merge with a human) after Jiro, calling himself Dan Moroboshi. After several encounters with the Ultra Garrison, formed to combat a new attack on Earth by beings from outer space, Dan was allowed to join the Ultra Garrison.

Although Ultraseven did not merge with a human, he still required, usually, a mechanism to change. This was accomplished through the use of the Ultra Eyes, also called the Task Mask. These were templeless goggles, which resembled modern eye protectors used when laying out in the sun or tanning booth, which, when applied, would change Dan into Ultraseven. In one episode, however, Dan was able to change into Ultraseven by using a different mechanism on his belt, and another time he was able to change through sheer force of will. When Dan would change to Ultraseven, he would retain a normal human stature. Normally Ultraseven would cause himself to grow to standard monster-bashing proportions, although on one occasion he spent the entire show at human size. Even while in human form, Dan possessed mental and telekinetic powers, used often during the show.

Ultraseven had several energy powers, including a beam similar to the Specium beam, called the Wide Shot. He had several other beam attacks, including one that was a pulsed energy beam that resembled several boomerangs fired in rapid succession. Ultraseven's two main attacks, however, were the Emellium Beam and the Eye Slugger. The Emellium Beam was an energy beam fired from the glowing green jewel on his forehead. The Eye Slugger was actually Ultraseven's fin, which was detachable and throwable like a boomerang. When thrown, it would seem to convert to energy, or be surrounded by an energy nimbus.

Another unique weapon Ultraseven possessed was a cache of "mini monsters." These were small capsules which, when thrown, would turn into monsters that would obey Dan's or Ultraseven's commands like pets. The most commonly used "pet" was the robot named Windom.

Ultraseven is the only Ultra-hero (with the possible exception of Ultraman King) that had no "warning light." That being said, there was one episode where Ultraseven was worn down by aliens and encased in a crystalline cross. During that episode it was revealed that the Emellium Beam emitter would start to blink when Ultraseven was worn down, and eventually go dim. Unlike Ultraman, though, a dim emitter did not mean he would "never rise again;" the Ultra Garrison discovered, through a secret transmission from Ultraseven, that an energy beam created by Emellium, fired at his emitter, would recharge him.

After 49 episodes, even Ultraseven's energy began to dwindle, and he was commanded by his commander (who wasn't Zoffy, curiously enough) to return home. This happens just as the Goth aliens attack Earth. Dan is injured, and tells Anne (the Garrison's medical technician) who he really is. Anne has fallen in love with Dan, but Dan must soon leave, after he makes one final attempt to stop the Goth's monster, Pandon. Ultraseven finally wins over the Goth, and returns home to Nebula M78, although he, too, would return later.

Ultraman's associate Ultraman Seven soon arrived on Earth as a replacement - for Tsuburaya is keen to stress that later Ultraman series are not "Sequels" but self contained stories that happen to share continuity, but every Ultraman is someone's first, and viewers like to think they are not simply watching a remake. Ultra Seven takes on the identity of Dan Moroboshi (Moritsugu), who secretly defends the Earth from yet more invaders, which trying not to fall in love with the pretty Anne (Hishimi). Never calling on help from his alien brothers and taking a considerably amount of punishment in his battles, Seven is regarded with hindsight by many fans as one of the peaks of the franchise. However, ratings at the time showed a notable dip, and TBS determined that Seven would be the end of Ultraman.

Created by legendary Japanese special effects pioneer Eiji Tsuburaya (Godzilla, Mothra, Rodan), Ultra 7 was the second series in a string of TV shows devoted to the exploits of a universal police force from Nebula M78 assigned to rid the galaxy of evil and destructive alien monsters. Ultra 7, in particular, followed Dan Moroboshi (Koji Moritsugu), a telepathic cartographer from "The Land of Light" who, in his human form, joins comrades Amagi (Satoshi Furuya), Soga (Shinsuke Achina), Furuhashi (Sandaiyu Dokumamushi), Donna (Yuriko Hishimi), and Kiriyama (Joji Nakayama) in the Ultra Garrison, an elite task force watching out for marauding giant aliens on Earth. The sixth member of the team in his human form, he is deemed "Ultra Seven" when he dons his Ultra mask and becomes the giant warrior who is called out to dispatch any troublemaking creatures.

There are lots of bizarre visuals and gadgets in the show, chief of which is the Ultra Strike, a super jet that can split off into three separate capsules, and the souped-up Ultra Mobile, complete with gas jets, missiles and force fields. Considered by fans of the genre to be the best and most serious entry in the Ultra series, Ultra 7 ran from October '67 to September '68, yielding 49 half-hour episodes before Tsuburaya Productions moved on to work on more Godzilla sequels and, eventually, in 1971, another Ultraman series, called The Return of Ultraman. The series has been seen in the 1990s on TNT in the US.

It should be noted here that US citizens have had two different opportunities to see some variation of Ultraseven. Hawaiians saw a faithfully dubbed version in the late 60's. In 1985, Turner Broadcasting System bought the series, and commissioned a Canadian company to redub the series, although with little instruction on how to do so. The result was a dubbing that was less than faithful to the original dialog, and an editing job that obviously cut out certain scenes. "Ultra 7" (as the TNT titles called it) was first shown to most of the US by TNT in the early 90's; only 1 week's worth of shows were missing. (Curiously, TBS had scheduled a week's worth of Ultra 7, though they were never actually aired.)

There were two Ultraseven specials broadcast in 1994, the descriptions of those two specials:

1. Ultraseven "Solar Energy Strategy"!! This is NOT A MOVIE!!! It is a TV special broadcast on Japanese TV 94.3.21 (that's the 21st of May, 1994....TWO YEARS AGO!!)

Aliens: Pittians II

Monster: Eleking III

These aliens fought Ultraseven in episode #3 "Secret of the lake" and Eleking was the beast!! [...] We last saw Ultraseven in Ultraman Leo, where Dan Moreboshi just disappears at the end [...]!! The show starts with Ultraseven very injured, his power supply running dry, falling to Earth!! Furohashi (new leader of the Ultra Garrison) stores him in a bunker and believes he is dead!! At the same time, The Ultra Garrison is trying to create a power supply to revive Ultraseven, but they are having problems!! It seems to be draining energy!! Donna's son is kidnapped by the Pittians (Donna....makes a return!!!)!! [Donna is the name used by the Turner translation project.

The character's original name is "Anne," though it was usually pronounced "Anna" or "Annu". -- ed.] The Pittians also revive Eleking by (from what it looks like) reformulating a saved computer program of the monster back into Eleking!! The Pittians want to destroy Ultraseven ONCE and for all!! They use the Ultra Garrison relay (a satellite dish) to destroy him, but the kid manages to reverse the system from the Pittians spacecraft!! Furohashi thinks Seven is fully destroyed as Eleking is attacking!! But it saves him!!!

AND THE FEELING OF SEEING ULTRASEVEN RISE AGAIN IS INCREDIBLE!!!! And the fight between Eliking is better than ever!!! Nice and long!!! Eventually Eleking raps that HUGE tail of his and starts to electrocute Ultraseven!! But remember, the Ultra Garrison relay can now operate (although wrong) properly and drains Eleking's power!! Ultraseven then cuts Eleking's tail (again if you saw ep. #3) with the Eye Slugger and nails him with the emilium beam from his forehead!! But that's not all!! The Pittians are TORTURING Donna's son (as if this was Japanimation style violence!!!)

Donna (who knows Dan is Ultraseven and was in love with him) looks at him as says "You must help me, Ultraseven" in Japanese!! Seven nods and resumes human size in the Pittian spacecraft!! He has a small, but cool martial art fight and saves Donna's son!! The Pittian craft tries to escape, but Seven uses the Specium beam from the forearm and destroys the craft!!! Yetta!!! [Although Mr. X mentions the Specium Beam, it's possible he is referring to Ultraseven's Specium-like "wide shot." It's also possible that the writers decided to give Seven his own Specium Beam. -- ed.]

2. Ultraseven: "Solid Earth of Ours" (also called "Land of the Terrans") Japanese broadcast date: TV special, 94.10.10.....That's October, 10, 1994)!!

Aliens: Metronians III

Monster: Unnamed (?) dinosaur

These aliens were in episode #8 "The Targeted Town" also not broadcast on TNT!! Please note some Ultraseven episodes are quite violent and may not have been shown for that reason (i.e. episode #4, "Answer Max").

We begin this one hour episode [...] with Ultraseven in battle with a Metronian!! The fight is awesome (parts in retrospect with a Kung Fu movie)!!! As the Metronian tries to escape, Ultraseven destroys him with the Specium beam from the forearm (THE LAST FOREARM SPECIUM BEAM to date!!!)!! Next a reporter is discussing the issue of garbage dumping and this gigantic "Gorasaurus" clone appears out of no where!! Under the constant assumption that Ultraseven is not about to return, the Ultra Garrison (led by Furohashi) uses a new weapon and freezes the beast!! As they try to secure the area later on, Furohashi notices Dan Moreboshi in the crowd, but isn't sure!! There are Metronians in the form of humans and are interacting with the Ultra Garrison scientists!! Dan roams in search of them!!

The beast suddenly evaporates, but that WASN'T supposed to happen!!! At one point he encounters one which has a HUGE hand gun and tries to blast him away!! Dan escapes, but first is seen by one of the newer members of the Ultra Garrison!! Eventually at the Ultra Garrison lab parking lot, Dan is recognised by the new member (and his female side kick) and they restrain him for questioning (Dan's reaction at looking at the Ultra Garrison I.D. is hilarious!!)!! He says to release him and talk to Furohashi!! They responded "Furohashi??", Dan disappears!!! At this point Dan Moreboshi (Ultraseven) is a fugitive resisting the authorities!! Remember, he disappeared from MAC in Leo!!

Eventually in the story, Dan is confronted by the aliens as they seem to want him more than he wants them!! An AWESOME karate fight ensues with one scene where they throw Dan from a bridge landing in front of a camera....The actor's head pops up holding his shoulder!!! COMPLETELY COOL!!! In the meantime, these aliens brainwash the U Garrison scientist that their research is good!! The Metronians have a bunker/missile silo under the ground with the garbage dump as a cover!! Eventually the reporter stumbles on a camouflaged transmateral transporter and informs the Ultra Garrison!! In the bunker, the Metronians (still in human form), threaten to kill the scientist because he refuses their philosophy and scientific research as they want to take over the Earth!! The Ultra Garrison arrive inside, but the aliens hold them at gunpoint!! At this time, the head Metronian (still a human) sticks up his BIG GUN with the scientist in his arm!! It's about over, but the scientist takes a chance and points the gun away which fires across the room!! It pisses off the other alien who shoots the scientists in the shoulder!!

Dan Moreboshi enters and uses Martial Arts to push them aside!! He gets the guns!! BUT IS DAN A FUGITIVE STILL??? He throws the guns to the Ultra Garrison and (I believe) identifies himself formerly from Ultra Garrison and MAC! Therefore, he still holds his rank and orders the new members to leave!! WELL NOW!! The "human" Metronians transform into their original form and Dan turns into ULTRASEVEN in the BEST TRANSFORMATION scene to date!!! AWESOME!!! They fight in the bunker (at human size) and Ultraseven manages to kill one of them!! The other one grows to monster height, so does Ultraseven!! The Metronian releases his Dinosaur and the action begins!!! A HUGE LONG FIGHT ENSUES!!! Furohashi flies the same Ultra Garrison's ship and attacks the Metronian!!!

As they fight, the pounding of the size of the fight starts to blow up the missiles!!! At one point the Dinosaur is engulfed as the ground explodes beneath him and is destroyed!!! All that's left is Ultraseven and the Metronian!! The alien somehow darkens the sky!!! Ultraseven needs solar energy to continue and is considerably weakened!! At one point Seban releases his Eye Slugger, but holds on to it and uses it like a knife, but misses!! The Metronian knocks it out of Seven's hand and that looks like it is it!! Furohashi fires a missile into the sky which disperses the clouds!!! AWESOME SPECIAL EFFECTS!!! Ultraseven gets bashed around (still in the dark) until he lands next to the Eye Slugger!! He puts it on and the sky clears!! Ultraseven then recharges!!!

The Metronian tries to get him with missiles out of his hands, but Ultraseven puts up the rectangle force field, then the emilium beam which injures the Metronian!! Gathering more solar energy, Ultraseven uses a DOUBLE ENERGY PUNCH from his arms and destroys the Metronian!! The force of power was so great that the missiles below Ultraseven starts to explode and engulfs him!! THERE IS NOTHING LEFT!!! We don't know if Ultraseven is dead or alive, but Furohashi refuses to believe there isn't hope!! There was no sign of him!!! The show ends!

Ultra Fight

Following the end of Ultra Seven's run on television, a series of mock battles were made using the costumes from the first Ultraman and Ultra Seven series. There was virtually no plot to these battles, they simply involved Ultra Seven fighting (or more often than not, being beaten by) various monsters including ones he did not face in his series, such as Baltan.

Among notable episodes include one where Ultra Seven rips the wings off a monster and beats it to death with them. Another has Ultra Seven blundering about a hilltop and accidentally causing a rockslide that awakens a slumbering Eleking who (predictably) is less than pleased to have rocks tumbling onto him. What follows is an amusing one-sided battle where Eleking takes his anger out on Seven while the hero, completely accepting that it was his own carelessness that caused the mess, tries desperately to apologize.

While far from epic, the Ultra Fight series rekindled interest in the Ultras, enough that shortly after, the Ultraman who Returned was aired. This would begin a series of sequels that carries on to this day.

From Another Planet with Love: The banned episode 12

This episode portrayed an alien race, the Spehl Aliens, who had their world destroyed by nuclear tests and as a result their own race poisoned by radiation. To survive they invade Earth in search for fresh human blood to restore their own bodies. A special interest group of survivors from the World War II atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki protested claiming that this episode portrayed nuclear bomb victims in a negative light. As a result this episode has been banned in Japan but was shown as in the Brazilian Portuguese dubbed version as in the Hawaiian English dubbed version in 1975, and was also featured in Turner's English version (featured on TNT) under the title "Crystallized Corpuscles" [1]. The episode was also shown in the Spanish dubbed version in Latin America countries.

Trivia

In an episode of Space Ghost Coast to Coast where Joel Hodgson was the guest, Space Ghost played scenes from Ultra Seven and tried to get Joel to help him "MST" them.

The stunt actor who used the Ultra Seven costume in the 1967 TV series was Koji Uenishi, who also used, some years later, the costume of another TV Japanese superhero: Spectreman. Although Koji Uenishi played Ultra Seven, Ultra Seven's voice was dubbed by Koji Moritsugu, the actor who played Dan Moroboshi, Ultra Seven's alter ego.

Ultra Seven's voice was done by Koji Moritsugu, Dan Moroboshi's actor, because unlike the original Ultraman, Dan was Ultra Seven rather than a host. Thus, Dan and Seven's voices are the same because they are the same being.

Ultra Seven was also very popular in Brazil. The Brazilian Portuguese dubbed version was shown in Brazilian TV channels during the 1970s and early 1980s. Curiously, among Brazilian audiences, Ultra Seven was much more popular than the original Ultraman.

In Brazil, the character of Ultra Seven/Dan Moroboshi was dubbed by the voice of actor Afonso Celso Vasconcelos, the same who dubbed the voices of detective lieutenant Columbo (played by Peter Falk in the Columbo TV series) and the superhero Black Vulcan in the animated TV series Superfriends.

ULTRAMAN

AKA: URUTORMAN : KUSO TOKUSATU SHIRIZU

Ultraman came to Earth by accident. The monster Bemlar, whom he was transporting to the Graveyard of Monsters, got away from him, becoming a blue ball of light. Turning himself into a red ball of light, Ultraman pursued Bemlar to Earth. Meanwhile, Hayata, on patrol in his Beetle, crashed into the red ball that is Ultraman. To atone for his error (and no doubt realising that at least one kaijuu menaces Earth every week), Ultraman brings Hayata back to life and becomes one with him, swearing to defend the Earth.

He gives Hayata the pen-like blue Beta Capsule, a solar battery that enables him to change into Ultraman. Once changed into Ultraman, Hayata can remain in that state for only three minutes, for the Earth's atmosphere filters out much of the solar energy Ultraman needs (and can easily obtain in atmosphere-less space). During the first minute, his Colour Timer implanted into Ultraman's chest glows blue. During the second minute, it glows yellow. Finally, it glows red. Furthermore, once the three minutes are up, the Beta Capsule needs 24 hours to recharge.

Ultraman had numerous powers, including the Specium beam fired from his crossed hands, a cutting energy ring, an anti-gravity power, and even a universal fire extinguishing liquid. Ultraman could also fly, as could all the other Ultra-heroes. Ultraman rarely appeared in any form smaller than his standard 200-foot size, although he did shrink himself down to human size once.

Ultraman has a "warning light" or "ColorTimer" on his chest. This light started blinking after a few minutes of activity, warning Ultraman that his energy was being depleted. Because the amount of solar energy that enters Earth's atmosphere is less than what Ultraman requires, Ultraman could only survive in Earth's atmosphere for a handful of minutes at a time. The warning light also changed colours as the blinking sped up. As the announcer would intone, "if the warning light should stop blinking, it would mean that Ultraman would never rise again."

Ultraman was eventually defeated by the monster Zetton, who shot a fireball that damaged Ultraman's warning light. Ultraman collapsed. Zetton was defeated by the Science Patrol, but Ultraman was still apparently dead. Suddenly another being who closely resembled Ultraman appeared. It was Zoffy, Ultraman's commanding officer. Zoffy explained to Ultraman that only his warning light was damaged, but he would have to return to Nebula M78 to get it repaired. Zoffy then separated Hayata from Ultraman, granting Hayata enough power to survive for a short time; in order for Hayata to continue living, however, he would have to be rejoined with Ultraman. The series ended before we saw this happen.

Alternative plot line:

Ultraman is a kindly alien from the Land of Light, who travels three million light-years from his home nebula of M-78 to help the people of Earth defend themselves against monsters. His mission begins badly when he collides with an aircraft piloted by good hearted Earthman Hyata (Kurobe). To save the life of the innocent victim, Ultraman merges with the dying human - the new symbiotic lifeform created retains Hayata's consciousness, but also permits Ultraman to lie dormant inside him, unaffected by the atmosphere of Earth, which would otherwise prove fatal to him.

Hayata joins the Science Special Investigation Team, an organisation devoted to protecting the Earth from scientific disasters, alongside Captain Muramatsu (Kobayashi), marksman Arashi (Ishii) and token female communications officer Akiko (Sakurai). When Hayata's colleagues find themselves in a life threatening situation he is able to secretly use his Beta Capsule to transform into Ultraman, growing into a 40 meter tall alien giant in a red and silver suit, who is able to take on the giant city-stomping monster menaces on their own terms, defeating them with his Specium Ray and Ultra Slash.

However, the moment Hayata transforms, the Earth's savage environment begins to effect Ultraman, leading the alien to develop a blue three-minute Color Timer that sits on his chest at all times. When the blue timer turns red and begins to flash, Ultraman has only seconds left of his three minute safe period, and must swiftly dispatch his enemy or risk injury and death.

One bit of trivia here involves the actor inside the Ultraman costume. He was Bin Furaya, who later portrayed Amagi, part of the Ultra Garrison in ULTRASEVEN.

Film effects specialist Eiji Tsuburaya was originally approached by Fuji TV in the early 1960s and asked to come up with an idea for a weekly mystery series. His initial pitch was for a series called Woo (or possible "u"), about a creature from Andromeda who comes to Earth to save the planet from monsters. He intended to follow it up in a later season with two other tales of alien superheros, with working titles of Rappa and Space Horse. Woo fell through at Fuji, by which time Tsuburaya had already invested in an expensive optical printer to setup special effects. He was able to sell the device to Fuji's rival channel TBS, who, having acquired the technology to make a monster show, shelves the UNBALANCE show then in development and instead authorized the production of ULTRA Q.

Six months into ULTRA Q, the host of who reasserted itself with the first broadcast of Ultraman. Many monsters were set up as sympathetic creatures, desperate to escape from Earth or otherwise avoid human contact. However, whatever the inner motivations, many were also threats to human civilization that needed to be stopped, normally by combat between men in rubber suits standing in the ruins of model cities.

Ultraman's best "loved" foe was probably the alien Baltan, which resembled a cross between a beetle and a lobster, through the show's most famous guest star was Godzilla, who appeared in Episode 10 as "Jirass" (U.S. Kira), disguised with the addition of a collar frill, which Ultraman soon pulled off anyway. The hero's most dangerous foe was arguably Zetton, the space dinosaur who broke his Color Timer in the final episode, leading to the arrival of Ultraman Zoffy, leader of the Space Garrison, who took Ultraman home.

The series was produced by Eiji Tsuburaya, Hajime Tsuburaya and Kazuo Tsuburaya. Original Music by Kunio Miyauchi, Cinematography by Yasumichi Fukuzawa & Masaharu Utsumi, Art Direction by Tôru Narita, Special Effects by Teisho Arikawa special effects supervisor, Tetsu Matoba special effects supervisor, Koichi Takano special effects supervisor, Hajime Tsuburaya special effects supervisor.

When a rocket with six nuclear bombs was sent into outer space for development of the planet Jupiter, the rocket malfunctions and lands into the sea, with only one of the bombs exploding, causing a disaster at sea. With four of the bombs recovered, it's up to the Science Patrol to find the missing bomb. Meanwhile, Fuji is given a vacation by Capt. Muramatsu (much to Ide's jealousy), and she, Hoshino and a little girl named Michiko go to the seaside Mamiyama Hotel and have fun. Meanwhile, Hayata investigates a boat disaster caused by a moving wake in the sea, caused by the giant humanoid sea monster Ragon. This is not the gentle beast as seen in Ultra Q, this Ragon, mutated by the radiation of the aforementioned exploded bomb, is hostile and violent. Not only is it heading towards the Mamiyama Hotel, but the missing bomb is dangling from its body!!! Will Fuji and the two children be safe? Can Ultraman fight Ragon without detonating the atomic bomb?

1 - 5 TREASURE OF THE MILOGANDA

A group of scientists and reporters have went on an expedition to Oilis Island, and find a rare Miloganda plant, but were almost attacked by a huge green plantlike monster (known as Greenmons), which they shoot to death. But one month after their return to Japan (with the Miloganda plant at a greenhouse lab), the very same Greenmons murders all of the expedition members, except one: Photographer Setsuko Hamaguchi, who the Science Patrol suspect will be the monster's next target and place her under protective custody. They also find that radioactive energy (even their Superguns and Arashi's Spider Shot gun) can make the monster stronger . . . and grow! What is the connection between the Miloganda plant and Greenmons? Will Ultraman stop the green terror from causing any more destruction?

1 - 6 THE COAST GUARD COMMAND

While playing with his friends on the docks of Yokohama Bay, Hoshino witnesses a strange-looking giant monster rise from the sea, the monster Gesula! It originated from Brazil, and is in search of its favorite food, cacao beans. However, Hoshino and his friends have been kidnapped by the notorious jewel smuggler Diamond Kick and his gang, who hide out in a warehouse. To complicate matters, not only is there a huge shipment of cacao beans inside the warehouse, but one of the shipments contains the diamonds that Diamond Kick and his gang were searching for, with Gesura quickly drawing near! Will the Science Patrol, and Ultraman, save the children, catch Diamond Kick and his gang, and stop Gesura?

1 - 7 THE BLUE STONE OF BARADHI

The Science Patrol investigates a series of plane crashes in the Middle East, where they encounter a vicious insect-monster that brings Ultraman to his knees. This time, it's up to the Science Patrol to try and turn the tables.

1 - 8 THE LAWLESS MONSTER ZONE

Contact has been lost with a meteorological station on a distant Pacific island. When the Science Patrol investigates, they encounter a lone survivor, carnivorous plants, giant monsters, and a diminutive friendly creature! Can it help them make their way off the island in one piece?

1 - 9 OPERATION: ELECTRIC STONE FIRE

When a uranium-eating monster disrupts efforts to rebuild a village after a tropical storm, the Science Patrol intervenes. However, they only succeed in diverting the angry creature's path of destruction. It's up to Ultraman to prevent further casualties!

1 - 10 THE MYSTERIOUS DINOSAUR BASE

A dinosaur-like monster emerges from the depths of Lake Kitayama. The Science Patrol uncovers a mysterious connection between it and the legend of Loch Ness. When they find the creature too powerful to subdue by normal means, Ultraman steps in to take it down once and for all.

Dir Kazuho Mitsuta

1 - 11 THE RUFFIAN FROM OUTER SPACE

A con artist discovers a meteorite with the power to make wishes come true. He uses it to conjure up a strange creature and begins terrorizing his neighbors. After creating a giant-sized version of the creature, only Ultraman and the Science Patrol can set things right.

1 - 12 THE CRIES OF THE MUMMY

A seven thousand year old mummy is awakened by scientific experiments and it goes on a rampage. When finally cornered, it summons an enormous, four-legged dragon so powerful that only Ultraman stands a chance of defeating it.

1 - 13 OIL S.O.S.

An enormous starfish monster that feeds on petroleum products is preying upon oil tankers in Tokyo Bay. Before long, it sets its sights on a bigger game: a massive oil storage facility in the port. Only the Science Patrol and Ultraman have the power to stop it before Japan's energy supplies are cut off!

1 - 14 THE PEARL OYSTER PROTECTION ORDER

A strange creature with the face of a frog and the body of a whale is attacking pearl farms on the Japanese coastline. When napalm bombs and electrical nets fail to stop the rampage, Ultraman comes to the rescue!

1 - 15 THE SPACE RAY OF TERROR

An unusual form of space radiation turns a child's chalk sketch into a real-life giant monster that's all but impervious to the Science Patrol's attacks. As the creature mutates, only Ultraman has the power to stop it.

1 - 16 THE SCIENCE PATROL TO OUTER SPACE

When a manned spacecraft bound for Venus is hijacked by aliens, the Science Patrol outfits the Jet VTOL for interstellar travel. When it becomes clear that the incident is a springboard for Baltan's alien race to invade the Earth, Ultraman goes on the defense.

1 - 17 PASSPORT TO INFINITY

A pair of unusual meteors discovered by an American explorer fuse together after being exposed to a special beam. They mutate into a bizarre fourth-dimensional monster capable of warping reality as we know it. Can Ultraman overcome this psychedelic menace in time to save the day?

1 - 18 THE BROTHER FROM ANOTHER PLANET

A mysterious radioactive fog settles over Tokyo. An even more mysterious alien arrives to clean it up. But can this good samaritan really be trusted? And what is his connection to the evil doppelganger of Ultraman that's terrorizing the city?

1 - 19 THE DEMONS ONCE MORE

A pair of ancient capsules unearthed at a construction site unleash a pair of monsters who are mortal enemies sealed away a long time ago by the ancestors of mankind. Can Ultraman stop them before their blood feud reduces Tokyo to rubble?

1 - 20 TERROR ON ROUTE 87

An enormous bird-monster is attacking motorists on Route 87. The Science Patrol discovers a supernatural link between the monster and a statue located nearby. Once they realize the connection, it's up to Ultraman to put a stop to this terror once and for all.

After determining that the closest replacement is on a nearby planet, the Science Patrol makes a beeline for it...only to encounter a pair of ferocious monsters in their path.

- 1 - 38 FAREWELL, ULTRAMAN!

In the final episode of the Ultraman television series, a fiendish alien creature plots to conquer the Japanese islands and then the world. Critically injured in battle with its giant monster underling, Ultraman is rescued by his superior officer "Zoffy" and returned to Nebula M-78.

AKA: URUTORAMAN EITEI

After almost 20 years of being pummelled by various monsters, Japan finally discovers the source of many of their large destroyers: "negative energy" from human anger and hatred. Another Ultraman, Ultraman 80, combats this negative energy by acting as a teacher, Takeshi Yamato. (We never see exactly how 80 comes to Earth, so we don't know if Takeshi is a human with whom 80 merged, or if Takeshi is a human form created by 80. One text indicates it was a merger. On the other hand, in one episode, Takeshi is unable to donate blood to help an injured child because he is not human.) Takeshi's goal is to teach the young to have understanding and compassion; only then, he feels, would the true threat of monsters be extinguished.

Even though no monsters have been seen in 10 years, the Earth Defence Army forms a sub-branch, the Utility Government Members, just in case. Sure enough, monsters start to reappear. Takeshi signs up with the UGM as well, discovering eventually that he's better off fighting monsters than trying to teach the young not to create them in the first place.

Shortly before the series ends, Ultraman 80, in his human guise, meets Ryoko Hoshi. Later he discovers that she is the human form of an Ultra-lady, Yullian. In the two episodes featuring Yullian, we find that she and 80 can create a large energy circle from their joined hands; this circle, sort of a large Ultra Slash, can vanquish even the most "invincible" monster. Alone, 80's main weapon is the Sakucium Beam, yet another forearm-fired beam akin to Ultraseven's Wide Shot. Takeshi uses the Bright Stick to transform into Ultraman 80.

Ultraman left Japanese screens after ULTRAMAN LEO, returning in an animated incarnation in 1979, known as The Ultraman or sometimes Ultraman Joenus or Joe. Technically, he should be listed as the next season, as a recreation of his hero's costume does eventually turn up in a later live-action movie Ultraman Monster Grand Battle. However, his presence in the continuity is arguable, as the prologue to Ultraman 80 claims that the Earth has been safe from monsters "for five years." At any rate, the Ultraman anime ran from 4th April 1979-26th March 1980, setting the scene for the next live-action Ultraman series, Ultraman 80.

In an unexpected homage to Kinpachi Sensai, the actual seventh season sees a new Ultraman adopting the form of Earth schoolteacher Takeru Yamato (Hasegawa), in charge of Year One, Class E. Loved by his students, but eternally at odds with the prissy deputy principle Kumi (Wada), Takeshi chastely pursues the pretty gym teacher Kyoko (Asano), in whose presence he becomes bashful and tongue-tied. Of course, Takeshi is not merely a schoolteacher, but moonlights as a member of the secret OGM organization, in which capacity he helps in the secret battle against space monsters and transforms into his giant form.

A loner who rarely calls on the other Ultras, Ultraman 80 is later joined by Yullian, the Queen of the Land of Light, who takes the Earth name of Ryoko (Hagiwara) and gives the Ultramen one of their rare female fighting companions. Their secret identities eventually revealed, the couple return to their place of origin at the end of the series.

Ultraman 80 encounters three other Ultra-heroes, sort of. Episode 38, "Ultra Father's Voice Echoes in the Heavens," has Ultra Father warning 80 of a crisis. There is Yullian, mentioned above. The third case, "sort of," involves a monstrous version of ULTRA SEVEN, created out of a young boy's desire for revenge against a motorcycle gang who hospitalises him. (This Ultraseven appeared to be the original, especially in that some of the fight scenes from the original series were used. However, it should be noted that this was a monster created in the image of ULTRA SEVEN.) The follow on series was ULTRAMAN: TOWARD THE FUTURE

ULTRAMAN ACE

AKA: ULTRAMAN A

The Earth is invaded by the Yapool, another in a never-ending series of aliens out to conquer Earth and, quite probably, the rest of the universe. All the Ultra-heroes to date are called out to fight the invaders, including the newest hero, Ultraman Ace, who covers Earth. As seems to be the habit, monsters are already invading Earth, and have killed people in the process. In this case, two people, Seiji Hokuto and Yuko Minami, are chosen to be the humans who house Ultraman Ace. Each is given an Ultra Ring; when the two rings touch, Hokuto and Minami (which mean "North" and "South" in Japanese) become Ultraman Ace. Also typical, the two join yet another defence organisation, the TAC (Terrible-monster Attacking Crew).

Ultraman Ace's main power is the Metallium Beam, a fairly typical (if you're an Ultraman) energy beam fired from the arm. At one point, harnessing the energies of the other Ultra-heroes, Ace forms the Space Q, a great ball of energy that can destroy even the nastiest Yapool.

Ultraman Ace was the first episode to regularly (i.e. not just once or twice) feature the other Ultra-heroes. In one episode, "The Five Ultra Brothers Executed" (the Ultramen were considered to be "brothers," obviously), all but Ace were trapped by the Yapool alien Ace Killer, and crucified. Of course, the Ultramen won. Ultraman Ace also introduced a new Ultra-hero, the supreme ruler of the "Land of Light" in Nebula M78, Ultra Father (also called "Father of Ultra"). The Ultra-family finally defeat the Yapool, and send them packing to their home dimension.

For the fifth season, Ultraman Ace (aka Ultraman A), humble baker Seiji (Takamine) witnesses his bakery being destroyed by an attacking monster, and is then killed along with kindhearted Minami (Hoshi) when the pair try to save a wheelchair-bound hospital patient from the dying beneath the wheels of a runaway truck. The pair both bond with Ultraman Ace, requiring them to touch their Ultra Rings together to transform into a creature with a man's courage and a woman's love for peace.

Ace's enemies included a number of Super-Beasts created by the Yapool invaders, although Minami later revealed that she was really an agent from the moon, and left for her home after Ace defeated the Lunatyk monster halfway through the season. Thereafter, Seiji was left to transform into Ace alone, but all through the season he called upon the help of his brothers, leading to cameos from many of the earlier Ultras.

Ultraman Ace follows on from THE RETURN OF ULTRAMAN and is followed by ULTRAMAN TARO.

Ultraman Ace (Urutoraman Êsu) is the title superhero of a tokusatsu SF/kaiju/superhero TV show, and is the 5th show in the Ultra Series. Produced by Tsuburaya Productions, the series aired on Tokyo Broadcasting System from April 7, 1972 to March 30, 1973, with a total of 52 episodes.

Starting with this show, the Ultra Series heads in a notably different direction, slowly shifting from a sci-fi/mystery adventure to full-tilt superhero fantasy fare. Also, all previous Ultra-beings (namely Ultraman, Zoffy, Ultra Seven, and New Ultraman) make more frequent appearances here, whereas they only made guest appearances in the previous show Return of Ultraman.

This series marks the debut of special effects director Koichi Kawakita, who went on to do many other tokusatsu superhero shows (for both Tsuburaya Productions and Toho Company Ltd.), and directed the FX for the majority of the "VS Series" (AKA: "Heisei Series") in Toho's Godzilla films. Kawakita, needless to say, was a student under the late Eiji Tsuburaya.

Cameos

Episode 1: The Five Ultra Brothers merge Ace with Hokuto and Minami.

Episode 5: Zoffy sees Ace's Ultra Sign (SOS), and saves him from being trapped underground by Giron-jin and Aribunta. Zoffy lets him borrow the Ultra Converter, a wristband that restores Ace's energy (and changes his blinking ColorTimer back to blue).

Episodes 13-4: The Four Ultra Brothers are crucified on the planet Golgota by the Yapool. The Yapool send all five fake Ultra Signs to get them to gather at Golgota, where they find crosses with their names written on them. The temperature then drops precipitously, and they begin losing power. The Four give Ace their remaining power to go back to Earth, to defend it from CHOHJUH Baraba. Ace protests, not wanting to abandon his brothers, but Ultraman slaps him to his senses, saying they will sacrifice themselves to let the younger Ace go and fulfill his mission to protect the Earth. After Ace leaves, the other four get sucked onto the crosses. However, Ace can't fight Baraba effectively, because the Yapools taunt him with images of his brothers stuck on the cross, threatening to finish them off. Meanwhile, Yapool then introduces Ace Killer, who sucks the Four Ultra Brothers of their Specium (Ultraman), Emerium (Ultra Seven), and M87 (Zoffy) energies, as well as the Ultra Bracelet (Ultraman "Jack"). Ace Killer uses these to destroy the Ace Robot for practice as the brothers look on helplessly. The upper brass at TAC send Hokuto to Golgota with a bomb to destroy the entire planet (and the Four Ultra Brothers with it), but Hokuto changes to Ace, destroys the bomb, gets energy from his Brothers to create the Space Q to defeat Ace Killer, frees his brothers, return to Earth, and destroy Baraba.

Episode 23: Zoffy versus Giant Yapool.

Episode 26-7: The Four Ultra Brothers are turned into bronze statues along with Ace by Hippolito-seijin. They are saved by the Ultra Father.

Episode 31: Ultra Seven versus Bakutari

Episode 35: Zoffy versus Dreamgillas

Episode 38: A revived Father appears as Santa Claus to help defeat Namhage and Snowgillan. He brings back Minami for a visit.

Episode 39: Ultra Seven versus Firemonse and Fire-seijin.

Episode 44: Ultra Seven replenishes Ace's power, which was lost to OniDevil.

ULTRAMAN COSMOS

The Earth enjoys its first extended period of peace in a long while. Neither Chaos Header nor any of the destructive monsters that have plagued the world so long have appeared. But a concentration of Chaos Header is spotted in the solar system at point P87. Chaos Header is gearing up for its greatest invasion. The Chaos Header energy heads for Earth and forms itself into Chaos Ultraman, an enemy thought to have been defeated already by Ultraman Cosmos. In order to battle Chaos Ultraman, Team EYES races to the scene. But Chaos Ultraman counterattacks and both Tech Spinner One, piloted by Fubuki and Tech Spinner Four piloted by Musashi crash. Chaos Ultraman heads for the SRC Science Center. There Doigaki and Professor Hazumi are preparing Chaos Chimera, a powerful new weapon to battle Chaos Header. "Team EYES will protect the Earth against any invasion!" declares Captain Hiura as the team prepares to make its final life or death stand against the invader. But Chaos Ultraman unleashes a powerful beam weapon. At that moment Ultraman Cosmos appears once again. A fierce battle begins. Ultraman Cosmos transforms into his Eclipse Mode and uses his Cosmium Beam to destroy Chaos Ultraman. But suddenly an immense light appears in the sky. A new Chaos Ultraman, Calamity appears. Ultraman Cosmos must face his greatest danger yet!

Bad luck struck in the 13th season, Ultraman Cosmos, which was released at roughly the same time as the Ultraman Cosmos: First Contact movie, and was deliberately first broadcast on 7th July 2001, the centenary of the birth of studio founder Eiji Tsuburaya. In an attempt to avoid increasingly strict censors on "on screen violence", the Cosmos series introduced Musashi (Sugiura), whose Ultra transformation often took the pacifist "Luna" Mode, in which form he was unable to harm any opponents. The later Corona and Eclipse Modes permitted more traditional fighting, but it was the Luna Mode that caused the greatest controversy, first because an Ultraman that tried not to fight was not popular with many old-school fans, but mainly because of later events that couple cripple the series in 2002.

The show was pulled of the air in June 2002 after lead actor Sugiura was arrested by Osaka Prefecture Police. An acquaintance of Sugiura's younger brother accused him of assault two year earlier, when th 19 year old Suigura had supposedly attacked the boy in retaliation for the theft of some money. While inquires continued, Cosmos was concluded in two hastily assembled final episodes, dropping all of Sugiura's appearances. Similarly, the film distributor Shochiku, sitting on the completed second Cosmos movie The Blue Planet, rereleased the film to Japanses cinemas with Sugiura's scenes hacked out.

In the new version, the child actor who played the young Musashi is shown scenes from his future - cunningly ensuring that his adult fact is never seen. MBS filled the on-air gap left by the shows departure by screening Ultraman Neos, a seven year old failed Ultra Pitch, mothballed by Tsuburaya as a direct to video title, and only dusted off to plug the hole left by Cosmos.

However, the tables had turned by the end of June, when it was revealed that the plaintiff has withdrawn much of his previous accusations against Sugiura. Those who had so readily exiled the actor from the public eye now discovered that his accuser was indeed a thief, and that while big brother Sugiura did not deny giving him a bloody nose in an earlier incident, the plaintiff's actual injuries had been sustained in a wholly unrelated brawl with ten other people, which took place at a time when Sugiura had demonstrably spend the entire day on a film set on the other side of town. As a result, the red-faced MBS reversed its previous decision, ignored the continuity problems caused by the previous "ending", pulled Neos from the air, and ran the rest of the Cosmos as originally intended.

The Sugiura footage was also restored to the movie, and the series limped to its close later in the year the initially planned. A third movie, Ultraman Cosmos Vs Ultraman Justice (2003), features Suiguiura again, who now prefers that his given name is pronounced Taiyo, not Takayasu.

Trivia

Cosmos' gentle/strong dichotomy is a result of the recent trend of juvenile violence in Japan. Tsuburaya Productions is focusing on a sensitivity toward the influence of media on children. Let's hope that TPC skillfully implements this policy in such a way that it does not degrade the quality of storytelling. It is truly ironic that Takayasu Sugiura (the actor who portrays Musashi) was arrested for accusations of battery and extortion as the series was ending its broadcast run (fortunately, the accusations ended up to be mostly false).

Tsuburaya Productions sent a lot of postcards to Ultra fans at the beginning of the new year. On the back of the postcard is a little red stamp mark of a flower that the Japanese call a "cosmos." Probably Tsuburaya Productions thought this was a clever little pun (and they seem to reinforce it by referring to Earth as the "star of flower and green"), but it didn't help to douse the rumors that initially spread like wildfire among Japanese fans that Ultraman Cosmos was either female or gay.

Toshihiro Ihjima directs the Cosmos movie. He directed many of the original Ultraman's episodes, including episode 2 and 16, which were the first two times the Baltans invaded the Earth.

Cosmos' TV series premiere, July 7, 2001, is the 100th birthday of the original Ultraman's creator, the late Eiji Tsuburaya, as well as the birthdays of Hokuto and Minami, who transform into Ultraman Ace. Ultraman Cosmos was abruptly canceled for several weeks across Japan by Mainichi Broadcasting because of the Sugiura scandal

ULTRAMAN DYNA

AKA: UROTORMAN DAINA

7 years have passed since Ultraman Tiga fought his final battle. Mankind has started colonising the "new frontier," which includes Mars. The Terrestrial Peaceable Consortium (TPC) is still around, with their main defence force now called Super GUTS. The current members of the team include Captain Hibiki, Kouda, Ryo, Karia, Nakajima, and Mai. Super GUTS is recruiting new members, including Shin Asuka (pronounced more like "Ahs-kah"), a flighty, somewhat arrogant individual who, nonetheless, is one of the best pilots and marksmen they've found. His teamwork skills, however, leave much to be desired.

As part of the entrance exam, Asuka and his fellows engage in a mock battle in space. They are in older-style GUTS Wings, while Ryo and Hibiki are in upgraded GUTS Wing vehicles. As each trainee is hit, they are required to leave the battle. Asuka manages to evade both testers, scoring hits on both of their vehicles.

At that moment, a large glowing sphere appears nearby. It splits into multiple smaller spheres, and begins attacking the nearby space station and the smaller craft. Ryo's weapons jam after taking some damage, but Asuka rescues her. In the process, though, his ship is destroyed, though Asuka manages to get his breathing mask on in time to eject. He sees the sun appear from behind the Earth, and remembers the loss of his father, another TPC pilot who was lost while investigating an "unknown light." Suddenly a twinkle of light appears near Asuka. It grows into a large tunnel of blinding light, enveloping Asuka.

Asuka suddenly awakens in a bed in the new TPC headquarters, tended by the vivacious Mai. He has been accepted into Super GUTS, but must spend more time training after he recovers. While he recuperates, he has two vivid dreams. One involves a large 3-legged monster attacking the Mars colony, which is currently under construction. The other brings him back floating in space, encountering the tunnel of light. Asuka is discharged, and is allowed to join the team. Their first mission is to deal with a large 3-legged monster attacking the Martian colony. They rush to the scene in a 3-piece vehicle equipped with Maxima Overdrive, the photon drive the original GUTS team used in their spaceship ArtDessei, and in their smaller craft, Snow White. (This was the craft used to try to revive Ultraman Tiga's stone form.) They battle the monster, but Asuka, always ready to leap before looking, manages to damage his craft and his co-pilot. Enraged, he begins firing at the belly of the monster with every hand-gun he has, but to no avail.

Suddenly, he is surrounded by a nimbus of light. He panics, but soon his body begins to grow. The light solidifies into a large Ultraman figure. Some of the older members of the TPC contingent in the colony believe it is Ultraman Tiga, returned and renewed. The elder officers, however, realise that it isn't Tiga, but may be another guardian like him.

Through the first 3 episodes, we see Asuka mature, realising fully his responsibilities as a Super GUTS member, and as the human host of Ultraman Dyna (so named by Mai). Unlike Daigo and Tiga, it seems Ultraman Dyna is a separate entity, much like most of the other Ultra-heroes. Asuka is given a device, the Re-Flasher, to instigate the change, but it doesn't always work. On the other hand, there are times when he finds the change happening without his conscious knowledge. (This is how he changes in the first 4 episodes; the Re-Flasher doesn't work at all.) In many ways, this series reminds me of The Return of Ultraman, where Hideki Goh tries to change into Ultraman Jack, but cannot without Ultraman's permission. In one episode, Dyna discovers how to throw a fast-ball after Asuka learns the same; then again, we saw similar things happening with Hayata and Ultraman.

Ultraman Dyna, like ULTRAMAN TIGA before him, has 3 forms. His Flash form, equivalent to Tiga's Multi type, has a balance of characteristics, including the Solgent Beam, fired much like Ultraman's Specium Beam. His Miracle form has great speed and telekinetic powers, including the Revolium Wave. His Strong form, obviously, is built for strength; he has fewer energy powers in this form. (One report indicates his Strong form has no energy powers at all, but he does have defensive energy capabilities in this form.) One interesting difference with Dyna is that his 3 forms are more than mere colour changes; the entire design of his torso (or costume) changes as well. Another difference from Tiga is that Dyna cannot change directly from Strong (red) to Miracle (blue) types without changing to Flash type first. (Tiga could go directly to any type/form from any type.)

Dyna, like the other Ultra-warriors, has a ColorTimer, or "warning light," on his chest. Changing forms tends to expend energy; in at least one instance, the transformation itself caused the light to begin blinking red. Like the original Ultraman, if Dyna's ColorTimer stops blinking, he "will never rise again." (This is yet another difference between Dyna and Tiga; Tiga would transform back into Daigo when this happened.)

Ultraman Dyna was clearly intended as a direct sequel of ULTRAMAN TIGA and featured several returning characters and situations. Now set in the year 2017 as humanity terraforms Mars and heads out into space on the "Neo Frontier", Dyna features Earth boy Shin Askuka (Tsuruno), who teams up with some surviving members of the GUTS team, now known as Super GUTS, as well as the children of the previous season's Horii. Shin's interest in fighting monsters from space not merely altruistic, his baseball loving father was lost in space many years ago in an early encounter with aliens, and Shin maintains that he might still be alive out there. During re-runs, Dyna was complemented with a series of one-minute infomercials under the title Ultraman Nice, in which all-new comic relief Ultra fought a number of new monsters.

ULTRAMAN GAIA

AKA: URUTORMAN GAIA

Ultraman Gaia begins another trend of unique Ultra-heroes. In a different "world" from ULTRAMAN TIGA and ULTRAMAN DYNA, Gaia is one of two Earth-based Ultramen. Gamu Takayama, one of a group of boy geniuses known as the Alchemy Stars, discovers a realm where a giant Ultraman fights a huge serpent. Gamu is quickly drawn back to the real world. Later that day, a large wormhole opens up near Earth, depositing the huge rock-like carrier of the Cosmic Organism Vanguard. Gamu cheers when he sees Team Lightning, part of the eXpanded Interceptive Guardians (XIG) branch of the Geocentric Universal Alliance against the Radical Destruction (GUARD), take on the beast. His hopes fail when the planes are decimated by the COV.

Suddenly time stops around him, and the ground opens up beneath him, carrying him through a tunnel of light like the one he experienced earlier. He again meets the red-and-silver giant, which Gamu immediately identifies as Ultraman (curiously enough). Gamu begs Ultraman to come with him and defeat the monster. Ultraman bonds with the boy genius in a scene reminiscent of the first episode of ULTRAMAN: TOWARDS THE FUTURE. When Gamu returns to Earth, he has adopted the form of Ultraman Gaia. After managing to defeat the monster, Gamu joins XIG as a technical advisor.

XIG is composed of several teams, including 3 fighter teams and 3 "expert teams" or teams of specialists. The 3 fighter teams are Team Lightning (the Ace Pilots team), Team Falcon (the Veteran Pilots team), and Team Crow (the Lady Pilots team); the 3 expert teams are Team Hercules (Ground Duty team), Team Seagull (Rescue), and Team Marlin (Ocean). The Peace Carrier is a larger command ship that can carry one of the teams' ships as needed. XIG's headquarters is the mobile Aerial Base, a large airship that hovers above the Earth, using technology originated by Gamu himself.

Gamu's team-mates include Commander Ishimuro, Staff Officer Chiba Tatsumi, Chief Tsutsumi Seiichiroh, Sasaki "Akko" Atsuko, and Georgie Leland (played by American-born 16-year-old Maria Theresa Gow, an amazing lady who can speak both English and Japanese fluently).

Gamu transforms into Gaia through the Esplender. Curiously, Gamu builds the Esplender himself, modelling its design after the ColorTimer on Gaia's chest. Before he builds the Esplender, Gamu traps the "essence" of Gaia in a glass vial from his lab, and uses it for his first transformation. (Again, Gamu's actions indicate that this world, though not connected officially to that of Tiga and Dyna, does know of the Ultra-warriors in its own way.)

Gaia's main attacks include the Photon Edge (a "blade of light" fired from his head), and the Quantum Stream (a typical Ultra-style beam, though fired by crossing his hands Zearth-style, then rotating them around before firing). Gaia normally appears at an Ultra-standard 50 meters tall, but he can shrink to "micro size." Gamu appears to feel every bit of pain and punishment inflicted on Gaia; he often staggers away from the scene, feeling bruised and battered, after changing back.

One of Gamu's former associates in the Alchemy Stars is Hiroya Fujimiya, who becomes Ultraman Agul, also of his own will. While Agul has been a help to Gaia, more often than not they've been rivals, even enemies. When Fujimiya manages to summon the gigantic serpent-beast Zoalim, he realises he no longer deserves the Ultraman abilities, and releases the globe that contains the Agul force to Gamu. Gamu draws it into his Esplender (see below), and transforms into a new and improved version, Gaia V2.

Gaia V2 appears similar to the original Gaia, except for a black stripe between the yellow stripes that go around his back and cross below his ColorTimer. Gaia V2 appears to be slightly stronger & faster than the original version. When Gamu realised that he still did not have full access to Agul's energy, by intense concentration Gaia transforms into Gaia Supreme.

Gaia Supreme is the ultimate form of Gaia. (Gamu now transforms into Gaia V2, who can then switch to Supreme mode.) Gaia Supreme is even stronger and faster than V2. His main attack is an energy beam that starts with a motion similar to his old Photon Edge, then culminates into a prayer-like stance. His hands separate vertically, and the beam emits from his hands, plus the space between.

Even though Gaia is, according to Tsuburaya Productions, not set in the same universe as Tiga and Dyna, the Spring of 1999 will introduce a new movie, "Ultraman Tiga, Ultraman Dyna, & Ultraman Gaia." In this movie, a young boy, perhaps living in Tiga's and Dyna's universe, will wish Gamu into his world. A monster will somehow "tag along," and Gaia will require the help of his two predecessors.

For the 12th season, Ultraman Gaia, the producers ignored both the back-story of the original series and the newly established continuity of the Tiga/Dyna days, not setting their story in the not particularly futuristic year of 200. Gaia features both the titular Ultra and his occasional ally Ultraman Agul, a completely blue Ultra whose loyalties lie not with the human race, but with the Planet Earth itself. This makes for occasional internal conflicts, as Agul is not above letting the entire human race die if it will improve chances for the Terran biosphere as a whole.

Capitalizing on the same end of the century angst that informs Moon Spiral, the story has a think-tank realize that the Earth faces imminent destruction at the hands of an approaching evil. Forming the clumsily titled Globalcentric Universal Alliance against Radical Destruction (or GUARD), the authorities dispatch eXpanded Intercepting Guards (or XIGs) to defend the planet, one of whom is genius scientist Gamu (Yoshioka), who works alongside a number of specialized three-man teams, including Lighting, Falcon, Crow, Marlin and Seagull, taking the cast roster up into crowded double figures. Notable for a number of foreign actors as permanent Japanese-speaking team members, the series concludes with an incredible Armageddon, as the skies are darkened by an approaching supermonster, and the human race unites with Ultras and all the fearsome monsters of the Earth, who have come out to fight to save their own planet from alien invasion.

Ultraman Gaia takes place in yet another universe, different from the world of the original Ultramen, as well as world of Ultraman Tiga and Ultraman Dyna. There are two Ultramen with conflicting philosophies about defending the Earth from a mysterious cosmic entity. The first half of the series explores the growing tension between them and their eventual clash. The second half has them reconcile their differences so they can defeat their common enemy. The show is also different in that the support team is larger than previous variations of the Science Patrol. The series has several categories of monsters. In addition to those invading from space, there are monsters that originate on Earth, as well as a few mysterious weather-controlling monster robots of unknown origin.

The series features two Ultramen. Gaia is the lead, but Ultraman Agul makes many appearances, and they are often at odds with each other in the beginning of the series. Their philosophies are as different as their skin colors. Unlike Gaia, Agul is completely blue. Gaia is clearly here to save Earth and humanity. Agul is born of Earth and is at first more interested in protecting only the planet, even at the expense of humanity (hence the occasional clashes with Gaia).

The story is set in 2000. Crisis, a supercomputer of the Alchemy Stars (a global network of young geniuses born during the 1980s), predicts in 1997 that Earth and humanity would be annihilated by something known as "KONGENTEKI HAMETSU SHOHRAI TAI" (KHST). Roughly, it means "Entity that Brings Radical Destruction" and it sounds impressive in Japanese, although based on the characters used, it's likely they use the word "radical" to mean "fundamental". Technology developed by the Alchemy Stars is used to form an international defense organization known as GUARD (Globalcentric Universal Alliance against the Radical Destruction). This is done secretly so as to avoid worldwide panic. XIG (eXpanded Intercepting Guards) is the combat wing of GUARD, headquartered in a floating fortress known as Aerial Base.

Gamu is a 20-year old member of the Alchemy Stars who invented a lot of the technology used by XIG (including the repulsor lifts that allow Aerial Base and the XIG fighters to defy gravity). During some virtual reality experiments he performs with the secret purpose of discovering the will of the Earth, he briefly encounters the mysterious glowing red giant, Ultraman Gaia, at the end of a tunnel of light. When KHST begins the first wave of attacks on Earth and XIG is too new to be effective, time stops and he falls through another light tunnel, where he encounters Gaia again. Because Gamu is so passionately concerned with the fate of Earth and humanity, Gaia's light becomes a part of him, and he is thus able to transform into the Ultraman when necessary. The first monster, Cosmic Organism Vanguard, is destroyed. Subsequently, more KHST attacks, and Earth monsters are also awakened mysteriously, so Gaia is kept pretty busy. Gamu joins XIG as a technical advisor, and later creates the Esplendor to store the light that is the essence of Gaia.

At XIG, there are multiple three-person teams with specialized roles. In addition, there are the three commanders and three communications women (Akko and Georgie, plus a support recruit). XIG has more women than some Ultra support teams have both men AND women. The show also features a lot of foreigners who speak Japanese really well. The showcase is Georgie Leland, the communications officer (played by Maria Theresa Gow). Also Catherine (Cas), who likes weapons and dresses like Sarah Connor (from Terminator II) and goes on an occasional date with Gamu, much to the chagrin of Akko. There's also Michael Simmons, as well as a few other Alchemy Stars.

Finally, there is that mysterious Hiroya Fujimiya, the dark guy who transforms into Ultraman Agul. He is responsible for Crisis and its dire predictions. After many recalculations, what he learns is that the only way to save the Earth from KHST is to eliminate humans from the equation. He quits the Alchemy Stars and goes off by himself and Professor Kyohko Inamori to find the will of the Earth, only to discover Agul.

Agul and Gaia fight against KHST and occasionally help each other out. However, as the series progresses, Fujimiya grows more agitated and reckless, and has less and less regard for his fellow humans in his desperate mission to save the Earth. He endangers his own health. When bullied in a bar, he declares that humans need to be purged from Earth. But as Reiko the TV reporter points out, how can he take care of the Earth, when he can't even take care of himself?

Gaia and Agul have a major clash in Episode 25 and both were injured considerably. Incredible energy is released during the fight, which opens up a giant wormhole through which immense serpent Zoalim partially emerges to invade Earth. It turns out that Zoalim was anticipating this clash, and was somehow in synch with impulses emitted from the computer Crisis. Gamu explains to Fujimiya that Crisis was sabotaged all along, and its analysis is fundamentally flawed. Fujimiya realizes that everything he believes in is based on this flaw, and became dejected. He gives the injured Gamu the light that is the essence of Agul so that he can use it to defeat Zoalim. Fujimiya disappears.

Gamu accepted the blue Agul light into his Esplendor, and then could transform into Gaia Version 2, a hybrid of both Gaia and Agul. Really, he looks a lot like the original Gaia, except for the black stripe on the chest plate. Gaia Version 2 can transform into Gaia Supreme Version, who looks like a chubbier Gaia V2 with some blue coloring.

Anyway, later in the series, G.U.A.R.D. tries to be more proactive about defeating the monsters that are attacking the Earth. They try destroying a dormant monster Tigris in episode 38 by sending a bomb into the ground (a plan that backfires horribly), and create an artificial wormhole in episode 44 to destroy the home planet of monsters C.O.V. and Pazuzu, also with disastrous consequences (the K.H.S.T. uses the opportunity to send a C.O.V. and a Pazuzu through the wormhole, and they become more powerful as a result. What becomes evident to Gamu is that monsters like Tigris (and MIZUNOENORYUH, Shazack, and Izaku) are creatures of the Earth like humans are, and perhaps it is not so fair to eradicate them when their only instinct is to survive. As for creatures sent by the K.H.S.T., they are not inherently evil, they are sent to Earth and instinctively will try to survive in an alien environment. Thus, Gamu / Gaia questions his morals and human motives.

There is an environmental spin, in episodes involving "Nature Control Machine" monsters (TENKAI the wind machine of episode 7, ENZAN the heat machine of episode 28, and SHINRYOKU, the forest machine of episode 46. It is later revealed that they would be used to reconstruct the Earth after humans are exterminated. It is still not clear to me when they were put on Earth.

Agul eventually returns as Version 2, and he and Gaia set their differences aside to fight the common enemy. Gaia and Agul finally join forces in episode 44 to defeat Super C.O.V. and Super Pazuzu.

The final assault on Earth forces begins with the arrival of BlitzBlotz, a black and white avian monster who has the ability to absorb and fire back Ultra laser weapons with the red thing on his chest. He systematically starts destroying G.U.A.R.D. bases, and makes a mess of Agul (watch BlitzBlotz destroy a base that looks very much like the original Science Patrol headquarters). Tigris II emerges to fight BlitzBlotz and XIG, G.U.A.R.D., monster, and Gaia must fight side by side to defeat BlitzBlotz. Especially ironic is this hodgepodge alliance, for one of the veteran G.U.A.R.D. commanders killed the original Tigris back in Episode 38 as part of an anti-monster vendetta.

Next, giant creature Mokian is sent to Earth in episode 47. He is essentially a giant magnet that has enough magnetic force to pull apart the Earth's crust and make the planet generally uninhabitable by humans. It is revealed by the Death God that the KHST feels humans are a threat to the universe and must be eradicated. This is a fabulous, must-see episode in which the Aerial Base finally gets to see some action, and it gets beat up really, really bad. It is determined that the only way to destroy Mokian is to sacrifice what is left of the Aerial Base by ramming it into the giant monster, and this is done, although miraculously, no one dies from the effort.

The last three episodes involve the arrival of an army of bug-like monsters called Dobishi that cover the earth and darken the skies. XIG is in tatters, humanity is losing hope, and the Dobishi just keep coming. They combine to form the numerous giant Kizer Dobishi, and the two Ultramen can't defeat them all.

The KHST finally reveals herself in the form of Zogu, a giant, white angel. She kills the Kizer Dobishis that the Ultramen are fighting, and replenishes Gaia and Agul's power, only to completely overpower the two and make their Life Gauges expire. Lights out, the two Ultramen turn back into Gamu and Fujimiya, which is filmed by the two KCB cameramen. This is broadcast to the world. The two aren't dead, but can no longer turn into Gaia and Agul.

As an aside, Episode 50's ending credits feature monsters from the entire series in order of appearance.

It is at this point that all of Earth's monsters start emerging again all around the world to protect Earth from the Dobishis and Kizer Dobishis. It's like a great big Destroy All Monsters kind of thing. Gamu hatches a final scheme, in which the Alchemy Stars network is used to assist the last of the XIG fighters (some are flying normal military planes) to channel energy from the Earth monsters to give Gamu and Fujimiya the ability to transform back into Gaia and Agul. No match for all of this firepower, Zogu morphs from the angel into a very big dragon monster. It's a pretty neat way to tie up the series. Everyone is brought back and united to participate together in the final battle against Zogu. Gaia, Agul, XIG, the Earth monsters, the Alchemy Stars, the KCB TV crew, and even Gamu's parents.

This monumental finale closes the book on Gaia, as well as the three series that comprise what is known as the so-called Heisei Ultramen (Ultraman Tiga, Ultraman Dyna and Gaia). In 2001, a 45-minute direct-to-video episode was released, and follows the lives of Gamu and Fujimiya after the events of the original series.

Trivia

Ultraman Gaia appropriately gets his name from the Gaia Theory, which states that the Earth functions like a giant, living creature. Ultraman Tiga, Ultraman Dyna, and Ultraman Gaia are collectively known as "TDG". They are also known as the Heisei Ultramen. Unlike other Ultramen, Gaia and Agul's Color Timer is known as a "Life Gauge." The Life Gauges blink red when energy is running out, but there isn't an explicitly stated time restriction. There are no seijin (aliens) in Gaia at all, unless you count Furuhta-seijin, who was a fake alien that the employees of Furuta Steel factory concocted for extortion purposes in the outrageously comical episode 35.

The only cameos from past Ultras in Gaia is Hiroshi Tsuburaya.

ULTRAMAN LEO

Earth is once again target for a group of aliens, this time the Magma. This time, however, an Ultra-hero is already on the job: Ultraseven! Unfortunately, these aliens and their monsters Red Gilas and Black Gilas are almost too much for Seven; his leg is seriously injured. Coming on the scene to save him, however, is an Ultra hero-like being from the Galactic Lion System in constellation L77; he is called Leo. Leo's planet was destroyed by the Magma, and he has followed them to Earth. Leo is given "official" Ultraman status by Ultraseven, who decides to remain on Earth in spite of his injury.

Leo, like his mentor, creates his own human ID, that of Gen Otori. He and Dan Moroboshe (Ultraseven's human form) join the Monster Attack Corps (or MAC for short); Dan, now walking with a cane, is chosen to lead the corps. Because of his injury, Dan rarely changes to Ultraseven, letting Leo do most of the work. Gen, like Dan, requires a separate mechanism to change to his Ultra form. This comes in the form of the "Leo ring."

During his time on Earth, Leo discovers two other Ultra-beings. One is his brother Astra, who stays near enough to Earth to assist Seven and Leo in their fight. More important was Leo's discovery that a legendary immortal Ultra-being, Ultraman King, is more than just legend, but real. Thankfully, King comes to save Leo and Astra from a Magma trap. During the course of this series, the other Ultra-heroes introduced to date also guest-star.

Leo's main beam attack is his Hand Beam, emitted from devices on his wrist. In the final battle with the Magma, the entire MAC is killed (although I'm not sure if Dan is also killed). Leo fights on with both hope and fury, eventually defeating the Magma Commander Black. He then retires to space.

As the 1970s wore on, Japan began to suffer a recession, chiefly initiated by the Oil Shocks. The situation inspired the dire portents of JAPAN SINKS, but also led to a round of belt-tightening in the media business. To producers with falling budgets, men kicking over model buildings started to look less appealing than the savings afforded by animated productions, and rubber monster shows began to decline even as the giant-robot anime gained in popularity.

The sixth show saw the arrival of the Ultra's distant relative Ultraman Leo from the nebula L-77 in the constellation of Leo. Adopting Earth as his home after the destruction of his native world. Leo is tutored by Dan Moroboshi, the former Ultra Seven, now hobbling around on crutches after an accident has deprived him of his ability to transform. Made at the height of Bruce Lee's posthumous fame after Enter the Dragon (1973), Ultraman Leo concentrated on martial arts skills, and often featured it's hero defeating monsters with karate alone. Taking over Seven's mission of defending the Earth, gymnastic instructor Gen (Manatsu) trains under Dan and occasionally leans on his mento's "Ultra Willpower" as a form of telepathic backup.

Ultraman Leo follows on from ULTRAMAN TARO. The follow on series after Ultraman Leo was in fact The Ultraman, which was the first animated adventures of Ultraman.

Leo helmed the last series of the golden era of Ultraman, when monster shows were waning in popularity with the advent of giant robot animation shows, and special effects like rubber monster suits and miniature buildings were deemed extravagant due to the Oil Shock and inflation that Japan (and the world) was experiencing in the mid-Seventies. The economizing showed, and the live-action franchise was put into hibernation for four years after Leo ended.

There are several conceptual gimmicks used to freshen up the post-Taro series. Unlike all of the other headline Ultramen, Leo is from Nebula L77 in the Leo zodiac, which is about 700,000 light years away. His planet was destroyed by Magma-seijin, so he adopts Earth as his new home, which he vows to protect (making Leo conceptually a lot like Superman, who lost his home of Krypton). Gen Otori, Leo's human form, is a gymnastics instructor on the side, which creates an opportunity for there to be the requisite little children. He's very intense and emotional, and often makes mistakes.

Dan Moroboshi (Ultra Seven) is brought back as the captain of MAC (Monster Attacking Crew). However, since Magma-seijin's Gillas monsters mangle Seven's leg in the first scene of the series (we actually get to see his leg being twisted around and hear bones being cracked), Dan is no longer able to transform (his Ultra Eyes melt and burn), and he hobbles around haplessly with a crutch for the rest of the series. Plus, he gains weight and even tries sporting a moustache. He thus develops a master/disciple relationship with Gen (cheesy comparisons are made about them and the setting and rising suns). Dan often helps Leo by using Ultra Will Power (Urutora Nenriki), which momentarily renders monsters helpless, but is physically draining for Dan. Gen training to learn the Kirimomi Kick was very similar to when Hideki Goh learned how to do the Ryuhsei Kick in Return of Ultraman so that he could defeat King Saurus the 3rd.

The entire concept of the series is pretty grim and depressing. It's also infinitely more serious than Ultraman Taro. In fact, every episode opens with the explosion of L77, to remind us of just how much it sucks to be Gen. Until episode 13, the opening credit music is pretty much about the end of the world, adding to the dark milieu.

Leo has only two minutes and forty seconds to fight, unlike all of his three-minute predecessors (although his fight sequences in Episode 1 and 2 are interminably long) and he is the first headline Ultraman to lack an "-ium" weapon. In fact, at the beginning of the series, he completely lacks laser weapons, and has to kick and punch his foes into submission with his martial art skills. He rips chimneys off of buildings and turns them into nunchucks. And finally, the ornate, top-heavy crown design of his head and the keen Fonzie sideburns make him the rococo of Ultramen. His crown is toned down from initial designs (Balkie-seijin, the bad guy from the final episode of Ultraman Taro, is based on a reject design of Leo).

The "train with Dan to overcome the enemy using karate techniques" formula became the pattern of the first half of the series, which alienated traditional fans. Episode 17 has the dubious distinction of being the first Ultra episode to ever dip into the single digits in the ratings statistics.

This wake-up call evoked a creative push to reinvigorate the series. Leo starts using lasers (in a move in the opposite direction that can be considered overkill, he even uses a full-body laser). His brother Astra shows up on several occasions, and together they can fire the powerful Ultra Double Flasher. And then there is the introduction of the living legend, Ultraman King. King shows up in only three episodes, but his appearances are very significant. He gives Leo his "Ultra Mant," a multi-purpose cape that Leo usually hides in an armband. Episodes 26 through 32 encompass the "NIPPON MEISAKU" series, or Japanese Masterpiece series, drawing upon Japanese folklore mythology for plotlines. Episodes 32 and 33 are directed by Nobuo Nakagawa, a master of mystery movies.

Producers talked with fans who visited the studio for their input, and their ideas were incorporated (for example, the return of Magma-seijin, and the ball monster Sevengar for Dan). Then there a fake Astra steals the Ultra Key. The Leo brothers and the Ultra brothers get into a big fight over this. Finally, in a radical move, MAC is annihilated in Episode 40 by Commander Black of the BlackStar (it's not sure what happens to Dan Moroboshi). The last eleven episodes are devoted to the invading BlackStar Flying-Saucer Life Forms (ENBAN SEIBUTSU) that are sent to Earth everytime Commander Black calls for one through a crystal ball he is always carrying around. This is a bold move, since most of the monsters must be strung from wires and demand tricky special effects.

The L77-destroying arch-nemesis Magma-seijin plays a surprisingly unimportant role in the series (other than the first two episodes, and an episode where he seeks revenge for having his amorous advances rejected by Rolan. Dan doesn't use his cache of Capsule Monsters at all (though Windam and Mikuras were gone, Agira was never killed). Ultraman Jack does deliver Dan the "Monster Ball," which could turn into Sevengar for one minute, but Dan uses Sevengar only once against Ashuran.

After the destruction of MAC, Gen is unemployed, and stays at the home of Tohru and family. Gen goes running a lot with Tohru, and encourages him to run all the way to the sea one day. The Flying-Saucer Life Forms continue to attack the Earth, and one of the women living in the house starts wondering if the reason why Earth is always being invaded is because Leo is there. Tohru then defends Leo, saying he likes and wishes to protect humans. Gen starts to question whether or not there is some validity to what she is saying, and whether or not it's time for him to move on.

In Episode 50, Commander Black receives Flying-Saucer Life Form Bunyo, a weak but cunning fella, who uses his antennae to detect that Gen is an alien (and therefore Leo). Gen lets Bunyo bind his arms with a space rope to save the mother of his household, who was held in a hostage situation. Gen is taken before Commander Black, and his identity is revealed. Gen transforms, but the bindings prevent him from growing to giant-size. He is frozen, and Commander Black and Bunyo hack him to pieces with a saw, throwing the pieces away in a cemetery. Maybe it's things like this that prevent the Ultra series from being broadcast in America.

Leo is of course resurrected, by Ultraman King.

In the final episode, Commander Black sends for the ultimate Flying-Saucer Life Form, Black End. The monster sounds like he is beckoning Gen by calling out his name, "Leo, Leo!" Leo can't transform, though, because he is with Tohru. Bored with this fruitless effort, Commander Black and Black End disappear. Even Tohru begins to have his doubts about his hero because of the no-show, and starts thinking that maybe Leo really is a liability for Earth. When Black End returns again, Gen reveals to Tohru his true identity, and transforms in front of the child to confront Black End. While Leo struggles with Black End, Commander Black grabs Tohru as a hostage. Leo can't make a move lest his friend be hurt. At that moment, a bunch of Tohru's friends attack Commander Black, and they bite and hit and trample him... he lets go of his crystal ball, which is used by Leo to kill Black End. A pretty gruesome scene, as the Commander melts away in front of these murderous yet heroic little tykes.

His work done, his identity revealed, and reassured now that the little kids can defend themselves, Gen leaves Tohru's household to travel and get to know this big blue planet that is his second home planet. Tohru runs to the sea to watch Gen sail away into the sunset.

Ultraman Leo Stats

Height: 52 meters

Weight: 48,000 tons

Flight Speed: mach 7

Running Speed: 600 km/h

Home Planet: Nebula L77

Human Form: Gen Ohtori

Transformation Item: Leo Ring

Weapons:

He doesn't have a traditional cross-armed "-ium" weapon. Though he mostly fought at first with martial arts, laser weapons entered his repertoire later in the series.

Timer Shot: A blue beam from his ColorTimer.

Ultra Double Flasher: A devastating red bolt of energy that Leo could fire when he joins hands with his brother, Astra.

The Ultra Mant: A multi-purpose cape given to him by Ultraman King in Episode 26, which he normally hides in the blue band he wears on his left arm. The Mant can make monsters smaller, and can turn into an umbrella.

MAC Members

MAC is one of the most radically different Ultra support teams. As mentioned above, the captain is Dan Moroboshi, who is Ultraseven deprived of his ability to transform. MAC also has a flowing membership. Members get killed off and replaced with frightening rapidity, which is way more realistic than the typical ensemble cast. To top it all off, MAC gets annihilated mid-series (Episode 40). There are (were) bases in orbit above North and South America, Africa, Northern Europe, and Japan. This is in addition to numerous land-based bases as well.

Captain Dan Moroboshi

Gen Ohtori

Ichiroh Aoshima

Akio Kuroda

Kiyohiko Akaishi

Junko Shirakawa

Haruko Momoi

Trivia

The show got off on a bad start. The previous series, Ultraman Taro, was extended from 52 to 53 episodes because pre-production of Leo was running behind schedule.

The MAC song sings about the MAC Mole and the MAC Shark, but these machines were never used in battle on the series (although the Shark makes an appearance in the opening credits after episode 28).

Cameos

Episode 1: Leo saves Ultra Seven from certain death at the hands of Magma-seijin and the Gillas brothers.

Ultra Seven's leg is damaged and Dan Moroboshi can no longer transform into him. They develop a mentoring relationship. As the MAC captain, Dan plays a recurring role.

Episode 22: Astra joins Leo in the fight against brother monsters Gallon and Liler.

Episode 26: After being shrunk by Pressure-seijin, Leo is rescued and resized by Ultraman King. They defeat the alien together and King gives Leo the Ultra Mant.

Episode 29: Yuriko Hishimi reprises her role as Anne from the Ultra Garrison of Ultra Seven.

Episode 30: Hiroko Sakurai (Fuji from Ultraman) plays the human form of Rolan, the "most beautiful monster in the world." Also, Susume Kurobe (Hayata, the original Ultraman) makes a cameo as the farmer father of some kid.

Episode 33: Astra, against Akumania-seijin.

Episode 34: Ultraman "Jack" delivers a monster ball to Dan Moroboshi, but monster Ashuran slaps a mask on him. For some reason, Ultra Seven makes an appearance as well.

Episode 36: Astra, against Atlanta-seijin.

Episode 38-39: Leo defends fake Astra from Zoffy, Ultraman, Ultraman "Jack," and Ultraman Ace in the ultimate Ultra rumble, after fake Astra steals the Ultra Key, which causes the Land of Light to head on a collision course toward Earth. In addition, to controlling the orbit of the Land of Light, the Ultra Key shoots a very destructive ray. Flashback to when the Ultra Father uses the Ultra Key to disintegrate an entire planet of evil. Gen gets into a fist fight with Dan. Leo even absorbs direct hits from simultaneous beams from three of the Ultramen, which knocks him out good. Ultraman King reveals that this Astra is in fact Babalou-seijin in disguise. Leo and the real Astra repair the broken Ultra Key with their Ultra Double Spark. Ultraman King has Dan accept Leo and Astra officially as new Ultra brothers. The Ultra Father and the Ultra Mother nod their approval.

Episode 46: Astra, against Hanglar.

Episode 50: Ultraman King uses a beam from his hands to resurrect Leo, who is dismembered by Bunyo.

Episode 51: Ultra Seven appears in Gen's dream.

ULTRAMAN MAX

Ultraman Max is from Nebula M78 just like his predecessors were and is supported by DASH (Defense Action Squad Heroes), a branch of the UDF (United Defense Federation). His human host name is Touma Kaito. Ultraman Max is based on Ultraseven and has two main weapons at his disposal, the Maxium Cannon fired from his left hand and the Maxium Sword which is a handheld boomerang cutter.

Another Ultraman known as Ultraman Xenon appears for the first time in episode 13. While he is summoning a new weapon from the sky to use against Zetton, he is attacked by Zetton and the weapon attaches itself to Max's right wrist. Max then uses the new weapon known as the Max Galaxy to destroy Zetton.

Team Dash is stationed in a harbour and their base is called the Base Titan. They have a main airplane called the Dash Mother which releases two other small planes known as Dash Bird 1 and 2. A third plane called the Dash Bird 3 appears in episode 23

Team Dash also has a robot operator, who learns a bit about human behaviour in some episodes. Her name is Elly and she has a small ball shaped robot called Koko which makes a high pitched sound to respond to queries.

A new Ultraman show which started airing on 7 July 2005, and produced by Tsuburaya Productions and Chubu-Nippon Broadcasting Co., Ltd.. Back to the tried and true formula of new monsters every week and being fast paced like previous series with the exception of Ultraman Nexus. Full of homages to past series by having two of the original cast members from the first Ultraman series, updated versions of classic monsters like Red King, Eleking and Pigmon among others.

Back to the tried and true formula of new monsters every week and being fast paced like previous series with the exception of Ultraman Nexus. Full of homages to past series by having two of the original cast members from the first Ultraman series, updated versions of classic monsters like Red King, Eleking and Pigmon among others.

Ultraman Max is from Nebula M78 just like his predecessors were and is supported by DASH (Defense Action Squad Heroes), a branch of the UDF (United Defense Federation). His human host name is Touma Kaito. Series produced by Takeshi Yagi & Special Effects By Yuichi Kikuchi.

It premiered on July 2nd 2005 on the CBC Network in Japan. CBC is related to TBS who broadcast most of the Ultraman shows in the 60's and 70's and to MBC who broadcast the Ultraman programs from 1996's ULTRAMAN TIGA through 2001's ULTRAMAN COSMOS.

The producer of the show is Takeshi Yagi who has been a director and assistant director on the Ultraman shows since Ultraman Tiga. Yagi has hired Shusuke Kaneko to direct several episodes, including the first one of the series. Kaneko is well known as the director of the three Gamera films of the 1990's as well as Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghiorah: Gant Monsters All Out Attack. And, as a big surprise, Yagi has also enticed Takeshi Miiike who some call the Quentin Tarantino of Japan, to direct some episodes. Those should be very interesting! Many of the show's special effects will be handled by Yuichi Kikuchi who handled the special effects for Godzilla Against Mecha Godzilla. The new Ultraman and monster designs will be handled by Hiroshi Maruyama who has designed most of Tsuburaya's heroes and monsters since the early 90's.

The new hero Ultraman Max is from Nebula M-78, home of the original Ultraman. This is a big change since the home planets of the more recent Ultraman characters have never been specifically stated. This new show has much more clear ties with the older ones. This will include the return of many of ltraman's most famous monster enemies. Ele King will appear in episode two and there are plans for appearances by such fan favorites as Red King, Pigmon and the ever popular Baltan Seijin.

The cast includes an American, Sean Nichols, in the role of one of the members of Team DASH, the show's monster fighting team. This is the first foreign-born regular cast member since Maria Theresa Gow in 1998's Ultraman Gaia (Maria was of Scottish and Filipino origin and had spent much time in the USA). The team also includes a female android named Elly.

Fans of the original Ultraman series will be pleased to see the return of Susumu Kurobe who played Hayata, the man who transformed into Ultraman. Kurobe plays Chief Tomioka, head of the DASH Team. Fans will also get to see Hiroko Sakurai, who played the original Science Patrol's only female member Agent Fuji, in the role of Professor Yoshinaga, Team DASH's science specialist.

A family is enjoying a picnic in the mountains when suddenly the gigantic monster Grangon appears! A second beast, the freezing monster Ragorath, rises from the ocean's depths to begin its own assault on mankind. Team DASH, the Defense Action Squad Heroes, a high tech organization dedicated to strange and unusual challenges, goes into action. But when Team DASH's plane is grounded by the monsters, Kaito Toma, a volunteer with a relief organization working in the area, jumps into the crashed aircraft and pilots it against Ragorath and Grangon. Ragorath attacks Kaito's plane, it goes down!

Miraculously, Kaito finds himself transported into a strange otherworldly realm where he meets a gigantic alien being. The alien tells Kaito that, because of Kaito's bravery, he has chosen to save Kaito's life and combine it with his own. From now on, when danger strikes, Kaito will have the power to transform himself into the mighty 40 meter (120 foot) tall superhero, Ultraman Max!

1 - 36 ALTERNATIVE DIMENSION WORLD

A professor who is an expert in the study of other dimensions sets up a machine in Base Titan in order to detect invasions from other dimensions. The professor begins an experiment to test the machine.

Shortly after the machine is set up, the small, friendly monster Pigmon appears in Base Titan. When Kaito sees Pigmon he understands that Pigmon is warning them that the vicious monster Red King is coming. According to Pigmon, Red King now exists in another dimension and someone is calling the monster into our world.

Fearing that the new machine is the cause, Team DASH attempts to halt the experiment. But they discover that the professor is actually an alien from the planet Shama who has created the machine in order to bring back the monster Red King! When Red King attacks the city it's up to Ultraman Max to try and defeat him!

1 - 37 CONSTELLATION THIEF

DASH Agents Mizuki and Kaito are looking at the stars. Mizuki has been fascinated by the stars ever since a strange experience happened in her childhood. As they watch, Kaito notices something strange. The stars seem to be forming themselves into a new constellation in the shape of a monster. When Mizuki sees the monster, she is shocked. When she was a child she received a book called The Constellation Thief from a stranger. The same monster was pictured in that book!

The monster attacks and Team DASH goes into action. But during the attack, the monster suddenly vanishes. When Mizuki goes to the place where the monster disappeared, she finds a planetarium. There she meets the same man who gave her the book. He tells her that he is from the planet Saton and he has been on Earth since ancient times. He tells her the story of the monster, which he calls Kepulus. The old man tells Mizuki something shocking. Could it be that Mizuki herself is an alien?

1 - 38 PRELUDE TO THE GROUND ANNIHILATION

The gigantic mechanical monster Scout Basark appears. Agent Kaito transforms into Ultraman Max. But before he transforms, Kaito finds himself facing Ultraman Max who tells him that it is nearing the time when he must return to Nebula M78. Kaito is shocked. From now on, humanity must protect planet Earth on its own.

Ultraman Max battles the monster and seems to defeat it. Soon, though, strange statues begin to appear all over the city. The statues are actually robots. They speak saying, People of Earth, unless you cease all activities which harm this planet within 30 hours, we, the Delos will destroy all DASH bases.

According to professor Yoshinaga, Delos is the name of an ancient race that is said to live underground. When the DASH bases begin being attacked from underground, it seems that the warning is true!

1 - 39 HOLD ON THE THE FUTURE

The Delos race, creatures who live deep under the surface of the Earth, have destroyed Team DASH's bases all over the world. They have erected towers that they are using the change the composition of the Earth's atmosphere in order to reverse the damage caused by human beings.

Though Mizuki and Kaito have gone to the Delos city to negotiate, and have been able to convince them to stop their attacks, their mechanical warrior Giga Basark cannot be stopped. What is more, Giga Basark has already analyzed Ultraman Max and knows all of the hero's weaknesses.

Still, Ultraman Max transforms and engages the monster in a fearsome battle. But the monster is too powerful even for Ultraman Max. Without Ultraman Max can humanity be saved? Can Team DASH revive Ultraman Max?

ULTRAMAN MEBIUS

Mebius is the youngest of all the Ultra brothers and has a lot to live up to. He is chosen as the new protector of the earth. This series is set in the same universe as the original timeline, when Mebius first appears to fight a monster, it is mentioned that this is the first time an Ultraman has appeared in 25 years. Under the guise of Mirai Hibino, Mebius joins Crew GUYS, the monster attack force of this series.

At the start of episode 1, all of the original team members of GUYS, save for Ryu (although it is eventually revealed that another survived), are killed off in their first monster battle. Mirai gathers a group of people he meets in an evacuation to join the new GUYS because he feels they have the right heart to be on GUYS.

Ultraman Mebius (Urutoraman Mebiusu -) is the 16th series in the Ultraman franchise, it also celebrates the 40th anniversary of the franchise. Starting out with a new rookie Ultra who is sent to Earth by Ultra Father, this series pays homage to the past while trying to set up its own original stories as well.

Characters

GUYS

Crew GUYS Japan (Kurū Gaizu Japan)- The abbreviated name of Guards for UtilitY Situation. Crew GUYS are the monster attack team of the series. They have the most advanced technology of any of the past teams in the original universe. Their special weapons are an advanced fighter plane that can fly at supersonic speeds, and the capsule monsters. The Maquette Monsters are at first entered miniature capsules of model of a clear green monster; and monster is materialized Growing huge by Meteor. Use restrictions of the Meteor are only 1 minute.

--Members--

Mirai Hibino (Hibino Mirai) - The main character of the series and a member of GUYS. Mirai Hibino may look like a human, but he is Mebius himself, so there is no host (as was the case with Ultra Seven). He is an outgoing person and likes to make friends and help people. It is because of him that the current members of team GUYS are members. Mebius' personal symbol is the infinity sign.

Ryu Aihara (Aihara Ryū) - He is the member surviving from the original GUYS. When a monster first appeared, GUYS-Japan was sent to take care of the monster. This was the first monster attack in nearly 25 years and no one was prepared for what would come in the battle. Dinosaur easily defeated his comrades, and the remainder was only the fighter plane of him and Serizawa, He was made to secede from a fighter plane compulsorily by Serizawa, and then Serizawa died in a suicide attack to Dinosaur. He is a good man, but has a cold exterior after what has happened to his friends. When Mirai first meets, he is reciting the Ultra Five Oaths and Mirai joins in as well. Later on during Mebius' first battle, he scorns Mebius for failing to defend the city and shielding himself with buildings, then he scorns himself for failing to protect his friends. He feels responsible for all the new members of GUYS and tries his best to protect them. He habitually recites the Ultra Five Oaths after learning them from his previous captain.

Marina Kazama (Kazama Marina) - She is a former motorcycle racer with dreams of becoming one of the first internationally known women in the sport. She had a supervisor called Kadokura. She still tries to keep up with her practices and team at the same time that she is a member of GUYS. She seems like the older sister of the group and tends to look after the other members a lot. She has the outstanding hearing and catches the small machines sound, a natural sound, and voice of a monster, but this hampers her ability as a pilot or racer as it keeps her from pushing her machine too hard.

George Ikaruga (Ikaruga Jōji) - He is a former all star soccer player, though he broke his leg for a time and had to sit out of his games for a few years. He has skill called a shooting star shoot. At the start of the series, a doctor tells him that his knee is finally well enough for him to play football again. Ikaruga feels a need to live up to the image that was created for himself, he's a celebrity and was often looked down upon by his former teammates who think that he has "sold out". He joins GUYS in order to find some form of purpose in his life.

It seems that he cannot swim. As a former soccer player, he has fast eyes and reflexes, which translate into a natural affinity for Meteor-assisted flying. He is known to mix Spanish into his Japanese sentences.

Konomi Amagai (Amagai Konomi) - She is a sweet and kind young lady, she used to be a daycare teacher before joining GUYS. Her students cried when she left, but she felt that being a part of GUYS would be the best way for her to be able to protect all of the children that she once taught. It is because of her that all of the future members of GUYS meet up in episode 1, when they try to rescue the rabbits at Konomi's daycare center. She briefly quits GUYS in episode 4 after she scolds herself for lack of valor. Mirai encouraged her, remembering how Ryu had scorned him for collateral damage after fight with Dinosaur. She is the only member of the group who wears a mini-skirt and the only member who has to wear glasses (once, when Konomi dropped the glasses in the Phoenix Nest's swimming pool, Mirai used the glasses to imitate Ultraseven's transformation pose). The way of glasses is said to be good, although she stops glasses in episode 16 and a contact lens is carried out. In general, she stays at Phoenix Nest as an operator, but goes to the front line as Miclas' "handler" when necessary.

Teppey Kuze (Kuze Teppey) - He is the heir to a fortune and is always being followed after by his mother. He was a medical school student, before participating in GUYS. Were he to not participate in GUYS, he would probably have become a doctor in his father's hospital. He is troubled, occasionally hampered, by his mother's worries. He participates in GUYS in order to become independent from his mother, and initially keeps it a secret from her, but she finds out after he appears on television. Although his mother opposes at first, his father's hospital is protected from Insectus by his work, and she gives him her blessing to continue on. He is knowledgeable about the older Ultramen and monsters, to the point that it is his job in GUYS.

Shingo Sakomizu (サコミズ シンゴ Sakomizu Shingo) - Commander of the new Crew GUYS, after Serizawa was/went killed/missing in action. Upon assuming his position, he has reorganized GUYS with the new members. Of the main characters, very little is revealed about him, other than his love of coffee.

Aide Toriyama (Toriyama Hosakan) - The leader of the Japanese branch of Crew GUYS, he issues orders to GUYS and gets frantic with joy whenever they accomplish a mission. More or less the public face of GUYS, he is apparently the one who must answer to the news media about GUYS' actions (adding a new facet to Ultraman Moebius). Gave approval for the use of Meteor until episode 4, when he handed the authority to Sakomizu.

Secretary Aide Maru (Maru Hosakan Hisho) - Toriyama's secretary, he follows Toriyama around and often corrects his speech mistakes.

Yuki Misaki (Misaki Yuki) - The agent of inspector general, she reports monsters to GUYS. As with Sakomizu, little is known about her.

Kazuya Serizawa (Serizawa Kazuya) - Former commander of GUYS. When Dino Zaur invaded to the earth, then-captain Serizawa had Ryu eject from their jet while he made a suicide run at Dino Zaur high above the earth. However, just before dying, Tsurugi united with him. After killing Dino Zaur Reverse, although he was asked by Mirai whether he should return to GUYS, he refused. He entrusts Ryu to Mirai, and he went away.

--Base--

Phoenix Nest (Fenikkusu Nesuto) - It is the Japanese branch base of GUYS. Unlike several past bases, it has various functions as carrier base.

--Mechanic--

GUYS GUN Speeder (Gaizu Gan Supīdā) - A small multi-core pod that becomes the cockpit of the GUYS GUN-type jets. Capable of simple flight and deep sea diving.

GUYS GUN Phoenix (Gaizu Gan Fenikkusu) - The omnipotent separating fighter jet that serves as the backbone of GUYS' anti-monster arsenal. Separates into Gun Winger and Gun Loader.

GUYS GUN Winger (Gaizu Gan Wingā) - An attack fighter jet excelling in high-speed air battles. Forms the front half of the GUN Phoenix. When Meteor is enabled, it is capable of UFO-like flight and leaves an after-image - but only for one minute. Carries Specium -warhead Missiles.

GUYS GUN Loader (Gaizu Gan Rōdā) - A multiuse heavy fighter jet. Forms the rear half of the GUN Phoenix. When Meteor is enabled, it is also capable of UFO-like flight and leaves an after-image. It can also create tornadoes with its Bringer Fans, which are powerful enough to lift and throw monsters (at which point the GUN Winger can attempt to finish them off).

GUYS GUN Booster (Gaizu Gan Būsutā) - It appears from episode 15. It excels as a high-speed pursuit fighter plane. In Gatling Detonator simultaneously attacked from the beam cannon of six gates, and maneuver mode, Spiral Wall is used, and a transcendence flight is carried out.

GUYS GUN Striker (Gaizu Gan Sutoraikā) - A fighter jet that is the result of GUN Booster combining with the GUN Phoenix, enabling a more powerful boost function. There is skill of Meteor called Invisible Phoenix. Evidently a reference to the old Ultra Hawk from Ultra Seven.

--Equipment--

GUYS Memory Display (Gaizu Memorī Disupurei) - Small mobile pad which is the member certificate of GUYS. It is used for the following uses etc. Communication; Image analysis; Maquette Monster is materialized from the capsule; Cooperation with Trigger Shot; startup certification of Gun Speeder.

GUYS Trigger Shot (Gaizu Toraigā Shotto) - It is laser beam gun used rotating three cylinders called Triple Chamber. Usually, although it is in the state of Handy Shot, can be used in the state of Long Shot which lengthened the barrel. If Red Chamber is chosen, red beam called Acute Arrow can be used. If Yellow Chamber is chosen, yellow high energy fireball called Buster Bred can be used. If Blue Chamber is chosen, by Meteor bullet blue barrier field called Capture Cube, and blue beam called Neutron Neutralizer can be used.

GUYS Meteor Shot (Gaizu Meteōru Shotto) - It appears from episode 19. The new gun for Meteor bullets of GUYS. If it loads with Memory Display, the display and sound which are called "METEOR OVER DRIVE" appear in display of Memory Display, a lock is canceled, and it will be in the state which can be used. Electric activity of the cerebral cortex is detected by scanner built in helmet. The ballistic trajectory of the discharged bullet is controlled, an obstacle is also avoided, and bullet hits to the enemy aimed certainly. Although there is a function which can attack three enemies simultaneously which is called Amazing Triple, human's spatial reasoning capacity cannot use. However, George was able to use by the outstanding fast eye and spatial reasoning capacity.

GUYS Tough Book (Gaizu Tafu Bukku) - It appears from episode 24. The new multifunction computer terminal of GUYS.

Ultraman

Ultraman Moebius (Urutoraman Mebiusu) - rookie of the space garrison who came to the earth in response to the instruction of Father of Ultra. He became a human being called Mirai Hibino and is living. He change as Ultraman Moebius of true form by Moebius Brace given from Father of Ultra. He seems to have received guidance from Ultraman Taro. He prevented Dino Zaur's attack using the building as the shield in episode 1. However, many buildings became rubble and received an antipathy from Ryu.

Moebius Brave (Mebiusu Breibu) - It appears in episode 18. The form in which Moebius borrowed and upgraded the power of Knight Brace entrusted from Hikari. First, Knight Brace appears on Moebius Brace; A golden line appeared and completed on Moebius's the breast and the shoulder.

Ultraman Hikari (Ultraman Light) (Urutoraman Hikari) - He appears from episode 11. He was an excellent scientist who belonged to Space Science Technology Bureau. The true identity of Hunter Knight Tsurugi, sans armor and with Star Marks (Medals of honor to the Ultra Race) on his chest similar to Zoffy. After Tsurugi sacrifices himself to save Moebius, the Mother of Ultra destroys the Arb Gear and restores Hikari to his former self, coming back to Moebius in the midst of his fight with Reverse. Since then, he operates independent from GUYS with Serizawa acting as his host. His name comes from Ryu of Crew GUYS to the dismay of the rest of the team at first before Mirai vouches for him. After he was able to escape to Gromite, Zoffy appeared before him. Although Zoffy said, "Return to the country of light", he refused. And, when he told the will to stay in the earth, Zoffy gave a little postponement and went away. After extinguishing Saramandora in episode 17, he gave Knight Brace to Moebius. And after he met Ryu as Serizawa, he was seen off by the GUYS member and went away from earth.

Father of Ultra (Urutora no Chichi) - He appears in episode 1. Space garrison commander. Moebius Brace was passed to Moebius from Father of Ultra and he ordered to go to the earth.

Mother of Ultra (Urutora no Haha) - She appears in episode 10 and 11. Silver crusades commanding officer. Arb Gear of Tsurugi was destroyed and Tsurugi returned to the true form.

Zoffy (Zofi) - He appears in episode 15 and 24. Space garrison commanding officer. He came to give warning to Hikari which is not a space garrison.

Ultraman Taro (Urutoraman Tarō) - He appears in episode 24. The son of Father of Ultra and Mother of Ultra. He appeared in the earth 33 years ago, and fought with monster or alien. He was the instructor of Moebius.

Enemies

Hunter-Knight Tsurugi (Sword the Hunter Knight)(Hantā Naito Tsurugi) - He appears from episode 5 and appeared to help defeat a Sadora that Moebius himself could not. Not much is known about the character, but it is said that he has a great hatred for Bogal and will do whatever he can to defeat them on his own. Also, Tsurugi, like Ultraman Agul, cares solely on defeating the monsters, and does not care about the collateral damage that ensues, which immediately results in déjà vu for Moebius in episode 7, reminding him about the collateral damage for which Ryu had berated him in episode 1. Tsurugi told Ryu by episode 9 that the body of Serizawa was taken, when Serizawa rushed at Dino Zaur by fighter plane. Tsurugi gave the former leader of GUYS a chance to live when he merged with him. He dies, after killing Bogal Monse together with Moebius. Then, although Tsurugi said to Mother of Ultra, "Let me die", Serizawa did not desire to die. And Arb Gear was destroyed by the power of Mother of Ultra and he returned to the normal state of being.

Mystery Woman (Bogal Human) Nazo no Onna (Bogāru Hyūman)) - She came to Earth to aid the monsters attacking the planet and is actually a monster herself. Her true form is Bogal the Higher dimension Predator. Her aliform acts like a Venus flytrap, and she has an elastic tongue. Her human form is dressed completely in white and has a reptile-like tongue. She talks in a lizard-like voice, can teleport and can move at super-speed. A planet called Arb is destroyed, then she is chased by Tsurugi. She is a bit of a coward, as she always teleports when Tsurugi attacks her. She causes Moebius much trouble. Bogal evolved into Bogal Monse in episode 9. If Bogal Monse dies, it will cause mighty explosion. After fitting into the strategy of shutting up into electromagnetism barrier of GUYS, it is challenged to a decisive battle by Moebius and Tsurugi. It falls in response to ray of Moebius and Tsurugi after a fierce fight. Then Moebius and Tsurugi are going to escape from barrier, Bogal stands up. However, Bogal stuck in Tsurugi with Knight Beam Blade and explodes in barrier.

Maquette Monsters

The monster materialized by the Meteor of GUYS.

Miclas (ミクラス Mikurasu)

Appearance Episode: 4, 8, 9, 13

Note: A monster who is extremely shy, and somewhat stupid. The team tries to coach it to become a great fighter and fail miserably. However, when Komoni is given a chance to tame him, he automatically fell in love with its "handler". While not as strong as Moebius, he can hold his own, but will sometimes cower when the monster proves to be too strong. Fortunately, Konomi cheers for him which motivates him to fight to the end (or until Moebius arrives to help him). Later, the data of the monster of the attribute of various electricity was added to Miclas, and becomes Eleki Miclas. and became usable about the electric discharge attack, and the transparency capability by data of Neronga and Eledortus. However, since the electric discharge attack of Eleking of Ultra Seven was a trauma, it refused data of Eleking.

Lim-Eleking (リムエレキング Rimu Erekingu)

Appearance Episode: 8, 11, 15, 18, 20

Note: A little monster known to be causing mischief around the Phoenix Nest. When an electric attribute is added to Miclas, the by-product with which Miclas refused the data of Eleking and was produced is Lim-Eleking. It teleports all over headquarters draining electricity wherever it can find it. Like with Miclas, it is fond of Konomi, thus being his unofficial "handler". However, the little monster scares many of the other members (except for Ryu and Mirai), especially George after being electrocuted by it.

Windom

Appearance Episode: 11, 14, 20

Note: A metallic cyborg like creature which was first used by Mirai, but is now handled by Teppei. Its primary attack is a beam fired from its forehead.

Fire Windom

Appearance Episode: 24

Note: The form in which the element of a flame was given to Windom by GUYS Tough Book.

Shunji Igarashi, the actor who portrays Moebius/Mirai said that he wanted to perform the voice of Moebius. The only other actor to provide the voice of their Ultra is Ultra Seven's Kouji Moritsugu. Usually, it's another voice actor altogether who provides the Ultra with his voice.

Shin Ishikawa, the actor who plays Kazuya, Tsurugi's host, also played Shin Kazamatsuri/Kamen Rider Shin in Shin Kamen Rider

ULTRAMAN NEXUS

AKA: URUTORAMAN NEKUSASU

The year is 2009 A.D.

Earth is in a secret war against the mysterious Space Beasts, unknown organisms which feed on human beings. TLT, a top-secret international defense organization, was humanity's last hope against the Space Beasts. The story revolves around, and is generally narrated by KOMON Kazuki, a new recruit to the TLT's battle team, Night Raider. On his way to the TLT Headquarters, Komon is attacked by a Space Beast. Luckily, he is saved by a mysterious giant, known as Ultraman Nexus. As Komon steps deeper into the true reality unknown to other people, mysteries surrounding the Ultraman and his mysterious foes will be revealed . . . Humanity's final fate will be determined by the bond of Light, Nexus.

CHARACTERS

TLT (Terrestrial Liberation Trust)

Terrestrial Liberation Trust (TLT) is a clandestine global, non-government organization set up to investigate, research and defeat the "SPACE BEAST" threat. Japan's TLT (TLT-J) branch is hidden under a hydroelectric dam found in the mountainous Kanto region (eastern Japan). The main teams of TLT are Night Raider, Memory Police (who erase the memories of civilians involved in any Night Raider missions or witnessing any Space Beast attacks) and White Sweeper, who are involved in clean-up.

Night Raider

The elite defense team united under TLT. The team responsible in eliminating Space Beasts.

KOMON Kazuki - The main character of the series. Komon is a kind-hearted, straightforward person who is always willing to help others. Before he was recruited by TLT, Komon was from a rescue team. When Komon was a child, he fell into a river and almost drowned, only to be rescued by a mysterious person he believes to be an alien. Because of the incident, Komon decided to help others and joining Night Raider was a good opportunity to do so. Unfortunately, reality is not what it seems . . . the truth is a road to nowhere . . . Komon will now have to fight against the forces of darkness . . . he is later revealed to be the last Deunamist (see below) and battles as Ultraman Noa.

Played by Takuji Kawakubo

SAIJOYO Nagi - The deputy leader of Night Raider. She is very strict, especially to Komon and can be quite brutal in certain situations. She hates Space Beasts, stemming from incidents regarding her childhood and her former lover Mizorogi Shinya. When she was small, her mother was murdered by a Space Beast. After she joined Night Raider to fulfill her vow to destroy the beings that killed her mother, she met and eventually fell in love with Mizorogi Shinya, the former deputy leader of Night Raider. When Mizorogi fell to the dark side, she deepened her hatred and was willing to do anything to bring a Space Beast down.

WAKURA Eisuke - The captain of Night Raider. A good leader and takes action effectively in any situation. He cares for his teammates and well trusted by them. Although his motto is to follow orders, he will take necessary action if it means to protect others. A brother figure towards Komon, he provides wisdom to the new recruit.

HIRAKI Shiori - A female in the Night Raider team. Although she looks pretty and cute, she is an expert in weapons and can be very strong and helpful during missions. She has a good personal relationship with Ishibori Mitsuhiko.

ISHIBORI Mitsuhiko - The analyzer and tactician of the team and an expert in computers. Unknown to everyone, he keeps a very dark secret--he is Dark Zagi in disguise (see below).

The Deunamists

HIMEYA Jun - The second Deunamist, a human who can bond with the Light to become Ultraman Nexus (using a wand-like device called the Evolthruuster). He is a serious, somewhat brooding individual, not given to trusting institutions such as the Night Raiders. He eventually strikes up some sort of kinship with Komon, rescuing him from danger a few times.

Himeya was a photo journalist, specialising in war photos. During one assignment (presumably somewhere in SE Asia), he was injured and subsequently treated by an orphan named Sara. Sadly, Sara was caught up in armed conflict, and was killed as she rushed towards Himeya. Distraught, Himeya returned, full of regret -- ironically, that collection of pictures shot him to fame. After the incident, Himeya encountered the Light, possibly through the first Deunamist, First Lieutenant Shunichi Maki of the Japanese Air Force (see ULTRAMAN: THE NEXT theatrical feature). Trying to make up for what he was unable to do in the past, Himeya uses the power of the light to protect humanity and battles the Space Beast, sacrificing everything within battle.

Ultraman Nexus' default Anphans mode is a silver & gray. However, Anphans is able to transform into a red, black and silver mode known as Junis using the cuffs on his wrists, known as the Armed Nexus. Nexus Junis is then able to create a Meta-Field--a dome of light that transports himself and any opponent to an alternate dimension so that he can safely battle without causing damage to the surroundings. Analysis showed later that the Metafield was actually a manifestation of Himeya's physical body, which was why every battle affected him so greatly and continued to weaken him. During a climactic battle with Dark Mephisto, Himeya is presumed to have died, but is later shown at the end of the series very much alive and well.

Played by Yusuke Kirishima

Ren Senju - The third Deunamist, Ren receives the Light after the disappearance of Himeya. Outwardly, he is cheerful, optimistic and simple to the point of ditzy -- this, however, conceals his past experiences.

Ren is not a normal human, but rather a 'son of Prometheus': a human created through genetic engineering under the flag of "Prometheus Project" (an experiment performed in Dallas, Texas in America). He has faster reflexes, physical strength and ESP powers than a normal human. However, Ren suffers from a genetic unbalance of his DNA which basically cut his lifespan to 17-18 years. His only hope to prolong his life is a drug known only as 'Raphael'. Running away from the institute in Dallas, Ren comes to Japan hoping to live his last days as a 'normal' human, but instead encounters the Light and becomes Nexus' third Deunamist.

After Ren takes on the mantle of Dunamist, Nexus' Junis form is significantly modified to become a faster, sleeker Junis Blue. His primary weapons are the Arrow Ray Shtrom and Cross Ray Shtrom, deadly beams of light fired from his Armed Nexus.

Played by Makoto Uchiyama

The Dark Side

Saida Riko/Dark Faust - Komon's kind-hearted artist girlfriend. Later it is revealed that she had actually died long before she'd met Komon, when her family was attacked by the Space Beast Nosphil. Mizorogi arrived on the scene, but turned around and shot her instead. She was resurrected to become a pawn of the darkness, unwittingly serving as the human form for Dark Faust, Nexus' first dark foe. However, in the end, Riko's consciousness won out during a battle with Nosphil where Komon became trapped in the Metafield, and s/he shielded him with his/her body against an attack. The revelation that Riko was Faust and her death shook Komon considerably, and he took a long time to recover.

Mizorogi Shinya/Dark Mephisto - The former deputy captain of the Night Raiders, who went missing in AD 2008 during a mission with Nagi, also his former girlfriend. In actuality, Mizorogi had been (forcibly) merged with the Dark Giant known as Dark Mephisto. He is portrayed as cruel and manipulative, playing mind games with Komon and other people and seeming to take delight in antagonising Nagi, his ex-girlfriend, as well. Using the Dark-Thruster, Mizorogi can transform into Dark Mephisto as the most frequently appearing arch-enemy of Nexus. Dark Mephisto is able to generate the 'Dark Field', which neutralises the effects of the Metafield and gives him an advantage in battle. In Nexus' climactic battle with Mephisto, it is presumed that both perished, but Mizorogi is found alive, although wounded and with absolutely no memory about Faust and his battles with Nexus. He had also lost the ability to become Mephisto, but when the Unknown Hand sends down Dark Mephisto Zwei against Junis Blue, Mizorogi transforms by force of will and holds Zwei down so that Nexus can destroy him. Both Mephistos perish, and Shinya dies in Nagi's arms.

Unknown Hand - Described as unlimited darkness which controlled the dark giants and Space Beasts behind the scenes. It has the ability to generate a Dark Field G and power up Space Beasts. In the end of the series, its identity was revealed as Dark Zagi, Ishibori Mitsuhiko of the Night Raider. Komon is allowed by the Light to merge not into another Ultraman Nexus, but Ultraman Noa, who fights Dark Zagi for humanity's sake.

ULTRAMAN TARO

Monsters begin to appear out of thin air, threatening the Earth. ZAT (Zariba of All Territory ... although the word "Zariba" was never explained, it seems to come from an Arabic word referring to a fence-enclosed camp, implying that ZAT was a fence to ward off monsters from "all territory"), the Space Science Guard, was formed to protect the world. As always, they needed help. Meanwhile, Kotaro Higashi, a young boxer "striving for maturity," is stopped by a young woman who gives him a "good luck charm." A short time later, he joins ZAT, and is killed by the monster Astromons.

(Some good-luck charm.) Amazingly Kotaro is transported to the Land of Light, where Ultra Mother and the other Ultra-heroes hover over him. She has just created a new Ultraman, whom she merges with Kotaro. Kotaro is told that he can use the charm, called the Ultra Badge, to change from his human form to his Ultra form at will. Kotaro then is returned to Earth only a moment after he left, but reborn as Ultraman Taro. Taro's task is to prove his maturity and his worthiness to become a true Ultraman. Ultraman Taro had at least one energy-beam attack, the Streium Beam. This beam was projected from his vertical arm, after his other arm is placed perpendicular, with hands together.

Though many sources refer to the Ultra Family or the Ultra Brothers, few of the Ultramen are actually related. However, the hero of the fifth season, Ultraman Taro, was genuinely the some of the Ultra rulers Ultra Father and Ultra Mother, and reputedly the cousin of Ultra Seven. The youngest of the Ultramen, and prone to repeated deach scenes and revivals, Taro's year as an agent ended when he turned in his badge to the Ultra Mother and left to "walk the Earth".

Ultraman Taro followed on from ULTRAMAN ACE, and the next in the series was ULTRAMAN LEO.

Ultraman Taro (Urutoraman Tarō) is the title superhero of a tokusatsu SF/kaiju/superhero TV show, and is the 6th show in the Ultra Series. Produced by Tsuburaya Productions, this series aired on Tokyo Broadcasting System from April 6, 1973 to April 5, 1974, with a total of 53 episodes.

In a move similar to the previous series, Ultraman Ace, this series has a more comical feel and appeals greatly to children, an audience which made this one of the more popular Ultra Series, although adult fans have a different point of view. Up until the 1990s, this was also the most expensive of the Ultra Series.

Taro is one of the most typical name of a boy in otogi-banashis, or, Japanese fairy tales. The producer said, 'Ultraman Taro is going to be the fairy tale in Ultra Series.'

Ultraman Taro Stats

Height: 53 meters

Weight: 55,000 tons

Flight Speed: mach 20

Running Speed: 1200 km/h

Home Planet: The Land of Light, Nebula M78

Human Form: Kotaro Higashi

Transformation Item: Ultra Badge

Weapons:

Storium Ray: A unique T-style weapon... after some major arm-waving and the charging up of his entire body, Taro rests the fist of his vertical right arm to the open palm of his horizontal left arm.

Neo-Storium Ray: A plus-style variation of the Storium Ray.

Swallow Kick: From 600 meters up.

Atomic Punch: Propelled by his transformation momentum.

Twinkle Way: A tunnel he creates to gain access to the Land of Light.

Ultra Nenriki (Willpower): Makes his enemy think Taro gets his head chopped off (against Enmargo).

Taro Bracelet: Converts into a lance. Fires blue rings of light (Set Beam).

King Bracelet: An upgrade of the Taroh Bracelet delivered by the Mother of Ultra. Converts into a muzzle, a plastic blue bucket filled with water for waking up drunken monster Beron, and a "magic hand." Fires a Bracelet Beam. Also allows Taroh to divide into two and confuse enemies.

Ultra Slash-like ring of light (episode 47).

Ultra Six-in-One (or Ultra Overlapping): Where he merges with the Five Ultra Brothers so that he is strong enough to enter the fires of the Ultra Tower to retrieve the Ultra Bell to defeat Mururoa (episode 25).

Cosmo Miracle Beam: a powerful laser he shoots from his raised arm and the side of his body, including his armpit, after combining with his five other brothers. Used only in Ultraman Story movie against Grand King.

Guts Needle: beam fired from his fists and an Ultra FUNRYUH (a six-coloured smoke screen).

ZAT Members

The most salient feature of ZAT (Zariba of All Territory) is that they concoct a variety of outlandish strategies to defeat monsters (even more so than the Science Patrol), such as using pepper to get Live King to sneeze (since he swallowed Higashi and a dog), or carrying Mini Tortoise in a giant basket. Also, ZAT mecha are by far the most garish. The "Rabbit Panda," their souped up van, is particularly over the top. The Sky Whale, their air fortress, is as thin as a stick and is reminiscent of nothing whale-like.

Captain Yuhta Asahina

Kotaro Higashi

Deputy Captain Shuhhei Aragaki: In many episodes, Aragaki lead the troops, with Asahina nowhere to be found. In addition, Aragaki seems to disappear near the end of the series and a new deputy captain takes his place (this new guy is way past his prime and can barely even pass his requalification exam).

Jiroh Nishida: Leaves for space station V9.

Tadao Nanbara

Tetsuya Kitajima

Assistant Izumi Moriyama: Wears a different uniform than the men, for the first time in a Ultra Series.

Unfortunately, the role of the ZAT female tends to be very similar to Uhura's on Star Trek, except that Uhura probably never had to serve green tea. However, Izumi does get to pilot the Sky Whale on occasion and lob a few missiles.

Trivia

Ultraman Taroh was going to be named Ultraman Jack, but hijacking became a negative buzz-word in Japan about that time, so they deep-sixed the name at the last minute (which was recycled in the '90's as the new name of Kaetekitta Ultraman). Taroh was also going to be called Ultra Jack, Ultraman 6, Ultraman Fighter, Ultraman Z (pronounced "zet"), and Ultraman Star.

It is also said that the producer was afraid that people associate the name Jack with Jack the Ripper, known in Japan as the most horrible murderer in those days.

Taroh is said to be the distaff cousin of Ultra Seven, which explains why the two Ultramen look so much alike (their mothers are sisters).

With 53 episodes, Ultraman Taroh held the record for longest canonical Ultra series for many years (shattered in 2002 by the 65-episode Ultraman Cosmos). This record excludes the 195-episode, non-canonical Ultra Fight). The reason behind his longevity, it is said, is because the start-up of successor series 'Ultraman Leo' ran behind schedule.

In the Thai-produced Ultra movie, The 6 Ultra Brothers Vs. the Monster Army, stock footage of the birth of Ultraman Taroh is blatantly ripped and modified from the to serve as the resurrection of the dead Kochan into the white monkey god, Hanuman. When Kochan transforms into Hanuman, the image of Hanuman is superimposed on Taroh.

Cameos

Episode 1: The Five Ultra Brothers preside over the Mother of Ultra as she gives birth to Taroh. (Higashi is in a clear, plastic dome, surrounded by the Five Ultra Brothers. There's a lot of hand-waving and lights, and the sound of a baby crying, and we go right into the usual Ultraman Taroh transformation).

Episode 3: The Mother of Ultra rescues Higashi, who is trapped under Live King. She also heals Taroh's messed up arm.

Episode 5: Ultra Seven helps transport Mini Tortoise to the Ultra Star, along with King Tortoise.

Episode 18: Zoffy is killed by Birdon after Taroh is defeated.

Episode 19: Zoffy and Taroh are resurrected by the Mother of Ultra.

Episode 20: The Mother of Ultra.

Episode 24: The Mother of Ultra tells Taroh to return to the Land of Light.

Episode 25: Taroh returns to the Ultra Planet, also known as the Land of Light, 3,000,000 Light * Years from Earth. There, the other Ultra Brothers merge with Taroh so that, with their combined purity of soul, he can plunge into the flames of the Ultra Tower for one minute to acquire the Ultra Bell. They all tow the Ultra Bell back to Earth, and Taroh rings it, so that it dissipates the dark cloud of Mururoa that has enveloped the Earth. Also a rare opportunity to see Ultramen hug each other and do a huddle.

Episodes 33-4: Higashi invites the Five Ultra Brothers to Earth for a reunion. All of the former human forms

ULTRAMAN TIGA

Earth is once again about to be attacked by monsters. A meteorite strikes, and is examined by the TPC (Terrestrial Peaceable Concert) branch known as GUTS (Global Unlimited Task Squad). They discover that the meteorite is artificial, containing a metal device that projects a holographic image of a woman. This woman claims to be from an ancient civilisation which started on Earth "a long long time ago." The civilisation is now gone, destroyed by monsters that are now reappearing on Earth. The woman, Yuzare, tells them that they were helped by three gigantic guardians, who have since returned to their native place.

"Their true form is light," she says. The guardians must be restored, because the time of monsters has arrived again. The image is about to mention the method of restoration, when it breaks up and stops. Daigo, one of the GUTS members, suggests they search for the resting place of the three guardians, which is a pyramid called "Tiga." They are quickly distracted, however, by reports of a winged monster appearing from Easter Island. Most of the GUTS crew attends to this, the second monster on the loose since the meteorite landed, while one, Yazumi, remains behind to research the name "Tiga." Yazumi discovers that the name is an old popular name of a Northeast district in Japan. (I'm told that there really is no Touhoku or Tiga district in the real Japan. However, "Tiga" means 3 in Malaysian or Market Indonesian.) Daigo and other members of the team head for this area after discovering that both rampaging monsters are also heading for the same spot.

The GUTS team arrives in a wooded area. Daigo goes on ahead, and sees a golden pyramid just over the top of the trees. The others follow, but cannot catch up with Daigo before he touches the pyramid. In a nimbus of light, he simply walks into the pyramid wall. They follow, and find Daigo staring up at three huge statues, which they assume are the bodies of the three guardians. Before they can do anything, the first monster, Golza, arrives and dissolves the pyramid with blasts of energy. The second monster, Melba, arrives as the last of the pyramid floats off.

Both monsters attack the statues, destroying two of them and felling the third. In the middle of all this, Daigo tries to stop the destruction in the smaller of the two GUTS aircraft, but is unsuccessful; instead, his craft is damaged. The craft falls and explodes, but not before Daigo finds himself enveloped in a nimbus of light. Meanwhile, a light appears on the chest of the remaining statue. Golza tries to crush the statue, but the statue's arm lifts up to stop the blow.

Suddenly, the statue is no longer made of stone! A silver, gold, red, & blue giant appears instead, and attacks the two monsters. Along the way, the GUTS members discover that the giant can change colours and abilities (more on this later). The giant finishes off the two monsters and leaves. Shortly after he disappears in the clouds, one of the GUTS members discovers Daigo, alive, waving to them. He is picked up, and as they return home, Daigo discovers an ornate wand, the Spark Lens, in his uniform. Back at GUTS HQ, the metal artefact activates, and completes its message. "There is only one method of restoration. Daigo must be light!"

Tsuburaya Production's all-time hero has made the return on TV with brand-new looks. Yet the story so far resembles the episodes from classic "ULTRAMAN" and "ULTRA SEVEN", focusing drama and interaction of the human characters. Almost legendary TAKANO Kouichi supervises the show, as well as directing the SFX; this time, mostly used are CGIs, which long-time 'Ultra' fans may consider as unfavourable.

Yet, at least check out Tiga's changing his body colour-- it looks no less than a magic. Ultraman Tiga is a unique Ultraman in that he has three forms. One, shown here, is a general form, favouring neither strength nor speed. One, the "Sky Type," is all blue (or at least the red parts of the Multi form are blue); this form favours speed and agility. The third, the "Power Type," is all red; this form favours strength and power. Ultraman Tiga normally transforms & grows simultaneously, like many of the other Ultra-heroes. In one episode, however, Daigo transforms into a human-sized Ultraman Tiga while in one of the GUTS aircraft, exits, and then presumably grows. In another episode, Horii (one of the GUTS members) gets to meet Ultraman Tiga face-to-face, because he transforms to human size and stays there for the entire episode. In a third episode, Daigo transforms into Tiga inside GUTS HQ, then teleports outside, growing simultaneously; this particular feat took a lot out of Tiga, as he materialises with his ColorTimer blinking.

As of this writing, no relationship between Ultraman Tiga and the other Ultra warriors has been established. One pre-release bit of information indicated that Ultraman Tiga was an Ultra warrior who preceded Ultraman, but was not from Nebula M78. The 49th episode of Tiga has Daigo going back in time, following a "monster buyer" attempting to buy a monster from Eiji Tsuburaya, the creator of the series (who, in real life and in the story, is deceased). In this landmark story, Tiga is rescued by Eiji-san, who uses the Ultra Star crystal to summon none other than the original Ultraman! Ultraman gives Tiga some of his own energy, recharging him. The duo then team up and fire Specium and Zebellion beams (the Zebellion beam is Tiga's equivalent to Ultraman's Specium beam) at the monster from the lake (the monster which Ultraman deposited there months prior, upon which time he gave Eiji-san the crystal).

Ultraman Tiga has several energy attacks, including the ability to draw energy from the surroundings into a ball, which can then be thrown at the monster under attack. Like most of the other Ultra-heroes, Tiga also has the prerequisite ColorTimer, which flashes when the 3 minutes he can survive on Earth is almost up. Like Ultraman Great, when Tiga's ColorTimer stops blinking, he is transformed back into Daigo, although in the one situation where that has happened so far, Daigo found himself in a white area, cut off from Earth, but not from other beings such as Yuzare or the Devil-man. While the ColorTimer is flashing, however, Tiga can still change between generic, Sky, and Power forms.

Ultraman Tiga is a being of light. In one episode, one of the monsters took a bite out of Tiga's arm. Instead of bleeding liquid, Tiga bled light. Tiga was able to heal himself quickly enough to overcome the monster. The link between Ultraman Tiga and his human host, Daigo, is stronger than that of most of the other Ultramen (except for Ultraman Powered). Several times Daigo has been seriously injured (cracked ribs, busted leg, etc.) when Tiga has been needed. After the transformation, Tiga has shown serious pain in the same areas, although a broken wrist, for example, doesn't keep Tiga from using that hand. On the other hand, unlike Kenichi Kai (Ultraman Powered's host), Daigo does not seem to suffer the pain and injuries of Ultraman Tiga, although an extended battle drains them both. On several occasions, Tiga has fought more fiercely when the safety of one of those Daigo cares for has been threatened; he has also fought less fiercely when Daigo has experienced self-doubt.

Feroz Mohamad wrote to me, expressing an interesting thought on the relationship between Daigo and Tiga. In his own words: After I read about my favourite Ultraman Tiga, I want to say that I am, a little bit disagree with the term 'human host' used for Daigo. After watching the programme for 48 consecutive episodes (well, missed one), I think, Ultraman and Daigo is one being. Not two separate being as portrayed in Ultraman Powered. It was said by Yuzare in third or fourth (can't remember) episode in the series that Daigo must be light, right?

In the first episode Daigo was in a very dangerous situation as his body glow and transported into Tiga's statue's colour timer. Then Tiga crystal shone and Tiga lives. What I want to say here that, Daigo, by his will transforms into Tiga using the Spark Lens. The Spark Lense is a an ancient mechanism that stores vast amount of light energy. This energy when released by a touch of as button, transform Daigo into Tiga, and yep, Tiga is Daigo in heart, knowledge and everything. Tiga knows what Daigo knows, feels what he feels. In one episode with a vampire enemy, Daigo was locked up in a dimension which absorbs light.

He can't transform into Tiga as the light in the spark lens is absorbed by the surrounding. Or something like that. The most concrete evidence is in the two latest episodes (44 and 45). In Episode 44, Daigo was confronted by a scientist (forgot his name, must be Keigo something) who knows who he really is, and robbed the Spark Lens from his. Daigo was left in a very frustrating situation and he went to Touhoku district (the place where he merged with the statue). He was lured into a cave by a cute dog and found, another complete Ultra Warrior statue and a monster statue.

This time the evil scientist is there. Stating that because he and Daigo both have the same trait of DNA (Did you know that Daigo is a descendant from the people of the ancient civilisation that once received the Ultra Warrior's visit?) he could also transform into light and become Ultraman. Using the Spark Lens he generates energy using a machine (he made that) and transform himself into light and elocates into the Ultra Warrior's colour timer.

The crystal glows and there stood another Ultraman. This is the Evil Tiga. The dog (dead) became the monster (the ultra warrior was its master in previous life) and tried to stop the Evil Tiga. Daigo then was found by Captain Iruma and was ordered back to HQ. But Daigo insisted in staying stating that he still has work to be done... Iruma then seems to understands... And Daigo, confronting every obstacle (mentally and physically) to th Spark Lens and.... transform into TIGA!!! $B!! (You could see a very nice karate fight here (frankly, I prefer the Evil Tiga's design to original Tiga). And Capt. Iruma said to the TPC's err a top ranked man that $B!! (J that was not only a fight between two giants, but a fight between good hearts and evil hearts....

Since that note, Feroz found a note on a BBS regarding Tiga's background. Please note that the following is not confirmed, but it does make sense overall. The speculation says that, 30 million years ago (prior to Ultraman's "birth," according to the 45,000 year age given him by Tsuburaya Productions), three Ultra-warriors came to Earth to fight the monsters overrunning Earth's civilisation (the same ancient civilisation Yuzare and Daigo come from).

These Ultra-warriors seem to have come from M78, but with one vital difference: they were literally creatures of light ... no physical bodies at all. Since they could not fight the monsters as light-beings, they fashioned bodies from the rocks & soil of our planet. These 3 fought various monsters until Gidzera, the flower-monster with pollen with a narcotic effect, appeared and took control of humans at the time. The Ultra-guardians could not stay if the humans didn't want them around, so they left Earth, leaving their bodies behind as stone statues.

Before they left, however, they implanted into the DNA of all humans the ability to transform into light themselves, and reanimate the Ultra-statues. Over time, only certain individuals had this ability "active;" Daigo and Masaki (the scientist mentioned above who became the "Evil Tiga") are two with this particular genetic ability activated. In the final episode, though, Tiga is animated not only by Daigo, but by thousands of children all over the world, and by Rena.

One interesting side note: one of the GUTS members, Rena, is played by Takami Yoshimoto, the daughter of Susumu Kurobe, the actor who played Hayata in the original Ultraman series. Tiga's final battle is against Ghatanazoa, the great "Ruler of Darkness." The monster plunges almost all of Earth into darkness, lit only by the fiery devastation left by its bird-like creatures, the Zoigor. Tiga appears to battle Ghatanazoa, but his best efforts don't even hurt the monster. After toying with Tiga, Ghatanazoa fires a devastating energy beam into Tiga's chest. Tiga staggers, desperately trying to fight back. Suddenly his body reverts back to the stone statue Daigo found in the Tiga pyramid! With one blow, Ghatanazoa topples the statue into the sea. After several unsuccessful attempts to revive Tiga and stop the great monster, we see Daigo, trapped inside a crystalline prison. Ghatanazoa has apparently isolated Daigo's essence from Tiga.

All around the world, adults despair over the defeat of their only possible salvation. The children, however, pray for Tiga to return and save the day. Suddenly, these children -- thousands of them all over the world -- convert to light, as Daigo did to create Tiga in the first place. Their essences flow into the sunken statue; in the realm where Daigo is trapped, he sees a wall burst into light, as the children race to free him. Back in the real world, the area where the Tiga statue rested glows brightly with a pillar of light that coalesces into a giant Tiga ... the Glitter Tiga. Empowered by thousands of children, Daigo, and Rena (who somehow got the ability in a previous episode, though the details seem to have been edited out), Tiga makes short work of Ghatanazoa.

The skies clear, and the sun shines again. Tiga looks toward the remnants of TPC Headquarters, and dissipates back into his individual entities: the children, Daigo, and Rena are restored back where they came from. At the end, Daigo removes the Spark Lens and hands it to Rena. The Spark Lens is now made of stone. It dissolves to dust and blows away in Rena's hands.

The franchise moved to MBS for the tenth season, Ultraman Tiga, which discarded much of the previous continuity and started with a clean slate. In the year 2007 (2049 for the U.S. dub), Tiga is an ancient giant of light brought back to life in the form of human agent Daigo (Nagano from V6), in order to defend the Earth from an ancient evil. This Ultra is able to assume different modes, discarding power for speed in Purple Mode or switching speed for power in his heavy duty Red Mode, in addition to his normal Omni Mode position, which includes both colours. The only one of three stone Ultra statues rescued from the Tiga pyramid in Japan before monsters destroy it, Tiga becomes the weapon of choice used by GUTS, the Global Unlimited Task Squad. With many scripts from anime scenarists such as Chiaki Konaka or Armitage III, and Akio Satsugawa of the contemporary hit series Evangelion, Tiga drew its influences from the popular anime of the day - somewhat ironically in that, for example, the bio-robots in Evangelion has time limits on their operational power in homage to the original Ultraman. GUTS Captain Megumi Iruma (Takagi) is constantly at odds with her superiors in the Terrestrial Peaceable Consortium, leaving tactical decisions to her deputy Munekata (Otaki), who is in charge of a group of misfits that included Osaka born comic-relief technology geek Horii (Masuda), impossibly handsome ladies man Shinjo (Kagemaru), and Rena (Yoshimoto), the female pilot who is the best soldier of the bunch.

Suddenly, the underwater city begins to rise and an ancient evil Gatanozoa traps Shinjoh and Horii under the ocean as it begins plunging the planet into total darkness. GUTS headquarters is invaded by the darkness and they are forced to flee under the invading evil. Can Daigo and Ultraman Tiga stop the master of darkness?

1 - 52 TO THOSE WHO CAN SHINE

Ultraman Tiga lies at the bottom of the ocean defeated by the evil Gatanozoa and reverted back into stone. Now GUTS races to find a source of light to restore Tiga to resume the fight. Can they restore Tiga and save the planet before it is plunged into eternal darkness? This is the final episode of Ultraman Tiga series.

ULTRAMAN: THE ULTIMATE HERO

AKA: ULTRAMAN POWERED

The Earth is in danger once again, this time from the Baltans, a subatomic race once foiled by Ultraman. To Earth's rescue comes Ultraman Powered (as he's known in Japan), another Ultra-hero known to all as just "Ultraman." Unfortunately, he realises that, like his predecessors, he must merge with a human in order to survive on Earth. (Guess the pollution problem that plagued Ultraman Great is still around.) He chooses Kenichi Kai, curiously the only Oriental-descended member of the USA-based team WINR (World-wide Investigation Network Response).

Kai uses a Beta Capsule (which looks little like Hayata's original Beta Capsule), which is held in the hand such that both ends stick out from the hand, to transform into Ultraman. The transformation lasts for 3 minutes, after which time Ultraman reverts back to Kai. This forced reversion usually drains what little energy Kai has left (especially since Kai feels every bit of damage Ultraman receives), but it does not mean that this Ultraman will "never rise again."

Ultraman Powered has variations of the same powers the original Ultraman has. His main energy attack is the Specium Kosen beam, similar in concept to the original Specium beam. While the original Ultraman's Specium beam emits from the side of his vertical hand, however, Ultraman Powered's beam emits from both arms, forming a "cross" of energy.

Like most other Ultra-heroes, Ultraman Powered has a ColorTimer on his chest, which indicates the amount of time left to him before the forced reversion. The colour changes from a blue-green to yellow to red. Unique to Ultraman Powered is his "eye" colour, which always matches that of the ColorTimer. After battling new incarnations of many of Ultraman's original monster-foes (including Zetton, Gamora, and others), Ultraman returns to Nebula M78.

Filmed in Hollywood with a special effects team whose credits include "Star Wars" and "Alien". The first live-action American Ultraman. Ultraman : The Ultimate Hero was followed on by the first Ultraman live action film ULTRAMAN ZEARTH (1996). The next Ultraman show would be Ultraman Tiga.

Ultraman Powered starred in the series "Ultraman: The Ultimate Hero." The series was shot in California, making it the second live-action Ultraman series produced outside of Japan and the second filmed in English. (The first was ULTRAMAN: TOWARD THE FUTURE, with Ultraman Great.) The series has lots of fond memories of the original Ultraman, including the return of several of Ultraman's foes, as mentioned above. Several other nods to the original series were also included. For example, one story has a subterranean race with a statue of Ultraman Powered; this is similar to an Ultraman story where a lost city has a statue of the original Ultraman. In one scene, the Ultraman Powered statue's warning light begins to glow.

According to King Wilder, director of the series, this warning light was actually a replica of the original Ultraman's warning light, not the more ornate (and complex) version used by Ultraman Powered. Sadly, the series has been shown, dubbed, in Japan; it has never been seen in its original form in the USA.

Ultraman Powered never directly appears with any other Ultra-heroes, although some of them appear indirectly as balls of light in the final episode. Fans (and Tsuburaya Productions) tend to assume, however, that Ultraman Powered is associated with the other Ultra-beings from the Land of Light in Nebula M78. Live stage shows in Japan have included Ultraman Powered in with the other Ultra-heroes.

Produced by Juliet Avola (producer), Shigeru Watanabe (producer), King Wilder (producer), Cinematography by Don E. FauntLeRoy (partial, episodes 1-3) and Carlos González, Film Editing by Stephen Eckelberry (episode 11), Nina Gilberti (episodes 1-4, 6, 8 and 13), Vanick Moradian (episodes 5, 7 and 12), King Wilder (episodes 9 and 10). Casting by Aaron Griffith, Production Design by Aaron Osborne, Set Decoration by Michael Mosselli, Costume Design by Elizabeth Jett.

Makeup Department - Lori Ann Baker (key hair stylist), Elizabeth Dahl (key makeup artist), Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - Daniel Carrey (first assistant director), John Keefer (assistant director), Art Department - Richard L. Cowitt (property master), Candi Guterres (scenic artist), Sound Department Jay Bolton (music editor), John Brasher (sound re-recording mixer), James H. Coburn IV (boom operator), Norval D. Crutcher III (supervising sound effects editor), Doug Reed (foley artist), Pat Toma (production sound mixer), Special Effects by Emmet Kane (special effects foreman), Joe Viskocil (special effects supervisor).

Visual Effects by Richard Malzahn (digital and optical effects) David B. Sharp (additional miniature constructor and photographer (as David Sharp)), Stunts - Terry James, Anthony Kramme, Michael R. Long, Gary Paul, Scott Rogers, Monty L. Simons.

Other crew - Kevin Hudson (creator: Ultraman and Monster costumes), Ken Iyadomi (production liaison), Jesse Long (script supervisor), Richard Malzahn (title designer), Laurence Manly (assistant camera), Mike Mickens (gaffer), Scot Petitclerc (first assistant camera), Terence Pratt (second assistant camera), Dylan Rush (set lighting), R. Michael Stringer (cinematographer: second unit), Chris Weber (negative cutter), Arthur D. Whitehead (best boy electric).

TBS (Japan) showed this foreign made incarnation as Ultraman Powered, featuring Kenichi Kai (Kosugi) defending the Earth from a number of earlier monsters, dusted off for another attempt to break into the franchise in the lucrative North American market after the success of the MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS. In fact, however some earlier Ultraman serials had already reached the U.S. including the original, which was dubbed for U.S. TV by long time anime adaptor Peter Fernandez and Ultra Seven, which was shown in Hawaii and then redubbed for Turner Network Television (TNT).

ULTRAMAN: TOWARDS THE FUTURE

AKA: ULTRAMAN GREAT

In all his incarnations, Ultraman is an alien being who shares a body with a human being. In the case of Ultraman: Towards the Future this human is astronaut Jack Shindo. During times of crisis, once each episode, by using the Delta Plasma Peccant Jack is able to transform himself into Ultraman- a 60 metre tall hero possessing great strength and a large arsenal of weapons. Jack became 'possessed' by Ultraman while on a Mars exploration mission in which the Goudes virus (over 100 meters tall) destroyed his ship and crew mate. Believed dead. Jack suddenly reappears on Earth. He decides to rejoin the Universal Multipurpose Agency (UMA) an organisation designed to battle threats against mankind that has an arsenal of high tech machinery to do it with. Also arriving on Earth at the same time as Jack is the Goudes virus.

The Goudes virus is able to influence other creatures and mutate them into giant Godzilla wannabes. These giant creatures then start destroying cities and wreaking havoc in general. When the threat becomes too much for UMA to handle. Ultraman springs into action. Ultraman will then spend the next two and a half minutes in a wrestling match with the creature. At about this point in time, as the narrator will remind us. Ultraman reaches his time limit in superpowered form since pollutants in the Earth's atmosphere allow him to retain it for only 3 minutes. Ultraman will then use one of his weapons to defeat the creature, before transforming back into Jack Shindo.

Mankind has reached Mars. Astronauts Stanley Haggart and Jack Shindo have arrived, only to find something amazing: a towering beast with tentacles. This is Gudis, an interstellar monster just arrived on Mars. Haggart and Shindo try to photograph the monster, in an attempt to become famous back on Earth. Gudis, however, has other thoughts, namely to destroy these interlopers. Intervening, however, is a silver and red giant: Ultraman (called "Ultraman Great" in Japan, he is only referred to here as "Ultraman"). Using a variety of energy attacks and martial arts tactics, Ultraman nearly overcomes Gudis. Gudis, however, manages to kill Haggart and destroy the ship he and Shindo used to arrive on Mars. Shindo, on the other hand, has been trapped under a boulder which had fallen on him when Gudis caused Ultraman to hit the side of their crater battleground. Ultraman almost overpowers Gudis, but the monster converts to a "virus" and escapes to Earth. Ultraman starts to pursue, but first saves Shindo's life by merging with him.

Back on Earth, the Universal Multipurpose Agency (UMA) discovers an outbreak of monsters. Some of these monsters were created by the Gudis virus infecting ordinary Earth animals, such as a slug or ant. Others are the result of mutation by toxic waste. Still others are ancient creatures that have remain undiscovered until they have been stirred up by the Gudis virus. Shindo miraculously reappears on Earth, and offers his help to UMA, which eventually accepts him as a member, even though they remain suspicious. While Shindo proves invaluable to UMA's discovery of the Gudis virus and in its fight against the infected monsters, it's when Shindo uses the Delta Plasma Pendant to become Ultraman that their best help appears.

Ultraman Great has several energy-based powers, including the ability to send bursts of energy from his hands. Most of his attacks are physical in nature, however. (Curiously, he never exhibits anything resembling the Specium Beam attack of the original Ultraman.) As with most other Ultra-heroes, Ultraman Great can only survive on Earth for 3 minutes, although this time the blame is placed on Earth's "polluted atmosphere." His warning light, mounted on a triangular mount on his chest (which resembles Shindo's Delta Plasma Pendant), blinks when the time is nearly up. When the light stops blinking, Ultraman is forced to revert back to Shindo, and cannot reappear for several hours.

Ultraman Great eventually faces a new, mutated Gudis, which has recreated itself due to the virus infection taking on a new form in humans. The new Gudis is defeated once and for all. Ultraman Great stays around for a while longer, however, facing more ancient, naturally-occurring monsters. Finally, after facing down Kudara and Shillagee, Ultraman Great separates from Shindo, and returns home.

Ultraman, Towards The Future was the first, and so far only , English language series about one of Japan's most popular superheroes. In Japan, Ultraman has been the star of many different TV series since the mid 1960s, some of which have been dubbed into English. Ultraman Towards the Future, was produced in Australia, in what was hoped to be the first of several Ultraman series to be produced outside of Japan. All the other live action versions of Ultraman are presented in this database (see separate entries for each). The two follow-ons from Ultraman: Towards the future were Ultraman : The Adventure Begins (1989) and Ultraman Kids (1991), which were both animations. Then next live action Ultraman was Ultraman: The Ultimate Hero. All episodes are based on the works of: Sho Aikawa Hidenori Miyazawa, Chiaki Konaka, Akinori Endo & Satoshi Suzuki. The original Australian broadcast dates are unknown.

Ultraman Great is more often known in Australia and America as "Ultraman: Toward The Future," after his series' title. This series was the first live-action Ultraman series filmed in English, and the first filmed outside of Japan. Ultraman: Toward The Future was filmed in Australia, and indeed was set in Australia. (One episode dealt with a natural beast of the Outback named Deganja, who lived inside a whirlwind. Deganja is well-known to the Aborigines, although UMA suspects it has been maddened by the Gudis virus.) Aside from live stage shows in Japan, Ultraman Great never appeared with any other Ultra-heroes, although it's usually accepted that Ultraman Great is just one more of the Ultra-heroes from the Land of Light in Nebula M78.

The eighth and ninth seasons represented attempts by Tsuburaya studio to sell the series to foreign franchisees. The 13 episode Ultraman Great (aka Ultraman: Towards the Future) was made in Australia, and not initially broadcast on TBS in Japan, but shown on NHK satellite channel BS-2, where little of its potential fanbase had a chance to see it. When it finally aired on TBS, it did so after the Ninth Season, further confusing continuity. Written by Noboru Aikawa and Terry Larsen and directed by Andrew Browse, Ultraman Great featured a new hero Jack Shindfo (Dore Krause) fighting to defend a land of cacti and kangaross from invading monsters, and unable to maintain his heroic form for longer than three minutes, this time on account of the Earth pollution.

ULTRASEVEN X

AKA: UROTORA SEBUN X

A man wakes up in an unfamiliar room after dreaming of falling in the ocean and a mysterious girl, only to find he can't remember who he is. The mysterious girl from his dreams appears and tells him to run to his car outside after handing him a pair of glasses. He escapes the building which explodes seconds later. At his car he finds an automated tracking system that takes him to his house he doesn't remember. He finds the whole place devoid of any items or information telling him who he is. It is then that he gets a call on his wrist phone telling him to meet up with Agent K at a club. He goes to the club and meets K, who is at first skeptical of the amnesia but breaks down and tells the man his name is Jin and he's an agent for DEUS, a secret organization that hunts down illegal aliens that have arrived on earth and take the forms of humans. While talking Jin receives a note from another strange woman in the bar. He immediately realizes she is an alien.

He and K give chase and fight her goons outside in the alley. K decides to hold them off while Jin continues on. Jin chases the woman into a building and sees her meeting with other aliens; they are discussing how they will conquer the world soon and summon a giant monster that begins attacking the city. Suddenly they call for Jin to show himself and Jin finds himself stuck with guns pointing at his head. He asks them who he is, which is exactly what they want to know. The building transforms into a space ship and starts flying off. The mysterious girl from his dreams shows up to save him, calling him the saviour of the world, and they both fight out of the space ship and jump into the air.

In mid-air Jin puts on the sunglasses to transform into Ultra Seven X and begins fighting the monster. Both the monster and the space ship try to destroy him but neither can do any damage. Ultra Seven destroys the monster with his Eye Slugger - throwing the blade on his head like a boomerang - and fires a laser from his forehead to destroy the space ship. Jin powers down and then sees a weird image of three people meeting in a garden and apparently staring at him. Even if he doesn't know who he is, Jin swears to use this new power to protect the world.

Ultraseven X is the 21st entry in the Tsuburaya Productions' long-running Ultra Series. It is a revival and 40th Anniversary series of the 1967 classic Ultra Seven, and is the second in Tsuburaya Productions' Ultra hero series to be produced for an older audience. The show first aired on October 5, 2007 at 2.15am on CBC and 2.25am on TBS.

Ultra Seven X is meant to be a tokusatsu show just for adults, similar to GARO. The setting is a dark, futuristic city with an omnipresent newscaster telling citizens how safe the city is. Jin is your normal amnesiac. While amnesia is such a cliché in any show these days, Jin isn't the worst I've ever seen. As least he knows when to take action and can still kick ass. K is a much more interesting character, just because he has a lot more spunk in him. The mysterious girl is still a mystery, with the lack of a personality to show it.

The action scenes were all quite nice. The scenes of Jin and K taking on the alien goons with some old fashion kung fu ass kickin' were very similar to GARO, a good thing in my book. Ultra Seven's design clearly indicate he's not kid friendly; those muscles mean business. The action was a bit quick, mostly just Seven throwing his eye slugger and firing a laser. Had to jam a lot into the episode obviously. Overall this episode has done a good job of getting me excited about the series. I've been craving a dark tokusatsu like GARO after the faux-drama of Kabuto and downright silliness of Den-O. Hopefully the series will be able to maintain a good pace throughout since it's only twelve episodes. Don't want any kind of rushed ending.

Characters

Jin / Ultraseven: He is one of DEUS's agents. Due to his memory loss, he does not remember his real name. He was handed the Ultra Eye by Elea. 25 years old.

Waking up to find he has no memories of his past, he soon discovers he works for a secret organization DEUS, working under the codename 'Jin'. After receiving the Ultra Eye from the mysterious woman Elea, Jin has the power to transform into the mighty Ultraseven X! Working together with Agent K and his other DEUS comrades, Jin protects the Earth from the oncoming alien threats. As he continues to fight, Jin tries to learn more about his past and who he really is.

Eriku Yoza was born on August 23rd 1981. Some of his previous appearances include the TV dramas THE PINK GENE (Pinku-no Idenshi, 2005) and MY BOSS MY HERO (Mai Bosu Mai Hiirou, 2006). He is a member of the talent agency Natsuki Production.

Elea : She handed the Ultra Eye to Jin. 22 years old.

A woman of mystery, Elea frequently appears around Jin to offer help or a warning. Elea is the one who gave Jin the Ultra Eye, thus giving him the ability to transform into Ultraseven X. She is the key to many mysteries, including the truth of Jin's past, and the true colors of Ultraseven X!

Saki Kagami was born February 26th 1985. She was cast in the leading role of Aoi Kadokura in the movie PLATONIC SEX (Puratonikku Sekkusu, 2001) from among 12,000 applicants, despite having had no previous acting experience. She is a member of the Wantabe Entertainment talent agency.

Agent K : He is one of DEUS's agents. 25 years old.

Agent K is a member of DEUS, and is frequently paired with Agent Jin on missions. K is a lighter character who is often used as the comedy relief for a story. However, K's character also displays strong moral ideals and is bound by his sense of duty to protect the Earth.

Tomohito Wakizaki appeared in GODZILLA: FINAL WARS (Gojira Fainaru Uoozu, 2004) as one of the X-Alien invaders. Among other shows, he was a regular in the TV drama WATER BOYS (Wootaa Booizu, 2003) as Wakita. He has also done promotional work for companies such as Coca-Cola and JR railways. He is a member of Vingt-Sept Promotion.

Agent S : She is one of DEUS's agents. 25 years old.

25-year-old DEUS 'Agent S' is frequently paired with Jin and K. A master of disguise, her particular specialty lies with undercover investigation, and she has great pride in her martial arts abilities. During her first encounter with Jin and K, she was undercover as a bar waitress. One way or another, she will find a way to each chocolate!

Anri Ban was born September 26th 1985. After working as a model, she made her acting debut in the Shunji Iwai film ALL ABOUT LILY CHOU-CHOU (Ririi Shushu-no Subete, 2001). She is a member of the talent agency MT.

Commander of DEUS : He tells agents a mission through the VC.

Never seen, the DEUS General's voice instructs the members of their missions via the VideoCeivers. His true colors are a mystery.

Yosuke Natsuki was born on February 27th 1936. For fans of the genre, he is perhaps best known as the leading character Detective Shindo in GHIDORAH THE THREE-HEADED MONSTER (San Daikaijuu Chikyuu Saidai-no Kessen, 1964), as well as Komai in DOGORA (Uchuu Daikaijuu Dogora, 1964) and Professor Hayashida in THE RETURN OF GODZILLA (aka GODZILLA 1985, Gojira, 1984).

Transformation item

Ultra Eye : Red glasses type item used when Jin transforms into Ultraseven X.

Techniques

Eye Slugger : Boomerang-like weapon equipped on his head.

Emerium Beam : Various concentrations of energy rays could be fired from the Beam Lamp on Ultraseven X's forehead.

Wide Shot : Ultraseven X's most powerful attack.

DEUS

DEUS : DEUS is the special investigative team organized in order to defend the earth against aggressors. Although they live as normal people, members of DEUS can be called into action at any given time. Agents call each other by code name rather than their actual names.

Agents

Jin
Agent K
Agent S

Equipment

Ultra Gun : Small laser gun which DEUS's agents use.

VC (Video-Ceiver) : All-purpose communication item which DEUS's agents are carrying

Over the years since the original series, Ultra Seven and variations have re-appeared. The character made several guest appearances in subsequent television series, including episodes of THE RETURN OF ULTRAMAN (Kaettekita Urutoraman, 1971), ULTRAMAN ACE (Urutoraman Eesu, 1972), ULTRAMAN TARO (Urutoraman Tarou, 1973), ULTRAMAN LEO (Urutoraman Reo, 1974) and ULTRAMAN 80 (Urutoraman 80, 1980). In March 1994, a television special ULTRA SEVEN: OPERATION SOLAR ENERGY (Urutorasebun Taiyou Enerugii Sakusen) aired on the NTV network, followed by ULTRA SEVEN: LAND OF THE EARTHLINGS (Urutorasebun Chikyuseijin-no Daichi) in October the same year. The success of the TV specials led to three OV (original video) series; ULTRA SEVEN'S 30TH ANNIVERSARY CREATION COMMEMORATION 3-PART WORK (Urutorasebun Tanjou 30 Shuunen Kinen 3-bu Saku, 1998), ULTRA SEVEN 1999: FINAL CHAPTER 6-PART WORK (Urutorasebun 1999 Saishuushou 6-bu Saku, 1999) and ULTRASEVEN'S 35TH CREATION ANNIVERSARY 'EVOLUTION' 5-PART WORK (Urutorasebun Tanjou 35 Shuunen 'EVOLUTION' 5-bu Saku, 2002). The OV series ULTRAMAN NEOS (Urutoraman Neosu, 2000) also featured a character named Ultra Seven 21 (two-one). Ultra Seven most recently made an appearance in last year's ULTRAMAN MEBIUS and ULTRAMAN MEBIUS & ULTRAMAN BROTHERS.

However, ULTRASEVEN X was Ultra Seven's first return as the title character to a regular broadcast television series since the original series concluded on September 8th 1968.

ULTRASEVEN X thrusts us forward into the not-too-distant future. Commenting on the series, Series Organizer/Director Takeshi Yagi considers the futuristic setting to be inspired by Ridley Scott's BLADE RUNNER, and in respect of the show's story arc, by the popular American television shows 24 and LOST. The most prominent change the series makes to the Ultraman mythos is to the structure of the defence team, which has been a staple to the franchise since its conception. Typically, the defence team consists of around five to eight members stationed in a large base, one of whom is secretly host to Ultraman, and attack the giant monsters using an array of ships and mecha.

The first major changes to this concept came with ULTRAMAN NEXUS, where the Ultraman host was not a member of the defence team and the existence of the defence team was kept secret from the public. ULTRASEVEN X not only retains the idea of a secret defence team, but takes it a step further. For the first time, there is no established group of members, no base and no ships or mecha. Rather, all members of the defence team, DEUS, continue with their daily lives, and are only called upon when assigned a mission via the VC (VideoCeiver), a communication device on their wrist. With this ambiguity, it's possible there are anywhere from a handful to thousands of members. The only other major piece of technology the DEUS agents carry with them is a small hand weapon called the Ultra Gun.

As for technical innovations, ULTRASEVEN X is the first of Tsuburaya's Ultra hero TV shows to be filmed in either widescreen or high definition. In the realm of special effects, the approach is similar to that taken with the theatrical film ULTRAMAN: THE NEXT (Ultraman, 2004), in that there is a distinct lack of miniature special effects work. Rather, the majority of the suit acting was filmed on greenscreen and digitally composited onto real location footage of Tokyo. With this, the series offers a stronger sense of realism, while still maintaining the traditions of suit acting.

In this ambiguous new setting, with some of the genre's top talent behind the scenes, Ultra Seven returned on October 6th 2007. As well as telling enjoyable sci-fi tales, these 12 original stories explore intriguing and often disturbing social issues, and raise the ultimate question of whether the problems in this futuristic landscape are so different from our own world.

Staff Profiles

Takeshi Yagi - Series Organizer / Director

Serving as the Series Organizer for ULTRASEVEN X, and directing five of the show's twelve episodes, is Takeshi Yagi. Born in Tokyo in 1967, Yagi studied at Waseda University where he was a member of the cinema study group. After joining Tsuburaya Productions, Yagi was assigned to the production department where he served as an assistant director for the ULTRA SEVEN TV specials of the early 1990s, and very soon made his directorial debut with MOON SPIRAL (Muunsupairaru, 1996) Episode 4: Red Paper, Blue Paper, Yellow Paper, after which he returned to his work as an assistant director for Tsuburaya's new wave of television shows ULTRAMAN TIGA (Urutoraman Tiga, 1996) and ULTRAMAN DYNA (Urutoraman Daina, 1997). Yagi returned to directing with ULTRAMAN GAIA (Urutoraman Gaia, 1998) Episode 49: An Angel Descends, on which he also served as FX director for the first time, and he has continued to direct both live action and FX for all subsequent Ultraman TV series. In 2004 he was credited as the Main Director for the late-night series ULTRA Q: DARK FANTASY, and the next year went on to serve as producer for the popular ULTRAMAN MAX (Urutoraman Makkusu, 2005). Yagi is currently directing his first feature film, DECISIVE BATTLE! THE SUPER 8 ULTRA BROTHERS (Daikessen! Chou Urutora Hachi Kyoudai, 2008), which he hopes to be the ultimate family film. The addition of abdominal muscles to Ultraseven X was one of Yagi's ideas.

Kenji Suzuki - Director

Kenji Suzuki directed three episodes for ULTRASEVEN X. Born 1957 in the Ibaraki prefecture, he began working as a freelance assistant director in 1970. After joining Tsuburaya Productions, he worked with the special FX teams on ULTRAMAN 80 and MONKEY (Saiyuuki, 1978, a show popular in Britain and Australia after the BBC produced dubbed English language episodes). Later Suzuki joined Toho, where he served as an assistant FX director on some of the studio's biggest projects, including all the Godzilla pictures from GODZILLA VS. KING GHIDORAH (Gojira VS Kingugidora, 1991) until GODZILLA VS. DESTOROYAH (Gojira VS Desutoroia, 1995), REBIRTH OF MOTHRA (Mosura, 1996) and REBIRTH OF MOTHRA II (Mosura 2 Kaitei-no Daikessen, 1997). He made his debut as special FX director with the studio's REBIRTH OF MOTHRA III (Mosura 3 Kingugidora Raishuu, 1998), and continued this role with GODZILLA 2000 (Gojira Ni-Sen Mireniamu, 1999) and GODZILLA VS. MEGAGUIRUS (Gojira X Megagirasu, 2000). Returning to Tsuburaya Productions, Suzuki directed FX for episodes of ULTRAMAN COSMOS (Urutoraman Kosumosu, 2001) and ULTRAMAN MAX, until finally making his debut as a live action director with ULTRAMAN MEBIUS.

Kengo Kaji - Director

Kengo Kaji directed two episodes of ULTRASEVEN X. Born in 1961 in the Mie prefecture, he began as a graphic novelist on titles such as Professor Accidentologist Rinichiro Tamaki, Death Doctor Ranmaru, Lawyer: Haruhiko Ayanokouji and Lycanthrope Leo. Since becoming the supervising screenwriter for EKO EKO AZARAK (Eko Eko Azaraku THE SECOND, 1997) and EKO EKO AZARAK III: MISA THE DARK ANGEL (Eko Eko Azaraku III MISA THE DARK ANGEL, 1997), he has maintained a constant place in film and television. Entering the world of Ultraman, he wrote seven episodes of ULTRAMAN COSMOS in 2001, and in 2005 served as a director and writer for ULTRAMAN MAX. The same year, he also acted as Series Organizer, director and writer for the highly popular late-night special effects series GARO. He continued to direct episodes for ULTRAMAN MEBIUS in 2006.

Kazuya Konaka - Director

Konaka directed one episode of ULTRASEVEN X. Born in 1963, Konaka's first experience as a director came with the film THE COUNTRY ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE STARRY SKY (Hoshizora-no Mukou-no Kuni) in 1986, based on the fantasy novel of the same name by Hiroshi Kobayashi. After directing episodes of LIGHTNING SUPER-MAN GRIDMAN (Denkou Choujin Guriddoman, 1993) for Tsuburaya Productions, he became one of the studio's regular directors. His directorial efforts for the studio include the theatrical films ULTRAMAN ZEARTH 2 (Urutoraman Zeasu 2, 1997), ULTRAMAN TIGA & ULTRAMAN DYNA (Urutoraman Tiga & Urutoraman Daina Hikari-no Hoshi-no Senshitachi, 1998), ULTRAMAN GAIA: THE BATTLE IN HYPERSPACE (Urutoraman Tiga & Urutoraman Daina & Urutoraman Gaia Choujikuu-no Daikessen, 1999), ULTRAMAN: THE NEXT, ULTRAMAN MEBIUS & ULTRAMAN BROTHERS and MIRROR MAN: REFLEX (Miraaman Rifurekkusu, 2006). He was credited as the Main Director for both ULTRAMAN DYNA and ULTRAMAN NEXUS, and has also directed multiple episodes of ULTRAMAN COSMOS and ULTRAMAN MEBIUS.

Yuji Kobayashi - Writer

Having penned five screenplays for the show, Kobayashi is ULTRASEVEN X's leading writer. Born in 1979 in the Nagano prefecture, he was studying in the arts department at Nihon University when he took a screenwriting course. After graduating from university, he made his debut writing a screenplay for the animated TV adaption of SAZAE-SAN (2002). He followed this writing episodes for ULTRAMAN BOY'S ULTRA COLISEUM (Urutoraman Booi-no Urukoro, 2003), a series of 5-minute shorts starring a young Ultraman character, Ultraman Boy. After writing two episodes for ULTRA Q: DARK FANTASY, Kobayashi quickly proved to have potential as one of the genre's top writers, going on to serve as the leading writer for the popular late-night series GARO (2005), as well as writing episodes for ULTRAMAN MAX, ULTRAMAN MEBIUS, ULTRAMAN MEBIUS GAIDEN: THE HIKARI SAGA (Urutoraman Mebiusu Gaiden Hikari Saaga, 2006), BIO PLANET WOO (Seibutsu Suisei Woo, 2006), DIE SILBERMASKE (Shirubaa Kamen, 2006), OPERATION MYSTERY: SECOND FILE and BEAST FIST SQUADRON GEKIRANGER (Juuken Sentai Gekirenjaa, 2007).

Ai Ota - Writer

Writing three episodes for ULTRASEVEN X is Ai Ota. Born in 1964 in the Kagawa prefecture, she made her debut as a screenwriter with ULTRAMAN TIGA Episode 21: Deban's Turn!, and ever since she has remained one of Tsuburaya Productions' regular writers. Her credits for the studio include ULTRAMAN DYNA, ULTRAMAN GAIA, ULTRA SEVEN 1999: FINAL CHAPTER 6-PART WORK, BOOSKA! BOOSKA!! (Buusuka! Buusuka!!, 1999) ULTRAMAN COSMOS, ULTRA Q: DARK FANTASY, ULTRAMAN NEXUS, ULTRAMAN MAX and ULTRAMAN MEBIUS. In the world of anime, she was part of the writing team for the TV series ASTRO BOY (2003), a show which featured the talents of many other regular Ultraman series creative staff, including director Kazuya Konaka and writers Keiichi Hasegawa, Chiaki Konaka and Sadayuki Murai. Ota is a member of the Writers Guild Of Japan.

Takuro Fukuda - Writer

Fukuda wrote one episode of ULTRASEVEN X. He was born 1961 in the Ehime prefecture. After enrolling in the art department at Nihon University, he became active in the production and scripting of both film and theatre. After graduation, he entered the production department for Toho's theatrical plays, working on productions such as Fiddler On The Roof. In 1987, he resigned from Toho to form his own production group Dotoo! While continuing to produce plays for theatre with his new production group, he directed a remix of a 16mm film he made in his student days, THERIANTHROPY FOLKLORE (Kemonobito Densetsu), which he offered for sale on video. He made his debut as a film script writer with director Shusuke Kaneko's ALL'S QUIET ON THE RECUIRT FRONT (Shushokusensen Ijo Nasai, 1991). In 2005, he wrote ULTRAMAN MAX Episode 18: The Bright World and Episode 36: The Extra Dimensional World.

Jiro Kaneko - Writer

Kaneko wrote one episode for ULTRASEVEN X. His writing credits include HONG KONG PARADISE (Honkon Paradaisu, 1990), I WANT TO BITE YOU (Kami Tsukitai, 1991), TALE OF A HAPPY ENDING (Happiindo-no Monogatari, 1991), TALES OF NIGHT-PROWLING GHOSTS (Hyakki Yakoushou, 2007), among many others. Kaneko first worked on the Ultraman series in 2005 when writing ULTRAMAN MAX Episode 12: The Supersonic Attack and Episode 17: Beauty on Ice. Jiro also worked on the script of THE Idol (2006) with the film's director, Norman England. He is a member of the Writers Guild Of Japan. He is the younger brother of director Shusuke Kaneko.

Sotaro Hayashi - Writer

Hayashi wrote one episode for ULTRASEVEN X. He made his debut as a screenwriter with the TV series BECAUSE I LOVE YOU (1992). He previously work with ULTRASEVEN X director Kengo Kaji on EKO EKO AZARAK (Eko Eko Azaraku THE SECOND, 1997) and EKO EKO AZARAK III: MISA THE DARK ANGEL (Eko Eko Azaraku III MISA THE DARK ANGEL, 1997), serving as a screenwriter. He has also written seven episodes of ULTRAMAN COSMOS and four episodes of ULTRAMAN MAX. He also co-wrote five episodes of GARO.

Keiichi Hasegawa - Writer

Hasegawa wrote one screenplay for ULTRASEVEN X. He was born in 1962 in the Shizuoka prefecture. Hasegawa has a long history of genre credits to his name. Most notably, he co-wrote GODZILLA MOTHRA & KING GHIDORAH (aka GMK, Gojira Mosura Kingugidora Daikajju Sokougeki, 2001) with Masahiro Yokotani and Shusuke Kaneko, and served as the leading writer and Series Organizer for ULTRAMAN NEXUS. His other Ultra series credits include many of Tsuburaya's recent theatrical films, such as ULTRAMAN GAIA: THE BATTLE IN HYPERSPACE (Urutoraman Tiga & Urutoraman Daina & Urutoraman Gaia Choujikuu-no Daikessen, 1999), ULTRAMAN TIGA: THE FINAL ODDSEY (Urutoraman Tiga Za Fainaru Odessei, 2000), ULTRAMAN: THE NEXT and ULTRAMAN MEBIUS & ULTRAMAN BROTHERS.

In a futuristic Tokyo, a young man awakens to find himself with no memories of his past. Behind him, a mysterious young woman named Elea appears. Handing him a pair of red glasses, she asks him to save the world! Leaping from the top of the building, a device on the man's arm ensures a safe landing, but an explosion destroys the room above. Who is he, and just what is going on? A message sent to the device on his arm orders him to meet with an Agent K at Club Delphi. Meeting with K, he discovers his codename is Jin, and that they are both members of an organization called DEUS, secretly eliminating aliens who threaten the Earth. Following the trail of an alien at the club, the two men are separated, and as Jin is lead inside a UFO, the aliens unleash the giant monster Galkimes upon the city. After Jin is captured by the aliens inside, the mysterious Elea appears once again. Now, using the red glasses, Jin transforms into the mighty Ultraseven X!

Trivia: Akira Otani guest stars as the leader of the aliens. He previously played the recurring role of journalist Onoda in ULTRAMAN TIGA Episode 5: "The Day Of The Monster" Episode 33: "The Vampire City" and ULTRAMAN DYNA Episode 33: "Star of Peace". THE iDOL director Norman England and GODZILLA VS. MECHAGODZILLA II (Gojira tai Mekagojira, 1993) star Shelley Sweeney make uncredited appearances as customers in the club scene. Kenichi Miyamoto and Yoko Azami make regular appearances throughout the series as the two holographic news reporters.

After a long day at work, Eriko makes her way home late at night. Upon returning home, she changes the channel on her TV to static. Now speeding down the road in the back of a taxi, she urges the driver to hurry, as a boat is about to leave. Rushing out of the taxi to the bay side, Eriko joins a group of people, who are suddenly consumed by a strange light. Confirmed as the third case of UFO abductions, DEUS assign Agent Jin and Agent K to investigate. Three nights earlier, Jin encountered a mysterious man at a club, who informed him a boat would be arriving on the same night the UFO abduction took place. Upon reading the taxi driver's statement, Jin decides to pursue the man. Following a second encounter at the club, K reveals that the man is actually Agent R, a DEUS member who went missing over a year ago. Why are people voluntarily being abducted by the UFO, and just what is Agent R's involvement?

Trivia: Guest starring as Agent R is Toshiyuki Watarai, who was the voice of the alien doll in Norman England's THE iDOL, the motion-capture actor for Ryuk in Shusuke Kaneko's two DEATH NOTE films, and Professor Yotsuya in ULTRAMAN MAX Episode 36: "The Extra Dimensional World". Eriko is played by Tomomi Miyashita, who previously starred as Memory Police agent Mizou Nonomiya in ULTRAMAN NEXUS. A similar sequence in which the character's thoughts float across the screen as text was seen in ULTRAMAN NEXUS Episode 30: "Watcher", from the same writer/director team of Ai Ota and Takeshi Yagi.

Jin is approached in the park by a man offering work, which could make him a large amount of money in a short amount of time. While Jin declines the offer, the man leaves him his business card reading his name, Tamaru. Meanwhile, many bodies have been discovered with their brains physically shrunken. All the victims had been Hopeless, members of society so desperate for money that they would do any kind of work. Presumed to be the work of aliens, DEUS order Jin and K to investigate. Returning to the scene where the last body was found, Jin and K encounter two men fighting over a bag that belonged to the last victim. Inside the bag of money, Jin finds Tamaru's business card. Pursuing the lead, Jin calls back Tamaru to seek employment for him and K. Upon their arrival at the underground complex, they soon discover that the energy from human brains is being used to help create an invasion device, and Tamaru's true identity as Alien Markind.

1 - 4 DIAMOND 'S'

Throughout the city, bodies are being discovered which have been transformed into mummies. DEUS order Agents Jin and K to investigate the phenomenon with Agent S, who has already discovered a common link between the victims; all of them had purchased a well-being medicine called Shiner 05 said to improve the mind. Jin and K visit the developer of the medicine, Nano Cybertech, under the pretense of conducting an interview with the company president Tazaki, while S goes undercover as a company secretary. After S determines that Tazaki and his aide Yamane are aliens, they return to discover the more shocking truth Shiner 05 contains a parasite, a smaller part of the creature Peginera, which is using the medicine to take human hosts to survive on Earth.

Trivia: Edo Yamaguchi, guest starring as Tazaki, was a regular in Tsuburaya's LIGHTNING SUPERMAN GRIDMAN as Naoto's father Souichirou, made a regular appearance as Pegasus president Souichirou Tenma in RACING SQUADRON CAR-RANGER (Gekisou Sentai Kaarenjaa, 1996), appeared in several episodes of ULTRAMAN DYNA as Professor Mishina, and in ULTRA Q DARK FANTASY Episode 9: Temptation at 2:00am as the mysterious TV sales man.

1 - 5 PEACE MAKER

Jin and K are ordered to investigate an alien crash site, but suspect that the survivor fled the scene. From the blood left at the crash site, Agent S determines the survivor as a known alien species who have been taken refuge on Earth after their home world was invaded by the ferocious Vo-Da aliens. Jin and K meet with the other alien refugees, a weak but hard working species who are already living alongside the humans, to find out if any of them know about the latest visitor from the crash site. But before long, the Vo-Da arrive on Earth and begin hunting down the refugees. Their only hope is to find their ancient relic Orifam, which was hidden by the Vo-Da long ago on the planet known as Earth!

Trivia: Kenji Yabe plays the role of all the identical-looking alien refugees. His previous appearances include MASKED RIDER AGITO (Kamen Raidaa Agito, 2001) Episode 7: A Piece Of Memory and the 2006 U.S. Movie THE FAST AND THE FURIOUS: TOKYO DRIFT.

1 - 6 TRAVELLER

Jin, K and S are ordered to investigate a UFO crash site, but discover no wreckage. Soon after, people around the city are encountering a strange entity, which they have nicknamed the Soul of Light. Later, Jin encounters a friend from his forgotten past, Takao, an ordinary, mild-mannered salary man tired with his job, trying to hold on to impossible childhood dreams of space travel. Meanwhile, from a sample left at the crash site, K and S have determined the Soul of Light is a 20,000-year-old alien. But after the alien encounters Takao, perhaps both of them have found what they were looking for?

Trivia: Mitsuru Karahashi guest stars as Takao. Karahashi is perhaps best remembered for his regular role as Naoya Kaidou on MASKED RIDER 555 (Kamen Raidaa Faizu, 2003), as well as Professor Ootomo in SH15UYA (Shibuya Fifutiin, 2005) and Makage in LION MARU G (Raion Maru Jii, 2006). Aside from acting, Karahashi is also an illustrator, and worked with the staff of MASKED RIDER KABUTO (Kamen Raidaa Kabuto, 2006) creating the fairy design. Meanwhile, Nao Oikawa, who guest stars as the barmaid Arisa, previously appeared as Kotomi in GARO Episode 6: Beauty.

1 - 7 YOUR SONG

As Agent K investigates the appearance of a UFO in the sky, he is confronted by an army of aliens, the Vairo, who emit a deadly high-pitched scream. Following the noise of the Vairo, Agent S discovers her ex-comrade Agent D who she saw killed half a year ago. Meanwhile, Jin encounters a young street singer named Nataru, who is being pursued by the Vairo. As Jin fights to protect her, he learns Nataru herself is one of the Vairo who has defected from the invasion plan to live on Earth. Furthermore, she has fallen in love with an Earthling, Agent D!

Trivia: Playing Nataru is Saaya Ishikawa, a regular actor on ULTRAMAN MEBIUS as Acting Commissioner Yuki Misaki of the defence team GUYS. Agent D is portrayed by Ryohei Odai, who was a regular on MASKED RIDER RYUKI (Kamen Raidaa Ryuuki, 2002) as Shuuichi Kitaoka, the host of Masked Rider Zolda. Odai also appeared as the alien Kelus in ULTRAMAN MAX Episode 32: "Elly Must Be Destroyed" and as Morino in GARO Episode 5: Moonlight. The guitarist seen the start of the episode is played by Hiroko Ebioka, the vocalist for the ending theme music of BIO PLANET WOO, a song which was incidentally composed by ULTRASEVEN X's Takahiro Saito.

1 - 8 BLOOD MESSAGE

Every night during a thunderstorm the phantom serial killer attacks, and it leaves behind a message written in blood: Not Man. Witnesses claim the killer is always wearing a red coat. Agents Jin, K and S discover all the victims were part of a drug circuit and follow the lead to the dealer's hideout. Meanwhile, Kyousuke enjoys a quiet evening meal with his wife Asami, recounting their first meeting outside the theatre. When they met, Asami had no memory of her past. But as a storm breaks out, Asami leaves the house with her red coat. After the killer strikes again, Asami returns home covered in blood. But perhaps the true colors of the phantom killer aren't quite so obvious?

Trivia: Keiko Goto makes a brief appearance in this episode. She previously starred in ULTRAMAN NEXUS as Night Raider member Shiori Hiraki, as well as making appearances in ULTRAMAN MEBIUS Episode 48: Decent Of The Emperor, Episode 49: Dark Clouds Of Despair and ULTRA Q: DARK FANTASY Episode 1: Dancing Garagon.

1 - 9 RED MOON

Peering through a pair of binoculars he discovers on a swing, Jin sees the moon turn red, and the hand of a strange creature. The agents are informed a woman in white will be targeted. Following her screams, K finds the woman confronted by a strange creature, who mutters the name Mahiru before fleeing into the darkness. With a total eclipse of the moon is due to occur, S learns from folklorist Ogata that a woman named Mahiru Saginomiya was attacked by a therianthrope during the eclipse 100 years ago. The group return to Saginomiya's estate, and Ogata tells the story of Mahiru and her lover Nozomu as they await for the eclipse.

Trivia: In Asian folklore, the therianthrope is a human who transforms into an animal or beast. The kanji used to spell Nozomu's name means full moon. Actor Hassei Takano played Hiroya Fujimiya/Agul in ULTRAMAN GAIA, which he will reprise in DECISIVE BATTLE! THE SUPER 8 ULTRA BROTHERS. He also played Miyuki Tezuka/Masked Rider Raia in MASKED RIDER RYUKI and Hayato Ichimonji/Masked Rider 2 in the two movies MASKED RIDER THE FIRST (Kamen Raidaa Za Faasuto, 2005) and MASKED RIDER THE NEXT (Kamen Raidaa Za Nekusuto, 2007). 1 - 10 MEMORIES

A news report states that Lake Nousu has dried up after a meteor impact, and a search is on for a man in the area who many by contaminated by radiation. The image of the lake triggers Jin's memory floating in water. Approaching the area of the lake, Jin encounters the missing man Haibara. He hands Jin a memory chip and informs him that the meteor impact is a lie, when a group of men appear and shoot Haibara dead on site. Watching the video files on the chip, Jin sees that the lake has not dried up as the report had stated, and once again sees the mark of the Aqua Project, the words he saw once before on an item Elea had carried. Unsure of what his government could be hiding, Jin visits the relay station Studio X with Haibara's colleague Saki, and together try to determine the location of the people sending the news broadcasts to the monitors.

Trivia: Ryuki Kitaoka, formerly known as Hisataka Kitaoka, plays Haibara. His credits as both an actor and suit actor include ULTRAMAN TIGA, ULTRAMAN DYNA, ULTRAMAN COSMOS and MIRROR MAN: REFLEX to name a few. He also appears in GODZILLA: FINAL WARS as an X-Alien, and in ULTRAMAN NEXUS as TLT's Kaimoto. He was a guest at G-FEST in 1999 and 2000. 1 - 11 AQUA PROJECT

Jin is cross-examined by DEUS for trespassing an intelligence facility and aiding in Elea's escape. Determined to discover the truth, Jin realizes he needs information from Elea. After Jin consults with his friends, S infiltrates the Science Ministry and discovers Lake Nousu was the location where the Aqua Project was to be executed, and that the project had been frozen three months ago. She also finds a list of Aqua Project names, including Elea's. Jin leaves alone, and meets Elea in a room from one of his memories. She reveals to Jin that little more than three months ago the two of them had been lovers. However, at that time, she had come to realize there was a terrible existence hiding behind the scenes of the Aqua Project. As DEUS issues the order to detain Elea and Jin, the two of them flee to the intelligence facility where K and S are waiting, but the building is soon surrounded by DEUS agents.

1 - 12 NEW WORLD

Elea revealed the purpose of the Aqua Project was to secure a new energy source, but in the midst of the experiment a strange phenomenon occurred, and a gate to another world was opened. The information was concealed and the project suspended. However, creatures from the other world invaded, quietly manipulating society by controlling media and information. It's determined that by destroying two enemy bases at the same time may annihilate them, so the group disperse. As Jin and Elea are confronted by a group of giant creatures, Jin transforms into Ultraseven X, but is overcome by the power of the creatures. Suddenly finding himself in the mysterious world of the invaders, they inform him: Your role is finished, Ultra Seven!

Meanwhile, K and S make their way to the centre of DEUS and receive their final order: death. Elea finds Jin unconscious by the lake, and the Ultra Eye vanishes from his hand. In hope of reviving his memory, she tells him how the two of them jumped into the lake three months ago, and she heard the voice of an alien. To revive Jin and to save their two worlds, the alien merged its existence with Jin's. As Jin awakens, the Ultra Eye re-appears. Transforming into Ultraseven X, the battle to save the two worlds begins in this explosive finale!

Trivia: K is seen driving director Yagi's car, which has been featured in a number of Ultraman stories in the past. This episode is the first time the name Ultra Seven is spoken in the series. Koji Moritsugu and Yuriko Hishimi appear in character as Dan Moroboshi and Anne Yuri, establishing ULTRASEVEN X as a direct sequel to the original ULTRA SEVEN. Koji Moritsugu has returned to the role of Ultra Seven's alter-ego Dan several times, most prominently in the series ULTRAMAN LEO where Dan was the captain of the defence team MAC, as well as a number of the OV Ultra Seven episodes and last year's ULTRAMAN MEBIUS & ULTRAMAN BROTHERS movie. Godzilla fans may best remember Yuriko Hishimi as Gengo's black-belt girlfriend Tomoko Tomoe in GODZILLA VS. GIGAN (Chikyuu Kougeki Meirei Gojira tai Gaigan, 1972).

ULTRAVIOLET

Detective Sergeant Michael Colefield is about to be best man at his partner, Jack's wedding. But then Jack disappears on the eve of the ceremony. Investigating the disappearance of his partner and best friend, Colefield eventually finds himself for a covert government unit, termed 'The Squad' who's role is to fight off the advancing hordes of Vampires which have become organised and are trying to make a new future for themselves. It is up to 'The Squad' to find out what the vampire community are planning before it is too late for the rest of human kind.

This series was written and directed by the same man Joe Ahearne and produced by Bill Shapter. It was first shown on Channel 4 in the UK with a repeat showing a few days after each new episode was shown. Joe Ahearne is a self confessed DOCTOR WHO fan who has had a long fascination with the vampire legend.

The series however is a modern version of the vampire legend taking the Vampire myth into the 90s and combining that myth with science and technology in order so that the vampires in the show can continue into the future, such motifs as crosses and holy water is out, instead they use high calibre specially designed guns and graffiti tips. The vampires still retain some of their old foibles including, drinking blood and the inability to go out in the sunlight, but buy the fact that they are attempting to create a new genetically engineering vampire which can survive the sunlight, this show warrants inclusion into this database. The producer for the series was Bill Shapter.

The executive producer was Sophia Ballhetchet, the film editor was Nick McPhee, the director of photography was Peter Greenhalgh, BSC, the production designer was Jon Bunker, the costume designer was Amy Roberts, the make-up designer was Elisa Johnson and the original music was created by Sue Hewitt.

The telefantasy highlight of the, year for me so far occurred at around 10.15pm on 13th October 1998: Terra incognito, the penultimate episode of Joe Aherne's Ultraviolet. This rare gem of a show which blends topical adult drama with updated Fantasy concepts has been the masterpiece of the year building strongly to the final, stunning two-part narrative in which a delivery from" South America starts to shed light on the Code V's true reason for artificial blood re-research. And the best moment? It has to be the apparently heartless Vaughan waking up in an empty warehouse with four Leech containers... all due to open imminently. There is a means of escape... if he can reason it out, Superb stuff - more please!

Ultraviolet is arguably the best British genre show to be produced in 1998. Set in con-temporary London, Ultraviolet takes us into a nocturnal underworld where vampire and humankind slog it out for domination of the planet. The modern vampire no longer sulks in his coffin until sunset, and is more likely to be found in a Mercedes with blacked-out windows. The Undead also have difficulty with modern technology and cannot be heard on telephones or recorded on video. With these ground rules laid down, what followed was a cracking six-part thriller that was not afraid to use vampirism as a metaphor for AIDS and cancer. Boasting a strong ensemble cast and thoughtful script, this show went right for the jugular and succeeded on every level.

If you think all vampires should look like Bela Lugosi, dressed in long capes and muttering "I want to drink your blood", then Ultraviolet is not for you. This is the twentieth century after all. Wooden stakes have been replaced with carbon compound bullets shot from state-of-the-art guns with mirror vision viewfinders, just to ensure the target is the real thing. Sunlight, which has a fairly dramatic effect on vampires, has been studied until a shield of ultraviolet light could be developed. And the humble garlic has been distilled down to its active ingredient to produce some rather nifty, and niffy, smoke bombs. In this high-tech world the vampires (or code 5 infection as the hunters prefer to term them) have been stripped of their sexual lure and reduced to carriers of a viral infection which can either make the victim more malleable or change him into one of the undead.

But there's a lot more to this than just a virus. The Vatican-funded squad of hunters, lead by priest Pierce (Philip Quast) are really in the dark (no pun intended). The vampires are truly immortal, and not even being staked out in full sunlight while being smeared with garlic will kill them: it just turns them into a more manageable form - dust. This dust can regenerate and the hunters don't know how. When experienced vampire hunter Vaughn (Idris Alba) is giving new recruit Michael (Jack Davenport) a tour of their base we see a large, computer-operated storage area. Initially Michael is horrified but Vaughn tells him it's not a morgue; but a prison.

The Squad don't even know how the body of a vampire is able to exist. It doesn't breathe, the heart doesn't pump and (other than the obvious) it doesn't need food. What they really want is a whole, animate body to do an autopsy on: an autopsy being the correct term for a surgical procedure on a corpse according to Pierce. So far all they have been able to do is to use those useful old myths to give them some defence, and scientists such as Angie (Susannah Harker) have discovered that, just as a mirror can't register an image, neither can a camera, and a vampire's voice won't record on any format, including the telephone. This means that unless a vampire uses a Stephen Hawking-style voice synthesiser, or writes a letter, then they have to communicate face to face - it's good to talk.

The series actually revolves around a complicated set of soap opera style relationships. Michael keeps tabs on Kirsty (Colette Brown), Jack's fiancée, who he secretly loves, via his own former girlfriend Frances (Fiona Dolman), who still loves him. Meanwhile, Angie's research is as much about recovering her husband as it is about beating the enemy, and Vaughn will do almost anything to make her happy. Pierce, on the other hand, only has to deal with his shaky faith and progressing cancer. The firm rooting in soap opera actually makes the characters more realistic against the surrealistic premise of the series.

The vampires are seen as totally evil by the church, and therefore by the group. It takes Michael's lack of trust in all he is told to throw a spanner into the works and allow the doubts to surface. After all, as far as the vampires are concerned they are merely part of the food chain and, unlike most humans, they don't kill to feed. There is also a hefty amount of paranoia, with vampire Gideon Lester (Trevor Bowen) telling his assistant that Michael is one of them but doesn't know it yet, which certainly gives the audience something to wonder about. Writer & director Joe Ahearne has taken his time to build up the viewers' belief in the vampires by having a disbelieving hero, a move calculated to draw in a broader audience than the usual horror groupies. A refreshing touch is the way the plot has a habit of turning in an unexpected direction making it harder even for experienced reviewers to guess what is going to happen.

Ahearne manages to steer a fine line between believability and horror; while avoiding the fly-on-the-wall approach of This Life, which he also directed and wrote for, he still manages to make the series realistic. He tends to prefer a close-up or tightly framed group shot to wide angles, giving the audience an intimacy and familiarity with the characters. It was inevitable that a series which brought Jack Davenport and Joe Ahearne back together after This Life was bound to be dubbed 'This Afterlife' by the press. For once though it seemed to be a term of affection rather than derision. When you deal with universal problems such as the nature of evil and the lengths people will go to for love then one is fairly certain of making the majority of the people happy for most of the time. Luckily Ultraviolet manages to mix this broad philosophy in with some damn fine storytelling. This reviewer certainly can't wait for next season.

As the fading light of a sunset falls on a bridge across the River Thames in its opening moments, a sinister atmosphere descends on Ultraviolet. With its slick, cinematic style reminiscent of a modern, gritty police drama or a Hollywood thriller, the viewer is pulled in by familiar techniques and themes. A police informer is killed, a police officer goes missing and an investigation begins - but the dark mood never goes away, and if you take in the visual clues you begin to understand this is more than just a police drama. Detective Sergeant Michael Colefield (Jack Davenport) chases a killer whose image doesn't appear on video security cameras, finds bullets made of carbon and boarded up windows in his police partner's home, but only when Mike 'neutralises' him by twisting a wooden splinter into his heart does he - and we - really understand what he is dealing with.

Ultraviolet is an intelligent person's show, never pausing for unnecessary exposition, always demanding that the viewer think. Boiled down to its bare structure, it is essentially about vampire hunters stalking their prey, but the blurred line between good and evil gives this simple structure an intriguing complexity. The audience is asked to question all the time who is on the right side and who is more human: single-minded Angie March (Susannah Harker) who lives behind locked doors and won't let her daughter play net-ball because the practice sessions are at night, or the vampire she shoots through the heart as he is cradling his dying wife in his arms? Ultraviolet engages its audience not only through subtly plotted stories, but also - crucially - through the characters.

Because the lives of each member of the squad have been irredeemably changed by vampires, their personal stories enhance rather than detract from the central questions. They are made more interesting by their unusual backgrounds - a priest, a scientist and a soldier - and by the nature of their obsession. The constant danger is that Mike will succumb to that same paranoia. He develops from turning away from firing on a cardboard image of his would-be girl-friend Kirsty in episode two, to believing she has become one of them in episode five and trying to shoot her - only to realise his near-fatal mistake as he sees her fleeing image reflected in a mirror. Writer/director Joe Ahearne had spent ten years trying to get a vampire drama made before Ultraviolet and his passion for the subject shows.

In striving for credibility, never mentioning the word 'vampire', updating the garlic/wooden stake tradition using scientific logic, and using a cinematic style in recognisable London locations, he enhances its realism, believability and ultimately its tension. Each episode builds on the one previously, with enough of an episodic formula to entice a casual viewer, but also an increasing serial element to reward a loyal audience. There are answers to the questions it poses, but they aren't necessarily the ones you expect or find comfortable:

Ultraviolet is a series that lingers long in the mind. With its intelligent story telling, startling images and original twist on traditional themes, it surely is not only a landmark in genre television, but in television drama as a whole.

"US Pilot Episode"

Approximately a year after the broadcast of the final episode of Ultraviolet in the UK, news started to emerge from the US of a possible re-make. The agency that represented World Productions in the USA had approached Fox with the series and they in turn had handed it over to Howard Gordon and Chip Johannessen for development as a possible series.

Gordon and Johannessen both had previous experience of writing for successful genre shows and set to work on the pilot, which if picked up, would result in Ultraviolet making its debut as a mid-season replacement on the Fox Network during 2000/2001.

Filming on the pilot took place in Toronto over a period of thirteen days in the March and April of 2000, ready to be presented to Fox at the start of May. It was directed by Mark Piznarski with the music being composed by Michael Hoenig who had previously received an Emmy nomination for the Dark Skies theme, and who had worked with Howard Gordon on the short-lived Strange World.

Meanwhile, back in the UK, fans of the original series were becoming uneasy with the information that had leaked out, with particular concern being shown at the idea that it might be turned into a vampire soap. Most of these problems would appear to be connected with several interviews that Howard Gordon and Chip Johannessen gave to www.vampires&slayers.com and www.tvindustry.com. Johannessen's interview in particular gave an interesting insight into the possible direction the show might take.

"We had to reconceptualize the series for American TV. Mainly the British series pushed a mythology about what the vampires were up to. That aspect of the story was not so interesting to us. We were interested in the more human side of this story, the idea that Leeches are still dealing with normal kinds of people's problems."

On the 18th May 2000, Fox issued a press release which detailed their new shows for the 2000/2001 season, amongst which were Dark Angel, The Lone Gunmen, Fearsome (later renamed Freakylinks) and Ultraviolet.

ULTRAVIOLET - The one-hour series ULTRAVIOLET is a compelling and visually arresting blend of science fiction and drama from the former producers of "The X-Files," "Beverly Hills, 90210" and "My So-Called Life." New York City Police Lieutenant JOHN CAHILL stumbles upon a world he never knew existed when his best friend and partner, VIGGO BARTOLI, back from a two-year undercover assignment, disappears on the morning of his wedding to his fiancée NEALY JESSUP. Viggo's disappearance only proves more bizarre when federal evidence on the very case Viggo handed to the police vanishes. As the NYPD builds a compelling case against him, John's search for his partner uncovers a shocking, sexy and provocative world of vampires living among us. There, an underground war is being fought between the "leeches" and a government agency led by DR. LISE MATTHEWS and VAUGHN SHEPPARD, whose mission is to destroy them. While John attempts to clear his partner's name, he discovers that the "leeches" have seduced Viggo into fighting for their survival and may even have turned him into one of them.

At some point after this Ultraviolet was dropped, and although a specific reason was never given Howard Gordon recently admitted in an interview for www.scifi.com that, 'frankly we screwed it up and it just didn't come out that well.' To date the pilot hasn't been broadcast and like the US version of Red Dwarf is now sitting in an American vault.

UNBALANCEAKA: KYOFU GEKIJO UNBALANCEAKA: FRIGHTENING THEATRE UNBALANCE

Unbalance was an anthology series of chills of the week, including A Mummy's Love, The Girl Who Planned for Death, Assassin's Game, The Masked Grave, The Cat Saw It, Scream of the Vampire and The Butterfly Girl. Though many were dreamed up for the series, about half acknowledged a literary inspiration, including The Women Selling Title Deeds by Seicho Matsumoto and Should Dawn Break by Futaro Yamada.

Unbalance was the original setup for the series that became ULTRA Q, mothballed after ULTRAMAN entered the hiatus, alongside the other THE TWILIGHT ZONE imitators such as OPERATION MYSTERY. Originally titled Frightening Theatre Unbalance Zone in admission of its original inspiration, initial plans called for a team of amateur paranormal researchers meeting up in the Unbalance coffer shop in Tokyo's switch Ginza area.

However, that idea was later dropped in favor of a linking device after the fashion of THE TWILIGHT ZONE's Rod Serling, in which narrator Tatsuo Aojima introduced each episode, including a rich variety of writers whose other credits included productions as diverse as Ken-Chan, COMET-SAN and MIGHTY JACK. Music by Isao Tomita, the series was produced by Ken Kumagai & Yoshiyuki Shindo.

UNCLE JACK AND THE DARK SIDE OF THE MOON

Uncle Jack (Paul Jones) is an eccentric cross between an eco-warrior and a mad scientist. His activities embroil him and members of his family (usually nieces and nephews) in various unlikely adventures and constant danger. Jack has a regular nemesis, the evil Vixen (played by the ever-watchable Fenella Fielding), whose plans invariably spell disaster for the ecology of the planet.

The evil Vixen has concocted a plan to control the world's weather. Will Uncle Jack and friends be able to stop her before it's too late?

Writer Jim Eldridge invented a children's hero for the 1990s with the swashbuckling Jack, and initially kept the blend of comedy and drama that had proved popular with his earlier series Bad Boyes. By the third series, however, Radio Times ceased labelling Uncle Jack as a 'comedy-drama' and called it simply 'drama', perhaps feeling that the Earth's ecological extermination was no laughing matter.

UNFORSEEN,THE

Anthology series with mostly fantasy storylines. Stories of SF interest include 'Enoch Soames' , in the 1890s, the devil grants a popular authors request to see how his latest book will be remembered 100 years into the future. 'The Monsters' , a pair of young martain scientist defy a government plan as they attempt to be the first Martians to set foot on Earth. 'The Mechanical Man' in which two greedy relatives plans to scare to death their wealthy old relative by creating a mechanical monster.

A prototype Tales of the Unexpected, this early fantasy anthology series appeared on Britain's Granada Television in 1960 (initially twice weekly) as a late night series of short plays covering the inexplication, the supernatural, the occult and science fiction.

The Unforeseen was an early Canadian anthology series of tales of suspense, science fiction and the supernatural. The stories themselves were adaptations of published works. Four of the episodes which were based on short stories also were adapted for TV on Alfred Hitchcock Presents. These stories were 'The Gentlemen from America' , 'Change of Address', 'Ikon of Eliah' and 'The Room on the Fourth Floor' (the hitchcock version of this was entitled 'The Vanishing Lady').

Tales often ended with unusual twists much like The TWILIGHT ZONE would when it started its run a year later. Episodes in the second season featured more eerie and macabre tales than those in the first season. This prompted CBC to air these episodes an hour later. During the summer of 1961, episodes of the Unforeseen were rerun as part of a series entitled Summer Circuit. Summer Circuit featured a combination of new dramas along with reruns of both The Unforeseen and First Person, a series featuring adaptations of works by famous writers.

This series appeared on UK TV on Granada Television in 1960. The series ran for 18 episodes on Granada but was never shown by the ITV network. The episode list represents the full in order list, not all of these episodes have been seen in the UK.

Information on guest cast, writer(s) and director(s) for many of the episodes does not exist. Some of the writers credits listed may refer to the story writer, not the writer of the actual teleplay. Only 7 of the episodes are known to still exist. The executive producer for the series was Peter Francis. Barry Morse starred in many of the episodes, he would later go on to star in the SF show SPACE: 1999.

UNINVITED, THE

Photographer Steve Blake is the only witness to a horrific car accident in which the driver, James Wilson, is killed - yet the next day Blake finds him alive and well. Meanwhile Chief Superintendent Gates has been investigating several cases of apparent resurrection - all linked to a ghostly village.

This was another attempt by ITV to produce a British equivalent of THE X FILES, which again failed to be successful, despite the realisation of the series on video and book form. Leslie Grantham, the one-time landlord of the pub in EastEnders, who starred in the series was also the joint Executive Producer for the series, the other executive producer was Archie Tait. The project was originally going to be an on-going series for the BBC, but after a change in management, it went to ITV where it was decided the story should have a definite ending.

Right from the accomplished pyrotechnics of the exploding car in part one, it's clear that The Uninvited is an attempt to make post-X-Files British Science Fiction as stylish as it can be and in peak-time ITV autumn schedules too. It continues to be visually very impressive with underwater filming later in the first episode, and a great deal of night filming to come. But it's not just the glossy finish that it has in common with the adventures of Mulder and Scully. More importantly, The Uninvited takes its subject matter seriously - an approach which should give it a better shot at appealing to a mass audience than something as self-conscious as CRIME TRAVELLER, and which allows it to be genuinely scary at times.

The music certainly helps, managing to create a chilling atmosphere while not being too obtrusive. But it's creator Leslie Grantham who gives the serial its scariest moments, playing the role of Philip Gates (Renewed) with such stern composure that you wonder whether anyone will ever dare ask for his autograph again. With plenty of fun motifs and gimmicks white eyes, nosebleeds and inhalers - and a subtle lack of bad language and overt violence, the serial has a definite family appeal too.

One of the most rewarding aspects of The Uninvited is the way it develops over its four episodes, with a measured unfolding of what turns out to be a basic plot made far more interesting by a number of well placed twists and turns. In part one, the process begins with Steve Blake (Douglas Hodge) investigating the crash that apparently killed James Wilson, a bigwig from 'British Nuclear Power', who is nevertheless alive and well. Through the mysterious coppers Gates and Ferguson of 'Central Ops' we are then introduced to the drowned Norfolk village of Sweethope, whose miraculously alive inhabitants have all gone on to be terribly successful.

This is all intriguing stuff, hinting at far reaching conspiracies and cover-ups, but cleverly not yet implying that anything is necessarily supernatural or alien. The scene near the end of the episode in which Melissa (Lia Williams) suggests alien involvement - and both Steve and ex-wife Joanna Ball (Sylvestra Le Touzel) refuse to give it a second's thought - is a master stroke, a very believable way of easing in the SF genre.

The word 'invasion' isn't used until mid-way through part two, and by this time the roles of the main characters are established: Joanna, the sceptic, firmly rooted in the 'real' world; Steve, the investigator, slowly coming to believe the truth; and Melissa, the believer, who has already come to terms with it. Complications are added by Melissa's breakdown, and Joanna and Steve's collapsed marriage - but otherwise the characters are a little bland, if well played by the three actors.

A fluid set of supporting characters lends help and hindrance in roughly equal measures: in part two, the plot de-tour into the headquarters of Zentex is incomprehensibly explained by Gary Cartwright, while Elizabeth Madigan babbles rather more effectively about the woman "dressed in my daughter's skin". Meanwhile, Gates is taunting us in our confusion: "You're onto me, but you don't know what I've done. You can see through me, but you don't know who I am." He is even more effective when not saying a word, as at the end of the episode when he apparently dies of a nose-bleed and then shockingly comes back to life.

Just when we think this might be a serial about the dangers of world-wide networked software (and featuring a villain named Gates - weird), part three returns to the nuclear connection with weapons testing in the Antarctic, though aliens benefiting from our own negligence towards Earth is hardly original. The idea, also set up here, that if enough senior aliens are killed at the same time then the whole lot will die off is also rather too convenient, and the alien autopsy is perhaps the only visual element of the serial which really doesn't work. But on the plus side, part three gives us a textbook cliff-hanger, clustering together a number of confusing incidents and revelations including the survival of Gates (again!) and the dramatic meltdown at Sizewell B.

And so the stage is set for a frantic but ultimately disappointing part four. There are some exciting moments, including the obligatory car chase, but the final act in particular seems ill thought out, slowing down despite the inevitably impending climax. Unfortunately, the serious tone that was the serial's initial strength now turns against it: its po-faced attitude to-wards what has turned out to be a derivative B-movie plot leaves it looking simply foolish.

In the end, the serial's chief flaw is not that it's derivative or over-earnest, but that it lacks sophistication. It adopts very basic SF ideas, and uses their familiarity as an excuse not to explain them properly. A number of mysteries set up at the start of the serial are never satisfactorily resolved: for instance, are we meant to believe that the electronics in James Wilson's car were not only computer-controlled but networked as well? If not, how did the aliens control it? Why did Ferguson not remember his conversation with Blake? And what was the 'revolutionary manufacturing process' used to make Zentex software?

These things may not matter to most viewers of The Uninvited, and maybe that's the point. As pure escapist SF hokum, it's fairly close to perfect: right up to (nearly) the end, it maintains an unnerving atmosphere and an unrelenting pace, and it's made with stylish production values and a mostly top notch cast. Those of us with a more analytical attitude towards television will probably find more faults with each successive viewing - but that, I suspect is our problem.

UNSUB

John Westley Grayson is the head of the Behavioural Science Unit of the US Justice Department, taking cases no one else will touch. Their job was to track down killers which they called "Unsubs" - using psychological profiling and the latest high-tech equipment.

Kent McCord who played Alan McWhirter in this series also starred in GALATICA 1980, playing Captain Troy.

This was an excellent show from CBS's adult night time series. This show predates "The X Files" and "Silence of the Lambs" as a specialized FBI investigative forensic team that deals with serial murders, rapists, and other dark characters. The show is both wonderfully intelligent and creepily dark. If this ever re-airs, watch it. It's one of the best, most-overlooked crime drama in the history of film and TV.

V (1982)

A thriller about aliens conquering the Earth and encountering a stubborn Resistance, 'V' was a clearly stated allegory about the evils of totalitarianism, and it pulled out all the stops to make sure its message got home. These aliens were intergalactic Nazis down to their jackboots, semi--swastikas and insidious propaganda. They rounded up Earth's scientists and herded them off to concentration camps, started a brown-shirted Visitor Youth corps and took over the media. Just in case you still hadn't twigged, up popped an elderly Jew to compare it to the rise of Nazi Germany.

It was one of the great science fiction 'events' to hit British television in the 1980s. The ten--hour American blockbuster cost around £25 million to make and was watched here by more than 10 million viewers - one of the biggest audiences ever for a science fiction show. Subtlety wasn't 'V's strongpoint, but then when you aim for the mainstream you go for the jugular.

That meant easy-to-identify heroes and villains lots of action and lavish special effects. 'V's make-up and hardware were well up to scratch, but it was something soft and furry that gave the series its most vivid and memorable image. Underneath their reassuring human exteriors the alien 'Visitors' were really a race of hideous reptiles with a taste for live meat, and one scene called for Diana, the alien leader, to 'eat' a live rat. To achieve the startling effect, actress Jane Badler dangled the rat in front of her mouth, but it was actually 'swallowed' by a mechanical head. The camera cut back to the real actress who was fitted with a false throat with built-in air sacs that inflated and deflated to give the illusion of the rodent sliding down her throat. Yuk!

If that wasn't enough, 'V' tossed in sex between a lounging lizard called Brian and an Earth girl, Robin, producing two babies - one a lizard creature which dies the other a 'human' girl with forked tongue, Elizabeth, who eventually provides the key to defeating the aliens. Heroes of the Resistance were TV cameraman Mike Donovan - capable of dodging umpteen laser blasts at a single bound - scientists Julie Parris and Robert Maxwell, and gruff mercenary Ham Tyler. They were aided by a handful of alien sympathisers, notably Fifth Columnist Martin and the soft-hearted Willie.

ITV scheduled 'V' in the summer of '84, as its alternative to the BBC's wall-to-wall Olympics. So, instead of hordes of Americans running and jumping in Los Angeles, you could watch . . . hordes of Americans running and jumping in Los Angeles. As a contest, 'V' made the Olympics look like a school sports. Two out of three viewers agreed and ITV won the ratings war - at least for the five nights 'V' was on.

Given the mini-series' phenomenal success, a sequel was inevitable. But 'V': The Series never made the same impact. Most of the main characters returned, but the political overtones were largely discarded in favour of formula action-adventures, with the metamorphosis of the alien/human 'starchild' Elizabeth the only real sign of progress. London, TSW and Channel viewers saw the sequel first, in June 1985. Other regions followed at irregular intervals.

The mini-series writer, director and executive producer was Kenneth Johnson, the producer was Chuck Bowman and the make up was created by Leo Lotito. The series premiered in the UK between the 30th July and the 3rd August 1984.

Another important series to surprise us on the TV screen was V!. It seems probable that the inspiration for this was the old TWILIGHT ZONE (or was it OUTER LIMITS) sketch where the aliens visit and everyone is SO pleased, until some professor comes screaming up just as the ship is leaving to take a gaggle of would be tourists to the alien's home planet. He has been deciphering a book, and yells a moment too late..."It's a cook book...how to cook humans!".

Well V is very similar in nature. Of course when our heroes discover the awful truth about the V!, no one will believe them...partially because they look so much like us, and of course, because by the time the disturbing rumors start, Earth society has already marched along in lock step with the offered technology and medical advances the V have brought to the planet. This is almost a rerun of "The Day the Earth Stood Still" mixed with the Mario Brothers Lizard Act (Dennis Hopper gets around, huh?). The shows longevity (was it a mini series or what...I don't remember) and viewer ratings show the intense desire for decent sci-fi (well semi-decent anyway).

Nathan Bates kidnaps Diana hoping to acquire alien technology, but she manages to escape from him, whilst Elizabeth begins a strange metamorphosis.

Earth is confronted by the Visitors, aliens who offer peace, friendship and protection. While many accept them at face value, the square jaw and Aryan features leave others more cynical about their true intentions. Donovan, a television cameraman, sneaks aboard the alien space vessel and captures a glimpse of the aliens' true form-behind a rubber mask lies a reptilian visage. The Visitors take the world by storm, controlling the human population by means of a tight fisted fascist police state; it's up to an intrepid band of resistance fighters to stop them.

Cast: As the Resistance: Mike Donovan (Marc Singer); Julie Parrish (Faye Grant); Ham Tyler (Michael Ironside); Kyle Bates (Jeff Yagher); Elizabeth (Jennifer Cooke); Elias (Michael Wright); Robin Maxwell (Blair Tefkin); As the Visitors: Diana (Jane Badler); Willie (Robert Englund); Lydia (June Chadwick); Martin/Philip (Frank Ashmore); Lt. James (Judson Scott); Also Starring: Nathan Bates (Lane Smith); Mr. Chiang (Aki Aleong); Howard K. Smith (Himself).

V (Mini-series): Created by: Kenneth Johnson; Executive Producer: Kenneth Johnson; Producer: Chuck Bowman; Associate Producer: Patrick Boyriven; V: The Final Battle: Executive Producers: Daniel H. Blatt and Robert Singer; Co-Producer: Patrick Boyriven; Produced by: Dean O'Brien; V (the series): Executive Producer: Daniel H. Blatt, Robert Singer; Producer: Dean O'Brien, Skip Ward, Donald R. Boyle, Ralph R. Riskin; Supervising Producer: Steven de Souza, Garner Simmons; Associate Producer: Michael Eliot; NBC/Warner Brothers; 60 minutes.

The brutal events of World War II, the Nazi oppression and the battleground landscape of European underground resistance fighters in France and Denmark served as inspiration of this popular "War of the Worlds"-style science fiction drama. When he sat down to write a script about vigilantism in the United States several years ago, Kenneth Johnson never realized that his fascination with the novel It Can't Happen Here by Sinclair Lewis would lead him to the creation of V, a highly acclaimed four hour mini-series. The novel was about the rise of fascism in the United States. "If you look at the strength of the religious right and the fundamentalists of this country you'll see the reality of the novel," says Johnson.

At the time, Johnson was writing a screenplay "about a vigilante-type organization growing and growing until suddenly we're no longer in the same country. Overnight we would become a police state. We'd become a right-wing, fascist state. Of course, there'd be a group of people determined to fight against them and try to bring the United States back the way it's supposed to be.

"Brandon Tartikoff [then head of NBC Television] saw that script and was nervous about the whole fascist thing. It was a contemporary script, taking place wherever you wanted. Brandon felt that Americans would have a hard time believing it," recalls Johnson. " 'Couldn't the bad guys be Soviets? Or the Chinese?' I said, 'No, I don't think the Soviets or the Chinese could sustain a protracted occupation of the United States.' Jeff Sagansky, who was the second in command at the time, was sitting over in the corner of this meeting, and he said, 'How about if aliens come in?' and we said, 'Oh, god! Jeff! We're sick of that! '" But that set some tumblers whirling in Johnson's brain. He began thinking about how he could transplant this rise-of-vigilantism fiction into a science fiction arena.

"I thought maybe there was a way to parallel the Nazis' falling in Denmark. They sort of rolled in Denmark and said, 'Hi, we're going to be your friends. We're here to protect you from the imperialistic English, you lucky people.' So I thought about spacecraft being like the Nazi coming into Denmark. And I realized there was a way to do that, that a totalitarian society like the aliens could come in here, showing us one face if you will, but underneath, guess what?

"In the case of V the face underneath is, literally, the face underneath! They were not humans at all-they were reptilian. Again, this goes back to my studies in evolution and where we could have gone...."

Fascinated with the parallels he could draw by allegory, Johnson picked a real person as inspiration for the character of Julie Parrish, played by Faye Grant. "Faye's character," he says, "is based on an 18-year-old French woman who ran the underground lines. She lived in France and one day walked into a British outpost in Barbados, Spain, with half a dozen British fighters who had been downed in France. She said, 'Here, I brought them to you.' And they said, 'How did you bring them here?' They asked her to bring out more ... and smuggle them back to England. She became one of the leaders of the French resistance."

Johnson provided Grant the key to her characterization in this woman. "I brought it forth to her, and as a matter of fact, I think Faye even met the woman after the show on a trip to Europe," he says. "Marc [Singer], his character was one of the major leftovers of my original script. It was from the point of view of a cameraman. I wanted a cameraman because like the camera, he doesn't blink. You know, when anybody else is dazzled by these people, he's a cynic. He's the one that says, 'I'm not sure!' He's the one that's looking all the time."

Only one scene remained from the "fascist" script version of V: the moment when Donovan is coming back from the mothership and "walks in with the videotape, and he's about to go on the air and he's going to blow the lid off of everything [with] the tape of Diana swallowing the guinea pig. The network has been taken over by the aliens at that point, and the Visitors now control all our communication, and you're essentially screwed. That scene was verbatim from my original fascist script before it became lizards and aliens."

For Johnson, V was emotionally and creatively satisfying. "I was very excited and proud of it as a piece of work because it really spoke to the heroism in all of us. Really, what V was about was power. V was about people reacting to power. Whether it was sucking to it, like Donovan's mother does out of the desire to increase her own stance and power in the community"-or like another character, whose reaction Johnson describes as, "'Don't worry, everything's going to be OK. This is better.' Or like David Packer's character (Daniel), who gets seduced into being the new Hitler youth out of a desire to gain power, prestige particularly if they are a troubled youth. It gives them something to hold on to, and if you put a gun to someone's head, their real personality begins to emerge. Why doesn't someone like Faye, who doesn't think of [herself] as a powerful person, give in? And yet, because it's innate in her nature, she rises to the top to become a heroine of peace."

Johnson believes very strongly that "everybody, one way or another, gives in to the desire of, the seduction of, power-or they fight against what they know [is] wrong even if it puts them into mortal danger. That's what the piece is about, and that's what I intended the series to be. I did not ever want the series to be a comic book piece. I did not ever want it to be the power station of the week we're going to blow up.

"I wanted it to be a really tense, suspenseful psychological drama about the interrelationships of those people. Essentially, the science fiction retelling of the French, Dutch and Danish resistance during World War II."

Ratings for the first mini-series were so strong-as it had been seen by some 65 million people-that Warner Brothers and NBC wanted a second mini-series, this time a six-hour piece budgeted at $14 million and titled V: The Final Battle. But Johnson did not do the second miniseries. "When NBC decided not to do it as a onehour show, and they knew they had a gold mine and asked me to do a sequel, Warner Brothers did not want to do a sequel because it was so expensive," explains Johnson.

To encourage Johnson and Warner Brothers to film the sequel, NBC promised both parties a 12-hour blind series commitment. "'Blind' means (NBC) was guaranteeing Warner Brothers an entire other series, something yet to be determined, with me producing," explains Johnson. Warner Brothers agreed to the deal. But the wheels just set in motion came to a screeching halt when Warner Brothers went to Johnson and "asked if I could do it quick, cheap and dirty." Johnson threatened to abandon the project. "And then they said, 'OK, you can get started on the blind 12-hour series commitment.' I said, 'No, you don't understand, I'm leaving. I don't want to do this.'"

Now agitated, Warner Brothers was amazed at Johnson's audacity in so easily dropping 12 hours of television production. "And they said, 'You can't take that [NBC] commitment and go somewhere else!' I said, 'I know that. But that's a million dollars out of our pocket!' I said, 'I know that. A lot of people are working here!' I replied, 'I don't like how you screwed me here with the budget on the first show!' And they were pretty amazed. It was pretty foolish of me because they brought in some people who could not have the investment I had on the show"-who, Johnson says, went about the business of totally revising, trashing the script I had."

Johnson supervised the writing and shared a story credit on the second mini-series with Diane Frolov, Craig (Faustus) Buck and Peggy Goldman. Each had written a teleplay for two hours of the six hours prepared. Colleagues Harry and Renee Longstreet had written additional scripts for the series which were incorporated into the Frolov, Buck and Goldman teleplays. "For the record, NBC was elated with our six-hour script-and very upset after Daniel Blatt and Robert Singer took on the project when I left and had it 'fixed up' by another writer," says Johnson. "NBC felt their new version was apparently not as good, but were so close to production they had to go with it. I did take my name off, replacing it with my pseudonym, 'Lillian Weezer'-the name of my dog!"

Johnson believes the new team completely missed the subtlety and psychological depth he intended for the second six hours of V. Johnson has never seen the sequel or the television series, but he was informed by friends and colleagues of the end product. By accident, one day while flipping through channels on TV he ran across a scene of the second mini-series and saw how his original vision had been mangled in the rewriting process for the second. "We had written one scene where a priest had given Diana [the lead alien] a Bible and gave Diana some real second thoughts," explains Johnson. "The way the scene was originally written was as a very hip, young priest. Somebody cool to play this priest. And Diana begins to wonder about herself and where she's going and what she's doing, and she doesn't like the fact that it makes her think. And because of that she spins around and out of the blue, kills the priest. The way the scene [was] written was amazing because you really saw her character; she had three dimensions, and was a very interesting person."

In Johnson's original treatment, Ham Tyler was in a wheelchair, and in the rewritten aired version, an entire 'scientists are evil' subplot Johnson's parallel to the Holocaust-was shredded. Also in Johnson's second mini-series script, he introduced the Alliance, the Visitors' enemies in space. But Johnson says that was a red herring to falsely bolster the Resistance's spirit for help. New writers grabbed that and used it as a plot point. Johnson disowns a subplot regarding the half-lizard, half-human child Elizabeth, who, in the conclusion of The Finat Bartle, grabs the control panel of the mothership just before the self-destruct mechanism can complete its countdown, and she mysteriously glows and saves the ship.

Johnson had definite plans for resolving the premise. "The way the original six hours ended was the Earth being saved and the spacecraft leaving, but leaving with our people on it. But Marc and Faye decided they couldn't deal with that and they had gone after them. Marc flies a shuttlecraft into the saucer as it was leaving. And that's the way we ended it." V has become so popular worldwide that, Johnson reports, "in Germany alone, on video, it made a million dollars! It aired in South Africa and ... the white government saw this as; 'Wait! This has white people and black people working together,'" says Johnson excitedly. "The response was the same as when Europe saw it; the black people started spraying big red V all over," as they saw the allegorical comments on a repressive society. "Ain't that great! I loved it!"

"We were also huge in Japan. I was on a promotional tour to Japan and you couldn't walk down the street without seeing signs for V. Germany closed the schools to make sure everybody watched it." When it arrived in England, it aired opposite the 1984 Olympics, stomping the games in the ratings. "Truly! It's just been received with astonishment all over the world. As I said, Warner Brothers really shot themselves in the foot."

Contemplating a revisit to V, for Johnson, is just an exercise in futility. "I don't know what I can do now that they haven't already screwed up," he says disgustedly. "It's like trying to go back and ... recreate a painting. "There's one thing you should understand that's very important. One of the toughest days I've had in this town was when I sat down to watch the first cut of V. Usually, when you see the film first cut together you [say], 'Oh my god! That's not what I did! How do I deal with the film?' In the case of V, I was sitting and watching this screening, and this is before putting in any of the special effects, laser stuff, spacecraft, any of that. But it sang like a million bucks. The reason why is because of the characters. Any science fiction, or any good drama, is all about [good characters]. People are always asking me, 'Why isn't there any good science fiction on television?' Because people get all caught up on the effects. But the real heart and soul is in the people. Let the people work. Make them strong and solid."

The editing process provided interesting problems. "After I cut it down, it's four hours and fifteen minutes," says Johnson. "It had to be four hours with commercials. I called Brandon and said, 'I have a problem, I can't cut this down to four.' And he said, 'Oh, come on, this is a director who can't cut his own work?' So I said, 'Take a look at it, see what you think.' He looked at the whole picture, and he came back and said, 'Well, we're going to have fifteen more minutes Sunday night!' When V aired, the first two hours was two hours and fifteen minutes. There was too much good material, and Brandon agreed with me that it could not be cut."

Johnson remembers that early in the process of making V, he made an interesting suggestion to NBC chief Brandon Tartikoff. "I told Brandon, 'Let me have Sunday night every five weeks and I'll give you a continuing saga.' Now, three years later, Brandon came to me and said, 'You know that's what we should have done with V?' I said, 'How's that?' 'We should have put it on Sunday nights, like once every five or six weeks.' I replied, 'I'm the one that gave you that idea!'"

When the second mini-series aired with an amazing 50 million viewers glued to their screens, NBC felt they had no choice but to develop a series. Executive producers Robert Singer and Daniel Blatt came in to take the reins that once were held by Johnson. New characters were introduced to further the story. For Michael Ironside, who played the distrustful ex-CIA agent Ham Tyler in both the second mini-series and the series, V was an opportunity to make friends. In the second mini-series, he says, "the very first scene we shot-Mickey Jones and I walk into the rebel headquarters and confront Donovan and say, 'You guys are doomed, they know who you are'-was the actual first day of shooting. When I first met Mickey Jones, who plays Chris Farber, Ham's backup, we became instant friends. He was best man at my wedding. I have a pickup truck I bought off him." Much later, they would appear together in the feature film Total Recall (1990).

"Faye Grant, I see fairly regularly, on and off over the years. She's married [to actor Stephen Collins, best known for Tales of the Gold Monkey], and has a baby. Jennifer Cooke is a good friend, although I haven't talked to her in a while. She married a guy ... and they live in Boulder, Colorado. I saw Marc Singer recently at an audition. We were actually going up for the same part in a movie. I haven't seen Michael Wright in a long time.

"That's what [the business] is all about. The people you meet." Thirteen episodes into the series, Ironside, Jones and Blair Tefkin left the show, ostensibly for their characters to fight the aliens in Chicago. The elimination of characters was an attempt at reducing the number of different players and trimming storylines. "I wanted to leave," says Ironside candidly. "It's very difficult work, week after week, to feel fresh with that character. When I was given the opportunity to take him to Chicago, I gratefully took it. I was coming up to an opportunity to work on Jo Jo Dancer with Richard Pryor and Top Gun with Tom Cruise. I'd rather have done those. Also in the contract, if they got the [second] season, I'd be back."

The two mini-series created a tremendous problem for the network and the studio when the decision was made to continue as a weekly television series. In The Final Battle, the humans had won their fight against the Visitors by disabling them with the red dust spread across the world. For answers on how to continue the war, the network turned to producer and writer Steven E. de Souza. "The mini-series was a complete story which ended with the triumph against the aliens," recaps de Souza. "The aliens were utterly defeated at the end of the mini-series. It was sort of saying World War II ended after the Japanese surrendered. When Warner Brothers and NBC said, 'We want to pick this up after we left off,' I said, 'You can't pick it up where you left off. You've created an impossible situation to resurrect it. The only thing you can do is start it up again.' In my opinion the mini-series worked at its best in the earlier episodes when there was sort of a political stalemate. So my intention was to get back to that stalemate situation."

To get it back to the heated status quo of the first mini-series required some creative exercises. In the process, de Souza's mind leapt to Casablanca. "Casablanca, many people say, is one of the greatest art pictures ever made," says de Souza. "It works well, has great drama, because the cafe that Rick has is a neutral ground where the Nazi and the freedom fighters meet on equal ground. So you have very intense scenes between Victor Lazlo (actor Paul Henreid), leader of the French underground, and the Nazis. They're threatening each other, and yet no one pulls out a gun and shoots the other person! This was the political construction of Casablanca at the time, and that gives you drama. So, I set up a nightclub in the series, analogous to that, to create that situation."

Believing this to be a good foundation for dramatic scenes, de Souza embellished the idea by "making Los Angeles in the series a neutral city an open city. For the series to work, you've got to be able to have the heroes and villains get in the same room to have scenes together. So if you have a full-scale war like they had in the last two to other! Whereas if they were in the same room in three hours of the first mini-series, they never can the fifth hour of the series, they would have a very have scenes with each other! If you ever have tense melodramatic scene. That's good, because Marc Singer get in the same room with Jane you have got to have the characters interact with Badler in the mini-series, they would shoot each each other!"

Although he set up the foundations of drama so the saga could continue, de Souza left the show after six episodes because of "creative differences." "There was a great deal of impatience at the network for the ratings to go up," he sighs. "Again, in short-sighted thinking, they remembered the highest rating was the last two hours of the first mini-series. That's where it was non-stop combat. Of course, I want action every week too, I don't want these people standing around talking. The problem is you have to have the underlying society of your story. Look at Star Trek: They didn't have a space battle with Klingons every week. The Klingons were out there. The series was a gunboat diplomacy show, where you had the Klingons and the Romulans who were the bad guys. And they would be mentioned all the time. There were many episodes about a new planet discovered, that we have to defend these people because it's an important outpost that the Romulans might get. It was an analogy to the Cold War. But they did not have a shooting battle with the Klingons every week.

They never said, 'This week on Star Trek, all-out war breaks out!' The next 13 episodes is, like, war against the Klingons in outer space. The series would have degenerated to a military show every week, where everyone is on a military mission." De Souza argued for balance, but "[the network] came to me and said, 'We want a higher rating. We want you to have complete, total war because these were the highest ratings of the last two hours of the first mini-series.' First of all, action is very expensive. We had action every week, but within the context of resistance fighters who are trying to go out and destroy the enemy in small, guerrilla actions-which we can afford to do. You know, like sabotage, blowing things up, capturing people, making them talk."

De Souza told the network, "If V becomes a complete war we can't do it because now the Air Force gets involved. Now, we have to spend all of our money on special effects shots of flying saucers shooting missiles at the city! I wanted the show to take place in a neutral place like Vichy, France [during World War II]. That's exactly what I wanted to do. In Vichy, France, there were no armies coming and going. I wanted a middle ground where small groups of commandos and guerrillas would engage each other. That can be done. I was overruled. I left the show. The minute I was gone, two weeks later, they got rid of a whole bunch of characters. And the wrong ones, by the way! The show ended in stalemate. And immediately, the show failed!

"First of all, the people behind the show had so little understanding of science fiction, and they didn't even pay attention to the show. Towards the end, they had an episode where someone came on the show and said, 'I must leave now and return to our own galaxy.' In the mini-series almost a year and a half ago, they identified a character as coming from a planet around the star Sirius, which is a very close star to us! In our own galaxy! So no one even gave a care to their own ground rules."

Of the many plots and subplots running throughout the saga, de Souza believes that one of the best didn't get the airplay it deserved: the conflict between Donovan and Tyler. "No one was able to make it work," he says. "It wasn't used enough. I don't know why, but the networks said, 'We don't want the heroes fighting. We want them fighting the villains.' I loved that and I wanted to continue it. The network studio executives say, 'Why are you having these guys bicker? You should have them fight the aliens together.' I had people say to me, 'Steve, you are inconsistent. You are talking about Star Trek. That's your dream role model; they never fought [among each other].' I said, 'Watch it again!' There was a great deal of conflict between Captain Kirk, Mr. Spock and Dr. McCoy.

It could never get as intense as it could get with Marc and Michael because [the Enterprise officers] were in a military situation and at a certain point you get court martialed!" Many actors worked hard on the saga, de Souza says. "Everybody wanted to stretch their characters. Everybody wanted to go in new areas. It was my impression that they were very disheartened when the show changed. ... My impression was that morale really went down after they let a lot of the characters go. Everybody had an understanding of their characters when the mini-series was going. [But then] inconsistencies crept in. They were very quick to find it. They'd ask, 'Why am I doing this? This doesn't make any sense to me!'"

The move from mini-series to weekly episodes presented further story problems. For example, at the end of The Final Battle, Donovan and Parrish had, with the help of the friendly Visitor Martin, captured a mothership. As soon as V went to series status, de Souza realized in alarm that if they were to reestablish the status quo, the Resistance could not be in possession of the aliens' technology. "One of the first things I said was, 'We have to get rid of the mothership.' The network executive said, 'Why are you doing this storyline about the mothership then [for the second episode, "Dreadnaught"]?' I said, 'Because if the mothership has been captured, and the aliens attack again, we would immediately take the mothership apart, right? You can't just resume the war because any 12-year-old with common sense would say, 'They've captured the mothership. They understand how all the weapons work.'

"So the network executive said, 'Don't even bother with that. Our audience won't even think of that.'" Disgusted with this attitude, de Souza argued for continuity, as well as respect for the audience. "They'd say, 'Maybe they put [the mothership] in the Smithsonian Institute and the Smithsonian people will turn it over to the Pentagon.' I said, 'Are you serious?' You've got to say that this is being examined and taken apart. You have to pick it up at that point. That was our plan, and we spent the first hour getting rid of the mothership. It was like a magic ring. You never give your heroes a magic ring or there's no series! It's like giving Angela Lansbury a crystal ball in Murder She Wrote and it tells her who the killer is. There's no show! The fact they think that our audience is too stupid to think that through indicates the score that they have of the audience."

Making a move from a mini-series to a weekly series has important implications for story development. For a mini-series, structure demands a beginning, middle and end. But a weekly series automatically becomes melodramatic, and "the ongoing saga" here was not unlike a soap opera, with twists and turns in every chapter, as de Souza remembers.

Because The Final Battle ended with Diana taking off from the mothership and Donovan saying, "I'll get her later," de Souza suggested a story for the first episode of the series: "'Let's catch her, and then we have a second hour.' We picked up like the Saturday morning serials, right from where we left off. Donovan shoots her down and captures her. She gets away, and now we just continue the chase. The trial would have been a different situation, so we did a Lee Harvey Oswald. On the way to the trial she was shot. And she's faked her death. They substitute the body. And the people who did this ran the scientific corporation. We invented a new character [Lane Smith as Nathan Bates] and we said, off camera, he was the chemical genius that invented the poison that killed the aliens [the red dust used in the second mini-series]. He was like a Howard Hughes kind of character. We had him kidnap her because he wanted her to help his scientists understand the spaceships so he could make money selling the technology. Finally, she escapes and brings back the aliens.

"Someone at the network said, 'I don't understand why you have this whole complicated thing where he gets her and fakes her death, kills her like Lee Harvey Oswald, and she has her own plans and then she escapes. You go through all that stuff to have her escape. But she can escape in one second. You can save thousands of dollars in filming.'" The executive suggested that Diana use alien powers to free herself. "I said, 'Well, how does she do that?' He said, 'Because, she's an alien, she has hypnotic power.' But I said, 'We never established anything like that!' And this is a top network executive who just cannot understand that you just can't keep changing the rules every week!"

Some four years after the V series ended its run, it seemed as though another page would be added to its history. Intrigued with the idea of reviving V, Warner Bros. in late 1989 commissioned screenwriter 1. Michael Straczynski, of Capt. Power, TwilightZone and Babylon 5 fame, to write V.~ The Next Chapter to resolve the saga. The fourhour, two-part script, entitled "Rebirth," was an exercise in violent science fiction for television.

Straczynski's vision for the final fate of our band of freedom fighters begins with a complicated prelude: While peace is being declared on Earth, the Visitors violate the truce and massively attack the planet using 15 motherships. Elias (Michael Wright) is killed in battle, Willie (Robert Englund) is executed as a traitor, and Lydia (June Chadwick) disintegrates along with her mothership. Diana (Jane Badler) is reassigned elsewhere, while Julie Parrish (Faye Grant) flees the U.S. for Australia and disappears. Mike Donovan (Marc Singer) ends up as a prisoner of war on the Visitors' home planet. Many cities of the world get crushed into rubble in the process.

"Rebirth" takes place five years after Earth's surrender to the Visitors and deals with members of the Visitors' enemies, the Alliance, meeting with Earth's last rebel forces in a desperate bid to regain the planet. Straczynski takes what was meant as a false message, a red herring, in Johnson's original treatment, as a real event within the story. After an extensive feasibility study, Warner Bros. rejected Straczynski's script as being too expensive to produce.

Both Ken Johnson and Michael Ironside said that Warner Bros. wanted to bring back V as a feature film and NBC wanted it as another fourhour mini-series to complete a syndication pack "I've known that for years," scoffs Johnson. "They couldn't afford it then, they can't afford it now. Warner Bros. absolutely fumbled the ball." Ironside echoes Johnson's belief that Warner Bros. and NBC have different ideas for the next incarnation. "We hear about it once a year or so. I think Warner Bros. doesn't want to pay for it. It's like a million and a half a week, and NBC would like the four hours to be done so they can get their syndication into place. Warner Bros. is not interested in footing the bill for that, because they never make enough revenues off of it. They are more interested in the feature film concept. So maybe when they stop bickering over it, someday it'll get done.

"It's getting more and more expensive. You've got people like Robert Englund as Freddy Krueger. Myself, I've gone off and done things, so my salary is higher now." For now, the Visitors have Earth in their clutches. And if Straczynski's effort is any indication, it will be a long, difficult road before this mega-series comes alive once again and humans regroup their forces to destroy the lizards.

CAST NOTES

Marc Singer (Mike Donovan): Born in 1948 in Vancouver, Canada, he first came to attention in a leading role in The Taming of the Shrew for PBS. His features include Go Tell the Spartans (1978) and If You Can See What I Hear (1982), and he starred in two Beastmaster films (1982 and 1992). He also has been busy with films for video like Silhouette with Tracy Scoggins and Watchers 11The Outsiders (1989), and with television appearances like Twilight Zone, The Hitchhiker, Simon and Simon and Highlander-The Series.

Faye Grant (Julie): Born in Detroit, Michigan, Grant started out in Greatest American Hero as one of the high school kids. She became very proficient in commercials and guest roles. Michael Ironside (Ham Tyler): Born 1949. Excels as villains, including the nasty assassin in Total Recall (1990) and Highlander II: The Quickening (1991). But he also co-produced small films like Chainedance (1991).

Jane Badler (Diana): First came to attention on the daytime soaps One Life to Live and The Doctors. Later appeared on The Highwayman (1988) with Sam Jones.

June Chadwick (Lydia): This English-born actress has starred in feature films like This Is Spinal Tap (1984) and Forbidden World (1982) and costarred in the TV movie Sparkling Cyanide (1983). Later, she had a recurring role in Stephen J. Cannell's Riptide (1986).

Lane Smith (Nathan Bates): Born 1935. Smith's features include Rooster Cogburn (1969), Network (1976), Prince of the City (1981) and Frances (1982). Television credits include Something About Amelia (1984) and Special Bulletin (1983). He's also appeared in Chiefs (1983) and Kay O'Brien (1986). Most recently, he landed the role of editor Perry White on Lois and Clark: The Adventures of Superman (1993).

Robert Englund (Willie): Born 1947. Became famous as Freddy Krueger in Nightmare on Elm Street horror feature series. Later the character moved into television under the title Freddy's Nightmares (1989-90).

Blair Tefkin (Robin): Has appeared in Fast Times at Ridgemont High (1982) and Johnny Dangerously (1984) and guest-starred in series such as Quincy, Shirley and Marcus Welby, M.D. Michael Wright (Elias): Was named best actor at the Venice Film Festival for his performance in Streamers (1983). By answering a newspaper ad, he was cast in the feature film The Wanderers (1979), which led to his role in V.

Jennifer Cooke (Elizabeth): Portrayed the demure young Morgan Nelson on the daytime drama The Guiding Light for two years. She's a veteran of more than 200 commercials.

Jeff Yagher (Kyle): Was a first-year graduate student on a scholarship at Yale Drama School where he won the role of Kyle. He starred in the Oscar-winning The Refugee (1984). He returned to the science fiction genre in The Bionic Showdown (1989), the second reunion tele-film with the six million dollar man and the bionic woman.

Two popular miniseries became a weekly series. "V" abbreviates "Visitors" -- the aliens who offered to barter their high technology for terrestrial minerals. Or so their PR firm said. A handful of sceptics uncovered the malignant nature of the Visitors as the aliens systematically took over the earth and liquidated almost all resistance. Beneath their humanoid features, they were really carnivorous lizards, who considered humans little more than walking sushi.

The good guys drive off the baddies with a bacterial red dust, reminiscent of the germs that defeated H.G. Wells' Martians. The weekly series started with a Nuremberg-like trial of the captured Visitor leader Diana -- many parallels between Visitors and Nazis recur throughout the series. Diana escapes and conquers earth again, thanks to the Visitors collaborators - umm, I mean Scientific Frontiers Corp. which manufactures the red dust, and is led by immoral Nathan Bates.

TV anchor Mike Donovan - who had broken the story on the Visitors' evil nature - leads the resistance, with the help of scientist Julie, plus Elias and Ham. Their headquarters was the Club Creole. They were aided by a turncoat Visitor Willie, and a woman named Robin who had an affair with an alien and given birth to a semi-alien baby, a preposterously absurd idea to anyone who has a clue about evolutionary biology. The impossible halfbreed ages rapidly to become Elizabeth, the key to the Visitors' destruction, along with Nathan Bates' son Kyle, and a visitor faction leader named Lydia.

Charles, Lt. James and Martin were Visitor officers sympathetic to the humans - you know, nice Nazis. Peace between humans and Visitors is somehow achieved on Earth, while Elizabeth and an infatuated Kyle head for the Visitors' home world, to foment what, we never find out. Willie "goes native" and decides to stay on Earth

Kenneth Johnson's track record included The Incredible Hulk and The Bionic Woman, so it was surprising that "V" started as well as it did. He based the story on Sinclair Lewis's It Can't Happen Here (1935), about a fascist take-over in the USA, but substituted alien invaders - at first seemingly friendly, but actually after our water, and ourselves for food - for the fascists. The carnivorous, saurian invaders, as in the tv series The Invaders (1967-8) and many films, are disguised to look just like us, but with jackboots. A resistance movement grows, whose "V" (for "Victory") is daubed on walls everywhere, but many humans become collaborators; SCIENTISTS become objects of persecution (the comparison being with Jews under the Nazis); some aliens are worse than others.

The first half of the initial mini-series was quite good, but afterwards the series became an object lesson in US tv's remorseless appetite for Cliché - especially in its programmes for younger viewers - and its reduction of all controversial issues to moral stereotypes: the latter half of this miniseries lost direction; the second miniseries was absurd; and the series was infantile hackwork and cancelled before the story was completed. The two mini-series were expensive and - especially the first - had quite spectacular sets and special effects.

V, the saga of alien visitors to the Earth started off as a big budget mini-series which became the most watched science fiction programme of all time. Its huge popularity demanded a sequel, besides the original mini-series ended before everything was resolved. The sequel tied up almost all the loose ends and was also very successful. Its success prompted a one hour weekly 'V' series which ended up lasting one season.

In the first mini-series, the Visitors arrived here in a fleet of starships which appeared over all of the major cities of the world. Outwardly appearing as humans, they identified themselves as aliens from a distant world who came to the Earth to help our society solve its problems with their advanced technology. All that was asked for in exchange for this help was some needed minerals. V, the mini series, was a patently obvious allusion to the Nazi take over of Germany. The Visitors were welcomed by mankind with open arms, however they soon started doing things which gave hints of their true intentions. They began to round up scientists and place them in concentration camps, they began to slowly take-over the media and they also formed a Visitor Youth Corps which functioned much like the Hitler Youth of Nazi Germany.

Not everyone was fooled by the Visitors, a small group of people led by TV journalist Mike Donovan and scientist Julie Parish soon begin to resist the Visitors. Donovan manages to sneak on board one of the Visitors starships and discovers that they are not human at all but rather reptiles who eat their food live! He also discovers that they have come to Earth to drain the world of its water and collect as many people as possible to be used as food.

In the second mini series the resistance movement grows. Its members included both humans. such as mercenary Ham Tyler, who realised the truth and aliens, such as pacifist Willie, who did not approve of the plan to conquer the world. By studying Elizabeth, a young girl whose mother was a human. Robin Maxwell, and her father an alien. a 'Red Dust' was developed which was lethal to the aliens and harmless to humans. The Red Dust was spread across the globe and the aliens were driven away.

When V returned as a weekly series much of the epic proportions of the mini series were done away with, Diana, the leader of the aliens, manages to escape from custody before she can be placed on trial for her crimes against mankind.

The Visitors returned to Earth and began to fight mankind, although for some reason their advanced technology was unable to do us in early on. Most of the fighting occurs in small skirmishes, everywhere except in Los Angeles. In Los Angeles business tycoon Nathan Bates has managed to set up a truce zone where no one is allowed to fight. He did this in the hopes that some type of lasting peace could be made and also because his company. Science Frontiers, was in possession of captured alien technology which he needed help in understanding. This policy is for the most part observed by both sides of the battle and our heroes from the mini series were forced to operate underground, from a base hidden in the Club Creole, in their efforts to defeat the aliens for good. After a dozen episodes the series underwent a change in format. Many of the regular cast members were killed off, including Nathan Bates. This put an end to his open city policy and caused the hostilities to resume full scale.

The series also had many soap opera type subplots which slowly developed through the course of the series. These included several love affairs, including one between Mike Donovan and Julie Parish as well as one between Diana and Charles, a Visitor leader who came to Earth to force her to marry him. Diana also was always at odds with Lydia, the Visitor officer in charge of the military.

The series ended on a cliff-hanger with the Visitor leader arriving on Earth to negotiate a lasting peace. This news is generally well received, however there are those on both sides who do not like it. Diana sets out to kill the leader. Kyle Bates is also not to pleased since the Leader has also announced that he has come to Earth to take the woman he loves. Elizabeth (whom has quickly matured into a beautiful young woman), as his bride.

The executive producers for the TV series version of V were Daniel H. Blatt and Robert Singer. Producers for the series were Steven E. de Souza, Dean O'Brien, Garner Simmons, David Latt, Skip Ward, Don Boyle, Ralph R. Riskin. The music was created by Leo Lotito. The series premiered in the UK between the 3rd June and 23rd September 1985, this included two episodes which were shown back to back on the same day, these broadcast dates where for the Thames Television region.

In spite of the failure of Galactica, executives decided to give a science fiction series another try-but only after two highly rated miniseries. V, a series with a devoted following to this day, began as a creation of Kenneth Johnson when it premiered as a miniseries in 1983. The following year a second miniseries aired, and V turned into a full-fledged series. The initial concept was to tell a story similar to that of the Holocaust in a science-fictional setting, with all of humanity finally faced with the sort of deadly violence it has spent millennia inflicting on itself.

In time the focus shifted to a more action-oriented concept, floundering on the same problem that assaults so many original television series: the story cannot be fully told because the story idea is the premise on which the series is based; resolve the story in a dramatically satisfying fashion, and the raison d'etre for the series is gone. And so V: The Series kept dropping back to square one. However, it did this with a certain aplomb which makes it, even now, quite worthy of our attention. V, the four-hour miniseries, introduced us to the Visitors. These benevolent aliens appeared with smiling faces and words of friendship and pro-ceeded to dupe the masses of Earth into viewing them as the saviors of mankind. But some humans- notably television journalist Mike Donovan (Marc Singer)-suspect that the aliens are, in a sinister fashion, what Gilbert and Sullivan described as "skimmed milk masquerading as cream." To make matters worse, the seemingly human aliens are actually lizard people with a taste for human flesh! This is discovered by Donovan when he sneaks aboard one of the Visitors' ships and witnesses the revelation of the beautiful Diana's real aspect and observes her partaking of a gruesome between-meal snack.

An underground movement develops-Donovan is joined by Julie Parrish (Faye Grant)-and the miniseries ends with resistance building, but with the Visitors still firmly in power. The original mini-series was the brainchild of Kenneth Johnson, a veteran of The Incredible Hulk series; Johnson wrote, produced, and directed the entire thing.

After a year off the air, V returned to television with the even more ambitious V: The Final Battle. Kenneth Johnson had departed the project and new creative people were involved. While trying to keep the bud-get in line (the first V was reportedly the most expensive TV movie ever made because it went so far over budget), The Final Battle still came out to a whopping 2.3 million dollars an hour for the six-hour wrap-up.

The story picks up with the Resistance pressing its attacks against the aliens while working on a secret project designed to drive the invaders off the planet. A young girl who had been seduced by one of the Visitors gives birth to twins, one a half-human girl and the other a completely alien form that dies after birth. But the girl child, Elizabeth, begins to mature rapidly, attaining the stature of a ten-year-old within weeks. She also seems to have strange abilities that are not common to either human or Visitor.

New members join the Resistance, most notably Ham Tyler (Michael Ironside), a former mercenary now devoted to crushing the aliens. He and Mike Donovan share a past and are friendly enemies. Tyler thinks Donovan is too clean-cut to be a good fighter and Donovan feels that Tyler is too cold-hearted and merciless.

Robin Maxwell learns that the alien who seduced her and fathered her "children" has been captured. She slips in and finds him contained in a huge cylinder. She takes the red dust, just developed as a weapon against the aliens, and exposes him to it. He dies screaming before any of the others can stop it. Thus Robin exacts her revenge and the Resistance learns that the weapon is effective. Donovan's son had been captured by the Visitors and he wants to stage a rescue before an all-out assault on the Visitors takes place. He succeeds in rescuing him and all across the Earth the forces of rebellion attack. With the help of Fifth Columnists such as Martin-these are sort of alien conscientious objectors who do not support the aggressive and murderous acts of their people-even the vast armada of motherships is infiltrated. (Another friendly Visitor, Willie, was portrayed by Robert Englund-better known as the man behind Freddy Krueger.

The aliens are driven off as the dust is released across the world, making the air unsafe for the reptil-ian aliens, and V: The Final Battle ends on a tri-umphant note. The series opens just after the invasion has been repulsed, with "The Pursuit of Diana." Donovan spots Diana's attack shuttle and chases her down, forcing her ship to crash. He lands nearby and runs her to the ground, engaging in a vicious struggle with her. She is subdued, apparently through the intervention of some hunters.

Peace ensues, for a time. Donovan goes back to his television work with his alien friend Martin. Julie Parrish goes to work for Nathan Bates's Science Frontiers, the company responsible for dis-covering the secrets of the captured mothership. Robin Maxwell takes up residence at a secluded ranch with her father and her Visitor-sired daughter. And a new restaurant, the Club Creole, is opened by Willie.

One year after her capture, Diana is scheduled to go on trial for crimes against humanity. But Nathan Bates, whose Science Frontiers has been entrusted with the captured Visitor mothership, needs the knowledge that someone of Diana's position must have. He cannot pierce the most important secret of the Visitors. Bates hires Ham Taylor, now head of a private security firm, to fake Diana's assassination and kidnap her for him. Tyler agrees with the stipu-lation that he be allowed to kill Diana after Bates gains the information that he needs. In a secluded shack, Bates holds Diana in a protective bubble, knowing well that she will not attempt to flee since the red dust in the atmosphere would prove fatal to her.

Donovan and Martin manage to figure out what has happened and they track Bates to Diana's prison. Martin has the pills, supplied to alien friends of the Resistance, that offer temporary protection from the red dust. He stays behind while Donovan goes for help. But Martin so wants to kill Diana that he bursts in on his own rather than awaiting Donovan's return. In the ensuing struggle, Martin is injured and Diana steals his last pill. She escapes and Donovan returns only to find Diana gone and Martin dying. He vows revenge and pursues the lizard queen. Meeting up with Tyler, who is also tracking Diana, Donovan finds her just as she is being rescued by one of her shuttles. Shooting at her proves useless: she sheds bullets off of her thick hide. Diana escapes and the two humans know that only the worst can follow as the Visitor fleet has remained hidden and is waiting on the far side of the moon.

In "The Visitors Strike Back," it becomes clear that neither Diana nor her lizard rescuers have fallen victim to the red dust. It seems that warm climates render the dust inert after a time, leaving Los Angeles vulnerable. But the attack by the Visitors against Los Angeles proves that the dust does still work, although more slowly. After a time even this fails to happen. Nathan Bates takes it upon himself to strike a truce with Diana, declaring Los Angeles an open city. His primary incentive: a device that will unleash still-potent quantities of the red dust if Diana does not agree to his proposed truce. Diana, already getting flak from her ambitious subordinate Lydia and unwanted attention from her superiors, reluctantly agrees. At the signing ceremony, Ham Tyler attempts to assassinate both Diana and Bates but fails.

Tyler finally joins the Resistance and aids them in stealing the mothership. They take off to destroy a superweapon being brought into the solar system to end all earthly opposition. Before they pull this off, Elizabeth gives them a bad turn when she wanders off into a cave full of rattlesnakes and forms a cocoon, undergoing transformation. When she emerges, she appears to be about nineteen years of age. While her grandfather, Robert Maxwell, is there to witness this event, Robin Maxwell is in the back-country dodging Visitor patrols.

When the mothership is stolen to combat the space platform weapon, Robert Maxwell is mortally wounded. He makes the others flee the ship while he stays behind and pilots it head-on into the space platform, destroying the superweapon and the mothership as well. Diana is most displeased. Meanwhile, Willie the friendly Visitor spots a mark on Elizabeth's hand which he proclaims to be the Mark of Zon, a sign of a prophecy that claims that a child born of both worlds shall someday unite Visitors and humans in peaceful coexistence.

In "The Deception," Kyle Bates, the son of Nathan Bates, enters the picture and falls in love with the shy stargirl Elizabeth. This leads him to become involved with the Resistance. Meanwhile, Diana schemes to capture Donovan, and, by means of holo-graphic trickery, she masquerades as Julie and leads Donovan to believe that the war ended more than a year ago. But a mistake a newspaper picture of Elizabeth still as a child shatters this carefully constructed reality. Donovan escapes, thwarting Diana's plan to abduct Elizabeth. The underground's television broadcasts start to feature real-life anchorman Howard K. Smith.

In "Klaus-the Exterminator," Ham Tyler shows Mike Donovan a video of the Visitors' Youth Corps training centre, where Sean Donovan, Mike's son, is being brainwashed to be a soldier to fight against humans. As might be expected, the elder Donovan sneaks into the camp and must face down the assassin Klaus (Thomas Callaway), who has been training the young human abductees. Donovan defeats Klaus but cannot rescue his son. Meanwhile, Robin and Elizabeth both develop an interest in Kyle, while Nathan assigns his right-hand man, Mr. Chiang (Aki Aleong), to keep an eye on Kyle, who obviously sympathizes with the Resistance.

Visitor-disguised technology takes a great step forward in the person of Commander Mary Kruger-who looks exactly like Sybil Danning in a tigerskin bathing suit. Mary appears in "Visitor's Choice," which focuses on the Resistance's efforts to destroy the Encapsulator, a new device that will radically increase the conversion of humans into food products for the Visitors! Of course the device is destroyed, but not before Julie almost falls prey to it; a good number of Visitor big shots also go up with the device, including- alas- Ms. Danning. On the domestic side, Nathan Bates has Mr. Chiang punish Kyle after the lad is found stealing explosives, but Elizabeth effects his rescue with her powers.

In "Showdown in Rawlinsville," we get a glimpse into Visitor culture when Diana finds one of her ship's doctors engaging in the pacifistic religion of Zon (the mark of whom apparently appears on Elizabeth's hand, as noted in "The Visitors Strike Back"). This, unfortunately, rates the death penalty, being the Visitor equivalent of Christianity under Nero, and the Zon worshiper is killed in a nasty fashion. Donovan and Tyler attempt to undo the hold of a collaborator who is using forced labor to provide the Visitors with cobalt, an undertaking complicated by an unexpected betrayal.

The title "Force Field of Doom" pretty much sums it all up; it's a new weapon unleashed by Diana, which could seal off all of Los Angeles. Tyler and Donovan sneak on board the mothership again, this time to abduct the Visitor who invented the device. He turns out to be another Zon-worshipping Visitor who recognizes Elizabeth's messianic nature and gives his life to undo his destructive creation. Meanwhile, Lydia attempts to inform Diana's superiors of her bungling, but Diana has Lydia's shuttle blown out of the sky.

V told the story of the Holocaust with new trappings. alien lizards standing in for cold-blooded Nazis and this time all of humanity as the target. In "The Christmas Miracle," Diana turns her attention once again to Elizabeth, especially when she learns that the child has undergone a meta-morphosis into a young woman. Unable to capture her, Diana is able to get a blood sample and clones her, but the clone turns out to be murderously violent. When the clone tracks down and confronts Elizabeth, it seems to relate to its twin but is slain by a Visitor before any real communication can begin. Or did it give its life to save Elizabeth? Meanwhile, Nathan Bates finally uncovers Julie's role as a Resistance agent, and although she escapes, she fears that Bates has discovered the hideout under Willie's restaurant. In fact, the hideout is blown up, but by the Resistance, who then return to the same hideout to rebuild once the elder Bates is convinced that it has been destroyed.

Lydia, Diana's second-in-command, returns unscathed in "The Conversion," bringing with her Charles (Duncan Regehr), an alien who is Diana's superior in rank. When Kyle Bates and Ham Tyler are captured, Charles brainwashes Tyler to kill Mike Donovan when he hears a certain phrase. Tyler is recaptured by the rebels and all is going according to Charles's plan. The rebels have captured Lydia and agree to an exchange of hostages. During the exchange, Nathan Bates speaks the trigger phrase but Elizabeth has sensed that there is something wrong with Ham. She causes a light to fall which deflects Ham's aim and he guns down Nathan Bates instead of Donovan. A firefight breaks out and the rebels escape, reluctantly dragging Kyle Bates along with them even though he wants to remain with his stricken father. Then the power struggle for the open city of Los Angeles begins.

In "Inquisition" we discover that Nathan Bates is not dead but in a coma. Mr. Chiang runs things in his stead, collaborating even more than Bates did, while a holographic image of the elder Bates remains the public face of power. Chiang has the Resistance outlawed and prisoners, including Robin, are taken hostage and scheduled for execution unless Donovan and Julie surrender themselves. They agree and the prisoners are freed in the exchange while Donovan and Julie escape under cover of an ambush. Robin falls under the spell of one of the freed hostages, a handsome young man named John (Bruce Davison) who is actually an alien agent trying to impregnate her to create another human/alien hybrid. In "Double-Cross!" a wounded Willie is saved by another good Visitor, a doctor (Richard Minchenberg), who tells him that Diana is stockpiling weapons in a hospital-weapons slated for use in a massive offensive against Los Angeles. During a commando raid on the hospital, John's identity is revealed, and he is bumped off by the helpful Visitor physician.

Kyle infiltrates the complex where his father is recovering and learns that although Nathan Bates is conscious, he is not responsible for ordering the reprisals against the Resistance. While trying to free his father, Kyle is discovered by Chiang. Chiang attempts to shoot Kyle but Nathan sacrifices himself and blocks the shot. Kyle escapes, vowing revenge. Kyle sneaks back later and surprises Chiang in his office. During the ensuing battle, Chiang is shot and killed. Now the city is wide open for all takers.

After the fall of the puppet Chiang, a full-scale human/alien war erupts in Los Angeles in "The Marriage of Charles and Diana", with the aliens searching out and destroying every rebel stronghold they can find. They find the secret base beneath the Club Creole and blast it to shreds, forcing the rebels into retreat. Elizabeth uses her powers to bring the ceiling down and block the aliens who are pursuing them so that an escape can be made.

Meanwhile, the aliens are fighting among themselves. Charles decides to take Diana as his wife so that he can have her sent back to the home planet to bear children. Lydia is not wild about the idea and is very jealous. The wedding ceremony is held and during it Lydia poisons the ceremonial drink which she knows Diana will imbibe afterward. But Diana manages to get Charles to take the potion and he is poisoned. When Lydia discovers what has happened she becomes hysterical and Diana orders her arrest.

In "Trial by Combat," Mike Donovan and Kyle Bates are running weapons to Arizona to supply a Resistance group. They encounter a hostile sheriff in the San Bernardino area and escape him with the help of a woman rancher. They learn that the sheriff has been collaborating with the Visitors to supply them with livestock. Donovan stays behind to aid the rancher against the sheriff while Kyle finishes the run to Arizona and returns to Los Angeles by means of a different route. Donovan and the rancher enlist the aid of others in the valley and withhold the livestock the sheriff wants, thus putting him in bad with the aliens and destroying his power in the valley.

Meanwhile, Diana has judged Lydia guilty of the murder of Charles and orders her executed. But just as she is about to have the sentence carried out, the Leader's special investigator, Philip (Frank Ashmore), arrives and orders a halt. It will be his judgement as to sentence. He orders Lydia freed pending investigation. Philip, incidentally, looks exactly like the late Martin, being his twin brother. (Why his human disguise should look exactly the same is another matter entirely. According to Visitor law, Diana and Lydia both are suspects and Philip orders them to settle the matter in trial by combat. Lydia is doing quite well and is on the verge of killing Diana when Philip calls a halt to the battle. Investigation has revealed that there may be another suspect-another set of fingerprints is on the bottle of poison.

In Los Angeles, a diphtheria epidemic is raging and it is compounded by the ongoing street fighting against the Visitors. The drug needed to fight the epidemic is running low and the only supply is in Visitor hands. Donovan is out of town on a mission; Kyle and Willie enlist the aid of a group of teenagers who are hiding in the hills and harassing anyone who passes through their territory. The gang, called the Wildcats, reluctantly agrees to help, thus giving this episode, "The Wildcats," its title.

The raid proves successful but the captured drug proves to be phony. The Visitors knew the raid was coming and substituted baking powder for the drug. There appears to be a spy among the rebels. One of the Wildcats is an attractive young woman who takes a shine to Willie, especially after he manages to rescue her from a Visitor. When she proclaims her love for him, he haltingly explains that it cannot be and reveals that he is a Visitor. Horrified, she runs off into the dark of the woods where she falls over a cliff. With the help of Elizabeth, she is rescued, and she apologises for reacting to Willie's explanation in the manner that she did.

Julie catches one of the Wildcats communicating with the Visitors. It turns out that they have his younger brother and he is trading information for the boy's release. They tie the boy up and go to meet Donovan at an airstrip where he is bringing the drug needed to combat the epidemic. But the Visitors know where he's landing and plan to surprise him. The rebels and the Wildcats engage the Visitors in armed combat, gunfire pinning down each side. The Wildcat who has been exposed as a traitor escapes and makes one final valiant statement by crashing his car into the Visitor gun truck, blowing both up. Donovan bails out of his plane and lands safely with the drugs. Thus the epidemic is brought under control and the Visitors have lost one more minor skirmish.

Meanwhile, Lydia and Diana conspire to implicate the ship's pharmacist, Marta, as Charles's murderer, as her fingerprints were on the bottle. Trumping up the evidence, they get her convicted. Her sentence is to be imprisoned in Charles's sarcophagus when it is later ejected into space. Diana ensures that the woman is still alive and conscious when the coffin leaves the ship. When Diana convinces Philip that Donovan was responsible for his brother Martin's death, the alien leader decides to go after the rebel leader. Diana has an old nemesis of Philip's accompany him-with orders to kill him in the battle so that it will appear that Philip and Donovan slew one another. Lydia agrees with this plan. As this unfolds in "The Littlest Dragon," two aliens sympathetic to the Resistance flee from the mothership with power crystals vital to operations of the laser weapons. Diana and Lydia decide to follow them straight to the Resistance.
