Although well-endowed bad girls appear in most episodes, special mention deservedly goes to the Mayor's total airhead secretary Babette, played delightfully throughout the series by Shae Marks, who essays giggles and jiggles aplenty in a perfect picture of uber-bimbo confusion. Menaced by a villain's car, the limo-driving Mayor hands Babette his phone with the urgent instruction to "Dial 911!" As the pursuing vehicle closes in for a collision, witless and distressed Babs fumbles with her boss' mobile, obviously uncertain of anything - including (very probably) her correct bra size - and she chirps anxiously, "Oooh... what's the number?" Marks' comic timing is something of a wonder to behold; her delivery of such throwaway lines is frequently brilliant, and absolutely hilarious. As one of the most likeable supporting characters in Black Scorpion, she wins viewers' sympathy with her simple, fun-loving attitude.

By now, the series' overall themes of social responsibility and environmental awareness are clear. There's a serious message lurking beneath all the silliness and thrills (there's even a lone vigilante called 'Sanitation Psycho!'). Life's A Gas has a villainess called Dr Ariel Haze, alias Pollutia (Julie McCullough), while the following episode borrows from Corman's own Little Shop Of Horrors, and boasts a "fiendish florist" named Greenthumb (David Landers). It seems like every scientist in this fantasy milieu is destined to become a crazily costumed supervillain of one sort or another. Steve and Darcy confront their old flames and bitter enemies in Fire And Brimstone, when dangerously vain beauty Minerva Stone, alias Medusa (Lisa Boyle), and hunky ex-fireman Adam Burns, alias Inferno (Brent Huff), combine their powers with an artificial volcano and plan to destroy the city. Again. Will they never learn? They can't get away with doing evil while Black Scorpion's around.

"Attention all units. Black Scorpion has been spotted... Approach with caution." - police dispatcher

Virtual Vice (with its cameo by Lou Ferrigno) is a firm favourite with B-movie fans as it guest stars Lana Clarkson (Barbarian Queen), as Dr Sarah Bellum (ha-ha!), a disgruntled computer specialist doomed to become the blonde VR-vixen, Mindbender. Next, we shift from games to sport when a paralysed ice-hockey star (Greg Keane) becomes vengeful cyborg Slapshot to settle the score with the jealous former teammates appearance by Soupy Sales as the whacky weatherman, Sonny Dey.

BLADE

Krista Starr returns home from military service in Iraq to learn of her brother Zack's death. Zack was, unbeknownst to his family, a vampire "familiar" - someone who does the bidding of vampires during the daytime with the hopes of one day being turned themselves. Krista infiltrates the world of the undead to avenge Zack's death but is captured by Marcus Van Sciver, a high ranking vampire in the House of Chthon who turns Krista into a vampire. Van Sciver's acolyte and henchwoman, Chase, is jealous of the attention given to Krista and seeks to undermine her. Krista is also recruited by Blade, a half-vampire Daywalker to help him in his quest to destroy the House of Chthon and all the vampires in it.

Based on the successful comic book and movie franchise Blade.

The series apparently takes place following the events of Blade: Trinity since certain events in the film were mentioned in the pilot episode. Hannibal King, who will not be played by Ryan Reynolds, is said to be returning, as well as Dr. Karen Jenson from the first film.[1] At the end of Trinity, Blade used the Daystar, a biological weapon that targets and kills vampires specifically. Apparently the Daystar has not spread far or fast, as there are still many vampire houses in operation.

"Happily, Goyer's touch can be seen all over the pilot, which he co-wrote. Boasting more wit, polish and attention to detail than generally found in the genre, Blade: The Series rivals The Invisible Man (2000, Sci Fi) and Witchblade (2000, TNT) as among the most promising sci-fi debuts in recent memory." -- Sun Sentinel

"...pretty good, really, as these things go. It's not as pop-culturally knowing as Buffy, which some might account a good thing, but the action is active and the suspense fairly suspenseful. (There's a little too much slo-mo for my taste, but that is just the price of watching an action show in 2006.)" -- The Los Angeles Times

"In its two-hour launch, Blade shows itself to be less driven by plot than a series of violent, revenge-driven, oft-graphic confrontations. We can expect 11 more weeks of the same, no doubt, which is just dandy for comic book vampire fans and must-flee TV for the rest of us." -- The Hollywood Reporter

"If you consider yourself a fan of the movies, I believe that you'll be a fan of the series. It's a good way to get lost in a familiar world for the evening. Besides, the girls are really hot."

Nitpicks

Set in Detroit, Michigan, the pilot episode includes major inaccuracies about that city: Detroit was established in 1701, which is the early 18th century rather than the late 18th century, as Marcus claims. There is, however, a Joe Louis Arena, and a suburban city called Pontiac.

Trivia

Blade: The Series was the second TV show to premiere on iTunes before mainstream television. The now defunct Law & Order spin-off Conviction also premiered on iTunes before its television premiere. In the pilot, after hearing about vampires but before she finds out they're real, Krista sarcastically asks if werewolves are real too and is told werewolves are "my colleague, Marc Spector's realm of expertise." Spector is the alter ego of the Marvel hero Moon Knight, who first appeared in Werewolf by Night. Marcus Van Sciver's last name is an homage to comic book artist Ethan Van Sciver who worked with series writer Geoff Johns. Wesley Snipes was offered the chance to reprise his role as Blade but declined. Several references to both the comics and the films were included in the series. The characters Steppin Razor and Damek are based on characters from the comics, and Dracula is frequently referenced throughout the series.

Series chronology

The series apparently takes place after Blade: Trinity since certain events in that film were mentioned in the pilot episode. At the end of Trinity, Blade used the Daystar, a biological weapon that targets and kills vampires specifically. Apparently the Daystar has not spread far or fast, as there are still many vampire houses in operation.

About the vampires in Blade

The vampires in both the Blade movies and TV series are different from the vampires featured in the Marvel Comics on which the show and movies are based. In the Blade universe, they have far fewer weaknesses. The vampires are highly sensitive to garlic, silver, and sunlight/UV radiation. A Blade vampire can be killed by a stake to the head or heart, exposure to sunlight or a UV lamp, beheading, or garlic poisoning. Holy water, crosses, or other religious symbols have no effect on them. Silver causes the vampires to burn, but it's total effect has been contradicted in the series. Nonetheless, silver is Blade's weapon of choice, and all of his knives, swords, etc are silver or silver plate. When killed, the vampire instantly combusts at a high temperature, leaving a pile of ash and embers behind.

Vampirism in the movies and series is based on a virus, not black magic. In the series, there are two types of vampires: "purebloods" (those born vampires), and "turnbloods" (humans who were infected with the virus). When a vampire in the Blade universe bites a victim, they must drain them completely of blood or that person will become infected. People who are bitten and turned were shown in the movies to be able to be cured by a retrovirus invented by Dr. Karen Jensen. In the series, this cure has not been mentioned. Krista Starr was infected and THEN killed, leaving speculation as to whether she could be cured or not since she was actually killed by a fall and not by the virus. It has also been shown in the series that if a human is killed first, they cannot be turned by a bite. Pureblood vampires are assumed to be descendants of the first vampire, known as Drake (a reference to Dracula). Drake was "born perfect", and was immune to all vampire weaknesses except for a virus known as "Daystar", which was created by the Nightstalkers to destroy all vampires on Earth. It has not been revealed in the movies or series just how a pureblood reproduces, since vampires supposedly lose the ability to produce offspring when turned.

Vampires in the Blade universe possess several unique abilities. They have heightened senses, including being able to hear in different audio ranges than normal humans, being able to see in different light spectrums (including UV), and enhanced senses of touch and smell. They are notably stronger than their human forms, being able to lift many times their own weight and also absorb a lot more physical damage than a regular human. Some vampires have been shown to be able to climb walls and ceilings like spiders, jump large distances, and shrug off gunshots and other wounds. Blade vampires can regenerate from any injury that does not ash them. The regeneration process is affected by how much blood the vampire intakes - more blood means a quicker healing time. Severely injured vampires enter a state called "torpor", where they appear dead but are actually in a coma like state while the body regenerates. The vampire Quinn went into torpor when he was badly burned by Blade in the first movie. Vampire familiars are especially eager to be turned because the vampire virus appears to cure most any ailment or sickness. Vampires appear to be immune from diseases and infections that afflict humans.

Blade vampires must intake blood to survive, though the actual amount they need to feed on hasn't been stated. It is known that Blade takes his serum twice a day to keep his thirst under control.

The series is set in the far future. Earth and its many colonies are ruled by the Federation (unlike the Federation in Star Trek, in Blakes' 7 the Federation are the bad guys). The Federation is able to maintain control of the populace through brute force, fear and mind control drugs. The sporadic bits of rebellion which do occur are dealt with quickly and unmercifully. Roj Blake was once a freedom fighter leader who through the use of drugs and mind control was made to recant his rebel ways and become a model citizen.

The mind control begins to wear off and Blake is sent to a prison world on trumped-up charges of child molestation. En route to the prison world, the prison barge encounters a drifting alien spaceship. The ship is more advanced than anything the Federation has. When several guards who are sent over to the ship are turned into mindless vegetables. Blake volunteers to lead a group of prisoners to take the ship. He is able to survive a mental attack made by the ship's computer, due to influence of the Federation's mind control device. He is able to save his fellow prisoners from the computer and take control of the ship. After recruiting several of the other prisoners in his quest. Blake christens the ship the Liberator and vows to fight the Federation.

In addition to Blake the original seven in Blakes 7 consisted of: Kerr Avon, a cynical computer expert who had been sent to prison for computer fraud. Avon was always looking out for himself and greed was his primary motivator, he followed Blake simply because he felt it suited his needs at the time. Vila Restal, a cowardly thief. Vila claimed that there was no lock he could not open if he were scared enough. Jenna Stannis, a smuggler and expert pilot, Gan, a gentle giant. Gan had been sent to prison after he killed a Federation storm trooper who had raped his girl friend. Gan had a device implanted in his head to prevent him from killing again.

Cally, a telepathic alien who was recruited into the group when they encountered her on one of their first raids. The final member of the group was Zen, the Liberator's master computer. In addition to having one of the most sophisticated computers ever built, the Liberator is faster than any ship the Federation has and also has a teleport system, something Federation has not yet devised.

At first the attacks made by Blake and his followers are nothing more than a nuisance to the Federation. However, as reports of their exploits travel to Supreme Commander Servalan, she decides to quash Blake and his followers before their exploits become legendary. She recruits Commander Travis to do away with Blake and gives seven with whatever resources he needs to do so. Travis is a psychopath and has an old grudge against Blake. Blake was responsible for blinding him in one eye.

What sets Blakes 7 above most other series is that it breaks many accepted conventions for television drama. The characters and situations they find themselves in are not always black and white. With the exception of Blake and Cally, the rest of the group are not really interested in fighting the Federation. They often are fighting amongst themselves as much as the Federation. During the second series, while searching for the Federation's master computer, one of the regular characters, Gan, is killed. At the start of the third series something almost unthinkable happened. Blakes 7 started the season with its title character missing in action, during a war with an alien invasion force. (Blake was not to be seen again until the very last episode).

Creator Terry Nation was also responsible for creating the Daleks in DOCTOR WHO and created THE SURVIVORS, he died in 1997. Terry Nation wrote the entire first series of "Blakes' 7", a similar act would be performed by J. Michael Straczynski creator of BABYLON 5 who wrote some of the seasons by himself. In 1998, the BBC broadcasted the first radio drama based on "Blakes' 7" called "The Sevenfold Crown", it starred some of the actors who starred in the show (Paul Darrow, Jacqueline Pearce, Michael Keating and Steven Pacey). The play was written by Barry Letts, an ex-producer of "Doctor Who". The producers for "B7" were David Moloney (season 1-3) and Vere Lorrimer (Season 4). The script editor was Chris Boucher and the music was by Dudley Simpson.

Following on from the "Sevenfold Crown", BBC Radio 4 produced a second radio play based on Blake's 7 entitled "The Syndeton Experiment", this 60 minute play was about a Dr. Rossom's mind-manipulation experiments. The race is on between the crew of Scorpio and Servalan to get his experiment, because if Servalan gets it then the control of the entire federation could be passed over to her. This Blake's 7 adventures was written by Barry Letts and starred many of the original crew including Paul Darrow, Michael Keating, Steven Pacey, Jacqueline Pearce and Peter Tuddenham. Also starring was Paula Wilcox as Soolin and Angela Bruce as Dayna.

Numerous guest stars included Brain Blessed in "Cygnus Alpha", Julian Glover in "Breakdown", Colin Baker in "City At The Edge Of The World" and Lynda Bellingham in "Head-hunter". The series was a massive success, instantly finding itself an audience of over 10 million, who watched the final episode. The show has developed a cult following, and is still loved by many people. Throughout its run B7 changed a lot, mainly due to Gareth Thomas who played Blake leaving, thus allowing the character of Avon to come more to the fore, and his relationship with Vila was one of the highlights of the show. What made "B7" such a success was the strong characterisation that the show enjoyed. The last episode of the series was interesting because the show killed off its lead characters, but some doubt still remains, as to if they were killed or just stunned. The line between good and evil in the show is not simply black and white, but a shade a grey, which made for some very interesting characters in the show. "B7" started the same night as "Star Wars" (1977) was premiered in the UK.

Long before the cliff-hanger season end become popular in the US, "B7" has mastered it, with the end of season 1, in which the Liberator is destined to be destroyed. At the end of the second series the Liberator crew had to fend of an alien invasion by themselves, in the third series the Liberator was destroyed, since the show was almost cancelled, whilst the fourth season ended with the a final shootout. A few of the episodes were novelised, however there is one original book called "Afterlife" which took place after the final shootout in "Blake" and featured Avon, Vila, Tarrant and Servalan.

The series -- whose title is given on-screen as Blakes Seven (sans apostrophe) -- began rather crudely with some hoary SF clichés (political rebels against the totalitarian Federation are sent to a prison planet) but picked up considerably in later episodes of the first season, where Blake and his allies take part in spirited Space-Opera adventures in a miraculous spaceship (later to be operated by an ill tempered computer called Orac) which they find conveniently abandoned in space. Although Free-spirited-rebels-vs-oppressive-empire is a theme straight from Star Wars, coincidentally, since the UK premiere of both was on the same day the feeling is very different. Blake's crew are quarrelsome, depressive, pessimistic and especially Avon cynical. Blake himself disappeared at the end of the second season, to reappear, apparently now on the wrong side, only at the very end.

After the first season BS degenerated into sub-DOCTOR WHO tackiness, with much popping off of ray-guns in extraterrestrial quarries and poaching of second-hand plots (The Picture of Dorian Gray, etc.). The fourth season wound up on a depressing note as the bulk of the somewhat-changed cast were killed off by the villains. Despite this falling off, the series was addictive, and notable for the sense of doomed helplessness with which the rebels managed to inflict mere pin-pricks on the seemingly indestructible Federation--no doubt a reflection of the times, and seemingly not too off-putting for the audience, for BS developed a large and passionate fan following, which it still retains.

Blakes 7 was the brainchild of Terry Nation, the man best known as the creator of Doctor Who's arch-adversaries the Daleks, Blakes 7 was a series about a band of freedom fighters, misfits and thieves who reluctantly band themselves together to fight off a totalitarian regime. Blakes 7 is most easily described as The Dirty Dozen in outer space.

New cast members were added as old ones left. New characters included: Orac, a super computer with a snobbish attitude and Del Tarrant, a former Federation officer who had turned mercenary. Tarrant was a bully and constantly at odds with Avon over control of the group once Blake left. Dayna Mellanby, daughter of a scientist who was killed by Servalan who now intends on avenging her father's death. Soolin was a gunfighter who joined the crew in the final series, At the same time the crew got a new ship. Scorpio, to replace the destroyed Liberator. Scorpio was a modified Federation ship run by an apologetic computer called Slave.

The beginning of the third season saw big changes in Blakes 7. The Federation's forces had been severely crippled in halting the alien invasion. Blake and Jenna were no longer on board the Liberator and Avon got what he always wanted, control of the Liberator. Stories in the third and fourth series frequently had greed as a motivating factor behind the 7's actions. During the fourth series, an increasingly paranoid Avon slowly began to realise that his best interests would be served if the Federation was overthrown. To further this goal he attempted to unite various anti-Federation factions while seeking out Blake to use as a figurehead, Actions which would ultimately lead to his demise.

Long before such things were made popular by prime time American soap operas or STAR TREK : THE NEXT GENERATION. Blakes 7 had perfected the year ending cliff-hanger, however for somewhat different reasons. Instead of being used to maintain audience suspense until the new episodes started, the Blakes 7 cliff-hangers were intended to allow the audience to believe their heroes had died if the series was not renewed. The first series ended with Orac predicting that the Liberator would soon be destroyed, then a quick cut to the ship's destruction. The second series ended with the Liberator and her crew single handedly fend off an alien invasion force, with help from the Federation hours away.

The third series ended with the Liberator destroyed and her crew stranded on an artificial planet. At this point a fourth series was considered unlikely and this was to be the end of our heroes. SPOILER ALERT- Do not read the rest of this paragraph if you do not want to know how Blakes 7 ended. The fourth and final series of the show ended with a Cliff-hanger that showed little hope of a happy resolution. While searching for Blake, the Scorpio is destroyed and her crew is left stranded on a frontier world. It turns out that Blake is really there and Avon becomes convinced that Blake has betrayed him. Avon shoots Blake dead. Federation storm troopers storm the room they are in and all of the Scorpio crew is shot down with the exception of Avon. Now alone and surrounded by Federation guards with their weapons trained at him. Avon raises his own weapon and smiles. Shots are heard over the end credits. A fifth series was never commissioned, saving someone a lot of trouble figuring a way out of a hopeless situation.

Blake's was an attempt to mount a serious space opera, to occupy the middle ground between the frolics of Doctor Who and the class of an Out of the Unknown. It might have been the start of a winning of a new creed of television science fiction-instead it became one of the last of a dying breed. The series was created by Terry Nation father of the Daleks and deviser of Survivors, who infused it with his own characteristically gloomy vision of the future.

The series rapidly built up a huge and devoted cult following and remains one of the most popular sci-fi series transmitted; its final episode was watched by more than 10 million viewers. Nation himself wrote the entire first season of scripts and six subsequent stories, but his heroic ideals began to shift toward the end of Season Two. As Blake started to feel the pinch of revolutionary zeal, so the other characters began to emerge more forcefully, particularly Avon and Vila, whose sniping relationship was a pivotal feature of the series. And as Blake disappeared by the start of the third season, it was Avon who assumed control.

Blake's 7s greatest strength-and its enduring appeal-lay in its characterisations. These are not stereotype heroes who win every time. They frequently lose and show an alarming tendency to get killed off, a trend that reached its climax in the last episode, when most of the surviving outlaws were shot down with indulgent, slow-motion savagery. Also, there's little sanctimonious moralising. The line between right and wrong is often shown as a thin one, and even the good guys are flawed-Blake becomes fanatical, Avon is paranoid and arrogant, Vila is spineless and Tarrant is conceited. In the face of such humanity the fans happily overlooked the low-budget limitations of the series-the shaky sets and recycled props. Blake's 7 started in Britain on the night Star Wars premiered in London. It was a good year for science fiction.

The script editor was Chris Boucher, producers for the series were David Maloney (Season One-Three) and Vere Lorrimer (Season Four). The music was created by Dudley Simpson. The various designers for the show were Martin Collins, Roger Murray-Leach, Robert Berk, Chris Pemsel, Peter Brachacki, Sally Hulke, Paul Allen, Mike Porter, Gerry Scott, Steve Brownsey, Gerry Scott, Ken Ledsham, Eric Walmsley, Ray London, Don Taylor, Paul Munting, Jan Spoczynski, Jim Clay, Riger Cann, Nigel Curzon, Graham Lough and Eric Walmsley. The visual effects designer was Ian Scoones and Mat Irvine, the video effects were A.J. Mitchell, the costume designer was Barbara Lane and Rupert Jarvis, the make-up designer was Marianne Ford and Eileen Mair.

Terry Nation created this British space adventure show. After a successful run in England, it exploded to cult status when it was imported to America in the mid 1980s. Despite the lowbudget special effects, the series found favor with fans because of its offbeat characters. The series presented Roj Blake and his mixed band of outlaws as they battled, in true Robin Hood style, a futuristic totalitarian Federation.

The cast included Gareth Thomas as Blake, with Paul Darrow, Sally Knyvette, Michael Keating and Jan Chappell. The Return of Captain Nemo. March 1978, CBS A three-segment mini-series from producer Irwin Allen, Captain Nemo tried to capitalize on Star Wars elements (robots and laser battles) to draw in the viewers. The story had Captain Nemo (Jose Ferrer) jolted from suspended animation by two Navy divers (Tom Hallick, Burr DeBenning) who discovered his sunken submarine, Nautilus. Nemo teamed up with the pair to defeat evil Professor Cunningham (Burgess Meredith) and continue his lifelong quest for Atlantis. Lynda Day George and Warren Stevens co-starred.

WR. Chris Boucher, Robert Holmes, Tanith Lee, Allan Prior, Roger Parks, Bill Lyons and Colin Davis.

DIR. Pennant Roberts, Vere Lorrimer, Michael E. Braint, Mary Ridge and Douglas Camfield.

CHILDREN OF THE STONES

1 - 1 THE WAY BACK

Roj Blake meets a resistance group and finds out about his lost past. But when he is captured again by the totalitarian Federation, they don't merely want to make him a martyr, they mean to thoroughly discredit him.

Wr Terry Nation

Dir Michael E. Bryant

1 - 2 SPACE FALL

The prison transport ship London is well on its way to Cygnus Alpha when it observes two mysterious space fleets fighting each other. While London's crew take evasive action, Blake and his convicts try to seize the ship, but fail. Next, London finds a gigantic mystery ship, drifting without a crew but in good order. Two men try to salvage the prize but die on board. London's officer orders Blake, Jenna and Avon to board the ship and report back. Blake masters the defense system operated by Zen, the ship's computer, and Jenna takes the controls. They call their new ship Liberator. In her, Blake, Avon and Jenna follow London to Cygnus Alpha, where they rescue Gan and Vila.

Wr Terry Nation

A powerful weapon has been stolen from the Federation's Weapons Development Centre. Blake is determined to get it - but he is falling right into Servalan's elaborate plan.

Wr Chris Boucher

Dir George Spenton-Foster

2 - 4 HORIZON

Seeking a break from the relentless fighting, Liberator's crew arrive at the distant planet Horizon. But the Federation is already there. And it's not clear whose side the ruler is on. All of the crew but Avon teleport down to the planet's surface and are captured by Federation guards. Avon, alone on Liberator, considers seizing the chance to take the ship - but he decides against it.

Wr Allan Prior

Dir Jonathan Wright-Miller

2 - 5 PRESSURE POINT

Liberator returns to Earth, where Blake plans to capture Federation Control and destroy its computer systems. He has offers of help from Kasabi's rebel group, but Kasabi is captured by the Federation. In a show-down with Travis and Servalan, the crew have to find their way through a mine-field. Servalan uses Veron, Kasabi's daughter, in a plan to capture Blake. Blake has the chance to kill Travis and Servalan, but can't do it.

Wr Terry Nation

2 - 6 TRIAL

Following Gan's death, Blake goes to a barren planet to reflect on things. Meanwhile, Servalan has wearied of Travis and arranges for him to be court-martialled.

Wr Chris Boucher

2 - 7 KILLER

In search of TP crystals, Liberator travels to Fosforon. But with an ancient exploration ship drifting nearby, on which Cally senses something malignant, the theft may be the least of the crew's problems.

Wr Robert Holmes

Dir Vere Lorrimer

2 - 8 HOSTAGE

Liberator is ambushed by a fleet of Federation ships, and Travis captures Blake's cousin. However, in an unexpected twist, Travis asks to join Blake's crew.

Wr Allan Prior

2 - 9 COUNTDOWN

Liberator heads for the planet Albion in search of information on the whereabouts of a Federation computer system called Star One. But a revolt is taking place and a deadly device is counting down the lives of four million people.

Wr Terry Nation

Dir Vere Lorrimer

2 - 10 VOICE FROM THE PAST

Blake, under the influence of a strange signal, takes his ship to an obscure asteroid in search of the anti-Federation Governor Le Grand and the legendary Shivar. Once there, he is offered the chance finally to overthrow the Federation. But all is not what it seems...

Wr Roger Parkes

2 - 11 GAMBIT

Still looking for the computer system Star One, Blake's crew travel to the gambler's paradise of Freedom City. They are after a man called Docholli, who is believed to know something about Star One.

Wr Robert Holmes

Dir George Spenton-Foster

2 - 12 THE KEEPER

In the hunt for Star One, the crew of Liberator search for a member of the royal family of Goth who has an amulet containing a brain print. But which one of the family do they need to find?

Wr Allan Prior

2 - 13 STAR ONE

Liberator finally arrives at Star One, only to find it is being taken over by Andromedans. While Blake is planning the destruction of Star One, Travis is plotting the destruction of the human race everywhere.

Wr Chris Boucher

3 - 1 AFTERMATH

Severely damaged in a battle of the Galactic War, Liberator disperses its crew while undergoing repairs. Avon lands on a neighbouring planet and is rescued by Dayna, the daughter of a former revolutionary, only to run into Servalan.

Wr Terry Nation

3 - 2 POWERPLAY

Avon and Dayna have returned to the Liberator, only to find it filled with Federation troops. And both Vila and Cally are in terrible danger.

Wr Terry Nation

3 - 3 VOLCANO

Liberator's crew search for a new home base on the volcanic planet Obsidian. Meanwhile, Servalan devises an elaborate scheme to take control of Liberator.

Wr Allan Prior

Dir Desmond McCarthy

3 - 4 DAWN OF THE GODS

Orac steers Liberator off course to investigate a black hole, before the ship lands on the artificial planet Crador.

Meanwhile, the Tharn telepathically reach out to Cally from her childhood stories, and Vila has a fainting fit.

Wr James Follett

Dir Desmond McCarthy

3 - 5 THE HARVEST OF KAIROS

Kairopan crystals harvested from the planet Kairos are taken on board Liberator after an attack on the Federation freighter transporting them, but this leads to a sometime underling of Servalan's trying to capture the ship.

On the heels of Tarrant, Servalan herself arrives on board Liberator for the first time ever - but things fail to go according to her plan.

Wr Ben Steed

Dir Gerald Blake

3 - 6 CITY AT THE EDGE OF THE WORLD

The crew strike a deal for crystals needed for Liberator's weapon systems. In exchange, Vila must help in obtaining a treasure on the planet Keezarn but in doing so he finds a gateway to another world.

Wr Chris Boucher

3 - 7 CHILDREN OF AURON

Servalan baits a trap for Liberator. She introduces a plague to the people of Auron, Cally's homeworld, and the crew travel there to fight the infection, apparently falling into the ambush set for them.

Meanwhile, Servalan is making clones in her own image - the only kind of offspring she feels she can hope to trust.

Wr Roger Parkes

Dir Andrew Morgan

3 - 8 RUMOURS OF DEATH

Avon wishes to hunt down the Federation inquisitor, Shrinker, who killed his former girlfriend, Anna Grant. He finds her alive, now working as an agent of the Federation.

Wr Chris Boucher

Dir Fiona Cumming

3 - 9 SARCOPHAGUS

Liberator finds another ship drifting in space, and when a landing party boards the ship Cally becomes ill. In fact, an alien spirit has possessed her, and it falls to Avon to break the spell.

Wr Tanith Lee

3 - 10 ULTRAWORLD

The crew go to the planet Ultraworld, only to discover it is a mental reprocessing plant. Vila saves the crew by telling riddles to Orac.

Wr Trevor Hoyle

3 - 11 MOLOCH

Tarrant is teleported into a spaceship bound for the invisible planet Sardos, which the crew of Liberator discover after nearly crashing into it. Servalan is interested in the matter replication technology developed by the inhabitants of the planet.

Wr Ben Steed

Dir Vere Lorrimer

3 - 12 DEATH-WATCH

Liberator visits the Teal and Vandor solar systems, at war with each other. One man from each system is chosen for a duel to the death - and Tarrant kills the fighter who killed his brother.

Wr Chris Boucher

3 - 13 TERMINAL

Avon secretly takes over the ship and flies it through a field containing enzymes which eat away at Liberator's hull. They reach the planetoid Terminal, where Avon believes Blake is now living.

The episode (and the third series) ends dramatically with the crew shipwrecked on a small, uninhabited planet and watching on screen as Liberator explodes in space.

Wr Terry Nation

4 - 1 RESCUE

Dorian, the seemingly youthful owner of the space-ship Scorpio, rescues the crew from Terminal. He says he wants Orac's help to build a teleport facility for Scorpio - but then he tries to kill the survivors from Terminal. In the fight, they kill Dorian and discover his secret.

Now the former Liberator crew has gained a new ship, Scorpio.

Wr Chris Boucher

4 - 2 POWER

Avon completes the Scorpio teleport system with the help of Orac. But Scorpio, rendered inaccessible by an elaborate security system, is stolen by a native of the planet who wants to escape from it.

Meanwhile, on the planet, the Seska and the Hommiks are in conflict, but most of the Seska (who are women) have been captured by the Hommiks (men), and they seem to like it. Avon is thrown together with Pella, one of the few remaining Seska, as both escape from the Hommiks.

Wr Ben Steed

4 - 3 TRAITOR

Tarrant and Dayna teleport down to the surface of the planet Helotrix. The planet is falling to attack from a new Federation pacification drug, as are many other star systems.

Meanwhile, Servalan, deposed of her presidency of the Federation, is back under the alias of Commissioner Sleer. She has wiped all records connecting herself with the identity of Servalan.

Wr Robert Holmes

Dir David Sullivan-Proudfoot

4 - 4 STAR DRIVE

For cover, Scorpio tries to match the course of an asteroid, but this results in a collision with the asteroid and bad damage to Scorpio's engines.

The crew search for an experimental stardrive developed by a former Federation designer now working for a terrorist group.

Wr Jim Follett

4 - 5 ANIMALS

Dayna meets an old friend, Justin, to seek help with synthesizing an antidote to the Federation pacification drug. Servalan learns of Scorpio's visit to Justin's planet and of the genetic research he is performing there.

Wr Allan Prior

4 - 6 HEADHUNTER

The crew rescue a protégé of Ensor's who turns out to be his android creation seeking to unite with Orac.

Wr Roger Parkes

4 - 7 ASSASSIN

Servalan hires an assassin to kill the crew by luring them to a trap set aboard the assassin's ship.

Wr Rod Beecham

Dir David Sullivan-Proudfoot

4 - 8 GAMES

The scientist Belkov has stripped a planet of a valuable crystalline substance and tries to double cross both Servalan and the Scorpio crew in an attempt to escape with the private stash he has collected.

Belkov has the help of a remarkable computer, which is a standard Federation computer with a pleasure planet gaming machine added to it.

Wr Bill Lyons

4 - 9 SAND

Servalan has heard about a remarkable substance called feldon which occurs on a remote planet. She sees that feldon could give her a military advantage, and she has sent a team to report.

The crew of Scorpio discover Servalan's expedition, and they also learn that those she sent out are all dead. They decide to investigate the planet for themselves - but so does Servalan.

Wr Tanith Lee

Dir Vivienne Cozens

4 - 10 GOLD

A shipment of atomically-converted gold is being transported from the planet Xeroc aboard a domestic passenger ship. But a plan to steal the gold turns into a major loss for the crew.

Wr Colin Davis

4 - 11 ORBIT

The scientist Egrorian offers Avon a powerful weapon, the Tachyon Funnel, in exchange for Orac. Servalan, who is behind the transfer, prepares a plan to double-cross Avon that would give her both the Tachyon Funnel and Orac.

Wr Robert Holmes

4 - 12 WARLORD

Avon negotiates with the leaders of three warring star systems, aiming to form an alliance to produce an anti-pacification drug.

Meanwhile, the Xenon base is sabotaged by explosives and a deadly virus. Tarrant falls in love with the daughter of the saboteur.

Wr Simon Masters

4 - 13 BLAKE

Orac traces Blake's trail to the planet Gauda Prime, and Avon and the crew travel there in search of him, leaving the destroyed Xenon base behind. As Scorpio approaches Gauda Prime it is attacked and crash lands on the planet's surface. The crew find Blake, but it seems as if he has sold out to the Federation, and Avon kills him. The rest of the crew are then caught by Federation guards in a hail of gunfire.

Avon stands over Blake's body with a gun in his hand, and with the guards all around him. He looks into camera, lifts his gun and smiles sadly. Gun fire is heard as the credits roll.

BLAZING ROBOCONAKA: MOERO! ROBOCONAKA: BURN! ROBOCON

Robocon is one of the first students of Robot School. He was made by Mr. Gantz, a teacher robot. He comes to the human world from different dimensional world for practice, and starts to freeload on the Kurihara Family.

In the human world, Robocon is supposed to put "become friendly with humans", the theme given to him by his school, into practice. And Teacher Gantz is to grade Robocon every week and gives him a heart-shaped seal when he gets full marks. And with 10 seals, Robocon does his best not in order to obtain the seals but to earn the respect of a cute little girl Robina whom he likes very much.

People of the Kurihara Family are troubled a great deal by Robocon because he not only breaks furniture in the house but also uses a lot of electricity as his fuel. In such surroundings, will softhearted Robocon really carry out his objective?

The series was produced by Masato Kojima, Masayuki Maruyama and Megumi Ueda, the original music was by Mr. Toshiki, the cinematography was by Masao Inokuma and the film editing was by Junyoshi Kanno. The special effects were created by Toei.

BLINDPASSASJER

The spaceship Marco Polo is returning from a mission at the newly discovered planet Rossum. While the five members of the crew are in deep sleep a mysterious shape is captured on one of the surveillance monitors. Awakened the crew soon discover that one of their number has been killed, and something is living among them in the shape of a crewmate. But who is it??

A starship in hyperspace is the ultimate "closed room". Beside of this, the old "whodunit" theme is turned on its head as the isolated crew races against time to identify - not the killer, but the victim! Hence the working title "Hvem av oss er den drepte?" (freely translated "Which of us is the victim?")

BLOBHEADS, THE

With one flush of a toilet, Billy Barnes's life changed forever. Billy Barnes' 14-year-old life has recently been complicated by the arrival of his baby brother Silas, who his parents sometimes treat as if he were the Emperor of the Universe. And now, the morphing, mess-making Zerek, Kerek and Derek have come from the Planet Blob and announced that Silas actually is the Most High Emperor of the Universe! Bubbling up out of the toilet bowl, The Blobheads appear and announce their intention to transport baby Silas across the universe to their planet. Obedient to The Great Computer's instructions, and to their leader Kerek's orders, they try to leave with Silas but because of Derek's incompetence they fail. Now, stuck on Earth until the next space-travel opportunity, the Blobs must learn to co-exist with Billy, a task both parties find taxing.

Bubbling up out of the toilet bowl, the Blobheads appear and announce their intention to transport baby Silas across the universe to their planet. Obedient to The Great Computer's instructions, and to their leader Kerek's orders, they try to leave with Silas but because of Derek's incompetence - they fail!

Now, stuck on Earth until the next space travel opportunity, the Blobs must learn to co-exist with Billy, a task both parties find taxing. The only thing hampering the Blobs' mission is the ever present threat of Evil Sandra.

The series features an extraordinary mix of CGI and live-action. The Blobheads are based on the book series by Paul Stewart and Chris Riddell.

Character Details:-

Billy Barnes

Billy isn't your average teenager. He's a little awkward and has never had an easy time fitting in at school. On top of all this he's got an aging rocker for a dad, a working mother, girl troubles, a brand new baby brother AND the arrival of aliens in his toilet! The Blobheads announce that Silas is THE Emperor of the Universe! Billy knows it's impossible, but the Blobs do seem to communicate with his baby brother. If things seemed complicates before, they're about to get even more hectic, now that The Blobheads have arrived!

Silas Barnes

Billy's very cute baby brother, or as he's also known "The High Emperor Of The Universe", or that's what the Blob's think! Silas is the reason The Blobs have come to visit Earth. Since being given the royal facts, Silas took on the role of Emperor seamlessly and loves to gurgle, giggle and grunt in his apparent communications with the Blobs. He garners constant attention from Zerek and Derek. He often releases gas to prove a point then giggles with glee in self-amusement, or has a royal diaper rash to contend with. Silas knows how to work the Blobs and he quite enjoys it!

Derek

Derek is the silliest, klutziest and most endearing of all The Blobs. The fact that he is head of security has nothing to do with his ability to secure anything other than on the lock on Billy's closet when he's eating his socks and belts. He got his job with the Emperor through relative connections. He has a sense of daring and like to take adventures in Billy's backpack. Derek is the only Blob that Billy considers a friend, even if he thinks that Billy's homework is most delicious!

Zerek

From the Planet Blob, Zerek is physically bigger than his travel companion Derek. Zerek is proud of his title as the Emperor's Primary Caregiver. He lives and breathes to attend to the Emperor's needs and his royal poopie diapers. He studied at Blob University and is the most astute of the Blobs and he is insuffereale. Zerek can be uptight, snooty, nosey and is often getting into Billy's business

While Billy is having trouble with his studies, the Blobs decide it is time for Silas' education to begin. And to Billy's dismay, they have chosen Ms Tyler as his tutor. Meanwhile, Simon struggles with writers block.

1 - 3 GARGLEJUICE

Everyone needs a cool image to be noticed. Simon experiments with rock-costumes, Melissa buys new shoes and Billy decides to get braces. But while at the dentist, the Blobs discover a supply of mouthwash; or as they call it, "Garglejuice".

1 - 4 ADVENTURES IN BLOBSITTING

With Billy's school dance and Kiki's realty meet n' greet on the same night, the Barns are desperate for a baby sitter. Billy has his heart set on asking Melissa to the dance, but before he can find the courage, she is chosen to baby sit. To make matters worse, the Blobs are convinced she is plotting to harm Silas.

1 - 5 CURE FOR THE UNCOMMON CODE

Billy finally earns himself a spot as an alternate on the school soccer team. Unfortunately his eagerness and excitement over his new 'athlete' status at school are overshadowed by a bad case of the flu. His Mom and his teacher Ms. Tyler order Billy home to bed. The Blob's are worried that Billy's sickness will infect Billy's little brother 'The Emperor'. In an effort to save The Emperor the Blobs invent an instant cure for the Flu, which miraculously cures Billy. However, Zerek isn't so lucky and ends up catching Billy's flu bug. Billy drinks Derek miracle cure before he can right down the ingredients and Zerek is stuck suffering with the Flu. Meanwhile in an effort to clear his musician's block Billy's dad sells his beloved guitar Betty. When he finally realizes that his musician's block had nothing to with the guitar it's too late, or is it?

1 - 6 A NEW HOUSE IS NOT A NEW HOME

With two adults, a teenager, a baby, two Blobs and a hologram, it's time for the Barns to get a bigger house. Simon even gets a job to help pay for the move. But Billy and the Blobs are against the idea and must find a way to stop it. Meanwhile, Melissa is angry at Billy for having "imaginary friends".

1 - 7 THE OS-BARNES

The Barne family is chosen to be the latest reality TV sensation. Could this mean popularity for Billy? A record deal for Simon? Better business for Kiki? Or will reality come crashing down on them? Meanwhile, the Blobs create their own reality TV show.

1 - 8 NANA

The Barns household is turned upside down when Simon's mother comes for a visit. Also, Billy is jealous of a new student who Melissa has a crush on. Does one of these newcomers pose a threat to the emperor?

1 - 9 EVIL SANDRA

There is a new girl in school. She is pretty, nice and actually likes Billy. Could this be the girl of Billy's dreams, or is it just Evil Sandra in yet another disguise? Meanwhile, Simon becomes Kiki's assistant.

1 - 10 BLOBS, LIES AND AUDIOTAPE

Billy and Zerek discover the benefits of lying. Billy exaggerates about his father's friendship with rock star, Scab Damage to gain popularity. Unfortunately, Simon and Scab are actually bitter enemies. Also, Zerek finds himself in trouble after lying about the emperor's progress.

1 - 11 HOME SWEET HOME

Derek and Zerek convince their Blob supervisor Kerek to let them return home to Planet Blob for the Holiday "Blobgiving". While the Blob's are gone Billy agrees to look after his baby brother "The Emperor" but first he must endure Kerek's relentless training. At the same time Simon decides that he misses living in England. As a result Simon decides he's going to cook an old fashioned British feast. On top of everything Billy's teacher Ms. Tyler is undergoing "sensitivity training". With so much going on will Billy survive Ms. Tyler, Simons cooking and Kereks "baby boot camp"?

1 - 12 IT'S MY PARTY

Parent teacher night is the best night of the year to throw a party. Billy's buddy TJ convinces him to throw a party at his house while his parents are out. However, Billy's mom Kiki finds out about the party and puts an end to their plans. The problem is the invitations are out and canceling the party is not an option. To make matters worse the Blob's are planning a party at Billy's house on the same night. Will this be the best party in the Universe or the end of Billy?

1 - 13 BLOBLET

Billy is cast in the title role of his school production of Hamlet. His best friend Melissa gets the job of Director and immediately the chaos begins. Melissa doesn't have faith in Billy's acting ability and begins to take her job as Director a little too seriously. The Blobs overhear Billy and Melissa rehearsing at home one night and think that they have discovered a plot against "The Emperor" (Billy's baby brother). Kiki on the other hand is left wondering if the men in her life will ever get "real" jobs.

2 - 1 A BLOB WELL DONE

Billy and Melissa are given the task of creating their own business as part of a class assignment. The fireworks start to fly when it comes time to decide on what kind of business to start. Melissa wants to open a flower shop but Billy ends up going into business with the Blobs. Simon's also got his own ideas for a business and begins designing his own "rock star" fashion line for babies. Will Billy and Melissa survive their class presentation? Will Simon's fashion line hit the big time?

2 - 2 SHAKESBLOB IN LOVE

Valentines Day is fast approaching and Billy doesn't know how to ask Melissa to be his Valentine. At the same time The High Council of Blob decides that it's time to arrange a marriage for the Emperor (Billy's baby brother). However, in order to do this Billy has to get married first. The Blobs hatch a plan to get Billy married but will it work? While planning Billy's marriage Kerek falls in love with Ms. Tyler, despite the fact that Blob/human relationships are forbidden. Simon's lost his romantic side and Kiki may be left alone on a Valentines Day that none of them will soon forget.

2 - 3 REALITY BITES

Kiki is depressed over a rival sales person stealing her business. As a result the entire Barnes household is put on a budget. The Blobs are reluctantly forced to eat less. Simon may actually have to get a real job. Worst of all, Billy is forced to work after school for Ms. Tyler in order to afford his school ski trip.

2 - 4 THE GOOD, THE BLOB, THE UGLY

Billy has to defend his honour and fight the school bully after Melissa saves him in front of the whole cafeteria. Kerek fires Derek for sleeping on the job, which leaves Zerek in charge of "The Emperor" all by himself. Derek is really upset about losing his job and in order to prove himself he decides to help Billy in a showdown with the school bully. Will Zerek be able to handle looking after the Emperor all by himself? Will Derek ever get his job back? Will he survive his showdown with the school bully?

2 - 5 BRINGING UP BABY

Melissa and Billy have to take care of a robotic baby as part of a class assignment. Melissa is determined to be the best parent in the class, but is she up for the challenge? Meanwhile, Billy's baby brother Silas is scheduled for his official coronation as "emperor". The coronation is scheduled to be televised live to the entire planet of Blob. The only problem is Kiki takes Silas to his grandparents for the weekend and The Blobs could be in big trouble.

2 - 6 THE CANDIDATE

Billy decides to run for class president when he realises no one else is running. However, the election turns into a big popularity contest when TJ decides to run against Billy. The Blobs have their own brush with democracy when they decide to hold their own elections.

2 - 7 NEW KID ON THE BLOB

Billy decides it's time to make some new "guy" friends at school. Only one problem, he has no idea how. Meanwhile, The Blob's are making new friends of their own by cloning themselves. As a result there are now two Zereks, Dereks, and Kereks. At the same time, much to the horror of Simon, Kiki becomes friends with Ms. Tyler. Will the Barnes house be able to handle the commotion with all the new friends?

2 - 8 STAND BY YOUR BLOB

Billy gets a chance to present an award to his Basketball idol Wilt Berkley in front of the whole school. However, the opportunity to meet his hero maybe ruined when Derek comes down with a mysterious Blob illness. At the same time Simon and Kiki have left Billy and the Blobs home alone. They are of attending an induction ceremony for Saturn Lantern in to the "Legends of the 80's Rock n' Roll hall of fame and Wax museum".

2 - 9 THE EMPEROR'S GARAGE SALE

When Billy's mum decides it's time to have a garage sale Billy and the Blobs stand to lose more than just their old stuff. Derek gives Billy "the book of krud", which is the holiest book on Blob. The book is accidentally sold at the garage sale and Billy has to get it back before its powers are released. At the same time, Zerek ends up getting "sold" at the garage sale as well and Simon is in danger of Kiki selling off all his old Saturn Lantern memorabilia.

2 - 10 CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE BLOB KIND

Billy enters into a photography contest at school. However, he gets more than he bargains for when a picture of Derek ends up winning the contest. The Blob's, fearing that their cover on Earth may be blown, decide to kidnap Silas back to planet Blob. Billy has to figure out a way to convince everyone that the photo was a fake and fast! Meanwhile, Simon is having a crisis of his own after the last member of the Saturn Lantern fan club decides to call it quits.

2 - 11 READY, AIM, FIRED

Ms. Tyler wins the teacher of the year award at school. Billy disagrees with the award and gets some help from the Blobs in digging up some dirt on her. The Blobs have no choice but to help Billy as they have been ordered to do so by The Emperor himself. However, Billy and the Blobs go too far when they plant a fake videotape that may get Ms. Tyler fired. Simon and Kiki are planning a reunion of Simons old band "Saturn Lantern" for charity. However, the old band members don't get along so well and a good thing goes bad when they all come together.

2 - 12 MY BIG FAT BLOB WEDDING

Billy and Melissa make plans to go to the prom together. Unfortunately, Kerek is scheduled to have a Blob wedding that same night and Billy is the best man. Derek and Zerek are crushed because Kerek is marrying their old sweetheart Ferek. As a result Billy is left juggling a date and a Blob wedding on prom night. Meanwhile, Simon takes Kiki to her first prom - Billy's!

2 - 13 THE UNBEARABLE LIKENESS OF BILLY

Evil Sandra has apparently lost her appetite for power and has opened a chain of theme restaurants, or has she? Derek's suspicions are confirmed when Evil Sandra takes on Billy's form and invades the Barnes household. The real Billy is at Melissa's house pulling an all night study session in an effort to ace his final exam or he's stuck repeating grade 9. Meanwhile, mistakenly thinking that the "Evil Billy" is the real Billy, Simon attempts to tutor him so that Kiki will be able to take her long overdue "Family Vacation".

BLUE SWAT

After the Blue Swat alien counter offence base is destroyed by invaders, only three team members survive. Sho (Masaki), Sara (Shiratori) and Shigu (Domon) are blamed for the disaster but resolve to confront their alien enemies with whatever equipment they can salvage - chiefly their high-tech battle suits, which despite their name are demonstrably purple in hue.

Later episodes saw the addition of extra team mates Seiji (Tanaka) and Sumire (Higata), presumably to make the Blue Swat group of equivalent size and dynamic to the average battle team in the style of MIGHT MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS and its ilk. Blue Swat replaced Jan Person in the Sunday morning fight slot on TV Asahi.

PRODUCERS - Jun Kaji and Nagafumi Hori. Original Music by Kei Wakasaka.

Blue SWAT (Burū Suwatto) is the thirteenth installment in the Metal Heroes franchise. It ran from January 30, 1994 to January 29 1995 for a total of 51 episodes and one theatrical movie. Blue SWAT deviated from the Metal Heroes franchise by using a realistic vibe for the series instead of fantastic, over-the-top action by focusing on the martial arts and gunplay aspects of the series. While the mood of the series appealed to the franchise's fanbase and older viewers, the show wasn't well received by children, which resulted in a change in to a lighter tone midway through the series. Blue SWAT later appeared for a team-up in the final episodes of Jukkou B-Fighter.

Characters

Blue SWAT/Blue Research

Shou Narumi: Hot-shot leader of the team in blue armor. Later gets upgrade calling himself "Hyper Shou", wearing silver armor.

Sara Misugi: No-nonsense female member in purple armor.

Sig: Third-in-command in grey armor. Calm and intelligent telepath. Is eventually discovered that he's an alien from a planet devastated by the Space Mafia. He came to Earth and possessed the body of a dead man named Takeshi Hirose in order to survive the planet and fight the Space Mafia. In a twist of events, Hirose had a son named Zaji who is being possessed by a member of the Space Mafia named Jisp.

Seiji Usami: Computer nerd who assists the Blue SWAT in their Blue Research group after he was saved by them.

Sumire Asou: Loudmouth who joins Blue Research as their secretary.

Gold-Platinum : A friendly alien who appears late into the series. After giving Shou a special weapon that allows him to upgrade into "Hyper Shou", he becomes a member of the team.

Space Mafia

Queen: A female villain with a humanoid form and a monstrous bird-like winged form.

BLUE THUNDER

CrazyAboutTv.com

Blue Thunder is a hi-tech 5 million dollar LAPD helicopter. It is armed and designed to counter street insurgencies. Its makers want to show what it will do, but have to train a Los Angeles Police pilot Frank Murphy (Roy Scheider), to fly and use it in order to allow it to operate in the city. Murphy and the project pilot have differences going back to Vietnam. The conflict between them continues to heat up as Murphy begins to suspect that Blue Thunder is more than has been disclosed. Some people in the US Government have secret plans for the helicopter, and Frank Murphy is the only one who can stop them and their project THOR (Tactical Helicopter Offensive Response). The whole ship is heavily armoured - one inch thick plates. It is equipped with a forward mounted 20mm electric canon which can fire 4000 rounds of ammunition per minute.

Information on the lady:

N-Number: N77GH

1 jet turbine with "Turbine Boost" capability.

Nightsight with a heat-sensored infra-red filter.

TV-camera with a 100:1 zoom-lens.

¾" video-system - code numbered. The tapes can be erased on signal.

Target-system.

Scanners.

"Whisper Mode" for silent flights.

Powerful listening equipment.

3 TV-monitors. The one in the center is tied in to all the computer-banks.

2 high sensitivity outdoor microphones.

Harrison-fire control helmet "The heart of the system". Wherever the pilot looks, the gun follows.

Cabin-microphone - records everything that is said inside the cockpit.

Thermo Graph.

Computer-terminal hooked up to every databank there is.

"Blue Thunder" was first a movie starring Roy Scheider then a TV series for the 1984-85 season starring James Farentino. The helicopter code named "Blue Thunder" had very similar properties and capabilities to Airwolf, but was supposedly designed for use by big city law enforcement agencies (riot control, anti-terrorism, that sort of thing). This TV series didn't last the year. ABC had Blue Thunder, then CBS followed up with the successful Airwolf.

A Region 1 DVD set of the series was released on 22 August 2006.

The series used the converted Aérospatiale Gazelle helicopter and large portions of stock footage from the Blue Thunder film. As backup to the helicopter, a ground unit, Rolling Thunder (not in the original film) was featured. This was a large support van with a desert camouflage off-road vehicle inside.

BORN FREEAKA: DINOSAUR INVESTIGATORS BORN FREE

In 1996, Comet Arby's approach to Earth causes major upheavels, Dinosaurs, long thought extinct, begin to wander the planet. In the Japanese outpost of an international alliance devoted to controlling the problem, Professor Tadaki forms the Born Free group, a team of dinosaur catchers that aim to protect the creatures from the evil hunter King Battler.

AKA - Return of the Dinons, Dinosaur Park.

The title was inspired by the unrelated US TV series Born Free (1974). The otherwise unremarkable BF took it's place in the history books by combining animated footage with live action model work, superimposing cel-animated charectors drawn by the Sunrise Studio onto the high quality model work for which the Tsuburaya studio was famed. Tsuburaya would follow the success of Born Free with the similar dinosaur show EISENBORG.

BOY FROM ANDROMEDA, THE

On a holiday trip to the Tarawera volcano in New Zealand, teenager Jenny finds a strange metal fragment which acts like a video, playing back a story of a spacecraft plunging to Earth. Meeting two other kids, hotelier's daughter Tesse and local lad Lloyd, who have similar fragments, they piece them together to form something called the 'fire key'. The trio are attacked by the Guardian, a mysterious invisible creature, before the fire key leads them to a mysterious pod, hidden behind a waterfall. Inside is Drom, sole survivor of a crashed ship from the constellation of Andromeda, woken by the reassembling of the key.

Drom is on a quest to save the last of his people, an ancient race who left Earth millions of years ago, after an intergalactic war, and who are now seeking a new home as their world is dying. But they can't get past 'the gun' - the active Tarewera volcano - which if triggered would destroy Earth. The fire key could disarm the gun, but the centuries old guardian (catchphrase - 'I will always be') is programmed to protect the gun. Jenny and her friends must help Drom overcome the Guardian before the volcano erupts.

The creator of this show was also responsible for writing two other SF shows, UNDER THE MOUNTAIN & CHILDREN OF THE DOG STAR. The producer for the serial was Caterina De Nave. The director was Wayne Torrel, the design of the show was attributed to Kirsten Shouler. The music was by John Gibson and the special effects by Keven Chisnell.

There was a total of six episodes made all in colour and all 30 minutes long. In the traditions of children's drama they accomplish this whilst the adults, as usual remain total unaware of the extra terrestrial struggle. Drom himself looked like a cut down Edward Scissorhands, having three fingers with very long nails. But the best special effects were reserved for the confrontations with the Guardian, whose invisible menace was realised with Predator like style. This was a joint New Zealand/Canadian production, the series was shown on BBC1 in the UK. The special effects were created by Kevin Chisnell.

CHILDREN OF THE DOG STAR

BRANDED FOUR, THE

This chapterplay tells the story of the four daughters of a scientist, Dr Horatio Scraggs (Girard) who marked each one of them with a sign that would not appear to the naked eye until they came of age and were to inherit his vast fortune stored in gold in a secret hiding-place. The villain is the lawyer of the family (Dyer) while the daughters, especially Marion (Gerber), enlist the help of Alphabet Drake (Wilson) to trace the gold before Dyer can find it.

An indication of the film's cheerful melodramatic excesses is the perfection by Dyer and a scientist (in episode ten) of a 'ray of destruction' that can wipe out the human race. But Drake shortcircuits the device. The happy end is provided by the death of the villain and the promise of a marriage between Drake and Marion.

Wilson and Gerber starred together in a number of serials: The Trail of the Octopus (1919), THE SCREAMING SHADOW (1920), THE MYSTERY BOX (1925) and others. They proved a successful team at the box office, and when they split up, Wilson went on acting throughout the silent period while Gerber dropped out of the profession. Director Worne had played the villain in another Wilson and Gerber serial, THE MYSTERY SHIP (1917), directed by John Ford's brother Francis together with Harry Harvey. He also acted in Francis Ford's The Craving (1918), but from 1920 onwards was active mostly as a director: THE SCREAMING SHADOWS (1920), NAN OF THE NORTH (1921) and other serials. In their turn, Wilson, Gerber and Francis Ford teamed up again for their last serial, OFFICER 444 (1926).

BRAVE NEW WORLD

Bland US adaptation of Aldus Huxley's classic 1932 novel set 600 years in the future in a plastic world where Henry Ford is worshipped as God and babies are hatched in batches and conditioned to want only what they have. Individuality, art and free expression have been sacrificed for the sake of stability and a drug induced happiness. A strict caste system is rigorously maintained by an assembly line of test tube babies ranging from high intelligent Alphas through Betas, Deltas and Gammas to the sub-moron Epsilons.

Promiscuity is in , procreation is taboo and mother and father are dirty words. Keir Dullea (of 2001 : A Space Odyssey (1968)) starred as the director of central Hatcheries whose trip to the 'Savage Reservation' - the ultimate is exclusive holidays - has unforeseen circumstances - namely a son, John who is rediscovered years later by Alpha malcontent Bernard Marx, and introduced to civilisation. But John Versed in Shakespeare and romance is unable to adapt and when he falls in love events move to a tragic conclusion.

The screenplay was written by Robert E. Thompson, the producer was Jacqueline Babbin and the director was Burt Brinkerhoff. This BNW was not a great success. Instead of Huxley's blackly comic vision if offered futuristic beautiful people who looked more like refugees from a disco. The producer for the series was Jacqueline Babbin. Despite its faithfulness to the original text, it is generally considered to have been a bland adaptation of an SF classic.

BRIMSTONE

Ezekiel Stone was a cop. Then, one fateful day, he arrived home to discover that his wife had been raped. Tracking down the man responsible, Stone killed him in cold blood. When he died, he found himself sent to hell for his crime. Now, 15 years later, 113 of the most evil souls have escaped from Hell and are roaming free across the Earth, so the Devil releases Zeke to hunt them down, his reward for success being a second chance at life. His task is to seek the escapees who may have acquired inhuman powers and return them to Hell by shooting out their eyes, the windows to the soul.

The series was first aired in the UK on Sky One starting on Monday 7th June, 1999, at the 9pm time slot. After attempts to find a suitable lead-in to Millennium met with a very low degree of success (they were all cancelled), Fox commissioned Brimstone, executive produced by its star Peter Horton, in the hope that it could succeed where its forebears had failed. . .

The show lasted for 13 seasons, meaning there are roughly 100 souls out there that still need to be returned to Hell. The good guys included Ezekiel (Peter Horton). And the Devil (John Glover), who isn't such a bad guy once you get to know him, and he does help Zeke with his mission. Lastly there's Detective Ash (Teri Polo) who runs into Ezekiel occasionally.

Peter Woodward starred in the original pilot episode, he had also starred in CRUSADE. Fashion Statements included Large grey overcoats are very 'in', in fact, grey in general is pretty big in the Brimstone world, with each episode shot with a kind of grainy washed out look to make the world look less pleasant. Fugitives from the devil invariably have some kind of power involving a glowing effect. Supervising producers were Ethan Reiss and Cyrus Voris, executive producer was Chas Hoffman and produced by Phil Parslow.

Nice lightweight stuff as you can imagine, and it's no surprise that this show was broadcast in the states prior to MILLENNIUM. However, even though the production values are great and John Glover's satanic turn as Old Nick is a welcome plot device, things get very samey after only a couple of episodes. The same fickle audience that condemned MILLENNIUM for having too many serial killers similarly took task with Brimstone, and it was cancelled after 13 episodes (unlucky for some). The original plan was for Stone to collect 113 souls, and at a rate of one a week that would mean the show enduring a very optimistic run of five years. It's classy high-concent stuff, but when considering the competition, it never stood a snowball's chance in hell.

Brimstone is something of an oddity. Many films or TV series that admit the existence of supernatural entities shy away from the explicitly basing their plots on Christian theology, perhaps in order not to offend the large number of non-Christian viewers. The mythology of BUFFY: THE VAMPIRE SLAYER is a mixture of many cultures and much invention, even though crosses apparently work against Vampires, while in John Carpenter's Vampires crosses don't work even though the protagonists claim to be agents of the church. Brimstone by contract depends entirely on the Christian ethic for its existence. The plot revolves around one Ezekiel Stone (a fine Biblical name by the way): a New York policeman sent into tender care by God after he killed his wife's rapist. The series is dark, edgy, and looks as if most of the colour has been washed out in post-production. The scripts are a step up from the usual detective series fare, with some intelligent writing and interesting characterisation. The strength of the series lies, however, in the relationship between Stone and the Devil. The Devil gets all the best lines, such as, "Thanks to global warming it gets more and more comfortable for me up here every day".

In another, while taunting his unwilling accomplice, the Devil is told to "get out of my head," by Stone. "As if you could wrap your brain in barbed wire to keep me out," the Devil chortles, and then shivers. "Ohh, that is a delightful image," he adds. To be fair, Stone does get the occasional verbal job under his belt. In the episode Ashes, for instance, he fails to catch the ring-leader of the escape: a beautiful female demon who, he believes, managed to seduce the Devil.

Thirteen episodes have been made and aired, but a fourteenth episode was in the process of being made when the episode was stopped three hours into shooting. Episode 1.14 would have been called Rivals, in which Stone finds he has a competitor for the Devil's affections.

The co-executive producers for the series were Cyrus Voris, Ethan Riff, Felix Enriquez Alcala and James Andrew Miller.

Here's a cheery one - a dead ex-cop turns bounty hunter for the devil, tracking down 113 souls who have escaped from hell and are back on Earth wrecking their own brand of evil. And you thought MILLENNIUM was bleak. That thirtysomething heart throb Peter Horton plays the dead man stalking, Ezekiel Stone, a New York detective who avenged his wife's rape by murdering her attacker. When killed in the line of duty 15 years ago, he was condemned to hell.

But the devil has work for Stone's idel hands, promising him a shot at redemption if he can catch each escapee and return them to hell. But, off course, they and stone too, are already dead, so they can't be killed. To complete his task, Stone must shatter their eyes, 'the windows to the soul'.

It's a sadistic concept, despite the morality which underscores it, and that's drummed home from the start when Stone hunts down and dispatches a killer who diguises himself as a priest to kidnap and kill altar boys. Horton plays Stone very dryly, rather like Clint Eastwood's spagetti westerern hero, and any lightness, comes ironically, from John Glover's the Devil who gets all the best lines, as he teases and cajoles his man. 'Take it from someone who knows', he tells Stone. 'Heaven is a very boring place'.

Other semi-regulars include Albert Hall as Stone's confidant, a blind preist called Father Horn, and Teri Polo as a sexy dectective Ash who, unfortunately for the smitten Stone, turns out to be the ringleader of the break out from Hell! Why 113! Brimstone apperantly had high hopes of making the syndication cut. Like so many others it was initially axed, but, unlike so many others, it was saved from cancellation hell when The Sci-Fi Channel (US) picked it up, promising to put the series back in production, which never did happen.

B-ROBO KABUTACK

AKA: BEETLE ROBO KABUTACK

Dr. Torahiko Koenji is an eccentric genius who dug out the ancient writings from the oldest layer of the earth. Known as the Galaxy, he translated the writings and learned of 13 treasures called "Star Pieces" that had been hidden across the planet. If one should obtain all the Star Pieces, any wish could be granted. To that end, Prof. Torahiko built search robots to find the Star Pieces. However a trio of such robots, led by Cobrander, were activated without their sleep-education program being completed and thus started to commit crimes.

Fortunately, a trio, composed of Kabutack, Tentorina and Kuwajiro, finish the whole course of sleep-learning and befriend Yuzuru Koenji, Torahiko's grandson. With Yuzuru and his friends Sayuri Mitaka and Kuranosuke Kichijouji, Kabutack and the gang begin their search of the "Star Pieces" while overcoming the misdeeds of Cobrander's group.

B-Robo Kabutack is a Japanese television series and is the sixteenth series as part of Toei Company's Metal Heroes series of tokusatsu programs. It aired from February 23, 1997 to March 1, 1998. It is the first of the kiddie shows made by Toei in the Metal Heroes line. Its opening theme is "Noble Honest Kabutack" sung by Takeshi Kusao who voiced the character Kabutack. The program is a partial sequel to B-Fighter Kabuto, as the B-Fighters show up in the series.

Kusao Takeshi, known from his voice acting work in numerous animated titles, provides the voice of Kabutack, as well as the vocal of OP&ED songs.

AKA: PONKOTSU ROBOT TAIHEIKI

At his lab, the doctor (Mitsutani) fixed second hand electrical appliances. He has also invented Taihei (voiced by Oikawa), a robot who works part time at a nearby noodle restaurant. Matsuda (Sato) and Tsukiko (Kojima), Takemoto (Yamada) and Yukiji (Negishi), Umemura (Sekine) and Hanae (Tsuruma) are three couples who meet and fell in love at the noodle restaurant and decide to marry with Taihei as a witness. However, their plans meet with opposition from the local Christian and Shinto priests, who regard the novelty of a "robot wedding" as unfair competition with their more spiritual services. The couples reluctantly agree to more traditional services but still attempt to schedule their own ceremonies at the noodle bar with Taihei. Eventually all is resolved and the triple wedding takes place with the robot, Shinto and Christian all as witnesses.

Recalling the British sitcom METAL MICKEY (1979), this bizarre Christmas SF comedy was based on a story by Eisuke Ishikawa, adapted for the screen by prolific anime writer Mamoru Sasaki and mystifyingly changes tack in its final episode to become a religious farce. The Japanese title is a pun alluding to the medieval Taiheiki chronicle also filmed as Tale of the Heike.

Produced by Kanae Mayuzumi.

BRUCE GENTRY - DAREDEVILS OF THE SKY

Taylor has the double role of scientist and villain (the Recorder, so called for his fondness of communicating through recorded messages) whose plans to destroy the Panama Canal are foiled by Neal and Clark.'

Despite the poor animation of the flying discs (similar to that utilised in the Katzman-produced SUPERMAN, 1948) which hero Neal is on the track of, this is one of the better of Columbia's serials. The stunting by Tom Steele and Dale Van Sickel, who'd fought each other countless times, is superior and Bennet and Carr's direction is fast and furious. The serial was produced by Sam Katzman, and the cinematographer was Ira H. Morgan.

BUCK ROGERS (1939)

Buck Rogers lacked the mythological appeal of Flash Gordon; in its place was virtual non-stop action as Buck (Crabbe, who also played Flash) fights for democracy in the 25th century - in which he wakes up after a five-century snooze - against Killer Kane (Warde). The storyline consists of little but extended battles with Crabbe, and his companion Moore, dashing between Earth and Saturn in pursuit of Warde.

After their success with FLASH GORDON, also played by Crabbe, in two serials (1936 and 1938), Universal cast him as Buck Rogers, the other famous space-opera hero of the newspaper comic strips. This serial, not as lavish or baroque as the first Flash Gordon serial, concerns Buck's waking after a 500-year sleep (in the Arctic) to discover that the Zuggs from Saturn have invaded Earth aided by the villainous Killer Kane (Warde). He teams up with Wilma (Moore) and Dr Huer (Shaw). The remaining episodes deal with their travels to Saturn to face the Zuggs on their home ground, and their efforts to avoid the usual hazards of crashing spaceships, ray-guns, robots and mind-control devices. Edited episodes were later cobbled together as a feature film, Planet Outlaws (1953), re-edited as Destination Saturn (1965).

Based on America's first Science Fiction comic strip, Buck Rogers (created by Philip F. Nowlan in 1929) took to the skies in the wake of the huge success Universal had with their Flash Gordon (1936) serial. The serial was re-released in edited versions in 1953, as Planet Outlaws and 1965 as Destination Saturn. In the wake of Star Wars (1977), Universal produced an updated feature film Buck Rogers in the 25th Century (1979) and a television series of the same title. The serial was produced by Barney Sarecky, the cinematographer was Jerry Ash.

BUCK ROGERS (1950)

Buck Rogers saved the universe over and over, using hardware standard in pulp-magazine space opera. His base was the world capital of Niagara, and his allies included the chaste-but-sexy Wilma, the Einsteinium Dr. Huer, and the courageous Martian Black Barney.

A novel became a comic book, a Mutual Broadcasting System radio serial (1932-1936 and 1939-1947) and a film serial starring Buster Crabbe, and then, at last, a television show which itself was updated three decades later. An attempt to cash in on the success of CAPTAIN VIDEO, this juvenile television series was transmitted live.

Due to budget limitations, although most of the action was set in the far future and referred to interplanetary adventure, most of the action was in the laboratory set, purportedly in a cave hidden behind Niagara Falls. Since most episodes were live, information about individual episodes remain sketchy, one writer who was involved was Gene Wychoff and a director was Babette Henry.

The first TV version of BR appeared on ABC in 1950 as a low budget live series. Buck Rogers was a 20th Century man who slept through the centuries only to awaken in the 25th Century where his skills were put to good use, keeping the world safe from mad scientists and aliens. Wilma Deering was Buck's low key love interest. Dr Huer the local scientific genius while Black Barney was his Martian crony. Buck operated from a secret base hidden behind Niagara Falls. In the 25th Century Niagra was the capital of the world, and much of the action of the series transpired at the secret base. Buck Rogers had debuted in 1928 in the pulp magazine Amazing Stories. The following year the character began appearing in a newspaper comic strip which is where he is best remembered. A radio series serial starring Buster Crabbe at the title role appeared in 1939. Several aborted attempts to bring Buck Rogers to TV also occurred.

The first was in 1949, a year before BR was produced. A PILOT starring Earl Hammond as Buck and Eva Maria Saint was made, but never broadcast. Ten years later in 1959 another Buck Rogers TV series made in to the pre-production phase. In 1977, two years before the now famous Buck Rogers series starring Gil Gerard appeared on NBC. NBC was developing a different version of the character. This project was put on hold and metamorphosed into the Gil Gerard series, which has its own entry in the volume.

Very little information is available on TV first Buck Rogers and it is unknown as to whether any Kinescopes of the actually exist. The first season of BR ran for 21 episodes with episodes such as 'The Scarlet Crescent' in which a shipment of a powerful explosive vanishes from Earth. The second series lasted a further 21 episodes.

The first season of Buck Rogers consisted of 21 episodes. The series debuted on 15 Apr 1950, episodes ran weekly until 2 Sept. 1950. No episodes of either season are known to exist. All available information on the episodes is presented here. The second season of Buck Rogers consisted of 21 episodes. They debuted on 12 Sept. 1950 and ran weekly through 30 Jan. 1951.

Of the science fiction series discussed in this volume the most elusive is Buck Rogers. A short-lived series at the dawn of television, the show was broadcast live between April 15, 1950, and January 30, 1951. No kinescopes of the series are known to have survived. Of the 36 episodes aired, only three titles have been unearthed by researcher Alan Morton: "The Space Monster" (June 3, 1950), featuring the last appearance of Kem Dibbs in the role of Buck, "Slaves of the Mind Pirate" (June 10, 1950), featuring the first appearance of Robert Pastene in the title role, and "The Scarlet Crescent" (August 19, 1950).

For unknown reasons, Kem Dibbs left the series after only eight appearances. Although brief, his stint as Buck Rogers did lead to a long career in television and films including appearances on Studio One, Playhouse 90 and Hallmark Hall of Fame as well as in films, among them The Ten Commandments (1956) and Fate Is the Hunter (1964).

TV's original Buck Rogers seems to have stayed within the framework originally established by writer Philip Francis Nowlan in his serialised novel, Armageddon 2419 AD, which first appeared in the August 1928 issue of Amazing Stories. Young Rogers took a job as a surveyor and was engaged in examining an abandoned mine on the outskirts of Pittsburgh, more than a little intrigued by the pungent atmosphere and glowing rock he discovered within the mine. A sudden cave-in traps Rogers, but he is miraculously rescued by another, much later shifting of rock. When Dibbs, as Buck Rogers, stumbles out of the cave, he discovers an entirely new world. It is 500 years later; the strange gasses inside the mine put Buck in a state of suspended animation for half a millennium. Rogers meets Lt. Wilma Deering (Lou Prentis), Dr. Huer (Harry Southern) and Black Barney Wade (Harry Kingston). The capitol of the world is now the city of Niagara and mankind is engaged in a series of skirmishes with nefarious extraterrestrial forces. Buck quickly throws in his lot with his new friends.

The commercial success of DuMont's Captain Video appears to have prompted ABC to try a live science fiction show of its own, although ABC seems to have undermined its own efforts. Like Captain Video and several of the other early science fiction entries, the budget for Buck Rogers was minuscule. The dominant set was reportedly an archetypal laboratory secreted behind Niagara Falls. Much more damaging, however, was the replacement of the title character after only eight episodes. Dibbs's replacement Robert Pastene made only five appearances as Rogers and then the show seems to have gone on summer hiatus for almost two months, a situation which undercut efforts to build an audience. The 23 episodes which followed were unable to sufficiently redeem the series, and ABC seems to have made the decision to cut its losses and concentrate on other more promising entries in the science fiction field including Space Patrol and Tom Corbett, Space Cadet. Allen Ducovny, producer of Tom Corbett, Space Cadet, suggested to an interviewer why he felt Buck Rogers failed as a series.

One of the big troubles that this kind of program finds itself facing is that in the last few years youngsters have become pretty well aware of what science can do and what it can't do, so they're fairly critical on technical grounds of electronic razzle-dazzle in stories. Buck Rogers went in heavy for disintegrate-ray guns and mad scientists. Kids will accept only so much of that nowadays. Ducovny's assessment of Buck Rogers' failure may or may not have been accurate; nonetheless, it is important to note that Ducovny's own show, Tom Corbett, Space Cadet, avoided those perceived pitfalls and prospered until the mid-1950s.

BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY

Purists blanched, but BR was really a hero of the 1980s. Gone was the series character of the original comic strip. This young Buck was a brash, fun loving man who refused to take the computerised society of the future seriously. The series too, didn't take itself seriously - it aimed as escapist entertainment with a glossy slick package packed with special effects, and Buck Rogers had one other weapon to fight the ratings war - sex, mainly in the slinky form of actress Erin Gray who played Bucks sidekick Wilma Deering alluring jump-suits one size to small.

The premise behind the original 1925 comic strip (which ran for nearly 40 years) was the Buck Rogers, an ex Air-Force pilot, was overcome by a strange noxious gas while surveying an abandoned mine shaft near Pittsburgh, and spent 500 years, in a state of suspended animation. In this series however Buck was an American astronaut who, in 1987 is launched on a deep space probe. His rocket is blown on of trajectory and Buck is frozen for 500 years, returning to Earth in the 25th Century and becoming involved in a conflict between Earth and the Draconians, ruled by the evil (but beautiful) Princess Ardala.

All that happened in the PILOT episode 'Awakening' , but over here the series reached TV before the pilot, which has a cinema release, so Buck was already thawed, integrated and ready for action. Besides Buck and Wilma, other regulars were scientists Dr. Huer and Twiki, a vibrating voiced little ROBOT. Season Two saw the departure of Huer and the arrival of some new characters: Dr. Goodfellow (played with long suffering dignity by Wilfred Hyde White), Admiral Asimov (presented as a descendent of author Issac Asimov), and the tragic figure of Hawk, last survivor of a race of man-birds.

This major update of the 1950-51 TV series (see above) was a network attempt to cash in on the success of "Star Trek" and on the lesser success of "BATTLESTAR GALATICA" (itself ripped off from "Star Wars"), with some of the same campy attitude as the television "BATMAN." Six months before the television premier, the pilot was released under the same title on the big screen.

It is hard to say if the cocky attitude of the actors played against the big-budget special effects, or whether scripts that took the concepts more seriously might have deepened the show's impact. The show's executive producers were Glen A. Larson and John Mantley (2). BR producers were Richard Caffey (1), Jock Gaynor (1) and Josh Stevens (2). Supervising producers were Bruce Lansbury (1) and Calvin Clements (2). The show premiered in the US on 20th September 1979 (NBC) and in the UK on 30th August 1980 (LWT).

There were plenty of guest stars, lead by Buster Crabbe - who played Buck in the 1930s film serial - who came out of retirement - aged 71, to play an ageing Brigadier. Other notable were MY FAVOURITE MARTIAN star Ray Walston, BATMAN villains Frank Gorshin, Cesar Romero and Julie Newmar, plus Woody Strode, Robby McDowell, Jamie Lee Curtis and Jack Palance.

The series premiered in the UK in August 1980, with ITV in a concerted network move - scheduling it against the BBC's DOCTOR WHO. After just nine weeks Buck was pulling an average audience of 9.9 million against the Doctor's 9 million. It was a short lived success however. The series ended in mid 1981, though episode were rerun on BBC 2 in 1989, and again in 1994 and 1996.

This is the second of television two versions of Buck Rogers and is the best remembered one of the two. Premiering a year after BATTLESTAR GALATICA, BR was produced by Universal Studios, which also produced BATTLESTAR GALATICA. This allowed for a certain amount of Hardware from BATTLESTAR GALATICA to be recycled on BR, as well as having a special effects team already assembled and looking for work.

BR was cancelled at the end of its first season, however NBC changed its decision and the series came back as a mid season replacement with a vastly revamped format for the 1980-81 TV season. For its second season BR was moved away from Earth taking on a format similar to STAR TREK. Buck was no longer an agent of the Earth Defence Directorate, instead he was an officer on board the Searcher. The Searcher was a starship designed to explore the universe for lost human colonies which had been set up before the great war. Dr. Huer stayed behind an Earth, but Wilma and Twiki joined the crew of Searcher.

Typical stories included 'Journey To Oasis' in which Wilma falls for an alien ambassador when her shuttle crash lands on an alien planet and 'Plot to Kill A City' Buck masquerade as an assertion to infiltrator a group of assassins who want to explode New Chiagos matter-anti matter reactor. Four of the episodes 'Awakening', 'Planet of the Slave Girls', 'Plot to Kill a City' and 'Time of the Hawk' were all shown as TV movies in the US. The stories were weak and nobody much cared for Buck as a cocky, wise cracking loud. The show improved in the second season, with better scripts and the new alien character Hawk, but it was too late.

After their success with FLASH GORDON, also played by Crabbe, in two serials (1936 and 1938), Universal cast him as Buck Rogers, the other famous space-opera hero of the newspaper comic strips. This serial, not as lavish or baroque as the first Flash Gordon serial, concerns Buck's waking after a 500-year sleep (in the Arctic) to discover that the Zuggs from Saturn have invaded Earth aided by the villainous Killer Kane (Warde). He teams up with Wilma (Moore) and Dr Huer (Shaw). The remaining episodes deal with their travels to Saturn to face the Zuggs on their home ground, and their efforts to avoid the usual hazards of crashing spaceships, ray-guns, robots and mind-control devices. Edited episodes were later cobbled together as a feature film, Planet Outlaws (1953), re-edited as Destination Saturn (1965).

The second of television's two versions of Buck Rogers is the best remembered of the two. Premiering a year after BATTLESTAR GALACTICA. Buck Rogers in the 25th Century was produced by Universal Studios, which also produced BATTLESTAR GALACTICA. This allowed for a certain amount of hardware from BATTLESTAR GALACTICA to be recycled on Buck Rogers as well as having a special effects team already assembled and looking for work. In an effort to test audience reaction to the series, the pilot film was released theatrically six months before the series appeared on TV. It met with positive reviews both at the cash box and by the critics.

Based upon the same comic strip as the first Buck Rogers series. Buck Rogers in the 25th Century is about a 20th century man who finds himself in the future where he must save the world. Updating the original concept. Buck is now astronaut William 'Buck' Rogers. In 1987 he was the sole astronaut on board the last of NASA's deep space probes, Ranger III. A malfunction occurs on board which freezes his life support system, placing Rogers in suspended animation, and placing Ranger III in an orbit which returns it to Earth 500 years into the future.

Buck Rogers in the 25th Century was cancelled at the end of its first season, however NBC changed its decision and the series came back as a mid season replacement with a vastly revamped format for the 1980-81 TV season. For its second season Buck Rogers in the 25th Century moved away from Earth taking on a format similar to STAR TREK.

Buck Rogers in the 25th Century marked prolific writer/producer Glen A Larson's second foray into epic Science Fiction entertainment for the small screen. However, whereas Larson's first entry, BATTLESTAR GALACTICA, was an ambitious, reverential and ponderous affair inspired by the likes of Von Daniken's Chariots of the Gods, Buck Rogers was strictly a lightweight and undemanding Space Opera, initially billed by its creator as "Burt Reynolds in Space". For Larson, simplicity proved to be the key to getting the 'green light' for Buck.

Based on the character created by.. Philip F. Nowlan; Developed for television by: Glen A. Larson, Leslie Stevens; Producers: (year 1) David O'Connell, John Gaynor; (year 2) John Stephens, Calvin Clements, Sr.; Executive Producer: (year 1): Bruce Lansbury; Executive Producer: (year 2): John Mantley; NBC/ Universal; 60 minutes.

Buck Rogers' rockets fizzled the first time he tried to blast off in a TV series. In 1950, a live, videotaped New York production starred Kem Dibbs as Buck, Lou Prentiss as Wilma and Harry Sothern as Dr. Huer. After a few episodes, Robert Pastene stepped in as Buck. The series, done on an extremely low budget, was creaky even by primitive TV standards and exhausted its welcome within a year. Buck had been a lot more successful as a comic strip in the newspapers (1931-1956), and in 1939 Buster Crabbe played him in the movie. (Crabbe was better known as another comic hero, Flash Gordon). In 1967, ABC-TV got serious and agreed to mount an expensive Buck Rogers series using state-of-the-art special effects. Buck was going to be portrayed as a witty superhero in this MGM production. The project burned out during the storyboard stage. With the success of the film Star Wars in 1977, and the popularity of Battlestar Galactica a year later, Universal studios decided to launch a Buck Rogers series for the 1979-80 season. According to writer Dorothy C. Fontana, it took awhile for the studio and network to decide what kind of series they wanted "Originally, Buck Rogers was planned as a series of two-hour movies," she says. "My brother, Richard, and I wrote a two-hour script for producer Leslie Stevens. Unfortunately, Universal decided to go ahead with an hour format instead. The next producer, Andrew Fenady, had a different take on the series. This would have been a true adventure series. Fenady had a good sense of character and the action-adventure genre. David Gerrold was on that version as story editor."

This version was also aborted during the script stage, and the next metamorphosis took Buck into the orbit of campy adventure. "There was too much emphasis on Buck being just a happy-go-lucky kinda guy, with too many jokes and cute characters, including the beede-beedebe robot [Twiki]," says Fontana. "The versions that would have worked best would have been the Leslie Stevens two-hour movies."

Stevens and writer Glen A. Larson, who had just finished Battlestar Galactica, joined forces to create the light-hearted version of Buck Rogers. "I wrote a two-hour script with Leslie Stevens and that's what sold the series to Universal," claims Larson. Larson and Stevens had a good working relationship that dated back almost a decade. "I had been a protege of Leslie's many years earlier on McCloud, and we worked together on Battlestar Galactica. He had great style and wit.

We flew to Hawaii to discuss the Buck Rogers script, and Leslie lay on the beach at night and stared up at the constellations. He knew them forwards and backwards! We discussed the fanciful approach to the character and developed the pilot as a Trojan Horse story. Princess Ardala's flagship is brought through Earth's defenses under the guise of peace. I took one section, Leslie took another and we worked out a script. I then brought in Gil Gerard as Buck without so much as a reading and without any discretion from the network. It was a foregone conclusion in my mind that Gerard was going to play Buck. That's a rarity. That was the only time in my career where the leading man was cast without any network input at all."

Although filmed for TV, the pilot was released in theaters to capitalize on the post-Star Wars success of space operas. Once the pilot was completed, Larson's involvement with the weekly series was minimal. "I only supervised or hired people who produced the episodes. One thing I didn't want either Battlestar Galactica or Buck Rogers to become was a monster-of-the-week show. That represents the poorest level of writing. I wanted them to represent good drama with some intellectually challenging concepts. That viewpoint was not necessarily shared by the people who produced the weekly Buck Rogers series. They did their own thing, and I'm not going to knock them. I had been paid handsomely by the studio [to do the pilot], and I had other things to work on."

It's a wonder actor Tim O' Connor ended up playing Dr. Elias Huer on the series. As a small child, he had had trouble pulling off his Buck Rogers space helmet. "The darn bubble on top of the helmet would catch my hair every time I tried to pull it off," the actor laughs.

Darting around the neighborhood with his ray gun primed O'Connor's interest for the series 40 years later. As Dr. Elias Huer, O'Connor envisioned the scientist as, a genius who is very capable but also a bit of a fuddy-duddy. He uses this fuddy-duddiness to escape the day-to-day goings-on in this large organization. Most people leave him alone because they think he's a crazy guy. Buck and Wilma discover that he's a great friend, and Huer is taken with them as well. That's the kind of character I was working towards. But that slipped away as the series progressed. Huer ended up behind his desk all of the time, and Buck and Wilma would come to him for their briefings about their next mission. That was a mistake.

"There was an early episode where Huer is given a plant. For the next three episodes, the plant keeps growing, and Dr. Huer becomes leery of it. He feels the damn thing is spying on him. Huer gives it double-takes, and the scenes are very funny and cute. But the producers decided to cut that back. Instead, Huer ended up sending Buck off on missions. Originally, Buck was supposed to get his orders from a main office somewhere. That's when he and Wilma would come to Dr. Huer's lab. Huer would offer them some kind of weapon or tool for their mission, and his lab would be loaded with far-out, special-effects experiments. It was an opportunity to show, technically, how the world of the future worked. Funny things would happen in the lab, and we'd see Huer's reaction to them.

The first episode had me staring into this bubbling tank of chemicals, and some weird object is inside it. The camera filmed me from the other side, and my eyes looked like saucers three feet wide. In another episode, I'm fascinated by some of Buck's old toys. I blow up a balloon, and it flies out of my mouth and shoots around the room making a funny noise. Those were the kinds of things I wish had been kept as the series progressed.'

While O'Connor became straight man, he also noted that Gil Gerard and Erin Gray had some reservations about their character relationship as well. "Gil and Erin worked very well together, but the writers never developed their relationship. Buck and Wilma had a kind of adversarial relationship as well as one that bordered on being sexy and sensual. They also cared for each other. Some of the directors understood this, others didn't. The characters' relationship was often reduced to an adolescent level. Gil and Erin complained about that. Gil in particular was very forceful whenever he felt the series drifted away from its original premise."

In terms of the stories, O'Connor appreciated the camp quality of Buck Rogers. "It was part of the show's allure," he says. "Originally, Buck Rogers was designed to shoot for the kid audience. They planned to market all of these little dolls of Buck, Wilma and Dr. Huer. It turned out the age of our audience went up to 45! Men in particular enjoyed seeing it after a hard day's work. It was undemanding, it had lots of special effects, lots of good-looking people, some tits and ass, and lots of action. The humor and camp were also part of the appeal. That's what Buck Rogers was, a tongue-in-cheek show. But while it was camp, it couldn't be treated as such. If you perform it that way, you're going to fail."

Captain Buck Rogers found the twenty-fifth century filled with larger-than-life space villains. There were also space casinos, galactic space pageants and futuristic rock 'n' roll bands. One running joke throughout the series (devised by story editor Alan Brennert) was Earth's landing bay reception room. Attentive viewers listening closely to the background loudspeaker voice would hear names such as Isaac Asimov and Christopher Pike (Star Trek's first captain), announced as arriving guests.

Occasionally, the writers were inspired by dramatic themes, but their episodes were retitled with names that conjured up pulp fiction. "I wrote one episode where Buck was forced to land on a hostile planet," says Dorothy Fontana. "Once there, he discovers that the entire defense of the planet is in the hands of women. Unfortunately, the war hasn't gone their way, and the enemy is coming for them. Buck helps them defend their planet the best they can, and the women make it through. The story was based on the way women rallied to replace men on the home-front during World War II and the way Israeli women served in their armed forces. But the title they gave my script, 'Planet of the Amazon Women,' makes me shudder!" Despite its equally silly title, one exciting episode that stands out in Tim O'Connor's mind is "Planet of the Slave Girls."

"Buster Crabbe made a guest appearance, and he had some dialogue that played off the fact that he had been the original Buck Rogers," he recalls. Crabbe fit right into the high tech world of Buck Rogers. "He had been out of the business for a while, but he was no dummy," says O'Connor. "He wasn't standing there scratching his head and wondering what was going on. He was impressed by the changes in film technology. He was a very knowledgeable guy, and he shared a lot of wonderful old stories. I think his mother had been a Hawaiian princess.

O'Connor remembers other episodes for less pleasant reasons. "I had the hell scared out of me once. Gil, Erin and I were walking down the hall of a corridor, and the doorway was supposed to blow out. It exploded a couple of seconds too late. It just missed us. The door roared past us and slammed against the far wall. We could have been seriously hurt. It took the special effects guys 45 minutes to reset the explosion. So we did it again, and believe me, you're seeing three extremely nervous actors as we go down that hall, carrying on dialogue as if we were nonchalant. We got past the door, it exploded on cue and we got sprayed with bits of junk. All part of the job!"

Director Larry Stewart recalls, "We had constant problems with those sliding doors. We kept slicing actors in half. The prop-man who operated the doors off-camera would have to guess when to open and shut them. At one point I had a button that I pressed in my hand. A light bulb would go off next to the prop-man, telling him when to open and close the doors. But every now and then, the prop-man got antsy and he'd close the door too soon. He'd cut an actor in half!" One robotic effect was Twiki, Buck's wise-cracking mechanical partner. The actor inside the suit was Felix Silla, a short-stature actor who had played Cousin It on TV's The Addams Family. "Felix had the toughest job of anybody on that show," says Stewart. "He had to stay in that bloody robot suit all day. During the summer he would cook inside that thing. We couldn't take him out of the suit because it took too long. We could at least take his mechanical head off, and we'd put cold rags over his face and neck. He never lost his sense of humor and he was never nasty. He was a wonderful guy."

"Felix was a sweet, family man," recalls O'Connor. "Once he and I had to fly to New York to do a 15-minute show for PBS. We stayed three or four days. I called Felix at his hotel and asked him to meet me in the city for lunch. Felix had an excuse that sounded reasonable. I said, 'Well, then, maybe we can meet for dinner this evening?' He politely balked at the suggestion. The conversation now struck me as being rather odd. I said 'Felix, what's wrong? You've been cooped up in that hotel all day. Don't you want to get out?' "Felix replied, 'Actually, Tim, I can't go out unless I have somebody with me. I'm so small that somebody could just pick me up and run away with me. That happens frequently with dwarves.' I was absolutely stunned. I realized that was a valid concern."

O'Connor also enjoyed working with Gil Gerard and Erin Gray. "This was one of the first shows Erin ever did," says O'Connor. "She was a very successful model, and she picked Buck Rogers as her first dramatic series. She was a very serious actress, but also fun-loving, very smart, and she had a wonderful time on the show."

"The network wanted to replace Erin at the very beginning," recalls producer John Gaynor, (Cso we had to test dozens of girls as a replacement. None of them worked out, and the network had to go back to Erin and eat a little crow. She was a lovely girl and very cooperative to work with. One thing she didn't like was to dye her hair blonde. Over the season, we let her gradually return to her normal hair color, which was light brown."

As the star of the series, Gil Gerard felt the responsibility that was on his shoulders. The week the series premiered, he told the Denver Post, "If the audience likes me, Buck Rogers will be a success. If they don't, it will fail."

"Gil worked very hard to make the show a success," says Gaynor. Larry Stewart agrees. "Gil was very dedicated and a hoot to work with. Gil had an interesting problem. He had very fine and delicate hair. Whenever he took his helmet off, he had to go through a whole hairdressing process to make it look right again. You'll notice as the series went on, Buck kept his helmet on. He'd be in these dumb positions with his helmet on and you got to wonder, 'Why the hell doesn't he take his helmet off?'"

The production of Buck Rogers involved huge sets, expensive miniatures and big casts. "It was a tough show to produce," notes Gaynor. "It was the most expensive hour-long show being made at the time. Pressure from the studio and the network to keep costs down was constant. The network was also concerned with violence. Every act of violence was counted, and you were allowed only so many. The skimpy costumes on the girls, which we liked, were also an issue. The network always wanted to approve the costumes beforehand. They didn't like surprises! David O'Connell [producer] and I were proud of receiving an award for having the most chauvinistic show on TV because of the way we presented women. It was our intention to use beautiful girls in brief, futuristic costumes. N.O.W. and other women's groups objected strongly to that. That gave us quite a few laughs!"

"The special effects on Buck Rogers were very good," recalls director Larry Stewart. "One of the reasons I was hired was because of my early training on the Sam Katzman serials. I knew about using the optical printer, which was the basis of most special effects at the time. If someone on Buck Rogers held a gun and went zap, the actor had to hold that gun in position for a beat before he could move his hand again. That gave the optical guys time to animate the zap beam shooting from the gun."

"The special effects ran smoothly, but every now and then, the effects house at Universal would come up with a problem that really wasn't a problem. In 'The Flight of the War Witch,' Buck Rogers warped into a new universe, so we needed a new starfield. The optical house guys suddenly said, 'Geez, we've got the spaceship and we've got the new starfield but we haven't had a chance to put them together. We're not gonna make the production deadline!' I went over to them and said, 'You've got the spaceship, right? And you've got the starfield ... put the two damn things in the optical printer and press the button that says Forward.' They looked at me and said, 'Oh, we'll try that.' They did, and it worked. So sometimes the effects problems were make work problems that would be shifted down to us on the set to solve."

As for the acting, Stewart, a former casting director, recalls, "We were able to get some pretty fair actors to guest-star on Buck Rogers. There was nothing cheap about the series. The episodes were well done and actors were having fun on them."

"The only way you can do episodic TV is to pretend that it's the greatest damn thing that you've ever done in your life," says Tim O'Connor. "Buck Rogers wasn't the greatest thing I had ever done, but I did want it to succeed. I worked on it as if it was the best material I had ever read." O'Connor admits that the futuristic trappings were a critical part of the show. "They put a lot of money into the show's original production and sets. The wonderful effects, elaborate sets and the beautiful girls were an important part of the first season's success."

Although Buck Rogers was usually in the top 40, NBC felt that the series could be improved upon. "Fred Silverman was the head of NBC, and although the series had reasonably good ratings, he decided he was either going to kill the show or make some drastic changes," says O'Connor.

"It was a particularly annoying situation," recalls Larry Stewart. "Silverman decided to fix something that wasn't broken. Buck Rogers had been doing well with a comedy lilt to it and Silverman decided he wanted Gtinsmoke in space. [Executive producer] Bruce Lansbury and the other producers were let go, and John Mantley, who had produced Gunsmoke, was brought in."

"We had a steady following and good ratings," says Gaynor. "It was a children's show that also had tongue-in-cheek for the adults. The network wanted to change the formula. They ruined it by trying to turn it into an adult show with messages."

One character who wouldn't be returning for the show's second season was Dr. Huer. "I really found out by accident," says O'Connor. "Everyone else on the show knew that I wasn't going to be back, but I didn't find out until much later. They even had a big party at NBC, introducing the next season's shows. They introduced me even though Fred Silverman knew I would no longer be in the show. Gil and Erin also knew, and I suspected from their tone that there was something afoot. After the party, I said to myself, 'Hmmm ... I think I've been dropped from the show!' I called the producer, and he told me. I was disappointed. I was also saddened that they were going to change the show. I almost called Silverman, not to complain, but to tell him that he was taking a big risk with the series by changing it."

O'Connor did watch some of the second season out of curiosity, recalling, "It began to look a lot like that old fantasy show of the 1960s that got goofy, Lost in Space, with the funny old character and the talking robot. For me, it wasn't Buck Rogers anymore. It seemed very talky and pretentious."

"They lost the humor," says Larry Stewart, and the uncomfortableness Buck had being out of his own time. We used to have shows where Buck would try to teach ping-pong to people, or introduce slang from his century. I felt the second year got rid of Buck's humanity. It became a much more serious, 'We gotta get the bad guys!' The writing was pedantic. Interestingly, none of the directors from the first season were called back. John Mantley was interested in purging the lightness and comedy from the show. It wasn't that the direction they took was bad. It was that the audience said, 'Hey, what happened to the show we liked?' Another factor was that Gil Gerard had made the show work with his sense of humor. However, Gil was not a Charles Bronson or Clint Eastwood type. The 'new' Buck didn't fit the actor."

The series probably got changed because Fred Silverman said, 'We're looking for an excuse to renew a show that probably needs a boost,'" notes Glen Larson. "Science fiction has always suffered from low ratings. Mantley may have been brought in because of his success with Gunsmoke. NBC felt he would tell 'people' stories in a space environment. Therefore, they might attract people who might otherwise not watch science fiction."

The second season's momentum was hurt by an actors' strike in Hollywood. The new Buck Rogers premiered in January 1981. Buck and Wilma were now aboard the starship Searcher with Admiral Asimov (Jay Garner) and kindly old scientist Goodfellow (played by veteran English actor Wilfred Hyde-White). In their search for other humans, the Searcher's crew took on a Star Trek-like exploration of the universe, encountering alien life forms and helping to maintain intergalactic peace.

The most intriguing cast addition was the character of Hawk (Thorn Christopher). When his people are killed by humans, Hawk seeks revenge and becomes Buck's mortal enemy in the season's debut segment, "Time of the Hawk." Hawk gradually strikes a truce with Buck, and they become friends. Then Christopher infused the alien Hawk (part hawk, part humanoid) with a quiet strength and loyalty.

"NBC's casting director, Joel Thurm, called my agent and told him, 'Buck Rogers is writing in a new character—a bird man. Would you come out to the West Coast and read for it?'" recalls Christopher. "I was in New York. The fortunes of the fates were generous, and the role became mine." Christopher had a definite point of view as he portrayed the character, who was the last of his species. "Inherent in the role from the first reading was the sense of Hawk being an outsider—the outcast—the lone pilgrim in space," says Christopher, "and ultimately, the noble savage in the romantic sense. These were the elements I used to make such an exotic character believable. I enjoyed exploring the valley of hurt that Hawk seemed to exist in. The loss of his people, his family and the loss of his wife, Koori, by Hawk's own accidental hand. He was the stranger in a strange land."

Christopher's favorite episode was "Time of the Hawk." "It was as all launchings should be," he marvels. "Perfect. Director Vincent McEveety was incredible to work with. He 'presented' Hawk, not just introduced him. The actors and crew treated the moment [of Hawk's presentation] as something special. I knew working with all of these unique people that my life from that moment on would never be the same." As the new season progressed, vocal fans of the series made two things clear. First, they didn't like the new voice for Twiki (Bob Elyea). Voice master Mel Blanc (best known as the voice of Bugs Bunny and many other cartoon characters) returned to the part. Secondly, mail reflected an enthusiastic acceptance of Christopher and his alien character. Unfortunately, the intriguing dimensions Hawk could have provided the series didn't materialize, though Christopher remembers that "John Mantley; our executive producer, said to me during production that if the series continued, there would be more opportunities for Hawk to generate some strong storylines of his own as opposed to just responding to them."

Christopher recalls Mantley "as a writer, an actor and a man of strong professional taste. He gave science fiction an added dimension on TV. His very sharp intelligence combined with a true sense of drama and theatrical compassion made all of the elements work." Overall, the actor says the second year was represented by "some wonderful work done by everyone involved. Gil Gerard and Erin Gray were wonderfully generous in sharing the work with me. Never once did they, as the stars of the show, attempt to have this exotic character of Hawk—feathers, spandex and breast plate—moved into the shadows. Gil is one of the nicest actors a man from the past -- he helps them to repel the Draconians' attack, with the aid of the mechanoids Dr. Theopolis and Twiki.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER

AKA: BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER: THE SERIES

Buffy is sixteen years old and is the "chosen one". She gets to kill vampires because it is her destiny to do so. She had a bad reputation at her old school in Los Angeles because she had burned the gym down. The principal at her new school at first rips up her records, and then tapes her records back together again. Buffy tries to explain that the gym at her old school had to be burned down because it was full of vampires!

Buffy and her mom just want a fresh start in their new, suburban California home, where the good part of town is half a block away from the bad part of town. In her new high school, Buffy meets an eccentric librarian who knows that Buffy is the "chosen one". At first, the librarian scares her away by showing her a book about vampires, but then she returns to the library, knowing that the librarian can help her out with fighting off vampires and other supernatural things.

Following events in the theatrical movie Buffy: The Vampire Slayer, Buffy and her mom move to a new town to try to start over. Unfortunately, Sunnydale sits on a mystical convergence, which attracts the undead and the supernatural, so Buffy has more monster-slaying than ever. All is not doom and gloom: She has new friends and a new boyfriend. . . Never mind that Angel is a 400-year-old vampire. Lots of atmosphere, an appealing heroine in Sarah Michelle Gellar and plenty of teen angst have made Buffy a cult hit for the Warner Bros. Network.

An episode titled the puppet show starred STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE'S Armen Shimmerman. Anthony Head who plays Giles is also famous for starring in VR5. Another non SF show which has become a surprise hit of the 1997-98 season. Occasionally the show did have some SF plot lines, but most episodes concentrated on killing Vampires or other types of Paranormal activity. It was however a well made show, that new it's audience well. Sarah Michelle Gellar was perfect for the role of the wise cracking Slayer, who is also capable of coping with the show martial arts, a sort of more grown up version of THE MIGHT'Y MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS.

"In every generation there is a chosen one. She alone will stand against the vampires, the demons, and the forces of darkness. She is the Slayer." So, think strapping armour-clad princesses, think timeless landscapes, right? Wrong! The place is Sunnydale, small-town California. The time is now and Buffy is a petite (albeit surprisingly strong) teenager, with a secret double-life as the Slayer. For beneath the town is the 'Hellmouth', a magnet for all life-threatening weirdness... but especially vampires.

Writer Joss Whedon's 1992 film established the character and mythology: vampires live among us, but one girl at a time has the latent skills to destroy them. Recast for the series, Buffy's mission was broadened beyond routine vampire battles. The result: a winning blend of witty characters, heroism, highkicking action and high-school dilemmas (Buffy craves a normal teenage life, but the role is non-negotiable).

US: March 1 October, 1997 on the Warner Network. In the UK, transmission began in January 1998 on Sky One (continuing until August). The first semi-season of 12 (Anno I); 20 more in the season that's just concluded in the US (Anno II). A third season is already commissioned. Buffy Summers (Sarah Michelle Gellar, whose martial arts skills are genuine) is no Grade A student, but drop-dead cool when confronting evil. Her best ally is Giles, the very English school librarian.

The Master is the Vampire of Season One, trapped under the Hellmouth until his showdown with Buffy. The Anointed, his vassal, is a Damien-like eight-year-old who is usurped in Season Two by the peroxide Spike and his beloved Drusilla. The host of non-vampiric threats includes a snake worshipping cult, an based demon and a possessed ventriloquist's dummy. Armin Shimerman (Quark in DSN) joined as Principal Snyder during Season One. Anthony Head starred in some loved-or-loathed coffee ads, and was also the original magician employing Jonathan Creek.

Cordelia needs rescuing. Angel turns up in the nick-of-time. Music with a dark, post-grunge edge features prominently, sometimes live at the Bronx - Sunnydale's only tolerable club/ meeting-place-sometimes to choreograph action sequences. Nearly every episode sparkles, but these are essential, and typical of the series' depth and subtlety:

Welcome to the Hellmouth

The style-establishing pilot, where the Master awaits the vampire Harvest.

Out of Sight, Out of Mind A student ignored into invisibility sets out to ruin Cordelia's big day as May Queen.

Prophecy Girl

The doom-laden Season One closer, when the Anointed leads Buffy to the Master - and Hell opens...

Hallowe'en

A costume-shop owner causes havoc by transforming his clients to personify their outfits during 'Trick or Treat'.

Lie To Me

An old LA friend of Buffy plans to lead naive Vampire sympathisers to their deaths, hiding his own bitter secret...

Teacher's Pet, with a disguised praying mantis on the school pay roll, is the weakest of the early crop of one-off foes. But the series' variety is essential, and the mix gets more powerful all the time. UK territorial viewers had to wait considerably longer before the series was shown on BBC2 in 1998, 6 months after Sky One and three years after the series started in the US. Co-producer for the show was David Solomon, consulting producer was Howard Gordon, executive producers were Sandy Gallin, Gail Berman, Fran Rubel Kuzui and Kaz Kuzui. Co-executive producer was David Greenwalt. The producer was Gareth Davies, executive producer was Joss Whedon, story editors were Matt Kiene, Joe Reinkemeyer, Rob Des Hotel, Dean Batali, unit production manager and co-producer Joseph M. Ellis. Score was by Walter Murphy, theme was by Nerf Herder, director of photography was Michael Gershman.

Production designer was Steve Hardie, casting was by Marcia Shulman, CSA, costume designer was Susan Puisto, stunt co-ordinator was Jeff Smolek. Special make-up effects created by John Vulich at Optic Nerve Studios. The visual effects were by Area 51. Buffy was a surprise hit for the WB network in America. Airing as a mid-season replacement, it started to make its mark rapidly, and the cast found that they were called back some five months later to reprise their roles for a second season.

Buffy Summers is beautiful, young and will happily kickbox her way into your heart. She is The Chosen One, a mythical figure destined to fight vampires in between her homework assignments, and Sky One's greatest coup this year. Far exceeding the mediocre source movie, Buffy is Beverly Hills 90210 meets Kolchak by way of Clueless, and the dialogue just sizzles. Scream queen Sarah Michelle Gellar tops the cast as the eponymous heroine, and is ably supported by Anthony Head as the bumbling Giles. Punk vampires Spike and Drusilla, added some new blood to Season Two's line-up, and the show just goes from strength to strength. Toothsome boyfriend Angel is appeared in a spin-off series.

By the third season came about Eliza Dushku joined as Faith assisting in the vampiric fight and Seth Green's Oz is now a regular. Buffy has been mourning Angel away from her friends. Meanwhile the love between Willow and Oz develops but the latter's propensity to become a werewolf puts net meaning into the term safe sex.

There was controversy of Season 3 Episode 18, Earshot, which was concerned with a shooting at a high school, the episode was pulled from the schedules in the US due to a real life incident which occurred in a US school. The episode was aired a couple of times in Canada on Satellite before it was pulled however.

Buffy Season Three Overview

The end is nigh for Buffy Summers and her friends. No, not the end of the wildly popular series, but of their time together at Sunnydale High. Buffy the Vampire Slayer's Season Three - which for North American viewers commenced last September and will be complete by early June - has been following Buffy, Willow, Xander, Cordelia and Oz through their senior year, right up to graduation. UK viewers finally get their first chance to view the end of Buffy's Season Two later this summer, with a promise of Season Three in due course. So whether you've seen over 50 episodes already, or just the 20 scheduled on BBC2 before Sky resumes transmission, here's a brief overview of some key points about Season Three.

Firstly, it isn't primarily about the relationship between Buffy and her two-faced vampire lover Angel. Having pursued the story arc to its shattering climax in Season Two, Joss Whedon boldly opted to downplay the pairing this season, and to keep them out of Sunnydale during the season premiere. Although both are soon drawn back to the Californian town, and resume teamwork on the virtuous side of good versus evil, they remain justifiably wary of the consequences of any renewed intimacy.

From a more prosaic angle, Whedon and David Greenwalt (his #2 producer on Buffy, now going into production on Angel) are ensuring that they don't slay a goose that lays golden eggs. In Sarah Michelle Gellar and David Boreanaz, they had two versatile young actors with enough charisma to inspire devotion in viewers from pre-teen to post-menopausal. The young WB network that plays home to Buffy had adroitly made them into two of its standard-bearers, and commissioned the Angel series a year in advance based on the reaction to Buffy. Buffy's Christmas episode Amends is the clearest pointer yet to intentions for Angel, with its themes of redemption, despair and purification, but Angel himself is also pivotal in All Men Are Beasts, Revelations and Enemies.

Secondly, it isn't about Buffy being the undisputed world-champion Chosen One (with her role a closely-guarded secret) anymore. After Buffy's temporary drowning in Prophecy Girl short-circuited the succession of Slayers, Season Two saw guest appearances by her unexpected heir, Kendra. But most of Season Three stations two Slayers in Sunnydale simultaneously, with the teaming of Faith and Buffy providing double the fun, for a while.

Third, it extends our knowledge of the Buffy-verse and our favourite characters within it. Apart from her Watcher Giles and her aforementioned contemporaries, Buffy's night-work is now common (if worrying) knowledge to her mother, her high-school Principal and Sunnydale's Mayor. Through the Mayor, we begin to view the whole history of Sunnydale and its Hellmouth in a different light. But the season also illuminates much about the organisation of Watchers to which Giles is answerable. After an important test of Buffy's slaying skill goes badly, the Council sends another nervously pompous, overheated Englishman to tow (although the contrast between Wesley and Giles is surprisingly clear).

Of course there's still room for new vampires and demons, with some new addition to the cornucopia of evil almost every week. The leading newcomer is the smoothly elegant Mr Trick, but also notable are the ancient Kakistos, the repellent Balthazar and the awesome power of The First. Season Two's star attraction, Spike, reappears, as does his predecessor The Master, and the doomed Jenny Calendar. We've also seen Willow and Xander take centre-stage in separate episodes, and together as vampire lovers in a parallel world. So, as if Buffy's life wasn't complex enough before with the juggling of slaying, high school, demons of all kinds and her passion for a reformed killer, Season Three just piles on the pressure. The result is an endlessly watchable saga of young people evolving as they mature, whatever the horrors of the world around them. Oh, and it's still a gloriously funny show with jaw-dropping fight scenes. 'Nuff said really.

Season Four - Can Buffy survive without Angel or Cordelia? Chances were high as the personal shift coming at an appropriate juncture with High School over and university beckoning. According to Joss Whedon the shift to a university campus means, "Buffy is back to having a secret identity". She will begin to learn to love again when she meets teaching assistant Riley Finn played by Marc Blucas. Xander, although not attending Sunnydale University, ends up working behind the campus bar. There will be frequent appearances from James Marsters as Spike and also Cordelia's former friend Harmony (Mercedes McNab). There will be some slight modifications in that Buffy will become more independent with Giles not always on the scene. A major part in the story arc will be devoted to why is there a university in such a small town as Sunnydale. Might it have something to do with the Hellmouth?! Seth Green's Oz takes a break from the series after the first six episodes of the fourth season.

With a few years behind them, long running shows begin to experience the same problems that bands find with new albums: do you keep doing the same old same old that keeps only a small hardcore happy, or do you branch out, and risk alienating everyone? Both approaches have been tried: Next Generation somehow survived for seven years through changing little more than Data's face-paint, whereas Doctor Who regenerated itself every few years with a new actor. Voyager brought in a new audience two years back when it took a leaf out of the catering-at-Christmas book, and introduced a curvaceous bird in tight Bacofail. However, Buffy has always been an organic show, allowing its characters to grow and change, and with Season Four the question is not so much if it should change, but how.

Of course, some changes have already been inflicted: the black-clad, sulk-in-human-form Angel has departed to L.A. Cordelia's off pursuing her dreams of stardom. Giles is no longer Buffy's Watcher. And none of those remaining in the town have the intimate security of Sunnydale High to provide comfort and familiarity. In short, it would be difficult to wonder how Season Four could actually change things any further. Certainly this new season is a very different beast to its predecessors, mainly because of location and space. Sunnydale University is a sprawling place, full of new people, none of whom are aware of Buffy's status as 1998/9 Class Protector (though you would think word might get around - are she and Willow the only ones from Sunnydale High to stay local?). Giles and Xander are no longer easily available, with Xander taking on more jobs than Frank Spencer (even if most of his new employment sparks off the episode's adventures), and Giles staying at home to seemingly watch television most of the time. Willow and Oz are regularly putting the couple into being a couple, which puts Buffy out in the cold. So at least not everything has changed.

Some of these changes mentioned are welcome: Angel isn't really missed at all from the stories, and it rather worryingly shows up how superfluous the character often was. After all, within two episodes of Season Four, Buffy has already found one man to get all emotional about, even if we all know he's the wrong one (so no change there then). Reliable Riley is also waiting in the wings to woo the Slayer, even if there are a few difficulties to overcome with their relative extra-curricular projects. Ex-wishdemon Anya is easily filling the gap left by a departed Cordelia, proving to be as blunt as Granny's old dentures in her lustful pursuit of Xander Harris (check out her Bunny Girl costume in Fear, Itself. And absolutely no one is missing last year's ex-cruciating new Watcher Wesley).

The early part of the season shows a worryingly inconsistent range of episodes, providing ones good, bad and downright god-awful. Strong opener The Freshman eventually provides a vampire foe for an out-of-her-depth Slayer to fight, but the episode's horror has been more from the loneliness and starkness of a new, grown-up environment. First 'crossover event' The Harsh Light of Day is a good if busy episode which brings Spike back with a vengeance (plus his new girlfriend) in a quest for a magical item which will make him invincible. Wild at Heart is a strong Oz and Willow story which if watched midday makes for a very depressing afternoon, though there's little to fault (except for some terrible lip-syncing by sultry lead singer Veruca who really is a bit of a hound).

The Halloween episode Fear Itself is a rather obvious flirtation with the haunted-by-our-worst-fear plot, but handled with both strong humour and some haunting in-depth character studies. And in Giles carving out an entrance for himself, the episode provides another of those bizarrely iconic moments that can only feature in title sequences or post-cheese-ontoast dreams. However, whereas in previous years Buffy has managed a quality where even the not-so-good episodes were head and shoulders above most shows' average ones, Season Four so far has its fair share of... well, let's just call them unremarkable. Living Conditions managed to divide opinion over its room-share plotline, but the exaggerated, escalating war of nerves never convinces, and Buffy's temporary insanity makes little sense. There's also the massive contrivance of what's causing these problems.

And then there's Beer Bad. The best thing you can say about this is that the title enables its critics to easily quote it as Episode Bad, thus simplifying life for hacks and reviewers everywhere. The worst thing you can say about it is that this is the first Buffy episode to actually be painful to view. Five minutes of watching some young men earn their acting union cards with a bit of impromptu method caveman should be enough for most to start hitting the channel change buttons, if not bottles of surgical alcohol. And if the story has a message at all, it's that there's no problem that can't be solved by either beer, setting light to things, hitting people with branches, or 'interesting' combinations of all three. Whilst enduring this episode you get the distinct impression that someone was secretly trying to write a clever episode, except that they forgot to put the clever biting.

Thankfully, a few weeks after comes the funny and significant The Initiative which begins to outline Season Four's background storyline, and makes it a little clearer who the, friends and enemies are. It's possible to argue that up to this point, the series really hasn't let itself go in the ways of past seasons (after all, the last season was firing on all cylinders four episodes in) but there's been a lot more to deal with. And even a third of the way through the series, if there are questions that remain unanswered: for example, how is Giles funding his continued stay in America, and how long before he gets Green Carded out? And what has happened to the rest of the vampires in Sunnydale, as Buffy only seems to patrol the campus? For answers to all this and much more (probably!), don't miss the very latest episodes of, Buffy: The Vampire Slayer.

While so much attention has been turned on the new Buffy spin-off, Angel, Sarah Michelle Gellar quietly returned for her fourth season as the mouthy vampire butt-kicker who is now suffering a broken heart and coping with life after high school. Equally reluctant to take no crap in her own life, the 22-year-old star met with Dreamwatch during Halloween week - without a costume, of course - to let loose on life after Angel, life with Buffy and how she really felt about the criticism leveled at her show during the

Columbine High School massacre....'

At work we do very big Halloween episodes, and the latest one dealt with fears and how the scariest thing in life is if we feed off our own fears. It's about what happens when every horrible fear that we have comes true, and how fear can split people so that all of a sudden you start distrusting the only people around you that you used to be able to trust, so that was very scary actually. In my own life, Halloween is a great holiday as a celebrity because it's the one holiday you can truly participate in because all you need is a mask on your face and you can go trick-or-treating door to door with nobody having a clue who's behind the mask. My best friend has a two-and-a-half year old so I don my mask and take her around Malibu door-to-door. How did you feel about the season finale being postponed because of the Columbine High School shooting and the criticisms that were levelled at your show?

It was a really interesting time for me. When Columbine happened, I was in Europe promoting my film Cruel Intentions and I was sitting in my hotel room watching it all on television from an outsider's perspective. The press over there kept asking me, 'How does this happen in America?' and I really have no concept how this happens to people. How do parents let their children get to that certain point? Having a child is the greatest gift in the world to me, and in my opinion it is the parents' job to raise them and watch them and talk about things, so that information would come out that would prevent them from locking themselves in their room with posters of Hitler on the wall. When I got back, everyone was blaming television and radio and this movie that's coming out and I thought, 'I just got back from Europe where they have the same TV shows and movies yet this problem really only exists in our country so how can we blame entertainment?'

I became very defensive and protective of my show. People put so much pressure on entertainment to reach society values and lessons and yet it needs to start closer to home in my opinion. On my show, we show young women where normally women are in jeopardy, yet these women can take care of themselves and these women can protect and save the day and we don't beat up good people; we beat up the bad people. They cancelled our season finale where Buffy fights a 12-Foot computer graphic snake and I'm at a loss as to why. It was an episode about children banding together for the good of the community and it was also part-cartoon and so obviously not real - yet people are looking for scapegoats. If someone would take the time to really watch the lessons and the morals that our show does, I think they'd be unbelievably surprised.

Are you very outspoken in your own life? Do I yell at home because the toilet seat was left up? Well, I certainly have very strong opinions and I'm not afraid to say them and stick by them, but I like to think that I'm also open-minded. I understand that there is a big problem and that there are some shows maybe that are a little too violent and are depicting the wrong things, but when it comes to my show part of the reason I love it is because of what we're doing. We're using monsters as metaphors for growing up. There's nothing more horrific than high school and going to college and if you boil our show down to its simplest form, we're teaching the simplest lessons.

Now that David and Charisma have gone off to work on ANGEL, how is the atmosphere on your set? It was interesting when they first said that David was going to get his own show. I was so excited for him, watching how he's grown since he started on the show as his first real job. Maybe I was getting too comfortable with David. What an exciting adventure now, for both my character and myself, and for David and his character, but I have to tell you as an actor I miss him immensely. Every time they try and bring someone new in for Buffy, all I can think is, 'but it's not Angel!'. I'm not really sure what we're going to do now. We just did an interesting episode where Buffy spent the summer moping over her boyfriend - like everybody who loses their first love and then this cute sophomore in college asks her out and she's so excited and he says all the right things and does all the right things and she sleeps with him on the first date and then he dumps her.

I ran into Joss' [creator/producer Joss Whedon] office screaming, 'Buffy would never do this. All this history with Angel this is wrong!' And Joss said to me, 'Sarah, try going to college. This is what people do and this is how they learn and these are the mistakes they make', and that is exactly what Buffy is going through. Right now she's trying to convince herself, like most young girls do, that she needs to get away from the bad guy and find a nice, solid guy but she's terrified without that fire and intensity and passion that she would step all over a nice guy because she'll be bored. I think Angel is her true love and I don't know if she can ever find love like that again. I just did my first cross-over episode with ANGEL and it was an amazing experience and one of the best episodes we've ever done; they really have a wonderful show over there. So many stars make so much money these days. How do you handle the responsibility of that kind of money: do you know where it is at all times or do other people handle it for you?

Some people have very nasty things to say about the money that is earned in this industry but I went to work yesterday at 5 am and got home about 1 or 2 am and went to bed and was back there at 7 this morning. I don't think people really understand the difficulty and the hours and basically the life you give up for this job. When I first got Buffy, all I could think about was the fact that my health insurance was covered for the next five years. Money is a very personal thing and I'm still getting used to it all. I still call my business manager when I want to get a new car to see if it's OK. I was very, very poor growing up so it's something very new to me and the main thing I want to do is make sure that I can take care of myself and my family. It was my mom's birthday recently and I had the pleasure of buying her an apartment, and she said this was the first thing she'd ever owned. I have a house too and that kind of security is the greatest gift that this job has brought me. I watched way too many people have their money swindled - when I was on All My Children, Susan Lucci had this one business manager who ran off with $7 million and I kept saying to myself, 'If I ever have a million dollars, I'm going to know where it is at all times', and it's something that I've stuck by. Do you consider yourself a role model?

I used to say that it was Buffy that was the role model, not me, but that is changing. The show had asked me to do a cover story and the magazine wanted me to do a travel piece. Rather than doing one more 'celebrity getting a free trip to a spa' story, I went to the Dominican Republic to work for Habitat for Humanity, helping to build a house and learning what it was like to be that kind of missionary. It's a great time for children to learn about it because sometimes you graduate high school and can't afford to travel, you could go help a community and learn first-hand.

Afterwards, when I was having a depressed week, the magazine sent me a stack of about 250 letters from young girls all over the country who said, 'I always loved your show but now I feel like you're a real person and I'm going to go out and do just like you did and help people'. I'd argue that I wasn't the role model but they responded, 'You're just as much a role model because you're a young girl that had a desire to be something and you went after it and you still help people out and could know'. As much as I will always treasure that trip, I will treasure those letters probably more. It's true that I was very cautious about how I represented myself until I was twenty-one because there are a lot of things open to young actors like getting into bars and drinking alcohol, but I would never drink at an event and I've still never been to the Roxbury or the Viper Room. I think that is part of what Love Hewitt and Katie Holmes and I all represent - young women who are very focused, doing an adult's job but still maintaining a modicum of teenageness.

After four years of playing Buffy, what stage of the relationship are you in? This year is a very interesting one for me. We came back and it was like starting a whole new show. All our high school sets have been torn down and David's trailer is gone, and Faith wasn't there, and we had these new sets and it was almost like having a new character for me to play. It's a time for Buffy to learn to make decisions on her own and even though I sometimes feel, 'God, I've been doing this so long I can do this in my sleep', that is when I know I have to be even more on my game than I was last year. I am only as good as the television show that I do, and until I can find something else that is as challenging as Buffy I'm blessed to have my show and I'm very fulfilled by it. Ask me that again in the sixth year and maybe I'll have a different answer! How long do you see BUFFY going on?

Definitely through next year. That's as far as Joss is committed. As long as Joss is there, I'm there. I'm there every day to make the show that we make but nobody has really talked to any of us yet about our plans after this. I want to make sure this show keeps the level of intelligent work that we do and I don't want to be on for ten years just so we can all retire early. I want to make a good show and if I ever feel like we can't do that anymore, then that's going to be the time to stop. But there are no dates on that yet.

If you were given a special power, what kind of power would you want? My dream power is that even if I get only two hours of sleep, it would feel like I had twelve! That's my dream in life - that I could be awake every day and have energy and not get rundown. I want a body that doesn't get sick!

For the actor who plays him, Nicholas Brendon, life hasn't been quite so hectic, although like the rest of the Buffy cast, he has had to adapt to new sets, new backgrounds for his character, and the lack of some familiar faces, now working over on the sister series ANGEL.

Relaxing in his trailer on the BUFFY lot two days before the Thanksgiving holiday in late November, Nicholas is more assured than he was the last time we met, a year earlier. Although, as he points out, he's being kept "busy busy busy! The show's becoming much broader. The things we were thinking about writing in the first few years, we're now writing them, and we're having to do them. It's more like a well-oiled machine now. We get more done. We work harder. We run from set to set to get things completed. Our fights are grander this year, our explosions are grander, our stunts are grander." So the producers are definitely working them harder. "Yes, so our bodies are telling us. They offered us flu shots but I don't like to have them. The first year I got sick. "We're shooting episode 11 right now, so tomorrow [the last day of shooting that episode] is the halfway point of the season. We're airing episode 8 tomorrow, so right now we're only three ahead. But we're doing reruns right through December so we can catch up.

While it seems to us that Xander matured across the third season, Nick doesn't share that opinion. "I don't know. I think he took three steps backwards. Sometimes you have to take three steps backwards before you can go forwards, you know? And he's still in the middle of that. He's trying to find his place in life, his niche. I don't know if he really has progressed, except laterally. And now he's dating the demon Anya! It's kind of whoever shows interest, he's going to climb aboard and see how long he can stay on that ride for.

"It was kind of weird with the Cordelia thing, because she's over on ANGEL now, and you think, 'Wow we used to date'. When you're close with a character, you're often close with the people as well, and then when you guys break up on the show, you kind of break up a little in real life as well. I haven't talked to Charisma since we broke up, much at all really, because we were always in different scenes and then she was over on ANGEL. Kind of strange." Did Nick have any input into the way Xander treated Cordelia after the break-up? After all, it was Xander who paid for Cordelia's prom dress when he learned that her father had lost all his money in back taxes. "Nah. We had a couple of scenes where we were butting heads, which was like the old Cordy and Xandy. There was just the dress buying thing, but then Joss didn't want to have any big goodbyes, so it was just kind of assumed that I bought her the dress, she said thank you, and I said you're welcome. And then she walked away. At first it wasn't odd, because this was at the end of last season, and I didn't see her during hiatus. She's over there doing that work."

While Seth Green, Sarah Michelle Gellar and James Marsters (Spike) have all made appearances on the new series, Nick doesn't think that Xander will be making the trip to Angel Investigations. "There's really no reason for me. Xander hates Angel, and he's in LA, and we're in Northern California. I know they talked about it; they were talking about using me and Alyson in episode 3, but they used Seth instead to give Angel the ring because it made more sense. I don't think it's going to happen. Which is fine, because we're busy here, and when you're doubling up, it's 'Oh shoot, I've got to go over there'... If they ask me to do it, of course I will, but I don't think that I would fit into their plotline over there."

How does Nick feel about the double act that Xander and Giles are developing? "It's kind of funny. I love working with Tony [Head], and Giles is kind of becoming much more broad too, now that he's not the guy who just gives you exposition. He's wearing a weird funky sombrero hat, and dressing up for Halloween; dressing more slyly now, and having sex in his apartment. It's weird - I know it's written that way but Xander and Giles and Nick and Tony are acting differently together. I'm giving him a harder time. Before it was Giles saying, 'Oh, I have a job for you,' now we're kind of in the same boat. We're both 'townies' now. We don't have any jobs. He's not the Watcher any more. We're both here because we want to help, and we both don't have any super powers."

Those who don't attend the University of Sunnydale are referred to as 'townies' by the students and faculty, and Xander has been made to feel more than a little uncomfortable when he's visited his friends on campus. Despite that, though, he and Giles will still do whatever is necessary - including dressing up in camouflage gear and waiting for a signal. "Joss has cranked it up a little bit," Nick agrees.

Is that leading anywhere that he's aware of? "I don't know anything that's going on," he says bluntly. "The only things I know are who Joss would not get rid of, in terms of killing, and who he would kill... I can say that I am one of the ones that he will not kill. You've got the core, and then there are the ones who he would kill. Joss is definitely one to pull the rug out. Right when people get comfortable, then don't..." Where does he see Xander going? Is he still lost? Is he looking for something in Sunnydale? "He's a 19 year old kid, and he's not going to college. Which I think is great that we have a character like that, because there are a lot of kids who aren't going to college in the world. I think he's trying to find his niche and probably is looking for a break. But he's definitely working. He's had three or four jobs so far this year; he's got the mentality to work and hold a job down - even if he does get poisoned by beer! I don't think he's thinking that much right now. Especially at nineteen, you've still got the whole high school horrors right in front of you - 'I'm not going to school right now', which is good. He can kind of kick back and help fight evil."

He has found his acting muscles challenged by some of the past year's scripts. "In The Wish, where I become a vampire, that was fun. I don't know I'd want to sit in that chair all the time. My make up right now is like, boom, boom, no prosthetics. But having my whole face cast for the prosthetics freaked me out. Forty minutes of this hardening process, I guess I'm much more, claustrophobic than I thought. It was a lot of fun in the moment, even if it was something completely different. I don't know which one comes easier to me: drama and being evil, or comedy. It was nice step away from that for a while. The Zeppo was all of my bag of tricks everything that I had was there." What was his reaction when he read the script? "I cried." With laughter? "No - it was Xander growing up. It was definitely a coming of age episode."

As well as focussing heavily on Xander, The Zeppo was a very effects heavy episode, as the Hellmouth opened underneath the library once more. Did Nick feel that that threatened to overshadow the main story? "Well, I was running around with three or four dead guys, so they had good make up effects. Special effects? There was the snake - par for the course, for the most part. I read a script and go, 'Hell, I'm doing a scene with a giant bug,' and you go out there and make it as real as possible then you go home and show up the next day and do the same thing!" Has the fourth season brought any major focus on Xander? "Not so far this year. No.

A scene here, scene there. No major episodes like The Pack or The Zeppo yet. Beer Bad was the closest one yet."

Amongst British fans, the central theme that excess drinking leads to caveman-like behaviour, literally in this case - attracted some criticism. "I think that was only one of the plotlines in it," Nick points out. "I know the writers love their drinking, but not like that! We weren't trying to preach. And it's college we're looking at how frat guys definitely abuse beer, and the things that people do in college they wouldn't imagine doing outside in the secular world. I know that they liked the episode here, in terms of upstairs, but it wasn't one of our best. I thought it was a fun show!"

Nick is prepared to go with the flow. "I don't think about it much any more. Joss is the voice. We'll have discussions here and there, but what he writes, or someone else writes and Joss advises, I think is cool. I'm pretty much: read the script, show up to work and find out this is where this guy is going. It's nice not being in control. Xander is a very important person in my life, but he's not me. I've got enough of that in my own life. It's nice to relinquish control, delegate what this kid is going to do. "He's just growing up - 'life, love, the pursuit of happiness'. I don't see the character going in a certain direction exactly. He's going to be a townie for a while, and then try to discover himself, or define himself. You can't redefine unless you define."

How about away from Sunnydale: what else has Nick been working on? "I did a movie called Psycho Beach Party. I think that comes out in the summer. I haven't seen it," he explains. "When you're doing nine months of the show, it's like running a marathon. I have my eyes on opening up a production company. I just want to do quality not quantity. Shopping things. Attaching my name to certain things. I don't like having goals. You set yourself up for defeat if you don't accomplish them. I roll with the punches."

Following events in the theoretical movie Buffy: The Vampire Slayer, Buffy and her mum move to a new town to start over. Unfortunately Sunnydale sites on a mystical convergence, which attracts the undead and the supernatural. So Buffy has more sinister slaying than ever. All is not doom and gloom, she has new friends, and a new boyfriend. . . Never mind that Angel is a 400 year old boyfriend. Lots of atmosphere, an appealing sassy heroin in Sarah Michele Gellar, witty scripts and plenty of teen angst have made Buffy a huge cult hit.

BUGS

The bugs being referred to in the series title are of the electronic variety, not insects. The series centres around the adventures of a trio who operate a high tech security firm. The trio consists of : Ed, a daredevil and former pilot who is a bit on the naive side. He has the least amount of experience with the high tech stuff. The firm's boss is Ros, a young woman who is an expert at computer hacking and designing fantastic electronic gizmos, many of which are a bit beyond the realm of possibility. The third member of the team is Beckett, a former government agent. Beckett came to Ros for help clearing his name after he had been framed as a traitor in the first episode. After clearing his name Beckett decided to stay with Ros, instead of going back to his old job.

Most of the assignments the Bugs crew take on come from firms worried about industrial espionage, often being called in after the firm's own security systems have failed. The heroes have an arsenal of high tech gadgets, most of them designed by Ros, which seem capable of solving almost any problem that they run into. The bad guys have their fair share of gadgets, including such things as a machine that removes sound from explosions and electronic mosquitoes which are programmed to assassinate a person based on his DNA. One bit of formula plotting in Bugs has one of the heroes get captured by the bad guys and the other two need to rescue him or her.

The Good Guys: Ed (Craig McLachlan), Ros Henderson (Jaye Griffiths), and Nick Beckett (Jesse Birdsall) made up the team in the first two seasons. They were joined in Season Three by Jan Harvey as Jan, the mysterious new head of the team, and Paula Hunt as Alex, the clerical assistant-cum--karate expert. Season Three also introduced Channing (Michael Grandage), Ros's new boyfriend who tried to tempt her away to America with the promise of true love and pots of cash.

Robert Morgan played Roland Blatty, head of the Bureau of Weapons, who was encountered a couple of times before being zombified by CyberAx. The Bad Guys: Jean-Daniel (Gareth Marks), the devious mastermind behind most of Season Two's misdeeds, bit the bullet big time in The Bureau of Weapons. CyberAx, a computer virus that had learnt how to cross the bridge between technology and biology, has caused trouble for the team a few times. For a while, the team's head was replaced by a new Jan (Diana Hardcastle), with nefarious motives of her own. Number of episodes: By the end of the forthcoming Season Four, 40. And they said it wouldn't last... And isn't that... The only 'big name' guest star is Men Behaving Badly's Leslie Ash (as Kitty McHaig) in the opening two episodes of Season Three (Blaze of Glory The Revenge Effect).

Best of the Bunch: Assassins Inc, the first episode to be filmed, is an enjoyable romp featuring some improbable mosquito-sized flying syringes filled with a genetic serum designed to wipe out anyone of Royal de-scent. Pulse set the tone that Season Two would follow: high-tech espionage, low-brow villain motivation, and a bloody big bazooka. Black-our is Bugs' stab at Die Hard, and it carries it off very well. Major grief for Ros in Fugitive, when she is suspected of leaking secrets from the bureau, which features some harrowing interrogation scenes. And the season three finale, Renegades, features the return of CyberAx, some tender moments for Ros and Nick, and a totally unexpected cliff-hanger. Bottom of the Barrel: It's Soylent Green done badly in Manna from Heaven; and Einstein's Run, unbelievably, features a remote control dog and a stock-pile of nuclear weapons in the middle of a highly populated city.

Overdone clichés: Well, you'd expect a few from a consciously nostalgic ITC homage. Bugs specialises in the 'opening a locked door by using a bleeping box with a flashing light on top' device which, like the sonic screwdriver in DOCTOR WHO, makes the whole thing a little too easy sometimes. Fashion statements: Primary colours are the order of the day. So much so, in fact, that a producer once warned a Radio Times photographer that he was not allowed to take photos of Craig McLachlan wearing a black T shirt. Black, it seems, is not in the Bugs 'ethos'. By the time the third season has come about, the team were blackmailed into working for a mysterious government branch with an equally mysterious head known simply as Jan, who would assign the Bugs team job relating to the security of the nation.

Various SF related plots included, 'Assassins Inc' in which are trio come up against an evil genius who delights in inventing and marketing in new and igneous ways of killing, from voice activated bomb to flying weapons which targets a persons pheromones. There was the two part story 'What Goes Up (Part 1), Must Come Down (Part 2)' in which Ed finds himself becoming an astronaut. In 'Newton's Run', a mad man steal a cyborg dog from a research lab (shades of THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN). Take three freelance trouble-shooters -two male, one female - place them in a hi-tech world of the nearly possible, and put them up against an assortment of dastardly villains out to abuse technology for evil ends. Sound familiar?

It could be THE NEW AVENGERS or even THE CHAMPIONS - but this is their nineties descendent, and its no surprise to see AVENGERS creator Brain Clemens credited as the guiding hand behind this British action adventure series. B was created to fill a perceived gap in the TV market for a simple, action based series. No gritty social realism, no complex back story, in fact no complex characters - just goodies or baddies and lots of Bond or Mission :Impossible style gadgets and adventure.

B is timeless, set in a non-specific future and a non-specific location. Its filmed London's docklands deliberately to give it a slightly unreal urban back drop that could just as easily be Turin or Frankfurt or some other European or even American city - a handy device when you're trying to stimulate foreign sales. The trio of hero's fit the pattern neatly - there's Ed, the daredevil pilot and acrobatic action man, equally at home scaling tall building or dangling of helicopters. Ros, the glamorous electronics wizard, knocking up gizmos like a hi-tech Blue Peter presenter, and Beckett the level headed former military spook, always known by his surname.

Storyline has included holographics, computer hacking, a space shuttle mission, a gold eating microbe, a wonder drug, artificial intelligence, remote control implants, computer viruses that can affect people - and a recurring arch villain. Most of the assignments the team take on come from firms worried about industrial sabotage, often being called in after the firms own security system has failed. The heroes have an arsenal of high tech gadgets, the bad guys have their fair share of gadgets as well however, including such things as a machine that removes sound from explosions and an experimental new car which is stolen.

Most episodes start and end in the same way. The hook, in which the villains makes his play, and a climax usually against the clock and frequently involving loud explosions. The cast - former soap star Craig McLachlan and Jesse Birdsall and ex Bill copper Jaye Griffiths - work hard. In fact everyone works hard, from the stuntmen to the special effects team - to create honest escapist entertainment. And one other notable name in the credits is that of Stephen Galager, who also created CHIMERA and OKTOBER., as well as a couple of cerebral DOCTOR WHO stories, 'Warrior's Gate' and 'Terminus'.

B should work, and on a superficial level, it does. But that's its trouble its too superficial. The characterisation is flat, there's little chemistry, sexual or otherwise, and so there's no real involvement. The dramatic tension is cursively slack, the repartee by the numbers. What must have been intended as a strength - its international five minutes into the future flavour - is also a weakness, stranding the series in a dramatic no man's land as anonymous as its trademark locations. B eschews the eccentric englishness of THE AVENGERS, but that was an essential, enduring part of the series' appeal. B may get better ratings up to 12.5 million - but it could do with some of its ancestors charm. Season two was an improvement on the first - the adding of the Bugs teams nemesis - Jean Daniel helps - and the technology is clearly getting more, not less outlandish.

It's a reflection of the moribund state of British SF that a main stream action-adventure with SF leanings is hailed in some quarters as a new dawn. It might yet break down a few barriers and kick start a British SF revival, but it seems unlikely. Telefantasy is a funny old game, but this is not the stuff cults are made off.

At the start of the fourth season the first major change in cast members occurred with the replacement of Craig McLachlan who played Ed with Steven Houghton who played Ed from season four. This type of change in the cast shows a lack of caring for the show, assume that nobody would tell that Ed is a new man, literally.

Bugs is a throwback to the expensive glossy adventure series which were popular on ITV during the 1960's and early 1970's. Bugs is the creation of Brian Clemens, whose previous creations included The Avengers and The Professionals for ITV. Bugs however is on the BBC, not the usual home for such an expensive production. Bugs has obviously been designed for sale to commercial stations abroad, since each episode contains fade outs for commercial breaks.

The series' producers were Brain Eastman and Stuart Doughty, production designers were Mark Raggett (Season One) and Marcus Rowland (Season Two), executive producer was Caroline Oulton, series consultants were Brain Clemens and Stephen Gallagher. The music was created by Gavin and Simon Greenaway. The series was shown on BBC 1.

For the series' fourth season Steve Houghton joined the crew, taking over the role Craig McLachlan had, playing Ed once more. Steve has previously starred in popular UK drama London's Burning. The original series was set mainly around the London Docklands, but by the third season the series had ventured a little further into the West of London, the same area in which CRIME TRAVELLER was filmed. By the fourth season the series was filmed mostly in North London and the Elstree Studios.

As Bugs came to the end of its fourth season, it was entrenched in the public imagination. Its stylized action-adventure made sure that it had caught the eye of not only nearly ten million viewers, but also the favourable attention of TV critics. The fourth season was unusual in that 10 episodes were made but only seven were shown, the other three episodes were aired almost a year later on BBC1.

2 - 9 THE BUREAU OF WEAPONS (PART 1 OF 2)

A deadly powerful creature called Cyberax has escaped from a computer and then suddenly Cyberax the company is born, by no other than Jean-Daniel. He creates a machine that takes over some of the user's mind. Once they have finished using the Cyberax headset, it leaves a little bit of itself behind. when the person finds out about Cyberax again, as they forget all memories to do with Cyberax, their brains go into overload and they kill themselves. Roland Blatty (the old bureau chief) gets hold of one of these headsets and blows his brain up when Ed jokingly says that he hopes that Roland has had the system checked for viruses. The whole Bureau team are also wiped out when they too discover the deadly truth about Cyberax. Beckett decides that the only way to stop this is to pretend that he has used the headset and had his brain blown up (so to speak) and he is taken away by Cassandra, who is now working with Jean-Daniel. Jean-Daniel realises that Beckett wouldn't do something so stupid, so he takes a gun and goes after him, and finds him searching the building they are in. So he hits him on the head with the gun and puts him in the boot of the car! Ros and Ed go to find Beckett, and Cassandra and Jean-Daniel try to escape. Ros realises the only thing she can do to stop the whole building from blowing up is to use the Cyberax headset. So that is what she does, to Beckett and Eds' horror. Ros is left with a tiny bit of Cyberax inside her and Ed and Beckett are getting very concerned....

2 - 10 A CAGE FOR SATAN (PART 2 OF 2)

Another second part to end the Series. Cyberax's destructive nature has entered Ros' brain and Beckett and Ed find themselves racing against time (and the fact that if Ros finds out about the true nature of Cyberax, her mind will explode) to save her. Beckett 'foils' Jean-Daniel's plans, but in the process accidentally tells Ros the truth about Cyberax, and Ed has to kill her, electrocuting her. The reason being that 'because Cyberax is a virus in the memory, you have to shut down the system and reboot with a completely new set of instructions'- (as said by Ed).

3 - 1 BLAZE OF GLORY

First of a two parter to start off Series 3. A man called McHaig's business is desperately trying to be sabotaged, and he calls in Ros, Ed and Beckett to investigate. It turns out that just recently, McHaig's son, Christopher, committed suicide and Ed goes to see McHaig's daughter, Kitty McHaig, to find out more about the business. Kitty decides to blow up half of London, using a chemical weapon that is under the 'family' business. Beckett goes to The Bureau of Weapons Technology (the place where Roland used to work), where he meets Jan and Alex. Jan manages to con him into working at the Bureau, because of his financial problems and the fact that she catches him and Alex looking at Code: Red files. The team manage to stop the chemical weapon going off, just in time, but Ed realises that there is another bomb in the 'Battle wagon' (an invention of Kitty's). 3 - 2 THE REVENGE EFFECT

The second part, where Ed is still in hospital and feeling a bit depressed at the fact that his injuries mean that he will be in and out of hospital for a while. He has, however, agreed to join the Bureau, where as

Ros 'doesn't want to give up her independence.' Outside, in the hospital corridors, Ros admits that she is worried about Ed and gets all emotional. Beckett tells her that everything will be OK, but sounds more unsure than she is. Kitty tries to change her identity, to drop out of sight, and chooses the Duchess of Forteza. But her unloyal associate changes the password to her new bank account, and gives it to Ed. So, Kitty kidnaps Ed to get it. There is soon a race against time for the team to find the code name for the account, as they know the password, not the name, and for Kitty, to get the password, as she knows the access name. Alex manages to get the code name, by pretending to be Ros, and going to the bank.

3 - 5 NUCLEAR FAMILY

A foreign president is critically ill and everyone thinks he is dying, and there is no cure for his disease. Then, an English doctor discovers a way of saving his life, but he has to wait to undergo the operation. It is then found out that there is a traitor within the embassy, and the finger is instantly pointed at his much younger wife. All of Bureau Two believe her to be the traitor, except Beckett, who won't believe it (does he ever?) and thinks that the security guard is responsible. He and Nataliar (the wife) are then kidnapped by the people the traitor is working for, and one woman sets up a bomb next to them, with green pressure pad to detonate it. Ros, of course sets this off.

Dir John Stroud

3 - 6 FUGITIVE

Ros is set up and sent into custody. Even Jan seems to believe that she is guilty, but Beckett loyally stays beside her and tries to get her out. Ros eventually manages to escape and runs into the comforting arms of Channing. Ros realises that the 'mole' is actually at the SSD (where she was sent into custody) and finds out who it is. The problem is that all the SSD people still think its her, and she is wanted for theft and murder, neither of which she did. She finally manages to make them see who it is. When things have pretty much got back to normal, Channing then tells Ros he is merging worth an American company and is moving to California, and that he wants her to go with him.

3 - 7 HAPPY EVER AFTER?

The team are investigating the mysterious disappearance of a woman called Julia, kidnapped at her own wedding. Ros and Beckett go to the location she is being kept at, and Ros is shot whilst trying to escape. She is taken to hospital and is OK, but Channing tells her that her job is just too dangerous, and that she should definitely go to America with him and Beckett tells her that she should go also. Ed is caught when he tries to rescue Julia, and they discover that the person behind it all is Julia's husband, Mark. They are trapped underneath a bomb, but manage to find a narrow tunnel through which to escape. Beckett has to disarm the bomb, and Ros lets herself out of the hospital and goes to the Bureau to help them.

3 - 8 BURIED TREASURE

Some convicts are conveniently let out of prison a few years before they should by the mysterious 'Athena'. The Bugs team go to investigate about the third man to be let out of prison, a Mr Flood. However, after they confront him, he escapes and runs to the car park, closely followed by Alex, who loses him. Suddenly, he runs at her, determined to throw her off the side of the parking lot and she finds herself throwing him off instead (by accident, of course). So, they decide that Beckett will take his place and he is taken to a place where he has to make a bomb to get through a steel door. With Ros telling him exactly what to do, and with the aid of a 'neat' pair of glasses that enable Ros to see what he is doing, he makes it and finally decides to tell Ros how he feels, saying that he was jealous about her and Channing. However, the communications go down and he thinks that she didn't hear him. He is just talking to himself, saying that it's probably a good thing that she doesn't know how he feels, because she probably doesn't feel the same way, but he doesn't realise that she has actually heard it. The mysterious Athena turns out to be one of Ed's ex-girlfriends, called Sasha, and he goes to pretend that he is on her side. Beckett gets blown up after he has fulfilled his job, much to Ed's surprise. Alex rushes him to hospital, whilst Ros goes to catch Athena. Sasha finds out that Ed works for the government and leaves him to die. However, he escapes and catches up with Ros, and they chase after Sasha, who boards a damaged helicopter and flies off!

3 - 10 RENEGADES

Roland Blatty is still in hospital and a nurse explains to a new one that he will remain that way forever. However, once she has left the room, leaving the new nurse and Roland alone, he suddenly wakes up and attacks her, before walking out of the hospital. Beckett, Ed and Alex go to check on the other two members of the bureau, who are also in hospital. Ed and Alex find that the woman they were going to check on has also escaped from the hospital she was in, in the same circumstances as Roland. The woman Beckett checks on is, however, still unconscious, and he is explaining to the nurse what to look out for, when the woman wakes up, attacks Beckett and flees from the hospital before anyone can stop her. The team soon find out that the old bureau members are after the four discs that make up the remains of Cyberax. The virus was kept on four discs so that the next time something like that happened, they could use Cyberax to help them overcome it. Beckett is suddenly kidnapped by Roland, as they get increasingly closer to the whereabouts of the three, and Roland phones up Ros demanding for the forth and final disc, or he will kill Beckett. Ros rushes to find someone called Lord Forward, as he has the disc. However, as she finds the place where he lives, she discovers that he is in fact dead, and his son has taken over as Lord Forward, and also has no clue as to the whereabouts of the disc. Ros manages to discover where it is from the clue in a letter he wrote before he died, saying that he would keep the disc 'in a place where he can keep permanent watch over it.' Ros retrieves the disc and Roland enters the building with Beckett. Ros is suddenly confronted by Jan and a rather large gun, who demands that the fourth disc is destroyed so that Cyberax cannot be reborn

4 - 1 ABSENT FRIENDS

Ros is missing and Beckett, Alex and Ed are desperately searching for her. However, they find her car a river with some of her blood in it, and presume that she is dead. Beckett won't accept this, and sobs his little heart out at Ros' house. He ends up quitting from the bureau, to devote his time to searching for Ros. Beckett goes to see Ros' Mum, her ex-fiancee, Terry and does everything he can to determine Ros' whereabouts. Ros is actually alive and well (naturally) and is working with Terry. Ed and Alex are given a job to transport what they think is something that saves lives- but they were given false information. Beckett is also where Alex and Ed are, still trying to find leads on what happened to Ros, and then Ros suddenly appears, steals the stuff that Alex and Ed are looking after, with Terry and two other people and runs to Terry's van. As she starts the van, and starts to drive off, she sees Beckett, but is told by Terry to keep driving. She does as he says, leaving behind Beckett, who was continuously shouting her name. He sinks to the floor, crying loudly and wondering why she left him there.....

4 - 2 SACRIFICE TO SCIENCE

Ros is still missing, although now the others know that she is not actually dead. Ros decides to ring Beckett and ask him to meet her, and Beckett quickly rushes to where she is. They meet on a bridge and Beckett is demanding an explanation, but Ros is too upset to give an answer. They go to see the others (Terry, Chris and Morag) who voice their opinions on Bureau 2 becoming involved; they don't like it one bit, especially Terry, who ideally wants to pick up where he and Ros left off, but he realises that that is never going to happen, because Ros is together with Beckett. However, because Beckett's Jeep had a bug on it the people trying to stop Ros and Terry find out where they are, and Chris and Morag are killed. Then they decide to blow up the base where Ros, Terry and Beckett are. They presume they are dead, but they managed to escape just in time. Beckett and Ros are walking in the hospital garden together and Beckett asks for an explanation. Ros tells him exactly what happened the night she 'died' and Beckett starts to get jealous about the fact that Ros went off with Terry and let him think she was dead. Meanwhile Alex and Ed are investigating the weird stealing of a man's suitcase and find out that a General is trying to pay back a man for killing his family. There was a medical experiment the man was working on which went horribly wrong, with devastating effects. The General plans to kill the man using a special thing that can be matched to a person's genes and kill only them. Alex manages to retrieve the capsule in time, before it is released into the room where the man is and Ros, Beckett and Terry rush into the room to stop the General.

4 - 3 GIRL POWER

Carly, a 14 year old girl breaks into The Hive and for some reason Ros is put in charge of her, which she is not too happy about. Beckett is moving into a rather run-down flat which Alex found for him, and his friendship with Ros is rather 'rocky'. Carly is taken off Ros' hands by a man who turns out to be a baddie after an ancient funeral mask that the Bureau are looking after. He manages to con Carly into stealing the mask and once she realises why they want it, she runs off and hides it. Soon, both Ros and Carly are held prisoner until Carly gives the whereabouts of the mask. They are trapped under a lift. Carly manages to get out and tell Alex and Ed where it is hidden, and they quickly find it.

4 - 4 THE TWO BECKETTS

A man breaks into a building, and although he tries to escape, he is caught. He then asks for Beckett, saying that he will only talk to him, and no-one else, and although beckett doesn't know who he is, he goes to meet him. Once he reaches the place and sees the man, he simply says "You," and punches him. The man then reveals that he is Beckett's father. Beckett takes his Dad to his house, where he tries to explain why he ran out on Beckett 10 years ago, after his Mum's funeral. He then explains that he was trying to find out about the whereabouts of a man who is after the two witnesses that will send him to prison. Ed goes to check it out, only to see that the man has escaped. Both of the witnesses are kidnapped and Beckett's Dad finally reveals that he wants to see the man go down because he killed Beckett's Mum. So, Beckett and his Dad go to find the man, as well as the two witnesses and Alex, who got mixed up in the whole thing.

BURNING ZONE, THE

VIRUSES. Devastatingly deadly viruses that can wipe out a city in less time than it takes to cry for help. The leaders of our country have recognised this threat and have mandated the creation of a specialised task force to lead the attack in what is coming to be known as the "plague wars." You'd better pray that they succeed.

It began as a nifty idea: What if the government has a secret team designed to spot and stop life-threatening outbreaks of diseases (such as Ebola and Anthrax) before they got out of control? The team consisted of two doctors, a security expert, and the director in charge of the project.

Tamlyn Tomita is also known for playing second in command on the SF show BABYLON 5, she however was replaced after the pilot episode with another actress. Nicholas Lea who starred in the X FILES guest starred in an episode called Hall of the Serpent. The show started off well, but simply became too predictable as it went on. After only a few episodes the titles and most of the cast was changed, in an attempt to redo the show, the simply lead to plot holes and confusion for viewers, and the show was never any better, consequently the series was cancelled before its run was complete.

At first I thought - how can this hold up? A virus of the week show? But the pilot really blew me away. We had the tired old take on Ebola but then the virus turned out to be sentient and age old. They ruled the earth when man was young and used him as their host. They created Ebola and other virus to weed out weak human hosts. It was a great twist. The 2nd episode was pretty good also.

Much of what's wrong with American television was ably demonstrated in The Burning Zone, a show that went through so many transformations in its brief 19-episode run that no viewer who saw the first show would recognise the last. Only one original cast member remained. . . And nothing else was remotely the same.

But Wait! What if they fought shadowy government bad-guys, too?

But Wait! What if they encountered the supernatural, a la THE X FILES?

But Wait! What if we replace the doctors with a much more handsome leading man and have a gang kidnap him to treat their leader?

You get the idea. Viewers had the underlying premise yanked out from under them every few weeks. Despite some strong, engaging performances and memorable episodes early on, The Burning Zone never struck with one premise long enough to develop an audience following.

The Executive producer was James McAdams with co-executive producer Bob Carleton, producers for the show were Ed Ledding and Brain Chambers. The show even had an infectious disease consultant who was Dr. Kimberly A. Shriner, M.D., F.A.C.P. Bradford May was the director of photography. The show was originally aired in the US between 3rd September 1996 - 20th May 1997.

Executive producer Coleman Luck claimed that the intention of The Burning Zone was to use "the micro-biological world as a metaphor for the battle between good and evil". Tamlyn Tomita, aka Kimberly Shiroma, was almost a regular on BABYLON 5. She played Laurel Takashima in the pilot episode The Gathering, but was replaced by Claudia Christian as Susan Ivanova for the series. Rene Auberjonois, aka STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE's Odo, guest-stars in the second episode, St. Michael's Nightmare. Also guest starring in this episode was Joshua Cox, perhaps better known to telefantasy viewers as the C&C-bound Lt. David Corwin on BABYLON 5. The Burning Zone only managed an initial run of 10 episodes before being pulled from the schedules for 're-tooling'.

BUSKAAKA: KAIJU BUSUKAAKA: BOOSKA

Boy inventor Daisaku (Miyamoto) has created an all purpose machine that get's him out of bed in the morning, brushes his teeth, and ejects him from the house with this backpack attached. He also tries to create a Godzilla-style monster by feeding a chemical cocktail to his pet iguana Buska. Owing to an amount of old baking soda past it's sell by date, the resulting "monster" is a gentle, charming creature with large round eyes and a buck toothed expression not unlike a squirrel. However, it also has amazing physical strength and (in the stlye of MONKEY) a magical crown made of the element Buskanium, which allows it to shrink in size to just 50cm tall. It likes noodles and hates turtles.

As one might expect form a Tsuburaya show, human life is soon threatened by a number of bizarre opponents, forcing Daisaku's creation to save the world from monsters and aliens, including a Glacier Witch and a giant sponge. From episode 26, the series also introduces Buska's michievous "brother" Chemgon, formed form Daisaku's experimental combination of an alien and a squirrel. Chamegon has the power of super speed, shoots a monster beam from his tail, and can also transform into anything, so long as it has a supply of walnuts

In the heart rendering final episode, a space mission to Plant R requires an alien pilot to endure a 20-day round trip. Buska and Chamegon are delighted to volunteer, and only Daisuke realises that time dilation effects will mean that each day in space will mean a whole year elapsed on Earth - compare to similar relativistic tragedy in Hideaki Anno's Gunbuster. Daisuke waves them off with tears in his eyes, never expecting to see his friends again.

BUSKA! BUSKA!!

BUSKA! BUSKA!!

This is a new version of the original 1967 Japanese show BUSKA. This time featuring Daisuke's son Yuksaku (MASAAKI TACHIZAWA) as the main character. Missing the obvious chance to bring back the original creatures from their space voyage, the new series simply featured the creation of an all new Buska, as Yusaku attempts to create a superhero "Miracle Mirror King" but accidentally adds ramen noodle sauce to the mix. Despite or perhaps of it's generation-old pedigree as slightly old fashioned by the modern audience. Although it remained a heart warming children's comedy like the old series, the production team tried to appeal to new audiences by injecting extra gags and some female eye candy, before eventually admitting defeat and canceling the series 13 episodes early. See also Chibira, and for reptilian pals of a different kind Daughter of Iguana.

BYCROSSERAKA: BROTHER FISTAKA: BROTHER FIST BYCLOSERAKA: KYODAIKEN BAIKUROSSA

In this show, we have the Dester army that finds the statue of the God-Demon Goora. This statue can spill out diamonds when it hears children's cries. Therefore, the Dester soldiers start hurting the Japanese children and recording their cries (on VHS tapes) in order to replay them at Goora's ears. Only the Bycrosser brothers can stop this threat.

Like many tokusatsu from the 80s, this is a really great and awesome show, packed with cool action, mechas, heroes, villains, music and lots and lots of other great stuff. I don't think this is a silly show, like someone stated here in the board, mainly because of the enemies. I really hate them: they are a bunch of cruel bastards that hurt the poor children - even with whips and darts - without mercy, only to record their cries. Luckily, the Bycrossers will always save the day.

Going into the details, the heroes have really cool costumes. They are a little reminiscent of Chodenshi Bioman's suits, but I really like them. The heroes' mechas are really gorgeous, and their weapons are very powerful and "classic" items (guns and swords). But the most notable of them is without doubt the Blazer Cannon: Bycrosser Ken holds on like a bazooka the GinKron motorcycle with Bycrosser Gin riding it. Then he attaches to the enemy with a pointing screen, he fires an energy beam from the motorcycle's front lamp and BLAMMO!!, the enemy is history!!

The special effects are really good and typical of that time. About the soundtrack, it is really cool, with very notable opening and ending themes (the first has a sort of "Police Show" feeling, while the ending is a quieter and beautiful tune), though it is not very various, as a lot of BGMs are just variations of the opening theme song (and the ending itself is very reminiscent of the opening).

CAPITAO 7

As a young boy, chemistry nerd Carlos was abducted and taken to the "Seventh Planet", where he was transformed into a superhero, Capitão 7, and sent back to Earth to defend the world against any and all threats. He stored his compressed costume inside a box of matches, ready for use when needed.

This Brazilian children's superhero series ran from 1954 to 1966. There was also a comic book, inspired by the series created in 1959 created by Jayme Cortez. The series was either 30 minutes or 40 minutes long depending on the season.

Apparently the first Brazilian superhero, Capitão 7 first appeared on Brazilian television, before transferring to comics in 1959. He was originally created for Ayres Campos and TV Record (His name is "Capitão 7" because TV Record is Brazil's channel 7), and his TV incarnation was closer to Flash Gordon than Superman, at least until the comic version debuted - after this the TV version changed to match.

CAPTAIN AMERICA

In the comic book Captain America was a GI who periodically went AWOL to battle Axis agents with his scientifically induced superpowers. But for the serial Republic changed the character to a battling nazi who takes on the Scarab (a marvellous oily performance from veteran villain Atwill) and his 'dynamic vibrator'. Moreover, the action takes place on the home front.

This was both the last of Republic's cycle of wartime serials based on comic-book characters and the last serial to be directed by the energetic English at the studio. Moreover, the action takes place on the home front.

Despite the patriotic atmosphere that suffused the serial, many of its plot devices, such as the torn treasure map, were as old as serialdom itself. Purcell, who gave a highly athletic performance in the title role, died of a heart attack shortly after completing work on the serial. The producer for the serial was W.J. O'Sullivan, and the cinematographer was John MacBurnie, the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker and Theodore Lydecker.

CAPTAIN BARBELL

AKA: MARS REVELO'S CAPTAIN BARBELL

Captain Barbell begins in the year 2106, a futuristic time when Philippines is the center of world's research in human cloning, genetics and robotics.

A young boy named Arell, together with his mother Mrs. B, are forced by his father Captain B to ride the time machine to escape from the soldiers of the General.

The General is the mysterious, rich and powerful owner of Live Corporation, which is the pioneer in the well-advanced human cloning and mutation that created an army of superhuman beings for his evil schemes, which Captain B opposes. Only Captain B can fight the General because of his extraordinary strength using barbanium.

Unknown to them, the General sends Commander X, the powerful cyborg, to destroy the barbanium with askobar.

The time machine's destination is 1992. However, upon crash landing, Arell and his mother are separated. Arell is found in a burning wreck by a loving and elderly couple, Lolo Aloy and Lola Melay.

Lolo Aloy and Lola Melay gives him a new name Potenciano a.k.a. Teng. The couple became his grandparents, and whose children Sandra and Cesar becomes his foster parents. Teng grows up frail, poor and constantly longing for the love and care of his parents who ignore him. Worse, Teng is maltreated by Clarisse, the daughter of Sandra and Cesar.

Teng would grow up with an ugly pockmark on one side of his otherwise very handsome face and painfully aware that he is merely an adopted child with a completely unknown background. Because of these incidents, Teng finds comfort in the company of his friends Kit, Bobby and Lola Melay.

The paths of Teng and his childhood friend Leah cross once again. This time, Teng realizes that he is in love with this young lady who comes from a rich family. But things turn out difficult for Teng to confess his love for Leah because the young lady has an arrogant boyfriend.

He also meets and becomes friends with Levi, the son of the richest man in the town named Viel, who is against their friendship. Unknown to Teng, it is Viel who is responsible for the death of Lolo Aloy.

One night, the group of Jared, Leah's boyfriend, gangs up on Teng and leaves him beaten in a junkyard. Teng then discovers the powerful barbell. This barbell is the key to Teng's destiny in becoming the most powerful Pinoy superhero known as Captain Barbell!

Finale

The powerful General (Viel Villian) from the future having exhausted most of his forces and getting impatient to kill Captain Barbell travelled back in time along with Commander X and some cyborg forces to kill Teng before he finds the Barbanium plate. By doing so, Levi will not be killed by Captain Barbell and he finally defeat his arch nemesis once and for all. He dropped by the Villian Mansion, made his past self catatonic, and reveals his plans to Levi.

Meanwhile, the death of Captain B (Paolo Bediones) at the hands of Commander X lead Mrs. B (Angel Aquino) and Boris (JC De Vera) to use their time machine to go back to the future where Captain B is still alive. They find him and they travelled back in time to meet the still innocent Teng. The Barbell family then recounts to Teng the adventures of Captain Barbell and the women in his life.

Now, Teng must find a way to acquire the barbell plate as soon as possible and to stop the General. With enough knowledge of the future, he could also change his destiny and save the death of his Lolo Aloy. Indeed, he successfully saved his Lolo Aloy but his Lola Melay died as a trade off from a new unseen event at the hands of Commander X.

Like the Barbell family, the General recounts the future to Levi to get him to trust him and make him Super Levi this time early. General then kidnapped Kit and Leah to make Captain Barbell choose who he will save between the two. He saved both of them but again at the cost of Boris' life crushed by the hands of the giant robot Automaton C piloted by Super Levi. Mrs. B was also kidnapped to make Teng surrender his Barbanium plate and be killed by Super Levi. The shattering revelation by Mrs. B that Teng is General's son from the future averted Teng's death but led to the General's death.

Teng by this time realized and confessed his love for Kit but after that confession, Super Levi again piloted the Automaton C and took Kit. She died to get Teng his Barbanium plate. A furious Captain Barbell defeated Super Levi and Automaton C. All the deaths in the past forced Teng to return to the future with his family to take his time off just as the catatonic past Viel Villian awakens.

3 Years Later...

An Automaton C appeared out of nowhere and captured Leah. As Leah screams helplessly, Captain Barbell appears and saved her. Then he left telling her that he still needs to save Metro Manila with a big smile in his face.

Based on the comic book: "Captain Barbel" created by Mars Ravelo.

Pre-production

Captain Barbell first appeared in the series finale of Darna. He wore the usual hero's spandex costume with the big CB logo on his chest. However, neither the actor's face was shown nor he was credited, since the producers hadn't decided yet who will take the role. It was intentionally done to drum beat the promotions for the upcoming series.

Different actors were considered, and several others voiced out their interest on the role. Even Richard Gutierrez wasn't sure it will be him, so after wrapping up Sugo, he went for a month-long vacation. GMA Network only make its final announcement on April 11, 2006.

Richard Gomez specifically requested his role because he wants to play a dark character which he finds more challenging.

Several negotiations and concessions were made between the Ravelos and the producers team. Rita Ravelo wants the story to stay as much as possible to her father's original character. The production team on the other hand, wanted to make the series more updated and entertaining to present viewers.

Production Crew

This is the second pinoy superhero created by Mars Ravelo which was made into TV series by GMA Network, the first being the successful Darna series.

Dominic Zapata was hired to direct the series, and this was his fourth time to helm a telefantasya for the network. He was the director of Mulawin, Darna and Sugo. Mike Tuviera was also hired to be his assistant director.

Script/Story: Mars Ravelo for title character, RJ Nuevas for TV series

Creative Consultant: Rita Ravelo

Costume Design: Miles Teves for Captain Barbells's suit

Local TV Ratings

According to AGB Nielsen Philippines, Captain Barbell's pilot episode on May 29, 2006 garnered a 37.5% rating. The series got its first 40's ratings of 41.2% the following night on its second episode. Its final episode got a rating of 35.4 %. But before the finale. After 3 months from its pilot episode, its ratings began to plummet, decline and flip flop, but still it is victorious in its finale ratings in Mega Manila Area TV Ratings Data conducted by AGB Nielsen Philippines.

First Appearance of Captain Barbell - 38%

Highest Rating Earned - 43.7%

Lowest Rating Earned - 26%

Finale Episode Ratings (Mega Manila Area Only) - 35.4%

The show consistently tops the ratings against its rival show on the same time slot. But it is also beaten many times by its rival show, ABS-CBN's "Kapamilya Deal or No Deal?"

These ratings however, couldn't be independently verified, and as such these data are based on the published ratings on several local tabloids. It should be noted, that as a rule, research companies doesn't provide the result directly to the public per se. Results are released to the TV networks who commissioned the survey, which in turn, released it to local publications.

It was rumored that Super Inggog's telecast is several times postponed by ABS-CBN for fear of being beaten in the ratings.

Overview

Barbell, Barbanium & Askobar

Barbell - a palm-size golden medallion-barbell plate with "CB" engraved on its center. The name "Captain B" is also depicted on the medallion. Teng twists the medallion and it forms into a barbell, he then raises it and shouts "Captain Barbell" to transform himself into the superhero. As Captain Barbell, the medallion is depicted on his chest; he grabs it back to transform to his alter ego, Teng. The medallion is said to be made from barbanium.

Barbanium - a powerful fictional element discovered in the year 2016 by scientist in the Philippines.

Askobar - "Asido Kontra Barbanium" is the only equally powerful fictional element that can counter barbanium's power. It can be crystallized and used in many ways. It is used to power a cyborg, and also molded into a bullet which deteriorates anything it touches. Coincidentally, Viel also called the element Askobar, but with a different meaning, "Asido Kontra Barbell".

The General and The Villians

A logo of two Vs aligned vertically inside a circle can always be found on the General's creations like Captain and Mrs. B. This very same logo, on the other hand, this is also the Villians logo. This lead to the conclusion that the General will emerge from the bloodline of Villian family.

LIVE Corporation is the name of the General's conglomerate during the time of Neo Metropolis (a futuristic Philippine city). The word LIVE is an anagram of both Viel and Levi, members of the Villian family, so it therefore leaves to either one of them who will be the General in the future.

It's now known that Viel Villian is the General. As to how he became the general is yet to be revealed.

Captain Barbell's Origin

Captain Barbell is a Filipino earthling who came from the Philippine's distant future, and was sent back to the past.

His real name was Arell, the son of Captain B and Mrs. B.

He was renamed Potenciano "Teng/Enteng" Magtanggol by the elderly couple who found him.

Captain Barbell's Abilities

Flight - the power to fly.

Strength - an extra-ordinary strength.

ESP - extra-sensory perception.

Captain Barbell's Suit

Captain Barbell's suit was made by Miles Teves, a renowned Filipino-American costume maker in Hollywood. Teves is credited for the Batman, Spiderman, Robocop and Superman costumes. It was Dominic Zapata who suggested to the producers to have the costume made by Teves.

The updated suit is a far cry from the Superman inspired spandex tight fitting suit in shades of yellow, blue and red. The present suit is inspired by the muscular Batman's costume, minus the mask and in shades of yellow for the suit, gold for CB logo and other embellishments, and red for the cape.

The suit has a built-in cooling mechanism, so Richard Gutierrez is very comfortable inside it. So comfortable apparently that Richard lounges around the set wearing it, even between takes.

The suit reportedly costs $50,000 excluding the charges for repairs in case of damages, making it the most expensive costume ever made for a single character in a Philippine movie or TV series, for that matter.

GMA Network was so secretive about how the Captain Barbell costume looked that on the first taping day, Richard Gutierrez was made to put on a robe on top of the suit. It was only when he had to face the camera as Captain Barbell that everyone on the cast and crew had a chance to see the costume for the very first time.[1]

Captain Barbell's Enemies

Ordinary humans who had somehow direct or indirect contact with barbanium and askobar became mutants with different powers.

Cyborgs which are half-human/half-machine powered by askobar. At present, there are four known cyborgs: Commander X, Cyborg 5564, Cyborg 5566, and Ex-O.

The General is the mysterious villain of Captain Barbell whose identity is Viel Villian. Every week or so, a new villain is being introduced whose participation could last a week or more, depending on the story arc.

Captain Barbell's Filming Locations

Futuristic Philippines/Interior shots of Villian's mansion, laboratory and technopark is being shot in the former soundstage of Encantadia. Observant fans of Encantadia could noticed how some of the original set was recycled for the present series.

Town of Marravelos - is the fictional childhood town of Teng. ??? Is being used as location for the scenes depicting it.

Characters and Cast

Main Characters

Captain Barbell/Arell/Potenciano Magtanggol aka Teng - was catapulted from the 22nd century to the present time. He was found by an elderly couple, who renamed him Teng and adopted him as their grandson. Even from youth, he exhibited remarkable physical prowess but it was not until he found the mystical golden medallion-barbell plate that he obtained the ability to transform into Captain Barbell. This barbell has properties beyond transforming Teng, it also gives him his strength when not in Captain Barbell form. Captain Barbell/Arell/Teng is played by Richard Gutierrez.

Leah Lazaro - is the daughter of the Marravelos' town mayor, and also the campus princess. She is often the subject of his father's verbal abuse who is a belligerent drunkard. She used to date Jared until he was transformed into a monstrous wasp-creature. She is the object of Teng's unrequited affections, and as such, has been saved by Captain Barbell more than once. Leah is played by Rhian Denise Ramos.

Marikit "Kit" Salvacion - is one of Teng's best friends. A bossy, smart-mouthed girl who is frequently pegged as a tomboy. Although she'd like to deny it, Kit has romantic feelings for Teng, a fact that she has confessed to Bobby. Teng later realizes that she loves Kit more than Leah. Kit is played by Camille Prats.

Bobby - is one of Teng's best friends. A frequent joker who seldom takes anything seriously, and is frequently teased for his weight. The fact that he really likes to eat does little to stave off those remarks. In one episode, he was referred to as Captain Baboy (baboy, meaning pig in English language), in reference to his compulsive eating habits. Bobby is aware of Teng's superheroic alter ego, and is his confidant. Bobby is played by Ryan Yllana.

Viel Villian - is the wealthy patriarch of the Villian family and head of Villian Corp. He is an obsessive man with a tendency to control and manipulate people, including his own sons. Viel is fascinated by the remarkable abilities of Captain Barbell. He has hired a scientist named Dexter, who specializes in robotics and genetics to make some experiments for his own benefit. Viel is played by Richard Gomez.

Levi Villian - is the eldest son of Viel Villian. A spoiled rich kid, Levi is regarded by his father as a weakling in desperate need of lethal 'character transformation' in order to deserve the Villian legacy. He is in desperate need for his father's approval. Teng rescued Levi from a car accident, and it is from this incident that they have built an awkward friendship. Levi is played by Patrick Garcia.

Cesar and Sandra Magtanggol - are Teng's adoptive parents. Teng's place in the family was a decision made by Cesar's father, Lolo Aloy, and as such their feelings toward him are rather conflicted. Sandra refuses to accept Teng, let alone as a replacement child for Clarisse, the daughter she lost many years ago. Cesar is generally sympathetic, but avoids making such a sentiment too obvious to Sandra. Cesar and Sandra are played by Ricky Davao and Jackie Lou Blanco.

Barbara/Mrs. B - is the wife of Viel Villian, and stepmother to his sons. She had little memory of her life before she became a part of the Villian family. When she recovers her memories, she realizes that she was Mrs. B and the birth mother of Arell but was separated from him upon re-entry into the 20th century. She was surgically altered by Viel and it is implied that he is also responsible for maintaining her memory gaps. She eventually finds out that Captain Barbell is Teng, who is also Arell, her son she's been looking for. Mrs. B is played by Snooky Serna; Barbara is played by Angel Aquino.

Abel - Abel is the bossy janitor Teng works with. He claims it was Teng's fault that his father was fired from his job, and for that, he always gives Teng a hard time doing his job. Abel also extorts money from Ms. Patti since he knows she has a crush on him. Abel is played by Ryan Eigenmann.

Chari - Chari is Leah's bestfriend. She doesn't quite like how Teng always hangs out with Leah. Chari is played by Mellisa Avelino.

Boris - is Captain Barbell's brother who first appeared as a villain. He is reunited with Teng and his family after knowing that Viel Villian is just using him in his plans. Boris is played by JC De Vera.

Mythos and Speculations

The TV series' "present" Captain Barbell could be the original superhero since the story extensively explains the origin of the Barbell, and as such, the "first" owner of the Barbell. The "first" Teng may have retired his superhero status, and he could have passed the Barbell to the next worthy successor - which is the Captain Barbell that the fans have "originally" known. It should be noted that in the 2003 movie version of Captain Barbell, the superhero is already a popular icon among gym enthusiasts, even before Enteng became Captain Barbell. Whether this is just a mistake in the part of the script writer or otherwise, it hasn't been explained in the movie as to why Antonio Aquitania's character already knew Captain Barbell when he talks with Enteng who is yet to discover the powers of the barbell.

The above speculation maybe inspired by the movies Darna Kuno and Batman Beyond. In the first movie, Darna is pregnant and temporarily retires, gave her magic stone to Dolphy who became "Darna." In the second movie, Bruce Wayne became too old to fight crime and passed it over to his son Terry McGinnis. If ever this speculation is true, it still has to be proven otherwise.

The strange old man in the original story is being speculated by fans to be Captain B, Arell's father. There are rumors of another retcon for the series wherein Captain B's fate will be somehow similar to Aio of Darna wherein he gets older upon reaching earth. This speculation is now concluded as not true since Captain B didn't get old and instead was brainwashed by The General.

Another variation of the above mentioned speculation is that the old man is in fact, Aloy Magtanggol. In this scenario, Captain B is presumed killed by Commander X, since a)he threw the Barbell to the time machine while battling Commander X and is helpless without it and b)Commander X is alive and well. These incidents would leave Aloy to be the old man, since it was he who taught Teng the values and morals of living. This is half true, since Captain B didn't get old. And it's also half false, since he was not killed.

It should be noted that there is a 14-year gap between Arell's arrival and his barbell's arrival. What happened between those years, when Captain B is supposed to be fighting with the General is yet another subject for various speculations by fans. However, since time travel also involves time warp, the length of the gap between the future and the past is rather too short.

Speculations regarding the mythos of the General, is somewhat being likened to Arvin Sloane who became immortal after falling in a vat of Rambaldi's mysterious liquid. In this series however, the mysterious liquid could be the askobar; and the General was in fact, Viel or Levi, who had achieved immortality.

Another thing being pointed out is that despite of the events occurring in the present Marravelos, change is non-existent in the future. This also depends on which laws of time travel is being used by the storytellers. See Chronodynamics.

Maskaradong Bandido's real identity could be Mrs. B/Barbara. Note that after her burial, Barbara's remains were stolen from the grave and was kept in the laboratory. Dexter could have resurrected or cloned her and named her MB. Also note that MB could stand for "Mrs. B". This was now proven true.

There could be a possibility that Arell's arrival to 1992 Marravelos led to the discovery of Barbanium and Askobar in the first place. If that is so, then the events will come full circle.

Changing the past by shortening the adventures of Captain Barbell in the final episodes would explain why nobody knew him yet in Darna. The fight between the General's forces and the Barbell family was too short and private to have it in the news for the whole world to see. It is assumed that as Captain Barbell retired for the future, in that 3 years Darna's adventures started in Metro Manila. Hence, it coincides with Darna's last episode post-Anomalkan occupation where Darna was lost forever that Captain Barbell became the hero of Metro Manila.

Soundtrack

There is no definitive soundtrack, but the following songs have been played for the series.

Nandito Lang Ako (I'm Just Here) - Captain Barbell's official theme, performed by Shamrock.

Sana - Captain Barbell's love theme, performed by Shamrock.

Trivia

Dingdong Dantes, Alfred Vargas and Cogie Domingo along with Richard Gutierrez were considered for the role of Captain Barbell.

Raymond Gutierrez, Ritchie Paul Gutierrez, and Hero Angeles were considered to play the role of Teng.

The series is the first one that employs the same actor for the role of Teng and Captain Barbell. This could be explain by the fact that Richard Gutierrez'a Teng lifts the Barbell with his left hand. Note that in the Herbert Bautista Captain Barbell, lifting the Barbell using the left hand does not change the appearance of the person.

However this also does not grant him superpowers. But since Gutierrez's Teng has innate abilities it could be speculated that the Barbanium only enhances the said abilities and serves only as a battery. This raises the question, what if he uses his right hand to change to Captain Barbell? Will he become more powerful? And will his appearance change?

Snooky Serna plays the mother of Teng in the movie version of Bong Revilla's Captain Barbell. Although her performance was not criticized, her participation was questionable since she looks too young to be the mother of Ogie Alcasid (Enteng).

In the TV series, Snooky Serna was replaced by Angel Aquino since the former had caused delays in the taping and subsequently increasing the cost of production. Usually, writers eliminate a cast by "killing" the character, or sending them to "vacation," with an open option for the character's re-appearance later on the series. Serna's character was significant to the storyline and eliminating her would drastically change it, so the writers revise part of the script, having Viel surgically change Barbara's face.

Rufa Mae Quinto was the villain Freezy in the movie version of Bong Revilla's Captain Barbell. In the TV series, she is also a villain - Aerobika, an entirely different character.

The series is Richard Gutierrez's third time to play a lead role in a telefantasya, the first two being Aguiluz/Julian in Mulawin and Miguel/Amante in Sugo.

Marravelos, the fictional town where the 2006 series is set, is an anagram of Mars Ravelo, the title character's creator.

The couple Cesar and Sandra Magtanggol, played by Ricky Davao and Jackie Lou Blanco respectively are real-life husband and wife.

The name Viel Villian is an anagram of "vile" and "villain" respectively. Levi's name is also an anagram of "evil".

Captain Barbell's alter ego name Potenciano Magtanggol, has a tagalog etymology which literally translates to "Potential Defender" in English.

Cyborg 5566's name is in reference to Taiwanese boyband 5566, of which Jason Hsu is a member.

Sunshine Dizon's character was "killed" on the 13th week to give way for her lead role preparations in the new soap Bakekang, which would be shown together with Captain Barbell in GMA Network's primetime block.

The root word of Amorseko, which is Amor, is a Spanish word for "love".

Antonio Aquitania who played a villain in the TV series, was Captain Barbell's best friend in Bong Revilla's movie version.

Controversies

In this new series, because of rather limited story, the producers have developed a retcon for the origin of Captain Barbell to broaden its storyline.

Captain Barbell's story thus begins in 2106 - a distant future Philippines. He is sent back to the past - 1992 Philippines, via a time machine which drops on the signature flaming ball from the sky. His barbell though is sent back to the year 2006.

There were heavy references to several movies and comic characters. Scenes of Teng's childhood shows him lifting tractors and logs, just like in Smallville. Teng was inspired by his Lolo Aloy to be a hero, and whose death he blames on himself, as it was the case of Peter Parker/Spider-Man. Captain Barbell summons his cape like it was depicted in Spawn, and his hairstyle is copied from Christopher Reeve in Superman. Captain Barbell's mutant villains were exposed to elements barbanium and askobar, whereas the mutant villains of Clark Kent were exposed to kryptonite.

These rip-offs have been very apparent in its early weeks which makes the initial reviews unfavorable. Some critics labeled it as the local version of Smallville and named the show as Captain Smallbell.

Richard Gutierrez wasn't even spared. Critics points out that he was "neither too thin" to be the frail-looking Teng and "neither too muscular" to be Captain Barbell. His mestizo features also lessen his credibility to be a true-blooded pinoy superhero. It should be noted however that all the previous actors who have essayed the role of Captain Barbell were all mestizo Filipinos.

The updated Captain Barbell suit, mainly because of its color and accentuated fake muscles, also became a subject of criticisms.

Despite numerous criticisms, it still managed to garner a big cult following, perhaps an indirect result of the controversies that it caused. The show since then have tried to dissociate the series from Smallville.

Captain Barbell vs Smallville

Arell/Captain Barbell is an earthling from the future and "arrives" via time machine; Clark Kent/Superman is an alien from another planet and arrives via spaceship.

In Captain Barbell, the crash landings of time machine sent explosions all over the place; in Smallville, the spaceship's landing was accompanied with meteor shower which exploded all over the place.

Arell is found by an elderly couple who became his grandparents, who in turn gave him to their married son; Clark is found by a childless couple and raised him as their own child.

Teng is painfully aware early on his childhood that he is adopted and has an unknown past; Clark became only aware of his past in his teens.

Teng has a pockmark on his face which disappears when he is Captain Barbell; Clark wears an eyeglass which he didn't use when he is Superman.

Teng uses a golden medallion-barbell plate to transform to Captain Barbell; Clark strips down his clothes to transform to Superman.

Teng is exceptional basketball player, while Clark is an ace football player.

Their love interests: Lea Lazaro for Captain Barbell, and Lana Lang and Lois Lane for Superman, shares the same initials - L.L.

Captain Barbell vs Spider-Man

In Captain Barbell, Lolo Aloy was assaulted by assassins and died while Teng was in a debut party. In Spider-Man's case, Uncle Ben died because Peter Parker let the thief, who would be his uncle's murderer, escape.

Both Teng and Peter Parker blame themselves for their grandfather's and uncle's death, respectively.

Lolo Aloy is Teng's inspiration to become Captain Barbell, as Uncle Ben is to Peter Parker.

Levi, Teng's friend hates Captain Barbell for his girlfriend's death. Harry Osborn, Peter's friend, hates Spider-Man for his father's death.

Teng was oppressed for his social status and physical appearance. Peter Parker was oppressed for being a weakling and a nerd.

At one point, both of them quit from becoming superheroes. Teng buried the Barbell underground along with his time machine while Peter dumped his costume into the trash can.

Captain Barbell vs Previous Incarnations

Previous incarnations always begin with the barbell being given to a young adult Enteng/Teng by a strange old man. In this TV series, the story begins in the future when the young Arell was sent back to the past. Thus, the story shows his childhood and trials while going up prior to being Captain Barbell.

In previous incarnations, the original literal barbell only appears to Enteng/Teng in times of crucial need and only then he can transform to Captain Barbell. The TV series on the other hand, had the barbell as a golden medallion-barbell plate which Teng twist, then it becomes a barbell, after which, he transform to Captain Barbell. This made Captain Barbell appears at Teng's will.

The original Captain Barbell suit has been modified, and is entirely different from the costume in the original comic book and earlier movie versions.

1 - 1 IN THE BEGINNING

In a distant future, a time machine hurtles through space. It lands on Earth in the year 1992. Inside are the wife and son of Captain B. Sending them away seems to be the only way to protect them from the clutches of the evil General. Lolo Aloy and Lola Melay find the time machine with the young Arell still inside. They decide to hold on to the child, naming him Teng. As time goes on, Teng grows in strength. Only Lolo Aloy is aware of how super human his new charge is. Teng uses his strength to come to the aid of Leah, who becomes his good friend. Conversely, Clarisse grows further apart from Teng, blaming him for stealing their Lolo's affections from her. Worst of all, Leah gives Teng the bad news that she must leave for the United States. Still, despite the setbacks, Teng grows into a happy young boy. He has his best friends Kit and Bobby. He has the love and tutelage of Lola Melay and Lolo Aloy. Little does he know that his life is fraught with danger and that behind every shadow lurks a possible enemy. But a discovery in a junkyard changes Teng's life forever.

1 - 2 BIRTH OF A NEW SUPERHERO

Captain Barbell discovers that he has more powers than just superhuman strength. He uses them to the best of his abilities in his first public appearance to rescue Cesar, Sandra and Melay from the falling bridge. Everyone wonders who this hero could be. Captain Barbell wonders if he can protect his true identity from the rest of the world, and will he be able to tackle the new responsibilities of being a superhero.

1 - 3 PUTAKTI'S VENOM

Captain Barbell runs to Leah's rescue, only to be attacked by Jared, who has transformed into Putakti - a monstrous wasp. He fails to rescue Leah after the wasp's venom gets into his eye, disabling him to transform again into his superhuman form. When Kit tells her father that Jared might really be the wasp, Joe goes to Jared's house to investigate, where he ultimately discover the truth. Captain Barbell and Putakti battle it out once again, and Jared switches back to his human form after Captain Barbell throws him into a river. When Levi sees the helpless Jared, he beats him to a pulp.

1 - 4 TETANO AND ADOBE

Levi is released from prison with the help of his father. Viel investigates who is trying to kill his son. Kit and Bobby bring their mysterious new friend "Blanca" to the hospital, only to find out that she is completely well except for her memory loss. Blanca eventually gets to know Sandra and Cesar. Barbara comes to the rescue during Captain Barbell's battle with Tetano. She brings Teng to her home, where Teng witnesses Borris's extraordinary strength. He begins to wonder if there are others like him. When Teng retrieves the barbell he used to defeat Tetano, he discovers that it has been drained of its powers. Meanwhile, a new villain, Adobe, emerges from the depths of Viel's technopark. It ruins Teng's chances of finding out what really happened to his Lolo Aloy.

1 - 5 ALTER-EGOS

Bobby realizes that Teng is Captain Barbell. But Teng can rest easy because Bobby decides to keep his new discovery a secret. Meanwhile Viel asks Barbara if she has regained her memory. Barbara lies to Viel saying she still doesn't remember anything. She can not remember everything exactly but she is sure that she must be someone else. She vows to find out who she really is, as well as who the person in her dreams was. The evil apple doesn't fall far from the tree as Levi attempts to strong-arm Teng into selling the land. His failure only fuels his father's anger. Boris tries to get on Viel's good side by stealing the land title from Teng, except that Teng catches him in the act. This leads to Teng meeting Barbara. As the two bond, the young hero begins to feel more and more at home with this woman. And then Viel falls sick. Dexter tells Viel that Boris' blood is no longer enough to bring him back to normal.

1 - 6 VIEL'S SECRET

Viel's condition worsens and not even a blood transfusion from Boris can help. He continues to keep this secret from Barbara and Levi. When Levi sees him helpless in Boris' arms, Viel has no ready explanation. This forces both Barbara and Levi to go on separate fact-finding missions. They begin sharing information. But Barbara finds out much more than she was looking for. Meanwhile, Kit interviews Bubog, who is back as Narciso. He discovers through Kit that it is because of Captain Barbell that he is now Bubog. He vows revenge.

1 - 7 AEROBIKA'S REVENGE

Everyone's head over heels for the hot new physical education teacher in school, Ms. Eros. Little do they know that Ms. Eros was once the obese Ms. Patti who was teased as Aero Biik. Her transformation is due to the slimming tea she discovered from a plant contaminated with barbanium. She started the slimming hype in school to help out people like her who have been consistently teased about being overweight. She also uses her new power as a way of seeking revenge on people who have been mean to her in the past. Even Bobby joins the bandwagon. Ms. Eros becomes Aerobika, the super being who is obsessed with making everyone sexy and addicted to her slimming tea! Meanwhile, Viel becomes even more powerful with Dexter's new discovery, the crystal acid. Being the scheming villain that he is, Viel uses this for his evil plans. Levi and Clarisse's friendship grows more each day.

1 - 8 DATE WITH CAPTAIN BARBELL

Levi and Teng's friendship gets back on track when Levi saves Teng from drowning in the river contaminated with crystal acid. Aerobika is already running out of leaves for her slimming tea, but she still threatens the police that she will do something disastrous unless they give her a chance to date Captain Barbell. Captain Barbell obliges, but the only problem is his date with Aerobika coincides with Teng's date with Leah. Meanwhile, Viel discovers more uses for his crystal acid, which are all potential threats to the community.

1 - 9 CONSEQUENCES AND CONFESSIONS

With the help of Viel's breakthrough experiments, Mayor Lazaro is able to resurrect his wife Myra. Although Leah and Lazaro are overjoyed to have Myra back, Agnes is suspicious of Myra's return, especially since she seems like a different person this time around. A new villain Marvin, who has been named Vaporo by the police for his exemplary stealing strategy (nobody notices him because he turns into vapor), is on the loose. Marvin got his powers from a contaminated shooting star that fell into the river that he was in. Marvin has a crush on Kit but Kit tell him she doesn't have any feelings for him but for Teng and this forces Marvin/Vaporo to bring Kit to the Lighthouse. Two people will finally have the guts to confess their feelings to their special someone.

1 - 10 JAROD RETURNS

Kit tries to ignore Teng after confessing her feelings for him, while Levi fights for Clarisse despite his father's disapproval. Jared makes a comeback, and he is able to make Leah believe that he is innocent. Leah suddenly becomes secretive after promising Jared that she will help him out. Captain Barbell battles with Jared once more.

1 - 11 CLARISSA'S MISSION

The General assigns a mission to Clarisse's alter ego, Ex-o. She has to find and kill Arell. Ex-o's powers will soon take over Clarisse's body, even when she is not sleepwalking. Kit tries her best to be happy for Teng, and she patches up her friendship with him when her screenplay is chosen to be featured in school. But the problem arises when Teng and Leah audition and grab the lead roles. Meanwhile, Cyborg 5566 attacks Marravelos.

1 - 12 CAPTAIN BARBELL IS SICK

Captain Barbell falls from the sky, significantly weakened from his face-off with Ex-o. Upon seeing him so helpless, Kit and Bobby rush the superhero to the hospital. Meanwhile, Boris discovers his father's mysterious illness, and how Viel has been using his blood to get better. Viel tells his son that all they need is Captain Barbell for him to be well again. The evil duo takes advantage of Captain Barbell's confinement to capture him. Lola Melay comes to the rescue when she finds out that Captain Barbell is in the hospital. Apparently, she has known all along that Teng and Captain Barbell are the same.

1 - 13 EX-O'S BATTLE

Sandra and Cesar find out about Clarisse's alter ego, Ex-O. Captain Barbell promises them that he will not harm their daughter when he fights Ex-O. Teng also realizes that his weakness is Askobar, but he discovers that he becomes immune to it when it's contained in glass. The aerial battle between Ex-O and Captain B ends in tragedy. Levi devastated with the death of Clarisse, and vows revenge against Captain Barbell.

1 - 14 BLACK-OUT, A NEW HERO

Teng has decided to leave his superhero days behind. He is instantly replaced by Blackout, the newest crime-busting hero in Maravelos. Blackout, who used to be Ruben, got his powers through electricity, which enables him to do everything that Captain B used to do even fly! He also has another edge: he's not weakened by Askobar. After witnessing the public's clamor for Blackout, Teng cannot help but think twice about the drastic decision he made. Meanwhile, Mayor Lazaro gives to Viel the Magtanggol's land title, in exchange for Myra's resurrection. But the mayor doesn't know that Myra is planning something evil for him and Leah. With this new development, can Teng save Leah without his alter ego Captain Barbell's breast plate?

1 - 15 A SUPERHERO'S DESTINY

In an attempt to avenge Jennifer's death, Ruben murders the killer, Leon, and he ends up in prison. Viel takes advantage of Ruben's imprisonment by bribing him with the opportunity to be "Blackout" again. But what the Villians really want is for Captain Barbell to return to Maravelos so they could capture him.

As planned, Blackout gatecrashes a party organized by Boris so Captain Barbell will realize that he's still needed in Maravelos. Teng soon realizes that he has to do something about Blackout. With the help of his friends, he retrieves Captain Barbell's breast plate from the place where they buried it. A face-off between Captain B and a fully charged (from the town's power plant) Blackout will ensue.

1 - 16 AMORSECO'S LOVE

1 - 17 MB, THE MASKED BANDIT

With Bobby's help, Teng transforms into Captain Barbell and manages to make things right once again in Maravelos. He conjures a mighty whirlwind to suck all the amorseco spuds that affected the townspeople. When things get back to normal, Joe confesses to Lady Amor that he still loves her, while Teng and Leah decide to split up for the meantime. Meanwhile, Levi becomes Leah's confidante. But a masked bandit with the letters "MB" on his breastplate soon attacks Viel's properties. MB also tells Captain Barbell that he is not the enemy.

1 - 19 COACH DRIBBLE AND THE ASKOBOYS

Captain Barbell fails to prevent the assassination of Mayor Lazaro, and Teng is devastated with Leah's situation. Leah returns the Magtanggol land title to Teng and tells him that they're even. Apparently, she's still bitter about what happened between them. Meanwhile, Ms. Florendo announces that Marravelos Academy is about to be closed down because Viel pulled out his financial aid for the school. When the school rallies against Viel, he poses a condition that could possibly change his mind: Marravelos Academy (M.A.) needs to win over Marravelos University (M.U.) in a basketball game. But the players of M.A. are no match for the players of M.U., who have been drugged by the strength-inducing askobar steroids by Coach Dribble.

1 - 20 MB SAVES CAPTAIN BARBELL

With Captain Barbell's help, Marravelos Academy wins over Marravelos University. But instead of celebrating, Bobby and Lola Melay are left worried sick because Captain Barbell suddenly disappears after the game. It was no other than Viel who captured him, and Levi takes advantage of the opportunity to beat up Captain Barbell with special Askobar knuckle bars. But just when he's about to stab the superhero with a slab of Askobar, the Maskaradong Bandido suddenly appears. A new villain is sent in by the General the cyborg Magnetika whose goal is to accomplish the failed plan of Ex-O. Kit will ultimately discover that Captain Barbell has been Teng all along.

1 - 21 MAGNETIKA'S FORCES

Kit gets mad at both Captain Barbell and Bobby when he sees Captain Barbell kissing Magnetika in the barn. Outside the barn Joe and Cesar are also at odds over Magna. Aurora wonders why neither of the two want to remove the rings that Magna gave them. She does not yet realize that it is through these rings that Magna is controlling Joe and Cesar. But an investigation leads Kit and Aurora to the truth about Magna – and Magnetika. Now that her cover is blown, she demands to see Captain Barbell again. Or else she will continue to wreak her havoc on the men of the town. She feeds on the life essence of the men, making them younger and younger until they just disappear. One of her victims is Bobby, and so Teng must become Captain Barbell to once again face the nasty villainess. Meanwhile Dexter betrays Viel when he discovers a way to make the time vessel work. But Viel finds out and decides to punish Dexter, however something goes terribly wrong. Then Magnetika meets Viel and the two trade secrets. Magnetika gives Viel an offer he can not refuse.

1 - 22 THE TRUTH ABOUT BORIS

Viel confirms his suspicions that Barbara is the Maskaradong Bandido. He and Magnetika make plans to avoid her. He asks Magnetika if she knows where Boris could be. He has to find Boris before Boris finds out the truth behind his real parents. Or worse, the truth of Boris' brother actually is. Meanwhile, Barbara tells her tales of her life as the masked bandit. She takes Teng to her fortress and decides it is time for Teng to know everything about his past. She also confides that she believes Captain B is still alive. She wants to take Teng in the time vessel to look for Captain B. But she tells him that with or without him, she plans to leave the present and go back to the future. Before she can get her plans underway, a terrible confrontation happens. Torn and unable to decide what (and who) to believe in, Boris is driven over the edge.

1 - 23 CAPTAIN B'S EVIL WAYS

The relationship between Levi and Leah gets complicated as she unintentionally expresses her true feelings for Teng. Levi gets more jealous of Teng. Viel, meanwhile, realizes that he needs Captain Barbell to be able to walk again. After Magna shares what she knows about the superhero, Viel and Levi become suspicious that Teng and Captain Barbell are one and the same. Captain B is sent by the General to present-day Marravelos. His mission, now that his brain has been re-programmed by the General, will put Captain Barbell against his own father. Teng and his classmates are put in danger by their new teacher. Can Teng transform into Captain Barbell and save his friends, despite Levi's presence?

CAPTAIN JACKSON

Captain Jackson fights to save the world from Eggbert Stevens in this on going series.

One thing of note with this show, is that many of the actors were also involved in the writing, directing and producing of the series, which is rare television science fiction production. The series was filmed California with some filming taking place in New York. It also had a reported budget of $1 million, although this seems somewhat of an exaggeration.

Produced by Sam Maccarone (producer), Jon Fetty Risk (producer), Drake Savage (executive producer), Original music by Beau' Dozier & Phillip Gough. Film Editing by Sam Maccarone. Makeup Department - Eric Fox Hays (special makeup effects artist), Special Effects by Jon Fetty Risk (special effects supervisor). Stunts - Hiro Koda (stunt co-ordinator).

Ripping apart killer iguanas? Taking on a giant half-scorpion/half-man after hitting the local disco? Puffing down massive bong-loads of chronic? It's all in a day's work for Captain Jackson, the hero of a zany three-part series available on the Internet.

Captain Jackson is the alter-ego of Eddie Spender, a professional disco dancer who needs a bong-hit to take on his super-heroic persona. The shows are a hilarious and bizarre parody-style collage of humour, including plenty of swearing, breasts and bloody cartoon violence.

Now Captain Jackson's producers are in negotiations with Comedy Central, the same company that brought South Park to the late-night TV screen.

Cannabis Culture had the opportunity to speak to Sam Maccarone, who plays Captain Jackson and co-writes the scripts with friend Dian Bachar. Maccarone did bit parts in Saved by the Bell and the movie Clueless before he began a career directing music videos for MCA. Maccarone agreed that my comparison of Captain Jackson to Monty Python was fitting, but preferred likening it to Spy vs Spy meets Cheech and Chong.

"Cheech versus Chong," he laughed. "Or like a live cartoon. Like a Bugs Bunny cartoon, Eggbert [the villain] is always trying to come up with new ways to kill the Captain. In one of the episodes Eggbert makes a deal with the devil sells his soul to take down Eddie, Captain Jackson's not-so-secret identity."

These scenes are the key to Captain Jackson's bawdy humour. Like when Iguana Man slings trained-to-kill iguanas at Jackson. Or the episode where arch-villain Eggbert plans to fuse his body with a giant scorpion, and the mad-scientist involved breaks the news that scorpions have their anus' on the right side of their bodies which will mean some adjustments.

What made Eggbert so desperate to destroy the discotheque-dancing super-dude that he would tear himself a new asshole? During our interview, Maccarone shared some of the history behind the series: "Eddie and Eggbert were best friends in high school. Then Eddie fucked Eggbert's mom one night and that pretty much wrecked that friendship!"

As Captain Jackson gets set to possibly go big-time with Comedy Central, Maccarone reflects on how important it was for to him to stick to his principles when offered a contract for his film by other producers in the past.

"We wouldn't take the drugs out so they fired us. They wanted to water it down so bad they wanted me to take a drink of Pepsi to transform. It would have been totally different, so we got the hell out of there."

Their Internet exposure, including being featured on Pot-TV, was essential to finding their audience. "There's pot and drug references throughout the show," says Maccarone. "I think you have to smoke a lot of pot to get

CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT

A black-costumed aviator is on the trail of Craven's fifth columnist who has kidnapped scientist Washburn in order to obtain his secret range finder. Short, as Washburn's daughter (niece in the radio serial that gave birth to the Captain Midnight character), is the plucky heroine and Walter is Craven's similarly black-hearted daughter.

Weighed down with propaganda, this is a routine serial. Stuntman O'Brien, a regular co-star with Tex Ritter in his series westerns, has the title role. The serial was produced by Larry Darmour and the cinematographer was James S. Brown.

1 - 1 THE MAN WHO FLIES LIKE A PIGEON

Every hero has to have an origin story and this is that of Captain Nice! Meek, mild-mannered police chemist Carter Nash creates a formula that grants extraordinary powers to whomever drinks it. It is not his original intention to drink it himself. He is a shy and unassuming man and prefers to have someone else take on the burden of being a hero. But his attempts to give it to the Mayor of the city are rejected (the Mayor completely misunderstands what the formula does and is in the middle of a crisis: the villain 'Chameleon' recently escaped). Rejected, Carter returns to his lab. But events will not allow Carter the anonymity he desires and soon he'll be forced to take the potion and be transformed into the City's first Super Hero: Captain Nice!

CAPTAIN POWER AND THE SOLDIERS OF THE FUTURE

In the year 2147, the Metal Wars have been waged between man and machines for some time with man coming out on the losing end. To wipe out the last few remaining humans Lord Dread, leader of the Volcanian Empire, creates mechanical Bio-Dreads to seek out and digitise all humans. Digitisation is a process in which humans are computerised and forced to serve Dread Mankind's last hope rests with Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future- a group of dedicated freedom fighters each a master of a specialised area of combat with a specialised power suit enabling him or her to be more powerful than the Bio-Dreads.

Along with Captain Power the team's leader the soldiers of the future consisted of: sky fighter Major Hawk Masterson ground assault specialist, Sgt Tank Ellis: espionage and communications expert, Sgt. Scout Baker and a tactical systems expert Corporal Pilot Chase. The fact that the villains were machines allowed the good US to destroy them without raising as much anger from self-appointed media watchdogs as would have been had they been living being

One of the best writers for the show was J. Michael Straczynski who created the SF show BABYLON 5. Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future was the ultimate in TV toy tie ins The show was designed to be interactive with a toy gun developed by Mattel. When the bad guys appeared on the screen they were covered with colour blotches a member of the audience could shoot the bad guys with the gun and score points at home. This action however had no affect on the action on the screen. The bad guys would continue with their nefarious schemes until stopped by the good guys.

Despite the overtly commercial nature of the series, Captain Power did manage to present well written stories aimed at an audience somewhat older than the series itself. The series was not cancelled due to poor ratings but due to the fact that the toy gun was not selling as well as anticipated. Before there was BABYLON 5, Joseph Straczynski worked on this Mattel toy-line tie in show. (It was designed solely to launch a line of toys; to his credit, Straczynski made it a palatable half-hour adventure show. Unfortunately, Mattel killed the show - and their MTS production company - after one season and 22 episodes).

Created by: Gary Goddard and Tony Christopher; Executive Producers: Gary Goddard, Tony Christopher, Douglas Netter and John Copeland; Producer: Ian McDougall; Syndicated/Landmark Entertainment Group; 30 minutes. Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future was created to sell toys. Yet even with 42 million dollars worth of merchandise sold, the show ended production after 21 episodes because Mattel Toys oversold their stock, leaving a 22 million dollar problem sitting on warehouse shelves across America. It was a show that married a dramatic, action-adventure, science fiction premise with the technology of interactivity-sending broadcasting signals from the program into toys that would activate guns, lights, and ejecting action figures. Plus, Captain Power was a platform where computer-generated images (CGIs) would be used to create, for the first time on film, shining robot characters that spouted dialogue and actually participated in plots.

Gary Goddard, director of the feature film Masters of the Universe and owner of the Landmark Entertainment Group, first invented the concept of Captain Power when he knew that Mattel was looking for a new toy aimed at young boys. "I always liked science fiction, and there was a lot of animation on television at that time," recalls Goddard. "My idea was to create a new live-action series, kind of like the ones I grew up with. I took a character named Captain Jonathan Power, the concept and story to Mattel and said, 'This should be your next toy line.' It was the idea they would be fighting in the future against robotic armies. We went to Mattel about a concept of a live-action television series with computer-generated animation images to be developed as robot creatures."

Mattel liked the ideas and, in fact, had been working on the interactivity technology in-house but didn't know how to apply it. They asked Goddard if he could create the CGIs he was proposing on a decent budget and if interactivity could be applied to it. "To do that every week was a big challenge. And the technology was nowhere near where it is today. We were a little bit ahead of our time, I tell you!" laughs Goddard. After some research, Goddard returned and said, "Yes." From there, Captain Power was born and ready to fly. "Not only was the show groundbreaking in terms of being the very first show to use CGIs on a weekly series interacting with live-action characters, but it was also the first interactive television show!" says Goddard proudly.

Although the practice of sponsoring animated shows was common, for the first time, a toy company was financing a live-action television show. So blatant was the tie-in with Mattel as the toy developer and financier of the project that the Captain Power toys didn't need to be advertised with the show.

The five toys produced in conjunction with the show included two jets, the PowerJet XT-7 and the Phantom Striker, which interacted with the onscreen targets from as far as ten feet away and scored points each time a target was hit. The TV enemies could return fire and take away points, resulting in each vehicle's cockpit being ejected when the score reached 0. Other jet features included a light-emitting diode (LED) that indicated a "target lock" and a power check button indicating scores.

The Power On Energizer transfer unit illuminated, emitted sounds and sent light beams through the Captain Power action figure when the live-action Captain Power on television gave his "Power On" battle cry. The accessory also caused other vehicles within range to gain or lose points. Interlocker was an anti-aircraft throne of Lord Dread. It could exchange fire with the television screen and featured an LED "target lock." A digital score readout, ejectable throne, and a "battle scope" for viewing the action from the figure's eye level were also supplied. The miniature Power Base featured a fold out mega-weapon with the same interactive and scorekeeping capabilities as the jets. The megaweapon also had sensors that triggered "explosions" or caused action figures to be ejected.

Each toy could be played with independently of the TV show. As accessories to the show, Battle Training Tapes (animation, not live-action) were supplied in VHS format. Each tape featured 15 minutes of interactive battle and chase footage at a different skill level. Locked into the concept of interactivity to support the toys, filmmakers were required to imbed three to five minutes of interactive signals into each episode. The writers and producers sometimes complained.

"We like action," says Goddard, "but the fact we had to work in action in every single show led to a bit of a headache. Not just minor action, but at least two to three minutes of battle distributed throughout the show." Goddard thinks the interactivity interfered with storytelling at least "a little bit." Nevertheless, Goddard claims that the production crews and cast went into the project solely with the goal of creating dramatic television. "We did not produce the show with children in mind although we were sure children would like the show," he says. "We took more of a Disney philosophy. Walt Disney always said he never made shows for kids. He always made them for adults but put things for kids in them. We were always aiming for the same audiences who watch Star Trek and Star Wars, and we were making the show for ourselves, feeling confident that kids would like the gadget aspects, the CGI characters and things.

Kids liked the show, but overall we had very good reaction from adults. You'll see that in the reviews. People like the stories, people like the fact there is characterization, they can see the production values of the show. Our sole goal was to have a quality science fiction television show within the limitations and parameters that were set up by ... doing a show with a very direct toy tie-in. It required some creative thinking. But I think we did some good, creative problem solving. The majority of those shows stand up on their own merits. You could show any one of those shows today without the interactivity."

The show was originally titled The Metal Wars, and Goddard laughs when reminded that story editor J. Michael Straczynski accused him of creating a childish title in Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future. "He thought it was a dumb title. Because it was being done by Mattel, because they were selling toys, the name of the show had to be the same as the toys," explains Goddard. "I know Straczynski holds me responsible for that, but it was a given. If we didn't call it that, we couldn't have made the show. I like the title. Each season would have been another year in the Metal Wars."

The storylines for Captain Power were surprisingly adult in nature if the viewer looked beyond the battle scenes in every episode. For example, one episode, "The Abyss," featured an insane commander in an uncharted sector who believed the Metal Wars were still raging and had marked Jonathan Power and Hawk for execution.

"Generally speaking, the storylines were aimed at a much more older audience," Goddard agrees. "We tried very hard to make sure there wasn't [just] one dimension and just good and evil. We tried to make sure the characters had their own backgrounds and stories, including the bad guy. On the surface it is basically a good vs. evil kind of thing. I think you'll see that over the course of the shows, everything gets much more dimensional. We used World War II as a model of what we were doing. If you look underneath ... you'll see a lot of the same things at work."

As a result of the production staff's conscious decision to further the World War II allegory, "the entire setup, the entire mission of the first series is to keep the battle in terms of the favor of the Allies," says Goddard. "In this case, Captain Power. As the story unfolds, we find an underground resistance that is trying to help the battle to end the domination of the machines. If you look at the costume design for the bad guys you'll see some very similar designs on the Nazi uniform. There's a lot in there. Again, Joe Straczynski was responsible for that."

Cinematographer Peter Benison, who photographed every episode, agrees with Goddard that in Captain Power "we were doing drama television. Technically, we had to support the toy, but no, we were telling stories to a wide age and interest. I think the toy overshadowed, from an adult point of view. I think the times the show was on, and the publicity the show had in connection with the toy, made adults not want to see it, [or] bother trying to see it. It was just parents of kids who were watching it, they would say, 'It wasn't as much of a kids' show as I thought.'"

On whether the interactivity gimmick was a good element of the show, Benison candidly says, "I never really talked to many people or kids who had the toys and who were using them. It was certainly novel, an extra aspect of the show. But at no time was the show dependent on the toys. It stood on its own."

"What was unique about the use of the interactivity," says Benison, "was that it was built into the characters. Initially, that was going to be the only interactive part of the show. They were very concerned with the violence, so you could only shoot a robot or these computer characters."

For humans on the show there was no signal.... So, you wouldn't have a child directing his gun and shooting at a human. There was no interactive signal. Interactive signals were only on inanimate objects; robots or vehicles or computer generated characters. Computer characters took a long time to do and were expensive. At one point the worry was there wasn't going to be enough interactive signal on the computer-generated characters to support the toys through the show. So we had to introduce the interactive signal onto other objects in the show like vehicles and robots."

That's where the technical prowess came in. Benison designed a light bulb that was strung on the chests of all of Dread's robot troopers to give the animators a frame of reference when animating the glowing red light onto their chests. Interactive signals were then added to that. Benison recalls his experience on the show as a time when "every department went crazy with their specialties and was able to experiment and allow for their imaginations to grow wild, and do things without having their hands tied." Like many science fiction shows throughout television history, Captain Power was a show that could only be done if everything was created from scratch. Filming the entire season took five months, from June to November of 1987, at a budget averaging $ 1.2 million per half-hour with a total of about $26 million for the entire season. The show was filmed in Canada.

"We took over a bus maintenance depot in Toronto," recalls Benison. "This huge building was abandoned for years, it was filthy. We had to turn the power back on, the pipes were bursting, rusted. Even though we got the building from the city for free, it cost us a fortune to clean it up and bring it up to proper safety standards. After that was done, we had a filmmaking studio. Once we set it up, it became cheaper and cheaper for each show."

But the place had no air conditioning and when Toronto had heat waves, everyone felt it. Cold weather was equally uncomfortable in the cavernous building. While an effort was made to soundproof the stages for filming, sounds from the outside world often filtered into the building, ruining many a take. Scenes had to be redone when, for example, cars would drive by or honk their horns.

Camera operator Attila Szalay remembers that the bus depot was so big that almost everyone needed two-wheel scooters with baskets to carry equipment around and get from set to set. To create the interior of the Power jump ship, the shell of a plane was carted through the streets of Toronto, installed at the studio, and redesigned for the show.

Today, according to Brad Creasser, second assistant cameraman, who worked under Benison and with Szalay, the former Captain Power studio has been converted to townhouses and condominiums. Benison marvels at the diversity of people gathered as cast and crew for Captain Power. "It was put together from quite a few different walks of life. We had both American and Canadian [actors]. We had those fresh from acting school, we had people with no experience. It was a real collection, so it was interesting to see their different personalities fit into this rather unusual concept. Everyone got on pretty well. I think the whole crew on the set was unique. We were shooting a fantasy. That put everybody in a different frame of mind." Szalay remembers it as a difficult show, with "massive amounts of special effects and explosions and fires that went on all day long." Creasser, whose job was to slate the takes before every shot, load the cameras and keep track of the film inventory, agrees wholeheartedly. He also remembers dealing with explosions every day.

"Once, we were waiting to do a shot, and squibs from Dread's soldiers went off and flew between Attila and me, just missing us. There were always technical mishaps," he says. Szalay confirms this, saying he lost many a shirt from flying sparks and squib misfires. Eventually they had to give him a fire blanket for protection. To prevent any serious accidents, during any special effects or explosions, all crewmembers wore plastic goggles, and plexiglass shields were strategically placed to protect them and the cameras.

Creasser goes so far as to say, "I became a guinea pig towards the end. So rarely you get to work in dangerous situations with explosions, and it's exciting. Your adrenalin gets going when you're filming things that are blowing up. Several occasions, we were working inside the sets and I would slate and run and get out of the way before they would set off an explosion or squibs. And they have me on camera trying to clear the frame. And I'm yelling, 'Don't blow me! Don't blow me!'"

At the time of Captain Power, says Creasser, slate boards or clapper boards, which are used so editors can identify scenes and synchronize sound and video during post-production, had to be wired to the soundman's tape recorder. (Wireless models were available, but the company opted not to use them because the bulk of shooting took place indoors.) Occasionally, the cable of Creasser's clapper board would get tangled amid the rubble, and he would frantically try to collect the wiring and hurriedly get out of frame.

"I have one image in my head that I'll never forget," says Creasser. "We were shooting outside at night, at the back of the warehouse. We were filming a building, and the script girl, Susan, has to be there with me to read the numbers on the slate, just as I close the sticks. Everyone is way back. There were two or three cameras in safety boxes closer to the buildings. We're there, I have to slate two cameras and then get out of the way before they cue this explosion. I just have this image of Susan and me running back towards everyone else 50 feet away"-with a $2,000 slate board in one hand and cable flying behind.

"We were halfway back before they cued the explosion. I would have loved to have a picture of the two of us running away. From their perspective it must have looked great to see these two people running away, silhouetted by the fireball behind us. Towards the end we were blowing up every set. 'Oh, what are we blowing up today?' I was more than happy to go in there! It became an everyday occurrence."

Of the cast, according to Szalay, Sven Thorsen as "Tank" had it the hardest because, wearing the unbending battle armor, he couldn't even sit down. A special wooden platform had to be built so he could rest.

"I remember him lifting his visor, wearing a Tank outfit, he'd sit there, smoke big cigars and crack jokes, watching people do their work. It was hilarious. That was quite fun. ... And we always made fun of Jessica's breastplates, of course!" says Szalay. Peter MacNeill, as Major Matthew "Hawk" Masterson, says, "I don't think anyone was able to estimate the enormous expense of developing the technical wizardry needed to make the show interactive. I believe ground was broken in many disciplines, including sound recording, set design, animation and computer graphics. In this regard, Captain Power was a success for many people."

Asked if he ever felt overshadowed as an actor by all the special effects that were thrown into the show, MacNeill replies that the show was always a battleground for two schools of thought. "Constantly warring was, should the show be a vehicle to sell toys and to that end must be highly interactive and plot be damned? Or a solid action drama aimed at a science fiction buffs sort of audience, much like Star Trek? When the interactive school, who in fact held the purse strings, won out, in my mind the storyline, the actors and common sense were overshadowed. But then, I'm just an actor."

Hardly bitter, MacNeill fondly recalls his fellow cast members on the show. He remembers many moments on the set that included "laughter and puzzlement dealing with the costumes and sets that were at times being invented for us on the spot," says MacNeill. "My friends and cast members-who, in spite of not being able to move in a cumbersome outfit, were still asked to get out on that limb and act-were for me heroes of the first order. When you're breaking new ground with new ideas and materials, always inventing, always innovating, not everything works first time out. As a result there were long stretches of overtime and many delays while a new prop or effect was put together. The power suits were awkward and hot to wear, the props sometimes cumbersome, however much magic was worked!"

Benison's thoughts about the costumes echo MacNeill's memories. "In the summer, the studio got very hot, and there was smoke and dust flying around," says Benison. "It got very, very uncomfortable in the suits. That was a major problem, for them to be constricted by that. I was surprised it didn't get worse than it did. It was as good as it could be under the circumstances. But we had a lot of fun with it. We were doing something new and different, and that reflected in everybody's attitude."

Of the scripts, MacNeill says, "I felt they had great potential. I mean, the drama of people fighting for life and dignity in a collapsing world run by machines-how could one lose? However editors were told to insert battle scenes one after the other in order to sell the interactive toy. This destroyed, at times, wonderful scripts, and I wondered if instead of being an actor I was in the toy industry. ... I was pleased with the insight and sensitivity with which writers developed the characters, including mine. However, once the 'action editors' got started, not much was left."

So proficient was the crew in creating the special effects, says Benison, that "sometimes we'd get to a sequence where everything is heavily storyboarded and the directors had no say whatsoever. We'd just send the director off somewhere for a couple of hours. 'Go read a newspaper, go make a couple of calls, there's nothing you can do here. We all know this sequence, we know exactly what happens. There's nothing you can direct or supervise.' So directors would get very frustrated too. They'd get overcome by the technical requirements."

Szalay remembers that the signature scene for the show, the "Power On!" sequence in which all the soldiers would electronically don their battle suits by standing under a machine, was very difficult and tedious to film. "We'd have to lock off the camera and have them stand in the machine without the suits, then leave and change into the armor and come back, and we had a still frame of how they were standing on the previous shot on video, and we had to match everything. It had to be within a centimeter of the same place! It had to be exact, otherwise it would look like a jump cut between the segments. One of the first times we did it was quite difficult. It's critical that the camera is locked off. The actors had done the first sequence and were putting on their power suits, and just before they came back, the camera got bumped by the boom man. He was backing up his sound equipment. We wasted a good hour and a half. We had to go back and take off the suits and start from scratch."

Jessica Steen's character, Pilot, would play a pivotal role in the series' final two-part episode, "Retribution." In this episode, Lord Dread finally discovered the Power Base location and sent his soldiers to destroy it. It was Pilot who made the base self destruct so that Captain Power and the rest of the team could survive. Steen's character was always destined to die. Jessica did not want to do a five-year series.

After a season of shows, and millions of toys sold through Christmas, Captain Power fizzled to a stop for three reasons. First, Mattel had oversold the toys to retailers, projecting the idea that it wasn't a $40 million best seller, but a product that had a $22 million shortfall in sales. Second, parents were crying out against the show's violent battle scenes, even though Captain Power was a fantasy show set in the far-flung future. And third, Writers Guild and Screen Actors Guild residuals were expensive for the toy company.

Goddard believes the marketing mismanagement was the primary missile that defeated Captain Power. "[Overselling toys] was something toy companies were doing back then. They were overshipping to run the numbers up. That practice doesn't happen as much anymore, but unfortunately, we were a victim of that." Benison agrees and adds, "Mattel was also quite a bit in trouble. They lost a fair bit of money, not just because of the show but because of toy sales in general. I think executives got changed, and new people came in and didn't want anything to do with it. So the show never had a chance to get rolling."

But Szalay offers a different perspective on Captain Power's abrupt demise. "Ultimately," he says, "the downfall of the show was because [kids] really got into watching the show for the stories, the plots, and the characters. If I watch that show now, and I try playing the video game, it turns into a video game and I don't follow the plot or the story. All I care about is the flashing light on the screen and scores gained. However, kids found that they got into the story too much and then the game became [trivial]. That's why they didn't sell! Everyone I talk to tells me they liked the stories and the drama and you can't play with the toys! It's a different mindset to play video games than it is to watch a science fiction drama." Peter MacNeill recognizes that had the show continued further, there were many directions scripts and characters could have taken. He wishes the show had caught a broader audience by starting with a decent time slot.

"Many of us, crew and actors, hoped for an afternoon or early evening spot," says MacNeill. "When I realized that the focus was the interactive toy, it became impossible to call it anything else. I had hoped it would have a broader appeal when we started. Kids, yes, but the 'kid' in all of us!" Best ratings were garnered either before or after Star Trek-The Next Generation, although TV station operators would also program the show at 5:30 or 6:30 on Saturday mornings. Characterizing the feedback he received from being in the show, MacNeill laughs that "actor friends were not over the moon, but tech freaks were in love!" Illustrating how popular the show was, Benison remembers that once, while sailing in the Virgin Islands, he walked into a grocery store and bumped into Captain Power cereal on the shelves.

Goddard believes that had the deal included "a television company, a production company doing it with us, or a distributor or network, the show would have kept going for another season at least, if not more. But, because it was toy related, Mattel basically just abandoned it." In retrospect, Goddard believes that the interactivity was not good for the show. "Everyone related to the [show] as a toy thing," he sighs. "But that was what I had to agree to in order to get the series made. But I don't think [story editors] Joe Straczynski or Larry DiTillio or myself or any of us involved in the production ever let that affect us. We set out to make a quality television show within the guidelines of having at least three minutes of the show to be interactive programming for the kids who had toys at home. But we made a show that plays just like a normal show. The only way you know it's interactive is if you bought one of the toys. The toys tell you what to look for. The show plays on its own lost track of during the war.

CAPTAIN SCARLET AND THE MYSTERONS

Anderson's latest show maintained his optimistic vision of a 21st century where nations are united under a benevolent world government. It follows the efforts of a secret organisation, Spectrum, to defend Earth against powerful Martian foes, the Mysterons, who have sworn vengeance on mankind after a Spectrum mission to Mars misinterpreted a peaceful gesture by the Mysterons and made an unprovoked attack on the Mysteron complex. Week by week the Mysterons' war of attrition continued, always with a taunting warning of where they would strike next.

They were tough adversaries, too, possessing the power of retrometabolism, whereby they could kill, then reconstruct their victim as an agent under their control. To lead the fight, Gerry and Sylvia Anderson created a new breed of TV hero - the indestructible Captain Scarlet. The man in red acquired his own mysterious regenerative power during his first close encounter with the Mysterons. It enabled him to take on the missions impossible, facing and surviving hazards from car and plane crashes to nuclear explosions.

A colourful supporting cast was assembled around the lead figure of Scarlet - a team of colour-coded Spectrum agents and a quintet of glamorous pilots called Angels. All came complete with detailed 'pasts', some of which preserved a continuity with earlier Supermarionation shows. The full line-up was: Captain Scarlet: Spectrum's no. 1 agent; English, with a brilliant army career behind him. Col. White: English ex-navy man, now Spectrum's commander-in chief.

Captain Blue: American ex-test pilot and brilliant scholar who accompanies Scarlet on many of his missions. Captain Grey: American ex-WASP who worked on the prototype Stingray. Captain Ochre: American flyer and crack crimefighter. Captain Magenta: Irishman who became New York's top gang boss. Recruited by Spectrum as their man inside the underworld. Lt Green: Col. White's Trinidadian right-hand man. Another ex-WASP. Dr Fawn: Aussie medic. The 'Bones' of Spectrum!

The Angels-Symphony, Melody, Rhapsody, Harmony and Destiny-all combine courage and beauty. Rhapsody's 'biography' described her as a Chelsea deb who once worked with Lady Penelope! Principal villain was the elusive Captain Black, a Spectrum agent who becomes the Mysterons' Earth agent when they take him over. The Mysterons themselves are heard but never seen, save for two roving eyes that seek out their targets.

After the success of the Thunderbirds, there was again a heavy accent on hardware. Spectrum itself operated from a flying aircraft carrier, Cloudbase, and the ground agents relied on a range of hi-tech vehicles, including the ten-wheeled Spectrum Pursuit Vehicle (SPV), and the Maximum Security Vehicle (MSV).

Captain Scarlet and the Mysterons cost £1,500,000 to make, but significantly advanced the Supermarionation cause. The figures were perfectly proportioned, with the equipment that worked the eye, lip and hand movements housed in the body, so ending the 'big-headed' marionette tradition. And if the eyes seemed uncannily real, that's because, in a sense, they were real. They were the eyes of Century 21 employees - production assistants, cameramen, continuity girls and secretaries - photographed, then superimposed on to plastic eyeballs. Supermarionation reached twin peaks of sophistication and expense in Gerry Anderson's fifth sci-fi puppet series. With his company now flying the flag of Century 21.

The cast of voices was headed by Francis Matthews as Captain Scarlet, South African Donald Gray as Col. White, Captain Black and the menacing Mysterons, Ed Bishop as Captain Blue and Emergency Ward 10 star Charles Tingwell as Dr Fawn. Paul Maxwell, previously heard as Steve Zodiac in FIREBALL XL5, was Captain Grey, while Jeremy Wilkin (Virgil in the second series of THUNDERBIRDS) voiced Captain Ochre and many of the guest characters.

The quirks of ITV regionalisation meant that Captain Scarlet was denied a nationwide launch. The series premiered in the Midlands area on 29 September 1967 and in London on 1 October (ironically in black and white), with the rest of the country soon after. Sporadic revivals followed 20 years later, but Captain Scarlet was properly introduced to a new generation with a BBC2 run in 1993.

This was the 5th SF tv series made by Gerry and Sylvia Anderson in SuperMarionation i.e., with puppets. Not quite as good as THUNDERBIRDS, report people who were 11 years old at the time, but pretty exciting all the same, and the most sophisticated of all in terms of both narrative and special effects techniques. Captain Scarlet and his colour-coded Spectrum agents fought against the Martian Mysterons, who could kill and then resuscitate people as Martian agents. Captain Scarlet himself had, as a result of an early brush with Mysterons, developed the ability to regenerate after death. CSATM is rather darker than other Anderson series because of the need to work a death into the plot each week. Eight episodes were cobbled together to make two made-for-tv feature films, Captain Scarlet vs The Mysterons (1967) and Revenge of the Mysterons from Mars (1981).

The series executive producer was Gerry Anderson, producer was Reg Hill, script editor was Tony Barwick, the special effects were created by Derek Meddings, characterization was by Sylvia Anderson, the music was by Barry Gray, and the title theme song was sung by the Spectrum. The series broadcast dates are for the ATV, Midlands region.

Sylvia Anderson and her ex-husband Gerry were the co-creators of some of the best loved science fiction television programs of the 1960s. The Sylvia Anderson collection included actual Supermarionation puppets used in the production of Stingray, Thunderbirds, Captain Scarlet, Joe 90, and The Secret Service. The London auction attracted hundreds of people including bidders from as far away as Japan, Australia, and the United States.

Quite a few of the items at the auction were from the collections of John Read and Mary Turner, who worked on the shows in the 1960s. All the heads and hands, for example were from John and Mary.

Although most of the media attention surrounding the Sylvia Anderson collection auction was centered upon the puppets, many other items of Supermarionation memorabilia were also available. The most numerous items in the collection were disembodied puppet heads in various conditions ranging from 100% complete to near wrecks. About one hundred of these puppet heads went under the auctioneer's gavel at prices that started in the low hundreds of Pounds and finished in the low thousands of Pounds. I was extremely lucky to have been able to participate in the Sylvia Anderson collection auction through the efforts of my good friends Steve Kyte and Helen McCarthy. They obtained lot number 17 for me, a Dr. Fawn puppet head from Captain Scarlet. The puppet head I purchased was one of three different Dr. Fawn puppet heads available at the Sylvia Anderson auction. Mine was the only one that was in complete condition. The other two Dr. Fawn puppet heads were incomplete to varying degrees. One was missing the back of the head (lot 12) and the other was missing both eyes and an ear (lot 16).

The Dr. Fawn puppet head that I have is in good condition and complete in every way. It has the original Captain Scarlet series wig, eyes with internal turning mechanism, and moving lower lip with lip-synch solenoid. It would be possible to hook the solenoid up to a suitable power source and connect the eye mechanism to fine wires and the head would work just as it did during the late 1960s. Considering that it is nearly 30 years old, the puppet head is in excellent physical condition with the exception of a few minor paint chips and scratches that are mostly located on the neck. My Dr. Fawn puppet head is about 4 1/4 inches high from the bottom of the neck to the top of the highest part of the head and is about 2 1/2 inches wide across the ears. The head is made of glass fiber reinforced polyester resin which is about a sixteenth of an inch thick or a bit thicker. It is hollow of course, and was molded in two parts. The parting line is centered down the middle of the ears and there is a thick resin join line visible inside the head. The ears appear to have been molded separately and glued to the head with resin.

The original basic construction method was to sculpt a master out of plasticine modeling clay. This plasticine master was used to create a two part plaster of Paris mold corresponding to the front and back of the puppet head. Production heads were made in these molds by laminating many layers of glass fiber cloth which were soaked in Bondaglass brand polyester resin.

The resin was formulated in such a way that it dried to the touch in 30 minutes and became completely cured in an hour. The color of the part when removed from the mold was a light translucent beige color. Openings for the eyes and mouth had to be cut out of the front shell and a removable hatch was made in the rear shell. Surface imperfections were smoothed out using a putty-like material called Bondapaste. The exterior of the head is finely finished with small details like creases, etc., which are very subtly done. The hair and eyebrows are made of a fine brown mohair material which closely resembles human hair. This is securely glued into place and does not appear to have ever been removable. The eyelashes appear to have been cut down from standard cosmetic eyelashes or a similar material. The eyes are made of transparent plastic hemispheres which have reduced color photographs of an actual human pupil glued into the center from the inside. The interior of the eyes behind and around the pupils was painted white. Over time the pupils have faded from their original color to a strange shade of pink. The lower lip is hinged and held in the shut position by a strong spring. The surface directly below the lip is covered by fine leather to provide flexibility.

The head is painted a dark flesh color on top of the original lighter Captain Scarlet color for use as an extra in the Joe 90 episode "King for a Day". The type of paint used was flexible enough to permit the leather under the lip to move without cracking. The head was primed with a gray primer paint below the surface coats. The lips are pink, the teeth are white, and there is a subtle black beard stubble painted on the head. The back quarter of the head is removable for access to the head's interior mechanism. The tolerances are very tight and the joint is hidden by the hair. The back panel is secured to the bulk of the head by means of a magnet and a strip of steel. The interior mechanism is made of finely crafted brass and steel wire. The eye mechanism is a wire rocker assembly that pivots from side to side to move the eyes. I have not been able to determine where the eye mechanism wires came out of the head. Normally they extended from the side near the corners of the eyes. It is possible that my head was part of an under-control puppet and if so, the eye control would have come from below. There are still two very fine steel control wire remnants attached to the eye rocker mechanism. The eye mechanism is attached to the inside of the head by a brass hand screw.

The movable lower lip is secured to the inside of the head with a strong spring wire which keeps it in a closed position. The actual lip-synch mechanism is a metal wire loop that is connected to a solenoid by means of a long length of nylon string. The metal lip-synch solenoid extends about 4 inches below the neck. It is marked with "50vdc" in black pen. The solenoid is connected to the head with a ball and socket joint. Obviously the solenoid was the point of connection between the puppet body and the head.

The Frost Line Outer Space Defence System is endangered by the Mysterons when they destroy a maintenance truck, murdering its engineer/driver in the process, as a cover to infiltrate the defence bases sited in Northern Canada, where the Mysteronised engineer intends to proceed in removing all oxygen from the bases' self-contained atmosphere.

With bases' "Red Deer" and "Cariboo" already taken down, the next base in the ring, "Big Bear", is the Mysterons' final target. But if the base is attacked also, the commander-in-chief of the defence network plans to commence a vengeful missile strike on Mars, where the main Mysteron complexes are established.

Colonel White desperately wants to prevent this from happening, and so, he assigns Lieutenant Green to his first off-base, "in-the-field" assignment, along with Captain Scarlet, to evaluate just how the bases are being cut off, and stop the maintenance engineer from triggering off a global disaster.

1 - 6 WHITE AS SNOW

When a radio station relay and communications satellite is recreated by the Mysterons and its course altered towards Cloudbase, Colonel White orders it to be destroyed before it collides with the aerial base.

Infuriated at his superior for disregarding the lives of the men on-board the satellite, Scarlet declines the opportunity to be the temporary commander-in-chief of Cloudbase, and therefore, the offer is handed to the honoured Captain Blue.

Leaving for a surreptitious destination, which only White has told to Lieutenant Green about, and with harsh instructions not to publish it to anyone at all, he arrives on board the USS Panther II submarine, with the alias Robert Snow, where shortly after one of the ensign officers is, with intent, murdered and reconstructed by the Mysterons in their newest play of vengeance to kill Colonel White.

1 - 7 THE TRAP

A World Air Force plane carrying Commodore Goddard and his right-hand man, being escorted by Melody Angel, is struck by lightning, and crashes, soon being reconstructed by the Mysterons.

The force broadcasts its current threat: that they aim to kill all 10 of the world's top air-chiefs, who make up the executive Supreme Command of the World Air Force, who want to discuss a plan to dissolve the war of nerves between Earth and the hostile force. They plan on doing so by holding an International Air Conference at the loneliest location in Europe; Glen Garry Castle in Scotland.

This is however unknown to Colonel White, who is awaiting the approval from Captain Scarlet that the castle's security is set up and approved. After she brings the delegates to the castle to start the conference, Symphony Angel is taken prisoner, as is Captain Scarlet, who unexpectedly discovers the brutal plan before the delegates arrive.

Leaving the air-chiefs with no warning, and in perfect firing positions to be massacred by Goddard and his personal cohort aid, will Colonel White realise in time that something is wrong? Can Captain SCarlet save the day?

When this is reported to Spectrum Headquarters, Colonel White fires Scarlet on the spot, for improper use of the organisation's code of conduct.

Living in a shabby hotel room temporarily, a pair of Mysteron agents, posing businessmen, formulate a deal with the now Paul Metcalfe, with his I.O.U. for 5,000 credits, in return for a Spectrum Pursuit Vehicle which will be used to brake into the Nevada Nuclear City Complex and, with an atomic incendiary device onboard, obliterate the whole of North America.

A team of professional robbers break into a minor Spectrum Security Vault near the coast of New York, where "useless" documentation is kept, which proves quite valuable to the lawbreakers. Along with another gang member, they simulate a fake play-act for a forest lookout warden, just on the outskirts of the American capital as hopeless, potentially dangerous drunks. They set-up their car with fake lookalike puppets to deceive the warden into thinking that the 3 drunken men that he just warned has helplessly crashed off the high mountainous road, and exploded in a fireball.

The gang then takes care of the warden and, deliberately posing as Mysteronised humans, they announce the force's latest plan to destroy the Second National Bank of New York, however the real Mysterons have yet to announce this at all, except for stating that they will destroy "The Heart of New York", but Colonel White understands that the bank is more than vital to fulfill the threat, as it stocks the entire gold reserve for the whole Eastern Seaboard of the country.

The robbers nevertheless intend to achieve their goal, again by posing as senior agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and succeed in gaining entry through the Spectrum roadblock. CAPTAIN ULTRA

Captain Ultra (Nakata) fights to protect the Earth from monsters in a series that might look on the surface like a Tsuburaya production but was in fact made by their rival Toei.

With Tsuburaya's ULTRAMAN series forced to finish early due to the time lag between filming and broadcasting, Toei stepped into the breach with this new look alike show, featuring BIOMAN and MASKED RIDER AMAZON star Nakata.

The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama, Yauji Udea and Kunio Kumagai.

Captain Ultra (Kyaputen Urutora) is the titular intergalactic hero of a pulp-style tokusatsu science fiction space adventure series. Produced by Toei Company Ltd., the series aired on Tokyo Broadcasting System (TBS) from April 16 to September 24, 1967, with a total of 24 episodes. The show is titled Space Tokusatsu Series: Captain Ultra (Uchû Tokusatsu Shirizu: Kyaputen Urutora).

This series is based loosely on Captain Future, the pulp science fiction saga created by the influential Edmond Hamilton. This was not the only time his work was adapted in Japan: Captain Future was adapted into an anime series in 1978, and that same year, Tsuburaya Productions adapted his Starwolf novels into a tokusatsu sci-fi action series of the same title.

Originally, this series was aired by TBS right after the end of the original Ultraman show as the "official" follow up to said series, even though it really wasn't. Ultra Seven aired on TBS more than a week after this series ended.

While not as well known in Japan, some Japanese fans also compare the looks of Captain Ultra to that of Captain Scarlet, the title hero of Sylvia and Gerry Anderson's Supermarionation series, Captain Scarlet & The Mysterons (which had been shown in Japan around the same time).

Captain Ultra (Hirohisa Nakata) - The hero.

Huck (Jiro Sagawa) - Captain Ultra's robot companion.

Joe (Nenji Kobayashi) - Captain Ultra's alien friend from Planet Kikero.

Akane (Yuki Jono) - Captain Ultra's beautiful space cadet. Has assorted secret agent gadgets.

Kenji (Shigeru Yasunaka) - Captain Ultra's eager young boy space cadet.

Professor Munamoto (Ichiro Izawa) - The scientific expert for our heroes.

CAPTAIN VIDEO AND HIS VIDEO RANGERS

The government played no significant role in scientific genius Captain Video single-handedly saving the world out of a sense of civic duty. By so doing, he not only defeated evildoers such as Dr. Clysmok, Dahoumie, Heng Foo Seeng, Kul of Eos, Mook the Moon Man, and Nargola, but also had a chance to field-test his gadgets, including The Atomic Rifle, the Discatron, the Optical Scillometer, the Radio Scillograph, and the Cosmic Ray Vibrator (stop giggling, will you?). His most fiendish adversary was Dr. Pauli, who had his own set of super-duper hardware, including the Barrier of Silence (later parodied on "Get Smart"), the Cloak of Invisibility, and the Trisonic Compensator.

This was the first ever science fiction television series created in 1949. It was not however the first ever programme of an SF nature produced for television, that honour goes to a dramatisation of H.G. Wells' The Time Machine made by the BBC in 1948. This was a historically significant show, despite the astonishingly stingy prop budget of $25 per week. Why? Because it was the first and most successful of three children's science fiction shows that seduced kids into the axioms of the Space Opera genre, the other two being "Space Patrol" and "Tom Corbett--Space Cadet."

It can be argued that this created some of the popular support that allowed for a genuine space program only a few years later. The Dumont Network (whose demise alone could end this popular show) sold to their viewers such premiums as Decoder Rings, Space Helmets, and plastic copies of Captain Video's weaponry, almost all of which are highly collectable today. Late in its life, the show was retitled "The Secret Files of Captain Video" and they stopped editing in stock footage of Westerns through the money-saving "Remote Carrier Beam." Captain Video's spaceship was called the "Galaxy" -- and every child wished to be Captain Video's sidekick "The Ranger" and ride the Galaxy to exotic destinations, whether or not the instruments on the control panel were obviously painted on.

Captain Video and His Video Rangers was shot live in cramped sets on a minuscule budget from the Dumont studios inside the Wanamaker Department Store in New York. For most of its run the series was broadcast 5 times a week, Monday through Friday. However, when it started there was no Wednesday episode and for most of 1950 it was also seen on Saturday. Episodes were serialised and ended on a cliff-hanger ensuring that the audience would tune in the next day. Although the series started off with half hour segments it was cut back to 15 minutes a day in late 1953. During the first couple of years the series was on the air the episodes also included several minutes of old western films inserted into them. These were incorporated into the storyline as checking up on the Video Rangers out west with the remote carrier beam. This was done as both a cost saving measure and to allow the actors to change sets.

The role of Captain Video was first played by Richard Coogan. Coogan however was unable to keep up with the demands of a daily television series and his Broadway theatre work and left the role in December of 1950 to concentrate on his Broadway career. He was replaced by Al Hodge. Before taking over the role of Captain Video Hodge had been best known as the voice of the Green Hornet on radio. The role of Captain Video typecast Hodge for life and he was unable to find steady work as an actor after the show was cancelled. The Video Ranger was portrayed by Don Hastings. Hastings was only 15 when he started on the series, and would later gain greater fame in the soap opera As the World Turns.

Captain Video had a large rogue's gallery of villains the most infamous being his arch nemesis Dr. Pauli, the head of the Asteroidal Society. Dr Pauli was the intellectual equal of Captain Video who used his scientific genius for evil purposes. Although Dr. Pauli always seemed to perish by his own hands at the end of each adventure he always seemed to reappear down the road. Once being resurrected by Captain Video who needed Dr. Pauli's help! On one occasion he even took it upon himself to have plastic surgery so Captain Video would not recognise him- a clever way of explaining Hal Conklin taking over the role from Bram Nosses. Dr. Pauli was often assisted in his evil plans by his aid Clipper Evans. Other villains the Captain encountered included Spartak, an arrogant Prince from the mysterious Black Planet Spartak later changed his evil ways and became a good guy. Tobor (robot spelled backwards) was a robot controlled by a beautiful woman obsessed with destroying Captain Video. Like Spartak, Tobor returned as a good guy after his defeat at Captain Video's hands.

When Captain and His Video Rangers was cancelled in 1955 it was not due to lack of popularity. DTN for several years had been an unhealthy television network. Rulings by the FCC in 1952 made it all but impossible for 4 commercial TV networks to survive. Most cities were given only 2 or 3 VHF TV stations. Although UHF stations did exist many soon folded since most television sets were incapable of receiving their signals. This plus an unhealthy relationship with Paramount Pictures, several earlier unfavourable FCC rulings on DTN's behalf and the lack of a radio network to build a TV network on forced DTN to cease network operations in 1955. Many of their more popular series found homes on other networks, however Captain Video was not one of them. DTN refused an offer by NBC to purchase the series.

There were several Captain Video spin offs. The first was a theatrical serial released in 1951, the first time Hollywood looked to TV for a property. This fifteen chapter serial, Captain Video, Master of the Stratosphere, starred Judd Holdren as Captain Video and Larry Stewart as Video Ranger. The second was a fortnightly Saturday morning TV series. This was entitled The Secret Files of Captain Video and contained complete half hour stories. The Secret Files of Captain Video ran from September of 1953 until May of 1954, and is chronicled elsewhere in this book. After Captain Video and His Video Rangers left the air in 1955 Al Hodge returned in his Captain Video role to host a children's series of cartoons and documentary films on DTN's former flagship station WABD in New York.

This guide is incomplete since available information on early episodes of Captain Video is all but non-existent. Several now famous actors appeared on Captain Video at some point in time, however the episodes in which they appeared is unknown. These actors include: Ernest Borgnine, Jack Klugman and Tony Randall. Well known science fiction writers also worked on Captain Video. Although the specific serials which they wrote are unknown, Robert Sheckley, Damon Knight and C.M. Kornbluth all contributed to the programme. Lester Del Rey for a time acted as a scientific advisor to the series. Captain Video and His Video Rangers has never been rerun and never will be since the kinescopes of the episodes (along with all of the other DTN shows) were destroyed in the late 1950's. This was done to both reclaim the silver in them and to avoid having to store what was perceived to be worthless items. Less than half a dozen episodes are known to have been spared. The total number of episodes listed as 1537 is a best estimate and does not take into account unannounced preemptions. The total number of serials is most likely closer to 100 however information is only available on 51 of them.

NOTES: No information is available for the first two years of Captain Video and His Video Rangers, thus this guide starts during the third year the show was on the air. Episodes were made in a daily serial format, the episode number given referring to the episode number of the first part of the serial. The number in () refers to the number of parts per serial. Broadcast 'date refers to the broadcast date of the first part of the serial. Since the programme was on all year round with new episodes, there are no season breaks and the new years are determined by the first serial to start in a given year- thus the last serial of a year may have concluded in the following year.

CV was shot live in a small studio and on a low budget, with the result that much of the spectacle had to be provided by the imaginations of young viewers; it also incorporated filmed material, such as short Westerns and cartoons, which were introduced by the Captain himself. In 1953 the serial format was dropped; CV was retitled The Secret Files of Captain Video and became a weekly adventure with self-contained stories, but it folded that same year. In 1955 Hodge returned as Captain Video in a weekly 60min children's show, which he also produced.

Though still wearing his uniform, which looked like a cross between a marine's and a bus driver's, he merely acted as the show's host, introducing stock adventure-film footage and undemanding shorts of an "educational" nature which he would then discuss with the studio audience of children. In 1956 CV ended his career with Captain Video's Cartoons, the Master of Time and Space reduced to announcing the funnies. There was a comic book based on CV. Of the 1537 episodes which were made of Captain Video many of the early live action ones do not exist since they were never recorded, therefore details of many of these episodes is sketchy at best.

His exotic-sounding adversaries included Mook the Moon Man, Kul of Eos, Dr. Clysmok and Dr. Pauli, the evil head of the Astroidal Society whose scientific weaponry rivalled Captain Video's. While Video had his Opticon Scillometer which allowed him to see through solid objects, and also his Cosmic Vibrator to shake up the opposition, Dr. Pauli was able to bend the path of bullets with his Trisonic Compensator and cover his tracks with his Cloaks of Silence and Invisibility. The series aired in America from 1949 to 1955, running six nights a week at its peak.

Almost half a century after its introduction as TV's first space opera, it is hard for many people to comprehend the widespread influence Captain Video had on the original television generation. Everything about Cap-tain Video and His Video Rangers was cheap and primitive. And that observation is not made out of condescension or as a putdown, but rather as an admission of respect for what the series was able to accomplish during its life span. Television itself was a primitive but emerging medium on June 27, 1949, when Captain Video premiered over the DuMont Network. As critic Tom Shales observed, "The special effects were pretty tacky, but when you're a kid you don't require much to prick your imagination."

Like many of television's most successful innovations, Captain Video came about almost by accident. Jim Caddigan, DuMont's pro-gram director, encountered an airing of Cap-tain Marvel and suggested to some of the assembled staff at DuMont that they should try their hand at creating a science fictional Captain something-or-other. Somebody came up with "Captain Video." From there the idea was turned over to writer Larry Menkin who recalls, "I came up with a structure-Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Moriarty." Holmes, of course, was Captain Video and Moriarty was the Cap-tain's arch nemesis, Dr. Pauli. It was almost as simple as that. Of course, a cast still had to be selected and for the role of Captain Video a 34-year-old Broadway and radio actor named Richard Coogan was appointed. As the Captain's youthful assistant, "The Video Ranger," 15-year-old Don Hastings was picked.

The role of Dr. Pauli, the evil scientific genius and guiding force behind the Asteroidal Society, fell initially to Bram Nossen. Directing Captain Video at the outset was Charles Polachek and writing many of the early plots was M.C. Brock. Contrary to generally held belief, Cap-tain Video was earthbound for the first several months of the series. In fact, most of the action took place at Video Rangers Headquarters, a place described by TV critic Jack Gould as "a room equipped with flashing bulbs, micro-phones, panels, dials, telephones, etc. By com-parison, the central office of AT&T is just for beginners." Reportedly, only after ABC unveiled plans to serve up a new version of Buck Rogers did Captain Video manage to make it into outer space, and even then only after series star Richard Coogan went public with his dissatisfaction. "It's about time we got into the interplanetary stuff. I don't want to become stagnant in the role." Buck Rogers would last only a few months but the series could at least take credit for launching Captain Video out of Earth orbit.

It is a fair surmise, given the parsimonious nature of the DuMont Network, that Captain Video avoided rocketing off into space for as long as it did because of financial considera-tions. Quite simply, space travel was going to cost more production dollars. Only the threat that came from a competing network intent on cutting into Captain Video's lucrative market seems to have convinced DuMont to allow the change in direction.

It is worth spending a little time looking at the interplay of cost-cutting measures and creative responses which resulted in an undis-puted television legend. The first note of significance is the lack of extant recordings of the Captain Video series. Although researcher Alan Morton has made a "best estimate" of 1537 aired episodes, only four or five have resurfaced to date. As Morton points out, Captain Video kinescopes and, in fact, all of the other kinescopes in the old DuMont archives were destroyed at the end of the 1950s to glean a handful of dollars from the silver content of the films and to save storage costs for so many thousands of unprofitable films deemed worth-less. In essence, Captain Video died as the series had lived-a pawn of the bean counters.

In spite of, or because of, an addiction to frugality, Captain Video and His Video Rangers tapped an emotional response from a huge audience during the first half of the '50s. One story told is that Adlai Stevenson was approached to make an important speech which would coincidentally conflict with one of Captain Video's nightly appearances. Stevenson emphatically turned down the request. "Seven o'clock on a weekday? No sir not opposite Captain Video."

Certainly Captain Video's influence on the popular culture was enormous. The DuMont Network, which was formed in large measure as a means of creating a market for DuMont television receivers, was more than satisfied with the success of the series, one of only a handful of true hits DuMont ever had to its credit. The most popular programs of the day- Captain Video among themwere literally redefining family behaviour and relationships. Coogan observed the change from the perspective of someone intimately involved in creating the social change. During his tenure as Captain Video, Coogan reported. The fathers in my neighbourhood used to take their children to a nearby bar and grill to see Captain Video, whenever they had time. The owner would stop serving any drinks that half-hour and what happened then? A lot of families got television sets just so father wouldn't miss the Captain's latest adventure in Electronicland.

And the television sets sold by Captain Video? DuMont sets, of course! In fact, Captain Video sold a great many items beyond DuMont television receivers. The program sold lots of Power House candy bars as well as Skippy Peanut Butter and Post Cereal; all were prominent sponsors. At a time when the influence of radio was still keenly felt by the television industry, Captain Video frequently indulged in one of the long time practices of radio, the premium give away. The array of pre-mium offers included a "Flying Saucer Ring," a "Secret Seal Brass Ring," cast photos, membership cards in the Video Rangers, secret decoders, "Electronic Video Goggles," a "Secret Ray Gun," a rocket ship key chain and a series of 12 plastic space men. This made for a somewhat strange dichotomy: a munificent advertising income and a production budget of Lilliputian proportions.

The cast of Captain Video had to settle for rewards other than monetary. In an interview years later, Don Hastings recalled that he and other members of the cast actually made more from guest appearances at supermarket open-ings and county fairs than from the show itself. When Richard Coogan left the role in December 1950, it was speculated that the decision was at least in part dictated by a refusal to cut the cast in for a percentage of the lucrative licensing dollars accruing from the sale of Captain Video merchandise.

It required a great deal of physical and emotional stamina to survive the heavy demands of live television. Captain Video in its five-times-a-week serial format and tight bud-gets was hard on actors. Coogan left the role and concentrated his energies on the Broadway stage; Bram Nossen, the evil Dr. Pauli, left the show in June 1950 after he reportedly broke down under the pressure and asked to be replaced. The series would also go through an array of writers and directors. In fact, young Don Hastings, the Video Ranger, probably demonstrated the most staying power-appearing from day one through to the ring-ing down of the final curtain some six years later. When Bram Nossen bowed out as Dr. Pauli, program executives hurriedly scouted around for a replacement and came up with Hal Conklin, who would serve in the role as needed until 1954 when he relinquished the part to Stephen Elliott.

To replace Richard Coogan, the decision was made to offer the role to veteran radio actor Al Hodge. Hodge had appeared in roles on such programs as The Romance of Helen Trent, Ma Perkins and Bobby Benson and the B-Bar-B Riders. He was also an early director on The Lone Ranger and most notably had held the lead on radio's Green Hornet from 1936 to 1943. Hodge seemed a perfect fit for yet another superhero part. Interestingly, when Hal Conklin replaced Bram Nossen, it was explained in the script that the perfidious Dr. Pauli had undergone plastic surgery in an effort to outwit Captain Video. However, six months later, when Al Hodge replaced Coogan, no plausible explanation was offered.

The evolving cast and behind-the-scenes changes didn't seem to affect the growing pop-ularity of Captain Video. The series continued on its own unique improvisational and frugal way. Captain Video's mountaintop headquar-ters, as Don Hastings vividly recalls, was "lit-erally a four-by-four card on an easel. Some-times it fell off while we were shooting." As was widely reported at the time, the prop budget for Captain Video and His Video Rangers was a paltry $25 a week. Yet out of that budget, innovative minds at DuMont devised a plethora of gadgets which were the talk of schoolyards and the dream of every cov-etous youngster in America

The first two recorded instruments in the Captain's arsenal of special devices were the Opticon Scillometer (a telescope capable of peering around corners and through solid objects) and a ray gun. Charles Polachek, the original director of Captain Video, recalled the detailed history of those two inventions in an interview published in Jeff Kisseloff's engag-ing volume, The Box: The Oral History of Television, 1920-1961. Polachek recalled that DuMont had no prop department and only at the last minute did the need for an Opticon Scillometer and a ray gun dawn on the direc-tor. Fortunately, the DuMont Studio where Captain Video was produced was located in Wanamaker's Department Store in New York City Polachek and a companion paid a quick visit to Wanamaker's toy department in search of some type of gun they could transform into the required ray gun, but to their dismay dis-covered that Wanamaker's toy department was pacifist-no guns of any kind. Polachek's next trip was to the auto parts department where the Opticon Scillometer hurriedly took shape out of a spark plug, a muffler, a rear-view-mir-ror and an ashtray.

Other inventions on the show were equally contrived. The Cosmic Ray Vibrator, when pointed at one of Captain Video's foes, caused him to begin twitching and shaking uncontrollably. There was also Captain Video's Thermoid Ejector, a weapon capable of shoot-ing infrared thermal currents. The Mango-Radar could be aimed at any spot on the planet and allow Captain Video to eavesdrop on any event.

When Captain Video finally lifted off into space, he and the Video Ranger travelled in style in the Captain's private ship, the Galaxy. Discerning viewers couldn't help but notice the interior of the Galaxy was constructed out of cardboard and most of the instruments on the instrument panel had been installed with a paintbrush. Larry Menkin, one of the writers for the show, has described a typ-ical flight in the Galaxy: Instead of having them take off in their spaceship, we had them lying down, and we'd shake the camera. Also, when they were going through clouds, we took a great big tank of water, poured cream in it and shot through that.

Dr. Pauli, too, had his infernal devices. Pauli possessed the ability to set up "a barrier of silence" which had the effect of shutting off all sound. Pauli also had at his disposal "a cloak of invisibility." Captain Video kept a succession of writ-ers busy for six years, their imaginations always tempered by budget considerations. Consequently, a Captain Video script was long on dia-logue and painfully short on the kind of rapid and exciting action later generations have come to expect. Writers including M.C. Brock, Jack Vance, Damon Knight, C.M. Kornblath, Robert Sheckley and Larry Menkin are given credit for contributing stories to Captain Video.

For the first couple of years, writers were also required to allow time in the middle of each script for a five-minute cutaway segment of an old western movie, perhaps the strangest aspect of the entire series. Youngsters could understand the adversarial relationship between Captain Video and Dr. Pauli, they could understand the mechanics of the Opti-con Scillometer, they could comprehend the "barrier of silence" and they could explain the operation of the instrument panel in the Galaxly but the sudden appearance of a segment of a Range Busters movie sandwiched in the middle of each Captain Video episode confounded more than one five-year-old. Halfway into each program, Captain Video tuned in via another invention (the Remote Tele-Carrier) to see what was happening with his Video Rangers out West where other villains were on the loose.

The actual explanation for the Western sequences, however, takes us right back to DuMont's tight-fisted approach. Reportedly the original concept for Captain Video called for the Captain and his sidekick to serve merely as hosts to a series of Western films DuMont had purchased for broadcast. A change of plans transformed Captain Video into an action hero with his own series of adventures; however, DuMont wasn't about to waste the broadcast rights to all of those old Western movies and so Captain Video made room for brief appearances by John Wayne, Ken Maynard, Tex Ritter and a lengthy list of other Western heroes. Jim Caddigan, the executive in charge of programming at DuMont and the man usually credited with conceiving Captain Video, explained in an interview with Time (December 25, 1950) presumably with a straight face, the official network line concerning the baffling appearance of all those Westerns in the middle of a space opera.

The Western is there to give us the pace and action that we can't get in a live studio production. The hero of the Western is always supposed to be an agent of Captain Video's-that sort of ties it together. A parade of cheaply costumed villains passed in review before the DuMont cameras in those years. Aside from the recurring Dr. Pauli (a.k.a. "The Sinister Electronic Wizard"), there was Hing Foo Sung, played by Henry Norrel, who was billed as "a wily Oriental." Other figures of note included Tobor ("Robot" spelled backwards), played by Dave Ballard, and Nargola, played by Ernest Borgnine. In their tribute to early television, The Great Television Heroes, Donald Glut and Jim Harmon estimated that in Captain Video's career over 300 villains crossed paths with "the Guardian of the World." When the budget was stretched to the point that the show couldn't hire enough actors for all the required parts, the program director would double up on the parts by disguising actors with false beards and other forms of camouflage. Charles Polachek recalls resorting to the use of stagehands' shadows to augment his cast.

Al Hodge as Captain Video took his responsibilities toward his young viewers seriously, as did most of the heroes of early television. They shared the sentiment that they were guests in each and every home and they felt obligated not to abuse their welcome. At the same time that Hodge was appearing weekdays as Captain Video, he was appearing Sunday mornings as a Sunday school teacher in Manhasset, Long Island, and freely tied the two roles together. In discussing his juggling of roles, Hodge told one interviewer:

Every week, without fail, I see several new faces in class. At the end of each session, I notice that the newcomers have been taken aside and, in hushed whispers, learn that I am Captain Video himself. The identification does have a very good aspect. At least three times a week on Captain Video, we deliver short messages to our youthful listeners. We stress the Golden Rule, tolerance, honesty and personal integrity. I'm thankful for the opportunity for being associated with the show that helps, in a small measure, to illuminate for the young people of America, the importance of courage, character and the sense of moral values.

In the fall of 1954, a Senate subcommittee under the chairmanship of Robert Hendrickson (Republican, New Jersey) held hearings to determine the extent to which the new medium of television was contributing to the alarming rise in juvenile delinquency. A TV schedule which seemed filled to overflowing with six-guns, ray guns and Cosmic Ray Vibrators was suspected of at least some culpability. Al Hodge was called to testify and in a sense justify his own performance over the previous four years. "Of course, you have to have villains in a hero program or there's not any use for a hero," Hodge pointed out.

Hodge's testimony underscored a crucial difference that needed to be made between violence perpetrated by a clearly defined villain and the countermeasures employed by role models such as Captain Video. Television heroes of the 1950s struggled constantly with the issue. Hodge attempted to define the approach taken on his own show:

We don't even use the word "kill." We use weapons like the stun gun which immobilize but don't pain... We don't use capital punishment. We confine our criminals to rehabilitation centres on the planet Ganymede. . . . Chairman Hendrickson asked Hodge if he, as Captain Video, would stamp on someone's hand-a reference to an instance of media violence previously viewed by the committee. Newsweek (November 1, 1954) reported his answer:

Oh no, said Video, he would never stamp his foot on a helpless man's hand because it was in bad taste-unless, of course, it was a temporary thing done simply to hold a villain in place, and then it might be in good taste.

Video carefully added that even when he was just cruising around in the solar sys-tem in his spaceship, he always kept on the lookout for a "moral value."

Although the tangle of rationalisations may seem amusing, the answers were framed as honest answers by an actor with moral con-victions, struggling to respond to a hypothetical confrontational situation.

Captain Video and His Video Rangers ceased production in April 1955 close to the time the DuMont Network finally caved in to financial weakness and dissolved. There had been spin-offs from the original series, of course. Columbia Pictures released a 15-part Captain Video serial starring Judd Holdren in 1951. A Saturday version titled The Secret Files of Captain Video and starring Hodge ran bi-weekly, from September 5, 1953, to May 29, 1954, and featured half hour stories of a non-serial format. Reportedly NBC offered to purchase the rights to Captain Video when DuMont closed up shop but was turned down. Al Hodge continued in the role of Captain Video by hosting a series of cartoons over sta-tion WABD until August 16, 1957, when one of the great superheroes of the 1950s quietly walked off stage.

CAPTAIN Z-RO

The series told of the exploits of Captain Z-Ro, a research explorer of time and space. Operating out of a remote secret laboratory. Captain Z-Ro and his associates experiment in time and space to learn from the past and plan for the future. Most of the captain's exploits involved the event and then travel back in time to watch history as it unfolds.

Captain Z-Ro was television's first attempt to both entertain and give a history lesson at the same time. Captain Z-Ro, played by series creator Roy Steffens, looked more like the classic villain with his goatee beard and moustache than he did one of the good guys. Captain Z-Ro first premiered as a local 15-minute long series broadcast live in 1951 on KRON in San Francisco.

Twenty-six episodes were broadcast on KRON, with Bobby Trumbull in the role as Jet. Captain Z-Ro resurfaces two years later as another local series, this time on KTTV in Los Angeles. There were 25 half-hour episodes broadcast on KTTV with Jeff Silver taking over the role of Jet. Almost no information is available on the episodes from the first two seasons. Among the historical figures encountered in the KTTV episodes were Benjamin Franklin, Christopher Columbus, King Arthur, George Washington, and Napoleon. The KTTV episodes also featured Captain Z-Ro in space where he battled the robot Tobor and almost had his ship destroyed by a strange missile.

The series returned to production a couple of years later for one season worth of filmed episodes which were nationally syndicated. Bruce Haynes took over the role of Jet in these episodes. Another similar, more modern equivalent of this show is A.J.'s TIME TRAVELLERS, which also attempted to teach children about famous people of the past through the medium of time travel.

Time travel was central to the teleplays of Captain Z-Ro, "research explorer in time and space." The concept of a temporal and spatial explorer was the brainchild of Roy Steffens, who introduced Captain Z-Ro to viewers of San Francisco station KRON in 1951. The program was originally a live production broadcast in 15-minute instalments five days a week. In 1955, Captain Z-Ro appeared in a syndicated package of complete-in-themselves half-hour filmed episodes.

The series was produced on a minuscule budget, with actors frequently taking two and three roles in the same play. Steffens intended his series to be both educational and entertaining. The program seems to have taken its inspiration from both DuMont's Captain Video and Don Herbert's popular educational Mr. Wizard. While Herbert each week demonstrated principles of science to one or two awe-struck youngsters, Captain Z-Ro would recount an episode from history to his young assistant Jet. Owning a time machine helped the explanations immeasurably.

Captain Z-Ro maintained an aggressive hands-on attitude toward time travel. He was neither paralysed by the fear of fatally altering history through his meddling nor afflicted with the fatalistic assumption that events of the past were destined to unfold in a certain way and nothing can reverse what has already taken place. Like most stereotypical scientific geniuses of 1950s vintage, Captain Z-Ro maintained and operated out of an elaborate secret laboratory laden with exotic devices like a Trillatron, Electro Chamber, and a Cycle Reactor.

Invariably, when Captain Z-Ro and Jet tuned in on an event from the past, the Captain would discover that events were not corresponding to the history books. That would be Z-Ro's pretext to involve himself directly in the action we were witnessing unfolds on the view screen. Whether it was recovering an intercepted message vital for George Washington's survival at Valley Forge or thwarting the plans of Genghis Khan to conquer all of China, Captain Z-Ro seemed to spend much of his time correcting the errors of history. Nonetheless, the series imbued its young viewers with a sense of history and made the past come to life for them. Only in three filmed instances did Captain Z-Ro concern himself predominantly with matters of space travel: "Roger the Robot," "Meteor" and "Adventure in Space."

Captain Z-Ro shares the distinction, along with Flash Gordon and Commando Cody, of being among the last of the juvenile oriented science fiction TV shows of the 1950s before the direction abruptly changed and the emphasis shifted to adult science fiction.

Technical Information

FORMAT: Fifteen-minute live serial; later converted to filmed half-hour series, exploring time travel and significant historical events in the development of Western civilisation.

BROADCAST HISTORY: Network: Local KRON, San Francisco (1951), and KTTV, Los Angeles (1953); Syndication 1955-1956 (Distributed by Atlas Television Corporation). Sea-sons. 3. Total Episodes: 77 (51 live and 26 B/W filmed).

Signature

OPENING: Two voices introduced the show. The first, with an echo effect, described Captain Z-RO's laboratory somewhere on "the planet called Earth" and explained Z-RO's mission: "To learn from the past ... to plan for the future." The second voice spoke over the sound of a telegrapher's key, urging the audi-ence to "please stand by" for direct transmis-sion to Z-RO's lab.

CLOSING: Voice 2 reminded the audience to "stand by" for the next transmission.

CARTER CASE,THE

The plot starts with the assassination of the owner and chief chemist of a giant chemical works (Hall) and the subsequent battles of his daughter (Marsh) and the detective against the villain, Avion (Marba), who stole and perfected the chemist's formula for a fluid that makes people invisible. Throughout, the detective and Marsh escape the traps and attacks of Avion by means of scientific gadgets such as a little cylinder hidden in Kennedy's shoe which turns out to be a powerful explosive, a special radar system, etc. The villain too uses gadgets such as a device that silences the motors of an airplane and radio-controlled missiles.

By all accounts an exciting revival of the Craig Kennedy super scientific detective, the male lead in the most famous Pearl White serial THE EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (1914) and its sequels, THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE and THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (both 1915). Here, Kennedy is played by Rawlinson, the star of another scientific sleuth serial, THE BLACK BOX(1915).

Each of the 15 chapters ran for about 25 minutes and, although launched with considerable publicity, it would appear that the production company lost faith in the serial and withdrew promotional support about halfway through, allowing the rather inventive picture to sink into oblivion. It was directed by Mackenzie, the man who under Louis Gasnier's supervision had helmed the first major success of Pearl White, The Perils of Pauline (1914). The serial was produced by Harry Grossman.

CATEGORY 6: DAY OF DESTRUCTION

Day 1

Las Vegas has been destroyed by a series of F5 tornadoes, taking out a wedding party, a hotel highrise, a number of other buildings, and the power grid. A craps table, a roulette wheel, and several million dollars are deposited in Last Chance, Nevada, fifty miles away.

In Chicago, a heatwave, possibly caused by the greenhouse effect from the pollution of many simultaneous volcanic eruptions and the leftover heat from the ash being spread is overshadowing the city, killing 11 people so far in 4 weeks. In Oklahoma, a stormchaser (Randy Quaid) is looking forward to a hot season of tornado tours.

Day 2

Problems with the Lexer power grid are starting to come to light, as reporter Amy Harkin learns when she is approached by a Lexer employee, who is concerned about the security of the computer systems that the power companies use, which might leave them open to hackers.

A team of U.S. Air Force "weather hunters" find a supercell developing rapidly in their area, producing a storm requiring the evacuation of several oil rigs.

Day 3

The shutdown of oil refineries and rigs is threatening fuel supplies. Power grids are already at full capacity with the heat wave.

Day 4

Tornado Tommy's storm tourists arrive from Japan, unaware of the current weather anomalies and looking for a good time touring Tornado Alley.

In New York, Amy is learning that the whistleblower's work at making the computer systems more user friendly has compromised the network's security.

That night, a hacker launches his first attack on the grid, shutting off the lights at Wrigley Field for several seconds.

Day 5

Low pressure systems are developing rapidly, in a pattern usually only seen in late fall. In Amarillo, Texas, high winds start destroying windmills at a wind farm, setting off a chain reaction that takes out an electrical tower and a big rig.

At Lexer, the powers that be remain more concerned about efficiency than security, even in the face of the incident at Wrigley Field.

A large storm is developing over Chicago, and severe lightning strikes a Little League field, as well as an airliner passing through the storm. As the plane is trying to divert, lightning strikes a Greater Midwest Electric power plant, taking out most of the generators and shutting off power to half the city. Panic and diverse alarms spread throughout Chicago. The lightning was possibly caused by the radioactive material in the atmosphere prior to the asteroid impact.

Day 8

Tornado Tommy takes his tour group through Oklahoma, where he spots another large cell developing. A rogue super cell strikes during the tour.

Day 9

The two storm systems - an arctic storm from Canada and a tropical storm from the Gulf - are on a collision course by now, predicted to collide around Chicago.

Day 10

Amy's source reveals that someone has been hacking into the power grid. After some persuasion, he agrees to go on the record with his suspicions.

Meanwhile, in Oklahoma, data has come to light that could indicate potential hurricane conditions on the Great Lakes. Or a superstorm.

Day 11

A tornado destroys the Gateway Arch in St. Louis.

The storms collide and the newly formed superstorm destroys Chicago.

Category 6: Day of Destruction was a made-for-TV movie that aired originally in November, 2004 on CBS. Its focus is on the city of Chicago as large storms approach from the north and south and combine over the city, while at the same time a hacker-induced power outage cuts communications and a journalist and power officials attempt to find its cause. Global warming, asteroid impact, volcanic eruptions, and changes in solar radiation (aka sunspots) and weather patterns are all cited as being the cause.[citation needed]

Actual footage from real storms (mainly hurricanes and tornadoes) was used, explaining why sometimes palm trees are seen in Chicago. Also, in reality, a tropical cyclone would likely have degenerated to an extratropical low by the time it reaches Chicago, with little or no wind impact.

The movie was filmed in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada.

In November 2005, the movie's sequel, Category 7: The End of the World, aired.

CATEGORY 7: THE END OF THE WORLD

Category 7: The End of the World was a 2005 made-for-TV movie broadcast on CBS in two two-hour parts, on November 6 and November 13. It was a sequel to the network's previous miniseries, Category 6: Day of Destruction. - - Category 7 started exactly where Category 6 ended, but revolves mostly around a new character, Judith Carr, the new head of FEMA. The storm system that ravaged Chicago grows in strength and intensity, and storms like it are occurring around the globe such as Paris and Egypt. Additionally, it is found that an interaction between urban heat islands and "falling chunks of mesosphere" is what is fueling these storms. Simultaneously, a Christian fundamentalist emulates some of the plagues of Egypt in hopes of converting others before the end of the world, leading to the kidnapping of the first-born children of Judith Carr and other characters. - - The movie was filmed on location in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. Visual Effects were provided by CBS Digital in Los Angeles. Among the hundreds of shots provided by CBS Digital were several utilizing Massive, the crowd simulation software pioneered for The Lord of the Rings trilogy.

icking right up where Category 6: Day of Destruction left off, the storm that destroyed Chicago continues on its destructive path. FEMA's newly appointed director, Judith Carr (Gershon), finds her hands full as storms begin to pop up around the country, leaving one city after another in ruins. With few answers and little relief from the continuing destruction, Judith discovers that the storms were predicted two years before they happened by scientist Ross Duffy (Daddo), a former romantic flame.

Despite pressure to keep Ross out of the picture, Judith convinces him to put together a team to track the storms and figure out what is causing them. With storm chaser Tommy Tornado (Quaid) and scientist Faith Clavell (Doherty) on the ground and pilot Col. Mike Davis (Tom Skerritt) in the sky, Ross attempts to crack the secret behind the cause of the storms.

As the devastation begins to take its toll, not only in the United States but around the world, Judith comes under fire with accusations that her relationship with Ross is less than professional, an accusation that weighs heavily with both their families.

The Chicago storm and another major storm begin to move toward each other, threatening to create an ultimate superstorm, the first Category 7 storm ever on record. Judith and Ross scramble for answers as the storms move to converge over Washington D.C. Meanwhile, television evangelists Donny and Penny Hall (James Brolin and Kurtz) prey on the country's growing terror, preaching that the storms and other biblical warnings just might be the End of Days.

When Category 6: Day of Destruction aired last year, it was the season's most-watched miniseries. There's little surprise that CBS would want to continue to let the good times roll with yet another big-disaster mini. And with Category 5 storms of major concern these days, the subject matter takes on more credence than it did when the first mini aired. Of course, this one has to be even bigger, and you can almost hear the pitch meeting. "This time we're going to take out the entire world."

Well, surprise, surprise. Category 7 is a pretty good disaster movie as disaster movies go. Filled with familiar faces, from Robert Wagner playing a U.S. Congressman to C.S.I. Miami's Adam Rodriguez playing Skerritt's co-pilot, the cast feels a bit like family. You may not like them all, but you'll still worry about them if a piece of the Statue of Liberty comes crashing toward them.

The mini starts out weak and confusing, with too many characters being introduced and no way to keep track of who is whom. However, by the beginning of the second hour of night one, things start to fall into place and we get some good moments. The mini certainly could have done without the kidnapped-teens subplot, and there are also way too many absolutely silly things that distract. Poisonous frogs, of all things, appear out of nowhere to attack a social event, and that's least of it. Of course, that drives the End of Days plague stuff, but it really doesn't make any sense at all.

Gina Gershon is, of course, way too pretty to play a FEMA director, but still she does it well. And Cameron Daddo does a nice job as the scientist action hero, while Wagner, Skerritt and the other guest stars all have their moments. However, the big surprise is the pairing of Shannen Doherty and Randy Quaid as the storm chasers. They have terrific chemistry together, and Doherty manages to rein in Quaid's manic Tommy Tornado just enough, giving them the best scenes in the miniseries. Unfortunately, their last scene together is one of those absolutely ridiculous things, but let's just ignore that part.

You have to admit there's a large amount of irony with the FEMA director becoming the hero in Category 7, a miniseries put into production long before the events of Hurricane Katrina. Well, we certainly need a hero in our real-life, storm-ravaged country, so why not? And this is science fiction after all. It can't hurt to mix in a little fantasy.

Category 7 holds together better than either of last year's disaster minis, Category 6 or NBC's 10.5. While I'd absolutely love it if the writers didn't feel they had to resort to kidnapped teenagers and poisonous frogs when other storm-related drama would make so much more sense, Category 7 kind of brought me back to the good old days of the Poseidon Adventure and Earthquake. Ah, the memories. Back then they really knew how to make a disaster flick warm the cockles of your heart.

CATWEAZLE

Catweazle was a fantasy series chronicling the exploits of Catweazle, an 11th century wizard who finds himself in the 20th century. While attempting to ascertain the secret of flight in the 11th century, Catweazle accidentally transports himself into the 20th century. In the 20th century he encounters technology, which he deduces is a new type of magic that everyone but himself seems to have mastered.

Everyday objects such as the sun in a bottle (a light bulb) and the telling bone (the telephone) cause great confusion for the wizard who is unable to unlock the secrets of their magic. During the first series Catweazle is befriended by Carrot, a young boy living with his father on a farm. Carrot finds a place for Catweazle to stay in his treehouse and also attempts to explain the modern world while keeping the wizard from causing too many problems. By the end of the first series, Catweazle manages to return home to the 11th century, only to find himself once again accidentally transported to the 20th by the start of the second series.

During the second series Catweazle befriends Cedric, the son of Lord and Lady Collingford, who shares adventures with Catweazle as the wizard once again tries to return to his own time. This Catweazle manages to do for good in the last episode when he finds the 13th sign of the zodiac.

This children's comic fantasy was created by Actor/Writer Richard Carpenter, later to script ITVs Robin of Sherwood, and ran for two seasons, giving its star Geoffrey Bayldon one of his most memorable roles, albeit clothed in rags and sporting a straggly goatee beard. Richard Carpenter would also go on to create another ITV SF series in the 1990s, OUT OF SIGHT, about a boy who can turn invisible. This too became a success and several seasons have been made. Richard Carpenter also wrote all of the episodes from the two seasons.

Quentin Lawrence was also the producer for season one; Carl Mannin taking over that role for season two, Mannin was also the show Associate Producer for season one. Jay Whitby was the executive producer for season one. The series was first shown on London Weekend Television (LWT) part of the ITV network on the 15th February 1970. The series has been released on video tape in the UK, and has also had a repeat screening on satellite television.

OUT OF SIGHT

1 - 1 THE SUN IN THE BOTTLE

Catweazle is casting spells in his secretive cave in "the great forest" and his chantings are overheard by the Normans, who enter his cave and attempt to capture him for practising witchcraft. Biting one of the soldiers he is able to escape into the forest complete with his "familiar" "Touchwood". He is chased by some other Norman soldiers and is trapped by them leaving him no option but to dive into the lake. He reappears in a small pond located at Hexworth farm in 20th century England having flown through time 900 years into the future. Here the magic of his journey begins. Hiding himself in a barn at Hexworth farm he soon meets up with Edward (aka Carrot) when he returns to the barn with farmhand Sam riding on the farm's tractor whose noise scares Catweazle. Carrot manages to hide Catweazle from his father despite the strong smell on Catweazle's clothes. Carrot promises to bring Catweazle food later in the evening and this is where the fun begins. Upon first taking the food to the barn Carrot is interrupted by Sam who needs help with the picture clarity on the TV in the house. Meanwhile Catweazle thinks he has been bewitched when Carrot turns on the light in the barn. Returning to the house to help with the TV, Catweazle soon follows in search of the food and casts a spell on Carrot using "adamcos", his witchknife, so that he can't tell anyone of his existence.

Carrot's father comes home from the pub whilst Catweazle is still in the house and in a mad rush to get him out of the house Carrot breaks a window. Upon asking for an explanation Carrot realises that he can't say anything due to Catweazle's spell. Meanwhile outside, Catweazle discovers another light ("tiny sun in a bottle") but it's just an old lamp that doesn't work. So he promises to return the next day to ask "the young sorcerer" to show him the "magic of electrictrickery".

1 - 2 CASTLE SABURAC

Returning to the house to learn about the "Electrictrickery" Catweazle hears the kettle whistling in the kitchen and thinks it's a demon. He hides under the dining room table and draws a circle in chalk around him to protect himself whilst blowing on his magic thumb ring and chanting "sator arepo tenet opera rotas". Meanwhile Carrott's father comes into the house and can smell the same smell he first noticed in the barn the night before. Wondering how he can get catweazle out of the room he deliberately knocks something over on the table and his father leaves to get something from the kitchen to clean it with. Trying to leave the house Catweazle is almost spotted by farmhand Sam and takes himself up to Carrott's bedroom. After trying to clean the chalk stain off the carpet that Catweazle had made, Carrott follows his nose up to his bedroom where he finds Catweazle hiding in his wardrobe. Catweazle is in awe of how Carrott discovers him and then begs to be shown the "magic of electrictrickery" again. Carrott obliges by switching on and off his bedside lamp. Catweazle moves over to the lamp and removes the bulb to examine it. He then tries to flick the light on and off and is most annoyed with himself when it doesn't work because the bulb isn't in the lamp. Carrott tells him he can't stay there and has to leave asking him to go back to where he stayed the night before (which was an old chicken house), but before going says he needs a bath. Taking him to the bathroom he runs the bath and tells him to get into it. "not the waater, I shall drown" insists Catweazle. Carrott telss him to remove his robe (to which Catweazle looks indignant and disgusted). Timidly he gets into the bath and screams "it burns it burns" and starts to abuse Carrott calling him a maggott etc. Carrott adds more cold water and meanwhile downstairs the local housekeeper hears the bath water running thinking it a strange time to take a bath goes upstairs to investigate and runs into Carrott on the landing who is on his way to get clean towels. His feeble attempts to explain why he's having a bath at that time of the day rouses the housekeeper's suspicion who goes into the bathroom and sees a bony looking catweazle sitting in the bath. Upon seeing her he screams and "bid thee hence". Stepping out of the bath and wrapping himself in a bath mat he places a spell on the housekeeper to make her think he is invisible using "adamcos". The housekeeper leaves taking the dirty laundry including Catweazle's robe with her. Upon realising this he and Carrott make attempts to retrieve it. When they see it being put out on the washing line Catweazle charges over to get it knowing he's safe as the housekeeper is still under his "invisible spell". However Sam the farmhand appears, so Catweazle charges off into the bushes. Neither the housekeeper or Mr Bennett (carrott's father) believe him when he describes "the old tramp" and they both think Sam is dillusional and is told to sit and rest a while. Once recovered (though still not convinced he's crazy) Sam agrees to go chop down the old chicken house for Mr Bennett. The same Chicken house that Catweazle had been staying in. Once there with his axe Sam once again sees Catweazle and other some verbal exchanges Sam realises Catweazle is real (and in turn that he himself isn't crazy) tries to attack Catweazle who runs back into the chicken house before it falls to the ground after being hit with Sam's Axe. Catweazle runs off into the woods and is followed by Carrott at an old water tank. Climbing up into it Carrott tells him it's dangerous because of the water inside. However the tank is empty and Catweazle decides this will be his new home as he was sent to it by a great spirit and names the tank in his honour "Castle Saburac". Looking at "Touchwood" he tells it that this will be thier new home where they will together "make great magic" followed by his customary "Tcha

1 - 3 THE CURSE OF RAPKYN

Episode 3 of series one sees hexworth farm in financial troubles with Mr Bennett played by Aussie actor Charles Tingwell overdrawn at the bank by 800 pounds. Believing there is a curse on the farm, Carrott seeks the help of Catweazle. Deciding the owner of a local history museum may help via some books which immediately sparks catweazle's interest, Carrott and catweazle head off to the museum. During which catweazle after causing havoc by letting "touchwood" get loose and scaring a bunch of schoolgirls visiting the museum, discovers the book of Rapkyn. Via the book it's discovered that 2 stones hidden somewhere on the farm must be found to remove the curse. One "in the tower and one in the water". The tower being the living room chimney and the the water being an old well. Both leading to hilarious situations. The two stones are found in perfect condition and also fit the missing pieces of a rare artifact at the museum who pay Mr Bennett 800 pounds thus lifting the financial burden.

1 - 4 THE WITCHING HOUR

Mrs Boddington a local council member is a frequent visitor to hexworth farm much to Carrott's dislike. He decides magic is needed to get rid of her and seeks out catweazle's help. By using a spell from Rapkyn's book it's decided to make a doll to represent Mrs Boddington and on the 7th chime of the church bell the spell will take effect. However they need a personal item from Mrs Boddington to make the spell complete. Looking in her car for a personal item they find nothing and catweazle is forced to hide in the back of her car when she leaves the farm for a hairdresser's appointment. Carrott follows on his bike and they arrive in the local village and concoct a plan to obtain a personal item. Catweazle describing the hairdresser's as a torture chamber and saying that removing hair is a loss of strength as per Samson in the bible and realises this is the answer to their problem. Carrott enters the hairdresser and asks to speak to Mrs Boddington while catweazle causes a distraction by calling the fellow customers "foolish wenches" and does a song and dance routine causing confusion and hysteria while Carrott pinches some of the removed hair of Mrs Boddington that had been cut and was on the floor. Using this to add to the voodoo doll and catweazle adding a spell to make her become covered in spots is hoped will rid her from the farm. However it is later revealed that Mr Bennett was only being friendly towards Mrs Boddington so as to get council permission to add some building to his property. Realising his error Carrott worries about the outcome but it turns out that catweazle's spell backfires somewhat and it's Mrs Boddington's main council rival that ends up with the spots and so approval is granted by the council as Mrs Boddington receives no opposition as her rival is unable to attend the meeting because she suddenly comes down with a bout of measles.

1 - 5 THE EYE OF TIME

Catweazle gets involved with the TAB and also confronts a fake fortune teller played brilliantly by veteran UK character actress/comedian Hattie Jacques. Unable to reach the betting office ("bettering" as catweazle refers to it) farmhand Sam asks Carrott to place the bets for him. However as he is underage he seeks help from an uncooperative catweazle. Forcing him to dress in old scarecrow clothes to go into the village via a bus (referred to as "thou roaring chariot" by catweazle) it is here that catweazle sees a sign that points to the fortune teller's rooms. HE then goes to see her and tells her that she doesn't have "the eye of time" that it is "shut" to her and that she tells customers to bet on the wrong horses and then rings the local bookie that another false customer is on his way. Meanwhile Mr Bennett discovers that Sam has been using Carrott to place his bets and suggests that first he phones them through and next Sam will have him hanging around betting offices which is where he ends up finding Carrott. This for me was one of the funniest episodes of series 1

1 - 6 THE MAGIC FACE

Whilst hunting around the farm for old items catweazle is accidentally photographed by a couple of yank photographers/tourists one of whom becomes obsessed with the uniqueness of his face. When the photos are developed she returns to the farm and shows Carrott the photos who then shows catweazle who believes he is now doomed and owned by the photographer and believes he must go to her and become his slave. The photographer gets catweazle to clean her flashy sports car while she and her female partner (who is very masculine - suggesting lesbian overtones albeit very subtly after all this was a children's tv series) go off to take photos. Meanwhile Carrott arrives at their residence and goes to steal the photos taken of catweazle from inside the house so as to remove the spell catweazle believes is now on him. Carrott tells catweazle to keep watch and to honk the car horn if the photographers return. Ever inquisitive he messes with the horn which gets stuck, Carrott comes running with the photos and catweazle flees off back to castle Saburac while Carrott tries to unjam the car horn. The photographers return and realising what has happened chase off after catweazle in thier car despite the fact that catweazle had emptied the bucket of water into the car as he fled.

1 - 7 THE TELLING BONE

Due to yet another spell backfiring, catweazle finds himself clinging to the local church spire. In an attempt to go "back" to his own time he ends up going sideways instead. The local vicar by speaking a few words of latin which catweazle could relate to convinces him to come down from the spire and see his latin books. While in his home surrounded by cats named after famous hollywood celebrities of the 40s/50s catweazle discovers the telephone "the telling bone", fascinated by it and demanding to "speak to the spirits" he causes more chaos. Meanwhile farmhand sam has a new car which is having problems but finally gets going. The vicar phones hexwood farm (having discovered that's where catweazle had come from) and listening into the phone call carrot realises that's where catweazle is and asks sam to take him to the vicarage. His mother sees them on the way and decides she wants to go too despite being somewhat dottery. Falling asleep in the car as they arrive at the vicarage, carrot sees this as an opportunity for sam to dissappear to the local pub while he tries to help rescue catweazle. Meanwhile his mother wakes up so carrot tells her sam is at the vicarage to talk about an arrangement, thinking he meant a marriage without her knowing sam's mother goes to the vicarage and knocks on the door. While this is happening carrot goes round the side of the house and sees catweazle inside and helps him outside of a side window - a scene particularly funny when he tries to explain to catweazle how to open the window from the inside. Having been left in the room alone while the vicar was at the front door talking to sam's mother he realises his opportunity to steal the "telling bone" which he does so by cutting the chord with his witch knife - "adamcos".

1 - 8 THE POWER OF ADAMCOS

Catweazle loses his sacred witchknife "adamcos" which is accidentally found by mr benet while walking in the woods. Scared to go back into the woods initially because of "the normans" (a group of locals dressed as norman soldiers as part of a local pageant), it's decided that mr benet (carrot's father) has taken it to town to sell at the local antique shop. The shop is run by a very camp owner who is making costumes for the local pageant. Mr benet gives the owner the adamcos as a gift. Being very busy he puts the shop closed sign up on the door to deter customers. Carrott and catweazle arrive at the shop but thinking it is closed catweazle places a magic spell on the door to open it. There is nobody in the shop as the owner had popped out to buy some items for the costumes he was finishing. Looking around for adamcos they find nothing but catweazle fears as a result he is dieing especially when he sees his reflection in a mirror which he believes to be his own spirit. Suddenly mr benet arrives back at the shop so catweazle is hidden inside a tomb of cleopatra while mr benet and sam the farmhand take some of the boxes of costumes out to the car to be delivered to the pageant. Next the owner returns and catweazle in the cleopatra tomb falls over and the door of the tomb opens. This causes the shop owner to faint and they realise that he is wearing adamcos and are able to retrieve it.

1 - 9 THE DEMI DEVIL

Catweazle annoyed at carrot puts a spell on him and at the same time a local colonel who keeps a pet monkey comes to visit the farm. The monkey escapes and finds his way to castle saburac. Seeing this catweazle thinks his spell on carrot has really worked, especially as both he and the colonel refer to it as "boy". The colonel is expecting an old chum to visit that he hasn't seen for many years and mistakes catweazle for him. Catweazle gets covered in water and changes into other clothes provided by the colonel. He and the colonel then drink and catweazle liking the taste gets drunk and passes out. Meanwhile mr benet and carrot arrive at the colonel's for dinner and the pet monkey is found.

1 - 10 THE HOUSE OF THE SORCERER

A really funny episode and fast paced as well. Catweazle out in the woods sees an ornathologist recording insect sounds etc. Ever curious he follows him bck to his caravan then gets scared by the sounds that come out of the caravan which are revealed to be recordings of various animal species. Meanwhile farmhand sam wants to work for him and quite his job at the farm. Catweazle sees sam go to the caravan and automatically thinks the worse. When carrot arrives at castle saburac catweazle is frantic and chanting his gab gabba a gabba a everything and nothing in particular. He is forced to show carrot what is happening and so they head off to the caravan. Inside carrot sees sam's shoes lying on the chair and believing that catweazle is finally right for once calls catweazle into the caravan.(sam had in the meantime gone off to do some digging for the ornathologist).Looking around to see what else is happening catweazle becomes excited by all the sound recording equipment.Meanwhile the orathologist starts to return and carrott rushes off to tell his father that sam's been killed and in his own haste to get away catweazle gets tangled up and has to hide in a small broom cupboard in the caravan.A broom falls out and prevents the door from being closed properly and then "touchwood' starts to croak.This sparks the ornathologist's curiosity and finds catweazle in the cupboard.Mistaking him for Wally a friend of sam's who he thinks might also be interested in working for him gets him to record his voice and details on his tape recorder.Explaining how it works catweazle hears sam's voice on the tape and is spooked.The ornathologist winds the tape back and explains he is doing so to catweazle.This really gets catweazle excited at the prospect of being 'wound back"(thinking it would be to his own time).However the ornthologist presses some wrong buttons and the screeching animal sounds are heard again.Catweazle freaks out and rips the tape from the recorder and flees the caravan ruining the ornathologist's work.

CENTURY CITY

"The future is now in session"

In the near future, a law firm handles difficult cases that reflect the time.

It is almost pointless to post about Century City now that its cancelled but what the hey. Set 26 years from now in a Los Angeles that has been through a 7.1 quake, and rebuilt itself into a slick, gleaming megacity (still hazed with smog) fraught with all kinds of futuristic legal problems we arrive. Taking a tack from the Minority Report school of design the set pieces look like they came directly from the warehouses of Bang Olafsen, Ikea, and Sony with the typical "computer displays etched onto glass windows and desk display panels made of plexi" type of style. Derivative of Earth tech of the near future in scifi. Great... Anywho this Law Office presented here gets some really cool and creepy cases to litigate, and for the most part they always win.

The pilot episode concerned a man attempting to save his son with the aid of an embryonic clone of said child. The only problem is cloning is illegal in the U.S. and having had the clone manufactured overseas (Crafty Singaporeans), and transported to the states he has committed not just an extraordinary crime but created a ethical situation which will not only hold the life of his son in the balance, but show the darker side of cloning...harvesting of its organs to support its gene donor. Sadly the drama presented was rather complex and emotionally unstable due to the writing and pairing with a second story involving an aging Boy Band that wanted one of its memebers to use a dangerous anagathic (age defying) drug as part of his wellness regimen. What was supposed to be serious came off as silly and contrived and really stole the drama away from the Cloning portion of the story. So basically the first episode was a bit of a dog and unfortunately that taint would come back and haunt the series for a few more episodes.

While it was not a "hyped" scifi show, filled with otherworldly effects and intergalactic intrigue, it did have its moments. One story concerning a virtual rape with nanomachines showed chilly social implications of technology and the future of stalking and psychopathic crimes while another episode dedicated itself to the plight of a man who with the aid of a neural implant that was designed to raise his IQ was facing possible death if he didn't have it removed, and the contentious issue being was he mentally capable of making the decision to change himself back or fight to stay as he was. There was indeed the kernal of great drama and speculative vision housed in the shows writers.

Whatever the future holds for scifi, television, and law remains to be seen in another time another place. Century City our best hope for glimpsing a possible "legal" future has met the falling of the gavel and its court is dismissed. Sad? Potentially, as "thinking persons" television is few and far between and this could have been contender.

I watched the pilot knowing this show wouldn't last more than a handful of episodes. Like 'Mercy Point' from a few seasons ago (E.R. done sci-fi) this attempt at The Practice done sci-fi was doomed by people's perceptions of what sci-fi is and isn't. The people who watch procedural shows like CSI or Law & Order do so for the reality, the 'follow-the-clues' approach, the methodicalness (is that a word? it is now). Sci-fi (at least the soft-sci-fi seen on TV) generally isn't known for these things. So who is going to watch a sci-fi lawyer show? Not lawyer show fans who have a hard time accepting the 'fiction' part of science fiction and not sci-fi fans who want spaceships and laser guns in their sci-fi.

The pilot was also hampered by not being that good. Or at least, not that easy to follow. The clone case was too complicated and warranted the entire hour but instead had to share time with a b-story about a boy band reuniting. Neither case resonates much with the general public.

The second ep aired (actually ep #3) did a better job of presenting futuristic legal cases that audiences now could relate to. The rape trial was quite well done and delved into the philosophy of the issue making it much more interesting. But by this time, with the pre-empting this show faced, it was obvious it was doomed.

I think they would have done better with just setting the show a year or 3 in the future and dealing with the same issues, perhaps done as a bit of an 'alternate reality' where things are just a little more scientifically advanced. This way the courtrooms and more importantly the laws being debating are more recognizable to viewers. How today's laws apply to cloning is more interesting than how a fictional law from 2025 applies.

Oh well. One more mid-season show bites the dust. bet this one won't even get the almost mandatory 'save the show' webpage everything gets now.

CENTURY FALLS

Tess is 14, fat and lonely when she and her expectant mother come to live in the tiny North Yorkshire Dales village of Century Falls. To her dismay, she finds that no other children live in the village except a strange pair of twins who are visiting their uncle. Gradually she realises that the village harbours a guilty secret which threatens the happiness of both her and her unborn sister. In 1953 a deity called Century was conjured up by the inhabitants. But the apparition proved too powerful to control and the temple where the ceremony took place burnt down, injuring some of the villagers. Since then, no children have been born in the village. Now, 40 years later, plans are being made to conjure up Century again - and the same mistakes are being repeated.

The team who created this show were also responsible for producing the SF children's show DARK SEASONS. The producer for the series was Richard Callanan, the series was shown on BBC1. When a second season of the fantasy children's show DARK SEASON failed to materialize, writer Russell T. Davies used a storyline he had already devised for it in a new series, Century Falls. There was only one drawback; the BBC would only commission a six episode serial, a format that Davies disliked, believing they can never sustain the plot. His solution to the problem was to treat the six-part story as a three-parter.

Century Falls went through numerous re-writes and changes, and in the first version there were more characters and story strands. The first victims of the re-writes were Professor Llewellyn and his assistant, Shankha, who were researching a stone circle with the help of a woman called Ellis Sharman. Llewellyn is suspicious of Ellis, who can read the Borlase text on megalithic stones, and wants his university to look into her background.

Lost also was the link between Ellis and the stones; one of the stones is engraved with a spiralling curl, and Ellis possesses a similar mark on her arm. Her servants, including Miss Cooper and Naismith's butler Ashe, have similar marks. Another principal character who never made it to the tv screen was Tess's father, who would have returned from abroad at the climax of the fifth episode. "You didn't know who he was," says Davies enthusiastically, obviously fond of that plot strand too. "The end line was 'Dad'. It was a great cliff-hanger." The writer also altered the origin of the ghost-like young girl who Tess sees next to the waterfall. "Originally the little girl was an image from the past. It was an alter ego of Alice, the old woman in the attic, her younger self. I thought it was a bit obvious, and made her a vision from the future." In the end, the girl is revealed as Mrs Hunter's unborn child.

While Century Falls was widely acclaimed on its transmission in 1993, some viewers felt that the rather complicated storyline failed to make complete sense. Russell T Davies is the first to agree with this criticism, but points out that all the clues were in his script - it's just that some of them were lost when a mammoth thirty five minutes of footage was edited from the final version. While the first four episodes follow his scripts quite faithfully, parts five and six suffered quite badly. "I still think it held together," he claims. "[Director] Colin Cant did it brilliantly. I was dreading it when they said it was thirty five minutes over. This is all my fault for doing a script that was too long, and it was written so fast that no one had the chance to time it. It all got recorded, but got chucked out." Davies feels the most painful cut occurs in the fifth episode, where the villagers hold a psychic gathering to ascertain the identity of the mysterious Julia.

"You see her face change and the villagers say, 'She is us'. There's a quick scene where they say, 'She is our subconscious' - and that's it! There was a lot of explanation of what exactly she is." He is also disappointed that a scene in the same episode in which Mrs Cooper is unmasked as a traitor, was cut. "It was a wonderful scene of Esme unmasking her in front of the whole village, and getting terribly savage with her. Through all that you're explaining what Julia's done. "On screen she doesn't say anything at the gathering, no one suspects her. She goes with them to the manor-house, and there she says, 'Now you see how beautiful things are going to be'. No one reacts to it, and the reason is she got unmasked far earlier."

However, given that material had to be lost, Davies believes that the cuts were achieved rather inventively. "It was rather nicely done. They were very clever cuts that I would never have thought of." A number of

CHALLENGE FROM THE FUTURE

AKA: MIRAI KARA NO CHOSEN

Koji (Sato) transfers to Tsukioka Junior High School, where he has trouble keeping up with this diligent and super-efficient class mates. He discovers that many of them also attend the elite "Eiko" prep school but meets with considerable opposition when he tries to find out more about it. After student rep Michiru (Sakamoto) tries to set up a student hall patrol with the power to punish all wrongdoers and suspected wrongdoers, Koji tried to organize a student resistance, When he is apprehended as a ringleader, the principal of the Eiko school offers to welcome him into their ranks if he stops causing trouble. When Koji refuses, he discovers that the Eiko facility is run by a group of psychic fascists from the future who are using the school system to brainwash children of the year 1975 to do their bidding.

Koji is imprisoned in another time, while the future agents send an android version of him back to 1975 to talk to his fellow students out of further resistance. However the other children fight against their enemies with guerilla tactics.

Children of the Future is an intriguing mixture of opposing elements - the clever conceit that one's teachers genuinely are the fascist mutants who need to be stopped from taking over the world juxtaposed with the need to sanitize and somehow deal with the images of student unrest that had dominated Japanese TV screens in the last 1960s and early 1970s. The series was based on two books by SF author Taku Mayumura - Talent from Hell (Jigoku no Saino) and Nerawareta Gakuken (remade as School in Peril). Mayumura also wrong the original novels on which BAKUMATSU TIME TRAVELLERS and Bakumatsu Exchange Students were based.

CHAMPIONS, THE

The Champions are three secret agents who, escaping from a mission to steal a deadly bacterium from a laboratory in Red China, crash land their crippled getaway plane in the mountains of Tibet. On the verge of death they are rescued by a mystical figure. Not only are their wounds healed but the ancient peoples magnanimously give the agents special powers, making them superhuman. In their efforts to escape their dastardly Communist pursuers the agents discover the extent of these powers; telepathy, increased strength and stamina and super-sensitive sight and hearing help them win the day. Their special abilities stand them in good stead when they return to work for NEMESIS, a secret organisation based in Switzerland with a nice big sign outside their offices saying exactly who they are.

The opening narration said it all, the champions were not superheroes in the comic strip edition, nor hi tech heroes like The Six Million Dollar Man or The Bionic Woman (in 1968-69 who could afford the technology?). Rather they were souped up humans, whose physical and mental senses were heightened in the series' opening episode, The Beginning, giving them phenomenal stamina, computer-like brainpower and dazzling insight, plus an ESP that bound together like triplets.

The men behind the series were Monty Berman, a producer with series such as the saint, Gideon's Way and The Baron to his name and Dennis Spooner, a prolific scriptwriter whose credits include Gerry Anderson's FIREBALL XL5, STINGRAY and THUNDERBIRDS as well as a year as story editor on DOCTOR WHO. He was also co-deviser of another contemporary thriller series, Man in a suitcase.

Dennis Spooner wrote many of the scripts for THE CHAMPIONS he was also responsible for writing scripts for shows like FIREBALL XL5, STINGRAY, THUNDERBIRDS and DOCTOR WHO.

Craig Stirling, Sharron Macready and Richard Barrett? THE CHAMPIONS. Endowed with the qualities and skills of superhumans. Qualities and skills, both physical and mental, to the peak of human performance. Gifts given to them by the unknown race of people from a lost city in Tibet. Gifts that are a secret to be guarded? A secret that enables them to use their powers to their best advantage as the Champions of Law, Order and Justice.' . The authoritative, earnest voiceover that opened each episode rather set the tone for this ITC superhero/spy series as a whole. The accent, literally and stylistically, was American, and this sums up the Transatlantic feel desired by ITC chief Lew Grade in another bid to crack the US market. Much like the superhero comics of the early Sixties, such as Spider-Man or The Incredible Hulk, the opening episode The Beginning is an 'origins' tale.

In essence it's a mildly silly idea played straight, the last of the square-jawed spy shows flying in the face of more tongue-in-cheek efforts like THE AVENGERS and THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. The series had an air of dean-cut Boys' Own adventure about it, unsurprising since it had been indirectly inspired by a character from the boys' comic Wizard. The series' co-creator and eventual script supervisor Dennis Spooner had for a number of years wanted to adapt the stories of Incredible Wilson, a hero of amazing strength and considerable athletic prowess, but when the rights were not forthcoming he and ITC producer Monty Berman developed the idea of three superhuman secret agents. Lew Grade was delighted with the format and sold the series to American network ; NBC for delivery in 1968.

Crucial to the series' success was the selection of : the trio of super-agents. Always thinking in terms of ; world markets, Lew Grade's ; ideal line up would probably : consist of one American, one Brit and one Pan-European type. Indeed, that's pretty much what he got. Embodying the series', tough glamour was Craig Stirling - the 'lead' role went to Stuart Damon, an American entertainer living in Britain at the time. Stirling was to be a tanned Bond substitute with a pearly-white smile. Indeed, viewing some scenes now a slight likeness to a younger Pierce Brosnan is detectable.

A more rounded, easygoing English character was needed to offset Craig's all-out heroics, and baby-faced Yorkshireman William Gaunt was chosen to play Richard Barrett. Gaunt was already well -known in the UK as second-billed star of the ATV Victorian crime thriller Sergeant Cork. The perceived importance of the Avenger girls made the search for the female member of the cast the most difficult of all. Australian Annette Andre (later Jeannie in Randall and Hopkirk - Deceased) eventually lost out to the more exotic Alexandra Bastedo. Her Canadian/Italian/German/Czechoslovakian parentage and Canadian/English upbringing was probably more cosmopolitan than even Grade could have hoped for. The production team admitted that the actress-turned-model-turned-actress was chosen more for her look than her acting skills. Bastedo had been among the models photographed by John d' Green in the celebrated Swinging Sixties document Birds of Britain.

Many of the stories that unfolded over the show's thirty episode run were, it must be said, fairly standard spy action tales. The spy trend was on the wane - Bond was sending itself up more and more in the cinemas, McGoon had quit Danger Man in 1966, Moore's eyebrows were raising themselves ever higher at increasingly ridiculous plots - and yet The Champions was content to spin yarns of espionage involving kidnapped scientists, atomic submarines, renegade missiles and foreign superpowers.

The Beatles-inspired Eastern mysticism which Berman had intended to permeate the series was forgotten after the first episode, with only the superb chiming sound effect that accompanies the Champions' use of their special powers reminding us of the maharishi figure we met in The Beginning. Cyril Frankel had been entrusted with setting the style of the series, directing six out of the first seven transmitted episodes, and largely that style was of an earnest, straight-faced American action series.

Berman's intended exoticism was replaced by a more aspirational globe-trotting glamour, providing escapist thrills at a time when a package fortnight in Benidorm was considered exclusive. Zooming close ups of maps link scenes in every episode. The series' Geneva setting allowed The Champions to rack up Air Miles as they took in Paris, Rotterdam, Spain, Haiti, Austria, Australia, the Caribbean, the Antarctic and even Wales. More often than not after ten minutes of initial jet-setting each case would centre on London and the home counties. The ITC series became infamous for trying to recreate world-wide hot spots in Elstree backlots and The Champions tried harder than most. The observant viewer loses track of the number of times the hangar-like exteriors of the Associated British Studios are pressed into service as the docks of some far-flung port.

Scriptwriter Gerald Kelsey watched five Antarctic travelogues from the film library, made a note of all the best footage, and built his script for Operation Deep Freeze around it. The draft script contained almost zoo stock inserts from the library footage. Elsewhere unconvincing studio sets, dioramas and jabolite snowflakes attempted to complete the illusion. In other episodes jungle, desert, forest and beach settings were recreated in the studio.

The Champions, like most ITC product, was nothing more than above average factory output; batches of filmed 35mm episodes, hopefully enough to make up a syndication package for the States, and seldom less than technically excellent. ITC was particularly wary by 1967 as costs - and deadlines - on THE PRISONER spiralled out of control. Each episode of The Champions cost around £39,000 to make. While this budget was huge compared to an hour's worth of DOCTOR WHO, say, which cost about £6,000 but which was black and white videotaped almost all in studio, at the same time an episode of prestige export series THE AVENGERS, cost ABC Television nearer £50,000.

THE CHAMPIONS was efficiently completed on time and within budget, but often left a bland taste. Not only did the series have to come to terms with the work ethics of ITC, it seems obvious that among the crew there were conflicting ideas of the direction the show should take. Berman and Frankel wanted tight spy thrillers, Spooner wanted to lighten the show and inject more humour and fantasy. In some episodes these ingredients are given equal measure. The Invisible Man deals with a very AVENGERS-like notion of an improbable situation which is later revealed to have a rational and super-scientific explanation. Here the illusion of an invisible man is in fact achieved by surgically implanting a tiny two-way radio behind the victim's ear.

Elsewhere, Frankel probably would have blanched at the supernatural elements included in the Haitian voodoo mystery Shadow of the Panther - instead this more fantastical story went to Hammer director Freddie Francis.

The best episodes are by and large those that stray from the show's rather rigid formula. To Trap a Rat eschews the Pan-European views in favour of the downside to Swinging London: the Champions must infiltrate a drugs ring that is killing off the partygoers of the city with an impure shipment. The team's special powers come into play, of course, though some of the inconsistencies which dog the continuity show up here. When Craig finds an important phone number in a third floor flat he goes to the window and silently mouths it to Richard who is waiting in the street below. That Richard can lip read the number at that distance is no doubt impressive but wouldn't some telepathy have been a less obtrusive way of going about it?

Season cheapie The Interrogation was quickly written and filmed on one set with flashback footage from earlier episodes spliced in. Necessity breeds a cracking PRISONER-esque story in this case. Without recourse to pan-global stock footage, rehearsed fight sequences or starry casts (the only actor employed other than the regulars is Colin Blakely) all the effort is concentrated on the storyline, dialogue and acting. Craig flies back from a case but wakes up in a cell where a devious interrogator, conferring with an unseen boss by telephone, tries to get him to fill in some inconsistent details of the Hong Kong case from which he has just returned. Damon is excellent in this episode. So too is the late Anthony Nicholls as Tremayne, the head of NEMESIS. The classical actor usually found himself having to play a bemused buffoon wondering just how the Champions escaped each week's perilous predicaments. This is the only episode that makes any drama out of the secret nature of the trio's powers. It was unfortunate enough however to be repackaged as a TV movie, Legend of the Champions, in the early Eighties, crudely edited alongside The Beginning.

The venerable Brian Clemens briefly found himself writing for The Champions when he was unceremoniously and temporarily fired from THE AVENGERS in Autumn 1967. With one of his two contributions Clemens probed the series' 'weak underbelly'. He concluded that its main weakness was the near-invulnerability of the three leads and questioned what would happen if ever they had to be pitted against each other. The result, Autokill, is probably the series' most celebrated episode. In fact it's mostly pretty dull but the concluding act is superb. Richard has been brainwashed and programmed to kill Craig. The violent showdown has Richard armed with a knife, slashing at huge photographic blow-ups of Craig in his efforts to kill his trusted friend. Not only does Craig have to defend himself but he must stop Richard in his tracks -- the drug used to brainwash Barrett is fatal and will kill him if Craig cannot act quickly enough. The final shot of a ragged Craig beating Richard to a pulp, finally knocking him unconscious and then claspng his friend to his chest like a brother is the most memorable of the series.

The Champions was very popular in its day, despite the handicap of non-network screenings across the ITV regions. When it premiered on 15 September 1968 in ATV Midlands, only HTV and Ulster joined in. At the same time Thames, Yorkshire and Tyne Tees were watching Emma Peel bow out from THE AVENGERS. The non-network excuse is often given to explain a show's non-appearance in the Top Twenty viewing figures but The Champions had more reason than most -an ITV Franchise shake-up that summer meant that regions were more keen than ever to give pride of place to their own series. The Champions eventually premiered in London in November 1969, a full six months after its run had ended on ATV! The series had been shown in the US from June 1968, ahead of British broadcast, but Lew Grade's hopes for an American hit were dashed when NBC cancelled the series after only the first ten episodes had aired (showing 8pm, Monday nights). The remaining twenty would be seen only in sporadic syndication thereafter.

Merchandise is always a good barometer of a popular show, though The Champions only spawned one paperback (The Sixth Sense is Death by John Garforth) and a single of the wonderful theme by Tony Hatch on Pye Records, with some colouring books and sweet cigarettes with picture cards aimed at the kiddie market. A strip story ran in the short-lived comic Joe 90: Top Secret from January 1969.

Like most ITC series The Champions was repeated in the UK throughout the mid-Seventies, popping up on Sunday afternoons or late night weekdays in a patchwork fashion across the ITV regions. 1985 saw the show gain better distribution than it had perhaps enjoyed in the Sixties, when almost all the ITV companies repeated it in the school holidays. Younger telefantasy addicts were entranced, though some of the older ones were perhaps disappointed that the show did not Live up to their nostalgic recollections.

The release of six volumes of the programme on video from ITC (plus Autokill on a competition) in 1992-3 was well-received although a high-profile BBC repeat season in 1994 was dropped halfway through. The show was last screened by satellite station Bravo in 1996. A year before Austin Powers, in December 1996, ITV showed, pretty much unnoticed, a half-hour comedy pilot called The Pretenders (later revived on radio). Made by Absolutely Productions it was a spoof on ITC spy shows in general and The Champions in particular. In among some school revue--standard gags were some fairly accurate jokes at the expense of back projection, stock footage and set-based jaunts to Paris. A central trio of heroes were Penelope Gold: petite, elegant, vaguely foreign? Craig Sturdy: tall, suave, sophisticated? Mike Stallion: the third one. Who could they have been referring to?

Their boss, The Controller, was played by none other than William Gaunt. Even the end titles were a blue-tinted straight steal from those of The Champions. Thirty years later The Champions is an easy target for such lampooning because by and large it played it so straight. Viewed today it is perhaps the ultimate reminder of a time when heroes and villains fought in smart suits and ties, a handkerchief pressed neatly into their outside left pocket and a passport tucked in their inside right. The show would premier in the US on the 10th June 1968, before its UK premier.

Created by: Monty Berman, Dennis Spooner; Producer: MontyBerman; Script Supervisor: Dennis Spooner; Creative Consultant: Cyril Frankel; NBC/ITC Productions; 60 minutes. With TV's spy craze coming to an end, The Champions tried to enliven the genre by combining science fiction with espionage. Writer Dennis Spooner, who had written for many of Gerry Anderson's supermarionation shows in the 1960s, proposed a realistic superhero show. Producer Monty Berman, whose prior credits included The Saint, had the more metaphysical idea of people who had returned from the mountains of Tibet with strange powers. The compromise was to crash-land three secret agents (Craig, a pilot; Richard, a cryptographer; and Sharon, a biologist) in Tibet and have inhabitants of a forgotten civilization bestow ancient superpowers on the trio. The powers of the three were underplayed throughout the series. They exchanged looks of concentrated energy while trying to locate a missing person, and on rare occasions they bent a jail bar or knocked out a small section of a wall. In many episodes, their superpowers were so subtle that they had a negligible effect on their missions.

The comic-strip plots pitted the champions against would-be world conquerors, traitorous scientists and revived Nazis. Although filmed in England by ITC, The Champions was purchased by the NBC network for the summer of 1968. ITC wanted an American lead for the show to appeal to an international market. Stuart Damon, an American actor who had moved to England, was cast as the lead hero, Craig Stirling. Several actresses were considered for the role of Sharon, including Illona Rogers and Australian actress Annette Andre. Because model Alexandra Bastedo had the exotic look the producers were looking for, she won the role despite her lack of acting experience. English actor William Gaunt was cast as the third agent, Richard. Shakespearean actor Anthony Nicholls played their boss, Tremayne.

"The Champions was more of a run-of-the-mill idea for TV than The Prisoner," says writer Gerald Kelsey, who wrote for both series. "The supersensory element was not particularly original." Kelsey was invited as a freelance writer to script two segments for the series. "I mostly dealt with Dennis Spooner as far as details of stories and scripts were concerned. I was given a very free hand. Dennis would ask me to think of an idea. I would then tell him the show's teaser. If it hooked him, I'd go away and write it."

Kelsey recalls that The Champions was set on a very strict budget. Despite globe-trotting stories, the filming of the series was mostly confined to a soundstage. "It was emphasized in story briefings that they wanted to use stock footage of interesting and spectacular backgrounds. We talked about story settings in jungles, deserts and volcanoes."

Kelsey's first script, "Operation Deep Freeze," took place in the Antarctic. Since filming there was out of the question, Kelsey came up with an idea. "I had seen travelogues of the Antarctic, and I called Dennis. I asked if he could organize some of these travelogues for me to see again. I sat in the studio theater and watched five of the films. I made notes of all of the impressive and dramatic shots, including a large transport aircraft landing at Scott Base, ice breakers and icebergs, and penguins scattering into the sea. When I finished viewing the films, I had 150 shots. I then devised and constructed a story that featured the most spectacular cuts. I linked them together with the studio exteriors, which were polystyrene snow spread across the studio floor with a background of white backcloth. My final script specified almost 100 stock shots of Antarctica."

Kelsey felt the result was sensational. "Operation Deep Freeze" effectively showed the "wide ice wastes." The episode received complimentary notices in the national press for its feature film quality! There was actually no location filming in the Arctic at all. I was very impressed and delighted with the way the shots I had selected looked in the final film."

The economical series was obsessed with getting a return on its investments. When the producers bought a mock-up of a submarine, they used it in four episodes to make the most of their purchase. On another occasion, while filming inside a studio, the producers heard that a building was on fire nearby. A film unit raced to the inferno, and as firefighters battled the blaze, the film crew got spectacular footage of the fire. It was later written into the episode "The Happening."

Guest star Peter Wyngarde feels the show was better than it was given credit for. "The Champions had three protagonists, and this limited the budget for the series considerably. The budget was the series' biggest problem. This may explain why the producers have not had the recognition [for the show] which they so richly deserve." Wyngarde, who starred in the segment "The Invisible Man," had worked with Champions director Cyril Frankel before in such series as Jason King. He recalls him as a man who "brought an artistic quality, which helped the visual presentation. He was sensitive, and technically, an immensely proficient director."

The Champions aired in America during the summer of 1968, but it contained many of the qualities American TV was getting rid of, including violence and action-adventure formats. A dozen of the episodes were screened, but the response was tepid from viewers and hostile from critics. It was not picked up for NBC's January 1969 schedule. Without a network slot, it was financially impractical to continue with a second season. The Champions was retired after 30 episodes. The series has been seen only in sporadic syndication since. The pilot and the episode "The Interrogation" were spliced together in the early 1980s to form the TV movie Legend of the Champions.

CAST NOTES

Stuart Damon (Craig): Born 1937. The American born actor was 11 years old when he played his first role, as the Cowardly Lion in a summer camp production of The Wizard of Oz. His big break was playing the Prince in the 1966 TV special Cinderella (with Lesley Anne Warren). He's been one of the stars of daytime's General Hospital since the 1970s.

William Gaunt (Richard): Born 1937. An English actor who turned to situation comedy in the 1980s. Gaunt's most recent success was in the London play Travels with My Aunt (1993). Alexandra Bastedo (Sharon): Born 1946. The former model continues acting, with occasional TV appearances in England, including game shows and theater. She was one of the stars of the English stage comedy Pickwick in 1993.

Anthony Nicholls (Tremayne): Born 1902. Nicholls began his film career in 1937 and served with the Royal Artillery during World War II. He died in 1977.

CHANGERION

AKA: CHOUKOU SENSHI CHANGERION

Plot#1

Fun-loving private detective Akira (Hagino) is investigating a routine case of a missing person, though he suspects that several child kidnappings in the neighborhood may be linked. However, he is enveloped in "crystal power" when he bumps into a vehicle owned by the secret SAIDOC take force. The experience gives him the change to become Chagerion, the warrior of light, charged with fighting off the predations of the Gingar, a creature of darkness, Gingar is only one of many ancient monsters waking from centuries of sleep in a nearby Dark Dimension.

Darkzides, the creatures who live on human energies, start their secret invasion from their fading dark dimension. Those few peoples who acknowledge the existence of Darkzides develop 'Changerion Project' to protect this world, and everything has been kept in order until, a sheer accident causes the essential power of the developed hero to be given to, not Hayami Katsuhiko as planned, but Suzumura Akira, a young private-eye who has no sense of self-discipline or responsibility whatsoever. Can Akira, or the hero Changerion, save the world without a hitch?...no way!

Despite an obvious debt to the monster-of-the-week formula of ULTRAMAN, Changerion has it's moments of unconventionality, particularly in it's leading man, who rejects the unwritten superhero code of justice in the favour of having a good time and only reluctantly drags himself away from the spending sprees and eating binges to save the world. It also contains moments of arch comedy, such as the tike Akira and his sidekick Hayami (Aizawa) are forced to dress as women to stake out a shoe store where creatures from the Dark Dimension are kidnapping female shoppers.

As being shot by video-equipment, "Changerion" may be rated relatively low. However, the consistency in the entire series of Changerion" surpasses other productions, as Inoue Toshiki has written all the episodes so far. Inoue's unique and sometimes controversial style is better than ever, and it just leaves your jaw dropped as the story develops. The costume of Changerion, double-layered with semi-opaque materials, is also a must-see

CHANGES,THE

Based on a trilogy of books by Peter Dickinson, it was a gripping story of a world overtaken by an (initially) unexplained phenomenon which makes people destroy the trappings of the technological age - televisions, phones, cars, etc. - flee the cities and revert to a less civilised existence.

Only a few people seem unaffected by the destructive compulsion, including teenager Nicky Gore and a band of Sikhs. Villain of the piece is Davy Gordon, a would-be feudal ruler who attacks them and accuses Nicky of being a witch. She escapes with a boy, Jonathan, on a barge, pursued by Gordon who drowns after a tussle on the boat.

Finally, after being 'drawn' to a cavern, Nicky finds what has caused The Changes. An eccentric inventor, Mr Furbelow, has woken up the Necromancer, a 'living stone' which dates from the age of Merlin. Roused from its centuries-long sleep, the Necromancer didn't like what it saw and sent out shock waves that forced people to destroy the modern world. Nicky, being a naive, innocent soul, is able to persuade the Necromancer to go back to sleep, so that the world can 'return' to normal.

This ten-part BBC children's serial trod the same sort of ground as Survivors, but predated its adult cousin by four months. The Changes had an unusual start for a children's series: before the first episode, the BBC broadcast a warning that it might not be suitable for very young children. Shot entirely on location on colour film, its style and content certainly set it apart from most traditional kids' drama. It enjoyed a re-run on UK Gold in June 1994. The story was adapted for television by Anna Home, the producer for the show was Anna Home, the designer was Paul Munting, music was created by Paddy Kingsland. Also note that the episode titles used here, where from the Radio Times, since no on episode title credits were shown.

The Changes was broadcast in early 1975 and was one of the BBC's first post-apocalyptic TV series which paved the way for the likes of Survivors and Day of the Triffids.

The children's TV series depicted the breakdown of society after people are compelled to reject and destroy technology such as cars, bicycles and alarm clocks. This violent reaction and people's subsequent desertion of the country is triggered by a sound seemingly emitted by electricity pylons.

Schoolgirl Nicky Gore played by Victoria Williams is caught amidst the chaos and gets separated from her parents who are heading to France in the hope of finding safety.

Throughout the course of the 10-part series we follow Nicky's journey to be reunited with her parents and seek an answer to the cause of The Changes.

The series was an adaptation of The Devil's Children - the first of three novels in The Changes trilogy by author Peter Dickinson which also included Heartsease and The Weathermonger.

The Changes was broadcast in ten parts every Monday from 6th January to 10th March 1975.

Filming took place over the summer of 1973.

The series was shot in the West Country, namely Bristol, the Forest of Dean and Sharpness.

Although playing a schoolgirl in her early teens, Victoria Williams celebrated her eighteenth birthday during filming.

Theme and incidental music composer Paddy Kingsland went on to score both the radio and TV adaptations of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy for the BBC. He also provided incidental music for a number of Doctor Who stories in the early eighties.

CHAPULIN COLORADO, EL

AKA: THE RED GRASSHOPPER

"El Chapulín Colorado" is a hero who appears every time somebody says "Oh! now who would be able to help me?". It is really funny, he is not the classical super hero (smart, beefy, handsome and very brave) he is rather a comic hero with very good intentions, but a little coward sometimes. The situations where he is involved are very funny, and he will always get away with it even if it is by accident.

El Chapulín Colorado is a cheap and old childish series. But it is amazing to imagine how this Mexican production can be great. Each episode has an interesting story and many good jokes. It is recommended for all ages.

The beloved Mexican superhero is featured in this Second collection featuring the most beloved skits from over 200 episodes and twenty-five years. Enormously popular worldwide, El Chapulín Colorado is watched in countless countries worldwide. As the theme song sings, he's "faster than a turtle, stronger than a mouse, more noble than lettuce."

El Chapulín Colorado was a television series parody of super hero shows that was created by Chespirito. It was televised from Mexico by Televisa, from 1970 to 1978, alongside sister production El Chavo del Ocho. The name translates literally as "The Red Grasshopper".

Chapulín would invariably catch innocent people and let the criminals go, or, in the process of saving someone's home, destroy all the furniture. However, at the end, everything would be clarified, typically by others, and the bad guys would be taken to jail, and Chapulín would take credit for the criminal's capture.

El Chapulín... was played by Chespirito, the only actor from El Chavo.. to have recurring roles at El Chapulín.... He was a superhero who was dressed all in red, with yellow hot pants and shoes, (although sometimes he used an alternative yellow uniform), with a yellow heart with the initials CH inscribed in red. He had two, red and yellow antennae for ears, what he called his vinyl antennae. Chapulín always carried a red hammer, which he called his Chipote chillón. He also could take the "pastillas chiquitolinas", which would shrink him down to the size of a mouse.

In the show's opening, Chapulín would always be introduced in the following way:

Más ágil que una tortuga...más fuerte que un ratón...más noble que una lechuga...su escudo es un corazón...es el Chapulín Colorado!

(More agile than a turtle...stronger than a mouse...nobler than a lettuce...his sign is a heart...it's the Chapulín Colorado!)

Famous Phrases Usually Chapulín would wait for someone to be victimized of such things as burglary, breaking in, or other crimes. The victim would ask "O, y ahora ¿quién podrá defenderme?" ("Oh, and now, who can help me?"). Chapulín would appear out of nowhere (usually hitting himself with, or dropping, an object), and say "Yo, ¡el Chapulín Colorado!" ("Me, the Chapulín Colorado!"), after which he'd be thanked by the victim. He always answered by saying "¡No contaban con mi astucia!" ("They didn't count on me being so smart!").

Some of Chapulín's other famous phrases include "¡Sígueme los buenos!" ("Follow me, good people!" after which he would walk into a wall), "Lo sospeché desde un principio" ("I suspected it from the beginning" which he would say after someone pointed out a better way to do what he was trying to do), "Todos mis movimientos están friamente calculados" ("All my movements are cold calculations", his explanation for falling on his face, breaking something valuable, etc.), and "Se aprovechan de mi nobleza" ("They're taking advantage of my nobleness" which he would usually say after an insult, like "We should've called Superman or Batman..."). Also, in trying to provide advice, he would take two traditional two-part Spanish sayings and mix them together, always beginning with, "Como dice el viejo y conocido refrán..." ("As the old and well-known saying goes..."). For example,

"Cría cuervos y te sacaran los ojos" ("Raise ravens and they'll take out your eyes"; i.e., a bad plan will have a bad effect) and

"Crea buena fama y échate a dormir" ("Create a good reputation and then go to sleep"; i.e. once you're famous you don't have to work anymore).
become

"Cria cuervos y echate a dormir...no no no...crea buena fama y te sacaran los ojos... no...bueno, la idea es esa." ("Raise ravens and then go to sleep...no no no...create a good reputation and they'll take out your eyes...no, well, that's the idea.")

Similarly, "Que no cunda el pánico" ("Nobody panic") would become "Que no panda el cúnico" ("Pobony nadic")

Popularity

Chapulín enjoyed great popularity all over Latin America, the United States, Spain and other countries, albut somewhat less than its sister production of El Chavo.... Like El Chavo..., it is still shown with re-runs at various countries. The cast list of "Chapulin" was the same as "El Chavo"s, although only actors Florinda Meza, Carlos Villagrán, and Ramon Valdez were usually in every episode. Shorter Chapulin adventures were preceded by a skit, usually featuring Chespirito's other characters, like "Dr. Chapatin", a tactless impatient old medic, or "El Chompiras", an incompetent pickpocket. "Chompiras" came to dominate the later years of "Chespirito", an hourlong showcase for all Chespirito's characters.

Creator of The Simpsons Matt Groening has declared that he created the Bumblebee Man character after watching El Chapulín Colorado on a motel at the mexican border

CHARLIE JADE

Charlie Jade is a rogue private detective in a world dominated by greedy multinational corporations. While on an investigation, Charlie explores a secret desert facility. A massive explosion propels him from his own universe (alphaverse) to a strange parallel universe (betaverse). Soon, Charlie is drawn into a conflict that involves these two universes and one other pacifist universe (gammaverse) with unsuspected terror at its heart.

This 20 episode television series, a joint South African and Canadian effort, is less like a traditional TV show (where episodes have a beginning, middle, and end) and plays more like a very long mini-series. Watch Charlie Jade like you are reading a book; each episode is a chapter. Influenced by Sci-fi noir films like Blade Runner, creator Robert Wertheimer was determined to make a science fiction series like nothing that has ever been made before, and he has. Throw away any preconceptions you might have, especially if you're an American. This is nothing like American TV programming. Shot in Cape Town, South Africa, the show, despite its futuristic and science-fiction edge, is both stylish and surreal and yet also firmly rooted in reality, dealing with real issues like terrorism and the abuses of power by massive conglomerates. It is filled with real people, not pretty models of perfect people. It starts off with a slow, patient pace, which some might find frustrating or boring, but hang in there! By the end of the pilot and the start of the third episode you will be hooked and utterly captivated.

Jeffrey Pierce (Astronauts, Jackie Bouvier Kennedy Onassis) plays the title role in Charlie Jade, a new futuristic series produced in association with CHUM Television. The series also stars Michael Burgers and Danny Keogh, and Canadian actors Michael Filipowich, Patricia McKenzie and Tyrone Benskin. Shot on location in Cape Town, South Africa, Charlie Jade is a co-production between South Africa and Canada.

Background

Though viewers will doubtless recognize a similarity to Blade Runner, especially in the scenes set in the Alphaverse, Wertheimer has said in interviews that much of the ethos of the series is primarily influenced by Derrick Jensen's book The Culture of Make Believe.

Charlie Jade had two teams of writers. The pilot and first eight episodes were overseen by executive producer Guy Mullally, Stephen Zoller and David Cole. Mutual creative differences led to an amicable parting of the ways, paving the way for the second team, consisting of head writer Alex Epstein, and story editors Denis McGrath and Sean Carley.

In addition to its Canadian writing staff, the show also featured the work of several South African television writers, including Dennis Venter, and Collin Oliphant.

The majority of the directors who worked on the show were from Quebec, including Pierre Gill and Eric Canuel. The pilot was directed by T.J. Scott. Other directors included George Mihalka, Jimmy Kaufman, Anton Beebe, and South Africans Neal Sundstrom and Daryl Roodt.

Each universe has a remarkably different look. The color palette of the Alphaverse is dominated by greens. The Betaverse is very blue in tint, and Gamma is dominated by reds and warm earth tones.

Charlie Jade was considered one of the hot tickets at the MIP show when it was shown there in 2004. However, the series has yet to be picked up in major territories such as the United Kingdom or the United States, though the first three episodes did premier at Cascadia Con on September 2nd, 2006 in SeaTac, WA. In these areas, the show seems to enjoy a somewhat "underground" appeal, and the entire series has been widely distributed over Internet file sharing networks.

Charlie Jade's challenging narrative, and somewhat controversial take on issues, such as the presentation of a sympathetic "terrorist" character, may have made the show unpalatable for a wide audience.

But arresting visuals, elliptical storytelling and dream like qualities make for a show that is more cinematic than most normal TV fare. It demands viewer attention, and can sometimes be confusing.

In June 2005, Canadian broadcaster CHUM took an unusual step. Admitting that the show required a great level of attention, CHUM commissioned a special catch-up episode, "Can of Worms". Despite the fact that principal photography had been wrapped nine months before, a small crew gathered in Montreal to film a wraparound story designed to bring new viewers up to speed. "Can of Worms" runs between episodes 16 and 17 of Charlie Jade.

There are 21 episodes in Charlie Jade's first season.

Mysteries of Charlie Jade

Water plays a major part in Charlie Jade. It is the resource Vexcor is trying to steal from Gamma. It also helps O1 slip between universes, and water indicates an instability in the fabric of the universes when it appears and reappears in different places. How does water help trans-universal travel?

Who are the men who kidnap and program Reena? What is their agenda?

Charlie encounters a doppelganger of his girlfriend, Jasmine, in Betaverse, named Paula. Are there other doppelgangers in other universes? And why have we not seen them?

In several episodes, Charlie is followed and warned by Men in Grey Suits. Karl is approached by one in the episode "Can of Worms," and they figure heavily in the finale. Who are these Men? Where are they from? Do they represent yet another faction or company, or are they from another universe entirely? What is their ultimate agenda?

What is the ultimate fate of Charlie's friend Papa Louis and Essa Rompkin?

O1 Boxer reveals that his father had a file on Charlie "going way back." What was in the file? Did they know about Charlie's abilities?

The final episode shows us more about "linkspace." Is it the 'unknown' universe Charlie had visions of before coming back to Alphaverse? Are there even more universes? Which one do the Men in Grey Suits come from, assuming they're not native of the Alphaverse?

Charlie encounters three scientists who help him to understand linkspace - they are Urding, Skuldeman, and Verdandi. The scientists have names similar to the Norns of Norse Mythology. How significant is this parallel to decoding the end of Charlie Jade?

What is the significance of the blue glass beads shown in early episodes? They appear to exist in at least Alpha and Beta around the original link site and several different characters are seen picking them up. Charlie finds several in different places. A young girl in the desert collects them, and in one scene O1 Boxer is seen dropping some into a fish tank in his club. It's possible that the purpose behind these was lost in the change over between writers.

What is the water pollutant found near the Beta link site? People who drink it over an extended period of time seem to be able to see into other universes and possibly travel to them without link.

Detective Charlie Jade is on the hunt for 01 Boxer, the suspected killer of a mysterious woman with no identity, and the son of Brion Boxer, the founder of Vexcor - the largest and greediest multinational in Alphaverse. The trail leads Charlie straight to Vexcor's facility, secreted away in the desert wasteland. As he surveys the ominous scene, terrorists Reena and her lover, Bern, plant a bomb at the base of an identical facility in their utopian world of Gammaverse. In a massive explosion that vaporizes the entire operation, Charlie and, Reena, are propelled out of their own worlds - and into a third parallel universe known as Betaverse.

1 - 2 SAND

Caught in an hallucinogenic state after an explosion propels him into a parallel universe, Charlie Jade dreams he's back home in Cape City with his girlfriend, Jasmine. But he's quickly snapped out of his erotic reverie by Jody, a young evacuee of the desert calamity, and suddenly finds himself in a world that seems oddly off kilter. At a makeshift refugee camp, Charlie meets Karl Lubinsky, an investigative journalist who doesn't buy into Vexcor's slick spin doctoring of the circumstances surrounding the explosion. Lubinsky vows to uncover the truth about the catastrophe - and about Vexcor's elusive business - and drags a reluctant Charlie along for the ride.

1 - 3 YOU ARE HERE

Charlie reluctantly helps journalist Karl Lubinsky in a search for the truth about the Vexcor explosion. But unlike Lubinsky, Charlie is not motivated by the wish to right corporate wrongs; he just wants to solve the mystery, then find his way home to Jasmine. Their investigation leads to Elliot Krogg, the Vexcor scientist believed to be responsible for the bombing. But by the time they get to Krogg's hideout, his girlfriend has been drugged into submission, and Krogg has been flushed out and murdered by the sadistic 01 Boxer. Meanwhile, Reena is holed up in a seedy Cape Town motel. Guilt ridden about her role in the explosion, and heartbroken over the death of her lover in the blast, she struggles to survive by robbing Vexcor executives of their cash and ID. But when her image is caught on a surveillance camera, 01 strong-arms Vexcor's Betaverse Chairman Julius Galt into taking it to the press. Her picture everywhere, Reena is branded as "The New Face of Terror."

1 - 4 THE POWER OF SUGGESTION

In the prevailing atmosphere of anxiety, the blame for the explosion is fixed on Reena and her presumed accomplice, the now deceased scientist, Elliot Krogg. With Krogg out of the picture, Reena is hunted down and beaten, then reported to the Cape Town SWAT Forces by a tending ambulance driver who recognizes her from the news. But calls to the Force are monitored by a mysterious terrorist cell, and by the time the police get to the apartment where she was being held, the ambulance driver is dead, and Reena is gone. Meanwhile, in his bid to take over Vexcor's Betaverse operations, 01 stays a step ahead of Charlie and Lubinsky when he orders his thugs to drug Krogg's girlfriend, Karen, and extract the information needed to implicate the board of directors in the Vexcor bombing.

1 - 5 AND NOT A DROP TO DRINK

When Charlie sees 01 pour water on his head, then literally vanish before his eyes, his probing into the bizarre incident turns up evidence that contaminated water supplies have induced visions and psychic powers in several residents of the nearby Vexcor facility. Determined to take over Vexcor Betaverse, 01 is back in Alphaverse armed with enough information - gleaned from Krogg's girlfriend, Karen - to have the entire Betaverse board of directors arrested right under Chairman Galt's nose. Meanwhile, Reena is held captive and tortured by her kidnapper, Malachi, who gets her to admit the truth about her involvement in the Vexcor bombing; while down on her luck in Alphaverse, Jasmine receives a crystal hologram that leads her to believe Charlie is dead.

1 - 6 DIRTY LAUNDRY

Charlie's hunt for missing civil rights crusader Themba Makande takes him into the world of Muti Healers where the poor are murdered for the black market value of their organs. Meanwhile, 01 forces Galt to admit that the recent blackouts throughout Cape Town are a result of Vexcor Betaverse siphoning off the city's power and using it to build a secret underground link to Alphaverse. When Charlie gets wind of the plan, he sees the link as his ticket home - but he also suspects that 01 will try to destroy the link before it ever goes online. 1 - 7 DIAMONDS

Charlie's hunt for his artificial diamond ring - stolen from the shop where he pawned it to buy a car - leads him to Eckman, a ruthless diamond merchant who has been quietly manufacturing cultured diamonds for Vexcor. Not only is Eckman undermining the Betaverse diamond industry, but he's unwittingly working with Vexcor to create enough artificial diamond chips to implant in every Betaverse citizen. Soon everyone in Betaverse - like Alphaverse - will be monitored and controlled by the corporation. As Charlie pursues his ring, he's tormented by bitter memories of his days as a loyal soldier with Vexcor Special Ops. Brainwashed by Malachi, Reena's allegiance to the terrorist cell is put to the test when she's rigged up as a suicide bomber and sent into a daycare to murder Vexcor's Chairman Julius Galt, the father of one of the children.

1 - 8 DEVOTION

Charlie's search for Aliya, a missing Muslim girl, ends when he finds her living a decadent life under the thrall of a much older, charismatic motivational speaker, Mancuso Keyes. Recalling his own early indoctrination at the hands of Vexcor Security, Charlie's understanding of Aliyah's plight is made more acute when he learns that Keyes was hired by Vexcor as an expert in mind control. Meanwhile, when 01 is summoned to Vexcor Alphaverse to give a life-prolonging transfusion to his dying father, Julius Galt and Chief of Security Ren Porter are back in Betaverse planning an attack against 01 and his new Board. When her suicide mission is aborted, Reena is rescued by Rosalie, a compassionate passer-by who offers a safe haven in return for her own assisted suicide.

1 - 9 BETRAYL

Seriously wounded when a hit man peppered his club with gunfire, 01 escapes to a beautiful beach in Gammaverse and back into the secret home of his wife and children. Meanwhile, Charlie goes undercover to check out his suspicions that Vexcor is building a mysterious underground facility, but he's placed in the corporation's crosshairs when Karl Lubinsky is captured by Ren Porter and terrorized into telling all about the rogue detective from Alphaverse. As Reena slowly recovers from her ordeals, constant reminders of Vexcor draw her back to her original mission.

1 - 10 IDENTITY

While trying to secure a fake ID, Charlie discovers that Gemma Gitano, his soulmate from his orphan days in Cape City, is working for Galt as a hydrologist on the Vexcor facility reconstruction. When Galt and Porter get wind that Charlie is on her trail, they see it as an opportunity to finally nail the elusive detective. Meanwhile, Gemma is more concerned about a strange fluctuation in water levels at the Vexcor facility. When a pool of foul water in Gammaverse alerts 01 to brewing trouble, he knows its time to leave his family and return to the game. But his wounds have left him with an altered molecular structure, and unable to travel easily between worlds. 1 - 11 THICKER THAN WATER

When Charlie tracks down his soulmate Gemma standing awestruck on a dry up lake bed after witnessing the water disappear, he tells her about 01 Boxer's ability to use water as a medium to travel between universes, and wins her trust by convincing her that he, too, is a Vexcor employee. When Gemma reports the phenomenon, and the rumours about 01 to Julius Galt, she starts to doubt her boss has the company's best interests at heart. So she teams with Lubinsky in an ill-fated plan to help Charlie break into Galt's boardroom to search for answers. After a long convalescence in Gammaverse, 01 returns to Betaverse to find that his absence has made him the prime suspect in the death of the bar patron that was killed in the same gunfire that wounded him.

1 - 12 CHOOSING SIDES

Lubinsky reminds Charlie that Gemma risked her life to save him because she knew he could stop Vexcor powering up the Link that would destroy Betaverse. But Charlie is torn between his obligation to save Beta, and getting back home to Jasmine. Now 01 is a hunted man: Charlie thinks he may be the one person who can transport him home; and Vexcor just wants to kill him. But 01 has just been picked up for the murder of a bar patron and has landed in police custody. While Porter hatches a plot to transfer him out for his own nefarious reasons, Charlie masquerades as an FBI agent and convinces Inspector Blues Paddock that he's been assigned to take the known terrorist in for questioning. Blues catches Charlie in his lie; and soon after, a squadron of Vexcor henchmen posing as police open fire inside the police station. Charlie sees his chance to nab 01 and rush him into Lubinsky's waiting vehicle. As they peel back the layers of the Vexcor machine together, Charlie and Blues are drawn to each other - until one fated "morning-after" when Blues saves Charlie from Vexcor's hired genetically modified hunter, Shikari. Charlie decides to tell all - leaving Blues to wonder if Charlie is insane, or the information in Krogg's report is true. Meanwhile, Lubinsky convinces Reena that she's been embedded with a computer program that takes her over. So she hunts down and shoots Malachi, the man she holds responsible. But things are not as they seem: Reena's gun has not been fired, and Malachi is not dead. It seems the program's failsafe has worked as planned. Meanwhile, Sew Sew Tukarrs confronts Essa Rompkin with his theory about the missing Vexcor executives - that she murdered them to provide Brion Boxer his life-saving blood transfusions. CHIKYUU SENTAI FIVEMAN

AKA: EARTH TASK FORCE FIVEMAN

Unluckily, Earth is one of a thousand worlds selected for destruction by the spacefaring empire of Zorn. As Zorn destroys the planet Shidon, two loving parents send their five children into space, hoping they they will reach Earth, grow up among the local inhabitants, and find a way to stop the Zorn attack before it's too late. They also find the time to create a set of super-vehicles to aid their offspring in their quest and Arthur G6, a robot who watches over them. Eldest son Manabu (Fuji) is a psychology lecturer but also Five Red, the wielder of the V sword. Younger brother Ken (Shindachiya) is a judo teacher but also Five Blue, who fights with yo-yos and Frisbees. Third son Bunya (Kobayashi) is a language teacher but also Five Black, a karate expert and wilder of the Power Cutter. Big sister Sumi (Miyata) is a mathematics teacher but also Five Pink, the team computer expert and wilder of the Cutie Circle.

Baby sister Remi (Hayase) is a music teacher but also Five Yellow, a kung fu expert who uses her flute as a weapon in the devastating melody cut. The fiveman team travel on motorcycles but courtesy of their parents, also have a big rig combination - the Sky Alpha truck, which transforms into a plane, pulling the Carrier Beta trailer. Carrier Beta contains the Land Gamma car but also combines with the other sections to form the obligatory Five Robo. The brothers and sisters can also separately combine the vehicles to make the Star Carrier and Super Five Robo.

Their enemy is Medo (Matsui) the Galactic Emperor, who is incensed that only Earth holds out among the thousands of worlds he has decided to conquer. Each week from his battleship Valgaia, he instructs his loyal but incompetent Captain Garoa (Ishikawa) to send more cannon fodder minions to attack the world, and when they inevitably fail, a monster-of-the-week in Super Sentai style appears.

Fiveman was preceded in the Super Sentai chronology by TURBORANGER and followed by JETMAN. Music by Akihiko Yoshida.

Twelfth Super Sentai. Compare with FLASHMAN.

Team attacks: Brother Attack, Super Five Ball, Earth Cannon (see below).

Arthur G6

Support robo who raised the orphaned five siblings to become fine warriors. When the Fivemen get in a pinch, he flies out from their base to transform into the Earth Cannon, a large bazooka firing a 100,000 degree super fire beam that fries any enemy.

Sky Alpha (Red) + Carrier Beta (Black and Yellow) + Land Gamma (Blue and Pink) > Five Trailer > Fiverobo. Weapons and/or attacks: Super Dimension Sword (single and double sword attacks), Twin Cannons, Sure Kill Kick.

Star Carrier > Starfive, brought to Earth by the mysterious alien warrior Gunther and built by Dr. Hoshikawa. (How Gunther got a hold of the mecha is unclear.) Weapons and/or attacks: Star Gun, Star Hang Beam.

Fiverobo + Starfive > Super Fiverobo

Weapons and/or attacks: Jet Knuckles, Super Vector Punch.

Magmabase + Super Fiverobo > Maxmagma

Weapons and/or attacks: Diamond Max--the firing of all guns on the body.

Silver Imperial Army Zone

An alien army plotting to rule the entire Milky Way. Flies across the universe in the galactic battleship Vulgyre, attacking worlds with its Galactic Warriors. So far, it has destroyed 999 planets. Earth is about to be the 1000th. When the Zone succeeds in destroyed their 1000th planet, its ruler, Medor, will gain eternal life.

Milky Way Emperor Medor

White-skinned, silver-maned, purple-lipped, golden-eyed mystery ruler of the Zone.

Garoa

Captain of the battleship Vulgyre in black and grey armor over red clothes. Armed with a sword.

Doldora

Female scientist in gold armor over black tights.

Zaza

Doldora's underling in black tights with purple armor.

Billion

Best swordsman in the galaxy. White-maned in white armor over blue tights.

Dongoros

Grotesque, short, and fat space merchant who enjoys making money (Dolyen bills, to be exact) and carries an abacus around.

Shubalie

Former captain of the Vulgyre. Weapons: Barok Stick, Barok Fencer, Barok Shoot, Barok Byoot. Controls a black Gorlin.

Batzler Soldiers

Black-skinned grunts with red heads, armed with crab claws.

Galactic Warriors

Alien monsters of the week named after (but not based on) Earth animals. Later hybrid monsters, Combined Galactic Warriors, have the attributes of two species.

Gorlin

Giant white-skinned cyborg alien that absorbs and mimics human-size monsters.

The only Sentai show where the heroes are also all siblings. Fiveman's odd "5" gimmick is not helped by it's rather plain (by today's fancier standards) costumes and Robo designs (two tank/van vehicles, and a jet, which combine into the 5-Robo). The cool villains help a bit - two swordsmen, your typical heavily-costumed fat merchant type, and the obligatory evil babes. The eerie church bell-like music used to signify the coming of Medor, (the chief villainous - a floating disembodied head) is great. One of my favorite parts of Tokusatsu shows is seeing stuff that would never make it past any conscious US censor. The 4th episode of Fiveman, (entitled "Chikyuu wo yowasero" or "Let The Earth Be Drunk") is a shining example of this.

The episode centers around Zourugin, an elephant monster who spikes the city's water supply, making everyone drunk. When the plucky Five Yellow tries to stop the bad guys, she's knocked into the city's tainted water supply, and gets drunk herself. Eventually, she must use her undignified condition to her advantage, as her Drunken-Fist style Kung Fu seems to be the only thing which proves effective against the mighty Zourugin. Eventually the fight goes into the big time, and she must take the controls of 5-Robo to finally defeat the giant elephant monster (and yes, with a drunken Five Yellow at the controls, 5-Robo does stagger around, doing that wacky Drunken Kung-Fu stuff).

I don't know how popular Fiveman was in Japan, but since it begins with the destruction of the local grade school (where the team are all teachers), it had to be somewhat dear to the hearts of the children.

Trivia

Fiveman is the first Sentai in all-sibling team. Followed by Kyuukyuu Sentai GoGo-V and Mahou Sentai Magiranger.

Fiveman is the only sentai so far to have different henshin devices for the core team (Henshin braces for male members, and henshin pendants for female members), and is the only sentai to have neck-worn henshin devices.

This was the first sentai series to switch actor roles. Originally, Kazumi and Ken were the twins but weren't the youngest. The other included the 1993 series.

Actor Kihachiro Uemura (Shubalie) previously played Dai/Green Flash, one of the main heroes in Choushinsei Flashman.

Keiko Hayase (FiveYellow/Remi) appeared as a villainess in Kakuranger, as one of the Hana (flower) Rangers.

Ryosuke Kaizu (Red Mask in Hikari Sentai Maskman) appeared as a guest star as a scientist who falls for Five Pink. Here he is a scientist who is trying to make a life-crystal while he saved Five Pink from the clutches of the Killer Queen.

Youko Nakamura (YellowFlash/Sara) of Choushinsei Flashman guest starred.

Cast members Ryohei Kobayashi (FiveBlack/Fumiya) and Keiko Hayase (FiveYellow/Remi) married after the series.

Motoko Watanabe (Zaza) played Coron in Choujuu Sentai Liveman.

Last series in which Hirohisa Soda is the chief writer. He had been the chief writer of sentai from Goggle Five through Fiveman, and is often credited for being the one to raise the bar on sentai and raising its stories to appeal to older viewers, as well.

In the Philippines, Medor is known as Empress Meadow.

The Zone Empire has actually the first occurrence of a group called the Gingaman, predating the later Sentai series Seijuu Sentai Gingaman.

Names/Puns

Fiveman

The characters' names are all puns or play on what they teach/their specialty:

"Gaku," the name of the science teacher, means "learning".

"Ken," the name of the athlete/physical education teacher, means "health".

The kanji for "Fumi," used in the name of the language teacher and expert Fumiya, means "sentence/writing."

The kanji for "Kazu," used in the name of the math teacher Kazumi, means "number."

Remi, the music teacher, is a pun on "Do Re Mi."

CHILDREN OF DUNE

"Born to rule an empire. Destined to tear it apart."

: The twins of Paul "Muad'dib" Atreides become embroiled in the political landscape of Arrakis ("Dune") and the rest of the universe.

Now this is more like it! While the Sci-Fi version of 'Dune' was much better than the pathetic 1984 David Lynch version, I felt it still suffered from the 'gotta be way out there' syndrome. It was decent, but badly directed and overacted (witness the Guild Reps doing Tai Chi when they talk). Overall it was fair but not really notable.

This version is fantastic however. For me, this is what Sci-Fi should be all about. They took two of Herbert's books (Dune Messiah, Children of Dune) and combined them into a mini-series that actually takes the material seriously and doesn't try to hard to be different. I thought Leto was excellently done, Alia even better, Ghanima a little less than I expected. The effects were good, but I thought the story was actually the driving force for a change.

All in all a great effort. Now let's see if they do 'God-Emporer of Dune'

Personally I really enjoyed Children of Dune. First the major issue about the faithfulness to the books. To quote director Greg Yaitanes; "Try not to get hung up on such details as whether the twins are too old or too young, the eyes are too blue or not blue enough, or that the book says this and we did that. You'll end up robbing yourself of a great experience. The Dune universe is so wonderful because of how human and real its characters are. To not respect that would be the worst offense any of us could make." He's got that straight. This is an adaptation not a re-creation. The screenplay by John Harrison managed to fit in enough of Frank Herbert's vision to remain true to the spirit of the epic Dune saga.

The entire cast, Alec Newman [Paul Muad'Dib], Daniela Amavia [Alia Atreides], Julie Cox [Princess Irulan], Barbaroa Kodetova [Chani], James McAvoy [Leto II], Jessica Brooks [Ghanima], Susan Sarandon [Wensicia Corrino], Alice Krige [Reverend Mother Jessica Atreides], Edward Atterton [Duncan Idaho], Ian McNeice [Baron Harkonnen], Steven Berkoff [Stilgar], P.H. Moriarty [Gurney] and Johathan Bruun [Farad'n Corrino] gave me characters I could relate to as well as care about over the course of the miniseries. I especially enjoyed watching Alice Krige because her ability to convey depth of emotion with facial expressions is a well developed art.

The CGI effects were fantastic. Sharp & crisp. The best I've seen done on television and the use of computer generated 3-D backgrounds added so much stature to the sets. CoD was far superior to Dune which used mat backgrounds in terms of it's visuals. The movement of CGI objects like Thopters around CG backgrounds and the use of shadow rendering to add realism were absolutely first rate. As an example the shots of the Thopter landing at the Royal Palace in Arrakeem where the ships shadow moves across buildings then follows it down to the landing pad brought a big smile and a sigh...wow! CoD won an Emmy Award in 2003 (Special Visual Effects for a Miniseries, Movie or Special).

The costumes by Academy Award winner Theodor Pistek and his son Jan were outstanding. A visual feast for the eyes & the heart. The wedding scene at the Royal Palace was as worthy as any major motion picture costume drama and should have earned another Emmy in the costuming category.

The cinematography by Arthur Reinhart was stunning. The use of High Definition digital cameras instead of standard 35mm film and being shot in 16:9 true LBX format also made it look like a feature film rather than a TV miniseries (the DVD looks great as well). The use of lighting during camera pans over actors faces or on shots as characters moved across sets was again vary well used.

The music score by Brian Tyler was at times dark and moody, then majestic, adding to the grandeur of many of the key scenes where the score helped lift one's feelings to the level of emotion being presented by the actors as the story unfolded on the screen. The background soundtrack as the camera followed characters through the zocalo's of Arrakeem or the desert sietche's added a mystical quality where one could almost smell the food cooking or the incense like fragrance of the Spice Melange.

Overall Children of Dune has to rate with the best mini-series' that have ever been produced over the years and may even set a new standard for work being done for television with its quality production. A 9 out of 10.

My favourite book ever is Dune. When David Lynch massacred it in 1984, I became dubious of all book/film adaptations and I feel, with good reason. It looked great but the characters were nothing like the book and the plot confused and entangled.

When Sci-Fi channel announced plans to remake Dune just a couple of short years ago, I was even more dubious. Thankfully though and in spite of some small gripes, I was pleased with the outcome. It was far superior to Lynch's travesty and told the essence of the story with a cast of virtual unknowns.

I'd hoped that the production, budget and sheer epic of my favourite sequel to my favourite book would be stepped up in a big way. Combining Messiah and Children was always going to be tough but the Director has done an amazing job. The cringing matt backgrounds have gone and in its place, the larger budget allows for some stunning scenery.

Above the cinematography, there are simply some amazing performances. Jessica Brooks and James McAvoy are just perfect as the pre-born twins, children of Paul Atriedes. The rest of the cast give powerful performances, Alia, Jessica, Irulan, Paul, Chani. Even Susan Sarandon is convincing as the cold and brutal Wensicia. Gurney Halleck is just as wooden as he was in the original mini series and it's a shame when comparing the heartfelt pain of Alia and her slow descent into madness.

The politics and culture of the Dune series is explored well without seeming too glossed over for the fanatics or too heavy for the mildly interested. A great balance and I am glad that such a difficult undertaking worked.

For someone who fell in love with the first mini-series, the thought of a second was a major treat. Not having read the books, I had no idea what I was about to see. Fortunately, I did not have any trouble understanding it, especially since I've seen the first mini-series at least 15 times, Lynch's version a few times and read most of the first book. I'll say this much, I HATE character changes. Why do people play a role and not come back? I hate changes like that. Alice Krige is a decent actress, but she just doesn't look like Lady Jessica to me. I was quite fine with the job Saskia Reeves did. I did not care for the new Duncan Idaho either. I will admit, the new Stilgar was actually very good, but I still prefer the actors/actresses from the first mini-series. I definitely do not like this mini-series as much as I did the first, but it does have something in it that makes it special, and more than worth the 20 dollars it costs to buy it. Perhaps I need to watch it a few more times and let the shock of what happens sink in.

Like the first Sci-fi series original, it drags. A lot of the 'political intrigue' that is being brought forth feels very weighted, like making an hour and a half feel like 3 hours.

Number 1 reason why it drags so much? The cast. Even Susan Sarandon doesn't bring much to the film with her role (just like, I feel, William Hurt was pretty wasted in the first film). I like Susan in several of her other films, but here, there's not much there. Maybe even faulted to what I'm starting to refer to as an actor's 'evil role'. Most actors/actresses suck at these types of roles, especially, it seems, respectable ones. They usually want to let loose, 'have fun' with being the bad guy for once, but most of them can't portray it to save their lives or they need an inspiring director, which, here, clearly, they do not have.

The problem isn't on her shoulders alone, I think much of the cast and their direction is just plain dull. The actor portraying Maud'dib is somewhat interesting, though, but even he doesn't seem to be reaching his full potential. Everything feels very 'TVesque', safe, and for a sci-fi miniseries that should be taking chances, that's a bad thing, especially one that has Lynch Dune as a predecessor (which I'll get to in a moment). Bring someone like Christopher Walken aboard - we need charisma, someone who can breathe life into a part and make it interesting no matter what he's saying. Put together a bunch of talented actors - actresses in the roles that can instill that life that's needed to keep someone other than a die hard fan watching. To make it work. Otherwise, it can easily become real boring, real fast.

Look at Lynch Dune and despite any reservations on it you may have (frankly, I loved it as a kid when I saw it for the first time at 2 in theaters, especially since I wasn't hampered by a book, and my imagination was allowed to roam free, and I still love that film today), but in any case, the cast was awesome. There was great charisma going around. But it wasn't simply limited to a great cast, which is merely one stepping stone to a good movie.

This brings me to point number 2, the script. There has to be a better way to carry many of those scenes. There's too much information, some of it has to be told in dialogue, but for the rest of it, there must be other ways of expressing it. I just don't think the script works all that well from what I've seen. If you had a great cast and better direction, you might be able to pull it off, even then, it is too slow... which is also in part the fault of the director and cinematographer; it all falls pretty flat, basic, by the numbers. It feels like a tv series, and sure, it is a sci-fi miniseries, but does it have to feel that way? I think it's slightly better in some ways than the first, but there seems like less going on with the story. In fact, it really didn't even get sort of interesting until the last 15-20 minutes of the first tape.

It just feels very off... too limited in scope, I think models would have helped better than the obvious CGI in it (and normally I don't mind cgi, it just kind of gets repetitive, fake looking, which is probably one of the biggest problems with the prequel trilogy -of Star Wars), there's just something to be said with the look of movies like Blade Runner, Dune, the original Star Wars trilogy, Neverending Story, more recently, LOTR.

Oh, the worse angle, not nearly so bad this time but still pathetic, is costuming. Most of it just looks like an eyesore, like it was ripped out of a movie set of the middle ages, not a far flung sci-fi series. It was the worse part of the first miniseries, and it is hardly better here.

Oh, and the Navigators... ick, a travesty. In Lynch Dune, they looked cool, real, not some animated crap that sounds kind of like 'em.

I mean, if anything, they had a template of truly inspired design from the Lynch Dune, the look, the feel of each planet shown. It didn't look like they just walked onto a set, which almost entirely destroys the immersion factor. I want to be taken away. That's what sci-fi and fantasy is about, removing me from the real world and taking me someplace that exists only in my dreams.

Dune is a lot about political intrigue, but you need the direction to make it feel more grand and epic, maybe even more so than it is, and you need a cast that can just hold an audience. I mean, if you look, at least 2-3 of the main female cast look very similar to one another. At a stage of being somewhat tired already, the lines between the 3 roles blurred. More distinction would be nice, more varied portrayal of each part, no matter their relation.

I don't know what I was expecting, the first miniseries was flawed, but different enough from Lynch Dune and with enough going onscreen that it didn't seem quite so bad, while some things seem to have improved since the first time around, the flaws are even more obvious with a script that has less going on.

I think it sort of gets better, mainly building on the last 20 minutes of the first tape. Going back, it would have been a wiser choice to cut the first 2 hours into a tight 30 minutes. There's not really much in the way of conflict, just plotting here, plotting there, a little interaction, maybe a little discovery channel on government politics. Too many little small subplots that go nowhere or have so little payoff that it's like, what's the point?

For example, in the intro sequence (Tape 1), we see a guy basically vowing 'revenge' on Maud'Dib for the blinding of his son, refusing to let his son be set out into the desert, per the Freman way. What happens to this little subplot? About half an hour later, he's just killed off right after he reveals this little wanting to someone (to the assassin of him who probably was supposed to help). What significance did this have? They kill his daughter, cut her hands and head off, and leave her in the desert, where's she's found... ok, but so what? It doesn't really seem to go anywhere.

As I stated before, things finally start picking up in the last 10-15 minutes of the first tape, with what could potentially be a very cool element to carry the rest of the film, though why it occurs is kind of foggy. Next big problem is Maud'Dib's grown up sister, she just feels so wrong for the part 99% of the time (and that accent gets in the way much of that time, which appears to be the 'Freman' accent, and does more harm than good - making it in several parts harder to understand unless you pump up the volume), and the fact that she has such an important role in the 2nd half of the 4 hours, it really undercuts the 'cool' element that she's primarily apart of... they could have done so much more with it.

Duncan (the return of) is another element that links with the sister and this character had a lot of potential. They just didn't use any of it, just some slight little conflict, and that's it, but with a better actor and script, he could have certainly carried a much grander weight to the 2nd part of the film. He could have added so much, brought the film away from the monotone flavor and more into some serious drama, conflict, which could have escalated the story more and made his final moments mean something. Plus, they developed a major deal out of why he's back, and it had to do with 'plots within plots' type of deal, yet, again, it never goes anywhere. It should have been prime material to drive the inner conflict he's feeling.

The Twins; another element that could have easily been really cool, driving the story, bringing the missing conflict. I liked the element of what the Twins were about, there were some minor bits, but most of it feels glossed over.

The mother; Susan Sarandon, was a wasted actress. She's given nothing more than 'plotting' behind people's backs, and then she disappears into the background, as if most of her plotting actually counted for something. That's probably the biggest problem here, the scenes weren't well set up, and they had very little meaning that you couldn't have gotten through more meaningful scenes not involving her. She could have easily been written out altogether, and not been missed until her 'plotting' was revealed, the phantom menace.

This next paragraph might contain a little spoiler; so if you care, skip it...

The true 'phantom menace' -the cool element linked to the sister, is the return of the Harkonen, the Baron... personally, I liked the Baron in Lynch Dune better (in that, he was utterly mad, evil, insane), but the one from the sci-fi series was far more a political bad guy, which was fine, and could have worked here so much better had the sister not been so awful. Her last moments could have been very defining if her performance and direction were worth a damn.

Back to the Rest of Dune... the mother, she gets shoved to more a supporting character, but I think that's fine in the context of the film. Still, expanding on her role a little bit and her relation with her children would have made the ending more meaningful.

The Freman and Gurney are just kind of background plot elements in this one, not really worth their screen time.

Maud'Dib, who is mostly absent throughout the second tape, the movie could have easily followed his journey to realization and it could have been more entertaining in better hands, especially with his proposed end.

There was a lot of little philosophy thrown around in quick speech moments, kind of like the Matrix, but most of the time, it's done in such a way that it really ends up having not much in the way of meaning at all. I'd rather watch Fishburne, personally, going on about the Rabbit Hole for an hour than sit through one of these lines done by pretty much any of the actors of Children of Dune. They were just generally awful, poorly thought out, and poorly spoken.

The ending, the final moments expressed that it wanted to be more, it wanted to be an emotional journey, to be epic... much like, in a way, Return of the King will probably be, a final step taken, the beginning of a new legacy and the death of an old. Even with lowly CGI and crappy costumes, if the script had been there, if the cast and direction had strived to surpass what the final moments of the film expressed that it wanted to be, it could have been a great film, or, at the very least, a good/decent/entertaining one.

After seeing the second half, I saw the potential. I wanted to like the potential of what I saw, hell, I wondered what it would have been like if someone went back and did a sequel to Lynch's Dune, since most of the cast is still alive, and if you started around the story near the beginning of the second tape, it could fit quite nicely. I wanted that 'feel' that Lynch helped to evoke in his film, or at least a decent experience reminiscent of the first series. There are so many angles they could have pursued and expanded upon. If only they'd cut 80% of the first tape (much of the needless 'fat') and expanded on the character conflict potential of the second, it could have been an impressive journey.

If only it had been in the hands of someone with as much vision as love for the story; like Peter Jackson, it could have been so much more. I personally would never see to remake the first one (since I am such a fan of Lynch's version, even though the sci-fi series Dune was different enough that I like that one, too), but this thing, being a new tale, a new incarnation, and with 4 hours to work in. Oh, I'm not sure how close it is to the 2 books this is based off of, but there had to be more moments, more life in these characters, in the life of this galaxy. Like I said, with a good cast, script, and direction, the sub par cgi would have melted away and it would have been a treat.

Final verdict, unless you are a fan and you still want to pick this up, skip to the last 15 minutes of the first tape and watch it from there on out. You might find something to like, you might not. Oh, and don't try to watch it all at once. Take it in sections, half an hour to an hour at a time. It'll digest slightly better. It is too much to take all in at once (and this is coming from someone who likes tackling the whole experience at once and can usually do it, but the information is sloppy, kind of like watching one of those old school films with a monotone voice over, without the voiceover, though).

Finally, wait till it comes to cheaper video or watch it if it comes on again on the Sci-Fi channel, for which I do not have. So I had to actually pay to see this one just like I had to buy the first to see it. So yeah, I expect something to be worth my money. Personally, I wish I'd gone for the option of Castle in the Sky instead, since I'd seen the director's Spirited Away and loved that.

This is a decent sequel to the original Dune mini-series, and in several ways is an improvement. The this-is-on-a-stage look is still there but not as obvious, the f/x are better, and the costume design is thankfully a little restrained.

It was a little confusing as a few of the principal actors have been replaced, and at the end of it when at least thirty years had passed I was wondering just how old some of these people were supposed to be; Gurney Halleck in particular would be likely in his eighties. OTOH it was -satisfying- seeing Susan Sarandon playing a royal witch, kind of like that's what she's been all along.

Fans of Herbert will likely want to burn me at the stake but it's also obvious the two books the movie is based on weren't originally planned. The prophet isn't really the prophet, we now have a rebellion against the earlier rebellion, and we have yet another showdown in a throne room against the sister-turned-evil.

This sort of retreading of material doesn't have the same power as the first, and again I was wondering at the mechanics of it all. Arrakis is becoming a wet earth-like world because of Paul's spiritual mojo or from the Fremen's water stockpiles or what? Were all these butterflies and plants being imported or just sprouting on their own? And since the Fremen knew that water kills the sandworms, why are they now wondering what to do about the decline of the desert--shouldn't they have known this would happen?

The role of Leto II isn't very clear until near the end; I was wondering why he was always appearing shirtless (bad idea in the desert) until he took the sandworm larva into himself. I knew from reading the Dune Encyclopedia that he would eventually become a human sandworm, but wonder if people who hadn't read the books would get that or just think he had a real bad rash and suddenly started running super-fast. More importantly, why is this transformation to a sandworm the needed step to become the saviour that Paul couldn't do--the explanation must be around page 1228 or so.

Overall this mini-series expands on the original, if not particularly satisfying, but the blame for that can be placed more on Frank Herbert's increasingly convoluted story-line. By the time they make "Chapterhouse" it may be necessary for a prologue explainer to keep it all straight.

DUNE

1 - 1 EPISODE ONE

This episode starts 12 years after the end of the first Dune miniseries. Duke Paul Atreides has become the emperor of the known universe. However, after an attack he is blinded but he manages to use his visions of the future to 'see'. His concubine, Chani, has given him twins, Leto II and Ghanima. When his children are attacked, Paul is able to use Leto's eyes to see and avert the attack, but in the process loses his visions and is actually blind now. In accordance with Fremen custom, he walks into the desert and leaves his children in the care of his sister, Alia.

Dir Greg Yaitanes

1 - 2 EPISODE TWO

The Lady Jessica returns to Arrakis, otherwise known as Dune, to visit her grandchildren Leto II and Ghanima. Alia, Paul's younger sister, was born aware of her ancestral memories and because of this the Bene Gesserit order, considers her an abomination.

Lady Jessica, Alia's mother, has to take refuge when one particular ancestor begins to control Alia.

Despite the fact that Paul wed Irulan Corrino, the Corrino family intends to reclaim the imperial throne and plans an attack on Leto and Ghanima. Leto fakes his own death and Ghanima uses a deep trance to forget about her and Leto's plan.

Dir Greg Yaitanes

1 - 3 EPISODE THREE

As Alia becomes totally possessed she also has to deal with rebel Fremen. Ghanima, who survived the attack on her planned by House Corrino, is engaged to Farad'n Corrino and a marriage is planned for the near future. Then, unexpectedly, Leto II returns out of the desert. Everyone believed he was dead, but it was just a staged death. While in the desert his body has absorbed a few sandtrout, which means that, in time, he could turn into a sandworm and live for hundreds of years. Alia resists possession by the baron while Irulan declines Jessica's offer to return with her to Caladan, saying that she will be needed by the children.

CHILDREN OF THE DOG STAR

Three children find three pieces of a prehistoric space probe and reassemble it with electrifying results. Filmed entirely on location in South Auckland, New Zealand, it's the story of three children who discover various pieces of a prehistoric space probe and reassemble it, with electrifying results. Tied up with the mystery is a primeval swamp which ancient Maori legend holds the tapu, a forbidden warning that evil will befall whoever breaks the tapu.

The probe, called Kolob, had come to Earth 7,000 years before, from the planet Siris the constellation of Caninus Major. It was one of three remote-controlled argonauts destined to monitor the progress of Man and, when the time was right, to teach him. The others in their staff, in Africa and the Americas. But Kolob had crashed in an area where humans came late to the land. Now, its memory banks warped and traumatised by the long hibernation it must find a way of putting itself back together, and seeks a mind open enough' contacted, young enough to be controlled and powerful enough to be used . . . the child.

That child is Gretchen, an unusually bright 12-year-old with a consuming passion of astronomy. She comes to stay at her uncle's remote farm while her career scientist parents are overseas. With her two new-found friends, Ronny, a streetwise urban Marine boy, and Bartle, a shy bird-watcher, she becomes drawn into the mystery of Kolob. Ultimately, they con the alien's probe master, the Siriusians, and gain a brief, tantalising insight into life among the stars. Also bound up in the tale is the conflict between the townspeople who want the devil land around the swamp and the Maori population who want it to remain undisturbed.

Six-part mystery thriller from New Zealand, described by its author as a 'kidult' series, meaning that it's light years away from the Famous Five. Children of the Dog Star is an atmospheric series, engagingly underplayed with the extraterrestrial adventures of the children neatly contrasted with the down-to-earth lives of the Made in 1984 and first shown over here in a twice-weekly format in 1985, with a weekly , in 1988, the series won a Golden Gate Award (in America) for the Best Children's Pro of 1985.

It was author Ken Catran's second sci-fi 'kidult' series. He also adapted the novel Under the Mountain by Maurice Gee for Television New Zealand, and that series was also directed 'Dog Star' director Chris Bailey. This series won a Golden Gate Award (in America) for the best children's program of 1985.

1 - 1 INTO THE CIRCLE

Adam Brake, an astrophysicist, and his son Matt arrive at the village of Milbury, where they plan to do research on the giant stones that encircle the village. They possess a painting depicting an ancient ritual in which a circle of people are turned to stone by a light beam shooting into the sky. They meet some of the villagers: Mrs. Crabtree, the housekeeper for the cottage where they are staying; Raphael Hendrick, the Lord of the Manor and their landlord; Margaret Smythe, the curator of the village museum; and Dai, an old poacher. At school, Matt notices that some of the students, "The Happy Ones," are very good at mathematics and cannot be hurt physically; aside from Matt, there are three other students who are not "happy"--Kevin Lyle, the son of the village doctor; Sandra Smythe, Margaret's daughter; and Jimmo Browning. In the meantime, Adam touches one of the stones and experiences psychic phenomena.

1 - 2 THE CIRCLE OF FEAR

Dai tells Matt to come to his home, "The Sanctuary," if he ever needs help. Adam discovers that there is an underground rock dish beneath the village with the stones at its perimeter. Matt suggests that psychic lines emanating from the stones delineate an inner circle surrounding Hendrick's manor house. Later that night, he finds the villagers forming a ring around the manor house and chanting. When he tries to get closer, Dai grabs him and throws him against a stone.

Wr Jeremy Burnham, Trevor Ray

1 - 3 SERPEANT IN THE CIRCLE

Matt awakens back at the cottage and tries to tell his father what happened to him, but Adam thinks his son was just sleepwalking. At school, Jimmo has become very good at mathematics and has obviously joined "The Happy Ones." Dai explains to Matt that he was protecting him from the stones the night before. He suggests that the circle within the stones is a maze with the treasure of knowledge at its center. Dai is protected from the stones' power by an amulet with a serpent on it. In the meantime, Adam is told by Hendrick that the stones align in space with a black hole, which he discovered--Hendrick's Supernova.

Wr Jeremy Burnham, Trevor Ray

1 - 4 THE NARROWING CIRCLE

Kevin and his father Dr. Lyle are planning to leave the village to visit an old patient. Matt touches a pair of gloves inadvertently left behind by Dr. Lyle and sees a vision of the Lyles being stopped at the edge of the village by the stones. When questioned later, however, the Lyles deny that anything happened to them, but it is obvious that they have become "happy." Matt and Sandra find Dai's dead body, his hand clutching the fragments of his broken amulet.

Wr Jeremy Burnham, Trevor Ray

Dir Peter Graham Scott

1 - 5 CHARMED CIRCLE

When Adam and Hendrick go to investigate Dai's death, the body is gone. Matt uses Sandra's scarf to watch psychically what happens to Margaret and Sandra when they go to Hendrick's place for dinner. Matt "sees" Hendrick perform a ceremony where the Smythes are transformed into "Happy Ones."

Wr Jeremy Burnham, Trevor Ray

1 - 6 SQUARE IN THE CIRCLE

The transformed Smythes join the other villagers who have encircled the manor house, but later back at the cottage they deny that anything has happened to them. The next day, Adam decides that he and Matt are leaving the village. However, as they drive out of the village, they are stopped by the stones, just as the Lyles had been. They wake up in Hendrick's house and are prevented from leaving by the villagers who are ringing the house again for the next transformation ceremony.

Wr Jeremy Burnham, Trevor Ray

1 - 7 FULL CIRCLE

Speculating that the black hole is involved in the transformation process, Matt and Adam sabotage Hendrick's clocks so that he will misjudge the position of the black hole during the transformation ceremony. However, believing that the transformation has been successful, he sends Matt and Adam to join the other villagers. Adam touches Margaret's hand, breaking the spell over the villagers. A beam of light changes Hendrick into an ancient priest and some of the villagers into stone. Matt and Adam escape to The Sanctuary, where they spend the night. The next morning, they find Dai and the other villagers alive and well, and leave the village.

CHIMERA

AKA: MONKEY BOY

The Jenner Clinic in the wilds of Yorkshire is, on the surface, a fertility clinic, helping childless couples, like the Foresters to conceive. But this is a front for chilling research that has created a half-man, half-ape hybrid called Chad.

One night the clinic is destroyed by an explosion and staff and patients wiped out by a killer with superhuman strength, who then escapes out onto the Yorkshire moors. While local copper, Schaffer (So Haunt Me's George Costigan in a Hawaiian shirt) instigates his investigation, Carson the journalist boyfriend of a nurse at the clinic, begins his own enquires. He's aided by research scientist Allison Wells, absent of the night of the massacre, and now the only person who knows the identity of the killer, But is she to be trusted? Standing in their way is Hennessey, a ruthless government agent bent on a cover-up, who calls in the army to hunt down Chad, who is more intelligent than they think.

A four part horror drama set around the shadowy world of genetic engineering. Stephen Gallagher's 1991 adaptation of his own novel was later edited into a two hour 'movie' version shown in July 1994. Stephen Gallagher also worked on the SF action series BUGS. Stephen Gallagher wrote the script based on his book. Producer for the series was Nick Gillott, the music was by Nigel Hess.

While working in a busy NHS hospital, nurse Tracy Pickford gets a better job in a private fertility clinic. Travelling up from London to North Yorkshire, she's leaving behind boyfriend Peter Carson, a journalist heavily into film trivia (an article on Douglas Fairbanks' fencing tutor anyone?). He's not too happy about Tracy's move, especially as the first he hears about it is when he's disturbed by the noise of her going-away party. From the ensuing row, we learn that their relationship was not working - but their final parting isn't really bitter and they promise to keep in touch.

The Jenner Clinic is out in the country, very quiet and far away from the bustle of a city casualty department. All seems normal, but for the off-limits section where they keep test animals, and the unchallenging nightshift Tracy is assigned to would be boring except for mysterious activities centring on those out of bounds laboratories. The clinic's test-tube babies programme is just a cover for advanced research into genetic engineering, and we see that Dr Jenner (David Calder) is displeased at a lack of progress in some areas of the secret project. He wants something to satisfy the clinic's financial backers, a product he can patent. A worried Tracy calls Peter for help, unsure what's really happening as nobody tells her anything. Midnight staff meetings and sudden panic actions increase her suspicions, which prove well founded when one of the experimental subjects manages to escape...

This is the opening episode of Zenith/Anglia's TV production of Chimera (aka: Monkey Boy). Four 50-minute instalments of a miniseries adapted by Stephen Gallagher from his 1982 novel; and directed by Lawrence Gordon Clark, maker of the gripping IRA thriller Harry's Game (1982). The show was first broadcast on British TV in 1991. According to producer Nick Gillott: "Chimera is a controversial story about... scientific research that may be going on in secret, and about how such developments may be covered up by the government." But how can you make a drama out of something unseen and unknown? "We aim to convey the fear that is aroused when an ordinary man or woman tries to find out what is really going on behind the façade, and meets the forces of darkness," says Gillott. Meeting those sinister forces in Chimera is actor John Lynch (best known to genre fans for his supporting role in Hardware, 1990), who plays crusading journalist Peter Carson.

"There are some highly emotionally-charged scenes about issues which are now very topical," says Lynch, and he considers the issue of genetic engineering particularly relevant. "The stories that are around about such developments, and the things that can be done in theory are frightening, and not far away from what Chimera is dealing with." In his role as reluctant hero Carson, he has to deal with the shock of discovering girlfriend Tracy has been murdered along with everyone else at the Jenner Clinic. (Actress Emer Gillespie's heroine is unexpectedly killed off very early on in Chimera, in a plot twist reminiscent of Hitchcock's Psycho).

While local police scour the Yorkshire Moors for whoever's responsible for the first episode's climactic massacre, and the sullen Carson struggles to contain his grief, the fiendish Government figure of Hennessey appears. Played with a dour malevolence by Kenneth Cranham (co-star of Hellbound: Hellraiser II, 1989), this character brings a whole new dimension of political repression to Chimera. "I suppose I have played more than my share of nasty types, but I am getting used to it," Cranham notes. Does he think the story of Chimera is realistic? "I wouldn't put anything past them," he says, referring to the speculative SF background of Chimera's nightmarish scenario. On his arrival in the sleepy Yorkshire town nearest the Jenner Clinic, the antagonistic Hennessey orders all police out of the area, and calls up an army of khaki-clad 'specialists' who throw a security web around the site. Highly placed and powerful, Hennessey conducts the cover-up with a sorcerer's finesse, using his telephone like a magic wand; mutilated victims disappear en route to the mortuary; the press are officially gagged by a 'D' notice; and the regular police's mass-murder inquiry is abruptly cancelled without any explanation to the detective in charge.

The narrative splinters, following a number of twists and themes. Lone survivor of the Jenner Clinic's staff, Alison Wells (a pivotal character played by Christine Kavanagh) had foreseen trouble and left work early on the night of the slaughter, she returns to aid Hennessey's plot to conceal the truth and avoid a public scandal. A sign-language expert is called in to interrogate a laboratory chimpanzee at the clinic, and this leads to one of Chimera's moments of bizarre humour, when we learn the ape can indeed communicate and hold broken conversations in an Anslang version of the system used by deaf and dumb humans. "Tell him he gets no more chocolate until we get an answer," Hennessey instructs the sign-interpreter. While on a nearby farm there's something lurking in the hayloft of an old barn, where a couple of over-imaginative kids have tea parties for their new friend, 'Mr Scarecrow'.

In part three, Peter Carson's subversive investigation uncovers Dr Jenner's dark past, including details of the probably illegal, certainly unethical genetic engineering experiment, he initiated a decade ago. A revolutionary project that led to the laboratory creation of a human-ape hybrid called 'Chad'. This creature has been kept alive purely for experimental purposes, imprisoned in Jenner's secure clinic. Now he's out roaming the countryside, a lost and lonely figure on the run from paramilitary teams and helicopter patrols. The police also pursue Carson, on orders from a concerned Hennessey, bothered about reports of the journalist's prying into classified areas of MoD activity. Carson manages to escape into London's backstreets with his videotaped evidence showing the chimera Chad's existence, intact. After these revelations, the doubly tragic dénouement of part four, is neither unexpected or long in coming. "It's not over yet," vows Carson. But later, in a post office sorting room, we see Hennessey confiscate copies of an incriminating video that had been mailed to the press.

An uneven mixture of mad doctor SF, maniac-on-the-loose thriller, conspiracy chiller and monster hunt, Chimera is peppered with obvious yet delightful B-movie imagery; broken chicken eggs, animal cages littered with children's toys, blood splattered on white medical coats - all simple but effective symbols of a complex, nerve-jangling and ever-popular theme. Writer Stephen Gallagher did his homework before starting the original novel, "I came across claims [that scientists] had produced a chimera, but had destroyed it at the embryo stage," he says. The rapidly advancing technology of genetic manipulation is, he states, "a Pandora's box." Adding, "the economic pressures for such progress... could provide cheap labour and military fodder, and (chimeras) could be harvested for transplant organs... my main fear is that we could have a slave species with no rights, who would live for nothing but exploitation. It would be social cruelty on a mass scale."

This prophetic idea is included in the TV adaptation (which Gallagher confidently tackled following his experience scripting Doctor Who), in a chilling scene showing a most unusual production line. "The story is full-blooded and does not shirk the issues," he claims. "We show a creature which does terrible things to his victims, but who is just as much a victim." The 'chimera' Chad is played by actor Douglas Mann, under sophisticated makeup and animatronics devised by Bob Keen of the Image Animation effects house that worked on such Clive Barker monster-horror as Hellraiser (1987) and Nightbreed (1990). The problems of making Chad believable as a half-ape character, fell upon primate consultant, Peter Elliott. An animal trainer who perfected his art of 'chimping' on such movies as Greystoke (1984), and Gorillas In The Mist (1988), he coached Doug Mann in simian movement and behaviour to prepare him for the demanding role of Chad, "a monster with a heart," says Elliott. "He is just a misunderstood guy [but, he explains] ...adult chimps are eight to ten times stronger in the upper body than man, and have the emotional stability of a one-year-old (human) child."

In Chimera, the physically 'superhuman' Chad rips and stabs his way through the supporting cast, to escape certain death at the hands of Dr Jenner when his experimental life is deemed over. The violence though, is explicit only by the usually restrictive standards of television, and it's unlikely to bother anyone who has already started school - despite the TV announcer's dire warnings about "scenes... which may disturb."

So is this, as Ken Cranham claims, "[a] Frankenstein of the 1990s," or merely sub-Quatermass techno-fear? Chimera does have its moments of compelling suspense and low-voltage shock, which easily eclipse the highlights of that earlier TV foray into the questionable values of genetic research produce, the absurd First Born (BBC, 1988). But, compared to other topical, fantastic, small screen dramatic-thriller serials of the era, like the nuclear-charged Edge Of Darkness, or even the quirky mysteries of Twin Peaks, it's a generally tame and only mildly interesting effort. Chimera is well intentioned, certainly, but perhaps a little too polite for the fervent tastes of your average gorehound.

CHO JIN SENTAI JETMAN

AKA: TORIHITO SENTAI JETMAN

AKA: BIRDMAN BATTLE TEAM JETMAN

AKA: BIRDMAN TASK FORCE JETMAN

Vyram began its invasion of Earth by destroying the Skyforce's base Earth Ship. Ryuu's beloved, Aoi Rie, was sucked out in the chaos. Ryuu escaped with Commander Odagiri. Earth Ship had been the site for the J Project, which was intended to create superhuman Jetman by exposing subjects to Birdonic Waves fired from the Force Gun. Ryuu and four other Skyforce officers were to have become the Jetmen.

During the explosion of the Earth Ship, four Birdonic Waves shot forth as bolts of lightning, striking four civilians. Using the Birdonic Wave radar, Ryuu and Odagiri gathered the four civilians, including an initially less than willing Gai, to form Jetman. Ryuu now had to fight his beloved Rie, now Maria of Vyram. And if that ain't tragic enough for you, things get really depressing after this. The Dimensions give the Jetmen a new super weapon, the Jet Garuda, but are all killed.

A parasitic starfish born from the blood of Radiguet leeches off of Rie, turning her into a vampiric creature. Radiguet kills her with his sword, telling her, "You can never return to the past." Ryuu goes off to avenge his beloved alone, engaging in a sword duel with Radiguet. The four other Jetman chase after him. Gai gets in their way, and Gai duels him. Gai falls, but Radiguet lives to enlarge himself into the monster Raguem, merging with the mothership Vylock for even more power.

Raguem wrecks the Titan Boy, but finally falls to the Birdonic Sabre of the Great Icarus. The war is over, but the tragedy isn't. Three years later, on the wedding day of Ryuu and Kaori, Gai is stabbed by a thug on the way and dies, just as his Gatchaman facsimile, Condor Joe Asakura, died in the series finale after suffering in silence for some time from an old wound. (But at least Joe died in battle! His death saved the other team members, whereas Gai's death was senseless and random. Was this intended to make us think about the vulnerability of 'invulnerable' heroes? Or was it just bad writing by Inoue Toshiki, chief scripter for Jetman? You decide.

The most famous anime team show Battle of the Planets also had an avian unifying theme, but Jetman added extra influences through the presence of many anime writers and Zeiram director Amemiya. The result was a super sentai show that gained a much more adult audience than many of its predecessors and which set the stage for a new boom in sentai popularity. Jetman was preceded in the Super Sentai chronology by FIVEMAN and followed by ZYURANGER, better known today as THE MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS. Produced by Kyozo Utsonomiya, Jun Kaji, Takeyuki Suzuki.

Thirteenth Super Sentai. This series had many similarities to Science Ninja Team Gatchaman--the parallels in the members are too obvious to go into here; compare the characters listed here with the Gatchaman cast in section 0 of this Manual. But instead of being an empty imitation (as some view Gatchaman's own sequels, II and F), Jetman was a high-quality tribute that ranks with Dairanger as the top 90s Super Sentai. Note that the word 'choujin' ('birdman') is homophonous with 'choujin' ('superman').

This two-parter (Episodes 31-32) involved the Jetman team barely escaping the clutches of Mu; one of the 3 Demon Beasts. Gai (Black Condor) and Kaori (White Swan) decide to leave the team (hence the episode name "The Task Force Breaks Up!") Bad timing, because the other two remaining demon beasts, Ramon and Gogu, plot to take over Vyram. They use the abandonment to their advantage, and easily defeats the remaining three members Ryu (Red Hawk), Raita (Yellow Owl), and Ako (Blue Swallow). The demon beasts terrorize Tokyo and turn the humans into fruits (pineapples?!), eating them in the process.

Maria of Vyram (whom also happens to be Ryu's presumed dead girlfriend,) attacks and is then reverted by the demons back to her original form-Rie Aoi.. Ryu consoles her and encourages her to join the team. Gogu enlarges himself to finish off Jetman, and Ryu then summons Jet Icarus and Jet Garuda to do battle with the giant. Gogu is still too powerful for the robots to handle and has both of them on the ropes. However, Commander Odagiri has an ace in the hole, in the form of Tetra Boy; Jetman's third 'robo'. He turns the tide for the task force and finishes off Gogu with the Tetrabuster cannon. Meanwhile, Count Radeige converts Rie back to her persona of Maria, and as Ryu returns from battle, she attacks! Ryu tries to snap her out of it, but to no avail. Ryu is beaten down and defeated, unwilling to fight his girlfriend.

In the second episode, "Wings Again", our story opens as Ryu finds himself back at Skycamp base, but at this point, he is hallucinating that he and Rie are still together. Even Gai and Kaori tried to snap him out of his trance, but to no avail.. Meanwhile, Gogu crawls back to Ramon, critically injured, and tries to heal each other. They are ambushed by Radeige and Grey. They abduct Gogu's body, return it back to Ramon, and as Ramon revitalises Gogu, a group of Bio-Dimensional parasites attack him and Gogu; combining them into one composite being. While Ryu battles Maria again, the rest of the Jetman team battle the combined Ramon/Gogu creature, and get their clocks cleaned. Ryu snaps out of his delirium, helps his team-mates, smashes the Demonbeasts, then summons Jet Icarus and Bird Garuda to finish it off with the "Hyper G Attack".

Characters and mecha

Earth Defence Army Skyforce

A global defence organisation watching over the world from the Earth Ship, reacting to crime and disaster with its Skyforcer agents on Earth.

Red Hawk (Tendou Ryuu; literally 'Heaven Hall Dragon')

Height: 180 cm

Weight: 79 kg

Running speed: 100 m/9.0 secs

Originally a 'Skyforcer' codenamed 'W6'. Became a Jetman by being showered with Birdonic Waves as a member of the J Project. Leader with a sense of justice stronger than anyone else's. Suffers from the knowledge that the girlfriend whom he believed to be dead, Aoi Rie, lived as Vyram officer Maria. Likes hot milk without sugar. (Why do the Japanese care about this?) Marries Kaori three years after the fall of Vyram. Weapons and/or attacks: Wing Punch, various Bringer Sword moves.

Tendou Kinuyo

Ryuu's grandmother. Wants Ryuu to marry to continue the family tsukemono business.

Black Condor (Yuuki Gai)

Height: 183 cm

Running speed: 100 m/9.5 secs

Lone wolf who hates being ordered around. Loves fighting, but deep down inside is a nice guy. Initially fought a lot with Ryuu, but in battle became friends with him. Interests include motorcycling, saxophone playing, gambling, and womanising. Hates nattou and other men. Cares for Kaori. Murdered by a thug three years after the final battle with Vyram. Weapons and/or attacks: Condor Finish, Flying Kick, Condor/Owl Towering Attack.

Yellow Owl (Ooishi Raita)

Height: 176 cm

Running speed: 100 m/11.4 secs

Nature-lover who enjoys growing vegetables. Hates Vyram for its destruction of nature. Eats a lot but is very strong. Good at cooking. Looks after Kaori. Three years after the final battle, runs a far with childhood friend Satsuki. As Yellow Owl, throws giant rocks as if they were pebbles and specialises in head butt, body blows, throwing techniques, and sumo-based attacks. Weapons and/or attacks: Rock Drop, Sure Kill Thrust, Condor/Owl Towering Attack.

Ooishi Kiyo

Raita's grandmother who raised him because his parents were too budsy.

White Swan (Rokumeikan Kaori)

Height: 163 cm
 Weight: 51 kg
 Running speed: 100 m/10.2 secs

A rich girl who joined Jetman to escape days of boredom. Since her parents live in New York, she is taken care of by her butler Jiiya. Good at kendo. Later marries Ryuu. Best shot of the Jetmen, despite an initial dislike for and/or attacks: Swan Wing, Swannie Attack, Double Kick (with Yellow Owl).

Blue Swallow (Hayasaka Ako)

Height: 159 cm
 Weight: 52 kg
 Running speed: 100 m/9.8 secs

Senior at Miharakita High School. Bright and cheery. Wants to get tied to a rich man. First thought of Jetman as a part time job paying 1500 yen an hour. (That's all she wanted for defending Earth!? I'd ask for more!) But her first battle awakened her sense of justice and made her realize that she must fight as a warrior (for free--it goes without saying). Best friends with classmate Kyouko. Debuts as an idol singer three years after the war.

Team weapons: Bird Blaster guns, Bringer Swords--both combine into Jet Hand Cannons which combine with the Beak Smasher guns to form the Smashbomber rifles. Wing Gauntlets which generate shockwaves of 150 Gs.

Team attacks: Bird Bomber, Fire Bazooka.

Commander Odagiri Aya

First woman commander of a sentai. Good at martial arts. Invents mecha.

The Back Dimension Dimensions: Dan, Kanna, and Rei

The last three warriors of Dimensia, a realm destroyed by Vyram. Chasing Vyram, they came to Earth with the Bird Garuda. Dan was able to transform himself into a winged 'birdman'.

Neojetmen J1 through J5

This black-garbed team was set up by Supreme Commander Ichijou in opposition to the Jetmen. Receive their powers from Birdonic Reactors implanted in their bodies. J1 is armed with the Neosword. J2 is armed with the Neostinger scythe. J4 is armed with the Neoslicer boomerang. All five have Neoshooter guns and Neomine grenades. Together, they fire the Flarebuster twin cannon. Gave their Birdonic energies to the Jetmen, who at the time couldn't henshin.

Jet Striker

Red Condor's buggy. Top speed 500 km/h. Transforms into the Fire Bazooka.

Jet Vancer.

Yellow and White's Toyota 4WD. Top speed 400 km/h.

Jet Speeders

Black and Blue's bikes. Top speed 360 km/h.

Jet Hawk (Red)

Length: 29.0 m
 Weight: 15 t
 Top speed: Mach 7
 Weapons: Plasma Hawk Cannon

Jet Condor (Black)

Length: 35.2 m
 Weight: 20 t
 Top speed: Mach 10
 Weapons: Condor Vulcan

Jet Owl (Yellow)

Length: 24.9 m
 Weight: 21 t
 Top speed: Mach 2
 Weapons: Owl Smasher

Jet Swallow (Blue)

Length: 24.9 m
 Weight: 14 t
 Top speed: Mach 8.5
 Weapons: Swallow Shower

Jet Swan (White)

Length: 35.2 m
 Weight: 24 t
 Top speed: Mach 4
 Weapons: Swan Pulsar

The above can combine into the giant plane...

Icarus Haken

Length: 43.3 m
 Weight: 94 t
 Cruising speed: Mach 12
 Top speed: Mach 15
 Weapons and/or attacks: Harken Buster, Jet Phoenix (Cf. the God Phoenix's Firebird attack in Gatchaman.) or can combine into the robot...

Jet Icarus

Height: 52.8 m
 Weight: 94 t
 Flight speed: Mach 1
 Weapons and/or attacks: Birdonic Sabre, Shot Puncher, Icarus Axe, Icarus Puncher, Icarus Magna, Jet Lancer, Jet Dagger, Wing Shield

Bird Garuda > Jet Garuda

A mecha brought to Earth by the Dimensions.

Height (robot mode): 60.8 m
 Length (plane mode): 54 m
 Weight: 105 t
 Flight speed (robot mode): Mach 6
 Flight speed (plane mode): Mach 20
 Weapons and/or attacks: Garuda Burst, Garuda Searcher, Garuda Claw, Garuda Vulcans, Dia Blizzard, Garuda Beam.

Jet Icarus + Jet Garuda > Great Icarus

Height: 77.5 m
 Weight: 199 t
 Flight speed: Mach 2.5
 Weapons and/or attacks: Bird Maser, Great Beam.

Icarus Haken + Bird Garuda > Hyper Haken

Length: 88.6 m
 Weight: 199 t
 Flight speed: Near light speed
 Weapons and/or attacks: Hyper Buster, Hyper G Attack.

Tetraboy > Tetrabuster cannon

Height: 40 m

Weight: 32 t

Flight speed: Mach 0.8

Weapons and/or attacks: Tetra Punch, Tetra Kick.

Skycamp

The Skyforce's high-tech base for the Jetmen, with hangars for their mecha.

Dimensional Battle Party Vyram

Conquered the Back Dimension and is now moving on to the Front Dimension--our dimension. Its four leaders compete to see who will defeat Jetman. The winner will become the leader of Vyram.

Emperor Tranza/Tran

Psychokinetic who later grows up to become Emperor Tranza. As Tranza, builds the giant robot Veronica, which drains life force from human captives.

Count Radiguet/Radigan/Raguem (pronounced Ra-dee-geh, Ra-dee-gahn, Ra-gehm; the name Radiguet is a reference to French writer Raymond Radiguet). Cold-hearted officer who will do anything to defeat an enemy. Absorbs Veronica's energy to power himself up. Defeats Tranzter to become Vyram's leader. When enraged, turns into the monstrous Radigan. In the end, became the giant monster Raguem, capable of merging with the ship Vylock. Armed with the Bloodygade sword. Murderer of Dan and Rie.

Maria, formerly Aoi Rie

Formerly Skyforcer W3. Armed with the Necrod, which has three modes: electromagnetic whip, sword, and beam gun. Killed by Radiguet.

Grey

Robot who is almost human, with a love of wine, music, and cigarettes. Armed with the Grey Cannon. Feels for Maria and uses his body as a shield to protect her. Dies in a duel with Gai.

Empress/Demon Beast Juuza

Previous ruler of Vyram. Radiguet was once her underling. Awakens after a long sleep and comes to Earth via a meteorite. Turns humans into pillars of crystal so she can feed off their suffering. Fires bullets from her fingers and shock waves and beams from her mouth. Gave birth to...

Demon Beast Semimaru (semi = cicada)

The ultimate beast of destruction--a bat-winged red insectoid.

Demon Gods Mu, Ramon, and Gorg

Natural enemies of humanity who awoke from a long sleep. Feed off humans transformed into fruits. Ramon and Gorg can merge into a single being.

Dimensional Beasts

Monsters of the week which result from the combination of Dimensional Bug parasites and Earth objects, listed below by episode.

1. Dimensional Bug Mother
2. Fighter Dimension
3. Faucet Dimension
4. Road Dimension
6. House Dimension
7. Mirror Dimension
8. Dia Dimension
9. Fashion Dimension
10. Noodle Dimension
11. Vending Machine Dimension
12. Bus Dimension
13. Camera Dimension
15. Voice Dimension
16. Spirit Dimension
19. Fortunetelling Dimension
20. Vacuum Cleaner Dimension
21. Trash Dimension

Bio Dimension Beasts

Created using Bio Dimension Bugs, these creatures combine Terran animal genes with Terran weapons. Cf. similar monsters in Kamen Rider V3 and Dynaman.

- 25. Light Armadillo
 - 26. Dimensional Mammoth
 - 28. Dryer Dimension
 - 29. Armor Snake
 - 34. Hell Medusa (not actually a BD Beast)
 - 36. Ant Bazooka
 - 37. Torpedo Piranha
 - 38. Hammer Chameleon
 - 39. Sniper Cat
 - 40. Meteorite BEM (not actually a BD Beast)
 - 43. Leech Drill
 - 46. Great King Tomato (not actually a BD Beast)
- (No BD Beasts in 44-51.)

Grinam Soldiers

Black-skinned warriors born from Grinam Seeds.

Vylock

Brain-shaped castle capable of traversing dimensions.

Chojin Sentai Jetman (1991)

Produced by: Toei

Episodes: 51

By Jeffrey Couto

Overview

Following on the heels of Toei's 1990 entry (Fiveman) in the long running Super Sentai series, Chojin Sentai Jetman set a benchmark that is yet to be matched, even by shows like Time Ranger and Grandseizar, both of which have received many accolades from fans across both sides of the Pacific.

Join us as we take a closer look at this timeless show and explore what it is that makes it such an endearing favorite of so many tokusatsu fans.

The Story

A new form of energy dubbed Birdnic has been discovered and scientists are now interested in harnessing this power and bonding it with human beings. For this purpose five test subjects have been selected to undergo the prototype bonding procedure, among them Ryu Tendo and Aoi Rie, a loving young couple.

As the procedure begins on the first subject (Ryu) aboard an orbiting space station the Vyram suddenly appear and begin attacking the laboratory where the experiment is being carried out. This results in the complete destruction of the station, but not before Ryu and Ayachokan escape and the machine that held the Birdnic energy releases 4 waves of power, which fall to Earth and strike four random people throughout Japan.

Back on Earth and after realizing that he lost the love of his life, Ryu begins the search for the other four people who were struck by the Birdnic energy, with the goal of convincing them to come together as the only human group powerful enough to protect the Earth from the invading aliens, Chojin Sentai Jetman.

And so a new taskforce of complete strangers from diverse backgrounds and walks of life band together to form a new fighting force and Earth's last line of defense against the evil invaders.

The Characters

What is it about Jetman that made it such a fan favorite? I tend to think that it was the way in which it handled the themes of friendship, love and family, three subjects to which we can all easily identify with. More so than the other entries in the series, Jetman explored these subjects to their fullest potential, perhaps yielding the truest surrogate family in all of Sentai.

Super Sentai has generally dealt with these themes, but this series was the first to truly make them the heart of the show and the driving force behind most of its key storylines. From lost loves, to uneasy friendships/alliances, and betrayal, Jetman had it all.

As far as the main story goes, it relied on the true, tried and tested alien invasion plot, which by itself doesn't make Jetman much different than the other shows in the series. What made this one stand out were its unusually strong subplots, which supported the main storyline, such as the one centered around Ryu and Rie's relationship, which ran the course of the series from the first episode, when she is taken from him and turned into the evil Maria, all the way into onto the dramatic end of the program, when Ryu finally recovers her only to lose her again.

Other highlights included Ryu and Gai's rivalry on the battle field and over love interest Kaori, the Vyram's own power struggle between Radiege and Toranza, and the introduction of other secondary characters and support mecha such as the Neo Jetman, Jet Garuda and TetraBoy; all of which helped set the stage for many serious and sometimes rather dramatic episodes.

The story is as good as Super Sentai stories have ever been and then some, but how about, the action scenes, the giant mecha battles, and the evil monsters of the week? In these areas while not surpassing some of the creativity exhibited by Toei's staff over the past decades Jetman managed to hold its own with many nicely executed battle scenes that rely heavily on wirework (to make the Jetman fly in certain scenes), great special effects and always impressive pyrotechnics.

Rounding off this perfect package was some of the best music ever composed for a Super Sentai series, from the hopeful and very sticky opening theme, to the exciting and energy packed battle BGM, Jetman's soundtrack was second to none. Some of the in-show songs were also some of the best songs to hit any tokusatsu series, featuring such memorable ones as the Jet Garuda and Jet Condor's theme songs. Needless to say I recommend that everyone hunt down the CD's (Anime Jungle usually has one or two used copies in stock from the various CD compilations)

Conclusion

I've called this the greatest Super Sentai show ever made (even though Carranger is my personal favorite) and I will stand by that opinion until something better comes along...if it does.

While some shows have come and gone that were brilliant in concept and character development none of them handled the human element of their stories in the way Jetman did. The mecha, the battles, the Vyram invasion they were all secondary to the characters and the exploration of their humanity.

To me Jetman represents the pinnacle of what tokusatsu can be. All fans of these shows should make it a point to collect this series and see why so many of us hold it in such high regard.

Trivia

Jetman is a homage to the classic 1970's Anime franchise Gatchaman, which is said to have been one of the sources of inspiration for Super Sentai. The Gatchaman homages include the bird-themed costumes, jet vehicles, and the character of Gai/Black Condor, who was a homage to Joe the Condor/G-2 of the Gatchaman team. Both Gai and Joe had Condor themed costumes, acted tough and rebellious, and both died at the end of their respective series (however, Joe returned as a Cyborg in Gatchaman II, while Gai was kept dead for the seemingly non-canon Jetman manga epilogue, in which he was replaced by Jeff Kensaki/Green Eagle). These homages become even more noticeable in the non-canon epilogue manga, where the Jetman helmets resemble the open-faced helmets of Gatchaman.

Choujin Sentai Jetman in the Philippines Was Tagalized Version Aired On ABC 5

Everynight After the Drama Series.

Jetman's manga epilogue was quite inconsistent due to the fact, in the finale episode of the live-action series, all the mecha were beyond repair and there is no hint of them being repaired or that the Neo Jetman team already gave up their birdonic waves to the Jetman team.

Jetman was supposed to be the first Power Rangers, American producer Haim Saban had pitched this show for Americanization before turning 1992's Kyouryuu Sentai Zyuranger into Mighty Morphin' Power Rangers.

Gai's death has a certain glitch where Gai doesn't bleed when he's dying even if it looked like he was stabbed. Some fans assumed he was just at peace with himself while others debated he died.

Kotaro Tanaka (Ryuu) and Rika Kishida (Kaori) got married in real life after Jetman ended. They live in London and they have two children.

Sentai alumni Kanako Maeda (Momoko/Pink Mask in Hikari Sentai Maskman), Yasuhiro Ishiwata (Bun/Blue Flash in Choushinsei Flashman), Masashi Ishibashi (Commander Hedder I in Battle Fever J, General Kar in Kagaku Sentai Dynaman, and Doctor Rehda in Kousoku Sentai Turboranger), Mayumi Yoshida (Lou/Pink Flash in Flashman), Daisuke Ban (Makoto Jin/Battle Cossack II in Battle Fever), Haruki Hamada (Hiryuu Tsurugi/Change Dragon in Dengeki Sentai Changeman), Miyuki Nagato (Ulk in Flashman) and Kazuhiko Nishimura (Jou Ohara / Yellow Lion in Choujuu Sentai Liveman) all had guest roles.

The series had a short-lived evil queen which brought up some debate.

Guest stars Hideki Fujiwara and Yuuta Mochizuki went on to play Dan/TriceraRanger and Geki/TyrannoRanger, respectively, two of the main heroes in the next Sentai series, Kyoryuu Sentai Zyuranger.

The characters Ralf Jones and Clark Steel from the King Of Fighters series of games have a pre-fight intro with each other where they do the same poses that the Jetmen did in the show.

It is the first Tokusatsu series with a marriage involving members of a team.

The cockpit for the Jet Ikaros was later used for the cockpit for the DaiZyuJin in Kyoryuu Sentai Zyuranger.

A video game adaptation of the series was released by Angel Studios for the Nintendo Famicom game console in Japan.

Gai's crotch-holding overhead toss would be later used by Shun Namiki/Mega Blue in Denji Sentai Megaranger.

It's interesting to have it that the Meteorite BEM's very own core, the meteorite seems to be reminiscent to that of Chodenshi Bioman's episode 10 where Yellow 4 dies, the scene of a planet exploding. When the monster fired at them, their birdonic waves/energy was neutralized though they aren't killed. Could it be...?

Also, the way the five are chosen are quite parallel to Bioman- they are detected by a radar that could read their energy readings, their birdonic waves/bio energy levels which they form the Jetman. Also the energy used on them seems to be the same that of the Biomen, they might have been descendants of the original five or that of the others scattered with bio particles.

As a homage to Gatchaman, however it is ironic that the swallow member is a girl instead of a boy. It is the second sentai to have a female blue ranger after Liveman.

Jetman is the first Sentai series to have the individual mecha form a large jet, which was copied into Timeranger. (The five TimeJets forming TimeJet Gamma) Ikaros Haken's finishing attack where it turns into a flaming firebird is another element that homages Gatchaman.

Though fans often question how Gai appears in Super Sentai World, it happens because he died on the third anniversary of the fall of Vyram, so the events in Super Sentai World happen before that day or perhaps, Super Sentai World is not canon but created just for enjoyment.

This is the only sentai wherein the replacement warrior has his own color (green) and never wears the color used by his slain predecessor (black) opposite other sentai wherein the replacement warrior also wears the same color worn by his/her slain predecessor (though this only occurs on the finale and the manga epilogue).

This is also the second sentai that the opening theme begins with the chorus (other sentai that begins the opening song with the chorus are zyuranger and dynaman usually a sentai opening begins with the first part and ends with the chorus)

WR. Toshiaki Inoue, Kenichi Araki, Hiroyuki Kawaski, Toshihisa Arakawa, Asami Watanabe, Kunio Funjii, Naoki Yawatri, Takehito Masuda.

DIR. Keita Amemiya, Shohei Tojo, Kiyoshi Arai, Masao Minowa, Taro Sakamoto.

CHO REI SHI SENTAI BIOMAN

AKA: SUPER ELECTRON BIOMAN

Dr. Kageyama transformed himself into a Mecha Human, renamed himself Doctor Man, and leading the New Empire Gear from his base of Neograd at the South Pole, plans to rule the world through his Mechahumans. The Biorobo awakes from five centuries of sleep to find the five descendants of humans who had been showered with Bioparticles 500 years ago. Under the direction of Peebo, who had accompanied the Biorobo to Earth, the five don Biosuits to become the Biomen. Early on, Doctor Man invents the Biokiller Gun to kill Yellow Four.

A new Yellow Four join the team. Man's supercomputer Brain and his android Prince turns out to have quite human hearts which bring about their downfall. Prince is based on Man's son Shuuichi, who appears before the Biomen. The Big Three learn of Shuuichi's existence, realize that Man is a mere human, and revolt. They fail, and Doctor Man brainwashes and modifies them. The Biohunter Silva comes from space to hunt them down.

The Biomen meet a mysterious scientist intending to build a conscience circuit (shades of Kikaider!), Dr. Shibata, who turns out to be both Red's father and a friend of Man. In the end, the Biomen defeat Silva and his robot Balzion and enter the fortress Neograd itself.

Bioman was something of a departure from the traditional Super Sentai layout, since it not only had two female team members but also jettisoned the word "Sentai" from its title. In other respects, however, it was still born from the same cookie-cutter formula first perfected in GORANGER, with a five member team battling garish monsters of the week, with the aid of their toy tie-in super vehicles - in this case, Bio Jet's One and Two, which combine to form the giant Bio Robo. The presence of two female members also led to a broadening of the usual action figure merchandizing into a new girl friendly area - Bioman fans could also buy dressable dolls of Yellow Four and Pink Five. In addition to Doctor Man's machine men, the team had to fight the big three, a trio of minions named Mason, Farrah and Monster, as well as Silva, a shiny robot hunter specially designed to hunt down anything containing bio-particles. "Based on a idea by Sakuro Yade". Bioman was preceded in the Super Sentai series by DYNAMAN and followed by CHANGEMAN. Music by Tatsumi Yano.

Sixth Super Sentai. Considered by some to be the best. Unusual in its lack of human-sized monsters of the week. "Choudensi Bioman" introduced the concept of having 2 female members.

Characters and mecha

Bioman

Red One (Gou Shirou)

Former space shuttle pilot. Weapons and/or attacks: Fire Sword, Super Electron Radar, Spark Sword, Diving Attack.

Green Two (Takasugi Shingo)

Former car racer. Team strongman. Weapons and/or attacks: Hurricane Sword, Super Electron Scope, Break (Dance) Action, Super Jump, Green Boomerang.

Blue Three (Nanbara Ryuuta)

Water sports ace. Weapons and/or attacks: Electric Sword, Super Electron Ear, Super Sky Diving.

Yellow Four (Koizumi Mika; 1-10)

Former photographer. Weapons and/or attacks: Thunder Sword, Super Electron Holography, Action Shooting

Yellow Four (Yabuki Jun; 11-51)

Former Olympic archer. Weapons and/or attacks unique to her: Bioarrow.

Pink Five (Katsuragi Hikaru)

Former flutist. Weapons and/or attacks: Laser Sword, Spin Chops, Pink Barrier.

Team attacks include the Bioelectron, Super Electron, Bio Big Arrow, Bioelectro Beam, Biorevolver, Pentabeams, Circus Loops, Miracle Bombers, Miracle Laser, and Bio Super Electron. All Biomen are armed with Bioswords which have three modes: sword, short sword, and gun.

Peebo

Robot advisor; cf. MMPR's Alpha 5.

Biomach 1, 2

Motorcycles for Red and Yellow.

Bioturbo

Car for Green, Blue, and Pink.

Biodragon

Flying fortress which opens up to be a runway for...

Biojet 1 (Red, Pink) + 2 (the rest) > Biorobo

Weapons and/or attacks: Super Maser sword (Concentration, Comet Cutter, Break Attack, Cross Cut, Great Attack, Chainsaw Cutter, Straight Flash, Reverse Cross Cut, Pinball Shooting, Dashing Beam, Shadow Cutter, Bio Particle Cut, Super Flash).

The New Empire Gear

A mechanical empire based at the Neograd fortress at the South Pole (cf. Black Magma) which plots world conquest.

Doctor Man

Formerly scientist Kageyama Hideo, now a Mecha Human and boss of Gear.

Prince

An android modelled after Shuuichi, Dr. Man's son

The Big Three:

Mason the leader

Farrah the woman

Monster the strongman

The Five Beastnoids (recurring monsters of the week):

Psygorn the psychic

Messerbeast the flyer

Aquaiger the underwater warrior

Metzler the spy

Beastking, Monster's underling

Metzler and Aquaiger die in mid-series while the others are powered up.

Farrahcat, Farrah's bodyguard

Mecha Gigans and Neo Mecha Gigans

Giant robots of the week.

Mechaclones

Grunts in black with silver heads and red eyes.

Silva

Hakaider/Dark Knight-like Biohunter; a robot from Bio Star programmed to kill anything with Bioparticles, like the Biomen, with his Biobuster gun.

Balzion

Silva's giant robot.

Bioman is the first Sentai to have two females and one to be replaced by another female member.

A character in this series also has the name of the professor who gave the five Megarangers and later MegaSilver their powers. The name being Professor Shibata.

There are two Yellow Fours, First one is Mika Koizumi, who died in episode 10 (Goodbye, Yellow). Second one is Jun Yabuki, she had a debut of episode 11 (Enter New Soldier Jun) until the end. The reason for the change is that Mika Koizumi's actress, Yuki Yajima, left the Japan Action Club (the action star theater group founded by Japanese action icon Sonny Chiba and contracted for the Super Sentai series at that time). In fact, in that particular episode (episode 10), there was no transformation sequence for Yellow Four from her human form. She was Yellow Four all throughout the episode. The reason being, JAC was working the year before and several weeks into this installment with low pay but then budget cuts came after episode 8 and they asked Yuki to work without pay and she had enough and quit. Rumors through 2006 stated that she discovered she was pregnant which is why she was in-suit. This could still be true as there's an upcoming actor in Japan with the same last name and a birth year/time of Late Fall 1984.

In the French version of the series, the characters into from Japanese to French names, Jacky Gor (Shirou), Fred (Shingo), Bob (Ryuta), June (Jun) & Sikou (Hikaru).

Bioman is unique from other sentai for not having monsters that enlarged when defeated.

The series also has a Philippine version of its Japanese names to American English, Kenny (Shirou), Sammy (Shingo), Frankie (Ryuta), Casey (Mika), June (Jun) & Kimberly (Hikaru).

Because of its popularity, two Philippine movies were made based on this sentai series.

One is a parody entitled Kabayo Kids (although only three sentai members) in 1990. Starring the comic troika of Tito Sotto, Vic Sotto and Joey de Leon, with Richie De Horsie. Story: Pamboy (Tito) work as kutsero (coachman), Nanding (Vic) work as jockey, and Pando (Joey) work as panday (blacksmith) respectively, all in line with horses (kabayo). They stumble into a crime committed by a big syndicate headed by Red Devil. The three were almost killed but they managed to seek refuge into Don Horacio's (Richie) mansion. Horacio used to be a handsome man but was disfigured by some hoodlums who wanted to use his business in their illegal operations, something he refused to oblige. Horacio gave the three superpowers to fight crime. Pamboy transforms and calls himself "Orange Juice", Nanding as "Green Mango" and Pando as "Yellow Banana". All have the costume-like in Bioman and with motorcycles.

The other one is entitled Bio Kids in 1991. Story: Five kids went to a haunted house and were given superpowers by an old genius scientist living there to fight Exxor and his sinister lackeys before they destroy the world's peace.

Farrah at's actress, Yukari Oshima, went on to become a popular Hong Kong action star and was popularly known in the Philippines as Cynthia Luster. She is currently retired from acting and is the current action director of the Cutey Honey live-action series.

The fanmade sentai team Jushi Sentai France Five has a theme that is heavily influenced by Bioman's opening theme.

Bio Hunter Silver is based off the villain Hakaider from the Android Kikaider television show.

Hikaru Kurosaki (of Juspion fame) guest starred in episodes 35 & 36. This is where Kurosaki met Yuko Asuka and they later married (she now goes by the name Yuko Kurosaki). Both are currently retired from acting.

CHO RIKI SENTAI OHRANGER

AKA: OHRANGER

AKA: SUPER-POWER BATTLE TEAM OHRANGER

AKA: SUPERPOWER TASK FORCE OHRANGER

6,600 million years ago, Ancient Mankind (probably not the same race as in Zyuranger) created the rebel robot Bacchus Wrath, who was banished off Earth by Riki/King Ranger. In 1999, the machines of Baranoia now intend to wipe out humanity and bring about machine rule on Earth. Chief Counsellor Miura brought back to life the energies that had been given birth by the lost super civilization on the supercontinent of Pangaea 600 millions years ago. Putting together the pieces of a stone plane discovered three years ago, the secrets of 'superpower' became known.

The Ohranger base was built in Japan's Southern Alps, where remnants of the lost super civilization were found. Miura built a pyramid that generated Tetrahedron Power--the power needed to give the five UA officers the ability to change into the Ohrangers. The legendary Riki/King Ranger reappears in modern times to aid the team.

In 1999, when the evil Machine Empire arrives to enslave the people of the planet Earth, the United Armies (UA) of the world use the relics of an ancient, long-forgotten science to create the six member ohranger team of superpowered warriors. Their leader Goro (Shishido) is a captain of the UA and a master of Japanese martial arts who transforms into Oh Red. Shohei (Masaoka) is a lieutenant in the UA and Oh Green on the Ohranger team. He likes boxing and ramen noodles. Soft-spoken Yuji (Aida), is also a lieutenant, is Oh Blue on the team and a master of fencing. The team has two female members: Juri (Aso) is Oh Yellow, a strong willed lieutenant in UA who is also an expert in martial arts; Momo (Tamao) is Oh Pink, a motherly girl next door who is also a lieutenant in UA and an expert in aikido and Chinese Kung Fu. They are later joined by young boy Riki (Yamaguchi) who transforms into the King Ranger, the legendary warrior who fought against the Machine Empire in the distant past.

To aid them in their fight, the Ohranger team has a series of Egyptian-themed animal robots, each of which transforms into a humanoid version. These in turn can combine to make the Ohranger Robo, while five other robots combine to make the Ohblocker robot. Other transforming weapons include Tackle Boy and Gun Machine, while the entire Ohranger vehicle is stored in the Pyramid Carrier Robot, which itself can transform into the King Pyramider robot.

Their enemies in the Machine Empire are led by Emperor Baxhund from Planet Paranoia, who sends his robot minions to seize control of the world, either by monsters of the week or with the aid of his cannon fodder Baro minions.

An important date for the Super Sentai series, marking as it did the 20th Anniversary of the first Super Sentai series Goranger, Ohranger seemed to derive much of its look and unifying theme from the previous years Hollywood movie Stargate. It was soon picked up for American distribution as the next installment in the MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS series, under the title POWER RANGERS ZEO.

Based as usual on an idea by Saburo Yade, with music from prolific anime composer Seiji Yokoyama. Ohranger was followed in the Super Sentai series chronology by CARRANGER, which was released in the U.S. as POWER RANGERS TURBO.

Seventeenth Super Sentai. Also touted as a 20th Anniversary Sentai Series (counting somewhat differently). This show is also the basis for the American SF show POWER RANGERS ZEO. Series was produced by Jun Kuji, Susumu Yoshikawa, Takeyuki Suzuki and Naruki Takadera.

Main heroes: Chouriki Sentai Oorenjaa (Super-Power Task Force Ohranger)

Ooredoo (Ohred) aka Hoshino Gorou

Ooguriin (Ohgreen) aka Yokkaichi Shouhei

Ooburuu (Ohblue) aka Mita Yuuji

Ooieroo (Ohyellow) aka Nijou Juri

Oopinku (Ohpink) aka Maruo Momo

Kingu Renjaa (King Ranger) aka Riki - young warrior placed in suspended animation 6 million years ago by an ancient Earth civilization; becomes the Ohrangers' 6th member; first appears in episode #26

Ganmajin - legendary wish-giver who normally appears as a small stone head with a key but comes out when someone turns the key and says "Ganma ganma dondoko ganma"; becomes an ally of the Ohrangers; first appears in episode #37

Main villains: Mashin Teikoku Baranoia (Machine Empire Baranoia)

Bakkasufundo (Bacchus-rage) - emperor of Baranoia who gets killed by the Ohrangers in episode #34

Hisuteria (Hysteria) - wife of Bacchus-rage; blows herself up in episode #48

Burudonto (Buldont) - son of Hysteria and Bacchus-rage who becomes Kaiser Buldont in episode #40

Acha & Kocha (Acha & Kocha) - servant-types who follow whoever is in command at the time; Kocha fires energy into the mashinjuu to cause them to grow to giant size.

Bonbaa za Gureeto (Bomber the Great) - takes over after Bacchus-rage is killed and sends Buldont off into space on a missile in episode #35; is rebuilt and controlled by Kaiser Buldont to destroy the sun, but dies when Ganmajin throws him off into space and he blows up in episode #41

Kaizaa Burudonto (Kaiser Buldont) - rebuilt form of Buldont; takes control of Bomber the Great in episode #41; is killed in episode #48

Maruchiiwa Hime (Multiwa Princess) - Hysteria's niece who first appears in episode #40; gets married to Kaiser Buldont in episode #41; it is revealed that they have a son in episode #47; Multiwa is killed in episode #48 along with Kaiser Buldont

Baaro Hei (Barlo Soldiers) - robotic soldiers

Mashinjuu (Machine Beasts) - robotic monsters whose names are all (except in the movie) "Bara-"something, in homage to the Baranoia Empire.

"Chouriki Sentai Oh Ranger" (well-known in other nations of the world as "POWER RANGERS ZEO") celebrated the 20th Anniversary of the SUPER SENTAI series. The Opening Theme is my favorite, tied with Kakuranger's Opening Theme.

Characters and mecha

UAOH (International Air Force Ohrangers)

With their Power Braces, the Ohrangers don their OH Suits and via 'Superpower,' the collected energies of Earth, they can boost their abilities by 30 to 40 times.

Ohred (Hoshino Gorou; hoshi = star, go = five)
Ace pilot and team leader. Uses karate.
Pilots Skyphoenix, Giant Roller, Red Puncher, and Red Blocker star robot.
Weapon: Star Riser sword
Attacks: Super Power Riser

Ohgreen (Yotsukaichi Shouhei; yotsu = four)
Second in command. Boxer.
Pilots Grantaurus and Green Blocker square robot.
Weapon: Square Crushers
Attacks: Mirage Knuckles, Lightning Light Super Power Crusher.

Ohblue (Mita Yuuji; mi = three)
Swift. Uses jumps and midair fighting tactics.
Pilots Dash Leon and Blue Blocker triangle robot.
Weapon: Delta Tonfas
Attacks: Rolling Jump, Super Power Slide Attack.

Ohyellow (Nijou Juri; ni = two)
Uses martial arts researched in America.
Pilots Dogu Lander (a rolling doguu figure; a doguu is a type of ancient Japanese earthen figure that some claim looks like an 'ancient astronaut'--von Daeniken fans, take note!) and Yellow Blocker two-bar robot.
Weapon: Twin Baton nunchakus
Attacks: Big Wheel Throw (cf. Kikaider).

Ohpink (Maruo Momo; maru = circle)
Uses Chinese boxing
Pilots Moa Loader (a rolling Easter Island head) and Pink Blocker circle robot.
Weapon: Circle Defender shield Attacks: Vacuum Throw, Lightning Flash Miracle Qigong Shots.. (Each has a name that describes their symbols.)

Kingranger (Riki)
The legendary child (?) hero who chased Bacchus Wrath off Earth 600 millions years ago. Protector of Dorin, a mystery creature in the shape of a girl whose pet is the obviously fake green lizard Paku. His mask symbol is the kanji for 'king' (ou).
Pilots King Pyramidder.
Weapon: King Stick, with which he performs the King Victory Flash technique

Chief Counsellor Miura

Team commander, played by none other than Miyauchi Hiroshi, a.k.a. V3, Blue Ranger, Zbat, Big One, and Masaki of WINSPECTOR/SOLBRAIN!

Shared weapons: Battle Sticks/King Blasters/King Smashers. The King Smasher combined with the individual weapons forms the Big Bang Buster energy cannon. Thunderwing fighter planes and Jetter Machine motorcycles.

Shared attacks: Battle Stick Hurricane, Ranger Item Attack.

The first set of five robots combine into the Ohrangerrobo, equipped with five heads (Wing, Horn, Graviton, Vulcan, and Cannon). The Wing Head is the standard head. Each of the other heads has a special weapon (see below).

Height: 78.5 m

Skyphoenix

Length: 30.4 m

Wingspan: 54.6 m

Weight: 1000 t

Armament: Phoenix Beam x 2

Grantaurus

Length: 30 m

Height: 21 m

Weight: 1500 t

Armament: Taurus Beam

Dash Leon

Length: 29 m

Height: 24 m

Weight: 1800 t

Armament: Leon Shot x 2

Dogu Lander

Length: 31.5 m

Height: 42.3 m

Weight: 2100 t

Armament: Dogu Vulcan x 2, Dogu Bazooka x 2, Dogu Searcher

Moa Loader

Length: 31.5 m

Height: 47.7 m

Weight: 2100 t

Armament: Moa Cannon, Moa Launcher missile x 5

The boxing robot Red Puncher combines with the Ohrangerrobo to form the Buster Ohrangerrobo. The Red Puncher went wild two years ago, killing its pilot.

Height (RP): 70 m

Weight (RP): 6000 t

Weapons and/or attacks (RP): Magna Puncher, Puncher Gatling.

Height (BO): 80 m

Weight (BO): 14500 t

Weapons and/or attacks (BO): Big Cannon Burst.

The second set of five robots combines into the Ohblocker. Weapons and/or attacks (united): Blocken Fire (when five are apart), Twin Blocken Swords, Twin Blocken Crash.

Height: 80 m

Weight: 8000 t

Red Blocker

Height: 40 m

Weight: 2000 t

Weapons and/or attacks: Star Head Attack, Red Star Fire.

Green Blocker

Height: 40 m

Weight: 2000 t

Weapons and/or attacks: Green Body Tackle, Green Enclose Net.

Blue Blocker

Height: 35 m

Weight: 1000 t

Weapons and/or attacks: Blue Drop Kick, Blue Freezing Storm.

Yellow Blocker

Height: 35 m

Weight: 1000 t

Weapons and/or attacks: Yellow Spinning Kick, Yellow Lightning Flash.

Pink Blocker

Height: 35 m

Weight: 2000 t

Weapons and/or attacks: Pink Skyline Chopper, Pink Impact Wave.

King Pyramider

Has three 'formations': Pyramid, Carrier, and Battle (humanoid). The latter mode contains the Red Puncher and the Ohrangerrobo and can fire a Super Legend Beam from its belly.

Height (Pyramid): 50 m

Height (Battle Formation): 102 m

Width (Pyramid): 75 m

Weight: Immeasurable

Speed (Battle Formation): 65 km/h

Speed (Carrier Formation): 150 km/h

Tackleboy

A black robot that transforms into a tire that the Ohblocker flings at giant Machine Beasts--this move is called the 'Dynamite Tackle'.

Height: 34 m

Width: 28.5 m

Weight: 2500 t

Gunmazin (Ganmajin; Gun Demon God)

Able to transform from a 50 cm sculpture of a head into a 90 m tall robot when opened with a key. Also able to assume human size. The 'Ninjaman' of Ohranger. Armed with the Majin Sabre, with which he employs the moves of the Majin One Sword Style.

Height: 50 cm~90 m (variable)

Weight: ?~20000 t (variable)

Machine Empire BaranoiaEmperor Bacchus Wrath (Fundo)

Original ruler of Baranoia; later defeated by the Ohblocker.

Empress Hysteria

Hysterical wife of Bacchus Wrath.

Prince Brudont

Child strategist. Current ruler of Baranoia.

Servants Acha and Kocha

Together, they enlarge the Machine Beasts. Acha swings Kocha around, flinging him at the fallen Machine Beast. Kocha injects the Machine Beast with enough energy to revive and enlarge.

Keris

Female, human-looking field commander who rules over Machine Beasts with her whip. Can transform into a giant monster with huge breasts and thighs.

Bomber the Great

A walking bomb who once tried to take over Baranoia and failed. Now he's back. Claimed the Imperial throne for a while before being overthrown himself. Could transform into a missile.

Princess Maruchiwa

Rules Baranoia alongside Brudont.

Barlo Soldiers

Grey-skinned grunts with golden heads who pilot Takompas fighter plane/walking tanks (tako = octopus).

Machine Beasts

(Episode numbers are all by memory and hence open to question--I could just check my tapes, but I don't have the time. Corrections and additions welcomed. Power Ranger Zeo equivalents are, of course, unknown until fall 1996.)

Saban tried to use footage from OhRanger to boost the lagging ratings of his Power Rangers. (It worked for about 2 weeks, and then the show went right back down the toilet.) It may take some time to get used to the rather overdone "shapes" gimmick of OhRanger, with circles and stars and squares all over everything, but once you do, you have a pretty good show.

Great music, slightly more up to date special effects (though they still can't seem to get a simple blue-screen shot to look even remotely real), OhRanger had some great monster designs, even if all the good stuff was somewhat overwhelmed by some of the less than great Robo and costume designs.

OhRanger maintained a fairly straight, serious mood throughout the series, although it was occasionally interrupted by a ridiculous episode or two. Most of OhRanger's lighter moments are fun, but a lot of them also seem out of place compared to the show's more serious tone.

To OhRanger's credit, it never wasted any opportunity to exhibit its female stars. Not even taking into account the clothing-to-metallic-skin ratio in the design of Multiwa Princess, virtually no chance was given up for Momo & Juri (OhPink & OhYellow) to be in bikinis, leotards, or any other revealing outfits they could be put in.

To accompany this, OhRanger tended to lay on the violence somewhat thickly. Most of the main villain's deaths were fairly graphic (involving getting split vertically down the center, having your hands severed off, etc...). All in all, OhRanger is far from perfect, but it is not anywhere near as horrible as it is often credited as being.

Trivia

OHRanger was the first series to have a "Versus" movie since "Goranger VS J.A.K.Q". The versus movie "OHRanger VS Kakuranger" began the annual tradition of direct-to-video Sentai team-up movies. The movie however had a lot of non-canon elements as to the fact, Bacchus Wrath should have died at that period judging through the mecha that were used.

At least one part of each of the main five OHRanger's names refers to their design.

OHRed/Hoshino Gorou: Go, meaning five; Star with five points. Also, hoshi means star.

OHGreen/Yotsukaichi Shouhei: Yotsu, meaning four; Square

OHBlue/Mita Yuuji: Mi, meaning Three; Triangle

OHYellow/Nijou Juuri: Ni, meaning two; Two bars

OHPink/Maru Momo: Maru, meaning Zero or circle. Also, Momo means pink.

The visor of KingRanger's helmet is the kanji of "Oh".

The OHRangers' shout of "OHRE" (which is spoken after the team performs their role-call, when they use the Ohre Bazooka (OHRE Bazooka, OH-RE!), when OHRanger Robo is completed ["OHRanger Robo, OH-RE!"], is in the Opening Theme song ("OHRE! OHRanger") and the insert song "Niji-Iro Crystal Sky") could also be Spanish term "olé".

OHRanger was a sentai that lacked field commanders, which was a deviation from tradition. It was also the first one to kill the main villain in the mid-series replacing it with another main villain who stays until the finale.

CHO SHIN SEI SENTI FLASHMAN

AKA: SUPERNOVA FLASHMAN

AKA: SUPERNOVA WARRIORS FLASHMAN

Five human children are saved from the alien hunters by the Flash race. Returned to Earth as teenagers, they are charged with protecting their homeworld from the invading alien Mes Empire. Evil ruler La Deus (Ishizuka) and right-hand man Professor Le Kefren (Shimizu) send a weekly monster to challenge the strength of the Flashman team, aided by a cannon fodder army of Beast Warriors.

The good guys are led by trainee scientist Jin (Tarumi) who transforms into Red Flash and wields the Prism sword. Dai (Uemura) is Green Flash, whose chief attack is a super-strength punch. Bun (Ishiwatari) is Blue Flash who fights with Prism Ball and Star Dust. Sara (Nakamura) is Yellow Flash who fights with her Prism Baton. Ru (Yoshida) is Pink Flash, whose special item is her gravity-defying Prism Boots. The flashman team boasts a personal motorcycle each, as well as an array of extra vehicles including Jet Delta, Tank Command, and the shuttle Star Condor.

Unlike previous Super Sentai shows, Flashman really pushed the giant robot connection, starting with the combination robot Flash King. However, perhaps inspired by Optimus Prime from the previous years Transformers, the writers introduced a new robot in episode 17. This comprised a 12-wheeler truck-trailer combination - the trailer transforming into the Flash Titan robot, while the rig transformed separately into Titan Boy.

For some reason, through the original idea is still the responsibility of the Super Sentai regular "Saburo Yade", the flashman staff boasts an uncommonly large number of scenarists from the anime world, as well as music from composer Kohei Tanaka (Gunbuster). Flashman was preceded in the super sentai chronology by CHANGEMAN and followed by MASKMAN.

"Chousinsei Flashman" introduced the concept of having more than one mecha. My vote for one of the best sentai ever. Excellent monster designs and overall continuing storyline.

Characters and mecha

The Flashmen

Red Flash (Jin)

Learned science on Flash Star, main planet of the Flash solar system, inhabited by people vaguely resembling Ultramen. Weapons and/or attacks: Prism Holy Sword, Fire Thunder.

Green Flash (Dai)

Gained great strength on rocky Green Star. Weapons and/or attacks: Prism Kaiser gloves.

Blue Flash (Bun)

Gained speed and agility on the deserts of Blue Star. Youngest of the five. Weapons and/or attacks: Prism Ball, Star Darts.

Yellow Flash (Sara)

Developed a sharp mind on the cold planet Yellow Star. Actually the kidnapped daughter of Dr. Tokimura. Weapons and/or attacks: Prism Batons, Mach Blizzard.

Pink Flash (Lou)

Developed great jumping abilities on the high gravity planet Pink Star. Weapons and/or attacks: Prism Boots, Jet Kick Shared weapons: Prism Shooters with two modes: gun or sword + shield.

Team attacks: Rolling Vulcan (five guns in one), Combination Super Spear, Combination Cross Boomerang.

Mag

The team's robot assistant. Cf. Alpha 5.

Flashhawks

The team's five motorcycles.

Tank Command (Red) + Jet Delta (Green, Yellow) + Jet Seeker (Blue, Pink) > Flashking Weapons and/or attacks: Cosmo Sword (Super Cosmo Flash), King Missiles, King Knuckles.

Titanboy (truck/robot) + Flash Titan (trailer) > Great Titan (1st 2nd robot in sentai). Weapons and/or attacks: Radial Cutters, Boy Cannons (both Titanboy only), Titan Nova.

Star Condor

Plane-like flying fortress.

Round Base

Boxlike flying fortress capable of space travel. Brought the Flashmen to Earth.

Reconstructive Experiment Empire Mess

('Mesu' is Japanese for 'scalpel,' through Dutch?). The Empire takes over planets, using their lifeforms as fodder for its experiments, whose goal is the transformation of Great Emperor Lar Deus into the strongest being in the universe.

Great Emperor Lar Deus

Leader of Mess. Ends up as the monster Za Deusoola.

Great Doctor Lee Keflen

Geneticist. Creator of the Beast Warriors. Originally from Earth.

Ley Wanda/Wandarla

Winged zebra-like field commander who can transform into the utterly bestial Wandarla.

Ley Nefel/Nefelura

Catlike field commander who can transform into utterly bestial Nefelura.

Ley Garus (1-28)

White-furred, blue-skinned brute field commander.

Ulk and Kilt

Nefelura's feline assistants.

Sir Cowler (15-48)

Boss of the Alien Hunters, armed with a whip. Kidnapped the five Earth babies who would grow up to be the Flashmen twenty years ago.

Bo Gardan (43-48)

Second in command of the Alien Hunters.

The Alien Hunters (3; 15-)

Baura, Hag, Kerao, Hou, and one unnamed member.

Kraagen

Monster-enlarging jellyfish.

Beast Warriors and Deus Beast Warriors

Monsters of the week. Hybrids of Earth and alien genes. Deus Beast Warriors have the genes of Lar Deus himself.

Zorors

Green-eyed, red-skinned insectoid grunts.

Reconstructive Experiment Base Labor
Flying saucer headquarters of the Empire.

Trivia

Kihachiro Uemura and Mayumi Yoshida were members of the Japan Action Club.

Yutaka Hirose was in final talks to play Jin/Red Flash when he was instead cast as the villain Ley Wanda. Hirose made such an impact in this series and went on to become a tokusatsu villain fixture.

Chief writer Hirohisa Soda said the inspiration for the backstory of the Flashman came from the headline making topic at the time of Japanese children orphaned and left behind in China. Producer Takeyuki Suzuki worked with Soda on the idea to deliver children the message of the sorrow of boys and girls who had to live being separated from their homeland and families.

Flash King is the first robot used the word King (in English) in this name. The other two to use King in their name are Gao King from Hyakujuu Sentai GaoRanger and Magi King from Mahou Sentai Magiranger.

"Mess" could also be "Mes", the Dutch word for "scalpel".

CHO ZYUU SENTAI LIVEMAN

AKA: CHOJU SENTAI LIVEMAN

AKA: SUPER BEAST BATTLE TEAM LIVEMAN

AKA: CHOJU SENTAI RAIBUMAN

AKA: SUPER BEAST TASK FORCE LIVEMAN

The evil Bolt Cyber Army attacks and destroys the scientific Academy, leaving only three survivors. Joining with some new recruits, they form the Liveman team to save the Earth. Their leader is Yuusuke (Shima) the Red Falcon who fights with Falcon Power and his Falcon Sword. Jo (Nishimura) is the Yellow Lion who fights with Lion Power and his powerful Lion Punch. Megumi (Mori) is the Blue Dolphin who fights with (you guessed it) Dolphin Power and shoots Dolphin Arrows.

These three original survivors of the attack are joined by Tetsuya (Yamaguchi) the Black Bison, who fights with the Bison Rod and whose older brother dies in the enemy assault, Junichi (Kawamoto) who is the Green Jackal and fights with his Jackal Cutter to avenge the death of his baby sister at the hands of Bolt.

Launching from the Machine Buffalo mobile base, their Lion, Dolphin and Falcon vehicles combine to form Live Robo, while the Bison and Jackal vehicles come separately to make the smaller Live Boxer Robot. Both robots can themselves combine to make Live Combination Five. Their arch-enemy is Pierce (Nakada), the chief scientist and master of Dark Arts, who leads an army of cannon fodder Jinma minions, as well as a selection of monsters of the week. He has also recruited three of the Liveman team's fellow humans to fight on his side, though their plans are always foiled.

Based on an idea by "Saburo Yade", and featuring music from Tatsumi Yano, Liveman was preceded in the Super Sentai chronology by MASKMAN and followed by TURBORANGER. Series was produced by Kyozo Utsunomiya and Takeyuki Suzuki.

This is the tenth anniversary Task Force show. Definitely worthy of being the tenth anniversary entry.

Original Music by Tatsumi Yano

Special Effects by Nobuo Yajima (special effects supervisor)

Stunts - Shouji Hachisuka (stunts: Green Sai), Kazuo Niibori (stunts: Red Falcon).

Characters and mecha

The Livemen

Red Falcon (Amamiya Yuusuke)

A poor student at Academia, but a strong leader. [Played by Shima Daisuke, who sings the theme song.]

Weapons and/or attacks: Falcon Sword, Falcon Sabre.

Yellow Lion (Oohara Jou)

Like Yuusuke, at the bottom of the class at Academia. Sportsman and skateboarder. Weapons and/or attacks: Lion Bazooka, Lion Punch, Skateboard Attack

Blue Dolphin (Misaki Megumi)

A top class student at Academia who got involved with Yuusuke and Jou for some reason and did powered suit research with them and the late Yano Takuji and Aikawa Mari (whom I suspect would have been the other two Livemen had they lived). Good at swimming. Weapons and/or attacks: Dolphin Arrow.

Black Bison (Yano Tetsuya)

Younger brother of Takuji. Boxer. Weapons and/or attacks: Bison Rod.

Green Rhino (Aikawa Jun'ichi)

Younger brother of Mari. Rugby player. Weapons and/or attacks: RhinoCutters.

Shared weapons: Liblasters which have two modes: gun or sword.

Team attacks: Triple Bazooka, Bimotion Buster.

Motofalcon, Motodolphin, Motolion

Individual motorcycles for the original trio.

Livecougar

4WD truck for the entire team.

Dr. Hoshi (1-2)

Principal of Academia. Made the Liveman mecha before dying. Played by Ban Naoya (Kikaider, Inazuman, and Captor).

Colon

Female robot built by Dr. Hoshi in charge of the Gran Tortoise. Assists the team.

Jet Falcon + Land Lion + Aqua Dolphin > Liverobo

Weapons and/or attacks: Super Beast Sword (Super Live Crash), Liverobo Beam, Double Cannons.

Bison Liner + Rhino Fire > Live Boxer

Weapons and/or attacks: Miracle Big Blow.

Liverobo + Liveboxer > Super Liverobo

Weapons and/or attacks: Super Big Burst.

Machine Buffalo

Last of the flying fortresses that transport the robot components.

Gran Tortoise

Liveman secret headquarters resembling a turtle that rises from the sea.

Armed Brain Army Volt (or Bolt)

Believing most of humanity to be inferior, Volt intends to create a new world ruled only by superior beings. Life has no value to them; only brains do.

Great Professor Bias

Lead of Volt, who believes in no one but himself and controls his trio of officers with the allure of evil science. Looks down upon the Earth and its inhabitants with contempt aboard the orbiting space station Brainbase.

Doctor Kempu/Beauty Beast Kempu (1-35) > Fearbeast Kempu (36-46) Formerly Tsukikata Kenji, Yuusuke's rival at Academia.

Doctor Mazenda (1-37) > Machine Mazenda (38-47) > Robo Mazenda. Formerly Senda Rui, Megumi's rival at Academia.

Doctor Obular (1-21)

Formerly Omura Gou, Jou's rival at Academia. Has an inferior complex that led him to become the monster Obular. Eventually quit Volt.

(Note how their new names are derived from their surnames.)

Doctor Ashura (12-46) and the Shurer Three (14-46)

Formerly Busujima Arashi, underworld figure, who became a super genius after receiving an evil education from Bias. Gained the ability to 'Cyber Body Split' and generate the Shurer Three.

Guardnoid Gash

Bias' robot bodyguard, who wields the Gigaphantom monster-enlarging cannon

Gildos of Gild

Green robot secretly built by Bias to spur on Kempu et al.

Butchy of Chibuchi

Orange piglike robot secretly built by Bias to spur on Kempu et al.

Brain Beasts

Monsters born out of a mixture of 'Kaos', the fiery remnants of life in wastelands, and brain cores.

Jimmers

Green-skinned android soldiers with mohawk 'haircuts'.

Brainbase

Orbiting space station headquarters of Volt.

Trivia

Liveman is the first Sentai series was the first initially to have three members and the two joining later. It is also the first Sentai to have a two-piece henshin device, which was later used in Turboranger, Dairanger, and Ohranger.

Actor Daisuke Shima, who plays Yuusuke, also sings the opening theme song. Actress Megumi Mori, who plays Megumi Misaki, also sings the Blue Dolphin theme song, "Spark! To the Sea".

Ninpu Sentai Hurricanger recycled the "two joining later" theme, although it is arguable that the Hurricanger and Goraiger teams are actually separate, cooperating units as opposed to Green Sai and Black Bison being formal Liveman additions.

Has Black and Green Rangers on one team; usually Black and Green trade off as 5th Rangers.

French actress/singer Dorothée had a cameo in this series as a scientist. Several Sentai series were a hit in France at the time (specifically Choudenshi Bioman and later Hikari Sentai Maskman, which aired in France as "Bioman 2: Maskman" (Liveman was aired as "Bioman 3: Liveman") and were shown on her hugely popular Club Dorothée children's show.

As the tenth anniversary series, Toei wanted to celebrate by casting the then-hugely popular singing stars Daisuke Shima and Megumi Mori as the main Liveman members.

This series was newcomer Kazuhiko Nishimura's big break. Nishimura has gone on to become a popular fixation in television dramas. His manager reportedly has made him remove listing Liveman on his résumé, but Nishimura says he's still proud of the show and his work on it.

The Yuusuke character started the series as a comedic and hotheaded alternative to the regular sentai leader, more to reflect the image actor Daisuke Shima conveyed in his music of a rough juvenile delinquent. As the series progressed, and the more Shima wanted to distance himself from the image that was built by his music, the Yuusuke character matured into the more traditional courageous leader.

The narration at the start of each episode states, "My friends! Why did you sell your souls to the devil!?!". It is from the Livemen's point of view, referring to the betrayal made by their former friends who are now with Volt.

The Triple Bazooka could possibly have been the inspiration for the design of the Howling Cannon in 1992's Kyoryu Sentai Zyuranger, as the two weapons share practically identical designs (even though the Howling Cannon also featured the weapons of all 5 Zyuranger, while the Triple Bazooka was composed of only the main three Liveman team members' weapons).

CHOCKY (inc CHOCKY'S CHILDREN & CHOCKY'S CHALLENGE)

Matthew is just an average boy, until one day he finds that he can hear voices in his head. He starts to do complicated computer problems that no human can do and soon discovers that the voice is an alien from another planet asking for help. Chocky's presence unsettles Matthew and his family and leads eventually to a startling revelation.

Chocky

Twelve-year-old Matthew suddenly starts talking to himself and doing things he couldn't do before, such as binary code math. His parents think it's just a "passing phase" but Matthew tells them about Chocky "who lives inside his head." The family becomes increasingly unsettled--especially when a holiday incident brings unwelcome publicity and interest. Only after Matthew has been hypnotised, mysteriously kidnapped and interrogated, does Chocky reveal her "mission"--to bring a new form of unlimited cosmic power to Earth.

Chocky's Children

It's nearly a year since Chocky said goodbye to Matthew, and life appears to have returned to normal for the Gore family. But mysterious men are eavesdropping on their telephone conversations and further trouble lies ahead. Matthew goes on holiday to his Aunt Cissie's and while exploring a nearby windmill meets an unusual girl, Albertine. As their friendship grows, it becomes clear that Chocky is involved and is seeking their help. But the sinister Dr. Deacon is out to learn their secret and takes Albertine to his clinic. Matthew goes to find her and the scene is set for Chocky's Children from all over the world to "mentally" come to their rescue.

Chocky's Challenge

Matthew and Albertine have continued their studies, Matthew in art and Albertine in math at Cambridge. Chocky now feels she can tell them about her secret plans to solve the planet's energy problems. Under her supervision, Albertine is to build the world's first cosmic energy collector--a source of unlimited power. But she will need help, so Chocky brings in other young children and they successfully complete a prototype. But other, more dangerous parties are interested, including the mysterious Mrs. Gibson who offers to finance the work. Her true motive becomes clear when she traps Chocky and Paul inside the cosmic power pack.

The Chocky stories were evidence that British made Television science fiction was alive and well, if somewhat hard to find in the mid 1980s. The original story was written by John Wyndham and was the last work published before his death in 1969. Television writer Anthony Read updated the setting and gave Chocky a visual shape - a ball of glowing green energy.

Following the success of the first series which topped the children's ratings, Wyndham's family gave their approval for the character to be developed. The lead to the second and third series, Chocky's Children and Chocky's Challenge, which established the existence of other 'befriended' children around the world and then set about finding the solution to the world's energy problems.

CHOSEIJIN GURANSEIZA

AKA: SUPER STAR GOD GRANDSEIZAR

AKA: SUPER STAR GOD GRANSAZERS

AKA: GRANSAZERS

AKA: CHOU SEISHIN GRANSAZER

Billions of years ago on Earth, there was an advanced ancient civilization with awesome technology. Their greatest creation was the Chou Seishin or Ultra Star Gods. It was this technology that made Earth a target for other civilizations in space, for they were perceived as a threat. An alien fleet went to Earth to eradicate that civilization. Earth fought back using the Chou Seishin. Unfortunately that battle was lost, and the Ultra Star Gods lay dormant in the Earth until now. In the present day, there are those who have descended from the ancient civilization and possess the power of Gransazers and the power to awaken the Chou Seishin. Now, the alien threat looms over Earth once again, the Gransazers assemble to meet this growing threat.

Fire Tribe

Once an innocent (but headstrong) delivery boy, Kudou Tenma was thrust into the secret war of the Gransazers while making an important delivery to professor Hirokuchi. He is bull-headed and stubborn, reckless most of the times, but he has a good heart and has a bright attitude. As Sazer Tarius, he is a very powerful and skilled fighter. His weapon is the Falcon Bow, which fires the powerful attack called the Burning Falcon. He always clashes with his partner Mika, but they do like each other. He is also the main pilot of the Chou Seishin Garuda.

Shidou Mika is professor Horikuchi's assistant and an already established Gransazer. She is an accomplished fighter, having studied martial arts at a young age. She's very tomboyish, dressing in very unflattering clothes and acting tough. She's particularly cruel to Tenma, especially at the beginning, but she seems fond of him. As Sazer Mithras, she's a very skilled and powerful fighter. She uses the Swan Sector Fans as both defensive and offensive weapons. She's tough, strong headed, yet compassionate.

Shidou Ken is Mika's little brother. He too was reluctant to become a Gransazer, but he was forced to accept his fate when Mika came to harm. He's timid and shy, but he's a very amiable and charismatic person. Though he's not aggressive in his human form, he's very fiery as Sazer Lion. Weilding the Double Crescent swords, he's a good match against any enemy. He tries to keep Mika and Tenma from fighting. Lately he has attracted the affection of another Gransazer Saotome Ran (Sazer Visuel).

Wind Tribe

Dentsuin Akira is a highly skilled surgeon who also possesses the power of a Gransazer. He is very intelligent and very determined. As Sazer Remls, he is a very skilled and crafty fighter. He is very loyal to Saeki Karin and her supposed cause to protect humanity. He wields the Iron Gale rifle and is the main pilot of their Chou Seishin, Doracruz.

Amemiya Ryouko also pledged her allegiance to Saeki Karin to protect the Earth. She's a sports instructor and a skilled martial artist. She's silent and mysterious and mostly speaks with her actions. As Sazer Velsou, she has the ability to stun her opponents and render them helpless. Her Sel Cross disks are deadly weapons whether held or thrown. Though she follows Karin, she's not without her questions and doubts.

Hakariya Jin is a latecomer to the Wind Tribe. Coming in we don't know what he's really all about, seemingly mysterious and cool. The first thing he saw (and liked) in the Wind Tribe that interested him was Ryouko (Sazer Velsou). Since then, he hasn't stopped dropping lines and flirting with her. He's a fashion designer, but don't let that occupation fool you, for he's no push-over. As Sazer Dail, he's a very skilled fighter, often taking on multiple enemies. He is deadly with his Axe Tagger and it would be wise to stay clear of him when he gets to swinging them.

Matsuzaka Naoto is no stranger to fights and struggles. He is an great fighter whether he's a Sazer or a human. He's professional fighter, earning a living in the ring, and on a quest to be the strongest. At first he would fight the Gransazers indiscriminately, choosing no sides. After a while and an encounter with Kudou Tenma, he began to respect the Fire Tribe and resent the Wind Trib for betraying him. He sets off alone, appearing inly to activate the Earth Tribe's Chou Seichin Gun Caesar. Later he would accept the fact that he is not alone and that therest of the Earth Tribe needs him.

Saotome Ran was in mix with the law, and being pursued by Saeki Karin did not help either. In the course of trying to help a friend, she got swept into the war of the Gransazers and realized her potential as one. When she finally accepted her fate, she became one of the more willing and very eager Gransazers. She hangs out a lot with the Fire Tribe, especially Ken, whom she's fond of.

Kamiya Gou is a very dedicated policeman who's dedication to duty to his jurisdiction is sometimes even greater than his dedication to protect Earth. Forced to change due to anger at a suspect who assaulted his senior, he was later calmed down by Tenma before he could have done the suspect more damage. His dedication to justice and strong will made him an instant ally to the Fire Tribe. When not a Sazer, he keeps his neighborhood safe from speeders, including Tenma.

Water Tribe

Famous for being the youngest war photographer ever, Makoto Sorimachi is a proud and headstrong individual, almost as stubborn as Kudou Tenma. In fact, the two started off on the wrong foot. He was lead to Shinkujira Island by a strong sense of destiny. There he met others who were drawn there by the same sense. He became Sazer Gorbion, leader of the Water Tribe and a powerful Gransazer. All he needs now is to trust the other Tribes.

Don't let that angelic face fool you, Ai Uozumi is a determined fighter. When not in the heat of battle she is quiet and friendly. She works as a nurse at the Kyou-Minamidaigaku Hospital, which is the same hospital where Akira Dentsuin does practice. It was also near there that she was revealed and fought against one of the Impacters. She was rescued by Sazer Remls, whom she showed a good deal of appreciation.

Tappei Mikami is your run of the mill, happy -go-lucky, carefree surfer dude. He does accept the responsibility to be a Gransazer. Unfortunately, becoming a Gransazer has been hard for him. It took the training and tutelage of veteran Gransazer, Ryouko, to awaken him. When the going got tough, the tough became a Gransazer. He is friends with Ai, whom he hides his deeper affections from.

The Maser Cannons, from the Godzilla movies, are seen in the first episode and in the opening credits fighting the Akelon Invaders. The docking bay used by the Type-05 GS Assist Robot "Youhi" was originally used by the "Kiryu" Mechagodzilla in Gojira tai Mekagojira (2002)

Original Music by Yasuharu Takanashi, Special Effects by Koichi Kawakita, Other crew - Shinji Nishikawa (designer), Hideo Okamoto (designer), Fuyuki Shinada (model designer)

Also known as Super Star God Gransazers, which is the full Japanese title, Gransazers is Toho's extremely successful Saturday morning show from 2003. The production was a large collaboration, with other companies involved including TV Tokyo, Konami, and Gansis. The program also inherited several key players from the Godzilla franchise, including special effects director Koichi Kawakita, who came out of retirement for the series, along with Kenji Suzuki and Kunio Miyoshi, who both directed numerous episodes.

A follow up show was released after the closure of Gransazers called Justirisers, which shares the same "Star God" full title.

CHRONICLE, THE

AKA: NEWS FROM THE EDGE

Tucker Burns, who has already been rejected by 47 different organizations, and his live-in girlfriend is hounding him to get a job. Any job. Desperate, he accepts a position with The World Chronicle. His first assignment -- a creature on the loose called the Brooklyn Bloodsucker. With help from two of his colleagues, the feisty and alluring reporter Grace Hall and enthusiastic, streetwise photographer Wes Freewald, Tucker sets out to uncover the truth. The truth, however, is a bit more than he'd bargained for when he sees the creature first hand flying out the windshield of Wes' van, and just manages to get out of the way.

Having always believed the stories in The Chronicle to be total crap, Tucker has a hard time accepting that some of them, let alone all, contain any truth. And it doesn't give the rag much legitimacy when Grace tells him about her alien abductions, or when Wes cries over the article about a mothman being kept in a jar. But now he's seen something strange for himself. Not to mention the paper's vast archives which house countless oddities and supposed alien samples. Eventually, however, the gang manages to catch up to the alien, who turns out to be an alien representative stranded on Earth, who has limited himself to feeding on the blood of animals. They manage to arrange the alien's "pick-up", and have yet another headline story for the paper.

...they can keep the writing fresh. I was a bit worried when this show first was announced because it sounded pretty much like it was just going to be a funny version of X-file or First Wave. Sure, that might be cool once or twice, but I thought it wouldn't last too long. Fortunately, The Chronicle has proven to be freshly written, with some good plots to go along with the humorous writing. I love all the characters, especially Wes (played by Reno Wilson). Overall, the show is very well cast and everyone seems to be aware of what their characters are supposed to be like.

My only concern is that this show may not prove to remain strong for more than two seasons or so. It's written by Sylvio Horta, who is mostly known for his "Urban Legend" movies. Both those films were interesting at first, but withered into mundane garbage. I hope this show doesn't do the same. I have heard that the cast has really bonded and would hate to see them fall prey to writers whose abilities get exhausted. I give this show  out of * stars. Worth a watch if you like Sci-Fi. Probably won't pull you in if you aren't particularly in to the genre. This series was adapted from a series a novel called News from the Edge written by Mark Summer. The series was filmed both in California and Vancouver as are many US sci-fi shows of the late 20th and early 21st Century. The series was first shown on the US version Sci-Fi Channel on Fridays at 9pm.

However the show was soon cancelled with this explanation from it's producers, This came from Sci-Fi's SciFi Wire page. 2/07/02. The SCI FI Channel announced that it is canceling The Chronicle, which will air its last episode, "Snitch in Time," on March 22. "The Chronicle was a good show with a talented cast and creative production team that unfortunately didn't find the audience it deserved," SCI FI president Bonnie Hammer said in a statement. "SCI FI continues its commitment to original programming with Firestarter: Rekindled in March; new seasons of the hit series Farscape and exclusive originals of Stargate SG-1 this summer; the original movie Riverworld, based on Philip José Farmer's classic books; and Steven Spielberg's Taken, an unprecedented 20-hour, 10-night epic miniseries. SCI FI is increasing its commitment to original programming in 2002 and 2003, with a development slate of series, movies and miniseries that reflect the current mass popularity and broad appeal of the sci-fi genre."

Here also is some trivia for all you science fiction fans out their :-

Episode 2 - NOTE: A Newsweek editor asks Tucker if he knows reporters "Edison" and "Carter". "Edison Carter" was the name of the reporter on Max Headroom.

Episode 3 - James Hong plays "David Lo Pan," a Chinatown businessman. Not so coincidentally, he also played a Chinatown businessman and ancient sorcerer named "David Lo Pan" in the cult movie "Big Trouble in Little China."

Episode 6 - NOTE: Jon Polito does not appear in this episode.

This episode is "In Memory of John Reiner", the sound re-recording mixer who worked on the show.

Episode 8 - NOTE: This episode bears a strong resemblance to the Kolchak: The Night Stalker episode Chopper, which also had a ghostly biker decapitating people. This episode also bears a strong resemblance to Brimstone, with the idea of a supernatural bounty hunter who goes after escapees from Hell. Jon Polito is not in this episode.

Episode 10 - NOTE: The name of the two officers, "Quinn" and "Martin", is another in-joke: a reference to producer Quinn Martin.

Episode 11 - NOTE: The opening staff meeting, with the reporter talking about a government-sponsored invisible man/gland project, was a deliberate in-joke reference to another Friday night Sci Fi Channel series, "The Invisible Man." According to producer Javier Grillo-Marxuach, who posted on the SciFi Channel's board, it was meant in good fun and in fact the scene was filmed when they still thought IMAN would remain on the air. The two production teams share a building in San Fernando Valley.

Episode 12 -NOTE: The name of the doctor, "Harcourt Fenton", is a in-joke reference to Star Trek, and Harcourt Fenton Mudd.

Episode 13 - NOTE: The name of the first dead woman, "Sylvia Horta", is a play on the name of the show's writer "Silvio Horta". One suspects this confusion comes up in real life fairly frequently.

Episode 14 - NOTE: Evelyn Hall talking about her supernatural encounter with a thick fog in a small California community is an in-joke reference to actress Adrienne Barbeau's role in John Carpenter's The Fog. There are no follow-up in-jokes to Swamp Thing or Creepshow, however. There are references not only to the ongoing Grace/Daniel alien subplots, but to the Savage Simian case from "Pig Boy's Big Adventure".

Episode 17 - NOTE: The reference to the ectoplasmic slop acting like "a psychic mood ring" is a direct reference to a similar line in Ghostbusters 2.

1 - 1 "PILOT"

Tucker Burns, who has already been rejected by 47 different organizations, and his live-in girlfriend is hounding him to get a job. Any job. Desperate, he accepts a position with The World Chronicle. His first assignment -- a creature on the loose called the Brooklyn Bloodsucker. With help from two of his colleagues, the feisty and alluring reporter Grace Hall and enthusiastic, streetwise photographer Wes Freewald, Tucker sets out to uncover the truth. The truth, however, is a bit more than he'd bargained for when he sees the creature first hand flying out the windshield of Wes' van, and just manages to get out of the way.

Having always believed the stories in The Chronicle to be total crap, Tucker has a hard time accepting that some of them, let alone all, contain any truth. And it doesn't give the rag much legitimacy when Grace tells him about her alien abductions, or when Wes cries over the article about a mothman kept in a jar. But now he's seen something strange for himself. Not to mention the paper's vast archives which house countless oddities and supposed alien samples. Eventually, however, the gang manages to catch up to the alien, who turns out to be an alien representative stranded on Earth, who has limited himself to feeding on the blood of animals. They manage to arrange the alien's "pick-up", and have yet another headline story for the paper.

1 - 2 WHAT GOBBLES BENEATH

Media mogul Rubert Blackstone disappears into thin air in broad daylight, and the incident is reported as a kidnapping. Tucker smells a "real" story here, and ditches the animal-potato chip story Stern has assigned to him to investigate. Tucker soon discovers that another man also disappeared, and both were using a Yamaguchi 9000 cell phone. The phone hasn't been released to the public, but both Blackstone (an investor) and the scientist had one. It turns out that the phones emit a high burst of radiation that attracts a cancerous tumor-monster living beneath New York, and they've just been shipped to the stores. Turner, Wes and Grace confront Bailey, the manufacturer of the phones who knows about the problem. He gets eaten by the cancer monster and the reporters use a tumor anti-toxin that the Pig-Boy has laying around. Stern is pleased with the results, and the chutzpah Tucker demonstrated by ignoring him, and even replaces Wes' van. Tucker is left with the realization he may be more cut out for the job of reporting the weird than he realized.

1 - 3 HERE THERE BE DRAGONS

Donald sends Tucker to investigate a report of dragons in Chinatown. One of the witnesses, a scorched gang member, is reluctant to talk but his illegitimately pregnant girlfriend seems to know something. Wes and Tucker track the girl and find her meeting with a Chinese dragon in the sewers. While they investigate the gang member Neo, Grace is with the girl when she gives birth...to a dragon baby. Local businessman David Lo Pan wants them out, and the girl's father then asks Lo Pan to kill the person or thing that impregnated his daughter. Wes and Tucker track the spectroanalysis indications and find a secret hideout containing a homemade flamethrower and a "dragon suit." Turns out the person behind the dragon is a normal guy, albeit one suffering from a lizard-like skin deformation. He and the girl are dating, and he impregnated her. Tucker dresses up as the dragon and Wes pretends to kill it after it kills the girl, to convince her father she is dead. At the end, the girl, her baby, and "dragon guy" head off into the sunset thanks to the Chronicle reporters.

1 - 4 BABY GOT BACK

An abandoned baby is left at the Chronicle, and Rene takes it in while the guys investigate. They are able to locate the mother from the video cameras. She is the wife of David Tally, the head of "Headway", a selling organization. She's had bouts of insanity, and both she and her husband want the baby back. Meanwhile, the baby has been displaying...abnormal behavior, almost killing Sal. It turns out that in return for financial rewards, Tally made a deal with Hell to let a demon incarnate within his son's body. At the proper time, a ceremony must be performed to let the demon fully manifest. The gang gets captured by Tally, but manage to interrupt the ceremony with the help of the reluctant mother and escape with the baby. Tally gets possessed instead, a process which proves explosively fatal since he isn't the intended host body.

1 - 5 HE'S DEAD, SHE'S DEAD

Reports of mysterious resurrections and dead men walking lead the Chronicle reporters to Dr. Henry Cooper, a scientist who died of colon cancer. His daughter seems to have continued on his experiments, and has succeeded in perfecting the resurrection formula that her father was working on. After several experiments (the earlier reports), she perfects the process and resurrects her dad. He prefers to remain dead, however, and kills himself.

1 - 6 BERMUDA LOVE TRIANGLE

Tucker is assigned to a mermaid story: two men were pulled into the water and attacked by one. Meanwhile, Grace is investigating the case of Roger Noland, a Navy pilot who disappeared in the Bermuda Triangle in 1994. The two cases cross when Tucker spots Noland near the scene of the attack. Noland has gills given to him by the Atlanteans to allow him to survive, and is apparently on the run from some mysterious woman, the mermaid. Noland has created a water rebreather to allow him to flee to the desert, where he claims he will be safe from the Atlantean who he is a slave to. Grace and Sal spend a night in the elevator where Sal tells her of his love for her, and the two agree to be closer. The mermaid comes to the Chronicle and is captured. Sal rigs up a translator and finds out she and Noland were mated for life, and Noland is fleeing because of his fear of commitment. Tucker tracks down Noland and convinces him to come back, but it's too late: the mermaid has given up her life and transformed into an unreachable siren of the deeps. At the end the four friends toast to friendship and lost love.

1 - 7 ONLY THE YOUNG DIE GOOD

Tucker is assigned to investigate a strange report of an elderly man escaping from an old folks' home and clinic, going to a nearby store, and claiming to be a young teenage worker. Tucker goes undercover and discovers that the head doctor, Gorham, as perfected a means of transferring consciousness. They hire young, virile people as workers, then switch their payments with rich old people and lock up the now-older workers. Tucker is next on the list after he asks a few questions. The rest of the Chronicle gang quickly sense things are amiss when "Tucker" acts rather strangely. They go back to the clinic, where Tucker in his aged body has staged an escape. They get Gorham to reverse the process for both Tucker and the others.

1 - 8 BRING ME THE HEAD OF TUCKER BURNS

A DMV worker and a meter maid are decapitated by a headless motorcyclist, and The Chronicle is on the case. While Tucker makes time with his rival Kristen, Grace and Wes investigate and suspect a supernatural influence. They discover that the headless motorcyclist is "Hellboy", a cycle ganger and bounty hunter who accidentally got decapitated. After a third death takes place, they determine that all the victims had sequential DMV numbers, and go after the fourth potential victim, Dick Blanston, a cable guy. They flee with Blanston just ahead of Hellboy, to The Chronicle elevator. Frustrated, the biker takes Tucker and tells the gang to trade him Blanston for Tucker. It turns out Blanston is a demon, however. He and the others escaped from Hell, and Hellboy is trying to bring them back. Armed with The Chronicle's info, Blanston gets Hellboy's head from his brother Nitro. "Hellboy" confronts Blanston, and the latter tries to give him his head to force him back to Hell. However, it's Nitro disguised as his brother. Hellboy decapitates Blanston and departs with his head, and Tucker is found.

1 - 9 LET SLEEPING DOGS FRY

A series of mysterious deaths by electrical appliance in North Hampton attract the attention of the Chronicle staff. Investigating, they find that all of the male victims have one thing in common: they were members of a hunting club. probing further, they find out that Luther Stubbs, who was thought to disappear by his girlfriend, was actually killed during one of the club's "hunts" against real people. They put his body in a circuit box at the local electrical plant, enabling his ghost to inhibit the town's electrical systems and kill the men responsible for his death. Confronting the corpse, the Chronicle reporters convince the girlfriend to express her regrets, and Stubbs passes on to his just reward.

1 - 10 TAKE ME BACK

The episode begins with the police busting into arrest an alien, who turns out to be Tucker in a costume. In flashback he explains that the Chronicle reporters were investigating a woman freaking out when she spots "aliens". The woman, Silvia, is a alien abductee who is attending group therapy. Grace (herself an abductee) goes along with Silvia to the therapy, where the head of the group, Max suggests a radical therapy. Silvia should "confront" someone dressed as an alien to overcome her feelings of powerlessness. It works, but Silvia disappears and later turns up dead, gruesomely dissected. Grace begins to have visions of her own, and goes along with the therapy as well. Tucker helps out again (which is where the police busted in). Grace returns to the clinic as Tucker and Wes realize that Silvia's death is the work of hostile aliens. Daniel Stern takes the lead in leading an assault on the clinic, where the aliens are preparing to dissect Grace - they've been activating the visions to see how humans react to abduction. Daniel kills one alien, but the other escapes in a spacecraft that even Tucker's skeptical reporter-girlfriend Kristen witnesses. Grace seems recovered, but then notices that she keeps getting odd glimpses of Stern as an alien as well.

1 - 11 TOUCHED BY AN ALIEN

Stern find out from an alien contact that he has been targeted for assassination, while a meteorite crashes near a strip club. The reporters investigate, and track one of the strippers to her home where she melts while having sex with her boyfriend! They find out that the alien assassin is a STA (Sexually-Transmitted Assassin), a creature which can sexually stimulate humans, passes itself on through sexual contact, and destroys the host when it leaves. They manage to thwart one attempt on Stern's life, although he is seriously wounded. They track the STA to a local swinger's convention, where they meet Wes' parents having a good time. They think they've captured the STA's current body, a waitress named Sandra. Unfortunately, the STA is in the body of another waiter, Sandy, and he passes on to Grace. She tries to get at the recuperating Stern, but Pig Boy Sal manages to resist her advances once he realizes what is responsible. The STA knocks out Sal and uses his handprint to get access to Stern...only to be captured as Stern has already left. They use Sal's cure, a sexual stimulant, to free Grace and expel the STA without killing her. At the end, Stern meets with his contact again and thanks him for his warning and tells him to put out the word that he handled the alien assassin...and drops a hint or two that he may be as alien as the snake-eating contact is.

1 - 12 PIG BOY'S BIG ADVENTURE

A "savage simian" takes refuge under a child's bed, and Donald wants an exclusive. Tucker and Wes go to the house and find a mysterious animal control official who orders them off. Following a tip, they track the simian to a theater, grab a tag off of her, and almost capture her, except the same "official" interferes again, and shoots the simian with a tracking signal. Sal the Pig Boy manages to track the signal and Wes and Tucker capture the simian, only to find it's an intelligent female. they take her back, where she sees Sal and identifies him as one of her own kind, a "manimal". She, Sal, and the others were created by a Dr. Harcourt Fenton, who was experimenting with animal organ transplants for humans and inadvertently created the manimals from transplant subjects. While the others go to Fenton's clinics, the simian, Monica, tells Sal about the life she has lead and takes him out. They both get captured. Tucker and Wes have broken into the clinic, where they find that the man interfering in their investigations is Harcourt's son. Harcourt and his son have been trying to recapture all the subjects to find out what errors they committed. They plan to dissect Sal and the others, but Tucker and Wes free everyone. Monica and the other manimals rip Harcourt and his son to pieces, much to the disgust of Sal. He refuses to go with them as they escape, preferring to stay with his real friends. At the end, everyone takes Sal out for dinner, through the subterfuge of everyone wearing pig-snout masks.

1 - 13 THE CURSED SOMBERO

A woman buys a sombrero at a yard sale and shortly is chased into traffic by a vicious dog. It's a slow news month, so Daniel has Grace, Tucker, and Wes investigate the chain of mysterious deaths that the sombrero has been leaving. They try to recover it at the police lock-up but someone else gets it, dies, and some frat boys grab it. Unfortunately it's Cinco de Mayo and everyone has a sombrero. The team figures out which frat house has the sombrero, and try to track it down. One of the guys who took it is already dead, and the gang manages to grab the other. Tucker goes out with Kristen while Daniel tries to de-curse the hat, only to realize it's a fake hat, and Tucker had the real one unknowingly put on him at the frat party. Hilarity ensues at the Japanese table-service restaurant, and Grace and Wes manage to save Tucker and get him to Daniel, who successfully casts the ritual and dispels the evil of the hat...which takes up residence in the fraternity's toilet. In the B plot, Kristen is having trouble dealing with her newfound knowledge of the weird and bizarre (which she witnessed in Take Me Back), but at the end reconciles with Tucker.

Grace goes to meet a contact on a Puerto Rican succubus case, and gets electrocuted. Waking up in the hospital, she flies into a panic when someone tries to kill her, but there is no evidence of an attempt. Wes and Tucker believe her, but Daniel is acting strangely uninterested in the whole thing. Worse, Grace's mother Evelyn is visiting, and she believes her daughter is nuts. After several other sightings, Grace believes she is being followed by a clone of herself. The three reporters follow Daniel, whom they suspect. They catch up to him in a hotel and discover the Grace with them is the clone! Apparently some alien Nemecoids ordered a hit on Grace and sent a clone of her to do so. The clone couldn't quite bring itself to kill the real Grace, and the subsequent electrical shock scrambled its "kill" programming. Both Graces flee when the aliens show up, but are cornered. The clone-Grace sacrifices herself so there is only one Grace, which the Nemecoids can't touch without blowing their cover. At the end, Grace and her mother are (somehow) reconciled.

1 - 15 I SEE DEAD FAT PEOPLE

Daniel is absent and Grace is put in charge of getting out the next issue. She assigns Wes and Tucker to a case where people living in a house are being terrorized and almost killed. The reporters experience strange phenomenon and witness four rather...chubby ghosts. They find out the house was once used as a weight-loss clinic run by Dr. Thicketts, and was the site of the death of four of his patients. One of them, Royce, killed the other three in a steam bath and then himself. Wes is haunted by visions of Royce wherever he goes. The reporters figure out from clues the ghost of Royce leaves where his journal is, and discover that Thicketts drove his patients mercilessly, and locked the four men in the steam bath and left them to die. Thicketts comes to the house and locks Wes and Tucker in the steam bath and leaves them to die. The ghost of Royce frees them and then he and the other three ghosts trap Thicketts and prepare to kill him by stuffing him with food. Wes, himself once fat, convinces them it's time to let it go and move on to the next life. They leave, and Grace manages to get the paper out with "I See Dead Fat People" as the cover story.

1 - 16 MAN AND SUPERMAN

A woman is rescued from a mugger by a flying costume-clad superhero who displays super-strength. This attracts the interest of the Chronicle, and Daniel sends Tucker and comic-book fan West to investigate while Grace runs an investigation on a ghost. While undercover as a taxicab driver, Grace's car blows a tire and she is rescued by the same superhero as Wes looks on. Wes finds evidence that the same superhero rescued a cat from a tree a year earlier. Wes and Grace find a clue that leads to an actor/waiter named Walter who was both the passenger in Grace's cab and the mugger in the earlier robbery, but he is killed before they can meet with him. After the mysterious hero saves a bus that appears to have been sabotaged, Wes finally remembers an obscure comic called "Captain Vigilant" where the hero performed the exact same sequence of events, and the next one is a bomb that kills dozens. With Sal's help they track the superhero to a comic book store. Grace and Tucker find a bomb, while Wes confronts the store owner, Derek. Derek is a telekinetic who staged the incidents to make himself look good. Wes provokes Derek into exhausting his powers and then knocking him out - fortunately, the bomb has an hour to go before detonation. In the end Wes sells his comic book collection for a great deal of money, while a local cop takes an interest in the reporters due to their penchant for showing up at murder scenes.

1 - 17 HOT FROM THE OVEN

An oven repairman disappears into an oven at a soon-to-be-opened haute cuisine restaurant, and the Chronicle reporters are on the case. Donald has a personal interest: a friend of his also disappeared into the oven, which is the cursed "Lehayne Oven". The reporters determine the story is true, and Donald prepares to use a vial of holy water blessed by all of the popes to break the curse. Wes is sucked into the oven and Tucker and Grace have to go in after him. The oven confronts its victims with their worse fears, and others can only help the victim to overcome his fears. Wes is frightened of clowns, and Grace and Tucker help him to overcome that fear. Then Grace must face her fear of abandonment by her boyfriend-of-the-week Dennis. Then they meet the oven repairman, who was an alcoholic who accidentally killed someone. Wes tries to save him but the others convince him he is facing his worst fear: of being unable to heroically save someone. Wes gives it up and the three manage to escape the oven, which Donald has disassembled and stored in the vault.

1 - 18 THE STEPFORD CHEERLEADERS

Grace, Wes, and Tucker go undercover at a high school where strange incidents are being reported. Grace gets close to Jennifer, who was involved in one of the incidents where a football jock was beaten badly and hung up on a goal post. Neither Jennifer or the jock are talking, though. Tucker teams up with the school reporter, who suspects something about science teacher Dr. Carson, a friend of the nerds (whom Wes infiltrates). They soon discover that Carson previously worked on bionic limb experiments. Sneaking up to Carson's house, they see that his daughter, Jennifer's friend, has bionic limbs. She lost most of her body in the same accident that killed her mother, Carson's wife. The gang return to find that Carson is performing similar experiments on Jennifer, and interrupt. Carson is forced to shut down his daughter when she turns violent, and Grace finds out that Jennifer is a willing volunteer - she is awkward and wants the cybernetic augmentation. CHUCK

Chuck Bartowski is a socially awkward twenty-something who works as a computer expert at the Nerd Herd (a parody of "Geek Squad") at his local Buy More (a parody of "Best Buy"), a local electronics retailer (a CompUSA store was used), with his best friend, Morgan Grimes. Chuck's sister, Ellie, is a doctor who is constantly looking out for his best interests and wants to help him find a girlfriend. On the night of his birthday party, Chuck receives an e-mail from his former Stanford University roommate, Bryce Larkin, who is now a CIA agent. When he opens it, he unwittingly downloads an entire server of sensitive data, once only private to the Government of the United States, into his brain.

Both the National Security Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency want the intelligence returned to them and dispatch agents of their own, Major John Casey and Sarah Walker, respectively, to retrieve the data. As Chuck experiences flashes of memory activated by certain subliminal triggers, he must use the knowledge he now possesses to help the government thwart assassins and international terrorists, thereby upending his previously uneventful life. Chuck's decision to keep his newfound occupation a secret from his family and friends and to live his life as normally as possible forces Casey and Walker to establish an uneasy alliance with the shared goal of protecting Chuck at all costs.

Chuck is an American television science fiction-dramedy created by Josh Schwartz and Chris Fedak. The series is about an "average computer-whiz-next-door" who receives an encoded e-mail from an old friend, a rogue CIA agent, which embeds the world's greatest spy secrets in his brain.

Produced by College Hill Pictures, Wonderland Sound and Vision and Warner Bros. Television, the series premiered on September 24, 2007 on NBC, airing on Monday nights at 8:00/7:00c leading into Heroes.

Conception

Josh Schwartz and newcomer Chris Fedak wrote the script for the first episode which was initially given a put pilot commitment by NBC before a pilot order was greenlit by the network in January 2007.[4] Schwartz and Fedak both attended the University of Southern California and the latter pitched the idea to Schwartz who agreed to develop the project with him.[5] McG, Schwartz's fellow executive producer on The O.C., directed the first hour of the series and consequently became an executive producer via his production company, Wonderland Sound and Vision. Fedak, Peter Johnson, Scott Rosenbaum, Matthew Miller and Allison Adler also serve as co-executive producers.[6] NBC gave the series an early pick-up and a thirteen-episode order on May 10, 2007.

Casting

Zachary Levi and Adam Baldwin were the first two to be cast in February 2007 in the roles of Chuck Bartowski and Major John Casey, a veteran NSA agent, respectively. Fedak always had Baldwin in mind for the role of John Casey and the producers found that the actor was a "perfect fit" for the character during the first casting session.[5][8] Relative newcomer Yvonne Strahovski, an Australian, was chosen for the female lead role of CIA agent, Sarah Kent, in the same month.[9] The character's surname was later changed to "Walker". Casting continued throughout March with Sarah Lancaster, Joshua Gomez and Natalie Martinez landing the parts of Dr. Ellie Bartowski (Chuck's older sister), Morgan Pace (Chuck's best friend) and Kayla Hart, a heretofore unspecified character, respectively.[10] Morgan's surname was later changed to "Grimes".

On September 14, 2007, Rachel Bilson, of The O.C. (which executive producer Josh Schwartz also created) signed on for a multi-episode arc to begin airing in late October.

Broadcast history

The world premiere of the pilot aired on July 27, 2007 at Comic-Con International in San Diego. The series was originally slated to air on Tuesday nights at 9:00/8:00c as announced at the 2007 Upfronts but this was later changed to Monday nights at 8:00/7:00c as announced during the 2007 Television Critics Association summer press tour. NBC also confirmed the season premiere would air on September 24, 2007. The pilot was leaked onto torrent websites on July 22, 2007.

International distribution

The series will air on Channel Nine in Australia and CityTV in Canada, in Latin America it will be broadcasted on Warner Channel.

Online distribution

Subject to an aggressive marketing campaign by NBC, the pilot episode will be released for purchase and viewership from September 10, 2007 onwards across a broad range of mediums from satellite broadcasting to popular social networking websites such as Facebook. The first episode of the show will be shown on United Airlines flights and be freely distributed on video on demand on about 30 cable and satellite systems including Comcast, Time Warner Cable, Cox Communications and Dish Network. By September 17, the American public will also be able to view the season premiere on Yahoo. Purchase of the pilot will also be available from Amazon Unbox, again to American audiences only (restriction based on credit card billing address).

Reception

Comparisons to other media

Advertising of the show initially portrays the program as bearing strong similarities to UPN's cancelled series Jake 2.0. Josh Schwartz has defended criticisms by pointing out that whilst the title character of Jake 2.0 has superpowers borne from nanotechnology, Chuck Bartowski does not possess any extraneous abilities besides his flashes of intelligence that were uploaded into his brain which are activated only by certain subliminal triggers. Schwartz has since described the show as a hybrid of Alias and The Office whilst Zachary Levi, who portrays the titular character, says it's a mix of The Bourne Supremacy and The 40-Year-Old Virgin.[17] It has also drawn some notable comparisons to Jim Lee's Wildstorm comic Divine Right

Other media

Marketing

In May 2007, NBC announced that their official website would launch "MyNBC" allowing users to be more interactive with selected shows. MyNBC will allow fans to delve inside Chuck's "brain" which will host hotspots of top-secret government information that the title character possesses. It will also have bonus video features. In addition, NBC further announced in July 2007 that tie-in micro websites where fans who log onto Buy-More.net would be directed to NerdHerdHelp.com giving them access to exclusive content of the show and a blog written by the title character's best friend and sidekick, Morgan, would be launched in September 2007. NBC is reportedly expected to spend about $8 million in total promoting the show.

CITY BENEATH THE SEA

Aboard the atomic sub Cyana to observe the trials of a new underwater transmitter, Bannerman and Blake are captured by a pirate sub and taken to Aegira, the creation of fanatical scientist Professor Ludwig Ziebrecken who dreams of conquering the world from his hidden base. Ziebrecken has a number of kidnapped scientists working for him including, Dr. Ann Boyd (Caroline Blakiston) who help the resourceful duo to free Aegira and its people from the tyrant's rule.

Starring as a supporting cast actor is Barry Letts who later came to fame as a director on DOCTOR WHO. CBTS was the sequel to PLATEAU OF FEAR (1961). ABC TV. Written Malcolm Stuart Fellows, Sutherland Ross. Prod Guy Verney. 7 25min episodes.

The script was by John Lucarotti, later a regular contributor to DOCTOR WHO and THE AVENGERS, and also reunited PLATEAU OF FEAR director Kim Mills and producer Guy Verney. Playing a supporting role in the cast was Barry Letts before he found greater fame on the other side of the camera as a BBC director and producer, steering DOCTOR WHO through its successful Jon Pertwee era, produced by Guy Verney. The settings were by James Goddard, the special effects were created by Derek Freeborn, the programme advisor was Mary Field.

Emerging from the success of the Pathfinders series this seven part children's serial was a sequel to the 1961 adventure story Plateau Of Fear. Produced by Guy Verney (director on The Pathfinders series) City Beneath The Sea featured the characters Mark Bannermen (Gerald Flood) and Peter Blake (Stewart Guidotti) who had been established in Plateau Of Fear. With a storyline familiar to fans of 1930s Saturday film serials (such as Flash Gordon) the show had Blake and Bannermen kidnapped and taken to the undersea kingdom of Aegira. The duo defeat the tyrannical Professor Ziebrecken and his evil plans to conquer the world.

CLEOPATRA 2525

Three scantily clad humans emerge from an underground shaft onto the Earth's surface: tough talking Sarge; bald headed male Horst; and Hel a black woman who hears the female Voice through an implant in her jaw. They attract the attention of a heavily armored flying creature called a Bailey, because they want to test out their new high tech weapons, including rocket-firing gauntlets. In the following battle, they capture an arm from the bailey, but they also discover that Horst is a Betrayer robot, sent to infiltrate them and kill them. Exchanging blaster fire with him, the two women jump down a long shaft and use their web launchers to get to safety. Hel takes an injured Sarge to an underground surgeon to get a new kidney from the doctor's supply of cryogenically frozen humans from the 21st century. In the process, one of those patients is awakened. She's Cleopatra, who went in for breast-augmentation surgery in 2001 and ended up in a cryo-tube. Cleopatra learns that the year is 2525; what's left of mankind lives underground, driven there by the alien Baileys. Hel and Sarge fight the machines in an attempt to survive, aided by good robots such as Mauser, who thinks he can reconfigure the stolen Bailey arm into a weapon given enough time.

The series was shown in syndication.

Produced by Sam Raimi (executive), R.J. Stewart (executive), Robert G. Tapert (executive), Cinematography by Kevin Riley, Other crew are David Hall (focus puller), Dale McCready (camera operator), Gaysorn Thavatt (focus puller). Other crew include Eric Gruendenmann (XENA/HERCULES), producer Chris Black (SLIDERS, WEIRD SCIENCE), producer Janine Dickins (YOUNG HERCULES/ THE RAY BRADBURY THEATRE). Co-producer Mike McDonald (XENA/ HERCULES) and associate producer Sam Clark (YOUNG HERCULES). Xena and Hercules have also produced other additions to the creative team such as Visual Effects Supervisor George Port, Production Designer Rob Gillies, Costume Designer Jane Holland and composer Joseph LoDuca.

It's a hit formula, as any supermarket's desert section will tell you: a thin sweet base that crumbles on inspection, with one or two layers to it, and lots of creamy goodness on display. Small surprise then that TV company Studio USA have produced their own cheesecake in the form of Cleopatra 2525. Defrosted 500 years after her boob job went wrong, exotic dancer Cleopatra finds herself in a world overrun by marauding robots and meets two female resistance warriors who - she finds to her consternation - have chests as good as hers without having had any enhancements! These, women are glamorous, skimpily-dressed, fast-moving action heroes who spend most of their time under the Earth's surface, while the threat from above comes from the robotic Baileys.

From the creators of XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS, Cleopatra 2525 comes across as a Sci-Fi'd form of Xena's first run season, with outrageously OTT battles and dry female-on-female banter. Fans of Xena will find the three leads very familiar, as they've all graced past episodes. Strong resistance leader Hel (Short for Helen, we discover) is played by Gina Torres, who was Cleopatra (ironically) in Xena's King of Assassins. Hel has a link surgically implanted inside her head to the voice, a Resistance guide who helps in the various missions the girls undertake, and her strengths lie in both leadership and knowing the underground world in which humans hide. The pilot episode (the punsomenly-titled Quest for Firepower) shows her emerging onto the Earth's surface for the first time. Her verdict of this rolling New Zealand greenery? Ugly.

Victoria Pratt plays the fiery Sarge, and was Cyane in Xena's Adventures in the Sin Trade. Sarge comes from the surface, where she was raised in a sort of people farm, with Baileys taking on the farmer role, with Baileys taking on the farmer role. This has left her driven to overthrow the conquerors, and the least inclined to put up with Cleopatra's 20th Century ways, which have included striptease, stand-up comedy, and screaming for five minutes without taking a breath.

The kooky Cleopatra herself - Jennifer Sky - is another Xena veteran, having appeared as Amarice in five different episodes. Viewers might also recognize her as one of BUFFY: THE VAMPIRE SLAYER'S The Pack. Here her character contrasts with the others, and provides a heart that the world of 2525 has erased from them, reminding Hel and Sarge what they're fighting for.

And fight they do, with definite nods to The Matrix in the actions sequences, utilizing the kind of physics that would have a scientist spinning in his grave during their battles against the homicidal Baileys. As Jennifer Sky explained recently, the machines were named after the creator Bailey, who built them to protect the environment. Of course, these machines found that human-kind was the biggest threat and began to eliminate it. Cleopatra awakes in a world threatened by a giant wastepaper bins, and dropping a lolly stick will get you more than a slap on the wrist; for these machines come in a variety of lethal guises, from the Terminator-like Betrayer robots, to the vast Bailey machines that look suspiciously like the Boss Ship you'd have to defeat at the end of numerous video games.

Opps, there, it's been said. Video game. The main criticism since the series started has been that this frenetic new show watches like a computer game, one that only runs on machines with an expensive 3D card and Heroine Screaming V3.0 installed. This isn't an entirely unfair judgement, but people forget how fun a show can be: recently it's been as if that's simply not allowed. After the complicated mood, plots and styling of shows like BABYLON 5, DEEP SPACE NINE or THE X-FILES, Cleopatra is very a harcking back to the days of more straightforwards Sci-Fi, such as BUCK ROGERS IN THE 25TH CENTURY, SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, even WONDER WOMAN. For a start, there's the idea that everyone in the future will go around in nothing but plastic undies. Villains either look like Alice Copper or a fetishist convention, or sometimes just Alice Copper at a fetishist convention. And the plots are pleasantly familiar: robots infiltrating resistance bases, mind-control setting friends against each other, duplicated versions of our heroes, even a story where lives are decided by the playing of a game which the participants treat with the reverence of chess, only it looks like Ker-Plunk set attacked by a christmas tree.

Whether Cleopatra 2525 has the lifespan of the producers' previous shows remains to be seen. But there's nothing wrong in a shameless attempt at providing audience enjoyment. These girls just want to have fun.

CLONE, O

AKA: CLONE, THE

AKA: EL CLON

The meeting of a man with his image 20 years younger. This is the plot of O Clone. In the beginning of the story Lucas is a happy adolescent, romantic, full of projects, and he's in love with a young arabic girl: Jade. But life didn't run well for him: he separates with Jade and, during the twenty years that have passed during the novel, he's not the same thing physically, his projects are lost by the way, he has no more the tenderness, the romantic atmosphere, and the poetry of before. He's now dry by inside. Jade, in the other side, lived all this time imagining that her life would be much happier if she had married him. Twenty years later they meet again. Jade gets upset, trying to find, in the forty years old Lucas, what is left from the person she once fell in love with. That's when the clone appears, made by Lucas' godfather without his knowledge, the geneticist Albieri. The clone is not Lucas, but it is the image that Jade loved during her whole life. We have then, an uncommon love triangle: Lucas becoming the rival of himself. The appearing of the clone changes completely the lifes of the other characters of the plot.

Film Editing by Alberto Gouvea, Art Direction by Tiza de Oliveira, Costume Design by Paulo Lóes, Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - Daniel Ghivelder (assistant director), Art Department - May Martins (set designer).

What do you get when you mix the story of two young lovers and the making of a human clone? You get an interesting story by way of a Brazilian telenovela (soap opera) called O CLONE (The Clone).

Known for incorporating social issues into her stories, Glória Perez includes the following topics in her latest telenovela: Drug addiction, Middle Eastern culture (Muslim lifestyle), and science fiction (human cloning). Given the current news headlines of cloning and the Middle East, the telenovela becomes even more important and gives cause for discussion after viewing each episode.

O CLONE takes the viewer to two striking locations - modern-day Brazil and Morocco. The two main characters are introduced - Jade, a headstrong Muslim girl from Morocco and Lucas, a docile, daydreamer from Brazil with a Catholic religious background. The two meet and fall in love. The problem is that their different cultures make it difficult for a union between them. Jade's family has chosen a family for her, and Lucas's family is reluctant for him to marry a foreigner. In addition to their story, a scientist creates a human clone after a loved one prematurely dies. This clone later becomes an important part of the lives of Jade and Lucas.

The viewer gets a chance to see a Muslim household and what goes on there. Some of the scenes may be a bit exaggerated since the storytellers use poetic license to make the story more dramatic. However, the scenes can be used to open up a dialogue of discussion about a culture that may not be known or understood by many in the west. Despite the differences between the cultures - Christian and Muslim, it becomes clear that there are many similarities such as one's love of family and the desire to find happiness.

Veteran novela director, Jayme Monjardim and his team have produced an outstanding product with O CLONE. His handiwork shows beautiful close-ups of the actors and enchanting shots of the land and cityscape of Morocco and Brazil. He skillfully captures both places.

The lead actress, Giovanna Antonelli (Jade), gives a believable presentation as the Muslim girl, torn between following her true heart's desire and the dictates of her family to marry the man chosen for her. Lead actor, Murilo Benício (Lucas) also gives a winning performance as the young man who has fallen in love with a girl from a different society who his family will not accept. Benicio plays three different roles - twins and the clone. Each character is different and convincing.

The rest of the cast also gives strong performances. This includes Stênio Garcia as Uncle Ali, Elaine Giardini as Nazira, Daniela Escobar as Maysa, Vera Fischer as Yvette, Reginaldo Farias as Leônidas, Leticia Sabatella as Latiffa, Dalton Vigh as Said, Antonio Calloni as Mohamed, Adriana Lessa as Deusa, and Jandira Martini as Zoraide. Actually the cast list goes on I'm sure you get the idea. All the actors are good.

O CLONE captured the attention of over 18 million viewers in Brazil. The telenovela successfully took hold of the American T.V. audience, as well. Brazilian telenovelas shown in the U.S. are usually dubbed into Spanish. For the first time in the history of telenovelas shown in the U.S., English sub-titles (closed caption) have been included. Now, non-Spanish speakers have a chance to enjoy the story as well.

In addition to an arresting and sometimes controversial storyline, the telenovela has a fun music soundtrack full of Brazilian and Middle Eastern music. Thanks to musical director, Marcus Viana, the music adds to the success of the novela as a whole.

O CLONE is one of those telenovelas that doesn't waste your time. I highly recommend this Brazilian soap opera for your viewing pleasure.

CLONING OF JOANNA MAY, THE

Joanna May is a woman who has been cloned three times by the use of the latest technology, by her obsessive husband.

Joanna once was married to Carl May, a very rich and powerful nuclear energy magnate. They love each other, but had to divorce after Joanna was caught on an incidental love affair. Since then Carl has made Joanna's life impossible. 10 years later she's fed up with the situation and decides to visit him, only to find that once he made three copies of her.

Wheldon's comic-romantic melodrama about an obsessive business tycoon who effectively clones his wife, then repudiates her when she is unfaithful - with the aim of taking one of the three clones as his new wife when they have grown up - is already painted in broad strokes. The three-hour tv dramatisation is even broader, though not unwitty, with finely over-the-top performances all round. The series was produced by Gub Neal, directed by Philip Saville and the screenplay was by Ted Whitehead. Another less successful series was also written by Wheldon, GROWING RICH.

GROWING RICH

CLOUD BURST

Cloud Burst tells the story of Tim and Jenny Barber. When they lose their model aeroplane, they meet Ram Pandit, a kindly scientist working on a rainmaking machine to help the people of his native India. Unfortunately, Ram's evil twin Ravi (played by the same actor - Renu Setna) wants it himself and steals it. Tim and Jenny save the day, but Ram discovers a spy in his camp. Richard Carpenter presented the studio bits, with Wordy (Mr Watchword, to give you his full name) appearing for the first time.

In the long-running history of Look and Read, for me, 'Cloud Burst' ranks as one of the best stories. It succeeds in every department, from the cast (notably the excellent Renu Setna and Michael Sheard) through to the well-paced storyline about using technology for good or evil. It also contains some particularly good cliff-hangers, in the best traditions of Look and Read. Cloud Burst is also memorable for the first appearance of 'Wordy' during the teaching bits in the middle. Here, he pops up each episode out of author Richard Carpenter's typewriter. Carpenter wrote three Look and Read stories, the others being the frankly chilling 'Boy from Space' (1971) and archaeology-based 'The Kings Dragon' (1977). Now being repeated once again on digital TV, it's well worth a view, either from the point of view of a new viewer or an ex-school child reminiscing about watching it back in the seventies on an old black and white pye telly in a freezing cold school hall on a rainy Tuesday morning...

This was the first "Look and Read" story to feature Wordy and the famous "eyes" animation logo at the beginning.

Renu Setna could not drive at the time of filming, so all scenes featuring Ravi in the black Mercedes were achieved by the film crew pushing the car in and out of shot. This explains also why all the scenes featuring the car driving on the road were done by other characters (such as Number Two and Dick Turner).

Whereas "The Boy from Space" had concerned itself with a futuristic threat arriving on Earth, "Cloud Burst" acted almost as a variant of the BBC's contemporaneous "sci-fact" drama series, Doomwatch, with the threat essentially emanating from within the planet itself.

Not wishing to deviate from a successful formula, the story revolved around yet another adolescent male/female pairing, Tim (Nigel Rathbone) and Jenny (future Blue Peter presenter Tina Heath). Boasting an unnatural interest in atmospheric conditions courtesy of their lock-keeper father, through a series of typical Look and Read incidents involving mysterious motorcyclists and runaway radio controlled aeroplanes they become involved with Ram Pandit (Renu Setna), a scientist working away on a massive computer in a private laboratory to create a "rain gun" that will eliminate drought and famine. Also working away on a massive computer in a private laboratory is Ram's twin brother Ravi, who is determined to steal his secrets and use them for slightly less benevolent purposes. What's more, he and his henchmen have a handy "gas gun" at their disposal, making the acquisition of said research a lot easier for them.

What follows is a traditional and often deliberately confusing espionage film-styled runaround of thefts, counter thefts, and mistaken identity (Ravi for Ram and vice versa), but it is all quite skillfully done and the climax - when Ravi attempts to fire the rain gun and flood the fens (finishing Ram and his research off in the process), and is only thwarted at the last minute through the skilful jamming of the gun's communication systems by the model aeroplane that started everything off - is edge-of-the-seat material.

"Cloud Burst" was very well made in general; the scientific equipment glimpsed in the story inevitably looks severely outmoded today, but it benefited from a minimalist design intended to emphasize its "homemade" nature which prevented it from lapsing into the silliness that dogged most other television representations of computers from that era. Also, special mention should be made of the arresting opening titles, featuring disturbing footage of lush foliage blooming from out of dry desert land to the accompaniment of well-placed thunderclap effects and a dramatic theme tune by the Radiophonic Workshop's Roger Limb. Although Carpenter later described the serial as a parable about nuclear power, whether or not the actual concept of the

1 - 4 THE GAS-GUN

Another Indian, Ram's brother, is plotting to steal a computer "firing program" from Ram. Jenny and Tim set off to Ram's house to collect the repaired remote control. Realising that his brother, Ravi, is on his way, Ram hurriedly types a message into the computer before he succumbs to gas fired by the gun of Ravi's henchman, Number Two.

1 - 5 IN THE HUT

Ram is kidnapped before Jenny and Tim arrive. They are allowed into the house by Mrs. Green, the housekeeper, and are unaware of the fate that has befallen Ram. When they are caught in a downpour on their journey home, they shelter in a hut. As they leave, they are confronted by Mr. Turner.

1 - 6 THE SECRET

Mr. Turner is puzzled as to why Ram is not at home. He goes to the house with the children and they find the beginnings of an unfinished message on the computer. It refers to Ram's twin brother, Ravi. He is now holding Ram prisoner in a factory. Mr. Turner takes Jenny and Tim into his confidence and reveals that he and Ram have been developing a "rain-gun" that will end drought and famine in India.

1 - 7 TO THE MILL!

Ravi announces his plan to use the rain-gun to flood the Fens and hold the country to ransom. He reveals that, using the information held on Ram's computer, he has been able to make a copy of Ram's rain-gun and tricks Mr. Turner into travelling to a windmill, where Ram is to be held.

1 - 8 THE SIGNAL

Ram is moved to the mill and, when Mr. Turner arrives, he, too, is captured and imprisoned. The children, meanwhile, are still at Ram's house. Knowing that Ravi is returning to the house to steal the firing programme, Ram sends a message to the children using the model plane's remote control unit, which is still in his pocket. The signal, he hopes, will alert them to Ravi's imminent arrival. Jenny and Tim hide while Ravi steals the firing program. They follow him to the mill.

1 - 9 ESCAPE

Ravi takes the rain-gun to flood the Fens, and leaves a henchman, Number Three, who we recognise as the man on the motor bike, to hold Ram and Mr. Turner prisoner in the mill. To create a diversion, Tim starts the motor bike outside and, in the ensuing confusion, he and his sister sneak inside to set Ram and Mr. Turner free. The race is on to stop Ravi using the rain-gun.

1 - 10 FIRE THE ROCKETS!

Ravi begins firing the rain-gun's rockets that will ultimately cause massive flooding. Jenny suggests using her plane to hit the machine and sabotage it. Ram believes the rain-gun can be destroyed if the aerial is hit. The plane strikes the aerial and Ravi's scheme is foiled. Ravi escapes but Number Three is unmasked as Ram's housekeeper, Mrs. Green, who has been supplying Ram's secrets to Ravi!

COBRA

Plot 1

Scandal Jackson is shot in the face, and the surgery to rebuild his face is paid for by a group named Cobra, dedicated to bringing justice to those who can't get it from the police or the system. In return for paying for his surgery Cobra, founded by Quentin Avery and led by Dallas Cassel and his assistant Danielle LaPoint, wants Scandal to help crack a case that may involve the person that murdered his father. But in pursuing the case, Scandal soon runs across some unpleasant facts surrounding his father's death.

Scandal and Dallas pose as efficiency experts at the water distribution plant to find out how the mob is shipping their cocaine. Meanwhile, Scandal seeks to find out the truth about the mysterious Danielle.

Robert "Scandal" Jackson, Jr., is an ex-Navy SEAL who went A.W.O.L. after refusing to blow up an enemy command center housing civilians. He disappeared to the wilderness of Alaska, changing his name and appearance, and became a teacher in a small Inuit community. But a part of his past caught up to him and he was shot in the face, his comatose body left for dead. He awoke in the hospital three weeks later and found himself with a new face and a new chance at life, thanks to a woman named Danielle LaPoint.

Danielle offered him a job with Cobra, an undercover anti-crime agency that provides justice for victims who haven't benefited from the system. Scandal is reluctant to leave his Alaskan life behind, but then her boss, Dallas Cassel, makes him an offer he can't refuse: the chance to catch the man who murdered his father five years earlier. From behind the wheel of his classic A/C Cobra, Scandal dispenses justice in the fictional Bay City, California

This show was filmed in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada. Stephen J Cannell also produced the SF show UNSUB.

Starring Michael Dudikoff (American Ninja), Allison J. Hossack, and James Tolkan (Back to the Future), Cobra was created by legendary television producer Stephen J. Cannell, along with Steven Long Mitchell and Craig W. Van Sickle (both of whom later went on to create/executive produce The Pretender for NBC), and was filmed on location in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada

Robert "Scandal" Jackson, Jr.: A martial artist, an expert marksman, an ex-Navy SEAL, and a former investigator for NSI, Scandal is perfectly suited to be Cobra's lead field operative. The only part of his past that remains is his vintage Cobra, which he helped his father restore when he was younger. He's also developed an attraction for Danielle LaPoint, but he doesn't let it get in the way of doing his job.

Danielle LaPoint: The niece of Cobra's founder, Quentin Avery, Danielle is more or less Scandal's partner. Her mother was killed ten years earlier, and as a result she turned to helping victims like herself by working for Cobra. She holds a Ph.D from Harvard University and was personally responsible for recruiting Scandal after arguing with her uncle that he was the perfect choice.

Dallas Cassel: A former F.B.I. agent, Dallas is the director of Cobra. He almost got off on the wrong foot with Scandal when he faked Scandal's death in order to secure him an honorable discharge from the Navy, but Scandal ultimately realized the faking was for the best.

TRIVIA

Cobra was originally called Viper. However, Chrysler Corp. sued Stephen J. Cannell for trademark infringement, and also because Chrysler was already working with CBS on a series with the same title and featuring a brand new Dodge Viper concept car. (That show ultimately aired on NBC.) Since that series centered around a modern day Knight Rider of sorts and Cannell's show centered on a crime fighter (Scandal), he figured the name could be changed without sacrificing the creative concept of the series, and so the title was changed to Cobra. Interesting enough is that three episodes had already been filmed when the title change took place, so it appears Scandal would have still been driving the Cobra even with the show called Viper. (Source: Variety.com; March 24, 1993)

The main theme by the music group Saga originally had lyrics, but the producers decided to not use them at the last minute.

Saga produced several songs for the series, to be featured in specific episodes, but most were never used. Their 1995 album "Steel Umbrellas" contained most of these songs. The CD rereleased in 2002 and left off one song from the '95 version, but contained a previously-unreleased song, "Push It" (likely written for the episode of the same name). Gerald O'Brien, who provided Cobra's instrumental score, co-wrote one song ("Never Alone"), and creators Steven Mitchell and Craig Van Sickle wrote "Push It."

Great Show. The way it was presented was classic. I really liked the way the lead actor narrated the opening and key scenes about the plot. This show was very well casted. Will never see another show like it. I am hoping that sometime in the near future they put this show on Dvd. I do not see why it it not yet, if you compare it to some of the trash and other shows that are still on tv are being show on air. When you compare Cobra with some of the shows that are on dvd It really makes me wonder why they would wast a dvd on some of the shows out already.

An aloof businessman hires the Cobra team to safeguard his daughter after she is nearly kidnapped, but the girl seems determined to stay unprotected.

1 - 9 I'D DIE FOR YOU

When Dallas mysteriously disappears, Scandal and Danielle reluctantly agree to see a lawyer's client who is scheduled to be executed in two days for killing his pop star girlfriend. Scandal becomes convinced the man is innocent, but Dallas shows up and tries to stop their investigation because he was the officer of record at the man's original arrest.

1 - 10 SOMETHING IN THE AIR

Scandal bets Danielle that he is better in the raw elements, so they go for a weekend of camping and hiking. But the plan turns bad when they stumble across an escaped plane hijacker, whom they take captive. But they soon end up on the run from the man's gang. Meanwhile, Dallas heads the search effort to locate them.

1 - 11 PLAYING WITH FIRE

Cobra is hired to try and catch an arsonist who has been torching the buildings of a wealthy industrialist. The problem is, the suspect seems to be an arsonist who died years before.

1 - 12 DEATH ON THE LINE

The producer of a late-night lonely hearts radio show hires Cobra to protect the beautiful female star of the show, who may be in danger from a regular caller who has already killed one of the men she dated. Scandal poses as her boyfriend to draw out the stalker.

1 - 13 DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH

Cobra is hired to check the security at a museum hosting valuable jewelry, so Scandal must keep breaking into the museum to test the security. The jewelry gets stolen anyway, and the suspect is the daughter of a famous jewel thief. But it turns out her father has been kidnapped and that she's being coerced into burglarizing.

1 - 14 LOST IN CYBERSPACE

A computer expert's cyber-girlfriend is kidnapped, so Cobra is hired to rescue her. They soon find out that the girlfriend is a computer security consultant, and her kidnapping seems to be related to her skills at breaking into corporate computer systems.

1 - 15 BLAST FROM THE PAST

Scandal's predecessor at Cobra returns and kidnap Dallas. Scandal wants to know more about him, but Danielle becomes agitated and too disturbed (or too secretive) to answer his questions. So Scandal must find out Danielle's secret and come to Dallas's rescue, mostly in the dark, with his predecessor taunting him all the way.

1 - 16 DEATH DIVE

Scandal goes undercover at an ocean theme park as a marine biologist when Cobra is hired by a marine expert, Danielle's old college roommate, whose boyfriend died while on an ocean dive. Things soon point to another diver, an ex-Navy SEAL.

1 - 17 CAGED FURY

Danielle goes on vacation, but on her way she accidentally hits a woman being chased by a small town police force. Danielle is accused of aiding a fugitive and is thrown in jail with the woman. While Danielle tries to figure out what is going on, Scandal and Dallas try to find out what happened when they can't get in touch with her.

1 - 18 A FEW DEAD MEN

Scandal poses as a Private, and Danielle a Major, at a boot camp when Cobra is hired to investigate the death of a marine. They soon determine it's murder, and a tough Marine Sergeant looks to be the killer.

1 - 19 HAUNTED LIVES

Cobra is hired when a man's family is terrorized. Scandal thinks the wife is not telling all. He, Danielle and Dallas soon learn that the woman's past is not what she claims it was, and it all seems to tie into a former Stasi agent, who is a trainer of hitmen and a master of disguise.

1 - 20 LORRINDA

Cobra is hired to keep a mob housekeeper alive long enough to testify at the trial of two ruthless sons of an old-style mobster. Scandal is sent to drive her cross-country to Bay City, but the sons kidnap their institutionalized father to keep her from testifying.

1 - 21 PRECIOUS

A stand-up comic dies on stage, and Cobra is hired by the comic's agent to find out how he died. When the agent turns up dead, the most-likely suspect seems to be the comic's mentally unstable, former girlfriend, who is a ventriloquist with a wise-cracking dummy named Precious.

1 - 22 ACES AND EIGHTS

Cobra is hired by the father of a man murdered after a high stakes poker game. The only witness was the man's girlfriend, Kelly Masterson, who is a poker expert. It all seems to tie into the man's boss, a mobster who likes to play poker for big money. So Scandal poses as a gambler to get to the bottom of things.

CODE NAME: ETERNITY

Code Name: Eternity premiered in syndication on May 14, 2000. A desperate hit man-Ethaniel. A beautiful psychotherapist-Dr. Laura Keating. A headlong flight from authorities. All is not what it seems in Code Name: Eternity. Ethaniel, an alien creature from a distant galaxy, takes on human form in order to capture the rogue alien David Banning. Now Ethaniel must learn about our world: how we think and how we relate to each other. Dr. Laura Keating assists Ethaniel in his understanding of the "human" way while he pursues Banning. Ethaniel knows Banning's secret goal lies in the brain of Thorber, Ethaniel's missing brother. A brilliant scientist, Thorber originally worked with Banning but fled after discovering Banning's real scheme: the ultimate destruction of all human life on earth. Joined by Byder, a rebel hooked on conspiracy theories, Ethaniel and Dr. Laura Keating set out on their mission.

Forging a powerful interspecies alliance, Laura and Ethaniel risk their lives and their emotions, including their growing love for each other. CODENAME ICARUS

This superb BBC Children's drama, told the story of Martin Smith (Barry Angel) who was incredibly talented at maths. He was recruited into a special school for gifted children. But the manor house he was sent to held a sinister secret - he and the other children were being hypnotised to work on military projects without their knowledge. Martin eventually realises something is going on, but when he tries to leave he is stopped by horrific sounds of bird cries planted in his subconscious.

The series was made in 1981 by a group of people still associated with Children's drama: Producer Marilyn Fox (involved with EARTHFISTS), Director Paul Stone and writer Richard Cooper (Eye of the Storm). A video of the series was also brought out at the time, as well as a book based on the series.

COME BACK MRS NOAH

In the year 2050, Mrs. Pertrude Noah has won a prize for being an exemplary housewife. Part of the prize includes a tour of the Britannia Seven. Britain's most advanced space station which is on Earth waiting to be launched into space. During the tour she and the rest of her party are accidentally launched into Earth orbit. Accompanying her into orbit was Clive Cunliffe, a journalist, Carstairs and Fanshaw, space agency officials and Garstang, the space ship's dim-witted light bulb changer. Back on Earth, Garfield Hawk was in charge of mission control attempting to devise a plan to get them all back safely.

Sitcom in space from the creators of 'Allo 'Allo and Are you being served?. Many of the series' jokes centred on Mrs. Noah regarding the spaceship as no more complicated than a vacuum cleaner, as she and the other adjusted to life in the 35,000 mph fast lane, and awaited the efforts of mission control to rescue them.

Episodes chronicled mission control's attempts to bring the travellers back home. While in space Mrs. Noah did not understand what all the fuss was about, she continued to go on with her daily routine as best she could, given the circumstances. The producer for the series was David Croft, designers for the show were Don Giles, Paul Trerise and Tony Snoaden. Episode one of the show was also shown as a 'pilot' episode on the 13th December 1977. The series was first shown on BBC1.

Bob Spiers (Press Gang, Absolutely Fabulous) directed all the episode except the pilot and David Croft produced. Croft more successful teamed up with Jimmy Perry for Dad's Army, It Ain't Half Hot Mum and Hi-Di-Hi! Critics tend to agree that Come Back Mrs. Noah is far from his best work, and was a rather silly and forgettable addition to the Science Fiction comedy genre.

COMET-SAN (1967)

Comet, a mischievous alien girl, is such a handful on her homeworld of Beta that her school principal sends her off to work for the Peace Corps in the middle of nowhere - Earth. The trip does nothing to mellow Comet and she even defaces a star with graffiti on her way. Taking a job as a housemaid, she inspires the suspicions of boys Takeshi and Koji, through few believe them when they claim that their housekeeper can make wishes come true with a magic wand or that she is in a constant struggle to protect the Earth from invaders.

Although parallels with Bewitched (1964) and I Dream of Jeannie (1965) seem obvious, Comet-San was officially adapted from the girl's mang serialized in Margaret magazine by Mitsuteru Yokoyama, who also created GIGANTOR and JOHNNY SOKKO AND HIS GIANT ROBOT. In a Japan that was still getting used to animation on TV, Comet-San added special effects by integrating live-action with animation provided by future anime director Tadao Nagahama. After the 20th episode, the monochrome series burst into full colour, adding to its innovative look. Theme : Yumiko Konoë - "Comet-San".

COMMANDER'S LOG

Commander Craig-Scott of the Laundry Corps is thrust into command of his space ship when the other senior officers die. He struggles to maintain control along with Laundry Chief Blather, amid a host of strange, and largely incompetent characters.

Commander's Log is a low-budget comedy-science fiction television show.

A kooky, but funny bit of diversion. You kind of have to see it from the beginning to follow what's happening, but each report to earth has it's own little joke. Pretty good special effects for a very low budget sci-fi t.v. show. It's fun to watch. Sort of in the vein of Red Dwarf, but even more low budget. For someone who's just coming in in the middle of one of the episodes, what you have to realize is that these guys are all incompetent, because they've been moved up the ladder of command, because the other officers died. Also, the main guys are from the laundry corps, which is why they have laundry in everything. If you like Red Dwarf, you'll probably like this. Slightly different t.v. concept, in that all you see is the Commander's report each day.

It would be better if this were explained more, not just in the very beginning of the first episode, but then it was pretty hard to figure out what had happened in Red Dwarf too, if you hadn't been told.

Produced by Craig Bowsby producer

Original Music by Craig Bowsby, The Sons of Joe , Jon-Michael Thor , Jon Thor

Cinematography by Kathy Herndl & Mathias Herndl

Film Editing by Jon-Michael Preece

What we see, as the audience, is the new Commander's reports to mission control. Initially this was made as a series of 2 minute or less episodes to be used as interstitials. However, as brilliant as this concept is, it wasn't brilliant enough for t.v., so it was then packaged together as two half hour format (22 minutes) episodes and then it sparkled enough to be picked up by the Space Channel as a filler, in March of 2004. (Which is when it was initially shown. They actually bought it in the fall of 2003).

Two more episodes have been shot (#s 3 and 4), and two more are planned. Everything was shot in Vancouver British Columbia. The first two episodes (actually 24 shorts), were filmed all on one set. The subsequent two were filmed on multiple sets. Although the sets are very low budget, the post production special effects have a very professional pedigree, having been designed by Northwest Imaging, the award winning post production house of the Andromeda television series.

The show is directed by Jon-Michael Preece, who has been a fixture in the film scene in Vancouver for many years, working, among other things, as producer and 2nd unit director on the Millennium television series. Two new important continuing roles are started with episode 3 and 4, with Michael Roberds, as Doctor Patsey, who previously played "Uncle Fester," on the new Addams Family television show, and Greg Anderson, a well known television actor, as the antagonist, Commander Bastard.

The song, "Galaxies Are Lonely Places," the theme from Commander's Log, is featured on a new CD being released this fall. The Co-writer, John Thor, who had a large heavy metal following, is branching into popular music and has compiled a number of songs under the new band, "The Elo's." (The CD is being released by Revolver Records in San Francisco, and Scratch records in Canada. It will be available in major stores, such as Virgin Mega Store, and A and B Sound.) COMMANDO CODY Equipped with several secret laboratories, a spaceship and an ordinary revolver, Cody fought conventional gangsters and, occasionally, the Ruler, an evil genius from outer space.

Unsurprisingly reminiscent of the absurdities of the movie serials, CC was more entertaining than the slicker CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT. The following year, COMMADO CODY: SKY MARHSALL OF THE UNIVERSE, streaked through the skies again, battling another evil galactic emperor this time known as The Ruler. Unlike other serials, each of Commando Cody's 12 episodes was a complete story, with the entire series connected by the efforts of the Ruler to foil Cody's actions (which included a controlled (spray of 'cosmic dust' around the Earth which could only be penetrated by the 'dispersal ray' in Cody's ship) and conquer Earth. It was an experiment that besides its theatrical release was sponsored on television by Post Cereals on its initial run, causing thousands of kids to wish they had Cody's flying jacket. Columbia on the other hand, instead of coming up with an original character for its first SF serial of the Fifties, turned to the movies' biggest rival, television, optioning the medium's first and most famous space opera hero, CAPTAIN VIDEO.

COMMANDO CODY: SKY MARSHALL OF THE UNIVERSE

Two young scientists, Ted Richards and Joan Gilbert (William Schallert & Aline Towne) arrive at Commando Cody's office/lab where they are greeted and interviewed by Commissioner Henderson. He tells them that Cody was a greatly respected war hero as well as a brilliant scientist.

Cody wears a mask at all times to protect his identity (I guess so he can go grab a beer without getting recognised.) When Cody arrives, he tells them that he has surrounded the Earth with a cloud of cosmic dust because some alien miscreant is firing missiles at us. Cody produces designs for a rocketship that he plans to build in a small, deserted town called Graphite.

Despite constant sabotage attempts by the Ruler (the EAIC--Evil Alien In Charge) and his men, they build the ship and successfully test-fly it. One of the EAIC's minions manages to crash land on Earth in a small rocket and after being rescued by a human agent, presents himself to Cody as an expert in rocket propulsion. He offers to help Cody improve the Rocket-ship's performance in exchange for some uranium. His hidden agenda is to steal the ship and use the uranium to help the Ruler in his plans to conquer Earth. Of course, Cody and his friends thwart the Ruler's plot, or this would have been one short series.

Judd Holdren also played Commando Cody in the cinema serial COMMANDO CODY. History--In 1949, Republic Pictures released a serial called, "King Of The Rocketmen" starring Tristram Coffin as Jeff King, an intrepid scientist who had invented a flying suit to aid in his battle against the Forces Of Evil. They followed this, in 1951, with "RADAR MEN FROM THE MOON" starring George Wallace as Commando Cody, an intrepid scientist who had invented a flying suit to aid in his battle against the Forces Of Evil. In 1952, "Zombies Of The Stratosphere" starred Judd Holdren as Larry Martin, an intrepid scientist...well, you know the rest. In 1953, Republic Pictures aired a syndicated television series, reviving the name of Commando Cody, but starring Judd Holdren as the intrepid scientist who had invented a flying suit to aid in his battle against the Forces Of Evil.

Seems the folks at Republic Pictures were pioneers in the field of recycling! This pilot was much like the serials lots of fist fights, recycled shots of Cody and the Rocketship (which for some reason they never named) flying from here to there and back. The acting was rather wooden, except for Schallert and Towne. But the scenes of Cody flying were always wondrous and watching him board the Rocketship in flight cracks me up every time I see it. (Imagine a bug hitting your windshield and you'll get the idea.) Juvenile television series about a superhero fighting both regular criminals and extraterrestrial super-villain "The Ruler."

Despite the title, the hero of this short-lived children's tv series was more likely to be found riding in a four-door sedan than travelling around the Universe. A cross between the Lone Ranger and Captain Midnight (his rival crime-fighter on CBS), Cody wore a costume that looked as if its previous owner had been in the German High Command and a mask whose function was unclear.

Cody (here played by Judd Holdren) and his sidekick Joan (Aline Towne) had previously appeared in two Republic Studios film serials, RADAR MEN FROM THE MOON (1952; 12 episodes), in which Cody was played by George Wallace, and COMMANDO CODY (1953; 12 episodes), starring Holdren. Equipped with several secret laboratories, a spaceship and an ordinary revolver, Cody fought conventional gangsters and, occasionally, the Ruler, an evil genius from outer space. Unsurprisingly reminiscent of the absurdities of the movie serials, CC was more entertaining than the slicker CAPTAIN MIDNIGHT. The series was produced by Mel Tucker and Franklyn Adreon.

Commando Cody, Sky Marshal of the Universe holds the distinction of being a television series that was released to theatres as a serial but devoid of the usual cliff-hanger endings; all episodes were complete in themselves as in any other television series. The reason is that Com-mando Cody was made for the television market, not the theatrical market. Reportedly, the series was the first effort by Republic Pictures' television subsidiary Hollywood Television Service, Inc. Although filmed at Republic in 1953, nothing much is known about Commando Cody until the summer of 1955 when NBC broadcast the series on Saturday mornings. We were unable to discern the date of its theatrical release. What remains peculiar about the program, however, is that works dealing with movie serials do not include it in their studies, deferring it to works dealing with television. But television reference works remain all too brief about the series' origins and history. In effect, no one seems to want to deal with the program, but, as is often the case, many are quick to deride its limitations of budget and its absurd use of science.

The program clearly has its origins in the 1952 Republic serial RADAR MEN FROM THE MOON, which began each episode with the title, "Introducing a New Character, Commando Cody, in..." George Wallace played Cody, a scientist working at his own Cody Laboratories. His nemesis was Retik (Roy Barcroft) the Moon Menace, who was bent on conquering the earth. Cody's greatest technological advancement was his amazing flying suit, which consisted of a leather tunic with two rocket engines attached to the back, and a bullet shaped helmet.

Cody controlled the flying suit by using three buttons on a control panel on his chest, one for activation, one for speed, and one for direction (labelled merely "on/off," "fast/slow" and "up/down," respectively). Anyone conversant with serial lore will immediately recognise that Cody's flying suit was previously worn by scientist Jeff King (Tris Coffin) in Republic's 1949 serial King of the Rocket Men. Cody later passed his rocket suit on to scientist Larry Martin (Judd Holdren) in the serial Zombies of the Stratosphere (1952), a sort of reworking of Radar Men from the Moon.

For Commando Cody, Sky Marshall of the Universe, Cody is now a government scientist working for the Interplanetary Commission, apparently a branch of the American government. He is assisted by Joan Gilbert and Ted Richards (characters from the original serial), who are helping him adapt atomic power for rocket propulsion.

William Schallert portrayed a serious-minded Ted Richards in the first three episodes. Thereafter, Ted was replaced by Dick Preston, portrayed by Richard Crane (see Rocky Jones, Space Ranger), a less serious-minded colleague who served as comic relief at the close of each episode. The major difference between the serial and the series, however, is Cody's mask and uniform. In the original, Cody wears no mask and is dressed in a business suit; he is described as a scientist working to perfect space travel. In the television series, Cody dons mask and military style uniform and is described as an important personage with close government ties. "Every-thing that takes place here is strictly top secret," Commissioner Henderson tells Joan and Ted, "and that's why the government insists that Commando Cody wear a mask at all times. Even the people who work for him mustn't know who he is." The appellation "Commando" is never explained in the serial or the television series.

Cody's nemesis in the series is the Ruler a mad scientist from somewhere in outer space, portrayed by Gregory Gay, who had portrayed the Martian menace Mota in Republic's Flying Disc Man from Mars (1951). As with earlier Republic science fiction serials, the Ruler remains in outer space but employs earthly agents, here Dr. Varney (Peter Brocco) in the first two episodes and Baylor (Lyle Talbot) in the rest. Cost-conscious producer Franklin Adreon, who was still producing serials at the studio, designed his series around available library footage; Adreon had the entire Republic serial library at his disposal, and all the footage of Cody in flight were assembled from the previous serials. The rocket flights were also culled from previous serials, including The Purple Monster Strikes (1945), Republic's first effort at modern science fiction. In addition, numerous episodes involved great disasters befalling the earth; these disasters were represented by lots of stock footage culled not only from newsreels but from masterful special effects footage by the Lydecker brothers.

In sum, Commando Cody, Sky Marshal of the Universe was pure space fantasy of the Flash Gordon variety. Actual science was non-existent, replaced by the colourful language of scientism. Buzzwords like "atomic" and "radiation" were dropped frequently along with such neologisms as "Thenustrium" and "Sat-urnium." Finding the Ruler located on planet M-27 was easy, Cody explains to Henderson, since it is in the "first planetary system west of ours." These qualities, coupled with the always impressive special effects of Howard and Theodore Lydecker, make Commando Cody, Sky Marshal of the Universe one of the more enjoyable diversions of the 1950s.

The information below is incomplete since we were unable to find a comprehensive credit list for each episode. In addition, the credits for the theatrical release may be different from the television release since a theatrical press-book identified more credits and cast members than shown on the credits at the close of each television episode.

1 - 1 ENEMIES OF THE UNIVERSE (PILOT)

From Republic's press release: "The Ruler, a diabolical scientist who wants to enslave the Solar System, learns of Commando Cody's design for a rocketship that can go anywhere in outer space. He is determined to sabotage Cody's work."

Commando Cody is a top secret scientist who wears a mask for security reasons. He receives two new assistants, Joan Gilbert and Ted Richards, that help him develop an atomic powered rocketship. The Interplanetary commission has received a warning from a mad scientist known as Ruler. Cody is named the new sky marshal of the universe in order to combat Ruler's threat. Cody explains that reports of flying saucers are actually reports of Ruler's missiles attempting to land on Earth. Cody develops an cosmic dust blanket that encircles the globe and that will cause any enemy craft to disintegrate before entering earth atmosphere. Ruler fears Cody's abilities and sends agents to sabotage Cody's rocket and learn the secret of the cosmic dust blanket. Cody drives off the agents and finishes his rocket preparing another line of defense against the Ruler.

1 - 2 ATOMIC PERIL

From Republic's press release: "Lenotto is sent to the Earth by the Ruler to help Dr. Varney in destroying Commando Cody. First they try to gain Cody's confidence by introducing him to a new element. When given the opportunity they try to steal Commando Cody's rocketship and in the ensuing scuffle Lenotto is killed with his own gun."

Unable to penetrate the cosmic dust blanket with his warships, the Ruler sends an agent Lenato inside a small missile headed for earth. Lenato carries Thenustrium: a new element developed on Planet X. Lenato tells Dr. Varney that Thenustrium is similar to uranium, but is easier to control. Lenato and Dr. Varney poses as scientists who have discovered the new element. They are able to get into Commander Cody's lab. Cody examines the element and realizes that combining it with uranium will allow him to construct a rocket with more power and range. When Cody leaves, Lenato and Varney kidnap Joan and Ted. They steal Cody's rocket and fly away. Lenato and Varney discuss their plans aboard the rocket. Cody overhears them using a two-way radio. Cody intercepts the flight before it leaves Earth and takes Lenato and Varney into custody.

1 - 3 COSMIC VENGEANCE

From Republic's press release: "A strange garbled message convinces Commando Cody that the Ruler is trying to contact his agents on Earth. Cody tries to find the Ruler before he can carry out his newest plot."

Commando Cody discovers that the Ruler is on the Planet Venus. Ross and Hardy learn that Commando Cody plans to fly to Venus and they sabotage his rocket ship. However, Cody manages to land the crippled ship on Venus and confronts the Ruler. The Ruler reveals his plans to conquer Earth and other habitable planets. He shows off his weapons of conquest. Cody manages to bury the "Ruler of Outer Space" in his operations cavern on Venus.

1 - 4 NIGHTMARE TYPHOON

From Republic's press release: "A series of destructive floods and typhoons strike all parts of the Earth. Commando Cody suspects that this is part of the Ruler's latest plan to conquer the world."

Ted Richards is transferred and replaced by Dick Preston. The Ruler uses a rocket (R-6) containing a 'radioactive' gas which causes hurricanes, floods and typhoons. The Ruler threatens to completely destroy the Earth unless the Earth surrenders unconditionally.

1 - 5 WAR OF THE SPACE GIANTS

From Republic's press release: "The Ruler has found an element on the planet Saturn that enables him to drop germ capsules through the Cosmic Dust Blanket onto the Earth."

The Ruler uses his M-7 rockets loaded with bombs which carry germ warfare agents. The Ruler issues and ultimatum: complete surrender or complete annihilation. Cody captures an unexploded M-7 and analysis indicates that the substance is "saturium," available only one of Saturn's moons. Cody, Joan and Dick travel to the moon and encounter a "magnetic drag ray." They manage to counteract the ray and destroy the mining facility on the surface.

1 - 6 DESTROYERS OF THE SUN

From Republic's press release: "The Ruler uses a device which puts out the sun's light. Panic results all over the world as it is plunged into darkness. Commando Cody must go to the Earth's rescue."

When the Ruler blots out the sun, Cody finds he is trapped on the Earth. A saboteur has added an element to the Station #8 dispenser for the Cosmic Dust Blanket. Cody's Disbursal Ray will not penetrate the Dust Blanket and allow his rocketship to leave the Earth. Cody discovers the saboteur and traces the energy source of the Ruler's device to Planet M-27. CONDORMAN

AKA: CONDORMAN : SYMBOL OF JUSTICE

AKA: SEIGI NO SHINBORU KONDORUMAN

The Earth is in great danger! The terrible Monster Clan has come together from all over the world to begin plotting the destruction of the world's environment and the corruption of the world's population. Only Ishin Mitsuya (who was killed while protecting the Dragon Condor's egg and then reborn through the dying creatures' powers and his pure heart) can help save the world from the Monster Clan as Condorman: Symbol of Justice!

Condorman is a great example of Toei's classic hero programs, showcasing several well done action scenes that are integrated into a very remarkable storyline, populated by interesting characters on both sides of the battle being fought.

I particularly like the villains presented in the first couple of episodes of the series, which make up the Monster Clan. Each of these monster is designed in such a way as to represent a different social problem currently affecting the world, for example one of the monsters known as Zeni-Kureiji (Money Crazy) represents human greed while others like Smogton (symbolizes air pollution) represent problems created by humans in the natural world.

Condorman himself is a worthy heroic figure, constantly tracking down the Monster Clan members in his car (Mach Condor) and defeating their attempts at wrecking havoc throughout the world. Seems like Condorman should get rid of his cape though, it makes every battle more difficult than it should be by getting in front of his face while punching the bad guys.

If you're a fan of classic special effects you will love Condorman! There are some great FX sequences in this show, including the one where Ishin Mitsuya henshin's into his heroic alter ego using his Golden Feather. Other notable FX's include great pyrotechnics during battles scenes and the great model work used to depict certain parts of the program.

I love Condorman but like I mention above I have problems with some of the violent scenes in which members of the Monster Clan beat up on defenseless kids. I know this was filmed a long time ago and that I probably should not apply today's standards of what can/should be depicted on television, but it still bothers me. Thankfully these scenes are short and limited; Condorman always arrives to save everyone who is being attacked by the monsters.

I saw Condorman for the first time last week, when I got Vol-1 through the mail. Wasn't sure on what to expect as all I've seen of this program till that point were photos in TV Kun and B-Club magazines. Thankfully, it turns out, Condorman was a blast to watch as the show featured a lot of great monster designs (although there were some questionable ones too) and many well done action scenes. However, like everything else Condorman also had some things that could be considered questionable, like depictions of violence against children by the show's monsters.

If you love classic hero programs like Rainbow Man or Diamond Eye, Condorman will be another great addition to your hero collection. If you never seen classic hero shows or are not sure as to what program to get in order to give them a try, you should get Condorman Vol-1. This program is a lot of fun and will keep you on the edge of your sit as every episode comes to its conclusion, which by the way, always end in a cliffhanger Seigi no Shinboru Kondoruman was created by Kawauchi, Kouhan the creator of Gekko Kamen (1958), Ai no Senshi Reinbooman (1972) and Hikari no Senshi Daiyamondo Ai (1973). Seigi no Shinboru Kondoruman was one of the few series produced by Hirayama, Tôru which featured characters that were not created by Ishinomori, Shotaro. Like Rainbowman and Diamond Eye, Condorman was serial, episodes often ended on a cliffhanger.

COUNTERSTRIKE

"A distant star. A dying planet. A race of desperate men seeking another home, another world to take over. One man is trying to stop them. A man not of this world . . ."

Centauran refugees from a doomed planet have come to Earth where, for about 15 years, they've been preparing to destroy the human race to make room for their own people. Their approach is covert and based on acts of subversion, rather than on outright open warfare (thus obviating the need for expensive spacecraft, elaborate costumes and lavish effects).

But they've reckoned without the Inter Galactic Council, a kind of United Nations of Space, which sends one of its agents to Earth in the guise of Simon King. King, who comes from the same Centauran star system, possesses acute physical and mental attributes to help him counter the Centauran plots. He's aided in his campaign by Mary, a woman doctor who discovers his secret when she treats him after he's been injured in the first episode. And King's reference points back to his base are the various faces of 'Control', seen only on a triangular screen in his apartment.

Low-budget 1969 BBC serial which relied on psychological thrills rather than hi-tech frills for its Invaders-style story of an alien threat to take over Earth. The series was created by Tony Williamson, a well-known ITC contributor and previously script editor on ADAM ADAMANT LIVES!, and was one of the last of its kind to be recorded in black and white. The show was consistently rated in the top 20 but ended - with just nine of its ten episodes having been shown - one week before colour came to BBC 1.

Counterstrike's producer was Patrick Alexander and its script editor was David Rolfe, the series was first shown on BBC1. Designers for the show included John Hurst, Ian Rawnsley, Ian Watson, David Spode. The episode "Nocturne", was a reworking of Anthony Skene's own script for the PRISONER episode "A, B and C". The episode "Out of Mind" was dropped by the BBC in a late programme change but was not rescheduled. It remains unscreened - and the tape has since been erased.

This 1969 BBC One series was created by Tony Williamson, veteran writer for both The Avengers, Adam Adamant Lives! and various ITC productions, and produced by Patrick Alexander. The genesis of the series goes back to 1966 when Williamson submitted a pilot script to the BBC. At first keen on the idea the BBC optioned the series for six months and planned to make 13 episodes, with Williamson himself writing 8 of the episodes. storylines were submitted by a host of scribes including Richard Harris, John Lucarotti, Dick Sharples, James Mitchell, Vincent Tilsey, Gerald Kelsey and Bill Stratton.

A pilot was put into production, but Williamson was unable to complete alterations to his script due to his workload on the ITC series The Champions so rewrites were carried out by Patrick Alexander. The pilot was entitled Mark of Cain and the central character was called Simon Cain (as opposed to King in the eventual series). Actor Barrie Ingham played Cain whilst he was supported by Jennifer Daniel as Dr Martha Scott. Guest stars featured in the pilot included Peter Vaughn, Julian Holloway and John Paul. The episode was recorded on 28th December 1966. It was never transmitted and no longer remains in the archives.

By January 1967 the BBC became concerned that the format of the series was very similiar to the new American show The Invaders, which had just begun screening on ATV. Consequently they decided to mothball the format. The pilot was shown to a test audience during the spring of 1967 and proved popular. Then in January 1968 the project was reactivated and the format was purchased from Williamson who did not have anything to do with the finished series. The format was again rejigged and the lead stars recast. Scripts began to be commissioned from October with a production schedule due to start in the summer of 1969.

John Finch starred as Simon King, an alien law enforcement officer on Earth, who thwarted potential invasions by less amicable aliens. The series ran for ten episodes between September and October and was broadcast on a Monday night after the main evening news. Episode length was 50 minutes.

Only the first four episodes of this series still exist in the archives, the rest were destroyed. Episode "Out of Mind" was dropped due to programme changes and was destroyed still unseen during BBC archive purges. Episode "The Mutant" marked one of the last shows to be made and broadcast by the BBC in black and white. The Xmas and New Year's season would see the launch of colour broadcasting on BBC 1.

CRIME TRAVELLER

French plays Jeff Slade, an average detective who is initially sceptical when the science officer at the police station (Holly Turner, played by Chloe Annett) tells him she has a time machine. It is a possibility he cannot ignore, however, when circumstantial evidence appears to back up her claim. Eventually he persuades her to take him back in time to prove it. Once in the past, he has little regard for Holly's 'Laws of Time', preferring to take his chances and find out for himself what tricks time has in store for him.

Slade's partner in crime-busting, Holly, is outwardly reluctant to use the time machine to solve crimes, but at the same time seems pleased to have someone to confide in. It is an uneasy pairing in which Slade seems to take the lead, even though Holly effectively holds the power because she is the one with the time machine. Perhaps she agrees to co-operate because she is devoted to her father's invention and Slade gives her an excuse to put it into action.

Keeping a bemused eye on Slade and Turner is their boss, Chief Inspector Kate Grisham. The part was originally written for a man, but this was changed when Sue Johnston's name was brought up in casting. Grisham doesn't have a clue what is really going on, of course, and spends most of her time being exasperated as Slade, who seems to miraculously solve the crimes despite constantly disobeying orders.

Chloe Annett who plays scientist Holly Turner is also known for playing the part of Christine Kochanski in RED DWARF (see separate entry). This series is made by Carnival Films who were also responsible for producing BUGS (see separate entry).

Not long after Crime Traveller finished airing, Teletext carried a report that said Crime Traveller had been renewed by the BBC. However this seemed to be a little quick off the mark. Despite this article quoting an "official" source saying that "it would be made public within the next few days" nothing was announced. Then TV Zone carried an article in their June issue, that the show had been cancelled, that was official. This was confirmed in July when the Radio Times has a small article in their Soundbites section, that due to "fluctuating viewing figures" which had varied from 11 to 8 million viewers, that another series had not been commissioned i.e.: show had not been renewed. That was it.

Michael French was more popular in the BBC soap opera Eastenders, he played womaniser David Wicks and no doubt a sizeable number of Crime Traveller's millions of viewers are loyal Eastenders fans. The format of this detective-drama-with-a-twist is indeed what provided the charm of classic series like THE AVENGERS, THE CHAMPIONS and The Saint.

Chloe Annett has something of a show-business background. Her father is director Paul Annett and her mother is a writer and voice tutor. Her previous work includes, a co-starring role in the American mini-series Jewels, as well as parts in tv's Byker Grove and Cadfael. Her two films are And How to Speak Japanese and Double X with Norman Wisdom. She also off course starred in RED DWARF.

The series was devised and written by Anthony Horowitz, who began his career when his spec script for Robin of Sherwood, Adam Bell, was pulled off the slush pile in 1985. He went on to write for more episodes of the series and followed it up with the British/French/American co-produced adventure series William Tell. He went on to write children's novels and work in film as well as writing for series such as Chiller, Murder Most Horrid, The Last Englishman and Poirot. It was while writing an episode of Poirot that the idea for Crime Traveller came to him.

Making Crime Traveller an enjoyable romp is what the series seems to be all about. Science Fiction writers have been playing with the concept of time travel since H.G. Wells wrote The Time Machine in 1895 and have found the whole idea to be full of paradoxes. The archetype would have to have been Robert A. Heinlein's famous short story All You Zombies, in which the main character not only goes back in time to become his own father, but has a sex change and becomes his own mother as well! In television terms

DOCTOR WHO was just one of many programmes which took advantage of the mind-boggling possibilities that present themselves when travelling in time in contemplated.

Crime Traveller, by contrast, is more concerned with the fun of the chase than the science of the problems. The series isn't really about high concepts, and probably never will be. Crime Traveller is a light cops and robbers adventure, and after weeks of death and destruction in the Saturday evening slot in Casualty, viewers doubtless found it a welcome change.

CRIMSON GHOST,THE

The Ghost's plans for world domination required the possession of the cyclotrode, a counter-atomic device that shortcircuited all electrical currents in its vicinity when switched on. To this purpose he kidnaps the machine's inventor (Duncan) only to be foiled at the last minute by criminologist Quigley.

This routine serial was touted by Republic as stemming from the headlines of the day: 'an amazing answer to the atomic bomb explodes in a blaze of serial super action'. But if the chapterplay's origins were contemporary, those ideas were cast in the most traditional of formulas. Thus Serial Queen Stirling, as the heroine, was in constant danger and the main plot device was the identity of the villain. To make this even more difficult, Republic had Bud Geary play the Ghost in his skull and cloak disguise and I. Stanford Jolley provide the voice (and when the Ghost in disguise spoke to Jolley, who had another role in the film, another actor dubbed the voice of Jolley in character).

Television's Lone Ranger, Moore, then alternating between playing goodies and baddies, plays the Ghost's principal heavy. A condensed version of the chapterplay was released in 1966 as Cyclotrode X. The serial was produced by Ronald Davidson, and the cinematographer was Bud Thackery.

CROW: STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN, THE

Eric Draven (Dacascos), a promising young musician, and his lover Shelly are murdered by a gang of loonies led by the magnificently malevolent Top Dollar. According to Native American folklore [a seeming pre-requisite for all new Science Fiction television in 1999], a crow should carry the dead persons soul from our world to the land beyond. Sadly, things don't go that smoothly for Draven who finds himself stranded on this side until he can work his way up the ladder, so to speak, thence united with the love of his life and death, the ethereal Shelly.

Poor soul, she has to wait on the bridge that spans the lands of the living and the dead until he gets there. In order to do that he must help other individuals, mortal or otherwise, resolve their differences and right wrongs, which he does in the guise of an alter ego - The Crow.

Usually, when a person mutters the immortal words "Get a life!" it's within the context of some unwanted advice being proffered to an appreciative recipient. This is not the case when the phrase is uttered by the inimitable Bryce Zabel, executive producer and writer of The Crow: Stairway to Heaven. When invited to pitch his ideas for a television series based on cult film success The Crow, Zabel decided not to dwell on the premise that the movies 'hero' was cloaked in darkness and out for revenge but that the 'walking dead guy' should instead be looking towards redemption for the sins of the world and that he should learn to live a little along the way.

Zabel had been director of photography for THE X FILES for two years and was also the creator of DARK SKIES, a SF series based on aliens invading the Earth. The serie's first season was filmed in Vancouver, Canada. The series was first seen in the UK on Sci-Fi Channel on the 4th June, 1999.

The initial prognosis was not good. Dire sequel The Crow: City of Angels suggested that the franchise was well and truly dead, and the weekly instalments would spread a thin plot even thinner. However, how refreshing it is to be proven wrong, because the show not only boasts an articulate leading man (Mark Dacascos) but also manages to develop its own identity. Instead of offering an indentikit copy of the movies, the TV version has taken the original plot and reshaped it into something more santized and enduring. The violence is muted in comparison to the extreme nature of the movies, but the concession is a compromise that must be made for television. The martial arts action is well orchestrated, unlike the laughable antics of MORTAL KOMBAT: CONQUEST, and the first few episodes zip along at an encouraging rate. It's early days yet, but this stairway to heaven looks like being something to crow about.

He looks like crap warmed over, and rambles on about a huge conspiracy. He'll spill the beans only in front of a grand jury. The man who tricked Eric's crow turns out to be Frederick Balsam from the Lazarus Society. He has transferred his soul into the young healthy body of his personal trainer. At night during a storm, the blood on Eric's grave flows again, and somehow the Crow rises. On the other side, Shelly gets a visit from young Casey Thompson who tells her that it might be possible to help Eric, but the key would be to say goodbye to him.

At a safehouse, Judge Morrison gives Albrecht a lead -- that three seemingly random deaths across the nation are indeed related. He won't say anything more until a Grand Jury hearing. Meanwhile, in prison, the Crow visits Funboy (Olsson), who has found religion and pleads for his life. The Crow crushes his skull, smearing the outline of a Crow on the wall in Funboy's blood. Eric and Shelly later make up for lost time.

The Crow visits Balsam to free the imprisoned bird, but Balsam strikes a deal -- get Judge Morrison and the bird is free. At the safehouse, Morrison tells Albrecht that Balsam was successful in making a body jump. On top of that, he's trying to tie up loose ends by killing off everybody in the Lazarus Society, including Morrison. As the Crow plows through the safehouse, Shelly and Eric are having their own wedding ceremony, and Eric gives back Shelly's ring. Albrecht races back to Eric's place to confront him, and it becomes clear that the Crow and Eric are indeed separated. The Crow drops Morrison off to Balsam. Sensing that Shelly is back on Earth, he leaves in search of her. Albrecht tells Eric and Shelly to disappear while he deals with the Crow. At a gas station the Crow manages to kidnap Shelly. Going back to the precinct house, Eric asks Albrecht for help. The Crow and Eric track Shelly to Balsam's place, fight, and Eric dies. While Albrecht arrests Balsam, Shelly holds Eric's hand and acts as a conduit, allowing the Crow back into Eric's body. While Eric is unconscious, Casey Thompson comes back, telling Shelly it's time for her to go back. At the bridge between worlds, Shelly can't bear the thought of never seeing Eric forever, and she jumps off, coming back to our world, but who can say for sure?

CRUSADE

The year is 2267 and the Drakh, former allies of the shadows, have taken revenge for their abandonment by unleashing a time bomb on the Earth in the form of a bio-genetic plague incubating over five years. Captain Gideon and the crew of the Excalibur are charged with finding a cure.

Five years after the emotional goodbyes in BABYLON 5, the Drakh - scaly acolytes of the Shadows - wish to take vengeance on Earth for sending their masters beyond the Rim. When Sheridan and co destroy the Death Cloud that they had aimed at Earth, they spitefully release a biogenetic weapon that will kill all life on the planet with five years. It is now up to the intrepid crew of the Excalibur to find a cure, and prove that every Death Cloud has a silver lining.

J. Michael Straczynski's continuation of the BABYLON 5 universe. This sequel to BABYLON 5 was a non starter after a promising conception, before the show was even aired it was cancelled by its broadcaster TNT, despite numerous attempts by its makers Warner Brothers, the show was cancelled before it began to broadcast.

Several episodes which were scripted by never filmed included To the end of the Earth, Value Judgements and The End of the Line. The series was first aired in the UK just a few after the series had begun in the US, the series was first broadcast on Sky One in the UK at the 8pm slot from the 4th July 1999. The same time slot which EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT had used. Without the showing of the fourth Babylon 5 film however (A Call to Arms), the series proper started which caused some confusion for its UK audiences.

A spin-off series from the popular BABYLON 5 was hinted at by creator JMS as early as Season Three, but finally emerged when TNT put up the cash for the final year of the show, taking interest in turning it into a franchise. The tale began with segue TV movie A Call to Arms, involving cast members from both shows, that revealed the Drakh attack. The show was pulled by TNT because of "creative differences" with JMS.

Edward Woodward turns up in episode two (The Long Road) as a fellow Technomage to his real-life son Peter. Both Tracy Scoggins and Richard Biggs return to their B5 roles, and Science Fiction veteran Brian Thompson guest stars in Patterns of the Soul. Watch out for the amazing changing uniforms that go from black EarthForce variants, to grey and red numbers, and then back again.

Interview with JMS.

For five years, I talked about many of the more interesting places in the B5 universe... now suddenly, I get to go there, to show people what they look like, and who lives there. I get to write about alien structures two-miles high, about secrets long buried and forgotten, about techno-mages (yes, they're back... well, at least one of them), telepaths, legendary battles... I get to create stuff nobody's seen before.

Which is not to say we won't see some familiar faces on the road from time to time, as our journey takes us to Minbar, and Centauri Prime, and Earth, and Mars, and through the darkness between the stars to the very Rim itself. Familiar faces, comforting voices, alongside new faces, new voices: There's Captain Matthew Gideon, weighted with a terrible responsibility and trying not to show how it's affecting him, who also carries a very strange secret with him...

Dureena Nafeel, to all intents and purposes the last surviving member of her race, wiped out during the Shadow War, and out for revenge against anyone who served the Shadows; looking to settle scores, and looking for any sign that others of her kind escaped before the end...

Max Eilerson, attached to the Excalibur by Interplanetary Expeditions (which as a multi-planetary corporation, certainly mourns the situation in which Earth finds herself, but life goes on, business goes on, and listen, while you're out there on the edge of what's known, if you happen to find anything we could turn to our own profit, you know what to do)...

Dr. Sarah Hoffman, science and medical officer, assigned to evaluate the search for a cure, on whose shoulders may rest the fate of an entire planet...

There's Galen, a lone techno-mage lately returned from... well, from wherever it is the techno-mages went to when they fled known space during the Shadow War, immensely powerful on the one hand, and greatly flawed on the other, refusing to live on the ship, instead going and coming at his own whim, on his own errands, with his own agenda, and always a darkness nipping at his heels...

And there's something called an apocalypse box, which one of these people has, and who should definitely not have it, since everyone who has ever owned an apocalypse box has died under strange and extremely unpleasant circumstances.

And then there's that starship... A one-of-a-kind prototype, the Excalibur is roughly half a mile long, with some of the most advanced weaponry and systems yet developed. We refined the design from early drawings published here in this magazine, streamlined it and made it sleeker, more dangerous looking.

As the knights of the Round Table went forth to find the Grail, a cure for a troubled land, so too does the Excalibur go out in search for the cure for a troubled world. As the first Excalibur brought hope and changed the world around it, so too will this Excalibur end up being a beacon of hope, but not in the ways her crew might initially suspect. They, too, will change the world around them... and in return, the world will change them.

Because in the Babylon 5 universe, change is the only constant, and no one is ever truly who or what they appear. And in the end, the story you may think you're watching, may not in fact be the real story at all. Which is the only clue I'm going to give for now.

CUTIE HONEY, THE LIVE

From the mind that brought you Kamen Rider Agito and Kamen Rider 555 comes a new adaptation based on Go Nagai's classic Cutie Honey.

Cutie Honey THE LIVE stars gravure model Miki Hara as Honey Kisaragi, otherwise known as Cutie Honey. Secretly built as an android by her father to combat an evil organization known as Panther Claw led by the slightly mentally unstable Yuji Nakajo (played by Kohei Murakami, Kusaka in Kamen Rider 555). Joining Honey are two other androids as well as a hapless reporter named Seiji Hayami (played by Syouma Yamamoto, Tsubasa in GARO) who just so happens to be great at getting himself in tight situations that require Honey saving him

Cutie Honey The Live is a Japanese tokusatsu (live-action) production of the popular Cutie Honey manga and anime series chief directed by Makoto Yokoyama. It began airing on TV Tokyo on October 2, 2007.

Characters

Honey Kisaragi/Cutie Honey

Honey Kisaragi is a cyborg girl who can transform into the titular Cutie Honey by tapping on her heart necklace and saying the words "Honey Flash!". Her powers come from the Air Chemical Solidifier Device installed in her body, also known as the Honey System. The Honey System allows the creation of objects out of nothingness, allowing Honey to transform her outfit into practically any disguise. The Honey System can also reduce objects to nothingness just as easily, which Honey uses as a finishing move to destroy anything she is in contact with. She possesses super-intelligence and strength, and a healing factor. Her personal emblem is a pink heart and in battle she can summon a rapier. She seems to have a crush on Yuji's third personality, Giza.

On a few occasions, the energy of her Honey System goes out of control and begins to destroy everything that she touches. When this happens, Honey sleeps for three days and then goes into a berserk mode. To prevent this, Seiji has a device that will drain away the excess energy and return her to normal. To date, this has only occurred twice.

This version of Cutie Honey is more empty-headed than her previous incarnations, possessing a very poor grasp of social conventions and an almost perpetually upbeat attitude. Unlike the original where she was a Catholic school girl, in this version she attends an ordinary Japanese high school.

Honey's birth date is February 26, her blood type is B and her father is Doctor Kisaragi: three traits shared by both Miki and Yuki for unknown reasons.

Honey is portrayed by Miki Hara.

Seiji Hayami

Seiji Hayami is a young, excitable private detective who helps support Honey. His dream is to write a book on the "demonish (sic) things in modern Japan's capitalism", and to this end he lives in a slum so as to better understand the dark side of society.

Seiji is portrayed by Syouma Yamamoto.

Miki Saotome/Sister Miki

Miki Saotome is a cold young girl who is the polar opposite of Honey, being introverted and anti-social. Like Honey, she has the Honey System installed in her body, changing her into a blue armored form called Sister Miki. In this form she cannot control her aggression, causing her to develop a fear of herself. She stays away from other people because she is afraid of hurting them against her will. Despite her cold demeanor, she cares about Honey.

Like Honey, she transforms with the phrase "Honey Flash!" by pressing her personal emblem, a blue spade. However, her transformations are flawed: she draws any loose metal she is in contact with into her body when she flashes, only to pull them out painfully later. Her weapon is a kukri. Miki's blue motif and stark contrast to Honey's personality draw many parallels between her and Misty Honey, Cutie Honey's rival from Cutie Honey Flash.

Miki is portrayed by Ayame Misaki.

Yuki Kenmochi/Sister Yuki

Yuki Kenmochi is the adopted daughter of the prestigious Kenmochi family. She states that she has only been living with the Kenmochi family for three years. She is very proper in how she speaks and acts, and is extremely naive. She develops romantic feelings for Honey after they meet for the first time.

She also possesses the power of the Honey System, changing into a white armored form called Sister Yuki with the phrase "Honey Flash!". In this form she becomes a cold, merciless warrior using graceful and powerful karate. Her personal emblem is a white diamond. She can summon a chakram as her weapon. Like Miki, her Honey System is flawed, but she materialises objects outside of her body rather than within her body. She has killed Duke.

Yuki is portrayed by Makoto Takeda.

Natsuko Aki

Natsuko Aki is Honey's best friend and room-mate. Despite this, she is unaware that Honey is a cyborg.

Natsuko is portrayed by Megumi Komatsu.

Gen-san

Gen-san is a homeless man who often hangs out with Hayami. He is very well connected amongst Japan's homeless, and is a great source of information on the underworld. He also has the uncanny ability to find (and cook) edible things in the most unlikely of places.

Gen-san is portrayed by Kenichi Nagira.

Panther Claw

Panther Claw is an underworld organization dedicated to profit at any cost, saying at one point that making money is "the same as breathing" to them. They serve as the main antagonists of the series, and use advanced cyborgs (identifiable by their black hoods) as their henchmen. It is split into four divisions, each covering a different business and run by a different executive.

Yuji Nakajo

Yuji Nakajo is a young genius with an IQ of over 200 and multiple personality disorder. His two main personalities are that of a cold, calculating adult and an excitable, cruel child. In these two forms, he can produce razor-sharp feathers from his arms and hands which he can fire at will.

He also possesses a third, demonic personality named Giza that he cannot control. When this personality takes control, he becomes psychotic and is able to produce bat wings from his arms with fearsome claws as hands.

He runs an illegal gambling operation, creating and executing spectacular bets for the wealthy elite to place their money on. In the first episode, for example, he breaks three men out of prison, gives them advanced weaponry and takes bets on who will last the longest. However, he also rigs the results of these gambles by using his henchmen to interfere.

Yuji is portrayed by Kohei Murakami.

Duke Watari

Duke Seiya Anthony Watari IV is a bilingual gentleman who switches between English and Japanese very frequently. His public face is that of the president of an IT company. Though he is composed most of the time, he possesses an extremely short temper and is prone to yelling "Shit!" when something bad no matter how minor happens to him. He can produce blades from his feet and possesses incredible fighting abilities. He has a friendly rivalry with Yuji. He is on his fourth and fifth foot blades, the previous ones being pulled out by Sister Yuki. However, after he was beaten by both Honey and Miki, he runs into a confused Yuki, who kills him in a brutal fashion with her chakram.

His role in Panther Claw is to create the cybernetic "human weapons" that they use as henchmen and in auctions to sell for profit. He accomplishes this using a medical care group as a front, using hospitals to change innocent patients into brainwashed bio-mechanical weapons.

Watari is portrayed by Mark Musashi.

Mayumi Karasugawa

Mayumi Karasugawa is a cruel sadist who works as a teacher at Hamaguri Gakuen, an elite private school. She is a lesbian who makes vicious advances on her students and is attracted to Honey and Miki on first sight. She is an expert in Kinbaku, a style of bondage originating in Japan, and uses it to tie up men who she believes have been "bad". She also has the ability to swallow and regurgitate whole eggs at will.

In combat, she uses tekagi-shuko. By putting on a special half-mask, she can transform into her own armored form resembling a harlequin. In this form she can extend her hair to bind her opponents.

She uses Hamaguri Gakuen to scout out and induct new members of Panther Claw.

Mayumi is portrayed by Erika.

Hiromi Tanaka

On the surface, Hiromi Tanaka is a mild-mannered housewife who runs a fish shop in a quiet shopping district. The truth is that she is a Panther Claw executive with a pathological obsession with making money. She is secretly in control of the district where her shop is, and establishes ridiculous taxes, laws and fines in order to collect money. Her husband also helps in her schemes and is a proficient martial artist, although from time to time, his back tends to give out.

She uses various frozen sea creatures as her weapons, from exploding starfish she throws like shurikens to a large fish which she wields like a sword. Naturally, they lose their effectiveness once they have thawed. Hiromi's most powerful weapon is a rocket launcher installed within her stomach.

Hiromi is portrayed by Eri Fuse.

CYBER GIRLS THELOMEAAKA: CYBER BISHOJO TEROMEA

Asagi (Tsugumi), Lena (Kamon), and Itsumi (Miwa) are super-powered school girls at Invisibility High. They spend a lot of time in the Atomic Research Institute, where children with super-power potential are tested with the aid of Cyber Suits, until the day when an experiment goes disastrously wrong and test subject Shu (Tanabe) runs amok and kills staff members. The girls discover that they are the end result of a secret genetic-engineering program begun some 17 years earlier and that they are really commodities made to order for the shadowy Alpha Syndicate. But have their various abilities already stolen from them in the form of the mysterious girl Psi (Mori), who could be a hybrid of each girl's best genetic material?

A live-action answer to the 1990s success of Evangelion, with a late-night broadcast that allowed for the fights with monsters of the week to swiftly devolve into ripped clothing and a distinctly sadomasochistic streak. The cyber suits, in particular, look like something from a bondage catalogue. Though it was shown after midnight and hence technically on Sunday morning, some sources still list it as a Saturday night program. Compare to BUNNY KNIGHTS and GAZER.

AKA: ELECTRONIC BRAIN POLICE

AKA: DENNOU KEISATSU CYBERCOP

In the year 1999, as the dawn of a new century draws near, the members of the Zero Armed Constables, or ZAC for short, protect Tokyo City from all breeds of super criminal. Taking on the criminal element that the regular police are unable to handle, the CyberCops equip themselves with the Cyber Bit Armor and are able to access backup weaponry called, Cyber Arms and Cyber Weapons, through an underground system called the Black Chamber.

When the mysterious criminal organization Death Trap appears; the CyberCops: Mars, Saturn, Mercury, and Venus are joined by Jupiter, a former Interpol Agent. Their new team mate wields an incredible and mysterious power, and has a secret past he himself does not remember.

My initial impression of this series after watching the first episode was that this wasn't anything special. The costume designs were somewhat funky and the majority of the special effects, while very ambitious, just didn't seem to quite effectively pull off what they were trying to display. However as the series continues it does begin to grow on you.

I came to love the costumes as the series progressed, particularly those of Jupiter (red) and Mercury (blue), as well as Lucifer (white), who shows up later in the series. I don't have much to say on the villains though, I can only describe the original three Death Trap scientists as Klingon rejects. Aside from Fuhrer, a floating head that I would jokingly refer to as the evil Japanese Zordon, the only remotely cool looking villain was the late-comer Beast Master Luna. This of course doesn't include the two CyberCop-looking minion robots that were used frequently throughout the series.

As far as the characters themselves, each of the ZAC members proved to have their own individual likeability. The early rivalry between Takeda (Jupiter) and Hojyo (Mars), while very typical, was still an interesting aspect of the show. I must admit, that the relationship between Uesugi (Codename: Venus) and Takeda was not an unexpected development, but it did come very late in the series. However things really became interesting with the introduction of Lucifer, a man who claims knows the truth about Jupiter/Takeda's secret past, but it's only half of the truth. Unfortunately, aside from Lucifer, who was really a free agent, none of the Death Trap villains seemed to stand out too much. It was the previously mentioned late-comer Luna who not only brought some life into Death Trap, but took the series in an interesting direction.

Many of the special effects did often come off quite badly in CyberCop, however as the series progresses there is some improvement. After completing the series though, I've come to appreciate the work done by the special effects team on CyberCop. Much of the effects they attempted were not only very ambitious, but also well ahead of their time. Much of the experimenting they did, particularly with the blue screen, proved to be a benefit to the shows that followed CyberCop.

CyberCop is a good show to watch for its action. While there is some interference from the special effects, the fighting and acrobatics in the series are well done and make what might seem like a lame show very enjoyable. CyberCop also had some enjoyable music as well. The intro theme is plain awesome, as is the end theme which is sung by Mika Chiba, the actress who plays Uesugi (Venus). The background music was also excellent, and is among the best music I've heard in any Tokusatsu Hero show.

CyberCop is a definite must see for any fan of the Tokusatsu Hero genre. It does take some getting passed the initial badness of the special effects, but it is well worth it. The series has both good action and a good story, and an interesting use of blue-screen technology. All in all CyberCop is a good watch.

Characters

Who Are The CyberCops?

The 'CyberCops' are part of a special division of the Tokyo Metropolitan Police Department codenamed 'Z.A.C.' (Zero-Section Armed Constable). This unique division is tasked to combat those criminals that are too dangerous or powerful for normal cops to handle. The 'CyberCops' are outfitted with high-tech armor called 'Bit Suits' which empower its wearer with a variety of superpowers.

The 'Bit Suits' shield the wearer from a variety of physical attacks (bullets, explosions, fire) and also give the wearer superhuman strength and agility. These suits are constructed using a unique process called the 'CyberNation System' and are accessed by Z.A.C. members through 'Cyber Bombing' which occurs only when the Z.A.C. members would enter special chambers called 'Bit Stations'.

The 'Bit Suit' armors can be outfitted with a number of customized weapon attachments called 'Cyber Bits' which are specifically suited to each armor. The 'Cyber Bit' units are attached via the command phrase 'Set Arm'. These 'Cyber Bits' are housed in special attaché cases (sometimes called 'Trunks') codenamed 'Black Chambers' and are shuttled and delivered to the 'CyberCops' via an elaborate underground tunnel system under Tokyo. The 'Black Chamber' cases are funneled through 'Chamber Tubes' which lead to a variety of 'Bit Station' access points across Tokyo, where the Cyber Cops can retrieve their weapons. These 'Bit Station' can be found in a variety of ordinary locales (telephone booths, bank machines etc.) 'Bit Stations' can only be accessed via special access cards carried by Z.A.C. members.

There are four primary 'CyberCops':

Takeda Shinya (Jupiter)

Wears the fire red armor, 'Jupiter Bit'. A former Interpol operative, Takeda was transferred to the CyberCops division in the hopes of unraveling his secret past. Takeda for reasons unknown is unable to remember the last years of his life. It is revealed later in the series that Takeda is really from the 23rd Century and was teleported back to 199X via a time/space portal. While he normally has a very sunny disposition and is very fun-loving, he has a considerable temper that can escalate into a 'battle rage' when fighting opponents.

The 'Jupiter Bit' armor is considered the next generation of 'Bit Suit'. The 'Jupiter Bit' armor is the most advanced armor in the Z.A.C. arsenal and is far more powerful than any of the other armors (it is revealed that the suit, like Takeda are from the future).

The 'Jupiter Bit' armor can be outfitted with the following powerful weapon attachments:

'Police Shield'. Shield unit which can repel certain forms of energy and physical attacks.

'Rock Buster' Cyber Bit Weapon. The 'Rock Buster' arm attachment can drill through most solid object and can bore through rock and debris with ease. The drill attachment can also be propelled like a rocket through the ground.

'Thunder Arm' Cyber Bit weapon. The 'Thunder Arm' weapon is Jupiter's multi-purpose attack arm piece. The 'Thunder Arm' can launch a number of special attacks:

'Hyper Attack' - Using the 'Thunder Arm' Jupiter can punch and chop with incredible force.

'Hyper Crusher' - Using the 'Thunder Arm' Jupiter can grab an enemy with a vice-like grip that can crush enemies.

'Hyper Shield' - Using the 'Thunder Arm' Jupiter can project a force barrier that can repel oncoming energy and projectile attacks.

'Hyper Storm' - Using the 'Thunder Arm' Jupiter can project a maelstrom of wind that can sheer and cut opponents.

'Rolling Charger' - Jupiter can powerup his weaponry through this procedure which involves swinging the 'Thunder Arm' in a circular motion. Once charged he can perform the following attacks:

'Thunder Attack' - His Hyper Attack power is doubled.

'Thunder Magnum' - Using the 'Thunder Arm's' gun attachment, he is able to fire a concentrated laser blast that can destroy objects with one hit.

'Thunder Laser' - Using the Thunder Arm's gun attachment, he is able to fire a fine laser beam powerful enough to slice through concrete and steel.

'Cybernetic Wave' - Using this power, Jupiter can hit an enemy in rapid succession a hundred times in the blink of an eye (similar to Kenshiro's 'Hokuto No Ken' abilities in the anime series).

Unlike the other 'Cyber Bit' weapons, these attachments are accessed by Jupiter via a time/space portal aperture.

When Takeda's rage is ignited to a certain degree, he is able to 'power up' his armor to an even greater degree. When this occurs the 'horn' piece of his helmet raises and his wings unfold. This status is called the 'Cyber Guilty' mode.

'Blade Runner' Cycle - Jupiter's 'super cycle' which can run at incredible speeds.

Hojo Akira (Mars)

Wears the emerald green armor, 'Mars Bit'. Hojo Akira is the designated 'CyberCop' leader. He is cool under pressure and has a strong sense of duty and honor. He was top of his class at the Police Academy and was formerly an elite officer with the Tokyo Police Department.

His 'Mars Bit' armor is designed specifically to provide heavy artillery and firearms support. Due to the size of his suit, the 'Mars Bit' is one of the slower units and hampers Hojo's movements a bit. His armor is outfitted with 'Stabilize Gear', which brace his armor when he uses his heavy guns.

The 'Mars Bit' can be equipped with three powerful Cyber Bit weapon attachments:

'Tri-Shot' Cyber Bit Weapon. This 'Super Gun' can fire explosive shells powerful enough to level a building.

'Fire Slugger' Cyber Bit Weapon. This bazooka-like weapon can fire plasma blasts powerful enough to smelt iron and steel. The 'Fire Slugger' is outfitted with a targeting scope which once locked upon a target will give Mars a 100% hit rate.

'Mega Storm' Cyber Bit Weapon. Mobile missile system which can propel six missiles that have the power to level buildings and skyscrapers. The missiles have targeting sensors that can lock on to targets giving Mars a 100% hit rate.

Saionji Haru (Saturn)

Wears the chrome & black 'Saturn Bit' armor. Happy-go-lucky and a bit of a jokester, Saionji is the team's resident 'mood maker'. He does not enjoy fighting. He has a younger brother and sister.

His armor is equipped with numerous sensory and communication equipment which help aid the CyberCops in tracking down enemies and collecting data. His helmet antenna and his shoulder parabola sonar units can perform a wide range of surveillance, reconnaissance and tracking duties.

The 'Saturn Bit' armor can be equipped with several weapon attachments:

'Death' Crusher Cyber Bit Weapon. Combination weapon which housed the 'Disc Sa' and 'Disc Cutter' weapons. The Buzz-saw like 'Disc Saw' attachment which can be used to saw through materials as hard as a diamond. The 'Disc Cutter' part can be used to cut through steel piping. Made of a unique metal alloy that is denser than steel. The rotation speed of the saw can be controlled via Saionji's brain waves.

'Bolt Winder' Cyber Bit Weapon. Hammer and chain gun weapon. Saturn's hammer weapon can be fired out from the gun and used to pummel and flatten his enemies. The chain and anchor attachment can be used to bind and ensnare opponents and objects. It can also be used as a grappling device which can help Saturn to scale buildings. The anchor unit is equipped with a sensor unit that can aid in firing accuracy.

Mori Yoichi (Mercury)

Wears the aqua blue 'Mercury Bit' armor. Mori's the resident hand-to-and combat specialist. His 'Mercury Bit' armor is the most lightweight of the armors and affords him extreme flexibility in movement and speed albeit at the cost of defense and protection. His unit is the fastest of the 'Cyber Bit' armors and he can travel at incredible speeds (his unit is equipped with air brakes which aid him in stopping).

The 'Mercury Bit' can be equipped with the following attachment:

'Slash Caliber' Cyber Bit Weapon. A two-part weapon attachment which is a combination grappler iron claw unit and a long saber device. The grappler claw can hold on to opponents with a vice-like grip while the bladed weapon can be used to slash and cut opponents with blinding accuracy thanks to internal sensors in the weapon.

Mercury also has access to the 'Linear Speeder' skates which enables him to traverse at speeds of up to 128 miles per hour (300 Km/h). The skates can be controlled via brainwave controls in the Bit Suit helmet.

The CyberCops ride around in their special combat van, the 'Zero Loader'.

The Z.A.C. division is supervised by Chief Inspector Ota Hisayoshi (nicknamed 'Cap') who is both a stern and aggressive commander. Chief Ota usually stays behind the scenes and relays his orders from Z.A.C. headquarters.

He is assisted by beautiful Shimazu Mizue, his personal secretary and lieutenant. She acts as a support officer for the CyberCops.

Uesugi Tomoko (Venus)

Backup Z.A.C. officer for the CyberCops. Monitors and assists with the maintenance of Cybernation and Black Chamber systems. Falls in love with Takeda and accompanies him back to the 23rd Century. Carries the standard Z.A.C. firearm, the 'S.D. Gun'.

Takara Yuuji (Lucifer)

Wears the white 'Lucifer Bit' armor. The 'Lucifer Bit' armor is next to Jupiter's armor the most powerful of the 'Bit Suits'. Like Takeda, Takara is able to pull his 'Cyber Bit' weaponry out from dimensional time/space portal which he can open up anywhere. His Lucifer armor is revealed to be also have been teleported from the future to the present.

Among the 'Cyber Bit' weapons Takara has access to is the:

'Giga-Max' Cyber Bit Weapon. This multipurpose weapon attachment empowers the Lucifer Bit armor with a variety of powers. The Giga-Max can allow Lucifer to fly short distances. It can also transform into a shoulder cannon which can fire energy blasts of tremendous force. The Giga-Max can yet again be broken down into two separate weapons a handheld rifle and a heavy shield which can assist him in short range combat.

In addition to the 'Giga-Max', Lucifer carries a number of other small arms weaponry which he can use to shoot and destroy his enemies. Lucifer carries two laser guns which can be fired with rapid speed. He also has two mounted laser guns on his shoulders.

Who Are The 'Death Trap'?

The goals of the 'Death Trap' syndicate are simple eradicate all humankind on Earth and supplant the world with computer and silicon life forms.

Led by the maniacal and crazed computer program 'Fuhrer' Soutou (Despot Fuhrer), the 'Death Trap' syndicate launches a number of terrorist attacks against Tokyo City using its army of 'Death Droids' and battle mecha.

It is later revealed that the 'Despot Fuhrer' was in actuality a computer entity from the 23rd Century which was sent back in time to usurp control of the world. The computer was build by a human - future criminal mastermind Baron Kageyama who planned on ruling the world by taking over the past. Baron Kageyama later merges himself with Despot Fuhrer to become a superhuman entity.

The 'Death Trap' syndicate is actually comprised of three crime organizations:

The Ominous Gang

Led by the evil criminal Prof. Enustein, his gang is comprised of specially designed black armored Ominous Death Droids which can be customized with a number of deadly weapon attachments. Prof. Enustein's brain was transplanted with the brain of a leading Hi-Tech/Cybernetics expert. Using this newfound knowledge he is able to unlock the mysteries of 'Super Physics' (Cho Rion Butsuri) to modify his Ominous droids.

The Harcross Gang

Led by the feline-like Ms. Duen who commands the ghostly white Harcross Death Droids. They can also be outfitted with a number of deadly weapon attachments affording them a great deal of versatility and customization. She is an expert in Biology and Genetics.

The Garoga Gang

Led by the hulking Prof. Frued, his Garogoid (Hie Ningen Gata Mecha <Non-Humanoid Mecha>) army is comprised of monstrous mecha creations and robots. His brain was replaced with a leading expert in psychology. Specializes in grand scale attacks and psychological warfare. Carries an electrified whip which he can use against the CyberCops.

Later yet another gang is incorporated into the 'Death Trap' syndicate:

Beast Master Luna & The Shitenoh (Four Kings)

Luna is the sister of Prof. Enustein. Vowed to avenge her brother's death at the hands of the CyberCops. To this end she assembled a quartet of super soldiers who would help her defeat the CyberCops. Her 'Shitenoh' comprise of:

'Tiger' - who was armed with razor sharp boomerangs which he could use to behead his enemies.

'Salamander' - who was armed with an electric charged whip.

'Turtle' - who had superhuman strength and the ability to emit fire bursts.

'Eagle' - a master martial artist whose hands and feet were armed with razors and who also had superhuman reflexes and speed.

Luna was a master strategist and was incredibly intelligent. Fell in love with Hojo Akira/Mars and eventually betrayed Fuhrer and Baron Kageyama only to be killed in battle.

Trivia

Was one of the first Tokusatsu shows to switch from film to video as is now the standard.

Toy company Takara helped sponsor the show and also developed the cool toyline for the series.

Yoshida Tomonori was also seen in Toho's recent hit Tokusatsu series 'Cho Seishin Gransazer' (2003) as Okita Souichiro. Oshida also starred in 'Mikadroid' (AKA Robokill Beneath Disco Club Layla; Toho, 1991), 'Ore Wa Otoko Da! Kan Ketsu Hen' (I'm A Man! Final Chapter; 1985) and 'Matatabi' (Wandering Gambler; 1971).

Shiotani Shogo is another Tokusatsu series veteran having also starred in the series 'Ultraman Gaia' (MBS/Tsuburaya; 1998) as XIG Officer Mori Kouichi. He also starred in such movies as 'Haken' (Taki Corporation, 1992), 'Jiraigen' (Field of Mines; SHS Project, 1992), 'Aka Tou Kuro No Netsujou' (Red and Black Infatuation; Toei, 1992) and 'Final Fighter' (Nikkatsu, 1994).

Chiba Mika later went on to join the CBS/Sony music group as a singing idol and released a number of music singles during the mid-80s including 'Brand-New Tomorrow', 'Kaze O Kanjite' (Feel The Wind), 'Ponytail Soldier', 'Shooting Star', 'Ai Wa Go Ji Kara' (Love Is At 5 O'Clock <Afterwork>) and 'E-MC2'.

Takeda Masako portrayed another equally sinister villainess, Mutiant Leader - Shion Kei in the inventive Tokusatsu series 'Nana Sei Tou Shin Guyferd' (TV Tokyo/Toho/CAPCOM; 1996).

Daimon Masaaki is no stranger to the Sci-Fi genre having starred in a number of Toho monster movies including 'Godzilla Tai Mecha Godzilla' (Toho, 1974), 'Mecha Godzilla No Giyakushu' (Toho, 1975). He also can be seen in 'Shirayuki Hime' (Tokyo Eiga, 1973) and 'Sailor Fuku Tou Kikanjyu' (Sailor Uniform and Machinegun; Kadokawa, 1981).

Sato Jinya was in the films 'Ozora No Samurai' (Sky Samurai; Toho, 1976), 'Ningen No Kotsu' (Human Remains; Eiga Pro, 1978) and 'Namatamago' (Raw Egg; Asuku Kadokawa, 1993).

Veteran film actor Mutsumi Goro has been in a number of Toho fantasy films including 'Frankenstein No Kaijyu Sandara Tai Gaira' (AKA War of the Gargantuas; Toho, 1966), 'Godzilla Tai Mecha Godzilla' (Toho, 1974), 'Mecha Godzilla No Giyakushu' (Toho, 1975), 'ESPy' (Toho, 1974) and 'Wakusei Dai Sensou' (AKA The War In Space; Toho, 1977).

CYBERGIRL

A renegade human prototype CyberGirl crash-lands on Earth to explore the humanity on which she is partly modelled. She takes refuge with fourteen-year-old Jackson and his bemused father Hugh, who welcome into their family this young stranger with such astonishing powers. Desperate to experience life in the glorious metropolis of River City, CyberGirl assumes a human identity as Jackson's cousin 'Ashley', and so begins her exploration of the challenges and excitement of life as a teenage girl.

A renegade human prototype CyberGirl crash-lands on Earth to explore the humanity on which she is partly modelled. She takes refuge with fourteen-year-old Jackson and his bemused father Hugh, who welcome into their family this young stranger with such astonishing powers. Desperate to experience life in the glorious metropolis of River City, CyberGirl assumes a human identity as Jackson's cousin 'Ashley', and so begins her exploration of the challenges and excitement of life as a teenage girl.

When I first saw this show, my initial reaction was not a good one. It seemed a little cheap and childish. It took me a few episodes before I realized that this is the point. Cybergirl is not a top notch sci fi with state of the art effects, and its not trying to be. It is simply a drama series about an Alien girl trying to become human in a strange world. Many science fiction stories today seem to devote themselves to effects and not story, but Cybergirl does not. Because of this there are some nice story lines and fast paced action sequences, all backed up by a wicked heavy beat soundtrack.

CYBERKIDZ

Cyberkidz is an action-packed children's television series about the struggle between good and evil. Kyle, Ian, Danica, and Zak along with their friends Floyd, Astrella, Quix, King Bing, and the Minotaur defend the Power of the Glove against Evil Zorak and his loyal servants Zeist, Levuka, and Dr. Fubbles. In the Power of the Glove! The Cyberkidz use their gloves and visors to conquer Zorak and maintain order between the dimensions. They realize that the power of the glove is a responsibility that Zorak is too self-serving to understand. A distinction that keeps them ahead of Zorak no matter how hard he tries to expand his powers.

Kyle Cooper, of the USA, creative; hungry for knowledge. He is a natural leader who keeps the Cyberkidz on track. He qualified to fight Zorak after winning the "Cyberkidz" video game created by Professor Floyd. Together with his fellow Cyberkidz, and members of the Underground Resistance, he does everything he can to make sure that good prevails over evil.

Zak Sukamoto, of Japan, a little warrior in the ninja tradition. His martial arts skills have foiled a great many of Zorak's followers. He qualified to fight Zorak after winning the "Cyberkidz" video game created by Professor Floyd. Together with his fellow Cyberkidz, and members of the Underground Resistance, he does everything he can to make sure that good prevails over evil.

Professor Jacob Floyd, former game inventor for Cyberware Games, today remains imprisoned deep in the dungeons of Zorak's Palace. He discovered Cyberland through the power of his invention, the cyberglove. Realizing that Zorak's powers would ultimately lead into our world if he should find Floyd's glove, he programmed a video game called "Cyberkidz". The game was created to recruit and qualify four kids to fight against Zorak and defend goodness in Cyberland. He gave each of the Cyberkidz a glove and visor enabling them to travel between the dimensions so that they may combat Zorak. Using "the power of the glove", Floyd can see right into Zorak's Palace Thrown Room and help the Cyberkidz plan their next move. He can project his image into many places to communicate with the Cyberkidz and inform them about things they would not know without his help. As a member of the Underground Resistance, and as their friend, Floyd helps protect the Cyberkidz in the treacherous world of Cyberland.

The evil Zorak constantly seeks to expand his mighty powers beyond his own dimension and into the far reaches of time and space. For thousands of years, his heavy-handed rule has brought chaos to the citizens of Cyberland. As a decendent of Gamash, he can invoke strange forces to combat his enemies. His palace henchmen: Zeist, Levuka, Dr. Fubbles, and his many Xyloids aid him in his evil-doing. From his Palace Thrown Room, Zorak gazes through his oracle with the vision of countless legions of flying-eyes which roam throughout the far-reaches of Cyberland at his command. Zorak has imprisoned Professor Floyd, former game inventor for Cyberware Games. Recognizing that Zorak's power had gone out of hand, he summoned the Cyberkidz to combat Zorak and gave them "the power of the glove" which even Zorak can not match.

As Zorak's companion in evil, Zeist constantly schemes to eliminate the Cyberkidz. He seeks "the power of the glove", as Zorak does, to expand his power and to overthrow the Underground Resistance. Zeist never hesitates to take matters into his own hands. As Commander to the Xyloids, bumbling robotic soldiers that obey his every request, Zeist will take on Zorak's enemies one-on-one. He can't resist a chance to show off his fighting skills. Zeist wears a patch on his left eye marked with the Crest of Gamash through which he can dispense a frightening green mist. He is powerless without Zorak's help, which may account for his unwavering loyalty as evil henchman.

The series has been seen in more than 74 countries around the world, it has not been seen in the UK however.

CYBERZONE

Game show in which contestants have to travel through a virtual reality world, solving puzzles.

Cyberzone was presented by Craig Charles who is more famous for starring in the British SF comedy RED DWARF, and was shown on BBC 2 in the UK.

Set in the same cyber-punk studio environment that seems to follow him round like a bad smell, Craig Charles tries to whoop up excitement from an indifferent crowd of 20-somethings by periodically rattling the chain fencing and shouting "Awooga!" (long before John Fashanu of Gladiators used exactly the same chant).

While this happens, two contestants are looking at giant screens in front of them and stamping on pressure pads to traverse around a virtual reality game world. Rather rubbishly, contestants could either move or perform an action (done via a hand-held pointer), but not both at once. There were only three scenarios used during the whole series.

Thesp, essentially a Gamesmaster-type character that was supposedly living inside the computer world, didn't really do very much other than introduce the games in a rather morose fashion, shout out "One minute warning! One minute!" and wear a ten gallon hat.

In each scenario, there are a number of game rooms to play in, each one containing a "so simple it's insulting" game that go along the lines of "shoot the duck" or "make the mouse run up the clock".

You may have already spotted that the games themselves weren't particularly interesting to watch, nor were they tied-in to the cyberpunk theme of the show. In addition, you may well have deduced that Virtual Reality in 1993 wasn't really up to anything like standards that look acceptable on television. 3 or 4 frames per second, in fact. This might have been fine for Flight Simulator 3.0, or whatever it was at the time, because you were taking part in the game. But to watch it was just dull.

When one player was trying to complete the games, the opposing player could hamper the runner's progress by blocking off the paths with a kind of bicycle machine, which was at least original if not perhaps well-integrated. Then they changed around for the second round.

In the final round, both sides ran but you could knock points off your opponent and freeze them by shooting them when they were in the same room. This wasn't nearly as good as it could have been.

This is a classic example of trying to utilise a technology in a TV show miles too early. Certainly, Cyberzone was without doubt the world's first virtual reality game show. However, it may well have done more harm to future VR projects than good.

No doubt the same thing will happen soon with, say, an Internet-based show that is no more than a treasure hunt game based on finding information from the Internet to solve clues. Sure, such a show will be groundbreaking in that sense, but it will probably be as dull as dishwater to watch. This is the best analogy we can think of to explain why Cyberzone was what it was.

Catchphrases

"Awooga"

Trivia

The computers used were a network of 486 PCs, each with an astounding 8Mb of memory - the most tasty machine you could buy at the time. The VR software was an early version of Superscape - which had previously been used for another Broadsword production, The Satellite Game.

D*A*S*S KAPITAL

AKA:

It is the end of history. Shitsu Tonka, the giant conglomerate of universal power, has placed the world's art treasures in a giant submarine, the Titanic II. Assigned to protect and catalogue these treasures are former comedians, the Doug Anthony Allstars; Tim, Paul and Richard, who find themselves drawn into conflict with each other and the malevolent forces which surround them.

Daas Kapital remains one of the funniest and most original series to air on Australian television.

For those familiar with The Doug Anthony All Stars, then you would have a pretty good idea what you are in for. For all you other's out there this is a program packed with energy, musical numbers, puppetry, news flashes, genies in boxes, a cockroach named 'Ross' and so so so much more.

It's pretty hard to come by, as it has yet to be released on DVD (Praying for that to happen) and it hasn't even been released on VHS. It might pop up on Cable TV here and there... but otherwise it is a lost treasure.

For those not sure what the hell it is.... well it can best be described as a break-loose 'Red Dwarf' kind of thing. 3 guys living on the 'Titanic 2', an abandoned submarine containing all kinds of government documents. Also on board are Flacco the Geanie, Bob the Psychotic, Bob Downe, lots of cockroaches and a live audience..... it's all irrelevant tho, as these 3 guys sing and dance, fight, and turn in to all kinds of psychos, cockroaches and French Men..... hell, even Mexican Hitlers.

See it, you wont regret it. There are 2 seasons worth, every minute a gut buster.

1 - 1 LUST

This episode is based very loosely on the story of Cinderella. Paul and Tim are members of the Royal Rhino Misogynists Lodge, and it is time for the annual ball. Richard isn't allowed to attend the ball because he isn't a member of the Lodge, and besides, who else would iron all of Tim and Paul's Rhino clothes and clean the floor? But while poor Richard is locked away in his room, slaving away over a hot iron, his fairy goldfish decides to drop in. This episode features the songs 'Living with Girls' and the 'Rhino Song'.

1 - 2 AVARICE

The first episode introduces us to the Doug Anthony Allstars and their plight on board the Titanic II, as well as the characters Wayne Kerr, Paddlefoot, Spinner, Flacco, Thulgore the monster, and the psychotic Bob who haunts Tim's mind. We discover that it is Paul's birthday and as a special treat he gets a special 'treat' from Thulgore! 'Mummy Dearest' is the only song performed (by Paul McDermott alone) in this episode.

1 - 3 GLUTTONY

It's raining outside, and everyone is bored. What can one do when it rains? You can watch TV, you can play games and you can eat... so the boys decide to play games. But, of course, being the funny kind of guys that they are, they aren't normal games. Mr Spickle-Head, Wince, Mr Toaster (which involves a toaster and a conducting rod) and the dreaded, but probably a lot of fun for everyone but Tim, Mr Potato. Paul and Richard are lonely, and as a result they have broken one of the rules- NO PETS! Tim decides to cook a feast. This episode features the songs 'Sunday Mornings' and 'Get Nicked Mum'.

1 - 4 ENVY

The Doug Anthony Allstars are holding the first ever Boy Scout Jamboree at the bottom of the ocean, until they get scared that is. This episode is based on the Wizard of Oz, and all three boys have to go through journeys to overcome certain problems they have. Richard has to defeat demons from his past to regain his courage. Tim has to discover his missing brain, and Paul has to find a heart. This episode features the songs 'Maria' and 'Catholic Girls on LSD'.

1 - 5 SLOTH

It's Bastille Day on board the Titanic II, and Paul is in no state to celebrate as he sinks deep into alcoholism. Tim and Richard decide to tie Paul to a chair whilst Tim rids the basement of the Titanic II of all the priceless bottles of alcohol. Richard goes on a quest to find all the bottles Paul has hidden to quench his thirst. In this episode the 'Doug Anthony Allstars' perform two of their songs, 'I Love the French' and 'Mexican Hitler'.

1 - 6 PRIDE

The Titanic II is infested with cockroaches and Paul is on a mission to send them all to cockroach heaven. But what will happen to Tim who has inherited the mysterious Ferguson family curse and Richard who has turned vegetarian and as a result of eating really lightly cooked fish ends up with Flacco in his stomach. Richard ends up coughing up nerf balls left, right and centre. This episode features the D*A*A*S song 'Thank You'.

1 - 7 ANGER

It is the Doug Anthony Allstars last day on board the Titanic II... hopefully. But when they play a game of charades, everything starts to turn surreal. One of them isn't human, one of them discovers a genie in a box, there is a bomb aboard that is set to blow before they are scheduled to get off the ship and poor cousin Valmay is in as bad shape as ever. This episode features the song 'Cosmic Cowboys of Doom'.

2 - 1 FAITH

The boys have miraculously survived the incidents aboard the Titanic II at the end of the last series, but what will they do now? Well, first of all, they have changed their address which means filling out a Shitsu Tonka official census. This proves harder than it sounds for Dorcen Langbene, Bumstead and Cynthia. Shitsu Tonka is also on the lookout for a new world leader and Tim decides he's the man for the job, especially since he has Richard to think for him. As for Paul, he is forced to 'do the decent thing'... This episode features the song 'I'm sick'.

2 - 2 HUMILITY

On Earth, war has been declared on jazz musicians, so the Marquis de Sade travels into outer space so as not to be killed. Tim and Richard are hoping to impress him when he arrives on the Titanic II with their jazz record collection so that he might get them off the Titanic, but they were silly enough to tell Paul to 'take care of all the jazz records'. Also on board is the last remaining nuclear warhead, which Bob, who thinks that World War II is still raging on Earth, and his co-pilot decide to steal and use to end the war. This episode features the song 'That's Jazz' and 'Warsong'.

DAI SENTAI GOGGLE V

AKA: GOGGLE-V

AKA: GREAT BATTLE TEAM GOGGLE FIVE

AKA: GREAT TASK FORCE GOGGLE 5 (FIVE)

In order to fight off an invasion from the evil scientists of the Desdark Empire, a computer in the Institute of Future Science select a five-person team to defend the planet Earth. Each is imbued with the spirit of an ancient Earth culture, starting with Kenishi (Akagi) whose Goggle Red uniform is set with a ruby from Atlantis. Super smart Kanpei (Kasuka) is the head of the university chess club but also Goggle Black, bearer of an Asian emerald and representative of all that noble in Asian cultures. Saburo (Ishii) is Goggle Blue who sapphire represents the glory that was Egypt. Tai (Godai) is Goggle Yellow who opal represents the lost Asian continent of Mu. And token female Miki (Okawa) is Goggle Pink who diamond contains the sprit of the ancient American culture of the Maya and the Aztecs.

Alternative readers may like to note that none of the Goggle Five seems to think that Europe ever had any culture worth saving - so much for Greece , Rome and all those other also-rans of world history.

A trio of super vehicles, the Goggle Dump, Google Tank, and Google Jet can launch from the massive Goggle Ceasar vehicle, which resembles a brightly colored version of the Jawas' Sandcrawler from A New Hope. Once outside the Goggle Ceasar, the three vehicles can combine to make a giant robot, the Goggle Five. Their enemies include Desdark President Taboo, "Retired" Leader Desdark (who still insisted on interfering, compare to his historical inspiration in Aoi) and an amry of camouflage-wearing Madaraman.

Dr. Hongou, founder of the Future Science Laboratory, confirms that Deathdark has begun its nefarious activities at Wolfborg Castle in Germany. Attacked by Deathdark, he is saved by Akama Ken'ichi and returns to Japan, where he has the Comboyputer select five people, including Akama, to become the Great Task Force Goggle V. The team succeeds in their first mission against Shell Mozoo and the giant robot Fankong. After numerous defeats, Fuehrer Taboo revives Grand Marshal Deathmark from a long sleep.

To reorganise Deathdark, Deathmark sentences Doctors Zazoriya and Igaana to death. Deathdark creates seemingly indestructible Super Synthetic Beasts, but the team copes with this by devising the Goggle Golden Spear attack. In the end, Deathmark discovers the super energy 'Hightron', which they use to create their final weapon, the Dark Cannon. At the same time, Deathdark discovers the location of Goggle V's base and destroys it. Deathmark sends the Hightron-powered Cheetah and Bear Mozoo/Kongs after the team, but they, like their lesser Mozoo and Kong predecessors fail, even though Deathgiller pilots Bear Kong himself. Dr. Hongou builds the team a new base, from which they set off to break into Deathtopia and defeat Taboo, who reveals and enlarges himself at last, with the eye-poking Earth Sword Electron Galactic missile move.

Based on an idea by "Saburo Yade", Goggle-V came after SUNVULCAN and before DYNAMAN in the Super Sentai series. Music by Michiaki Watanabe. Produced by Yuki Usui, Seiji Abe, Takeyuki Suzuki.

Fourth Super Sentai. Neither Ishi(no)mori nor Marvel was involved with this team or any others that followed. (Did Marvel have a contract with Toei that expired in 1982?) Got the highest ratings of all sentai (at least up to 1988), but is least popular among Japanese fans (as opposed to Japanese children). Cf. Ultraman Taro, another series unpopular with fans though popular with children.

Characters and mecha

The Future Science Laboratory

The Goggle V team was chosen by this lab's Comboyputer.

Gogglered (Akama Ken'ichi)

World class explorer and mountain climber. By saving Dr. Hongou from Deathdark's Madaramen, he came to realize what peril the world was in. His forehead jewel is the ruby, symbolising Atlantis. Armed with the Red Ruby Whip and the Red Rope.

Goggleblack (Kuroda Kanpei)

President of the chess club at Touto University. Specialises in strategy. Normally a janitor of Kourakuen Stadium. His forehead jewel is the emerald, symbolising Asia. Armed with the Black Clubs, Black Emerald Nunchakus, Dynamite Clubs, the Black Shadow technique, and the Black Wind Wheel Whirlwind technique [Played by Haruta Jun'ichi, a.k.a. Dynablack and Mad Galant--both 'black' characters!]

Goggleblue (Aoyama Saburou)

Ice hockey player and would-be inventor. His forehead jewel is the sapphire, symbolising Egypt. Armed with the Blue Ring, Blue Sapphire Jet Ring, the Ring Waist Break technique, and the Blue Jet Dash technique.

Goggleyellow (Kijima Futoshi)

Works at a zoo. His forehead jewel is the opal, symbolising Mu (Lemuria). Armed with the Yellow Ball, Lightning Light Ball, Yellow Opal Megaton Ball, Yellow Hammer, Yellow Holedigging technique, and the Yellow Mole Strike technique.

Gogglepink (Momozono Miki)

Gymnast who works as an announcer at Kourakuen Stadium. Her forehead jewel is the diamond, symbolising the Mayans and Incas. Armed with the Pink Ribbon, Pink Diamond Baton, Pink Mirror, Pink Ribbon Bind technique, and the Pink Heart Hypnosis technique.

(All the members, like those of Denziman, have kanji for their respective colours in their names. Aka = red, kuro = black, ao = blue, ki = yellow, momo = pink.)

The team has many combination attacks, such as the Lightning Ropes, the Dynamite Clubs, the Ring Spin Typhoons, the Lightning Light Balls, the Ribbon Sparks, the Goggle Victory Flash, the Goggle Bomber, the Sabre Attack, and the Goggle Golden Spear. All are armed with Goggle Sabres.

Dr. Hongou (1, 2, 49, 50)

Doctor belonging to the Future Science Lab; founder of Goggle V.

Computer Boys & Girls ('Comboy')

Five kids in blue tights who comprise the junior Goggle V and support the team proper with the Comboyputer. Each follows a specific team member: Ueda Tatsuya (Red), Takenaka Makoto (Black), Shimada Haruo (Blue), Ooyama Daisuke (Yellow), and Aizawa Akane (Pink).

Gogglemachine

Gogglered's motorcycle.

Gogglecougar

4WD truck for the other Goggle team members.

Goggle Jet (Red) + Tank (Blue and Black) + Dump (Yellow and Pink) > Gogglero Armored with the Earth Sword (Electron Galaxy Cut), Goggle Hand, hand Missile, Goggle Flash beam, and Goggle Spin top.

Gogglecaesar

Flying fortress which launches from a pad beneath Kourakuen Stadium. The three components of Goggle Robo launch from its numbered 'drawers'. Kourakuen is an amusement park that features Toei heroes.

The Dark Science Empire Deathdark

From the time when iron was discovered in ancient Turkey, the 'Dark Scientists' have existed to move the world in the shadows. United by Fuehrer Taboo, they are Deathdark.

Fuehrer Taboo

A one-eyed 'super gene' product of genetic engineering that hides behind a translucent wall until emerging, giant-sized, for the finale.

General Deathgiller

Swordsman field commander in black. Piloted the last of the Kongs, Bear Kong.

Grand Marshal Deathmark (15-50)

Pharaoh-like commander brought back to life by Taboo.

Bella and Beth (Deathmark's twin handmaidens)

Faceless warriors in purple and blue tights who assume human forms.

Dr. Zazoriya (1-18; sasori = scorpion)

A Dark Scientist scorpion-woman who builds mecha-motif robots. Rival of Dr. Igaana. Put to death by Deathmark.

Dr. Igaana (1-18)

A Dark Scientist iguana-man who builds beast-motif robots. Put to death by Deathmark.

Synthetic Beasts (Mozoos)

Monsters of the week. Combinations of animal genes and metal atoms. When defeated, the Refresh Power ray gives them enough energy to enable them to pilot their Kongs. Later superseded by Super Synthetic Beasts made of Neometal from Crocodile Mozoo onward.

Giant robots (Kongs)

Usually modelled after the Mozoos who pilot them (but exceptions exist). Have blue cockpits on their heads and disproportionately large legs, presumably to support their enormous weight.

Madaramen (madara = spot, referring to their spotted outfits)

Android grunts in camoufalage-colored tights.

Dark Giant Castle Deathtopia

Mobile castle-shaped fortress that launches giant robots from its gate. Usually underwater but can fly.

Trivia

The first sentai series in which Hirohisa Soda is made the chief writer. He stayed on as chief writer for sentai until 90's Fiveman and is believed, by many fans, to have been the one to raise the bar on sentai and raising its stories to appeal to older viewers, as well.

In the Philippines, Fuehrer Taboo is known as Totopama.

DAITETSUJIN WANSEBUN (1-7)

AKA: GREAT IRONMAN 1-7

AKA: GIANT IROMAN 1-7

In the beginning of the 1st english version that was released , Japan scientists created a giant supercomputer with a giant eye in the middle of it to predict their weather, fight crime, invent things, etc.. They named their creation the BRAIN. One night, the thing just unplugs itself and runs off right through the wall and one of the professors, Hassler, is missing too. Realizing the critical situation had grown serious, to quote the narrator, the Defenders (a special military group), scramble their jets, tanks, and soldiers and look around everywhere. They search for over a year , but find nothing. One day however some soldiers manage to rescue a truck stuck in the mud, a wedding party who needs to get somewhere. Then one of the soldiers picks up an unknown object and the MRSS starts beeping , causing the soldiers to gasp with fear. Then there's an avalanche.

Some place called Demon Canyon collapses. Some guy falls into a secret cave and finally, we discover that BRAIN has holed himself up in this particular cave. Only one of the wedding party, a guy named Stevie, survives the disaster. Some soldiers chase Stevie around, but he finds a giant robot called DAITETSUJIN 17 , they accidently wake it up, and the army retreats. Stevie is picked up by the robot who hands him a helmet communicator device. Stevie throws it down, the robot puts him down, and he too runs away. Later Brain starts sending giant robots to attack the city. The planes and tanks can't stop them , Stevie continues running towards a 300 foot tall steamroller robot that is trashing the city and thows a live grenade he finds on the ground at it. But, just as Rollerbot is just about to squish him, DAITETSUJIN 17 busts out of the ground and comes to the rescue! DAITETSUJIN 17 also has a secret weapon mounted on his chest, which is a powerful gun called the "Graviton Cannon".

Now we learn that Hassler is secretly in league with BRAIN as the mad scientist. And BRAIN wants to recruit himself an army of henchman, so he sends a "hurricane robot" to break famous criminals out of prisons around the world, by famous I assume they mean infamous. Back at the Defender's base one of the soldiers convinces the boss that if he gets himself arrested he'll be a shoe in for recruitment in BRAIN's new army, and he can infiltrate it's secret base. The Hurricane Robot decides his one random act of larceny warrants world class Henchman status and sucks him up, and so the Defenders try tracing his signal. They already know where BRAIN is so their spy decides to try infiltrate the base, and is suprised when he stumbles into a room and finds BRAIN there. But, the BRAIN is onto him. Meanwhile, Stevie and some Defenders end up back in Demon's Canyon and find Stevie's communicating helmet, and their spy on a cross. Then the Hurricane Robot laughs at their pathetic machines and attacks their army! Then, wearing the communicating helmet Stevie calls on DAITETSUJIN 17, who shows up and serveth up a heapin helpin of heavy metal ass kick and uses the Graviton Cannon! DAITETSUJIN 17 tells Stevie he's now his new partner in this new war against their enemy.

Back at the enemy base , BRAIN the computer gets angry when Hassler gripes about yet another robot being destroyed by DAITETSUJIN 17, and zaps him. Stevie, swearing bloody vengeance on the blood of his family and big sister, slain in the avalanche enlists DAITETSUJIN 17's aid in combating BRAIN. Back at Defender Base a new captain arrives with news the BRAIN has recruited some new criminals. The Defenders are still trying to figure out how the helmet works with Stevie and DAITETSUJIN 17. They figure that DAITETSUJIN 17 is using it to tune in to whenever Stevie is in personal danger and is just trying to rescue him. Deciding to test their theory with a mock attack on Stevie, their plans are thwarted when BRAIN's goons actually attack for real! A mountain explodes, something comes out of the side of it. The army sends a squad of planes to investigate but are destroyed. Gasping in terror as their military proves itself once again ineffective.

Before DAITETSUJIN 17 arrives , this new enemy robot is apparently a giant piston robot, so low on 17's foot scale he just dispenses with an attack and puts DAITETSUJIN 17 out of commission. So the Defenders have decided to build a new supercomputer called Big Angel. BRAIN sends a new monster and starts

DANS UNE GALAXIE PRES DE CHEZ VOUS

In the year 2034, the Earth is in a catastrophic state. Thus, the Romano-Fafard, a spaceship commanded by the Capitaine Patenaude, is sent to discover another planet, in order to hold the 6 billion inhabitants of the planet Earth.

This is an Canadian SF comedy show in the French language.

The show is extremely funny because all the actors (or at least those of the 2000-2001 season) are very talented and you can feel the pleasure they are having playing their character. They are/were almost all part of improvisation leagues so they are used to doing a lot of mimics, which is good for a comic show. Also the story is original in it's way of making fun of other shows like "Star Trek" and the references to music/cinema/sports are always well placed.

The episodes aren't equal in quality, but usually even the worst ones make you laugh at least twice or thrice. The way it is filmed also is pretty interesting: the camera moves a lot and always films in a weird angle.

Even if they say it was a show is made for children but everyone from 6 to 100 years old, should like it. An extraordinary show!

Produced by Michel Bissonnette executive producer, Paul Dupont-Hébert executive producer, Diane England producer , André Larin executive producer , Vincent Leduc executive producer.

Original Music by Richard Lord.

Synopsis

The series chronicles the long, futuristic voyage of a team of Québécois space explorers (with one half-russian, one half-alien and one robot) looking for a planet capable of sustaining life, in the year 2034. This epic search is made essential because of the destruction of the ozone layer by excessive human pollution, prompting the need for a new planet to welcome humankind. The few habitable planets encountered are often ultimately left alone because of an existing population occupying the land, creating the prospect of the inconceivable ethical wrong, for the team, of taking the land of another people. The starship, christened Romano Fafard, is led by Captain Charles Patenaude (played by Guy Jodoin), a presumptuous but endearing man prone to making pompous, solemn declarations.

Background

The series is an obvious parody of science-fiction works like Star Trek, a bit like the British Red Dwarf. A spirit of environmentalism, humanitarianism, pacifism and ethics is ever-present throughout the series. Sometimes, the social comment on the selfish errors of humankind regarding pollution and war can be misanthropic, but still hopeful and idealistic. Most members of the team subscribe to these noble morals, with the notable exception of Brad Spitfire, an infinitely egotistic, machiavellian and amoral crewmember. Despite these negative traits, actor Stéphane Crête plays him in such a way that the character's great faults remain extremely amusing and lovable.

The title translates to In a galaxy near you, a pun on the classic cinema advertising line Coming to a theater near you. It was initially set to be broadcast on a mainstream network under the name Vadrouille de l'espace. Patrouille de l'espace (Space Patrol) is the French language title of Star Trek within Quebec (France knows it by its original title); Vadrouille de l'espace basically translates to Space Mop. Science-fiction being rare in Quebec fiction, the main networks ultimately did not accept to risk broadcasting the show. The creators turned to the youth-oriented Canal Famille (the former name of Vrak TV), who welcomed the project. Even if it was presented on a Children's channel, its humor is, while caricatural, often relatively mature and sophisticated.

Movie

A movie with that same title and premise was released in 2004. It proved to be a hit with younger and older viewers, and drew very good reviews relatively unanticipated from intellectual critics. It was also groundbreaking for its impressive special effects accomplished with a small budget and a short filming time, and for being one of the few sci-fi Quebec films, along with Dans le ventre du dragon. Two sequels are planned.

Quotes

We are in 2034. The situation on Earth is catastrophic. The ozone layer has been completely destroyed by the carbonic gas of automobiles, the chemical industries, and the poosh-poosh in little cans.

Opening of the show.

Where the hand of man has never set foot.

Parody of Star Trek's Where no one has gone before, from the opening.

DARK ANGEL

Dark Angel premiered on FOX in fall 2000. Academy Award-winning director James Cameron teams with Emmy Award-winning writer Charles Eglee to create this futuristic, sci-fi adventure series set in post-apocalyptic America. Dark Angel is about Max, a genetically enhanced human prototype who, after escaping her military handlers, is hunted by them through the edgy, underground street life of 21st Century Pacific Northwest. Max is aided in her quest -- both to avoid capture and to reunite with her surviving "siblings" scattered in the aftermath of their escape -- by Logan, an idealistic cyber-journalist battling corruption and the oppressive establishment in this futuristic landscape. Although she initially resists Logan's attempts to enlist her in his social struggle, preferring instead to maintain the ultracool demeanor of detached, alienated youth, Max ultimately brings her unique skills and abilities to bear in taking on the ruthless power-brokers of the new millennium.

Jessica Alba stars as Max, a genetically "enhanced" superhuman living in post-apocalyptic Seattle, WA. When Max was a child, she and others tried to escape the military compound at which they were being developed/trained. Now, as a young woman, Max is searching for others of her kind, not knowing whether or not she was the only one to escape.

Having seen the unfinished pilot (with temporary sound, FX, music, etc.), I have to say that this show appears to have a future. Max, a bike courier/burglar, is an interesting character whose abilities are sometimes a hindrance - she frequently (and inexplicably, at least in the pilot) suffers seizure-like breakdowns. Logan Cale, who broadcasts a pirate television signal called "Eyes Only" which exposes corrupt and immoral people, is impressed by Max when she breaks into his heavily guarded apartment. He tries to enlist Max's help in his fight against corruption in exchange for his help finding others like her.

Jessica Alba as Max is a good casting choice. She's sexy, seems smart, and can play both the tough grrrl and the innocent victim quite well. I'm looking forward to seeing how her character will be developed, as there seem to be a lot of possibilities for Max, and for the other characters in the show. Will Max find the others? Will her pursuers catch up with her? How will her relationship with Logan evolve?

I'm hoping this show survives, and I'm hoping that it's a hit. I mean, what are we going to watch on Fox when The X-Files and The Simpsons finally close up shop?

Dark Angel (2000-2002) was a cyberpunk science fiction television series, created by James Cameron and Charles H. Eglee.

Despite a strong fan base (and a second season finale directed by James Cameron), Dark Angel was cancelled in 2002 after just two seasons due to low ratings. Avid fans of the show attribute the loss of ratings to a misjudgement on the part of FOX Network for airing the second season on Friday evenings instead of Tuesday evenings. In addition, changes to the format and tone of the series in the second year are also cited as contributing factors to its demise, though many of these changes were unavoidable due to budgetary concerns, departing actors, and 9/11, which forced the show to downplay its post-apocalyptic setting.

The series was filmed in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada at Lions Gate Studios.

Influences

Battle Angel Alita: It shares many themes with Yukito Kishiro's Battle Angel Alita (also known as Gunnm), a manga series, and is believed to be inspired by it[1]: both were sci-fi stories featuring a strong, physically-enhanced and youthful-looking female protagonist with dark hair (Max and Gally or Alita) who maintains a vaguely romantic relationship with a blonde male character who wears round glasses and specializes in technology (Logan and Ido); both titles contained the word "angel"; both shared a cyberpunk theme that takes place in a dystopian city (post-EMP Seattle, and Scrap Iron City), and so on.

Blade Runner: It plays with many of the same themes as Ridley Scott's 1982 film Blade Runner. In Cameron's version, however, the Rick Deckard character of Blade Runner, Donald Lydecker, is the antagonist (due to his relationship with Manticore, Lydecker also shares characteristics with an antagonist from Blade Runner, Tyrell of the Tyrell Corporation). The story is told, instead, from the point of view of the Nexus - 6 replicants (Cameron's X-5 transgenics), Zack (Roy Baty in Blade Runner) and Max (a conflation of Blade Runner's Pris and Rachel). The technically astute J. F. Sebastian of Blade Runner, who helps the replicants, was split in Dark Angel into computer expert Logan Cale and the genius Sebastian, a mute quadriplegic who communicates via a machine that verbalizes his thoughts. Other films by Cameron "The Terminator (1984) and Terminator 2: Judgment Day (1991)" shared similar settings as well.

RoboCop: There are also some shared elements with Paul Verhoeven's 1987 film RoboCop. Both take place in cities where violent crime is commonplace, and share recurrent themes such as corporate corruption and moral ambiguity in the scientific community. In addition, the protagonists of both are reluctant heroes created by scientists seeking to minimize the loss of human life in combat/law enforcement. Coincidentally, a character killed in Season One returns as a cyborg in Season Two.

Friday: It shares many aspects of Robert A. Heinlein's 1982 novel, Friday. The main protagonist is a multi-ethnic, genetically enhanced young woman surviving in a dystopian future who often has trouble forming personal relationships due to her differences from un-enhanced humans.

Girl Power!: It reflects the impact of Girl Power (i.e. the Spice Girls) upon popular culture during the late 1990s and early 2000s. In this light, Max (who was created with cat DNA) may have been modeled after the character from Batman, Catwoman (with Logan as the Bruce Wayne figure) as well as Emma Peel of The Avengers. Original Cindy may have been influenced by characters portrayed by Pam Grier in blaxploitation films such as Coffy and Foxy Brown.

Kung Fu: It may have been influenced by the popular television program, Kung Fu (1972-75). As with Kung Fu's Caine, Max of Dark Angel is a super-human but marginalized figure who is on the run and bears the "mark of Cain." In each episode, the childhood of the protagonist is referred to in flashbacks and focuses upon a school-like environment where children with shaven heads are being groomed for specialized roles by unique figures of authority. As adults, Caine and Max live in obscurity but use their abilities in the martial arts to fight for the good. Furthermore, in episode two of the first season of Kung - Fu (written by Herman Miller) which aired on November 11, 1972 and was entitled Dark Angel, Caine discovers that he has a half-brother and sets out on a mission to find him.

Season Two: Dark Angel changed significantly in its second season, moving from Cyberpunk to quasi-horror and something closer to Buffy the Vampire Slayer. The influence, however, of Battle Angel Alita was still apparent, as well as the Matrix and the X-Men. In addition, with the character of Joshua, comparisons could be made to the novel Frankenstein and in particular to Frankenstein's monster. Joshua himself was modestly reminiscent of Vincent from Beauty and the Beast.

Setting

In the year 2009, a genetically enhanced female child (Cameron's term for this prototype is transgenic) super-soldier named Max Guevera, also known as X5-452, escapes, along with 11 others like her, from a secret government institution codenamed Manticore where they were made and trained to be soldiers and assassins. Months after her escape, terrorists detonate an electromagnetic pulse weapon which destroys the vast majority of computer and communication systems in the US, throwing the country into utter chaos.

The First Season begins ten years later in 2019. It follows the life of the now 19-year-old Max as she struggles to search for her Manticore brothers and sisters living in a post-apocalyptic world (an element that was more or less dropped after 9/11), while trying to live her life, learning to trust and love, and evading capture. She is aided by Logan Cale and her friends at Jam Pony, a courier company that she works for. Other X-5s are periodically introduced as well.

Spoiler warning: Plot and/or ending details follow.

In the Second Season of the show, the tone changes as Max brings down Manticore, but finds that she has an even more deadly enemy in a millennia-old breeding cult structured similar to the Illuminati. This has resulted in humans even more formidable than the Manticore-produced transgenics, and now this cult is trying to hunt them all down. It turns out that a renegade from the cult, Sandeman, was largely responsible for Manticore's genesis. The villain Ames White is Sandeman's son, which essentially makes him Max's brother. The series was cancelled before the producers could really play with this dynamic, however.

1 - 1 "PILOT"

After escaping a genetics lab that trains test tube babies to be the perfect soldiers (called Project Mantacore), 18-year-old Max is truly a lone traveler. When she was young "those terrorist bozos whacked us with a Electro-magnetic pulse." Now she must live her life on the run in a dangerous future where all anyone wants is their past. Max has daily seizures that give her flashbacks to her shady past. That is the only way she can put more pieces of the puzzle together. After a little girl is kidnapped and Logan shot by a man named Edgar Sonrisa, Max has no choice but to help him. What she doesn't know is Lydecker, the leader of the Project Mantacore team, is on her tail. The little girl, being held at a condemned compound, is rescued by Max. She flees Lydecker's men by dressing as one of them and leaving in plain sight.

Three months later, Max visits Logan again. Logan is now in a wheel chair because of a blown spinal cord. He says he still needs her to do a little "leg work" for him. She still doesn't want to help until Logan tells her that he has located Zack, another of the test tube babies. She reluctantly agrees to help.

Max lives in a run down apartment building with her roommate Kendra and has to occasionally bribe the police to keep their presence a secret. For cash, she works as a bike messenger for a company called "Jam Pony Messengers." Most of her friends work there and always complain about their pay and their boss, Normal. For extra cash, Max robs from the richer people and sells it for more than it is worth. One night, she decides to rob the wrong house and meets Logan Cale, a mysterious news reporter who runs a video steam called "Eyes Only." He reports truthful news because he says "if you accept the way things are, you're making it worse."

Although she escapes from him and his bodyguard Peter, Logan continuously tracks Max down until he finds out the truth about her. He tells her that he can help her find her lost test tube friends if she'd help him. Max doesn't accept because she believes she would get caught by whom ever was after her.

1 - 12 RISING

The "transgenic" Reds catch up with Max when her lost pager reveals her whereabouts to them. The Reds are former death row convicts seeking to combine their technology with Max's genetic material. Logan and Max, after a deadly fight with a Red, learn that the transgenics' power is controlled by a special implant placed in their bodies. Meanwhile, the Reds take Original Cindy hostage and used to lure Max into their trap. Max risks it all and inserts the Red's implant into her own neck in hopes of gaining extra power. The implant makes her hyper violent and she kills off the Reds in order to free Original Cindy. Max then has a seizure. Logan learns the only way to save Max's life is to get the chip out of her head, but first he has to electrocute the chip in her neck. He is able to save her. Max then has to reveal to Original Cindy her Manticore secret. Also, Logan begins to regain the use of his legs and stands up.

DARK ROOM

Anthology series of tales of suspense and the supernatural.

Darkroom was a short lived anthology series about tales of the supernatural. Each episode would feature two or three stories, featuring big name guest stars. This dark fantasy anthology series owes much to Rod Serling's THE NIGHT GALLERY: the formats were almost identical, although Darkroom ran for 60 minutes instead of half an hour. James Coburn introduced all 7 episodes (comprising 16 stories), a la Rod Serling, from a photographer's darkroom. One memorable show starred a very young Helen Hunt battling a vampire. The series was shown on ABC.

James Coburn hosted this supernatural fantasy. He started each show by developing photos in the Darkroom. Each picture represented a bizarre story. Guest stars included Ronny Cox, Billy Crystal, June Lockhart, Andrew Prine, Michael Constantine and Steve Allen. Wizards and Warriors. February-May 1983, CBS. Special effects distinguished this ambitious series set around sixth century England. Jeff Conaway was Prince Greystone, who battled evil Prince Blackpool (Duncan Regehr). Other cast members included Julia Duffy, Walter Olkewicz and Clive Revill. Bill Bixby directed a number of episodes.

DARK SEASON

Its heroes: three sparky teenagers, Marcie, Reet and Thomas, who become entangled in two adventures in which the fate of the world lies in their young hands. In the first, a mysterious benefactor is presenting a free computer to every pupil at their school. Then things start to go wrong - one of their classmates appears to go into a trance and the computers start operating even before their keys have been pressed.

The trio, with the help of their teacher Miss Maitl and, discover that the benefactor, Mr Eldritch, has developed a form of symbiosis between man and machine and is out to enslave all the town's children as the first step to world domination.

In the second tale, an archaeological dig in the school grounds uncovers a bunker with a deadly secret - Behemoth, a mechanical war machine that has used its intelligence to develop itself and is ready to destroy the world.

Jacqueline Pearce plays Miss Pendragon in the second of the two stories, she is better known as playing Servalan in the SF series BLAKE'S 7. The writer Russell T. Davis, the director Colin Gant and the producer Richard Callanan would go on to produce the following years SF show CENTURY FALLS.

While Watt on Earth was keeping the kids amused, this six-part 1991 school-based thriller was supplying the adventure. Among the adult stars lending their weight to the series were Rosalie Crutchley and Cyril Shaps as the computer genius Prof. Polzinski and her husband, Brigit Forsyth as the bemused Miss Maitland and Jacqueline Pearce (Servalan in Blake's 7 as the sinister Miss Pendragon. Dark Season's creative trinity of writer, director and producer reassembled for the following year's CENTURY FALLS.

Introducing...

Playing the part of Reet is a young actress by the name of Kate Winslet. This was not her first television role - Kate had appeared in Casualty in 1989, playing Suzanne in the episode Family Matters.

About the writer

Writer Russell T Davies was working at the Manchester branch of Children's BBC which specialised in comedy and entertainment. Desperate to write drama, he sent episode one of Dark Season to Anna Home, head of Children's BBC via the BBC internal mail.

Russell went on to write Children's BBC drama Century Falls, Queer as Folk and Bob and Rose. He is also the writer and executive producer of the new series of Doctor Who, returning to BBC One in 2005.

Before Buffy

Could Joss Whedon have been inspired by Dark Season when he was coming up for idea for Buffy? The whole plot about a school hiding ancient secrets beneath its foundations and an awesome Behemoth rising from its tomb, is very similar to Buffy and its Hellmouth beneath Sunnydale High. Could Marcie, Reet and Thom be a prototype for Buffy and the Scooby Gang?

Who is Marcie?

Many have compared Marcie to the Doctor from Doctor Who, in that she is a distant figure whose origins remain a mystery.

Marcie's comment 'Oh marvellous, I'm a cliché!' when she escapes from Miss Pendragon using a handy ventilation shaft, is an obvious dig at a staple of Doctor Who.

Homage to Who

Eldritch's line, 'Nothing in the world can stop me now!' could also be a homage to Who. The line was uttered by the character Professor Zaroff in the 1967 story The Underwater Menace.

Reet also plays with a yo-yo for her 'gravity readings', a gag the Fourth Doctor (Tom Baker) used in The Power of Kroll.

Blondes have less fun

As Miss Pendragon, Jacqueline Pearce was also supposed to sport a blonde wig. The actress refused, hence the turban.

In production

Production costs were kept low by filming the majority of Dark Season within a ten-mile radius of London. The Behemoth control room was filmed at Ealing Studios.

Very few edits were made to the final episodes. A line was cut concerning Thom's lack of computer knowledge in episode one, and a scene in the final episode where Pendragon's followers desert her.

Novel idea

A slide advertising the novel of Dark Season by Russell T Davies appeared at the end of each episode.

Repeat Season

Dark Season exists in its entirety in the BBC archive, but there hasn't been a video or DVD release. The series was repeated on the digital channel CBBC 23rd, 24th and 30th March 2002.

Where are they now?

We hear Kate Winslet has made a few films and Russell T Davies has written some stuff. This was Victoria Lambert (Marcie) and Ben Chandler's (Thomas) only television work. Jacqueline Pearce continues to act and in recent years was in a West End production of Dangerous Corner. Brigit Forsyth is also best known for her stage work, recently playing the mother in the musical High Society at the Regence Park Open Air Theatre.

CENTURY FALLS

1 - 1 PARTS 1-3

Arriving at their school one morning, fifth-formers Thomas and Reet, and their peculiar and enigmatic third-form friend Marcie, are intrigued to find several men unloading computers from white transit vans. At assembly, their headmaster introduces the school to Mr. Eldritch, a sinister, black-clad man in dark glasses and bleached-blond hair, who tells the pupils that he is donating an advanced Abyss computer to each of them; the news is greeted by cheers from every pupil, all except a highly suspicious Marcie. She tries to warn her teacher, Miss Maitland, that Eldritch's motives are not as philanthropic as they seem, but her claims are dismissed as mere paranoia.

With Miss Maitland's permission, Eldritch takes the school swot, Olivia, back to his offices for use in a publicity shoot; but when they arrive at Eldritch's control room in a disused old factory, Olivia is instead introduced to Eldritch's associate, Doctor Osley, and shown the main computer system, which immediately possesses her mind. Back at the school, Thomas and Reet, aware of Marcie's unease, sneak a computer home and hide it in Thomas' garage; on activating the machine they are amazed to find that Thomas can somehow control it with his mind, and they look on in amazement as the screen displays one word: symbiosis. Olivia, now literally glowing with energy, returns to the school, where she causes destruction from the powerful forces within her. With Reet and Marcie, Thomas demonstrates his new-found computer power to Miss Maitland; by using the classroom's Abyss computer to tap into Eldritch's files they then learn that their school's mysterious benefactor is searching for a Professor Bejinski - whom Thomas immediately recognises as Marcie's next-door neighbour, Mr. Polczinski. The trio set off to warn the professor, unaware that Eldritch has detected Thomas' hacking, and has also learnt the location of the old man. Marcie, Thomas and Reet arrive at the Polczinski's house too late, and can only look on helplessly as the old man is bundled into a car by Eldritch and his men. Unless Marcie and her friends can find a way to stop Eldritch, it looks like his plan to use the Abyss computers to link everyone's mind to his is about to become a terrifying reality.

1 - 2 PART 4-6

With Eldritch's plan defeated, Marcie, Tom and Reet hope that things at the school will return to normal. However, they soon discover that an area of the school grounds has been cordoned off by an overbearing archaeologist named Miss Pendragon and her team of blond-haired colleagues. Marcie, Thomas and Reet join a party of Miss Maitland's pupils as they are shown around the dig site by one of the archaeologists, Luke; noticing a number of flaws in Luke's information, Marcie's suspicions are raised once more, and her concern increases when Miss Pendragon tells the party that she is searching for "The Behemoth" - a mighty creature from Celtic legend which was imprisoned in the ground by the ancient Gods of War. Marcie sneaks into Pendragon's portacabin and finds some monitoring equipment; listening to the headphones, she hears a sound like a giant heartbeat.

Back at the dig, a probe sent into the earth suddenly causes an earth tremor and a violent explosion; Luke's arm is injured, prompting a furious Pendragon to remark that her "perfect stock" is now useless, and to order that the site to be cleared. While Miss Maitland and Reet take Luke to hospital, Marcie and Thomas stay behind in hiding to keep watch; however, they are soon discovered by Pendragon's followers and forced to flee into the recently uncovered hole, where, instead of soil and rock, they find themselves inside an underground installation. Believing the blond Thomas to be a suitable replacement for Luke, Pendragon leads her followers after him and Marcia. Meanwhile, having returned to the school, Reet persuades Miss Maitland to steal some of Pendragon's files, which they discover originated at the Ministry of Defence. Thomas is captured by Pendragon, but Marcie manages to escape through ventilation shaft and rejoins Reet and Miss Maitland. Pendragon finds the installation's control room and reactivates the Behemoth, in fact a powerful defence computer that she created, but which was abandoned when the government learn of her fascist beliefs. Pendragon tells Thomas that the systems need a final, human, component, a 'chosen one', which is to be him; but Thomas objects and pushes Pendragon into the control chair, metal clamps pin the woman in place and the Behemoth's systems awaken. Under Pendragon's control, the machine rises up through the earth, bursting through the ground and emerging in the school assembly hall - where the triumphant Miss Pendragon comes face-to-face with her newly-arrived master: the sinister Mr. Eldritch.

DARK SKIES

'The truth is down here, third door on the right.'

Suppose the Roswell Incident really was true. Suppose there had been a stealth-like alien invasion in 1947 and suppose the US government had covered it up. Suppose all that and it doesn't take a giant leap to buy into the ultimate conspiracy theory that certain landmark historical events since could have been influenced by aliens.

Like a hybrid of THE INVADERS and THE X FILES, this promising new US thriller series offers an intriguing alternative slant on post-war American history. Stepping into the scenario are a young couple, John Loengard, an idealistic young congressional aide, and his girlfriend Kimberly Sayers. Lured to Washington in 1961 by the Camelot-like aura of the Kennedy administration, they stumble across a rogue organisation, Majestic-12, which is concealing evidence of alien invasion. Recruited by Majestic's leader, Captain Frank Bach, Loengard is shown the remains of one of the alien creatures recovered from the Roswell crash, and he joins Bach in searching out humans whose brains are the hosts for early-stage alien life-forms.

But Loengard becomes disillusioned with Majestic's obsessive secrecy and steals a piece of the alien craft to show President Kennedy. Regarded as outlaws by Bach and the organisation, Loengard and Sayers disappear, until the news of Kennedy's assassination in Dallas in 1963 propels them on a Fugitive-style odyssey, pursued by devious agents and dangerous aliens. Thus the stage is set for what co-creator Bryce Zabel calls a 'blend of fact, informed speculation and dramatic license' as the Sixties are reinterpreted through the looking glass of UFOs and alien contact.

A series undoubtedly made possible by the success of THE X FILES, Dark Skies has an interesting premise and an attractive pairing in Eric Close and Party of Five star Megan Ward. The music for the show was created by Mark Snow who was also responsible for the music on THE X FILES. Jeri Ryan would later go on to star as the popular STAR TREK : VOYAGER character Seven of Nine, after dropping her middle name.

Like a hybrid of THE INVADERS and THE X-FILES, this promising US thriller series offers an intriguing alternative slant on post-war American history. A series undoubtedly made possible by the success of The X Files, Dark Skies has an interesting premise and an attractive pairing in Eric Close and Party of Five star Megan Ward. Their mission, as of September 1996: to generate a Mulder and Scully-like following quickly enough to give America's NBC network an early hit. It came to Channel Four amid a blaze of publicity in January 1997. Executive producers for the series were Bryce Zabel, Brent V. Friedman and Joseph Stern. The series was first seen in the UK on Channel Four starting on the 20th January 1997. Supervising producers were Brent V. Friedman, Steven Beers, Steve Aspis, producer was Brad Markowitz, co-producers were Mark Shilz, Bernie Laramie.

Executive story editor was Melissa Rosenberg, director of photography Steve Yaconelli, composer was Michael Hoenig, special effects co-ordinator was Larry Fioritto and production designer was Curtis Schnell. Art director was Michael Fox, the special effects were created by Todd Masters Company. Casting was by Judith Holstra, CSA, Robert J. Ulrich, CSA, Eric Dawson, CSA & Carol Kritzer, CSA.

Tobe Hooper directed the pilot episode. His films include The Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Poltergeist and, appropriately a remake of Invaders from Mars. Dealing with real life news stories was not new for co-creator Bryce Zabel. He used to be an on-screen correspondent for CNN. The Dark Skies timeline of events takes up 85 pages and ranges from 75 million years BC to 2008 A.D. The alien special effects were created by Todd Masters Company who worked on Predator, Mortal Kombat and Star Trek: First Contact. Megan Ward is a former model but comes from an acting family. She is fluent in Japanese and her films include Trancers 2 and

The Brady Bunch Movies. On TV she regularly appeared in Party of Five.

The inspiration for Dark Skies is straight forward: Invasion of the Body Snatchers, TV's THE INVADERS and Robert Heinlein's The Puppet Masters (itself filmed in 1994), plus The Fugitive, and any paranoid conspiracy story, e.g. The Parallax View, All the President's Men or JFK. THE X FILES has drawn on many of these too, and Dark Skies would probably not have been made - or even conceived without it. In contrast to THE X FILES however, co-creator and executive producer Bryce Zabel (who previously worked on M.A.N.T.I.S. and LA Law) has developed a long time-line of events connecting his story to documented UFO sightings and major world events from 75 million years BC to 2008 AD. In this sense Dark Skies might appeal to viewers who prefer BABYLON 5.

The feature-length pilot episode, The Awakening, often seems to be in the shadow of THE X FILES. The music for the Awakening is even by Mark Snow, which can hardly be accidental. In the title-sequence for subsequent episodes the premise has been rendered into snappy statements: "They're here, they're hostile, and powerful people don't want you to know. History as we know it is a lie." In the pilot on the other hand the word "Truth" is banded around more time than in a dozen X FILES.

The regular, slightly less prestrain episodes go on to show how Hive are infiltrating the military, the space programme and manipulating politics and the public through assassinations. Cold War hysteria, mass hypnosis (using the Beatles!) and the like. Eric Close and Megan Ward shed most of their initial blandness to become likeable leads, though Ward is more impressive, particularly when conveying the trauma of her abduction. At times she is reminiscent of Jennifer Jason Leigh, while Close was obviously cast for his face, which has qualities of a young Mel Gibson, plus Robert Redford's jawline. J T Walsh, veteran of such films as House of Games, A Few Good Men, The Grifters, Red Rock West and Nixon, brings much gravity to the multifaceted role of Frank Bach. With an appropriate slot and good promotion. Channel Four (UK broadcaster) could have made Dark Skies a hit.

1 - 1 THE AWAKENING (90 MINS)

Arriving in Washington D.C. on the heels of the election of President John F. Kennedy, Kimberly Sayers finds work at the White House as boyfriend John Loengard plunges into his job as an aide to Congressman Charles Pratt. Sent to look into the Air force's investigation of UFO sightings, John meets a couple who claim to have been abducted by aliens. And back in Washington, he's accosted by the mysterious Navy Captain Frank Bach, whose history with UFO's dates back to when spy plane pilot Francis Gary Powers was downed over the Soviet Union while pursuing an alien spacecraft. Though warned that it's too risky, John confronts Bach and is recruited into the top secret Project Majestic, whose most closely guarded secrets include the body of an extra-terrestrial. With his girlfriend and his boss in the dark, John is sent to interview an Idaho farmer who has been inhabited by a parasitic alien life form that Bach says are taking over human bodies. Then, as Kim suspects John's comings and goings suggest he's having an affair, she is briefly kidnapped by aliens, the same ones who have already implanted Congressman Pratt. Meanwhile, John learns that President Kennedy isn't even aware of Majestic.

DARNA

Evil Queen Braguda together with her race the Anomalka attacks the planet of Marte. Surprised by the attack, Adran, Queen of the Adranika, realizes that Braguda is eager to possess the Adranika's powers. To avoid taking their power, Adran gave the white stone to Aio who is tasked to give it to whoever is worthy to inherit it. Aio escapes to Earth before Braguda destroys the planet Marte. Braguda follows Aio and when Aio reaches the earth's atmosphere, Braguda disables her spaceship and it crashes while the white stone fall out of the ship where the young Narda discovers it. Aio survives the crash and meets Narda to tell her to keep the stone until the right time comes to receive "the call". After eight years, Aio secretly disguises as an old beggar calls Narda through a telepathic message. The message tells that Narda is the sole inheritor of the power of the Adranika and she will protect the earth from evil. After Narda heard the message, the word "Darna" appears in the white stone and it instructed to swallow it and yell the word "Darna". Narda follows the instruction and became the superheroine Darna. Darna returns to her mortal state when she utters the word Narda and then the white stone comes out from her mouth.

After Braguda discovers that Darna possesses the white stone, she and her minions try to steal the white stone from Darna. Braguda's intention is combine the power of the magic white stone with her magic black stone so that she can transform the Planet Earth into another "Planet Marte" and mutate all Earthlings into Anomalkans so that they can survive in the new environment and serve Braguda in her quest of Galactic domination. Those servants of Braguda who are sent to fight Darna and cause havoc in Metro Manila include Mambabarang, Dr. Zombie, Sulfura, Nosforamus (resurrected father of Narda) and Valentina the half-sister of Narda whom she once thought was her cousin. Darna is able to defend the city against her enemies and she still possesses the white stone.

Darna is a 2005 drama fantasy action television series based on the Mars Ravelo's fictional character of the same name that airs on Philippine television on GMA Network. It stars Angel Locsin as Darna, Alessandra de Rossi as Valentina and Celia Rodriguez as Braguda, the main villain.

It premiered in Filipino homes on April 11, 2005 and ended on November 25, 2005.

The official title of the series is Mars Ravelo's Darna.

Another garbage to flog Philippine television. "Darna" was a fairly anticipated show but a few weeks after its debut, viewers have more to complain about than celebrate.

What's wrong with this series? There are too many cast members. Not enough screen time for all of them. Too many evil characters. The plot is lacking. Character development is insufficient. The series starts off okay at first, but after a few episodes, it predictably goes the route of a soap opera --- a bad one. The lead actress looks great in her costume but lacks charisma. The supporting actors are either over the top or can't act. Avoid this one like the plague.

Trivia:

Among those who auditioned for the role of Darna/Narda were Diana Zubiri, Nadine Samonte, Karylle, Jennylyn Mercado, and Rica Peralejo.

This was the first primetime series to reach a 47.1% rating (according to AGB and AC-Nielsen) in its pilot episode, the highest rating for a pilot episode in the Philippine television history.

Television ratings

In September 2005, according to Filipino media research firms, AGB and AC Nielsen, Darna earned a percent rating of 38% daily second only to Encantadia, which had a daily rating of 40%.

Pre-production

In 2004, executives of GMA Network and Hugo Yonzon, current license holder of Darna and head of Mango Comics, signed a licensing agreement for the Darna TV Series.

Cast

Filipino actress Angel Locsin stars as Darna. Celia Rodriguez, who played Valentina in previous movies of Darna, plays as Braguda, the main villain. In this TV series, Valentina, played by Alessandra de Rossi, is the cousin of Narda. Ding, one of the most notable relative of Darna, is played by C. J. Muere. Dennis Trillo plays Efren, Darna's main love interest.

Four actresses who have previously played the role of Darna are involved in this series.

Gina Pareño (Darna and the Planetman, 1969) - played the grandmother of Darna.

Rio Locsin (Bira, Darna, Bira, 1979) - played the wife of the Dr. Zombie, one of the villains.

Lorna Tolentino (Darna TV series, 1977) - played Queen Adran of Marte.

Regine Velasquez (Captain Barbell, 2003) - sang the theme song of the series.

Also actor Tonton Gutierrez who plays Narda's father Mulong and the villain Nosferamus, portrayed Darna's love interest in the movie Darna (1991).

Origin of Narda

Once thought of as the daughter of Mulong and Ising, Narda is really the biological daughter of Mulong's Half Sister, Prospera and her true love- Rafael. When Prospera was pregnant with Narda she discovered a space craft that had crashed on her land one fateful evening. As she approached the craft, a dying alien being (An Anomalkan) emerged and transferred its alien seed into the already pregnant Prospera.

The Alien fled to earth in the hope of escaping the massacre of infants that Braguda had ordered on the Planet Marte. Braguda's rampage was in response to a prophecy that predicted her death one day at the hands of a fellow Anomalkan. To try to avoid her fate, Braguda ordered the killing of all Anomalkan infants that could oppose her one day. But one Anomalkan managed to escape the planet Marte and in doing so crash landed to Earth

To help bring about the fulfillment of the prophecy, the fugitive Anomalkan impregnated the earth female- Prospera in the hopes that the blending of their species would create a new breed of Anomalkan strong and resilient enough to survive in Earth's environment.

After being impregnated, Prospera now carried 2 babies, one completely human (a product of her relationship with Rafael) and the other- a monstrous Anomalkan humanoid.

When Prospera gave birth, she discovered her human child to be perfectly normal and horrified at her alien one. Prospera carried her alien child to the spaceship in the hopes of killing it there but when the child suddenly shapeshifted to resemble a normal child, Prospera took it back home.

When she returned, her normal baby had disappeared (who unknown to her was stolen by Mulong when his wife's own baby died in birth). Prospera who planned to name her human child "Valentina" now gave this name to her alien baby.

Mulong named the baby he stole "Narda" after the true Baby Narda who had died and had been replaced. Narda discovered her true origins after her defeat of Braguda and the Anomalkans.

Origin of the Magic White Stone

Braguda recently revealed to Valentina the origins of the two stones and the prophecy. The Anomalkans originally owned the two stones (White Stone and Black Stone) which came from 2 powerful planets that were destroyed when the 2 powerful planets collided. The Magic White Stone and Magic Black Stone were created in the wake of that cosmic event. The first Anomalkan Queen first obtained these two stones and passed them on to the succeeding generations.

The Power and Properties of Darna's Magic White Stone

The White Stone of the Adranika (a.k.a. Darna's Magic White Stone) - properties as revealed in the latest tv series:

Contained within the magic white stone of the Adranika is the very essence of this noble race's power. When this mystic talisman is ingested by the Earth girl, Narda- she is able to channel the persona of DARNA by yelling this name. But ingesting the stone and yelling the name is not enough in channeling the 'spirit of the stone'.

She must have a pure heart with a selfless dedication to protecting the innocent and vanquishing evil. Narda cannot become Darna if her motivations are fueled by hatred and/ or vengeance. The power of Darna cannot be harnessed properly by a person easily allow themselves to be overcome by their emotions and/or selfish desire. Discipline and training is essential. This is why it is forbidden for the host to fall in love or to be selfish. More importantly, the Darna persona (which is the very embodiment of Adranikan power) cannot be channeled by just anyone. Only a person chosen by the magic stone itself can become DARNA and that is Narda, also known as 'the chosen one'.

The white stone may be the only one of its kind but it does have an opposite- the Black Stone of the Anomalka which is under the possession of Braguda- the Queen of Darkness and ruler of the Anomalkas (Planet Marte's Evil underground dwelling race). Braguda has long sought the Adranikan stone because anyone who possesses both the black stone of the Anomalka and white stone of the Adranika will have the power necessary to conquer and dominate any planet. Although Braguda cannot channel the persona of 'Darna' should she manage to acquire it, she can utilize the stone's energy to boost her own and be a threat to the universe. This is why the magic white stone must never be allowed to fall into the hands of Braguda.

Darna's powers and paraphernalia

Superhuman strength

Invulnerability to most conventional weapons

Power of Flight/ Speed

Limited force-field casting abilities

Winged medallion ruby rays

"Shuriken belt medallions"

The Magic White Stone (Mahiwagang Puting Bato) - the Adranikan stone that transforms Narda into Darna and back.

"Mahiwagang Kabibe" (Magic Clamshell) - an amulet guarded by a colony of Mermaids under the leadership of a Mermaid Sorceress named "Dyanga". Narda enlisted the aid of Dyesebel who accompanied her to retrieve it so that she can use it to take back her magic white stone from the Anomalkans.

The Villains

Valentina-Valentina was the most popular enemy of Darna in the movies and comics. She has the power of controlling snakes, like the mythical creature, Medusa. She is played by Alessandra de Rossi.

Braguda-Braguda is the main villain of the TV series. She is the queen of the Anomalkan race of the Planet Marte. Braguda is played by Celia Rodriguez, the original actress who played Valentina in the original movies.

Nosferamus-Nosferamus is the right hand man of Braguda. He is the transformed form of Narda's father. Nosferamus is also known as the grim reaper. He is played by Tonton Gutierrez.

Mambabarang-Mambarang is the king of insects and pests. Mambabarang is played by Eddie Garcia.

Manananggal-She was known as Ms. Luna. She has all the known powers of a regular manananggal. She and Darna engaged in a stunning aerial battle where she, due to her lack of legs at the time, was forced to combat against her foe by flapping her wings fast and swung her fists at Darna to knock her into submission, belting at least two on-screen punches at Darna's face (both directly at her cheeks)- she is apparently the first villain shown in the series to ever do so. Having had enough of getting sucker punched time and time again (with her beautiful face getting turned into mush), Darna retaliated and Manananggal met her end when the heroine threw a necklace of garlic which caught her in the neck. Manananggal is played by Maggie Wilson.

Sulfura-Sulfura was once a super model turned villain. As her villain name states, she has the power to spew fire, rock, and acid to melt her enemies. Sulfura is played by Carmina Villaroel.

Dr. Zombie-Dr. Zombies prominent life took a twisted turn after the death of his beloved wife. A genius in his own right, he invented a concoction with the power to reanimate the dead - into zombies. He also wields an assortment of weaponry unique only to himself, as he is apparently the only non-superpowered major foe in the series. He is played by Christopher de Leon.

Molecula-Molecula is a shape-shifter. Molecula can break herself apart to practically a molecular level, splitting herself to countless, minute molecular parts to gain more mobility and versatility. She tried to kill Darna by breaking up and infesting Darna's internal systems. She is played by Cristine Reyes.

Divas Impaktitas-The Divas Impaktitas are the three right hand she-vampires of Valentina. They were created by the black stone, granting them immunity to the sun as well as crosses and crucifixes, though they could still be slain if something sharp was driven through their hearts. The Divas Impaktitas are played by Ryza Cenon, Krizzy Jareno, and Ailyn Luna.

Toy Master-Toy Master has the power to control toys as well as other abilities that border on the realm of magic, allowing him to defy the fabric of reality by summoning corporeal objects out of nothing or generating an irritating sound beating his drum, powerful enough to disorient even Darna. He stole his powers from a gnome. He is played by Bearwin Meily.

Divina Demonica-Divina Demonica has the power to scream supersonic screams, screams that could give severe trauma to those within her vicinity. In Darna's case, her own extra-sensitive hearing caused her to become severely disoriented whenever Divina blasts her with her powers, which is how Divina nearly bested the red-and-gold clad heroine in hand-to-hand combat. Divina Demonica was originally an elderly woman who was pop sensation during her time as a singer; Anomalkan power gained her the potential to revert her back to her youthful self, but compels her to constantly "extract" voices from other people and absorbing them to keep young. She stores her "spare" voices in bottles until time has come for them. Darna, while in her civilian guise as Narda, was ambushed by Divina and her voice subsequently removed. This not only made her incapable of speaking but also temporarily stalled her ability to become Darna until she finally got back her voice. Divina also demonstrates the ability to manipulate bats, possibly by synchronizing with them using her powers to override their minds. When she is really angry, she becomes Demonica. She is played by K Brosas.

Black Darna-Black Darna is the result of Darna's cooped up emotions. Before she became Black Darna, she was Carol, Narda's boss at work. Having all of the original Darna's strengths and abilities, Black Darna was undeniably one of the most formidable adversaries the heroine had to face; she was also noticeably faster than Darna. Her only weakness is that like Darna herself, draws her powers from the white stone. Which was how Darna stopped her by reverting back to Narda. This weakness was later nullified by Valentina, as well as granting Black Darna the ability to generate two other copies of herself. She is played by Katrina Halili. Babaeng Tuod, Babaeng Impakta and Babaeng Lobo-All of these are different forms of Alice, Narda's best friend. They are played by Karen de los Reyes.

The death of Ding, Narda's brother. In most Darna movies, Ding plays as Darna's sidekick but in the TV adaptation, Ding died.

The TV series is the first live-action Darna that utilizes the original Mars Ravelo concept of Darna being from the planet Marte. Previous features had always injected a religious touch by having Darna's power come from God or through an angel. The TV show is faithful to the comicbooks (both the original Ravelo comic strip from the 1950s as well as the 3-issue "Modern Age" comics mini-series produced by Mango Comics).

The introduction of the Wonderkids, Darna's sidekicks, composed of her stepbrother Iking and an extraordinary girl named Lenlen. They help Darna in maintaining peace through the land. However, in the middle of the series, Lenlen died.

The introduction of the polar opposite of Darna. Never before in comics, movie or television has there been a "Black Darna" (in the same sense as black magic) making it a major development in the series. Katrina Halili is the first-ever to portray such a role.

Another of Mars Ravelo's creations, Dyesebel the mermaid, made a guest appearance in the series for the very first time. She played an important role in helping Narda continue her battle against evil forces. Ara Mina played Dyesebel. Alice Dixson (who has played Dyesebel in film) played the mermaids' leader Dyangga. Rochelle Pangilinan also plays a mermaid Corella, Dyesebel's best friend.

Captain Barbell, another Mars Ravelo creation, appeared in the final episode but his face was not shown, probably to excite viewers since Captain Barbell is said to be GMA Network's next project.

Locations

Planet Marte (Also known as "Nibiru" in Mango Comics "Darna # 3") - The doomed Planet Marte was once the home of the Adranikan race which represented good and the underground dwelling Anomalkans.

"Kanlungang Adran" (Adran's Cradle) - A mystic pocket dimension that serves as a sanctum sanctorum and healing place known only to the Adranika race. The "stonebearer" AIO, resides her and also served as a place of healing for Darna when she is severely wounded. Manila, the Philippines - Capital of the Philippine republic, Narda and her small family resides here. Laguna - a province in the Philippines where Narda and Efren grew up and where the magic white stone fell from the sky and was discovered by Narda.

DAYBREAK

Los Angeles Detective Brett Hopper is stuck repeating the same day, in which he is framed for the murder of the Assistant District Attorney, Garza. Each day, he attempts to uncover clues to the homicide that has him on the run for his freedom. Hopper must clear his name, but those close to him get caught in the web of conspiracy that will put their lives in danger.

The days can get complicated with each decision he makes as he tries various tactics to fight or flee the murder allegations. At least one other individual seems to be repeating the same day as Hopper, but his actions rarely affect Hopper's case unless they happen to be working together on that iteration of the day.

While episodes may start at any time of the day and may contain multiple days or parts of days, Hopper begins each day by waking up at 6:17 a.m. And viewing his clock turn to 6:18 a.m. Hopper only carries his memories and his body, with any injuries, over into the next repetition of the day. However, injuries sustained to other individuals do not carry over to the next day.

If Hopper makes enough of a difference in one situation, related events are sometimes altered. This generally involves an individual waking up with a sense of apprehension or a newfound perspective concerning the object or relationship that Hopper affected in a previous iteration of the day. These changes can be reverted, as in the cases of Andrea deciding to check her boyfriend into a drug rehabilitation center and Rita's feelings towards Hopper in episodes 11, 12 and 13.

Day Break is a television program for which one 13-episode season was produced. The series aired on the ABC network, and premiered on November 15, 2006. Rapidly declining ratings led to the show being cancelled on December 15 after only six episodes had aired. The remaining episodes were subsequently made available online at ABC.com. Viewers for the show averaged 6.5 million.

The series starred Taye Diggs as Detective Brett Hopper, who is framed for the murder of Assistant District Attorney Alberto Garza. Due to a time loop, Hopper lives the same day over and over. The series revolves around his attempt to solve the mystery of the murder, and find out who is behind the conspiracy to frame him.

Main characters

Brett Hopper, played by Taye Diggs, the main character of the show. He is a detective who is framed for the murder of Assistant District Attorney Alberto Garza.

Rita Shelten, played by Moon Bloodgood, Brett's girlfriend. She is a nurse and is targeted by those who are framing Brett.

Jennifer Mathis, played by Meta Golding, Brett's sister. She is a school teacher.

Andrea Battle, played by Victoria Pratt, Brett's current partner. She is also a detective and is being investigated by Internal Affairs because of some shady dealings with her informer "Slim". She is romantically involved with Eddie Reyes, a former cop with a drug addiction.

Damien Ortiz, played by Ramon Rodriguez, Brett's informant. He is a gang member that decided to turn against his gang. His safe house was ambushed the night before the repeating day, but he escaped.

Chad Shelten, played by Adam Baldwin, Brett's former partner. He is now a detective in Internal Affairs. He is also Rita's ex-husband.

Online distribution

ABC had previously said that there were problems that kept the rest of the episodes from being shown online, calling them "unforeseen music clearance issues." On January 14, 2007, the network announced that the remaining episodes would be made available by the end of February. The first six episodes which had aired on television were posted online on January 29, 2007, along with the first four unaired episodes. Episodes 11 and 12 were then released the following two weeks.

The thirteenth and final episode, which was originally scheduled to be available on February 19, was delayed multiple times. After a nearly three week wait, the finale premiered late on March 2. It was reported that the reasons for this delay concerned copyrighting issues with some of the original soundtrack from the final cut of the episode.

There's a fine line between mysterious and just plain mystifying, and "Day Break" lurches over it. A taut thriller that weds "24" with "Groundhog Day," the series' rules are too murky for its own good, leaving behind a handsome, fast-paced hour that (three episodes in, anyway) still doesn't make a lick of sense. Taye Diggs is an energetic presence in the central role, but this frosh drama faces a tall order subbing for "Lost" against CBS' surging "Criminal Minds," especially with ABC companion "The Nine" already looking like it needs a standing eight count.

"For every decision, there's a consequence" becomes the pivotal line describing this concept, in which L.A. detective Brett Hopper (Diggs) awakens to find himself charged with murdering an assistant district attorney. Dragged downtown, he's separated from his girlfriend Rita (Moon Bloodgood), who happens to be the ex-wife of his former partner (Adam Baldwin), as two homicide detectives (Mitch Pileggi and Ian Anthony Dale) grill him.

About halfway through, though, things start to get weird. Hopper is knocked out and awakens in a huge quarry that vaguely resembles Superman's fortress of solitude, where a shadowy man (Jonathan Banks) shows him video of his girlfriend being killed. Hopper is then injected with something and awakens back at the start of the day -- in bed with a very alive Rita.

So the cop goes about reliving his day, this time with all the knowledge amassed the day before, trying to unravel who's framing him, what's behind the scheme and why only he is experiencing this deja vu (not to be confused with the Denzel Washington movie). Moreover, everything that happens to him also carries over, so when he gets shot in one episode, he's still nursing the wound in the next.

"Groundhog Day" milked considerable comedic mileage from a similar premise, but as a drama, the uncertainty becomes increasingly confounding, and a trifle annoying. And while the plot thickens as Hopper collects information by pursuing different paths, the vague sci-fi underpinnings diminish the sense of jeopardy since there's no situation that can't be resolved -- temporarily, anyway -- by taking a nap and waiting for sunrise.

To the credit of series creator Paul Zbyszewski and exec producers Matthew Gross, Jeffrey Bell and Rob Bowman (the last two are "X-Files" alums), it's an ambitious template with "Memento"-like overtones, and they've done a fine job casting the series, beginning with Diggs, who's every ounce the chiseled action hero.

The nagging question I keep repeating, however, is whether viewers will be drawn into the mystery or be put off by seeing variations on the same scenes over and over, at which point it might dawn on them they can escape Hopper's recurring nightmare at any moment with a flick of the remote control.

DEAD AT 21

Ed Bellamy thought he was an above average 19-year-old college student who was plagued by a series of strange dreams. However, on his 20th birthday his whole life turned upside down as he discovered he was anything but normal. Having returned home from college for the summer, Ed was surprised to find a young woman he had never met before in his bedroom at his birthday party. The young woman was Maria and before the pair was able to get acquainted, a youth with a gun burst through his window with a package that he was determined that Ed was to have. Ed felt that he had seen this person in his dreams and attempted to take him seriously despite Maria's protests. Moments later, a man named Winston, identifying himself as a government agent, arrived on the scene wanting the package Ed had been given. Instead of giving Winston the package, Ed and Maria fled. Winston killed the youth and reported that Ed was the killer.

Ed discovered a video tape in the package which revealed a number of surprising things about himself. Ed was a cyb, one of a number of infants who had microchips placed inside their heads in an experiment to increase their intelligence. The infants were all placed in adoptive homes with the new parents being paid to take the child. The project was a success, however the chips caused the recipients to begin having strange dreams, which often foreshadowed their meetings with another cyb. These dreams became more and more intense until by the time one reached ones 21st birthday the dreams would leave one dead. Ed also learned that the government has since closed down the project and that Winston has been assigned to track down anyone who finds out about it. Ed's one chance of survival lies in his finding Dr. Victor Heisenberg, the project's founder, whom he later learns is dead. An official government story he later learns may not be true.

Ed and Maria thus have less than a year to find Dr. Heisenberg before Ed dies. All the while staying one step ahead of the law who want to bring in Ed for murder and away from Winston who dons a variety of government badges in an effort to track the pair down.

This show marked MTV's first foray into Science Fiction and visually the show was impressive, but beneath that the stories wear not up to much. Dead at 21 was telecast on MTV, a cable network that at one time ran music videos. The series has been highly influenced by music videos. Camera work is often hand-held with a plethora of bizarre angles, while the background music is rock music.

This show was on a few years ago on MTV. A pretty cool concept, little kid gets implanted by shadow govt. agency, becomes super smart, but the side effect is you die when you turn 21. Starring Jack Noseworthy (d'ya think that's his real name?) and Whip(!) Hubley as the greasy govt. agent, this show was so disjointed, quirky and asinine that I wished I was DEAD AT 21. A true piece of crap.

I remember watching this show just to see what was going to happen every week. Not that the show was good, but I was intrigued by it nonetheless. Does anyone know what happened towards the end of the show? Did that guy finally reach 21 and drop dead? By the way, the chick on the show was hot. Does anyone remember as Doogie Howser's girlfriend?

Why does mtv even bother making shows like this when they cancel them after 2 episodes?

Maybe not a "good" show, but super addictive. I couldn't wait for each new episode of this show just to see what was going to happen. The first season cliffhanger (which ended up being the final episode of the show when MTV didn't renew it) was AMAZING, and it still pops up in my head every once in a while. Damn I wish they'd finished the story!

I liked this show, even though it had a whacky premise. I think the girl (Doogie Howser's girlfriend) was hot. Does anyone know if they finally concluded the show and he died at 21 or if it was canceled?

The show was never canceled after 2 shows. What are you talking about? They showed the whole series on MTV. The way I remember the last two episodes was the bad agent dude the guy you thought was bad. Was agent named Winston, bent on tracking down all the cybs and killing them.

Ed's only hope for survival is a doctor who worked on the project, Victor Heisenberg.

DEAD ZONE, THE

Life is looking good for Johnny Smith until he gets into a terrible car crash late one night that leaves him in a deep coma. Several years later, he wakes up only to find that he now has the power to read people's minds and see their futures. Will people believe his warnings? Will he be able to survive the stresses of his newfound talents? Will he resist the temptation to use them for his own benefit?

Is it possible for a series that has been sitting on the shelf for over a year to be any good? "The Dead Zone" proves that, yes, it is possible.

FOX had already proven that shelved shows could be good (if not successful) last season with "The Tick" and "Greg the Bunny." Those shows failed because of lack of promotion, horrible time-slots, and overwhelming competition, but not because they weren't any good. "The Dead Zone" is lucky because it is on USA, where it has the chance to blossom.

Based on a 1979 Stephen King novel, "The Dead Zone" tells the tale of Johnny Smith (Anthony Michael Hall), an accident victim who awakens from a supposedly irreversible coma to find it's six years later, and a lot has changed. His fiancée Sarah (Nicole deBoer), is married to another man (Chris Bruno), with whom she is raising Johnny's son, and he has powerful psychic abilities that allow him to see the past or future of people he touches.

Originally scheduled to be part of UPN's 2001-2002 Fall lineup, it was dropped in favor of "Buffy the Vampire Slayer." I can't fault the network for the decision, because "Buffy" is still my favorite TV show on the air today, but I thought it was a little odd that the network didn't keep the show for midseason.

It has been a very long time since I've seen the 1983 David Cronenberg movie that starred Christopher Walken (very long, we're talking high school), and I've never read the book, so I didn't have a lot of pre-conceived perceptions of what I saw. I did hear in press releases that it was the perfect show for people who were mourning the loss of "The X-Files." That wasn't a good sign for me because I am the only TV geek that I know who never liked that show.

On the other hand, I've always been a fan of Anthony Michael Hall. I could always identify with his characters that he played in those 1980's John Hughes movies, and I thought he was brilliant in the 1999 TNT TV movie "Pirates of Silicon Valley." Over the years he has acquired a harder-edged look, something I first noticed in the 1990 Tim Burton movie Edward Scissorhands. In "The Dead Zone" he continues to be brilliant.

Hall's performance as Johnny is so intense that it's scary, and that is the perfect fit for this series. When Johnny gets his visions, it gives Hall a chance to play many characters from the past and future. This is a dream role for any actor, similar to Scott Bakula's role as Sam Beckett in "Quantum Leap" where he got to play a different character every week. Hall is the lucky recipient of this role, and he plays it to the hilt.

If I have any complaint, at least just in the premiere, it's some of the other character's plotlines. One of the visions that Johnny has is that a doctor who had treated him in the hospital where he was in the coma was under the false impression that his mother was dead. Johnny goes back to the doctor's past at the point where he discovers that his mother hadn't been killed in an explosion. The doctor ends up having a sappy sweet reunion with his mother. I should have expected it, but maybe I'm just being too much of a downer.

One other scene I found unintentionally humorous that really pointed out the fact that the series had been on the shelf for over a year. A nurse at the hospital was updating Johnny on all the things that had happened in the six years he was in a coma. The last thing he said was that Regis Philbin was the biggest thing on television! What a difference a year makes! Of course everyone now knows that "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" almost sunk ABC because they had decided to run the show fifty-zillion times a week, and now it has been cancelled (except for the occasional special episodes it will run during the season.)

The Dead Zone, is a show that would be and should have been worthy of being on a network, but I think that since it is on USA it will get a chance to become a classic. I just hope Hall will not get too big of a head and quit the series before we get a good run!

Characters

Johnny Smith is a retired schoolteacher who, as a result of a car accident, has developed psychic abilities. He is played by Anthony Michael Hall. An encounter with a carnival trickster in the first episode (before the car accident) makes it clear Johnny already has some psychic abilities. However, after the coma, their nature changes from intuition to visions, the latter requiring urgent action, even when personally inconvenient, whereas earlier he only uses his ability on a carnival trickster to amuse his date (Sarah Bracknell).

Sarah Bracknell Bannerman (played by Nicole DeBoer), is Johnny's former fiancée and the mother of his biological son, J.J. She married Walt Bannerman during Johnny's coma, and the two are raising the child together. Sarah knew Johnny when they were children, and later taught at the same school as him. Sarah's mother died when she was a teenager, which strained her relationship with her father. As of the end of season 5, Sarah is pregnant with Walt's child. At the beginning of season 6, Sarah gives birth to Walt's daughter and names her Hope.

Sheriff Walt Bannerman The relationship between Johnny and Walt is initially very rocky, as Johnny often feels that Walt stole Sarah from him. However, since then as Johnny displays his powers more and more often in law enforcement situations, Johnny becomes an asset to Walt and the two become friends. The name Walt Bannerman is a combination between the name George Bannerman and Walt Hazlett. In the novel, George Bannerman was the sheriff, and Walt Hazlett was the man Sarah married. At the beginning of season 6 episode "Heritage", Walt is killed in a fire at Faith Heritage Chapel. However, the character continued to pop up throughout season 6 in visions, flashbacks, and even briefly as a ghost. Walt was played by Chris Bruno. Bruce Lewis is a physiotherapist who helps Johnny regain his strength after his coma. Bruce is an open-minded spiritual junkie as a result of a religious upbringing by his pastor father; he is Johnny's best friend and frequently his voice of reason, and may very well be the reason for the divergence in this series when compared to the novel or 1983 movie (Johnny never tried to kill Greg Stillson before the election). Bruce is played by John L. Adams.

Rev. Gene Purdy is another original character in the series, a religious leader and head of a prestigious university and foundations funded by Vera Smith, Johnny's mother. Johnny always speculated that Purdy's interest in Vera was for financial gain; however, his powers allow him to discover that Purdy had been in love with her for more than 35 years. Upon Vera's suicide over the grief of the loss of her son, Purdy covered up the incident and made everyone believe she died of a heart attack, thus preserving her dignity in the public eye. Purdy has long been involved with somewhat shady dealings, but is always in the constant service of God His devotion sometimes clouds his judgment and has even gone as far as to cover up a murder to protect better interests. At the end of the Season 6 episode "Heritage" Purdy leaves Cleaves Mills after being involved in a fire that killed Walt Bannerman and Malcolm Janus at the Faith Heritage Chapel. Rev. Purdy is played by David Ogden Stiers.

Dana Bright was a journalist for the Bangor Daily Times. She covered much of Johnny's early work and later became romantically linked with him; she was also in a relationship with Gene Purdy. Dana left the show for some time and her absence was not explained until the 4th episode of the 5th season, "Articles of Faith". Because of her coverage of Johnny, she was able to move on up to reporting for a Boston television station, choosing her career ambitions above her increasingly complex relationship with Johnny. At the end of that episode when she leaves, it is shown that both harbor, to some degree, feelings for each other. Whether she will appear again in the future is unknown. She is played by Kristen Dalton.

Greg Stillson is a mentally unstable politician who has taken many illegal steps to secure an election. Upon meeting with Johnny Smith, it became clear that he would become responsible for an apocalyptic event that Johnny has seen in his visions and is trying to prevent. After the death of Malcom Janus (see below), Johnny's visions of a Stillson-created apocalypse ceased, but after some further revelations they returned at the end of the season. Greg is played by Sean Patrick Flanery.

Deputy Roscoe works for Walt. He is usually first on the scene and very dependable. He is played by Bill Mondy.

Johnny "J.J." Bannerman is the biological son of Johnny and Sarah. Sarah was pregnant when Johnny had his accident and she ultimately married Walt Bannerman, who raised J.J. As his own son. As of the third season, Walt and Sarah have told J.J. That Johnny is his real father, and Johnny has taken on more fatherly duties. J.J. Was played by Spencer Achtymichuk (Season 1-5) and now played by Connor Price(Season 6-). In the season six episode Big Top Johnny starts to believe that J.J. Has powers, but J.J. Appears to be covering up his innate abilities. During the Season Six finale, J.J. Has his first actual vision when he sees Armageddon during a scuffle with Greg Stillson.

Malcolm Janus is a power-broker who believes that Greg Stillson is "destined for great things." His ultimate goal is to place Stillson in the White House. He also gave Rev. Purdy a global sphere of influence, in return for financial support of Stillson's campaigns. He is apparently a member of the Illuminati, as he wears a ring with their symbol. At the beginning of season 6 episode "Heritage", Janus is killed in self-defense by Purdy at Faith Heritage Chapel. Janus was played by Martin Donovan.

Christopher Wey is a man from the future who has been comatose since 2003. He wakes after the apocalypse to discover that he has a "dead zone" similar to Johnny's, and that he can communicate with the present-day Johnny when both are in contact with the head of his cane. He is revealed to be in league with a future Johnny Smith and J.J. Wey is played by Frank Whaley.

Rebecca Caldwell is a child psychiatrist who met Johnny during his investigation of the murder of her sister Rachel. She has since become his girlfriend and at one point in time, found out that Greg Stillson may have been responsible for her sister's murder and will be responsible for the upcoming apocalypse. As of the third-season finale she has purchased a gun in an attempt to assassinate Stillson. She was stopped by Johnny and discovered that Stillson did not kill Rachel. She left Johnny, seeking to sort things out for herself. She is played by Sarah Wynter.

Alex Sinclair is a female psychic who discovered her "dead zone" when she was stung by a swarm of bees (presumably "killer bees") as a child and became hyper-allergic to bee stings and products. She first appears in the fourth season episode "Double Vision" where she and Johnny track down a sniper together. At the end of the episode, it's clear that she and Johnny have developed feelings for each other but she decides that she's not ready to pursue the relationship. She does later appear in the fourth season Christmas episode "A Very Dead Zone Christmas" where the idea of her and Johnny getting together is further explored. Alex is played by Jennifer Finnigan.

Anna Turner is the new "sheriff pro tem" of Penobscot County. She is currently investigating the final unofficial case of the recently-deceased Sheriff Walt Bannerman. Anna is played by Cara Buono.

Deviations

Johnny's coma is moved from the 1970s to the period of June 6, 1995 to September 1, 2001, and is lengthened from four and a half years to six.

Walt Bannerman is an amalgamation of two characters: the Castle Rock sheriff, George Bannerman, and Sarah's husband, Walt Hazlett.

Sarah's son was fathered by Johnny and raised by Walt as his son; in the book, the child is Walt's.

His father died in a mental hospital prior to the accident. It is later revealed that his father is alive and suffering from Alzheimer's, his visions are being used by Stillson to gain power. In the book, his father actually survives him and is neither crazy nor has visions.

The season 4 episode "Babble On" leads viewers to believe that Johnny's father had similar visions, which eventually resulted in his being institutionalized. However, by the end of the episode, it is revealed that a young Johnny was the originator of the visions on which his father was acting. The pilot and the original book suggest Johnny had visions before his accident. The father turns out to be alive and not only had visions but also the source of information for Stillson machinations.

New characters include physical therapist Bruce Lewis, Johnny's sidekick; and the Rev. Gene Purdy, Johnny's legal guardian. Sarah and Walt also take more prominent roles, instead of leaving Johnny alone for months or years at a time.

Though Greg Stillson is mentioned in the pilot episode (in a conversation Reverend Purdy has on the phone), he does not appear onscreen until the final episode of the first season; as of the end of Season 5, Johnny has neither shot him nor planned to do so (outside of visions). * With the introduction of Malcolm Janus, it becomes evident that Stillson is a pawn of more sinister forces. In the novel and film, Stillson brought about the apocalypse himself in an act of self aggrandization, which proves a farce created by Stillson, who all along was the one in control as seen at the end of season 6.

Through visions, Johnny receives help from a man (Wey) in the post-apocalyptic future. In this future, it is learned that J.J. And Johnny survive Armageddon, but Johnny has become more cold-hearted and vicious. There is nothing that parallels this in the novel.

In the show, Johnny and Sarah's relationship is much more serious prior to the accident; they were engaged, and had been friends since early childhood. In the novel, they went to the same college, but did not actually meet until they began to teach at the same school. Johnny's accident occurred on their third date, just after Sarah had decided to make the relationship more serious.

Johnny's abilities are somewhat different in the novel; with two notable exceptions, in the novel he does not have visions. Instead, he gets "flashes"; he just knows something, with a cold hard certainty. They are also more eerie, as when the flashes come he goes into an odd sort of trance that tends to frighten those around him and his touch when getting these flashes discomforts and alarm those he is touching. It makes him more of an outcast and more eager to deny the ability than is the case in the TV show.

Johnny has no middle name in the novel, and is specifically referred to at least once as "Johnny-no-middle-initial-Smith"; in the episode "Vortex," Johnny gives his middle name as "Robert."

In the novel the "dead zone" refers to Johnny's inability to visualize certain details or objects (in either a vision or a memory), due to brain damage caused by the accident. In the show the "dead zone" is a section of brain that redirected blood flow from the accident.

It is suggested that Bruce's friendship with Johnny in the series is a key factor to many of the changes from the original book and movie. In the second-season episode "Zion", Bruce has a vision of an alternate reality where he chose another career path and did not help Johnny recover after he woke from his coma. In this reality Johnny tries to kill Greg Stillson just as he does in the original book and movie.

Media

Music

In the pilot episode, "Wheel of Fortune," the music class practices the song "Mr. Sandman." In the same episode, Johnny and Sarah make out in his car to "Sleep Walk" a song by Santo & Johnny , which also featured in the Stephen King movie "Sleepwalkers."

The theme song from Seasons 1-3 is "New Year's Prayer" by Jeff Buckley.

The new theme song since Season 4 is "Dead Zone Epic" by Blues Saraceno.

The Promos for Season 4 featured the song "Brace Yourself" by Howie Day.

The Promos for Season 5 featured the song "By My Side" by INXS.

The Promos for Season 6 feature the song "Touch Me" by The Doors.

In December 2007, the series was cancelled after six seasons, one of the possible reasons for this was the 2007-08 writers strike in Hollywood, that effected many US TV shows.

1 - 1 WHEEL OF FORTUNE

Johnny Smith was leading an idyllic small-town life: working as a high school science teacher, engaged to the love of his life, Sarah, and being a devoted son to his widowed mother, Vera, who lives nearby. But after a near-fatal car accident puts him in a deep coma, Johnny awakens six years later to find everything has changed: Sarah is now married to someone else, local sheriff Walt Bannerman; the child they are raising is actually Johnny's son and knows nothing about his real father; and Johnny's mother Vera has passed away, leaving Johnny's finances under the thumb of Reverend Purdy, an influential religious leader who is also his mother's former lover. But, most importantly, Johnny himself has changed: he now finds himself with the gift (or curse) of second sight. Through visions he sees with a simple touch, he becomes responsible for saving a nurse's little girl from a fire, helping his Vietnamese doctor reunite with the mother he thought was killed during the fall of Saigon, and now must prevent a local serial killer from striking again. Now Johnny is faced with the daunting task of coming to grips with his new powers - and navigating his way through his new life.

DEADLY GAMES

A freak lab accident brings the villains of a video game to life. And these aren't just any villains. They are the worst nightmares of Dr. Gus Lloyd's life, including his old boss, his former mother-in-law and his ex-wife's divorce lawyer. Now he, his friend Peter and his ex-wife Lauren, whose also part of the game, must battle these video fiends as they carry out their programmed missions of destruction. It begins with the guiding mind behind the opposition, Sebastian Jackal, sending a sadistic rival football player in to kidnap Lauren.

STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION'S Brent Spiner guest starred in an episode called 'Practical Joker'. The first episode was also directed by Leonard Nimoy famous for playing Mr. Spock in STAR TREK. The series was shown on the United Paramount Networks. James Calvert who played Dr. Gus Lloyd, also starred as a regular in SUPERBOY as T.J. White.

Deadly Games was an American sci fi show that appeared on UPN as part of its 1995 season. The basic plot of the show is about video game characters that come to life re-enacting their deadly plans in real life. The first episode introduces the protagonist Gus, an engineer, who has created a video game in his spare time to exert his indignant feelings about people in his life who have treated him unfairly (his father, his ex-wife's mother, a high school football playing bully, etc.). In an accident involving his experimental laboratory project, Gus' video game comes to life. The video game characters are based on people from the programmer's, Gus, real life. The final boss of the game is Jackal, which is a combination of both the devil and Gus' father.

DEEPWATER BLACK

AKA: MISSION GENESIS

After the population of Earth is killed by a virus, the people of Earth decide to send teenagers into space in cryogenic suspension. After 500 years the crew of the ship wake up, only to discover that they don't know who they are or how they got where they are and where they are going. It seems that they are carrying enough genetic material to repopulate Earth. . . Which has been destroyed by a plague. Their spaceship however is constantly attacked by different kinds of alien species and the few remaining threats from the remnants of human kind.

This cloned crew of six, realise that they also contain the memories of their original clone brother or sister, and these memories come back to haunt them in the future, even effected their personality.

The SCI-FI Channel Europe also showed the 30 minute The Making of Deep Water Black. Gordon Michael Wolvett also starred in MYSTERIOUS ISLAND. Nicole deBoer who played Yuna would later go on to star in the seventh season STAR TREK : DEEP SPACE NINE. The executive producers for the series were Wilf Copeland and Alex Nassar, producers were Jeff Copeland and Barry Pearson.

After Deep Space Nine spawned SPACE ISLAND ONE, it was logical that we'd be treated to a series called "Deep something or other", and the Sci-Fi Channel delivers the goods in its half-hourly teen drama series. Based on the little known Blackwater novels by Ken Catran, dwb is a cheap and cheerful hybrid of Hollyoaks and BLAKE'S 7, via Beverley Hills 90210. It's bit quite Melrose Space, but the six blemish-free young leads are carefully chosen to appeal to the youth culture, and the shows low budget will ensure that much is made of their adolescent Angst, thus deflecting the action away from the special effects.

The largely unknown cast are good in their limited roles, with the spiky haired Gordon Michael Wolvett getting the best lines as self-appointed leader Reb. The show is thematically linked with BATTLESTAR GALATICA and STAR TREK: VOYAGER, but the modest production values unfortunately push it into a different class from its mainstream counterparts. The computer generated effects are tidy, if uninspiring, and the craft designs are not unlike those seen in the STAR TREK universe, but at least the show tried hard. Undemanding SF for the next generation of fans, as opposed to fans of STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION, the cast will no doubt be appearing on posters in many a teen's bedroom.

In the late 20th Century, a DNA virus slowly emerges on Earth - so slowly, in fact, that the threat is ignored. Over subsequent decades, it develops - but the effects are so limited that the authorities do not declare an epidemic. By the year 2100, it has mutated, and resistance to the virus diminishes. By 2145, the human race is ravaged by the Pandora plague, which now kills within just five days.

Realising that the disease will destroy the entire species, the scientific community on Mars Colony invents a bold plan, secretly launching the ship Deepwater into the depths of Space. On board are a precious cargo of human gene stock and a crew of six clones, which are held in a state of hibernation, maturing within their life capsules. Watched over by the computer Gen (Julia Khaner), these clones receive educational pre-programming, such that when they emerge as adults they can complete the last stage of Deepwater's mission. They can pilot the ship back to Earth, and begin the repopulation of the long- dead world.

Alas, things go pear-shaped when an attacking alien vessel, of unknown origin and uncertain intent, prematurely results in the crew being re-activated in the year 2695. Ship's engineer Reb (Gordon Michael Wolvett), pilot and navigator Yuna (Nicole deBoer), weapons specialist Bren (Jason Cadieux), genetic scientist Gret (Kelli Taylor), computer geek Zak (Craig Kirkwood) and the ship's doctor Lise (Sara Sahr) emerge as adolescents -temporarily suffering amnesia, and desperately trying to recall their mission. Horribly clever and sickeningly beautiful, this team of six represent the final hope for the future of mankind.

Created and produced by Jeff Copeland and Barry Pearson, Deepwater Black is based on the three novels written by New Zealand author Ken Catran, Deepwater Black, Deepwater Angels and Deepwater Landing.

Originally produced under the (more relevant) title Mission Genesis, the series is shot in Toronto and is the first original dramatic series commissioned by the Sci-Fi Channel. The station has recently made a firm commitment to developing their own programming - with a new series of Sliders and the co-production with the BBC, Invasion Earth, due to follow later this year.

Barry Schulman, Vice President of programming for the Sci Fi Channel, describes Deepwater Black as "a sort of Gen-X version of LOST IN SPACE". The premise is strong but nothing vastly original, and the lightweight 22-minute episodes should appeal as much to the Hollyoaks audience as the hardcore Science Fiction fans. "If Star Trek ever came out with a Starfleet Academy show, this would be closer to that," says Deepwater Black executive producer Alex Nassar. "It's very much a character-driven show."

Nevertheless, in production terms at least, the series bears more similarity to BABYLON 5 than Trek, in that it is produced for cable television on a very strict budget. The sets are limited but impressive, and the visual effects are cheap and computer generated - but still very good indeed. "People who have seen it so far seem pretty excited about the effects," enthuses Gordon Michael Woolvett. "They bought all the equipment, they bought all the software, and they hired young guys right out of the university to do the effects. And it actually panned out really, really well."

With just two directors, George Mendeluk and Don McCutcheon, helming the first 13 episodes, producers Copeland and Pearson have created a streamlined ship, with its own mission to achieve an impressively fast turn-around. "We had a really hectic schedule," sighs Woolvett. "We only had about three days, four days per episode, max. "I've heard good things about the acting," he adds. "I heard great things about Nicole's acting. I heard more things about my hair, I think, than my performance!"

For many of the cast, Deepwater Black is not their first experience of Science Fiction. Gordon Michael Woolvett was a principal character in Mysterious Island, Nicole deBoer appeared in PSI FACTOR, Poltergeist the Legacy, The Outer Limits and joined Julie Khaner in the TEKWAR episode Chill Factor, while Craig Kirkwood guested in THE BURNING ZONE.

"My character was this 'troubled inner city kid' who was in danger of spontaneously combusting," Kirkwood recalls of his role in that short-lived series. "I wore full arm prosthetics and four facial prosthetics. When we shot those scenes I pulled a 23-hour day, including four hours for make-up!" Fortunately Kirkwood is a big fan of the SF genre, citing Isaac Asimov and Star Wars as personal favourites. Gordon Michael Woolvett goes one step further he claims to be able to name any episode of Star Trek: The Next Generation by watching the first 10 seconds!

"I'm a fan of the 'basis in reality' of Science Fiction," says Woolvett. "I think that Deepwater Black is similar to ST:TNG in the sense that we deal with real issues like cloning. "I'm the SF geek of the show, so if you can name it, I've watched it. As a kid I watched everything - BATTLESTAR GALACTICA, BUCK ROGERS. I've watched tons of LOST IN SPACE. I did Mysterious Island in New Zealand, I was there for about a year, and I didn't have much to do on the days off. So I spent my days watching LOST IN SPACE."

Woolvett claims that Mysterious Island helped prepare him for Deepwater Black, in that the shows held many things in common "It was good research. Strangely enough the show was about six people stranded on an island, and the characters were all very similar." With a spaceship that resembles STAR TREK'S VOYAGER, a crew that would not look out of place in Beverly Hills 90210 and a premise that is somewhere between BATTLESTAR GALACTICA and the forthcoming Babylon Project: Crusade, Deepwater Black is boldly exploring territories where many have gone before.

All the same, there's every indication that the series has the potential to develop in interesting directions. One fascinating notion, which is introduced in the fourth episode, Reflections, is that the ship is not the only one launched from the Mars Colony. A second Deepwater, containing an older Reb is encountered - and five of the crew were killed by the mysterious alien attackers. The suspicion remains that the aggressors could be behind the Pandora Virus -their agenda to eradicate all traces of the human race from the Universe. With ideas like this, Deepwater Black could yet make the progression from a futuristic brat pack show to thought-provoking and innovative Science Fiction. If that's the case, it should easily amass a substantial following of its own.

DELTA WAVE

Harebrained young Cambridge University scientist Dr. Rudy Munro discovers two children with phenomenal psychic abilities while running her department for experimentation into Linked Thought Activity (DELTA). The pair are, Julie Stone, a 14 year old with wild visions of hidden mysteries and Ed Curtis, a sports mad 10 year old with enough kinetic energy, literally to turn his house upside down - usually when he is asleep, and blissfully unaware of the mayhem he is causing, much to his parents, consternation.

The kid's combined energies have explosive results and threaten to end Dr. Munro's project, a young woman who is still a boisterous kid at heart, tries to persuade her boss Professor Quealey, to give the project a second chance, but end up packing her belongings into her hi-tech trailer and the trio take to the road, homing in on perplexing phenomena and rooting out evil plots.

A ten part children's drama about ESP and psychic powers. Broken down into five two part adventures, the series stars Robin McCaffrey, from For Weddings and a Funeral, as Dr. Munro, but it's most notable factor is the large number of notable guest stars, such as Leslie Grantham, Dudley Sutton, Una Stubbs, Tom Georgeson, Daniel Peacock, Phyllida Law and Drop the Dead Donkey's Victoria Wicks. The creators of this show also created THE TOMMORROW PEOPLE (new) and MIKE AND ANGELO.

WR. Lee Pressman (the man who created the show), Ken Allen Jones (Dogdy Jammers) and Grant Cathro who also starred in the episode The Light Fantastic.

DIR. Roger Gartland (A Twist of Lemming), Niall Leonard (A Glitch in Time) and A.J. Quinn (Dogdy Jammers).

DEMON HEADMASTER, THE

This creepy series about a power-crazed headmaster continues the BBC tradition of well-made kids drama. And Terrence Hardiman exudes menace in the title role as the school head who plans to use his hypnotic powers to take over the world, by infiltrating Downing Street. Only the resistance of a courageous group of youngsters calling themselves SPLAT (The Society for Protection of our Lives Against Them) is able to stop him.

Undaunted, the Demon Headmaster returns for a second crack at the world title, this time experimenting with genetic engineering and transgenic implants at his new Biogenetic Research Centre. Anonymously, he lures his old foe Dinah Hunter and her adopted family to the village where his centre is located, and recruits his old ally, the erstwhile prefect, Rose Carter. Using his powers, the Demon Head takes control of the Centre and the village. Only Dinah's new friend Simon escapes and together they must thwart their enemy yet again.

(Season 3) The army accidentally triggers the cloning of the demon headmaster. The Hunter 's are also settling into their new house but Harvey is uneasy - someone thinks that they have seen the demon headmaster.

This creepy series about a power crazed head master continues the BBC tradition of well made kids drama. Both series are based on books by Gillian Cross. Season 3 was based on "The Demon Headmaster Takes Over" by Gillian Cross. The executive producer for the series was Marilyn Fox, and the series was first seen on BBC1. The first series of The Demon Headmaster was based on the books The Demon Headmaster and The Prime Minister's Brain by Gillian Cross. One interesting character in the series was Eddy Hair who was played by Danny John-Jules, more famous for his role in RED DWARF.

A musical version of the series also did a tour in the UK theatres. Terrence Hardiman reprises his TV role as the evil head of St. Champion's Comprehensive out to control the world but confronted by five youngsters who comprise SPLAT (Society for the Protection of our Lives against Them).

The first series of The Demon Headmaster was broadcast in 1996 on Children's BBC. It featured 6 episodes, with the first three containing one story and the last three containing another. The first three were based on the original Demon Headmaster book, "The Demon Headmaster", written by Gillian Cross.

The next three were based on the second Demon Headmaster book, which at the time was called "The Prime Minister's Brain". In this story, the Demon Headmaster has left the school, but has reappeared in another place, where he could potentially get into Downing Street and hypnotise the Prime Minister. The computerised entrance to his new hideout has been programmed to keep out anyone called "Dinah Glass", but Dinah has since been adopted by the Hunters so her name is now Dinah Hunter. Once again, SPLAT have to fight the Demon Headmaster, and stop his plans for world domination

The second series of The Demon Headmaster was broadcast in 1997. This series was based on the fourth Demon Headmaster book, The Demon Headmaster Strikes Again. This book was written by Gillian Cross specifically with the TV programme in mind. (The third Demon Headmaster book, The Revenge of the Demon Headmaster, was never adapted for television.) In the second series, the Demon Headmaster has decided that Dinah could be useful in his plans. He has taken control of a "Biogenetic Research Centre", and has decided to get a sample of Dinah's DNA without her knowing it. When SPLAT notice strange things happening in the area, such as plants that grow so fast that you can see them growing, they realise that this can only be the work of one man, The Demon Headmaster.

The final series of The Demon Headmaster was broadcast in 1998. It was based on the fifth book, The Demon Headmaster Takes Over. This time, the Demon Headmaster decides that the best way to control the world is through computers and Artificial Intelligence. He manages to get control of a supercomputer called "Hyperbrain", that can take knowledge from human brains. But after doing so, it leaves the person in a state where they lose all their own knowledge.

Since then, another Demon Headmaster book has been written. It is called "Facing the Demon Headmaster", and was published in 2002. It continues the Demon Headmaster story, picking up where the television series finished.

DEN KO CHO JIN GRIDMAN

AKA: ELECTRIC SUPERMAN GRIDMAN

AKA: DENKO CHOJIN GRIDMAN

AKA: ELECTROLIGHT SUPERMAN GRIDMAN

AKA: DENKOU CHOUJIN GURIDDOMAN

Khandejifer, the incarnation of pure evil, manifests itself on the hard drive of one Takeshi Todo (Sugawara), a lonely rich kid who toys with computer programs for kicks. Takeshi's malevolent virus creatures are able to travel through the ether and inhabit other computers and any other electronic device possessing a circuit board, prompting the hyperspatial law enforcer Gridman to take action.

Recruiting three Earth children to help him, he uses their computer expertise to fight evil in the digital realm and can even combine with Earth boy Naoto (Obi) to himself a body in the real world suitable for combating any monsters that make it out of the digital world to threatened out own planet.

Modernizing their own ULTRAMAN franchise for the digitally conscious 1990s, Tsuburaya threw in computer graphics and an Internet-inspired sub-plot for what was otherwise a standard tale of monster of the week, transformation, little fight, and a climactic bigger fight. Popular for its flashy computer graphics and impressive Pythagorean-solid cyberspace, Gridman was soon picked up for the American market in the wake of the MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS.

Given a suitably alliterative new titles and a wholly unnecessary spelling error, it became SUPERHUMAN SAMURAI SYBER SQUAD. The series was produced by Kazuo Tsuburaya, Nobuyoki Koyama and Hiroshi Inoue.

The US SF show SUPERHUMAN SAMURAI SYBER SQUAD, stole a lot of the footage of the monsters in their show from this Japanese original.

DENGKITAI SENTAI J.A.K.Q.

AKA: JAKQ

AKA: JACKER DENGKI TAI

AKA: JACKER ATTACK FORCE

AKA: BLITZKRIEG SQUAD JAKQ

A series of cyborgs is designed, each with the ability to control a particular form of energy. For reasons known only to themselves, their masters decide to have a unifying theme for the team, naming them all after playing cards. Goro, the Spade Ace (Tanba), is able to wield atomic energy as a weapon, using his bow to shoot it as his opponents in arrow form. Former boxer Ryu the Dia [mond] Jack (Ito) controls electricity, focusing it in his Elecky Sword. Bunta the Clover King (Kazato) has mastered the power of gravity, which he wields through his Crab Megaton - a weight on the end of a chain which he twirls around his head.

Karen the Heart Queen (Love) controls the magentic energy through her Heart Q, which is a big pink Q. The team is led by Sokichi, the Big One (Miyauchi, already familiar to fans from the previous show GORANGER), who is able to use his special stick to combine the other four energy types, transforming into Jaqk team into a truly formidable force. Their obligatory vehicles are chiefly cars, though Clover King has a motorcycle, each of which can fly into their aircraft mothership, the Sky Ace.

The Jaqk Team's enemy is Iron Claw (Ishibashi), an international arms dealer and drug smuggler, leader of the CRIME international syndicate, who favors a sequined cape and an unfeasibly large Afro hairdo. As in the other Super Sentai shows, the Iron Claw has two sets of minions - anonymous cannon fodder (Jokes in this show) and ludicrously costumed monsters of the week, each of which singularly fails to defeat the trusty heroes.

Based once again on an idea by Shotaro Ishinomori, the second Super Sentai series gained an older audience, supposedly through its more serious themes - thought it is more likely that it simply retained the viewers of its predecessor, GORANGER. After JAKQ, the producers attempted to exploit American ideas in SPIDER-MAN but the next true Super Sentai show in the series was BATTLEFEVER J. Music by Michaiki Watanabe. Produced by Takashi Ogino, Yoshiaki Koizumi, Susumu Yoshikawa.

This was initially a much darker series than the humorous Gorangers (or any of the Super Sentai), with storylines addressing issues such as drug use (though in a juvenile manner). However, the dark approach failed to appeal to children, and so beginning with episode 23, a much lighter approach was tried with the introduction of the comedic characters Big One and Hime Tamasaburo. This 'new' JAKQ failed to complete its third cours (run of 39 episodes), and so the sentai series went into oblivion for the next year. This was Ishi(no)mori Shoutarou's last sentai series.

Characters and mecha

International Science Special Investigation Squad - A worldwide organisation opposing organised crime and terrorism, based in New York. Has bases worldwide, including one in Shinjuku, where JAKQ is headquartered. Takes on whatever ordinary police cannot handle, such as Crime [the organisation, not the phenomenon].

Spade Ace (Sakurai Gorou)

Team leader. Powered by atomic energy. Wielder of the Spade Arts bow and whip. Fires the deadly Spade Artas Atom (Multiple) Shot. Has a gold medal in the modern Olympic pentathlon. Originally turned down membership in JAKQ, so he could aim for the next Olympics, but changed his mind when saved by Karen Mizuki. Developed a romance with Karen toward the end of the series.[Played by Tanba Yoshitaka, son of actor and New Age enthusiast Tanba Tetsuro.]

Dia Jack (Higashi Ryuu)

Powered by electricity. Master of the Electrisword. Former junior welterweight boxer with many successive wins who turned down fixed matches and got involved with hustlers and a murder case in Las Vegas before returning to Japan. Joined JAKQ after being arrested at the airport.

Heart Queen (Karen Mizuki)

Powered by magnetism. Master of the Heartcute magnetic shield. Originally a detective investigating narcotics routes. Lost her arms when the taxi with her and her father abroad was smashed by a truck. Joined JAKQ to avenge her dead father and the loss of her arms and was reborn with mechanical arms as a cyborg. Fell for Gorou toward the end of the series.[Karen Mizuki is a half-American, half-Okinawan Japan Action Club member who also appears in the Return of Sister Streetfighter.]

Clover King (Daichi Bunta)

Powered by gravity. Master of the Club Megaton detachable hand on a chain. Originally a oceanographer who died of oxygen deprivation in a submarine accident. Was brought back to life as a cyborg. Lost his family in an airplane accident five years earlier.

All four defeat Machine Monsters by surrounding them, injecting their four energies into it, kicking it away, and firing their energies at it to cause it to explode. This is the JAKQ Covack technique.

Joker (Commander Kujirai Daisuke; 1-23, 35)

Brought his plans for a cyborg squad to fruition and became its leader. Left to become the head of engineering at ISSIS headquarters in episode 23, but returned in 35. Has a wife and daughter.

Big One (Banba Soukichi; 23-35)

Replacement for Joker. Dandy dressed entirely in white who is a master of disguise. Powered by all four forms of energy (atomic, electric, magnetic, gravitational) and has the power of flight. Armed with a stick. Loads the Big Bomber cannon assembled by the other team members. (The Big Bomber replaces the JAKQ Covack from episode 23 onward.)[Played by Miyauchi Hiroshi; see more on him in the Blue Ranger entry.]

ISSIS Agents 7 (Hayashi Keiko), 8 (Yamamoto Junko), 9 (Iijima Yoshiko), and 10 (unnamed) Female assistants of JAKQ sans costumes.

Commander Robert (1)

ISSIS New York headquarters head. Approved of Kujirai's cyborg project.

Hime Tamasaburo (23-35)

ISSIS member who poses as a cook in traditional bathing wear on a bicycle. From Matsuyama in Shikoku. Specializes in ramen, but can only make the instant kind.

The ISSIS Hamster

Kujirai's pet, a cyborg that talks! Stayed behind even when Kujirai went to New York.

Spade Machine

Spade Ace's modified Fiat X1/9.

Mach Dia

Dia Jack's Formula 2 race car.

Heart Buggy

Heart Queen's modified Morris Mini Moke.

Auto Clover

Clover King's motorcycle.

Strengthening Capsules

JAKQ members enter these to henshin. Also called 'Strengthening Boxes' despite their cylindrical shape. Stored in a detachable blue container in the midsection of the Sky Ace. Showers the members with their respective types of energy to cause the change. Supposedly eight such capsules exist.

Sky Ace

Flying fortress piloted either by Ace or Jack.

Jack Tank

Tank aboard Sky Ace. Armed with a twin cannon turret and a mechanical arm.

Crime

An international crime syndicate.

Trivia

Is the first Sentai Series with a romantic couple and involvement

Two of the heroes are former athletes. Gorou Sakurai/Ace is a former Olympic Pentathlete and Ryu Higashi/Jack is a former boxer.

JAKQ VS Goranger is the first Sentai Crossover to take place after both series has ended. Because of that, it's the first Crossover Movie that's conclusive easy to place chronologically. Plus it reveals that other tokusatsu series are part of the Super Sentai universe; Kamen Rider and Kikaider.

The second is Gingaman VS Megaranger, which again is set after both series.

The third is Timeranger VS GoGoV, because like the Timeranger episodes it has a date at the beginning (October 25th, 2000). The movie is set between Timeranger Episodes 35 and 36.

Crossover

J.A.K.Q. was the first Sentai team to have a crossover with the previous team: Goranger. It took the combined forces of JAKQ and Go Ranger to battle the reformed Crime. When the Shi Ten Oh could not defeat JAKQ and Go Ranger in their individual forms, they combined to form the super cyborg entity 'Shi Ten Oh Rob'o, a monstrous and hulking mechanical monster with multiple cannons protruding throughout its body and a grinder in its lower torso which could swallow the Goranger Hurricane Ball. Virtually invincible, it took the combined special attacks of JAKQ and Go Ranger (the Goranger Hurricane ball fused with the warhead of a Big Bomber shell and fired from the Big Bomber itself) to destroy the monster.

Iron Claw was killed for good when Big One (having switch Iron Claw's hand with a rocket hand) gave Spade Ace a switch which made the rocket go off. The rocket hit the detonation button and the "UFO Citybusters" (which Iron Claw was going to use on the United States, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, France, the United Kingdom, West Germany, and Japan in order to become "King of the Solar System") went off in the UFO that he was fleeing in, destroying it.

DENJIN ZABORGER

AKA: DENJIN ZABOGA

Stared Yamaguchi, Akira as secret agent Daimon, Yutaka; the man who controlled Denjin Zabôgâ (Electroid Zabôgâ). Yamaguchi Akira also played Yuki Joji/Riderman in Kamen Rider V3. Unlike the quiet Yuki Joji, Daimon Yutaka is always shouting as he goes into combat. Daimon is determined to destroy the evil group Sigma, for its murder of his father (the creator of Zabôgâ). This determination leads him into bloody battles against cyborgs and robots which are usually stronger than he is. Of course Daimon and Zabôgâ always win. Yamaguchi, Akira died on April 6, 1986 of lung cancer. He was only 39 years old.

Daimon, Yutaka's special combat technique is "Hi Ryuu San Dan Geri" (Flying Dragon Tri-Stage Kick).

Zabôgâ's special attacks are "Jet Punch" (fist on chain fires at enemies at 10 yards per second), "Double Punch" (both fists shoot out), "Boomerang Cutters" (his "ears" are blades which, when thrown, return to him after doing their damage)... ..and "Rapid-Fire Destruction Gun" (his mouth opens to reveal a gun which fires exploding shells to destroy the evil robots).

Inside Zabôgâ's head was a miniature helicopter with a video camera, used for spying on the villains. Zabôgâ's eyes take still photographs. Inside Zabôgâ's back is a miniature jet. In each of Zabôgâ's feet is 1/2 of a small car. The two pieces snap together when the car is used. Denjin Zabôgâ could transform into the motorcycle Machine Zabôgâ, for Daimon Yutaka to ride.

Unlike the android heroes "Jinzo Ningen Kikaida" and "Kikaida-01" or the non-transforming "Robot Detective", Denjin Zabôgâ can not speak, has no emotions and has to be activated by Daimon's command "Go Zabôgâ" or "Denjin Zabôgâ Go" or "Fight Zabôgâ" or "Henshin Zabôgâ". Once activated, Zabôgâ's programming allows him to fight, although Daimon normally has to order Zabôgâ to use the special techniques. Daimon controls Zabôgâ through a microphone built into his motorcycle helmet or a smaller one he keeps in his pocket. Zabôgâ is powered by Daimon's anger, through a circuit inside Daimon's chest. This circuit also keeps Daimon alive when he's been so badly wounded that he should die.

Denjin Zabôgâ's 52 episodes were divided into two chapters. The first chapter, episodes 1-39, featured the terrorist group Sigma, led by the evil Doctor Akunomiya (played by Okabe Ken) and his female assistants Miss Borg (episodes 1-35) and Lady Borg (episodes 37-39). This part of the series was shown on TV in Hawaii.

The second chapter, episodes 40-52, had a new version of Zabôgâ, Strong Zabôgâ fighting Kyouryuu Gundan (Dragon Army). Actually the Dragon Army was introduced in episode 39 but Daimon, Yutaka doesn't encounter them until episode 40. This part of the series was not shown in Hawaii.

Starting in episode 40 Daimon, Yutaka wears a sort of uniform, green and red jacket, white shirt, red tie, green and red pants. The episode also introduces a young man; Matsue, Ken; who rides a motorcycle that has two bazookas mounted on it, Machine Baja.

In episode 41 Machine Baja and Machine Zabôgâ combine to form Strong Zabôgâ. Episode 42 reveals that Matsue, Ken can command Strong Zabôgâ.

Strong Zabôgâ's new weapons are "Jet Boomerang", "Rocket Jet Punch" and "Strong Bazooka Fire".

Over all I prefer the Sigma episodes over the Dragon Army episodes. Daimon, Yutaka gets in more fights with Sigma soldiers than he does the dragons, and Denjin Zabôgâ sees more combat than Strong Zabôgâ. Ken doesn't add much to the series, his primary function is to get beaten up by the dragons, in place of Daimon.

P-Productions also produced "Magma Taishi" [Ambassador Magma] (1966-1967), "Kaiju Ouji" [Monster

Prince] (1967), "Supekutoruman" [Spectreman] (1971-1972), Kaiketsu Lion Maru [Swift Hero Lion Maru] (1972-1973), "Fuun Lion Maru" [Storm Cloud Lion Maru] (1973) and "Tetsujin Taiga 7" [Ironman Tiger 7] (1973-1974). As far as I know Denjin Zabôgâ was their last tokusatsu series.

*Doruman may or may not be intended for translation as DollarMan. The translator is currently unsure.

The term "sakusen" is often used in the episode titles of this series. It can translate into English as "military operation". The translator has, thus far, not been able to find other (cooler sounding) synonyms but suggests a few above

DENKI SENTAI CHANGEMAN

AKA: BLITZKREIG TASK FORCE CHANGEMAN

Plot #1

When news arrives of imminent attack by the invading Gozma race, Earth Force recruits a five-member team of specialists to save the world. Each is a former member of a branch of Earth Force, now styled after a mythical beast from Earth's part and able to channel that energy into fighting their enemies. The leader is former pilot Hiryu (Hamada) the Change Dragon, who fights with Dragon Power and his Change Sword. Sho (Kawai) is Change Gryphon, once a ranger with Earth Force, now a martial arts master with the Changeman team. Yuma (Izumi) is a former officer with the Earth Force Land Division, now the blue-clad Change Pegasus and an aerial battle specialist. As in the previous Super Sentai show BIOMAN, there are two female team members. Former operations officer Sayaka (Nishimoto) is Change Mermaid, endowed with the super-speedy Mermain Power. Mai (Oishi) is Change Phoenix, former Earth Force intelligence officer now wielder of Phoenix Power. Their equipment includes the flying shuttle base, which launches the three super vehicles Landchanger, Helichanger and Jetchanger, which in turn to combine to form the giant Change Robo. Their archenemy is armless, legless cyborg Star Emperor Bazoo (voiced by Kato), who sends a different monster to fight the Changeman team every week, aided by his army of egg-hatched cannon fodder, who are known as the Hitlers.

Plot #2

When Earth was invaded by Gozma, the planet reacted by showering five officers of the Earth Defence Squad with the mysterious power of the Earthforce, giving them the abilities of mythological beasts known as the Changemen.

The following years Super Sentai series was FLASHMAN. Music by Tatsumi Yano.

Compare the premise with Sunvulcan, Dairanger, and Ohranger. This series took the epic scale of Bioman and reached even further into space...

Trivia

In episode 22, star Hiroko Nishimoto played a quadruple role; Sayaka (real and fake), Change Mermaid and Mirah (voice)

The third and last sentai series to skip yellow in the team's color scheme.

The only sentai series with pink and white together in the main team; usually white is an extra Ranger or replaces pink.

The seventh and last series with just one giant robot; starting with the next series, Choushinsei Flashman, there would be two or more.

This was the most popular Super Sentai in Brazil during the late 80s.

Shirō Izumi, who played Yuuma, auditioned for the role of Tsurugi/ Change Dragon, but once the producers realized his comedic talent, it was decided that he would make for the perfect Yuuma. Izumi also guest starred as the kidnapped photographer in Super Sentai World. He also made Sentai history by playing the first regular 6th Sentai hero team member, Burai/Dragon Ranger in Zyuranger. He guest starred in Kakuranger and OHRanger before retiring.

The second highest rated sentai series in Japan (the first being Goranger).

Action director Junji Yamaoka wanted the actors to do as many of their own out of suit stunts as possible. Mai Ooishi was a member of the Japan Action Club, a group of stuntpeople/actors. Ooishi broke her arm performing an action scene near the end of the series.

Chief writer Hirohisa Soda says that Changeman is his personal favorite Sentai series out of the ones he wrote for. Soda also says that the major theme he was trying to convey with Changeman was the crisis of war and the sacrifices made by young soldiers.

The first Sentai series to display nudity (which is in Change Mermaid's symbol).

Changeman was the first TV series for which the now famous singer Hironobu Kageyama sung for (Specifically, he was the singer for both the opening, "Dengeki Sentai Changeman" and the ending theme, "Never Stop!! Changeman", as well as the Change Robo theme). Kageyama would later sing the opening and ending for Hikari Sentai Maskman and Choujin Sentai Jetman, as well as the ending theme for Ninpu Sentai Hurricanger, along with many insert songs for many Sentai, tokusatsu, and anime series.

Mai Ooishi, before Changeman, played the one of the Iga Island Girls in Uchuu Keiji Sharivan and the villainess Kunoichi Girl #2 in Uchuu Keiji Shaider

DENSHI SENTAI DENJIMAN

AKA: ELECTRONIC TASK FORCE DENZIMAN

3000 years ago, the Vader Clan devastated Denzi Star. Denziland, an island from Denzi Star, landed on Earth. In modern times, the computer of Denziland awoke the Denzidog IC when it detected the Vader Clan approaching Earth. IC found five young people (who may or may not be descendants of the Denzi people) to become the Denzimen in order to defend Earth, the Vader Clan's next target. The Denzimen begin a long record of success with the defeat of Vader Monster number 00, Flying quirreler.

As the battle escalates, they realize that they themselves may be descendants of the Denzi people. If so, they are not alone; other descendants do exist, scattered around the Earth. Queen Hedrian, struggling in her attempts to make the world a living nightmare, receives an offer of assistance from the space wanderer Omnipotent Demon King. She accepts it, not realising that ODK's real goal is the conquest of Earth for himself. He captures the Vader Castle, and torments the Denzimen with his Omnipotent Monse. Hedrer goes into battle himself giant-sized, only to die a tragic death.

The Denzimen find themselves helpless against ODK and his monster until IC sacrifices himself to become a circuit for the Daidenzin. ODK and his monster are defeated. Hedrian escapes to the North Pole, where she sleeps, encased in ice, seemingly defeated for good...or is she?

Coming after BATTLEFEVER J and before SUNVULCAN in the Super Sentai chronology, Denziman's greatest claim to fame was the introduction of the goggle/visor helmet design that was to become mandatory on all later installments of the series - one more step closer to the look and feel of THE MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS. Note that BATTLEFEVER J's Battle Kenya, actor Kenji Oba, graduates from team mascot to second in command in this show. Based on an idea by Saburo Yade - though one is tempted to wonder how long it too "him" to retool the same old sentai template from another year. With The Empire Strikes Back released in 1980, the name "Vader" was particularly popular - it also turned up in the following year's anime Thunderbird 2086, though it was romanized as "Beyda" for the US audience. Music by Michiaki Watanabe.

The second Super Sentai. Toei's third series with a Marvel copyright (but apparently no Marvel involvement this time). First sentai with the familiar goggle masks. First sentai with hero designs by Bandai. Compare with BIOMAN.

Characters and mecha

Denzired (Akaki Ippei)

Teacher of karate and other sports to children at the Athletic Club. Special move: Denzi Vaccum Kick.

Denziblue (Oume Daigorou)

Circus acrobat who teaches yoga and gymnastics at the Athletic Club. Special moves: Blue Rocket, Blue Screw Kick, Blue Snake

Denziyellow (Kiyama Jun)

Inventor and space researcher. Coaches calisthenics. Special moves: Denzi Suplex, Flying Attack, Hammer Punch.

Denzigreen (Midorikawa Tatsuya)

Detective who lost his father to a Vader attack. Coaches boxing. Special move: Denzi Spin Kick.

Denzipink (Momoi Akira)

Former tennis player who teaches swimming at the Athletic Club. Special move: Denzi Thunder Throw.

(Note that all their last names contain kanji for their colours.)

Each Denziman is armed with a Denzistick. These combine into the Denziboomerang and are all used in the Electronic Lightning Fall. Other team attacks, not involving the sticks, include the Shot Gun, Blitzkrieg Attack, Denzi Circle, Denzi Shower, Dragonfly, Scramble Chain, and Denzi Tower.

IC the Denzidog

Intelligent robot dog that came from Denzi Star 3000 years ago to assemble the Denziman team.

Denzi Princess (26, 29, film)

Survivor of Denzi Star who visited Earth 3000 years ago, ordering a servant girl to defend the Earth with the rainbow stones. Left Earth to patrol the universe.

Denzi Machine

Sidecar motorcycle for Denzired.

Denzi Buggy

Jeep for Denziblue through Denzipink.

Denzitiger

Flying fortress carrying the Denzifighter that launches from Denziland.

Denzifighter > Daidenjin (Giant Electric Man; first transforming sentai robot) Armament: Denzi Sword (Full Moon Cut), Denzi Ball, Daidenjin Boomerang

Denziland (island headquarters)

The Vader Clan

Invaders from another dimension with warped (to us) concepts of beauty. Intends to pollute and corrupt the Earth and its inhabitants to fit its unusual aesthetic.

Queen Hedrian

Machiko Soga, MMPR's original 'Rita'. Hates beauty and wants to pollute the world. Find happiness in human suffering.

General Hedrer

Field commander. Played by Kayama Kousuke/Toudou Shinji, a.k.a. Spider-Man.

Mirror and Keller

Female spies in gold and silver, respectively.

Omnipotent Demon King (37-51)

Half-naked, musclebound space wanderer.

Vader Monsters

Appear first as eggs from an incubator. Hatched in the Monster Making Range. Can enlarge themselves at will. Asymmetrical. Usually wear numbers.

Dastlers

Grunts in black tights with skeletal designs. Armed with sickles.

Vader Fighters

Yet more batwinged bad guy planes.

Vader Castle

Flying fortress hidden in another dimension.

Trivia

Machiko Soga, who played Queen Hedrian, reprised the role in Taiyou Sentai Sun Vulcan. She also played Witch Bandora in 1992's Kyoryuu Sentai ZyuRanger and finally Heavenly Arch Saint Magiel in 2005's Mahou Sentai Magiranger movie and TV series, her last tokusatsu role before her death in the following year.

This is the first series with the word "God" (in Japanese) as part of the robot names, the others are ZyuRanger and Hurricanger. Gaoranger's Gao God is the first to have the English language equivalent.

Denjiman is the only sentai series to have rings as henshin devices.

DESPERATION

AKA: STEPHEN KING'S DESPERATION

En route to Lake Tahoe for a much anticipated vacation, the Carver family is arrested for blowing out all four tires on their camper. Collie Entragian is the arresting officer, the self-made sheriff of a town called Desperation, Nevada, and the quintessential bad cop. Unbeknownst to the Carvers, Entragian regularly sniffs out passerbys on this stretch of road, and in fact has done in nearly every resident of his hometown. He can also change form and summon the help of creepy creatures, including scorpions, snakes and spiders.

Even with Stephen King adapting his own novel, "Desperation" can't escape the curse that has hounded most of the author's made-for-TV productions, which have a peculiar tendency of starting out like gangbusters and drifting into nonsense. In that respect, this tale bears a resemblance to "It," another creepy idea whose payoff wasn't worthy of the nail-biting buildup preceding it. Nevertheless, before the ill-fated "Kingdom Hospital" King had been a reliable ratings draw for ABC, and this three-hour pic (OK, about 2:10 minus commercials) should at least help keep the lights on against murderous sweeps competition.

King's personal touch can be seen in the pop cultural references that permeate the narrative, including cheeky asides about novelist Dean Koontz and "The Twilight Zone," along with veiled references to "Dracula" and "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance."

At its core, "Desperation" plays like yet another extended "Twilight Zone" episode. Unlikely passers-by to the Nevada town of Desperation encounter a sinister sheriff (Ron Perlman), who hauls them in, where they discover that everyone in these parts has suddenly died.

What's been killing them, and what must be done to stop it, thus becomes the chore of a small but hardy band that includes a few veterans of past King yarns, including Steven Weber ("The Shining") and Matt Frewer ("The Stand"). Ultimately, though, it's a child who'll lead them, albeit one who has stared down death and possesses an abiding faith in God bordering on oracular wisdom, which feels like a pretty lame device.

So it's up to prepubescent David (Shane Haboucha), with the help of some friendly ghosts, to ascertain how the group can thwart the ancient evil bubbling out of the town's recently opened mines, inhabiting nasty animatronic animals and people whose flesh slowly erodes as they play host to the demon.

Yet as with "It" and to a lesser degree "The Stand," which are perhaps King's most fully realized TV works, the final leg proves something of a letdown. Basically, it boils down to the old maxim (I heard it first in "The Golden Voyage of Sinbad") that God combats evil through the efforts of weak and mortal men, whose ranks include a famed author (Tom Skerritt), his road sidekick (Weber), the town's veterinarian (Charles Durning), and Mary (Annabeth Gish), half of an unlucky married couple through which we first meet the sheriff.

Director Mick Garris ("The Stand," "The Shining" miniseries) is no stranger to the King universe, but despite spooky moments and that fine cast, the pair can't save the plot from evaporating into sappiness near the end. And while there have been some worthy films derived from King's macabre works ("The Dead Zone" comes to mind), the author's TV legacy remains that of a ratings force lacking the creative power to stir the living, much less raise the dead.

This is the sixth Stephen King story that Mick Garris has directed as a feature or TV movie following: Sleepwalkers (1992), "The Stand" (1994) (mini), "The Shining" (1997) (mini), Quicksilver Highway (1997) (TV) (episode "Chatterly Teeth") and Riding the Bullet (2004).

On 10 December 2004, a set in the Tucson Convention Center (TCC) being used to film a mine collapse caught fire when the special effects department made a big mistake. Five people were injured, two of them enough to need hospitalization. The fire destroyed everything on the set, including all of the production gear and equipment, and the TCC sustained heavy water and smoke damage. The invitations to the premier screening said "the film that set Tucson on fire."

Tucson's historic Fox Theatre (built in 1929) is the theatre John Marinville walks into when he see's himself as a younger man in Vietnam.

In Johnny Marinville's (Tom Skerritt) flashback to Vietnam, the club that he flees just before the explosion was built into an empty storefront on Tucson's Congress Street. It's directly across from the Hotel Congress, where John Dillinger and his gang were based when they were in Tucson. As of September 2006 the storefront remains empty and boarded up.

DEVIL SUMMONER

AKA: SHIN MEGAMI TENSEI DEVIL SUMMONER

Private investigator Kyoji (Masaki) ekes out a precarious existence in downtown Yokohama. However he is no ordinary detective but the inheritor of his father's magical devil-summoning powers. With his shamaness partner Li (Kawai) and her sorceress mother Mari (Sakurai), he fights demonic crime. The first half of the series introduces school girl Kumiko (Nanami), who awakens Kyoji's dormant powers, as well as the evil plot of the demonic Princess Inaruna, who want to destroy the Earth. Later episodes throw in some more young assistants and add some miniskirted female Dark Summoners to aid Kyoji in his struggles against alternative dimensions. They also introduce handsome male Dark Summoner Toichiro, played by heart-throb Anza Oyama, formerly better known as the male lead in the Sailor Moon musical.

DS was the third Tsuburaya show to appear on TV Toyko in its late night slot, after Wizard of Darkness and School in Peril. It was originally based on the same Megami Tensei computer game that was the inspiration for the anime Digital Devil Story and Tokyo Revelation. DS kept the franchise in the public eye until the release of a further incarnation, the Pokemon inspired Devichil in 2000. Through it was broadcast after the midnight and hence technically on Sunday morning, some sources still list it as a Saturday night show.

DIAMOND EYE

AKA: WARRIOR OF LIGHT

AKA: DIAMOND EYE: WARRIOR OF LIGHT

Hikari no Senshi Daiyamondo Ai was unique among tokusatsu. The title character was not a cyborg, android, alien or human in a power suit. Diamond Eye was a good spirit sent to fight evil spirits. Like one of Aladdin's genies he lived in a ring and appeared only when summoned.

On the trail of a ring of gem thieves "Weekly Japan" reporter Rai, Koutaru ends up in a battle against an evil that threatens all of Asia. Koutaru follows a lead to a gem trader Gen Kai Ryuu not realising that Gen Kai Ryuu is the leader of the jewel thieves (and something far worse). Koutaru is captured by the gangsters and about to be executed by Gen Kai Ryuu when the "King of Arabia" blue diamond begins to glow and a voice from the gem orders Gen Kai Ryuu to stop.

A strange blue figure with diamonds for eyes comes out of the ring. He introduces himself as Diamond Eye. He breaks Koutaru's bonds and chases the gangsters into the street.

As the gangster attempt to flee Diamond Eye hits them with twin beams from his eyes. The "Inner Soul Illumination Beam" (Gedou Shoshin Reiha Kousen) reveals that these gangsters are in reality ancient evil beasts known as "Zensei Majin". When Gen Kai Ryuu tries to escape Diamond Eye reveals him to be King Cobra (the one with snakes on his shoulders) the leader of the Zensei Majin. After using the "Inner Soul Illumination Beam" Diamond Eye then says to the Zensei Majin, "Thine true form have I seen Zensei Majin _____" (filling the blank with its name) to which the monster replies "I've been exposed!"

Diamond Eye defeats the weaker of the Majin (the bull and horse like ones) by stabbing them with the pointy end of his Diamond Stick. King Cobra flees through a dimensional portal.

Mojinga (the one-eyed monster) is destroyed by "Royal Punch", a red bolt, from the Diamond Stick. Diamond Eye has other energy weapons and hurls diamonds that explode like grenades but "Royal Punch" is his ultimate attack. Diamond Eye also has the ability to heal wounds and purge evil spirits from human bodies.

Diamond Eye gives Rai, Koutaru the "Eye Ring" (which Diamond Eye actually lives in) so Koutaru can summon him when he needs help. Koutaru summons Diamond Eye by uncovering the ring, exposing it to light while shouting "'Ai yo!". If the ring is covered up, or otherwise kept in the dark then Diamond Eye won't appear. Once Diamond Eye is out of the ring he can use it to summon Rai, Koutaru to him. Diamond Eye's eyes will flash and the ring will too as Diamond Eye's voice comes through the ring saying "Koutaru".

And that's how battle of Rai, Koutaru and Diamond Eye against the Zensei Majin began.

Koutaru is joined on his quest against the Zensei Majin by his friends photographer Goro and Kaboko a young lady with a fondness for playing cards (she uses them as weapons). In episode 5 Goro opens a coffee shop called "Thunder Snack" and Kaboko goes to work for him.

Rai, Koutaru's spending all his time battling the Zensei Majin gets him into trouble with his boss at the "Weekly Japan" magazine, Editor-In-Chief Hayakawa.

Rai, Koutaru is foolish when it comes to women. In the first half of the series he becomes involved with a woman whose father has been caught up in one of Gen Kai Ryuu's schemes. When her father is killed she blames Koutaru. In the second half of the series Koutaru falls for Rankha, who is in reality King Cobra's daughter. He's also completely oblivious to how Kaboko feels about him.

With one exception Rai, Koutaru's friends (and even some of his enemies) call him by the nickname "Raikou". The friend who always addresses him as "Koutaru" is none other than Diamond Eye himself.

Koutaru usually refers to Diamond Eye as just "Ai" (Eye). Gen Kai Ryuu insists on calling Koutaru by his full name "Rai, Koutaru" usually in an angry tone.

Hikari no Senshi Daiyamondo Ai was created by Kawauchi, Kouhan the creator of Gekko Kamen (1958), Ai no Senshi Reinbooman (1972) and Seigi no Shinboru Kondoruman (1975).

DIAMOND MASTER,THE

The story tells of a group of diamond merchants who arrange the murder of Dr Harvey (Stern), the inventor of a process that can transmute dust into diamonds. His daughter, Doris (Lorraine) enlists the help of Mark (Stevenson) to track down the killers as well as to exploit the commercial potential of her father's invention.

A remake of the 18-episode serial THE DIAMOND QUEEN (1921) based on the novel by Jacques Futrelle, a popular writer of detective fiction who was one of the victims of the Titanic disaster. The rest of the serial is taken up with their detecting and constant escapes from the diamond merchants' heavies.

This version, eight episodes shorter than the original, proceeds at a faster pace, packing more action into each instalment. One reason for the picture's success was the competent performances of the cast, some of whom had gained valuable experience in serials directed by the best of the American silent serial directors, Robert F. Hill. Lorraine had starred in THE FLAMING DISK (1920) and THE RADIO KING (1922) while Montague had played the villain in BLAKE OF SCOTLAND YARD (1927).

However, this serial adapted from Jacques Futrelle's novel The Diamond Master, added a new twist by setting most of the action in South Africa and centering the story on a heroine, Doris Harvey, played Pearl White style by vaudeville acrobat Sedgwick. The serial details Doris's adventures amongst cannibals (even becoming a cannibal queen herself) in an attempt to break the diamond cartel's power by flooding the market with artificial diamonds. Her motive is revenge for the death of her father, caused by his financial competitors. The artificial stones are prepared by Professor Ramsey (Smith) and the love interest is provided by a young millionaire on Safari, Mark Allen (Chesebro).

The familiar story of the artificial production of diamonds retold yet again (after The Diamond Maker, 1909 and 1914; The Diamond Makers, 1913 and the best of them all, The Empire of Diamonds, 1920). The serial was remade by Universal in 1929 as THE DIAMOND MASTER. Fuielle, the promising young writer of detective stories who had died on the Titanic in 1912, provided the main plot ideas for most of these artificial diamond movies.

DICK TRACY

Stanley is the Lame One who with his Spider Armada and a panoply of gadgetry that includes a sound disintegrator and an impressive-looking futuristic aircraft, the flying wing, is finally foiled by Byrd. An inventive touch that gives a real dramatic edge to the proceedings is the transformation by Piccori's hunchback scientist of Tracy's brother into a zombie accomplice of Stanley.

This was the first of Republic's quartet of serials featuring Chester Gould's famous cartoon detective. Byrd lacked the angular jaw Gould gave his creation and the Tess Trueheart character was omitted in the interests of realism, but in the main the serial was faithful to the fantastic world the cartoonist wove around his detective.

To make the change more effective, Tracy's brother is played by two actors, Dick Bench before and Young, with a sinister streak through his hair, after. Taylor and James direct forcefully, despite the serial's short (25-day) shooting schedule. The producer for the serial was J. Laurence Wickland, cinematographers were William Nobles and Edgar Lyons. The special effects were created by Howard Lydecker.

In the second of Republic's four serials devoted to the exploits of crime buster No. 1, Dick Tracy Returns (1938), Byrd's Tracy had been set against the evil Stark family (a pale imitation of Ma Baker and her sons), but for this outing Byrd was once more confronted with a fantastical villain, Pichel's evil Zarnoff, who starts the film by coming back from the dead courtesy of a mysterious 'life-giving' drug he's perfected. Fittingly, after causing mayhem for 14 episodes, in the last chapter he dies drinking from a well of pure arsenic.

Pichel later went on to become a director in which capacity he served on the landmark film Destination Moon (1950) while Byrd's girlfriend was played by Isley who achieved lasting fame as Jennifer Jones. The producers for the serial were Robert Beche and Sol Shor. The cinematographer was William Nobles and the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker.

DIE SPINNENAKA: DIE ABENTEUER DES KAY HONGAKA: THE SPIDERS

The American adventurer Kay Hoog (de Vogt) battles it out with Lio-Sha (Orla) and her gang of Spiders led by John. The Spiders are based in Inca territory but their web spans across the world. The object of the battle, in which a series of damsels in distress are rescued by the hero, is a fabulous diamond able to bestow mastery of the world upon its possessor. Loosely inspired by the adventure stories of Karl May (and possibly a little by the Feuillade serials as well) the film is crammed full of astonishingly effective set-pieces in exotic locations, mostly recreated in a Hamburg studio. Highlights include a subterranean eruption and waterfalls, narrow escapes on a makeshift ark, a rescue by hot air balloon, mysterious criminal encounters in San Francisco's Chinatown, Inca temples and a grand climax in the Falklands involving a poisonous volcano.

The omnipresent Spiders dwell in secret caves and cellars with sliding, armour-plated walls, a desk that descends into the floor, a circular mirror offering the villainess a controlling gaze at the goings-on in her conference rooms - anticipating the bank of TV monitors providing Mabuse with his 1,000 eyes (Die Tausend Augen des Dr Mabuse, 1960).

The best made and most inventive Boys' Own adventure story in cinema, unequalled until Steven Spielberg's Raiders of the Lost Ark (1981). Originally designed as a four-part story, only two chapters were made, nevertheless they form a coherent whole.

Part 1, Der Goldene See (80 minutes) is a little slow to get moving, but after the hesitant opening the pace doesn't slacken until the end of Part 2, Das Brilliamen Schiff (97 minutes). Part 1 was later published as a book. Parts 3 and 4 (The Secret of the Sphinx and For Asia's Imperial Crown) were written but never filmed in spite of the huge success of the earlier episodes. After finishing Part 1, Lang had made a quickie, Hara-kirt (1919) based on Madame Butterfly, and the art directors Hermann Warm, Walter Reimann and Walter Roehrig asked Lang and Pommer to film the story called Das Kabinett des Dr Caligari. Pommer, however, insisted that Lang go and make Part 2 of Die Spinnen as quickly as possible. However, Lang's idea that the Caligari story should be framed by a 'normal' prologue and epilogue was retained for the final version of Caligari (1919), which was directed by Robert Wiene.

The serial was produced by Erich Pommer, the cinematographers were Emil Schuemann (Part 1), Karl Freund (Part 2).

DIMENSION DETECTIVE: WECKER (inc DIMENSIONAL DETECTIVE WECKER: D-02)

One hundred years in the future, a time hole is discovered over Japan that allows "Chrono Travel." Criminals soon realize that the time gateway offers great potential for nefarious activities by utilizing future technologies and knowledge to cunningly commit crimes in the present. Enter "Wecker" -- the code name for an elite group of Time Dimension Police, a countermeasure to the crime committed using Chrono Travel. This is the basic premise for limited action-adventure-sf teleseries, which is a follow-up for the original WECKER series, which co-starred Hiroshi Watari, the action star best known for starring in Toei's SPACE SHERIFF: SHARIVAN (1983-1984).

Beautiful heroines and science fiction are good. Put them together with the right talent, and they can be great. That's the chocolate and peanut butter combination of DIMENSIONAL DETECTIVE WECKER, which premiered with a new series (subtitled "D-02") in Japan from January through March, 2002. The hit series then made its North American debut at this year's "Asian Fantasy Film Expo" in New Jersey, where English subtitled episodes from the new series were screened in front of a captive audience.

As a result of the positive response to WECKER: D-02 at AFFE, the West Coast will be getting its chance to see this groundbreaking series at "Anime Expo 2002" which runs from July 4th through 7th at the Long Beach Convention Center in Long Beach, California.

But, some of you might ask, "What the heck is 'Wecker'?" The show was conceived by producer Kazuya Hatazawa, whose previous super-heroine series included MASKED ANGEL: ROSETTA (1998), and MILLENNIUM KINGDOM III: VANNY KNIGHTS (1999). WECKER, which means "clock" in German, is Hatazawa's most ambitious series yet.

The original concept of the show was first conceived as a joint project between Lay-Up Company and Kobi Company, an advertising agency (known for producing Kinji Fukasaku's BATTLE ROYALE), as a three-part DVD series which ended on a cliffhanger. The strategy was to start sales with the DVD and garner enough interest so that a network would pick the show up for broadcast with new episode commitments.

This three part series was written and directed by Hatazawa and Hiroshi Watari, a former member of the Japan Action Club, who also played Wecker Agent "Varn." The series was shot on a conservative budget and features three sexy young women in their first screen roles.

This original WECKER series was released on DVD in Japan in June of 2001, to excellent advance sales and word of mouth -- even before the DVDs hit the stores. The Official WECKER Homepage, launched in April, 2001 had already seen over 24,000 hits alone by that summer, making this independent production a bona fide hit with fans nationwide in Japan.

This success also garnered the attention of major Japanese toy manufacturers, such as Takara, who produced best-selling figurines, while other companies issued popular items as such photo books, posters and trading cards -- all of which sold well, due to the appealing aspects of the series, not to mention the beautiful time-travelling girls, themselves (similar items for WECKER: D-02 were even stronger in sales than those for the first series).

In addition, a manga written by Hatazawa with art by Kotoko Izumi, was published in serial form in the Japanese monthly magazine "Charatsu" to critical acclaim. The sales of such items were so strong, that in the summer of 2001, the Asahi TV network (which had also broadcast VANNY KNIGHTS two years prior), picked up WECKER for new episodes, with a premiere date set for January 2002.

This new version, now entitled WECKER: D-02, was recast to focus on seven members, six female and one

DIMENSION OF FEAR

At a small research establishment, scientists are experimenting on feeding astronauts in space. When an astronaut and a carpenter in the local village are killed, it becomes clear that powers from the fourth dimension are attacking Earth.

Four part ITV serial set in a peaceful English village, that took the favourite SF theme of the extraordinary unsettling the ordinary to spin a tale of inter dimensional menace. John Lucarotti scripted the tale which was shown on Saturday or Sunday nights depending on which part of the country you lived in. Dimension of Fear was based on a story by Berkely Mather. The settings were created by Patrick Downing, the story editor was George Kerr, the producer was Guy Verney, and the series was first seen in the ATV, London region in the UK.

DINOSAPIEN

Picture: Brittney Wilson and Mackenzie Porter on the banks of the Elbow River. Bragg Creek, Alberta. June 2006

Sixty-five million years ago an asteroid impact wiped dinosaurs off the face of the Earth and the age of mammals began. Dinosapien explores what would have happened had some of the dinosaurs survived and evolved into intelligent life.

DinoSapien tells the story of 15 year-old Lauren (Vancouver's Brittney Wilson), whose father mysteriously disappeared on a fossil expedition.

As Lauren struggles to come to terms with his death, she finds comfort in her friends - Courtney (Medicine Hat's Mackenzie Porter), Kit (Vancouver's Bronson Pelletier) and Chris (Watson) - who all work at the dinosaur camp run by her mother.

BBC Post Production London has won editing, grading, finishing and sound work on 15 half-hour episodes of Dinosapien, a new children's high definition co-production for BBC Worldwide and CCI Entertainment. The broadcast partners are the BBC and Discovery Kids (US).

Sixty-five million years ago an asteroid impact wiped dinosaurs off the face of the Earth and the age of mammals began. Dinosapien explores what would have happened had some of the dinosaurs survived and evolved into intelligent life. The programme combines live footage with CGI and requires the BBC Post Production sound team to create sounds from scratch for the animated characters.

With the production team in Canada and the post production team based in the England, the programme is benefiting from an innovative workflow solution based on existing File Transfer Protocol (FTP) technology. The audio scratch effects, the animation and the offline edit are being transferred across the Atlantic via BBC Post Production's FTP site.

Nick Keene, Lead Editor, BBC Post Production says: Sharing files across networks is not new, but sharing files across continents on this kind of scale definitely is for the BBC: around 10,000 -15,000 files travel back and forth per episode, needing around 30 gigs of storage per episode. It is benefiting the production enormously, enabling us to save days in the schedule and deliver work within extremely tight deadlines. Moving media in this way also means we can make the most of the time difference too and upload files in the morning UK time, to be ready for the Canadian team when they arrive at work.

The workflow remains tape-based in part, as it is the most effective way to move material in the early stages. Daily rushes, shot on HD Cam are sent to BBC Post Production London and down-converted to SD. DV Cam copies are then sent back to Toronto for an offline edit. The Avid Bin of the first picture lock, without animation, is compiled and sent to BBC Post Production so the programme can be conformed on Avid Adrenalines in London. After a grading session using POGLE, the animation backplates are sent to the FTP site for the animators to use as backgrounds for the CGI Dinosaurs.

Each episode comprises 6 minutes of CGI animation, provided by Yowza Animation, also based in Canada. The final animation arrives as a sequence of Tiff files for use in the offline edit in Canada and is also put back on the FTP site for use in the 2 nd conform. Once the Offline edit with the final animation is locked in Canada, the Avid bin containing the sequence is sent to London for the final conform using the same Tiff sequence as used in the Canadian offline.

After the final conform, the dialogue tracklay is carried out and the final dub. There will also be a foley mix to make the programme suitable for foreign broadcasters. BBC Post Production is also undertaking all re-versioning of the series for BBC Worldwide.

Dinosapien is set at a Dinosaur Summer Camp in Canada's badlands, where Dr. Hillary Slayton lives with her teenage daughter Lauren. Hillary's husband Alan Slayton was a palaeontologist, who mysteriously disappeared on a fossil expedition into the badlands and Lauren still hasn't come to terms with his death. Lauren is the first human to encounter one of the evolved dinosaurs, which she eventually befriends and names Eno. Lauren and Eno form a special bond. Through Eno, Lauren hopes to learn the fate of her father, and through Lauren, Eno seeks protection from the dangerous Diggers - dinosaurs that are tracking Eno down and trying to kill him. Over two series, Dinosapien will unravel the mystery of the evolved dinosaurs, and reveal the extraordinary truth of what really happened to Lauren's father in the badlands.

BBC Post Production Sound Designer, Kian Wong, is creating sounds for the CGI dinosaurs, drawing on clean animal vocalisations to create sample sounds for the CGI characters. He is using a mixture of animal noises for the sound morphing, such as parrots and vultures for Eno, who is based on a giant bird and walrus and camel roars for the Diggers. As the series progresses, Eno becomes more and more intelligible, as he mimicks Lauren.

Kian says: We needed to find a way for the dinosaurs to communicate without speaking in our language, as the production team wanted them to be as real as possible and blend in with the live footage, rather than standing out as animation. With no subtitles, this was a real creative challenge, but the sound morphing has been really effective.

BBC Post Production has invested in a new sound technology to support the programme - a KymaX from Symbolic Sound in the US, which enables real-time digital sound processing. In addition to creating sounds, BBC Post Production is providing sound editing, adding dialogue, backgrounds, spot effects, music and atmospheres.

DO OVER

'Do Over'

Tagline: Joel Larsen is 14 today. The problem is, he was 34 yesterday.

Thirty-four-year-old Joel Larsen gets a second chance to get his life right, thanks to a freakish accident that catapults him back to 1981. Blessed with adult wisdom, though hampered by adolescent urges, Joel sets out to right the wrongs that will befall his family.

This show is just so much fun. There's no other way to put it. You don't look for accuracy, or wish fulfillment, or deep dialogue or plot.

The show reminds me of when I was in high school - the times that make me sad they're over AND the times that made me cringe. It's fun to watch just to see all the 80s references. It's the kind of fun that That 80s Show SHOULD have been (but SO WASN'T).

The storylines are good, it's fun to think of going back and having the ability to make changes. Or seeing Joel know what happens in the future to the people he knew in high school, while he's back in high school this second time around.

I only wish that it was on a major network so that more people would "fall" into it. Hopefully, it will be found, and watched, by many - so that I can keep on seeing it.

1 - 1 PILOT

One day Joel Larsen gets home from his boring work as a salesman and finds an ambulance on his doorway. His father was in an accident, but nothing too serious, just some overburned bread. His life is miserable, but it all changes after his sister accidentally shocks him in the head with the ambulance's resurrecting machine and he wakes up on his high school's baseball field. Somehow Joel Larsen is back to 1981, back to his high school days. Believing it's all a big dream, he goes home to what once was a regular (but slightly dysfunctional) American family. His parents are still married, and his sister is only a few years away from substance abuse. The next morning he wakes up and freaks after realizing he's trapped in 1981. To make matters worse, he has an Algebra test, which he flees. He is caught smoking by his principal and still has to face class elections and a speech on which he froze. But this time he knows better, and manages to change his past and win the election. Can this be not as bad as he thought?

1 - 2 JOEL STRIKES BACK

Joel picks a fight with Judd Chulak, the high school bully with huge biceps. Instead of running away from the fight like the old Joel Larsen would do, he decides to take a different approach this time and face the facts like a man - maybe he can even bond with his father a little more, since he never did. It's the chance of standing up for himself, even if it means being beaten and miss the premiere of "The Empire Strikes Back". Knowing he doesn't stand a chance against the guy, Joel calls the police to rescue him, but gets punched anyway when a guy dressed as Darth Vader takes his place on the movie line.

1 - 3 INVESTING IN THE FUTURE

Joel is tired of living short on money so he decides to use his future knowledge to make some big bucks. He gets his "old" job by phone and start to make money by selling paper. All the phone usage raises suspicion on Principal Rudd, who thinks he's selling drugs. He calls in Joel's parents for an urgent meeting, where Joel reveals the truth and decides to quit (even though his father thought it was great that Joel was so young and yet made so much money), because he realized he is not 34 and thus has to live the normal life of a teenager - and not let his best friend down for choosing work over The Blues Brothers concert. He gives the rest of the money for their parents to buy their new hot tub and invest on Intel. But his father won't risk the money on that or on Karen's newest invention: post-its! - no, he prefers to invest it on Beta machines.

1 - 4 THE ANNIVERSARY

Joel makes desperate attempts to call his father attention on his wedding anniversary and try to make him give his mother more attention, because the man who broke up their marriage and later married his mom is just starting to put his moves on Mrs. Larsen. He makes a romantic dinner for his parents with old home made movies from their engagement party and makes his father invade her private ceramic lesson to stop anything from happening between his wife and the teacher, but all he finds is an unfinished cigar holder she was making him. Joel saved his parents marriage, but can he explain why he was hanging out in a bar with his sister after she made fake id's for them?

1 - 5 TAKE ME OUT OF THE BALLGAME

Joel is faced with re-living one of the most embarrassing moments of his life: when he made his baseball team lose the game after missing 3 balls. He tries his best to avoid playing at the game, but his efforts are useless. He will have to see his dad yell at him, his mother run away with shame, his sister call him a dork, Holly Kent laugh at him and worse: this time his grandpa, Isabelle (who's having a bad hair week thanks to a bad perm) and TV are there. Joel misses the balls, but instead of running home like before he stays and faces everybody. Turns out his dad was yelling at someone else, his mother just went to pick up sodas from the car, Holly Kent was laughing at some dogs and his sister, well, his sister was really calling him a dork. Facing his failure isn't so bad after all, especially when you discover you were the one who gave Greg Maddux confidence to carry on with his future brilliant baseball career. At the concert, Joel uses his smooth talk to buy tickets from a scalper for him, Pat, Isabelle and Holly Kent, who he met at the parking lot waiting outside for her date to come out of the concert. Just as they are about to get in, Joel changes his mind and rescues his sister from the most humiliating night of her life. Unfortunately, he is caught red handed and his parents decide to act tougher on him thanks to melancholic, depressive poem he wrote in English class entitled "Smells Like Teen Spirit" and Cheryl doesn't remember a thing the morning after.

1 - 7 HOLLYWEEN (AKA HALLOWEEN KISS)

It's Halloween, and Joel has a chance to rewrite what was his first kiss, which he accidentally had with Bonnie, an annoying girl who would end up dating him against his will for 6 months after that. How surprised is Joel when he sees Bonnie at the party she was not supposed to be at, thanks to an invitation made by Pat. In a desperate moment, Joel kisses Isabelle, and convinces her to pretend she's his girlfriend for the night. When he sees Holly Kent break up with her boyfriend of the week, Joel quickly dumps Isabelle, who gets hurt. Joel finally has the opportunity of a lifetime when Holly asks for a kiss, but chooses not to do that when he sees she'd only be doing that to cause jealousy on her boyfriend. They go home and start cleaning the t.p.'s that are all over the Larsen home, since they are "the raisins house" (while Bill and Karen get things heated up in the backyard with Tarzan and Jane costumes), leaving Pat making out with Bonnie and Cheryl trading one loser for a guy who would eventually become a famous cardiologist, if it wasn't for her influence.

1 - 13 SHORT CUTS

Joel Larsen competes in the science fair in order to not flunk the class. He tries to ride the coat-tails of Andrew Wages, a brainy science kid who supposedly invents the technology for satellite TV in the future and owns millions. The side-story is about the Larsen family coming together after Joel helps them steal cable tv from the Nachman's.

1 - 14 VALENTINE'S DAY DANCE

"It's all about timing", is Joel's motto as he uses his second chance in life to ask Holly Kent to the Valentine's Day dance. Well, that and a red rubber ball, as we later discover as he seizes his moment during a game of Dodgeball, when he steals the woman of his dreams from possessive Gary Ross. Joel also tells his best friend that the girl who said at her High School 10-year-reunion that she always fancied Pat, was a girl called Stacey and so they pair off also. Isabelle finds her man in Todd York with whom she was last seen in a bitter argument at their Model U.N. Conference. When it comes to the crunch during the main dance, Joel is torn between staying linked with Holly, and persuading his parents, who came along as chaperones, that they should be dancing together rather than his father throwing his marriage into the toilet by insisting that Saturday night is always "Poker Night". Which way will he choose?

1 - 15 CHILGHETTI

When Joel's mother comes up with the idea of tying string around the top of a trash bag, which he labels "Synch-sacks", Joel figures it's high time his father actually took her inventions seriously. Joel chooses his time carefully, opting for scaring the man half to death during his first driving lesson, given that he now has 20 years of driving experience behind him. Bill finally relents, but the disaster that unfolds is "Chilghetti", a mix of chili and spaghetti. It's not available in the 21st century, so compared to the other inspirations she's had, this one surely can't be a winner? Meanwhile, Isabelle is set for a disaster of her own as she plans to audition for Scarlett O'Hara in a school production of "Gone With The Wind". Joel has knowledge about the audition which, unless it's stopped, will make for a moment that will haunt her until the end of her school days. At the end as the family go ahead and begin to put Chilghetti on the market, they make a toast to an uncertain future. If only this show had had a future.

DOCTOR WHO

Doctor Who is the longest running science fiction show in the world. In fact, the 26 years that it was in continual production also makes it the longest running prime time drama series. The premise of the show is quite simple: a man and his companion(s) travel around space and time having adventures in a London police box. The man is known as the Doctor- there is no character named Doctor Who. The Doctor is a Time Lord, an alien being from the planet Gallifrey who on the outside appears quite human. His companions numbering from one to three almost always include at least one attractive young lady. The London Police Box is not really a police box but rather the Doctor's TARDIS, a combination spaceship and time machine that can go anywhere and anywhere in the whole universe.

The TARDIS also has the ability to blend in with its surroundings by assuming a shape that will not stick out. Unfortunately the Doctor's TARDIS was stolen by him while awaiting repairs and this feature along with the navigation controls doesn't work. The Doctor's TARDIS is stuck in the shape of a London police box, a big blue box slightly larger than a phone booth with a light on top. Police boxes were quite common in London in 1963 when Dr. Who premiered but they have now vanished. This was a purely economical move on the producers' part, since a new TARDIS design would not need to be constructed for each new planet visited.

Doctor Who is known as the longest running SF show in the world starting in 1963 and finishing in 1989 with a staggering 26 seasons. Not even the long lasting Senti shows of Japan have reached that yet but it won't be long before they do. There have been several related spin-offs of Doctor Who - the televised K9 & Company, the videos Wartime, Downtime, Shakedown, Auton, Mindgame & the PROBE series, the radio dramas "Slipback", "The Paradise Of Death" and "The Ghosts Of N-Space", one record "The Pescatons", a CD drama, "The Sirens Of Time", and hundreds of books from "Virgin Publishing" and "BBC Books".

In this long running UK SF TV series for children, the Doctor, generally known as Doctor Who because of the show's enigmatic title (it is not actually his name), eventually was revealed as a TimeLord, who travels back and forth in time and space. He is accompanied by various people (sometimes teenagers, sometimes men, usually young women), in his time machine, the TARDIS, an acronym for Time And Relative Dimensions In Space. Stories have varied in length from 1 to 14 episodes, the most common length through being 4 or 6 episodes.

The first episode (Nov 1963) concerned a young girl who puzzles two of her schoolteachers with her unusual knowledge of history. They follow her into what appears to be a police telephone box but is in fact a time machine (whose interior is many times larger than its exterior) owned by her irritable and eccentric grandfather, the Doctor. As the machine cannot be properly controlled they are all whisked off to the Stone Age, where they remain for the following 3 episodes.

The series had a modest following at first; it was not until the second story, "The Daleks", written by Terry Nation, that it achieved mass popularity, mainly because of the introduction of the Daleks. Until 1990 the series returned to UK TV every year. It was not introduced to US TV until the Tom Baker episodes that were played there in 1982, when it quickly developed a cult following. (A previous attempt in the 1970s to export the programme to the USA a package of the Jon Pertwee episodes had flopped.)

Because the Doctor has the ability periodically to regenerate his entire body, the series has been able to outlast its original star, the crusty William Hartnell, and to introduce a succession of new leading men: Patrick Troughton (Nov 1966-June 1969), Jon Pertwee (Jan 1970-June 1974), Tom Baker (Dec 1974-Mar 1981), Peter Davison (Jan 1982-Mar 1984), Colin Baker (Mar 1984-Dec 1986), Sylvester McCoy (Sep 1987-1996) and Paul McGann (1996). Peter Cushing took the role in two films, Dr. Who and the Daleks (1965) and Daleks : Invasion Earth 2150 A.D. (1966); Richard Hurndall took the place of the late Hartnell in The Five Doctors (1983); and Michael Jayston played the Doctor's evil incarnation from the future in the 14-episode The Trial of a Time Lord (1986).

While the b/w episodes featuring Hartnell and Troughton are spikier and stranger, the show probably hit its peak between the Pertwee and Davison versions, with Tom Baker's long-lived, Harpo-Marxish Time Lord the most popular of all and the writers of the 1970s gradually revealing more of the secrets of the Time Lords that had been hinted at since the first. In the late 1980s the show lost direction (some say thanks to the tiredness of John Nathan-Turner's regime as producer, begun 1979) and the BBC experimented with it -- lengthening it, moving it from its long-established Saturday teatime slot to a weekday, and, finally, putting it on an indefinite suspension where, neither cancelled nor renewed. A 30th anniversary TV programme planned for 1993 was shelved at the last minute, though there was a Doctor Who radio drama in 1993. While early seasons were 10 months long, in the 1970s most seasons were 6-7 months, and from 1982 they were 3 months.

Although the programme has long since settled into a pattern, with stories usually featuring at least one monster, there has been plenty of room for experiment. The authors have unblushingly pirated hundreds of ideas from Pulp-Magazine TV, but often make intelligent and sometimes quite complex use of them. It seems probable that, certainly in the 1970s, the programme attracted as many adult viewers as children. With the increasing sophistication of the scripts and the expertise of the special effects and make-up, from which many other programmes could learn a great deal about what can be done on a low budget, DW became a notably self-confident series, juggling expertly with many of the great tropes and images of the genre. It is the most successful Space Opera in the history of TV, not excluding STAR TREK. Storylines often feature political satire. At its worst merely silly, at its best it has been spellbinding.

Producers of the series after Verity Lambert (who lasted into the 3rd season) have included Innes Lloyd, Peter Bryant, Barry Letts, Philip Hinchcliffe, Graham Williams and John Nathan-Turner. Story editors, all of whom have written episodes, have included Dennis Spooner, Gerry DAVIS, Derrick Sherwin, Terrance Dicks (1968-74), Robert Holmes, Anthony Read, Douglas ADAMS, Christopher H. Bidmead, Eric Saward (1982-6) and Andrew Cartmel. Other writers have included Terry Nation, David Whitaker, John Lucarotti, Brian Hayles, Kit PEDLER, Malcolm Hulke, Don Houghton, Robert Sloman, Bob Baker and Dave Martin, Robert Banks Stewart, David Fisher, Stephen Gallagher, Johnny Byrne, Terence Dudley, Peter Grimwade, Pip and Jane Baker, and Ben Aaronovitch.

There are now very many spin-off books from the series, ranging from episode guides through annuals, encyclopedias, scholarly studies and published scripts to a TARDIS cookbook. There is a magazine, Dr Who Monthly, with more than 160 issues. All but four stories have now been novelized, with 156 titles published from the 1970s through late 1990s. (The un-novelized scripts are "The Pirate Planet" & "Shada" by Douglas Adams, "City of Death" by Douglas Adams and Graham Williams writing as David Agnew, "Resurrection of the Daleks" by Eric Saward and "Revelation of the Daleks" by Eric Saward. In 1991, most existing scripts having been novelized, a post-tv sequence of releases, The New Doctor Who Adventures, was instituted, the first sequence being the Timewyrm series: Timewyrm: Genesis * (1991) by John Peel, Exodus * (1991) by Terrance Dicks, Apocalypse * (1991) by Nigel Robinson and Revelation * (1991) by Paul Cornell. A comprehensive Doctor Who bibliography would itself be book-size.

'If you could touch the alien sand and hear the cries of strange birds, and watch them wheel in another sky would that satisfy you?' (The Doctor)

When a grouchy Time Lord, tired of the discipline and order of his home planet, Gallifrey, first stole a clapped-out TARDIS and fled with his granddaughter, he started a myth that has become embedded in television history.

Doctor Who has been the backbone of British TV science fiction for 26 years, an amazing legend of heroes and villains that has touched the dawn of time and peered over the edge of the universe. It has been the mother ship for much of the creative talent to emerge in television fantasy over the past three decades - nearly everyone who's anyone has worked on the show.

Doctor Who was created in 1963 by the BBC's new Head of Drama, Sydney Newman. He had come to the Corporation from ABC Television where he had produced the successful Armchair Theatre, activated The Avengers and launched the ITV Sunday space sagas, Target Lurta and Pathfinders (see separate entries).

As the new serial was to be for children, Newman wanted Doctor Who to have a high educational content in which the Doctor's travels would unroll the tapestry of history for his young audience. The space stories, too, had to be based on factual knowledge. And, quite definitely, no BEMs (Bug-Eyed Monsters). Almost immediately, producer Verity Lambert and script editor David Whitaker turned up with Terry Nation's Daleks and another legend was born, with as much carpet worn out behind the country's sofas as in front of them.

By turns frightening and cosy, bleak and humorous, innovative and traditional, silly and cerebral, Doctor Who evolved a format which allowed it to do anything, go anywhere, with only the mode of transport unchanged - the TARDIS (Time And Relative Dimension In Space), forever frozen as an old-fashioned police box.

The series' flexibility lay at the heart of its success and longevity, and crucial to that has been the changing face of the Doctor himself. When William Hartnell, the original Doctor, became too ill to play the part, the show faced a crisis - adapt or die. It adapted, by bringing in a new actor and explaining the change as a process of 'regeneration'. So far, with the advent of the latest movie, the Doctor is in his eighth incarnation and is allowed five more by the series' own Time Lord mythology. After that? Who knows. Eight so far, though, and all different:

William Hartnell made him a man of mystery, a rather forbidding, tetchy Edwardian eccentric. Patrick Troughton turned him into a Chaplinesque hobo in a funny hat and baggy check trousers, given to bursts of irrational behaviour to confound all his foes. Jon Pertwee brought a dash of the flamboyant dandy, all swirling cloaks and ruffled shirts as he raced to the rescue in his yellow roadster, Bessie.

Tom Baker took him back on the galactic road as a wide-eyed, curly-haired, grinning Gallifreyan rebel, an intellectual Bohemian in a floppy hat and flowing scarf. Peter Davison was the most vulnerable - mild-mannered and sensitive, he wore his hearts on his Regency-coated sleeves and listened to his conscience. Colin Baker's sixth Doctor was deliberately pitched to the other extreme - arrogant, brash and abrasive - in a self-conscious effort to be different. Sylvester McCoy energetically steered the character out of the show's most troubled period since it was nearly axed by Michael Grade back in 1985. But with seasons lasting just 14 episodes, it became much harder to establish a presence than in the old days when Doctor Who ran for up to ten months of the year.

Paul McGann, with his long hair, Edwardian-style frock coat, glittery waistcoat and silk cravat, embodies the adventurer ideal - handsome, rugged but with a childlike zest for life. But however often he appears, the Doctor has never really travelled alone. Right from the start he has shared his adventures with one or more companions, many of whom have become nearly as famous as the Time Lord himself.

At first there were the schoolteachers, Ian and Barbara, plus his granddaughter, Susan. Then the accent settled firmly on youth - mostly attractive and female. The Who Girls have included the orphaned Victoria, brainy Zoe, scientist Liz Shaw, leggy Jo Grant, savage Leela, TimeLady Romana, the Aussie 'mouth on legs' Tegan, curvy Peri, strident Mel and the streetwise Ace, and questionably the most popular female companion, journalist Sarah Jane Smith. They've run the gamut of female stereotypes from the screamers and ankle sprainers to the stubborn, independent misses. There have been far fewer male companions, but the best have been the young Scot Jamie, the artful dodger Adric and the ambivalent alien Turlough. Not forgetting, of course, the loyal men of UNIT, led by Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart, and the canine robot, K9.

And the show has spawned many memorable villains and monsters in its 26 years. Top of the list are the Daleks - 'little green blobs in bonded potycarbide armour' - and their creator Davros; others include the Cybermen, the Sontarans, the Ice Warnors, the Yeti, the Autons, the Sea Devils, the Terileptils, the Tractators, the slug-like Sil and the confectioner's nightmare, the Kandyman. Then there are the humanoid villains, led by the Doctor's indestructible nemesis, the Master. He's one of several renegade Time Lords who have troubled the Doctor - others have been Omega, Borusa, the Rani and the Valeyard.

Danger has also come from without: in its time Doctor Who has been derided by critics, vilified by squeamish watchdogs and seen its audience ebb and flow. Its highest average viewing figure was 14.5m for the 1979 story City of Death (peaking at 16.1 m for episode four), the lowest just 3.1 m for the first episode of, the season 26 opener, Battlefield.

Since the 26th and last season ended in 1989, there were constant rumours of a comeback for the Time Lord, with Spielberg's Amblin Company in the frame at one time. Meanwhile, Dimensions in Time, a 3D 'adventure set in EastEnders' Albert Square, was made for 1993's Children in Need appeal; two radio stories were aired starring Jon Pertwee - The Paradise of Death in September 1993, and The Ghosts of N-Space in 1996, and a 30th anniversary documentary, 30 Years in the Tardis, materialised in November 1993.

The big breakthrough finally came in May 1996, with a BBCWorldwide/Universal Television TV movie, starring Paul McGann as the Eighth Doctor, Julia Roberts' brother Eric as The Master, and Sylvester McCoy, briefly reprising his role long enough to pass the baton to McGann.

If just getting the movie made was a triumph for executive producer and long-time fan Philip Segal (a veteran of ER, seaQuest and Earth 2), the Doctor Who for the Nineties was always going to be controversial - unashamedly aimed at the US market, as it inevitably had to be if the franchise was going to be revived. Much of the $3million budget went on creating a spectacular TARDIS interior, elaborately designed with more than a hint of Jules Verne. However, to link the new to the old, props from the BBC series were scattered around as reminders.

Despite Segal's reverence for Doctor Who's heritage, many British fans remained unimpressed by the international version with its slick American touches such as a motorbike chase through San Francisco and the Doctor's first screen kiss, and bemoaned the loss of the eccentric, low-budget British feel. Its ultimate success - nine million viewers in the UK - can only be judged on whether the movie spawns a series. Fans held their breath. America's Fox network held an option.

Since no one actor would want to be tied down to the same role for 26 years, the producers devised a cunning means which would allow a new actor to take over as the Doctor when the old one got tired of the role. This was accomplished by giving the Time Lords, as a race, the ability to regenerate their body when it became old or injured. This new body has a completely different appearance and is accompanied by a slight change in personality. To date, the Doctor has regenerated seven times, with eight actors bringing their interpretation of the role to the screen.

They are: Doctor #1. William Hartnell, The First Doctor was an eccentric old man whom we knew little about. The first Doctor's stories tended to be a mixture of historical stories and interplanetary adventures. In the historical stories the Doctor and his companions would encounter famous figures from the Earth's past. These tended to be the pseudo educational variety attempting to accurately portray the past. It as the 'pure' science fiction stories that proved to be the most popular and shortly after Hartnell left the show the historical stories were dropped.

Doctor #2. Patrick Troughton. Being the first actor to inherit the role. Patrick Troughton had to let the audiences accept him as the Doctor. He played the role in direct contrast to Hartnell's style- much more friendly and not always serious, which allowed his enemies to often underestimate him His most popular companion was Jamie. An 18th century Scottish lad who shared all but one of the second Doctor's adventures. Due to a massive purging at the BBC archives only 6 of Troughton's 21 stories exist in their entirety.

Doctor #3. Jon Pertwee, Jon Pertwee began his tenure as the Doctor exiled to Earth by the Time Lords. Always impeccably dressed. Pertwee was a man of action. While on Earth he became the scientific advisor to UNIT (United Nations Intelligence Taskforce) an organisation formed in the Troughton years. Confined to Earth as he was. the UNIT stories took on two basic plotlines: battling alien invaders or mad Scientists. After three years of being confined to the Earth, the Doctor was given back his freedom for helping the Time Lords in The Three Doctors. Pertwee's last two years consisted of a mix of UNIT stories and interplanetary adventures. His most popular companion was Jo Grant an assistant assigned to him at UNIT whom he originally did not want. The men from UNIT: Brigadier Lethbridge Stewart, Sgt. Benton and Captain Yates were also around for many of the Pertwee stories.

Doctor #4. Tom Baker. With his traditional outfit of floppy hat, overcoat and long scarf Tom Baker is the actor most associated with the role to American audiences. To date, he is the actor who stayed with the role the longest, seven years. His bohemian style did not endear him to various authority figures that he met in his travels. A few of the early Tom Baker stories had the Doctor involved with UNIT: however, he soon took to wandering the universe full time. Tom Baker's most popular companion was not a humanoid being. but rather K-9 a robot dog. K-9 proved to be so popular that after he left the show he was awarded a one shot special of his own: Entitled K-9 and Company. K-9 and Company also featured Tom Baker's most popular human companion journalist Sarah Jane Smith. Other companions of Tom Baker included Leela a savage warrior and Romana a fellow Time Lord who regenerated during her tenure on the programme.

Doctor #5, Peter Davison, Peter Davison was the youngest actor to portray the Doctor. Davison's Doctor was mild mannered and somewhat naive. He tended to wait a while before devising a plan of action. Among his more popular companions were: Tegan, a brash Australian airline stewardess, Turlough. an enigmatic young man who was in the employ of one of the Doctor's enemies when first introduced, Nyssa, an alien princess and Adric, who died saving the Earth: both were introduced in the Tom Baker's last season.

Doctor #6. Colin Baker. Colin Baker's portrayal of the Doctor surely wins the award for most outlandishly dressed: his multi-coloured coat would stand out in any crowd His characterisation was the least likeable. bringing out the Doctor's alien qualities. He was often crude and obnoxious to everyone, including his companions. The companion who was with Colin Baker throughout most of his run was Peri, the Doctor's first American companion who had a penchant for whining. Colin Baker never had a proper regeneration story due to the fact that he was let go from the show as part of a 'quick fix' when the show was threatened with cancellation.

Doctor #7. Sylvester McCoy. Despite having been on the show for three years, Sylvester McCoy has only had a dozen stories to his credit. His incarnation of the Doctor is a somewhat hyper character. He tends to spout off old sayings incorrectly. McCoy's most companions have been Mel and his current one Ace. Ace is a young woman who is not in the screamer mold of many earlier companions- she would rather blow the bad guys up.

Doctor #8. Paul McGann. McGann has appeared in only one story as the Doctor. That one story, however, was an American attempt at reviving Doctor Who as a big budget TV movie. The most noteworthy thing about McGann's portrayal of the Doctor is that his Doctor did get romantically involved with his female companion, something that had never occurred in any of the episodes produced in the United Kingdom.

The Doctor's adversaries also contributed to the popularity of the series. The most popular of these being the Daleks. Introduced in the second serial (The Dead Planet) the Daleks are mutated creatures who live in big rolling canisters. Their call of 'exterminate' gives some idea of their ultimate goal: domination of the universe. The Doctor in each of his incarnations has defeated the Daleks, so often that he has become their number one enemy. In the Tom Baker era the Daleks' creator Davros was introduced, he would also return to plague the Doctor. The Daleks proved so popular that two feature films were made based on the first two Dalek stories. Dr. Who and the Daleks and Daleks-Invasion Earth 2150 both starred Peter Cushing as Doctor Who. In the movies Doctor Who was an eccentric Earth scientist who had discovered the secret of the TARDIS.

Other popular villains on Doctor Who include: The Cybermen, half organic / half mechanical creatures who wish a similar fate to befall all other life forms. The Sontarans, a race of clones bent on galactic conquest. The Master an evil renegade time lord who delights in matching wits against the Doctor. The Master first appeared during the Jon Pertwee era played by Roger Delgado and came back to haunt later incarnations in the regenerated form of Anthony Ainley.

Doctor Who first appeared in the United States in the mid 1970's when 13 of the Jon Pertwee serials were placed into syndication. Appearing mostly on PBS stations, the series had limited success and further episodes were not immediately seen. In the late 1970's somebody decided to try again and the first 4 series of Tom Baker episodes were placed into US syndication. To help the American audience understand what was going on, these episodes featured character actor Howard DaSilva as the narrator explaining the finer points of the show. These episodes were also cut for broadcast on commercial stations and had scenes from the next episode included. These episodes proved successful, most of the time running on PBS stations that did not fare too well with the Pertwee episodes. Since then, all of the complete serials have been made available. Some US stations have aired Dr. Who in omnibus editions with a whole story being broadcast, without the cliffhangers, in one evening. Other stations run it five nights a week in its original cliffhanger form. In most areas each serial has been rerun several times, a far cry from the treatment the show has received on the BBC where repeats of old stories are all but non-existent.

Although Doctor Who has not been officially cancelled, its future does not look good. No new regular episodes have been produced since 1989! A continual decline in the stories (both in quality and quantity) during the 1980's may have left the BBC feeling that the show has run its course. In what looked as if it might be the final epitaph for Doctor Who, a juvenile educational series entitled: Search out Science, had the Doctor appearing with his companions Ace and K-9. This turned out not to be the Doctor's last appearance. A 30th anniversary feature length special was announced in mid 1993, for airing.

Designers for the series were Raymond Cusick, Jeremy Davies, Roderick Laing, Spencer Chapman, John Wood, Barry Newbery, Richard Hunt, Michael Young, Stuart Walker, Peter Kindred, Derek Dodd, Colin Shaw, Malcolm Middleton, Evan Hercules, Ian Watson, Paul Allen, Ray London, Roger Ford, Tim Gleeson, Colin Green, Ian Rawnsley, David Spode, Nigel Curzon, Philip Lindley, Austin Ruddy, Dick Coles, Jon Pusey, Janet Budden, Malcolm Thornton, Bernard Lloyd, Jan Spieczynski, John Anderson, Marjorie Pratt, John Anderson, John Ashbridge and Martin Collins.

Producer for the series was Verity Lambert, John Wiles, Innes Lloyd, Peter Bryant, Derrick Sherwin, Barry Letts, Philip Hinchcliffe, Graham Williams, John Nathan-Turner. Associate producer was Mervyn Pinfield. Story editors are David Whitaker, Dennis Spooner, Donald Tosh, Gerry David, Peter Bryant, Victor Pemberton, Derrick Sherwin, Terrance Dicks, Robert Holmes, Anthony Read, Douglas Adams, Christopher H. Bidmead, Eric Saward, Andrew Cartmell. Executive producers was Barry Letts.

A 15 minute sketch item with various famous guests playing the Doctor took place as part of BBC1's celebrations for its annual Red Nose Day charity appeal, this 15 minute presentation entitled Doctor Who and the Curse of the Fatal Death, was intelligently written playing on the whims of the know large Doctor Who fan base. With high ratings this sketch was a big success, it was shown on the 19th March 1999. This sketch has also been released on Video with extra footage.

Over time many adults in Britain began to watch the Doctor Who serial while at the Pub, on the way home from work, or in the case of many tradespeople, as they were waiting for the next job. BBC began to upgrade the special effects and spend considerable more time in preparation of both the sets and the actors.

Surprisingly, and despite the cheap visual effects (both in appearance and cost), Dr. Who was a fantastic success when brought over to the U.S. by Public Television. This was especially true in the 1980s when the incomparable Tom Baker brought humor and his particular version of The Doctor to the television screen. While confined to more trendy areas of the U.S. Dr. Who has today an enormous fan club despite going out of production in 1990. It holds the record today for the longest running single science fiction series on television (Star Trek could be thought as the holder of this title, but is comprised of four separate serials spanning a theme rather than a set of common characters do is disqualified).

Not satisfied to continue to show the kiddie program Dr. Who, BBC has shown a number of SCI-FI greats. Among the top would have to be BLAKES 7 a story about renegades fighting the evil forces of Earth's Federation and the vicious Servalan, Supreme Commander and later President (probably killed the original President I don't wonder).

As series of CD entitled Audio Adventures in Time and Space also featured various Doctor Who characters for audio adventures, stories included, #16 - The Search, #15 - Zygons: Homeland, #14 - The Time Travellers.

Dr. Who featured a Time Lord from another planet who traveled through time and space and encountered a variety of dangers. Dr. Who had the ability to regenerate himself (taking on new appearances), which was a convenient way to recast actors when they grew tired of the role. William Hartnell, Patrick Troughton, Jon Pertwee, Tom Baker, Peter Davison, Colin Baker and Sylvester McCoy played Dr. Who over the years. The series' cult following began in North America when the series was exported to the U.S. in the early 1970s. Despite the show's modest production values, its charm attracted guests such as Jean Marsh, Honor Blackman, Richard Todd, Michael Gough and John Cleese.

When the Borg first arrived in Star Trek: Next Generation, Doctor Who fans might have been forgiven for finding something familiar about these cybernetic enemies. They might have thought back to stories such as 'Silver Nemesis', 'Earthshock' or 'Revenge of the Cybermen' and realised that the Borg are nothing more than Cybermen who've seen 'Hellraiser 3' too many times.

The Borg come across as archetypal intergalactic colonists: they turn up in your home and make you do things their way. Although they dress up that word "conquest" and call it assimilation, conquest it remains. But for the Cybermen it has always been about survival.

One thing common to both races is the portrayal of their science's progress. The Borg have had less time to change. They really only manage a post-First Contact makeover where they lose the anaemic look and put some (body else's) life into their cheeks. The Cybermen have had a lot longer.

If you look at the production values that shaped these Cyber-amendments, you find that the difference was made by budgets, designs and what was cheap at Woolworths that week. The first time you see the Cybermen, in the 1966 episode 'The Tenth Planet', you can easily believe they used to be human. With their bandaged faces and flesh-and-bone hands, their horror is that this process has only just finished. These monsters have the macabre fascination of accident victims, and if you could smell them, they'd smell of hospitals. Unlike their successors, their form isn't about being bulletproof or gold protected. It's about survival.

Of course it's also this form that shows why the Cybermen never had a battle cry when they hefted up their Cyber-weapons: the cry would soon have become "oh dear, my hands have come off again". It's all very well using the hands as a kind of Humanity Inside badge, but this was very quickly replaced when the Cybermen met the Doctor again. Change, my dears, and not a moment too soon.

There is a curious sporting motif to the development of the Cybermen's appearance. There are the baseball boots of 'The Moonbase'. The Cybermen awakening in their Tombs sport those plastic golf balls on their joints that kids liked so much: not because they flew well, but because you got to use Dad's golf clubs with them. And in Silver Nemesis, we encounter the Cybermen First Eleven with their cricket gloves. But in the reality of the programme, these are the signs of a race that have made the most significant change of all to themselves: they have stopped the natural process of evolution and made it their own. Any changes that happen now, happen on their own terms. Survival. The universe had better watch out.

Q, Who created the sound effects for Doctor Who?

A, Brian Hodgson started off the series, Dick Mills took over in 1972 and created all the effects for the series from then onward. Both worked at the BBC Radiophonic Workshop.

The Radiophonic Workshop was set up in 1958 to create special sounds to heighten the impact of radio drama. The potential of these sounds was soon spotted by Spike Milligan, at that time writing and performing in the Goon Show. Ever heard 'Major Bloodnok's Stomach'? That sound effect was created at the Workshop and Dick Mills worked on it.

Naturally 'the Television Service' (as it was then known) wanted to use this Radio facility. 'Quatermass and the Pit' was the first TV programme to use the Workshop and by the time Doctor Who started in 1963, Producer Verity Lambert was quick to realise that the Workshop was the ideal place to go to acquire that distinctive new 'sound feel' the show needed.

By 1972 Brian Hodgson, who created such memorable sounds as the 'Tardis landing', wanted to move on to other work. Dick Mills, who had already worked on earlier episodes such as 'Tomb of the Cybermen' and 'The Power of the Daleks', was happy to take over. His first Doctor Who season kicked off in collaboration with composer Dudley Simpson. Dudley wrote the music, Dick did the special sounds. In those days they worked from the script of the episode, visiting the studios at Television Centre to see just how big (or small) the monsters were so that the sound was just right. Dick remarks that they had to be very careful about sound continuity. If a particular monster had appeared in a previous series there would be letters of complaint if the sound effects had changed in the meanwhile. One wall of Dick's studio was entirely covered by reels of tape housing every sound used in every episode from day one!

1. Writer Terry Nation wrote the story of the Daleks' origins after producer Barry Letts and script editor Terrance Dicks had rejected his original submission for the season, which they felt recycled too many plot elements from previous adventures.
2. The story re-wrote Dalek history, which had previously been explored in the 'TV Century 21' comic strips, which detailed an entirely different version of events, (something that the writer of a letter to the 'Radio Times' took great delight in pointing out!) Other versions of the story had been published in various books published during the height of Dalekmania, in the mid-sixties.
3. The story was directed by 'Doctor Who' veteran David Maloney, who had been working on the series on and off since 1964. He'd previously directed four stories, (including 'Planet of the Daleks'), and is widely regarded as one of the series' most talented directors.
4. The exterior scenes, depicting the Skaro wastelands, were first to be shot, in January 1975, at Dorking Lime Works quarry, Bletchworth, Surrey. The rocket scenes for episodes two, three and four were shot next, on film, at Ealing. The remainder of the story was taped at Television Centre, wrapping on 25th February 1975. The story was the last to be recorded for season twelve. (The season was recorded out-of-sequence: 'Revenge of the Cybermen' was shot before 'Genesis of the Daleks').
5. Maloney's gritty approach drew some criticism from the National Viewers and Listener's Association. Their President, Mary Whitehouse, cited the series as tea-time brutality for tots, and asked the Annan committee on the future of broadcasting to ensure that the series was moved to a post-watershed timeslot. A series of letters in the 'Radio Times' supported the NVLA's concerns, which were rebutted by Tom Baker and members of the production team. Nation, however, was quoted as saying that the finished story wasn't suitable for his two young children
6. 'Genesis of the Daleks' originally formed the third quarter of a plot arc in which the Doctor, Harry and Sarah were separated from the TARDIS after they arrived on a space station containing the last vestiges of humanity, in suspended animation.
7. Michael Wisher appears as Davros, one of the series' most memorable creations. Wisher had appeared in several previous stories, including notable roles in 'Carnival of Monsters' (as Kalik), and as Rex Farrell in 'Terror of the Autons'. Wisher had contributed Dalek voices to the three previous Dalek stories (and also provided Dalek voices of 'Genesis')
8. Several of the stories' actors went on to feature in long-running and popular TV series: James Garbutt (Ronson) appeared in 'When The Boat Comes In' (eventually produced by Maloney); Tom Georgeson (Kavell) featured in 'Boys From the Blackstuff', and played Harry in 'Between The Lines'. Guy Siner (Ravon) and Hilary Minster (Thal Soldier) both featured in the popular BBC sitcom 'Allo Allo'. Stephen Yardley (Sevrin) starred in 'Howard's Way' and was 'The XYY Man'. He also appeared in the 1985 story 'Vengeance on Varos', as Arak.
9. The story is a firm favourite with fans, aided, no doubt by regular exposure: The story was one of the first to be repeated, in an edited 86-minute version, on 27th December 1975. It was subsequently re-shown in two 45-minute episodes, as part of the 'Doctor Who and the Monsters' series of repeats in 1982, and was last shown, on BBC TWO, in its original episodic version, in January and February 1993. It's also been novelised, and, uniquely, turned into an LP, which was linked by narration by Tom Baker, and released by BBC Records in 1979.
10. 'Genesis of the Daleks' was originally transmitted in March and April 1975, almost a quarter of a century ago! - when it drew an average audience of 9.56 million viewers.

Doctor Who is enjoying a renaissance on terrestrial TV. It's apt that the BBC chose to begin the BBC TWO repeats with the first Pertwee episode, because this was a rebirth for the series itself, as well as for the Doctor. How radical did Spearhead from Space seem to viewers in 1969? Just how different was this new Doctor?

It may have been called Doctor Who, but the name of the show and the appearance of the TARDIS would have been about the only things recognisable about it. When people talk about the Doctor, they will often mention that he has two hearts, or that he comes from the planet Gallifrey, or that his most evil nemesis is the Master, but all these aspects of Doctor Who lore were yet to reach the screen when Pertwee started in the role.

Back then, the series was essentially just the adventures of a human-looking alien time traveller. With The War Games, the Doctor returned, for the first time on-screen, to his home world (still unnamed at that point) and it was revealed that his people were called the Time Lords. The programme had been running for six years, as had the Doctor, but finally his people caught up with him and he was put on trial. It was the end of an era, the end of Doctor Who as the audience knew it.

When Doctor Who returned six months later, it was as different to what had gone before as the 1996 Paul McGann TV Movie was to the last Sylvester McCoy story, Survival. Audiences at the time must have wondered whether they were watching the right series - the differences were numerous.

For a start, the series looked much better than it had done when Troughton played the Doctor. For the first time, Doctor Who was in colour. Even the production staff took a while to get used to this - for instance the old TARDIS console prop is used at first. The old TARDIS looked fine in the black and white episodes, but in colour it is revealed to be green! As in many programmes at that time, colour was such a novelty that it was somewhat overused, meaning the clothes and sets used now look rather garish. As well as being in colour, Spearhead was shot entirely on film (the only Doctor Who story which was), giving the whole programme a big budget feel.

The character of the Doctor was rather different to what the public had seen before. The Doctor who fell out of the TARDIS in episode one of Spearhead was taller, brasher and less approachable than his predecessor, and this was a fact that Spearhead played on to great effect. Because the end titles of The War Games had come up before the regeneration was complete, the viewer never saw the face of the new Doctor, meaning that throughout Spearhead the viewer is left wondering whether this really is the Doctor, or whether he was an imposter.

1. Some of the extras appearing as plague victims at the railway station refused to fall down, while wearing their own clothes, until they were promised dry cleaning expenses!
2. A couple of notable Doctor Who regulars appear in the story. Peter Miles makes his first appearance in the series, as Doctor Charles Lawrence. He would later appear in 'Invasion of the Dinosaurs', 'Genesis of the Daleks' and in the radio play 'Paradise of Death'. Norman Jones, who plays Major Baker, also appeared in 'The Abominable Snowmen' and as the evil court astrologer Hieronymous in 'The Masque of Mandragora'.
3. Locations used for the story include Godalming High Street (for episode one's shots of the Doctor and Liz in Bessie), Marylebone Station (for the plague scenes in episode six) and MOD-owned Hankley Common, Rushmoor, Surrey.
4. Due to ongoing strike action among scenery-shifting crews - the dispute that forced 'Spearhead From Space' to be shot entirely on location - 'Doctor Who and the Silurians' had an unusually long production schedule: rehearsals began on the 10th of November 1969, and studio recording wrapped on 26th January 1970.
5. Director Timothy Combe had worked as an assistant floor manager on several early 'Doctor Who' stories: 'The Keys of Marinus', 'The Reign of Terror' and 'Evil of the Daleks'. In 1969 he attended the BBC's Director's course, and, by the time he directed this, his first Doctor Who as director, had already tackled BBC staples like 'Z-Cars' and 'The Newcomers'.
6. Although many scripts have at one time or other during their gestation used the title 'Doctor Who and the' this story is the only one to actually feature it in the opening credits.
7. One of the extras playing a Nurse at "Wenley Hospital" (actually Milford Chest Hospital, near Godalming) in episode six was Bella Emberg, who would later gain a degree of fame as Russ Abbot's sidekick.
8. The story's distinctive incidental music, by Carey Blyton, is atypical of the Pertwee era. Almost all stories between 'The Seeds of Death' (1969) and 'The Horns of Nimon' (1980) had music composed by Dudley

Simpson. Blyton later contributed music for the 1974 story 'Death To The Daleks'.

9. The copies of 'Doctor Who and the Silurians' currently being broadcast by the BBC were created by combining 16mm black and white telerecorded film prints with the chroma signal from a domestic recording, made in America before the colour videotapes were lost.

10. 'Doctor Who and the Silurians' was first broadcast between 31st January 1970 and 14th March 1970, and achieved an average audience of 7.7 million viewers.

Comic Relief's "The Curse of Fatal Death" is the latest in a very long line of "Doctor Who" comedy sketches, proving that the series has a rich seam of humour to be mined. It wasn't always the case, though. It was a long time before "Doctor Who" cracked a smile, and laughs have generally been few and far between ever since.

It's difficult to precisely pinpoint the first occurrence of humour in the series. Looking at the first season doesn't help very much, but demonstrates that the series took itself remarkably seriously during its formative season. There are brief moments of levity - Susan twirling in the Thal cape at the end of the final episode of "The Mutants", or Ian's delight at wearing a cape given to the Doctor by Gilbert and Sullivan in "Inside The Spaceship" for example - but mostly it's played very straight. You might have expected that Terry Nation, whose background included writing a handful of mediocre episodes for comedian Tony Hancock's first TV series away from the BBC, might have injected some snappy one-liners, but the contrary is true: Nation's early scripts put our heroes in some of the most perilous situations ever seen in the show, including a wearying dose of radiation poisoning in "The Mutants" and Barbara's near rape in "The Keys of Marinus".

Towards the end of the first season Dennis Spooner, another prolific writer whose career was following a similar path to Terry Nation's, made his first contribution to the series. In fact Spooner had even worked on the same disastrous Hancock series as Nation! Spooner, though, had a natural gift for writing comedy, and saw the potential in counter-pointing "Doctor Who"'s stark drama with humour. Two good examples can be found in his very first story, "The Reign of Terror". The witty exchange between the Doctor and the Shopkeeper is arguably the first overtly comedic scene of the series. Later in the story Spooner creates a great comic character, the jailer, played very nicely by ck Cunningham.

Leaving aside a couple of bumbling characters in Louis Marks' "Planet of Giants", it was Spooner who injected more humour into the show with his script for "The Romans". Parts of the story are written like a West End farce, an impression reinforced by the great comic performance of Derek Francis as Nero. However, Spooner's scripts were still running against the prevailing tone of the series. Spooner thrust comedy to the fore when he introduced another memorable comic villain in The Time Meddler, and once again landed the series a prestigious guest star. Peter Butterworth, who has been immortalised in several Carry On films, played the Monk, a fellow renegade Time Lord, with a light touch that virtually guaranteed his return.

Big Finish release "The Sirens of Time", the first of its new "Doctor Who" audio adventures this month. Readers of "Doctor Who Magazine" already have some idea of what to expect, as their June issue featured a cover-mounted CD which featured extracts from the new story, as well as archive clips of previous audio adventures.

"Doctor Who" has a long-established history in the audio realm. The first audio adventure was a narrated version of the last episode of "The Chase", released as a 7" EP record by Century 21 in the mid-sixties. Other TV stories have been given similar treatment over the years, most notably a 1979 LP adaptation of "Genesis of the Daleks", narrated by Tom Baker. Victor Pemberton's "The Pescatons" is one of the few productions written especially as an audio adventure. Using a small cast headed by Tom Baker and Elisabeth Sladen, the story seems to have been available on some format or other since 1976, when it was originally released. It was even turned into a Target novel, once the supply of new TV stories had dried up!

"The Sirens of Time" features three Doctors, bringing together Peter Davison, Colin Baker and Sylvester McCoy in a story that pits three incarnations of the Doctor against the same enemy. Each of the first three episodes takes place in a different location, including a World War I German U-Boat, a distant alien swamp planet and the Time Lords' home planet Gallifrey. The story is written and directed by Nick Briggs, who also appears as The Temperon. Interestingly, this story does not feature any companions for the Doctor, following a precedent set by Robert Holmes' classic 1976 story "The Deadly Assassin".

September will see the release of "Phantasmagoria", written by Mark Gatiss, author of several "Doctor Who" novels, and one quarter of The League of Gentlemen. (The versatile Mr Gatiss also features in a couple of roles in "The Sirens of Time", and plays Jeake in "Phantasmagoria"). Set during Peter Davison's last season the takes place in seventeenth century London, and involves the Doctor and Turlough (Mark Strickson, reprising the role he created in "Planet of Fire") in the mysterious disappearance of members of the Diablo Club. The cast includes one of Britain's finest character actors, David Ryall as Sir Nikolas Valentine, and David Walliams, one half of the comedy duo Mash and Peas.

The third Big Finish release, due in November, will be "Sound Judgment" (formerly known as "The Sound of Fear"), a story featuring Colin Baker and Nicola Bryant, as Peri. Directed by Gary Russell, and written by Justin Richards, the story finds the Doctor and Peri in the far future, in the Museum of Aural Antiquities, just as a pair of mercenaries have broken into the museum to alter some of the recordings stored there. When a series of murders begins the authorities have two very convenient scapegoats... a Time Lord and his companion...

DOCTOR WHO (2005)

Rose Tyler, a young shop assistant in a London department store, lives a humdrum and profoundly average life - until the night the shop dummies where she works wake up and try to kill her. Her life is saved by a strange man who only calls himself The Doctor, and intrigued by him, she finds herself thrown headlong into a hectic battle to stop an alien presence from invading Earth and annihilating the human race. She comes to learn that her new friend is even stranger than she thought - in fact, the Doctor's an alien adventurer called a 'Time Lord', seemingly the last of his race, who travels through time and space in his TARDIS battling evil where he finds it. And if she travels with him, she'll find herself witnessing the heat-death of the Earth five billion years in the future, meeting Charles Dickens in the past, and encountering lifeforms and invaders stranger than she'd ever thought possible. Only one thing is certain - it'll be the ride of a lifetime.

Some 16 years after the original Doctor Who show ended in BBC Wales decided to bring the show back. In the years that Doctor Who has been off the air, there has been a notable decline in the number of science fiction shows in the English language. Many attempts had been made to try to bring the show back before but none had been successful.

This included a made for TV film, which was largely unsuccessful due to it being pitched at both an American audience and a UK audience, but failing to capture either. The BBC (UK Broadcaster) helped the show initially with a huge publicity campaign to try to get as much interest as possible into the series, and this did initially work, with a large audience watching the first episode. However the viewing figure declined after that.

The first season could be regarded as a general success however, despite a number of poorly constructed and some would say "childish" episodes.

The 10th Doctor (or 11th if you count the 1960s films), was played by Christopher Eccleston, a likable character and the first "Northern" England doctor.

A short 5 minute episode was presented as part of the Children in Need 2005 charity event in the UK, which first showed the new doctor proper, played by David Tennant (the 11th Doctor, or 12th if you count the 1960s).

Then on Christmas Day 2005, "The Christmas Invasion" was an hour long episode introducing the new doctor, except the episode was mainly about Rose, with the doctor being in bed, ill from his latest regeneration. The episode was shortly followed by an interactive storyline, which people could follow using digital television, entitled Attack of the Graske.

When the second season started the new doctor played by David Tennant was firmly in place, and Rose Taylor (Billy Piper) continued in her role as the doctor's companion. The second series lost its "edge" when it came to producing the original storylines that were made for the first series. This may have been caused by the series creator Russell T. Davies also working on his Sci-Fi spin-off series TORCHWOOD (see separate entry for details). At the end of the second series Billy Piper who played Rose Taylor confirmed that she would not appear in the then confirmed third season of the show.

Following on from the previous years "The Christmas Invasion", a 2006 special was also broadcast on Christmas Day 2006 entitled "The Runaway Bride".

With every episode of this new Doctor Who series there was also a "making of" special, that looked behind the scenes at that week's particular episode, this aired on BBC3, just after the first original showing episode on BBC1. It normally consisted of behind the scene work, interviews with crew and cast and sometimes a look back at the history of Doctor Who's previous series.

"Voyage of the Damned" - 2007 Christmas Special.

It is 71 minutes long and was broadcast on 25 December 2007, being the third Christmas special since the show's 2005 revival. The episode introduces a new variation on the opening and closing Doctor Who theme tune and companion Astrid Peth and is dedicated to the memory of the founding producer of Doctor Who, Verity Lambert.

This story continues from the final scene of "Last of the Time Lords" and "Time Crash", in which a luxury space cruiser called the Titanic breaches the walls of the TARDIS console room. The Doctor teams up with Titanic waitress Astrid Peth in order to fend off a new enemy called the Host.

On its original airdate, "Voyage of the Damned" attracted 13.8 million viewers at its peak, with an overnight rating of 12.2 million viewers earning the episode 50% of the total television audience. It was the second most watched program of Christmas Day, beaten only by the immediately following episode of EastEnders. These were the highest viewing figures for Doctor Who since 1979's City of Death.

The episode is notable also for guest starring Kylie Minogue, the pop princess played Astrid Perth, a main trying to make money on the Titanic spaceship!

TOTALLY DOCTOR WHO

DOCTOR WHO CONFIDENTIAL

1 - 1 ROSE

It's another ordinary day for London teenager Rose Tyler (Billie Piper), who spends a typical shift at her job at Henrik's department store. When an errand sends her to the basement, however, she discovers that the electrician, Wilson, is dead, and a collection of mannequins stored in an anteroom somehow comes alive and attacks her. She is rescued by a stranger calling himself the Doctor, who escorts her out of the building before returning inside -- and blowing up the store. The Doctor disappears, leaving Rose to wonder what unspeakable evil could have manifested itself in the animated plastic dummies... one of whose arms she still carries with her.

Later in her flat, while her mother Jackie (Camille Coduri) makes hasty plans to take advantage of her daughter's misfortune financially, Rose's boyfriend Mickey (Noel Clarke) futilely attempts to take her to the pub, and then disposes of the arm. The next morning, Rose spies the Doctor investigating the cat-flap into the apartment; he's tracking a signal, which he fails to adequately explain until the plastic arm, which somehow crawled out of the rubbish bin and came back to the flat, suddenly takes on a life of its own and attempts to kill them both. The Doctor neutralizes the signal coming to the mannequin arm and Rose follows him out to the car park, learning that the Doctor is somehow here to stop a war. He takes leave of her, disappearing in a strange blue box...

Curious about this mysterious Doctor that has now entered her life twice, Rose investigates on the Internet, discovering the website of a man named Clive (Mark Benton). She and Mickey drive to his neighborhood, and Rose meets the conspiracy theorist who has evidence that the title "Doctor" is somehow an honorific that has been passed down through the ages, possibly father to son, and that the image of this man she's met has popped up in images ranging from the Kennedy assassination to the sailing of the Titanic. Meanwhile, outside, a neighbor's wheelie bin starts acting strangely, prompting Mickey to investigate... but soon, the rubbish bin takes on a life of its own and devours him, replacing him with a duplicate with strange hair and stranger behavior.

Later at a restaurant, the duplicate starts questioning an oblivious Rose about the Doctor's plans. The two are found by the Doctor, as the Mickey doppelganger starts tearing up the place attempting to attack them. The Doctor takes Rose outside where the TARDIS awaits, and after she panics, Rose enters the TARDIS, incredulous about its internal size and the fact that the Doctor is really an alien. The TARDIS dematerializes, reappearing on the bank of the Thames. The Doctor tells her that Mickey's duplicate is controlled by the Nestene Consciousness, a powerful alien entity interested in the Earth because of the toxins in the atmosphere, and because it's somehow lost its own planet in a massive war. However, in order to take control of Earth it will have to control its animated plastic warriors through the use of a massive transmitter... which Rose deduces is the London Eye wheel. The Doctor has his own recourse -- a vial of a material he calls anti-plastic -- but first, he wants to reason with the Consciousness.

Below the Eye, the Doctor approaches the Nestene Consciousness, an animated vat of living plastic, which chastises him for the vial of anti-plastic and attacks the Doctor because it recognizes the TARDIS. The Consciousness transmits the activation signal through the London Eye, bringing to life thousands of mannequins in London who begin attacking people in public places, including killing Clive in a shopping mall and attacking his family and Rose's mother. Mickey, who was kept alive to keep the doppelganger's shape cohesive, begs Rose to take him away and leave the Doctor behind. But Rose, realizing she can't abandon the Doctor, comes to his rescue by plunging the two mannequin guards into the vat along with the anti-plastic, destroying the Nestene Consciousness and ending the signal that animates the plastic dummies.

Later, the TARDIS drops off Rose and a cowering Mickey in the alley near her flat. The Doctor, obviously taken by his bright new friend, invites Rose to join him, offering her travel anywhere in the universe. She turns him down, albeit hesitantly, needing to take care of her mother and Mickey. But when the Doctor hastily returns again, wondering if he'd mentioned the TARDIS travels in time as well, Rose smiles, politely kisses Mickey on the cheek and heads for the TARDIS door, toward new adventures...

1 - 2 THE END OF THE WORLD

Having gained a new traveling companion, the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) gives his new friend Rose (Billie Piper) the option of the future or the past. Setting out for the future, they make a few brief stops before settling on a time near the year five billion.

The TARDIS arrives on Platform One, a sprawling observation platform that travels between stars run by a vast corporation hosting glimpses of 'artistic' events. The Doctor shows Rose her homeworld; Earth is abandoned, run by the National Trust, while today is the day that the planet will be destroyed forever. They are greeted by the Steward (Simon Day), who operates the platform, but a quick plan by the Doctor (using 'psychic paper' as his credentials) allows them to stay as honored guests. The Steward presents the reception, which includes such dignitaries as representatives of the Forest of Cheem, a race of tree-people led by Jabe (Yasmin Bannerman); the Moxx of Balhoon (Jimmy Vee), a diminutive blue solicitor; hooded aliens called the Adherents of the Repeated Meme; the Face of Boe, a glass-encased head; and Lady Cassandra O'Brien, a hideously mutilated survivor of the human race who exists only as a layer of skin with a brain tank.

While the Doctor and Jabe exchange gifts and platitudes, and the assembled guests mingle, Rose panics, not used to the alien cultures she faces. While wandering the station, Rose meets Raffalo (Beccy Armory), a servitor of the station who is repairing the temperature controls. Unfortunately, Raffalo meets an untimely end as she is the first to discover a strange brand of metallic spiders who have infested the ventilation system. Meanwhile, the spiders begin popping out of metallic eggs given to guests as gifts of the Repeated Meme, unknowingly getting into the walls and electronic systems of the station. After the Doctor has his TARDIS parked (and gets a parking ticket!), he checks up on Rose, who doesn't understand why he won't tell her more about who he is or where he comes from. In order to help her deal with the fact that the Earth is coming to an end, the Doctor does something to her mobile phone, allowing her to talk to her mother Jackie (Camille Coduri) through aeons of time separation... an action which eases Rose's mind and allows her to see the Doctor's point of view.

The Steward discovers the presence of the spiders, but he's too late: one of them lowers the sun shields that exposes him to searing temperatures, killing him, and starts tampering with the gravity shields that keep the station free from harm. Rose takes a disliking to Cassandra while the Doctor and Jabe explore the machinery ducts attempting to find out why the gravity shields are collapsing; it is there that Jabe confronts him with the knowledge that she knows who and what he is, and offers her consolation for his suffering. Rose is knocked unconscious by the Repeated Meme and placed in an observation room; later, the sun shields start to fail in there. The Doctor is barely able to rescue Rose before the sun shields fail completely and kill her. Unfortunately, the damage is done; the gravity shields have failed, and after discovering that the Repeated Meme are no more than androids, the Doctor discovers the true culprit behind the problem: Lady Cassandra, who owns controlling shares of the companies the dignitaries on Platform One represent, and will stand to make a fortune to continue her surgical experiments on herself.

Cassandra escapes, the shields collapse, and the Doctor and Jabe scramble to the engine room to repair them. Unfortunately, the rising temperatures from the sun are too much for Jabe to bear, as she explodes into flames; however, the Doctor is able to get to the switch in time to raise the shields again as the sun explodes and Earth is destroyed in the explosion. The Doctor is able to use Cassandra's teleport technology to bring her back to the station, but not her assistants, so the lack of proper moisturizing makes her wither and snap like a sheet of paper.

Later, the Doctor explains his true identity: he's a Time Lord, and his homeworld is gone, destroyed in a war -- while Rose is the last human here in this era, he is the last of his kind, forever. The Doctor takes her home, back to London in her own time, where he shows her how everything here is transitory, and should be appreciated because one day it won't be here anymore. Her faith restored, Rose decides to stay with the Doctor after all, and the two set off for a snack before their next adventure.

1 - 3 THE UNQUIET DEAD

Cardiff, December 24, 1869. At the Sneed and Company undertakers, a private viewing of the body of Mrs. Peace (Jennifer Hill), grandmother of a man named Redpath (Huw Rhys), goes awry when Peace's body is suddenly reanimated, glowing with ghostly light, killing Redpath and heading out into the darkness.

Having shown Rose (Billie Piper) the far future, the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) now takes her back into the past, heading for Naples in 1860 on a whim. The TARDIS arrives in Cardiff on Christmas Eve, 1869, instead, and the Doctor gives Rose instructions on how to dress in period costume. Meanwhile, at a local theatre, famed author Charles Dickens (Simon Callow) prepares to give a dramatic reading, lamenting on the situations that have recently befallen him, here, far away from his family. Unknown to him, the body of Mrs. Peace, infected with the glowing gaseous light, is in the audience, while outside, Gabriel Sneed (Alan David), the proprietor of the undertaking firm, attempts to locate him with the help of his servant girl, Gwyneth (Eve Myles), who seems to possess a second sight that would enable her to find them. In the middle of Dickens' reading, Mrs. Peace suddenly reanimates again, releasing ghosts into the theatre, causing a mass panic that attracts the Doctor and Rose. However, when they arrive, the ghosts are already unleashed, and fly into the chandeliers, fed by gas jets. Rose discovers that Sneed and Gwyneth are attempting to take away Mrs. Peace's body, but before she can alert the Doctor, Sneed chloroforms her and they put her into the hearse.

The Doctor heads off in pursuit of Rose, taking Dickens' cab as the writer protests. Once inside, after the Doctor realizes whose presence he is in and attempts to make amends by showing his massive interest in Dickens' books, the writer suddenly takes the spirit of adventure, bidding his driver to pursue the hearse. They arrive at Sneed and Company, where Gwyneth attempts to stop them from entering. But Rose, who is now awake and has suddenly been confronted by the reanimated bodies of both Mrs. Peace and Mr. Redpath, screams to get out of the room, allowing the Doctor and Dickens to enter and rescue her. The bodies are once again left behind by the gas creatures, who enter the pipes as the Doctor realizes that he is dealing with an alien intelligence. Sneed and Gwyneth later apologize, but they claim they weren't certain what to do; for years, the building has been haunted by these creatures, which are somehow tied to Gwyneth. Dickens won't believe a word of it, looking for hidden wires, something, anything to prove that this is trickery and everything he has believed in is still true. Gwyneth later speaks to Rose, using her telepathy to see into Rose's mind, and the strange city of metal boxes (cars) and flying metal birds (airplanes) that she comes from, as well as a darkness that she cannot explain.

The Doctor decides to hold a seance, as he realizes that Gwyneth can be his medium; she's been having these visions since she was five years of age, and therefore is likely tied to these creatures telepathically. Their leader comes forward, a glowing alien entity that calls their race the Gelth, a race that was decimated by the "Time Wars" and exists only in a parallel reality, connected to this one by a rift that centers on this house. The Gelth only want to reclaim the dead bodies here on Earth to exist in physical form, their "last hope" for a normal existence; the bodies' decomposition provides the necessary gas emissions that allow the Gelth to achieve corporeality. Rose protests, possession of dead bodies being unthinkable to her, not to mention disrespectful... but the Doctor tells her to adjust to a new reality. Dickens realizes that, in fact, these are alien creatures, and has a revelation. Gwyneth agrees to help by opening the rift, which is located in an archway in the morgue. Unfortunately, after she allows the Gelth to use her as a conduit, their true intentions are made known: they are legion, and are in fact going to kill every human being on Earth in order to inhabit this planet. They begin with Sneed, who dies and is then reanimated as several dead bodies come after the Doctor and Rose. Dickens flees, but has a change of heart when he sees the Gelth ghosts, now outside the building, attracted by the gas lanterns; he goes back into the house and turns on all the gas pipes, saturating the air with gas and therefore pulling the Gelth spirits out into the air. Gwyneth realizes what she needs to do to close the conduit and stop the Gelth from their invasion plans... and after the Doctor, Rose and Dickens escape, she lights a match, blowing up the Sneed and Company building and taking herself -- the Gelth's only hope to cross over to this world -- with it. Rose realizes that this servant girl saved the world, and no one will ever know.

Dickens accompanies the Doctor and Rose back to the TARDIS; the writer is once again in high spirits, wishing to return to London to reconcile with his family and begin writing again, basing his next book about these experiences. The Doctor and Rose bid him farewell as the TARDIS dematerializes, the Doctor noting to Rose that, sadly, Dickens will not last but another year, and his tales will come to an end without the world ever finding out about the invasion by the ghosts of Cardiff... but for today, Charles Dickens is a happy man, as he strolls down a Cardiff street on Christmas Eve. "God bless us," he says, "every one."

1 - 4 ALIENS IN LONDON

The TARDIS returns Rose Tyler home to her own time, but Rose is startled to discover that, instead of the twelve hours the Doctor thought she was gone, it's been twelve months, and Rose was listed as a missing person. Jackie Tyler (Camille Coduri) blames the Doctor for her daughter's wanderlust, but Rose is unable to tell her mum what's happened to her. Later, as Rose muses that she's the only person on Earth who knows what she knows, an alien spacecraft suddenly flies overhead, crashes through Big Ben and lands in the Thames... mankind's first public encounter with aliens. Or is it? The Doctor and Rose can't get close to the action, so they take Rose's suggestion and watch it on BBC Television, where they keep up to date with news reports that one body has been taken from the wreckage by the military to the local Albion Hospital.

Inside the hospital, military commander General Asquith (Rupert Vansittart) is shown the alien body by pathologist Dr. Sato (Naoko Mori). At 10 Downing Street, Joseph Green (David Verrey), a low-level MP, has been appointed as the acting Prime Minister, because the current Prime Minister has disappeared. Another MP, Harriet Jones (Penelope Wilton) is waiting for a meeting with the PM, but is told by junior secretary Indra Ganesh (Navin Chowdhry) that more important things are happening now. Indra escorts Green to a meeting, where Green is to meet with Margaret Blaine (Annette Badland) of MI5 and transport liaison Oliver Charles (Eric Potts)... but inside, Green, Blaine and Charles seem to know each other and laugh, especially since they now possess the emergency protocols dealing with alien invasions.

While Rose deals with her family, the Doctor leaves temporarily, promising he won't abandon her and giving her a TARDIS key. The Doctor heads back to the TARDIS while the revelry over the alien landing occurs, but he's spied by Mickey (Noel Clarke), Rose's boyfriend, and follows him. But the TARDIS departs before Mickey can get to the Doctor. Mickey then comes to Rose's flat, where she learns that he was questioned by the police over the past year and made by Jackie to be a suspicious character, perhaps even her murderer.

At Albion Hospital, Dr. Sato is attacked by the strange creature who is currently in one of the morgue shelves. The TARDIS arrives in the hospital, and the Doctor finds Sato on the floor. Confronted by military soldiers, the Doctor begins giving them orders to secure the facility, and then discovers the creature that attacked Sato... a giant pig, which runs down the hallway before one of the guards shoots it down in fear. The Doctor and Sato discover that the pig has been technologically augmented and placed in the ship; it's not an alien, but in fact an ordinary pig. Could this alien landing be some sort of a massive joke?

Harriet Jones enters the meeting room at 10 Downing and sees the emergency protocols about the alien landing. She hides in a nearby closet, however, when Green, Blaine and Charles return to the room, having some severe gas control issues as they are confronted by General Asquith. In fact, the gas exchange is due to the fact that the three are not who they appear... as they reveal that their skins are simply external facades, and as Asquith discovers their alien identity -- the last discovery he will ever make. Harriet watches as one of them takes over Asquith's body, disposing of the Oliver shell.

The TARDIS returns to Rose's neighborhood, but Mickey and Jackie follow her inside. Jackie panics, and later calls an emergency number broadcast on the television for anyone who believes they've seen an alien. The words "Doctor" and "TARDIS" in her phone call sets off warning flags, as Indra Ganesh receives a "Code 9" indicating the presence of the Doctor on Earth. Meanwhile, the Doctor discovers that the alien spacecraft didn't follow a straight trajectory toward Earth, but in fact an elliptical course, having taken off from Earth, sent into space and then crash landing in London; he also discovers that the United Nations Intelligence Taskforce (UNIT) has been called in to advise. The Doctor, Rose and Mickey leave the TARDIS, where Mickey runs for cover and the Doctor and Rose are immediately taken into custody by the military.

At 10 Downing, the Doctor and Rose meet Harriet and Indra; while the latter takes the Doctor to the meeting with the UNIT representatives, Harriet confides in Rose about what she's seen, including the fake Oliver Charles skin the alien wore. Back at home, a police commissioner (Steve Speirs) interviews Jackie... but he also has some gas-related issues. Indra, Harriet and Rose discover the body of the Prime Minister in a closet in the meeting room and are suddenly discovered by Margaret Blaine. The alien inside Blaine reveals itself and chokes Indra, and the police commissioner attacks Jackie. Back at 10 Downing, Green uses a device which activates the electrical charges inside the Doctor and UNIT's ID badges, immobilizing them, while he and the alien inside Asquith reveal themselves... they are Slitheen, and have come to take over the planet Earth.

1 - 5 WORLD WAR THREE

Caught by the Slitheen at 10 Downing Street, the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) manages to break free from the electrocution trap, using his ID card against his Slitheen captors by sabotaging their compression mechanisms. The feedback also allows Jackie (Camille Coduri) to escape as Mickey (Noel Clarke) breaks into her flat to save her, while Rose (Billie Piper) grabs Harriet Jones (Penelope Wilton) and escapes the Cabinet chambers, leaving Indra's dead body behind. The Doctor brings the Prime Minister's soldiers into the audience room, but the Slitheen has managed to climb back into the body suit of General Asquith (Rupert Vansittart) and he and Green (David Verrey) turn the tables on the Doctor.

Several Slitheen pursue Rose and Harriet through the halls of 10 Downing, while the Doctor narrowly escapes while backing into a lift. On the upper floors, Rose, Harriet and the Doctor are reunited, escaping their pursuers to the Cabinet room, which is protected with a reinforced steel frame designed to withstand bombardment. They lock themselves in the Cabinet room, after discovering that the Slitheen – their family name, not their race – are scavengers, come to Earth to blow it up and sell off the radioactive debris to high bidders for fuel.

More members of the government arrive – all Slitheen, the rest of the family, save one... the one occupying Strickland's (Steve Spiers) body suit, pursuing Jackie and Mickey. They contact the Doctor on Rose's altered mobile phone, but are attacked by Strickland. Harriet helps the Doctor pinpoint the homeworld of the Slitheen through the calcium gas emissions they exude, allowing Jackie and Mickey to escape into his kitchen and throw vinegar at Strickland, which causes the Slitheen to explode.

Joseph Green calls a press conference to request that the United Nations release launch codes to the UK for weapons of mass destruction to launch at the 'alien threat.' While the UN considers the situation, Green, Asquith and Margaret Blaine (Annette Badland) call their brethren together to escape to their private ship – the weapons will be turned back on the planet to destroy it. The Doctor realizes there is only one way out of this, but it will endanger Rose's life, something Jackie protests until Harriet, realising she is the sole ranking member of the British government, makes the decision for him to act. The Doctor has Mickey use his secret connections into the UNIT website to activate a defensive missile, aiming it toward 10 Downing. The soldiers escape, while the Slitheen, awaiting their departure in the Prime Minister's office, are hit with the missile, which destroys 10 Downing... however, the Doctor, Rose and Harriet, deep within the reinforced Cabinet bunker, escape unharmed. As Harriet goes off to calm the press, the Doctor finally remembers why he knows her name: she will later become a three-term Prime Minister and the architect of Britain's golden age.

Jackie begins to accept that Rose is going to leave again, so she invites the Doctor over for dinner, but the Doctor refuses... he doesn't want to establish ties here. He returns to their neighborhood, where he gives Mickey a CD which will launch a virus to destroy any trace of the Doctor's existence remaining from Clive's website and other sources; he also offers him a place in the TARDIS, realizing Mickey's not the idiot he'd thought he was. While Mickey refuses politely, needing to stay behind and look after Jackie – and unable to cope with the danger – Rose returns to the TARDIS with her belongings, this time not for just temporary passage, but as a permanent addition to the crew.

1 - 6 DALEK

The TARDIS materialises in a dark warehouse in 2012, many storeys below the surface of Utah near Salt Lake City, in what appears to be a museum of alien artifacts... including a Cybermen head and a Slitheen arm. The Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) touches one of the cases which sets off the alarm, and soon he and Rose (Billie Piper) are surrounded by guards who take them prisoner.

The facility they are in is owned by Geocomtex, a technology company owned by the wealthy and powerful Henry van Statten (Corey Johnson), who arrives in a helicopter at the complex and meets its manager, Diana Goddard (Anna Louise Plowman) and a brainy science genius who examines the alien technology, Adam (Bruno Langley). The Doctor and Rose meet van Statten, who remains unimpressed with the Doctor's seemingly endless knowledge of alien technology. But van Statten realises the Doctor may have some use to him, as he puts him into a cell with Geocomtex's one live alien specimen... what he calls a "metaltron," but what the Doctor soon realises is a Dalek. A Dalek that should not exist.

The Doctor informs the Dalek of recent history, where at the end of a massive Time war, the Daleks and the Time Lords fought and destroyed each other; both he and the Dalek are the last of their kind. The idea infuriates the Doctor and changes the Dalek's perception, but the Doctor soon attempts to electrocute the Dalek. Van Statten stops him, and strings him up to interrogate him, scanning the Doctor and recognizing he's an alien. Rose, meanwhile, gets to know Adam, who does much of the research at the base and years to go to the stars, but soon persuades him to let her see the captive Dalek. Rose meets it, and feels pity for it... but when she touches the Dalek, it samples her DNA, allowing it to recharge itself and escape. Suddenly, the Dalek is loose and the base is under full alert; it kills the security officer, Bywater (John Schwab) and his entire squadron, and heads toward the main complex.

Adam and Rose flee into the stairwell, while the Dalek kills a soldier, De Maggio (Jana Carpenter), who tries to stop it. Up on the surface, van Statten, Goddard and the Doctor attempt to find safe passage out of the underground for Adam and Rose. The two meet up with another security contingent, but the Dalek outwits its commander and the team when it activates the fire safety sprinklers and then electrocutes everyone through the water. Adam and Rose flee upward as the Dalek levitates to follow them; Adam makes it to safety, but before Rose is able to get through the bulkhead, the Doctor is forced to close it. The Dalek takes her prisoner, but for some reason doesn't kill her.

The Dalek tries to use Rose as leverage; it almost attacks van Statten and Diana but then stops, and takes Rose to the top floor, where it appears it will attempt to escape. However, the Dalek is transfixed by the sunlight shining on it through the roof; Rose's DNA has not only reactivated it, but begun to change it completely. The Doctor arrives with a weapon Adam helped him find, but Rose pleads for the Dalek, who has opened its casing and allowed the light to penetrate the mutated creature inside. The Doctor tries to stop his own instincts, but the Dalek pleads with Rose for one last order - to kill itself. Rose gives in, and the Dalek commits suicide.

As van Statten prepares to leave, Goddard ambushes him, having him escorted away to have his brain wiped clean of memories in punishment for all the death he's caused; she'll have the entire base filled with concrete and destroyed. The Doctor and Rose return to the museum to reenter the TARDIS, but Rose has dragged Adam along, asking the Doctor if he can travel with them to see the stars he's always imagined. The Doctor protests, but Adam enters the TARDIS before it departs for another adventure, now with a party of three aboard...

1 - 7 THE LONG GAME

The TARDIS arrives in the far future on Satellite Five, an orbital broadcasting platform orbiting Earth in the year 200,000, so that the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) can show Rose (Billie Piper) and his new assistant Adam (Bruno Langley) the wonders of the planet at the height of the fourth Earth Empire. The Doctor, however, realises that something is terribly wrong with the technology of this time period, with which he is very familiar, and so he sets out to question the first two people he finds, two journalists named Cathica (Christine Adams) and Suki (Anna Maxwell-Martin). Using his psychic paper as his credentials, the Doctor is mistaken as a management employee testing the two, who tell him that Satellite Five controls all of the news broadcasts to the human race. The two take Adam, Rose and the Doctor to a network link room, a spartan space where six journalists sit in a circle while the seventh accesses a compressed data stream beamed directly into a linking apparatus installed upon their head -- in essence, correlating and distributing all of the data known to mankind. However, a sudden spike breaks their link while Suki receives word that she's been promoted to "floor 500," the top level of Satellite Five, considered a great honor.

Suki goes to Floor 500, where she runs into trouble when she discovers the level is nearly frozen and the only sign of life is a strange man called the Editor (Simon Pegg), who runs the satellite along with a pack of corpses reanimated through manipulation of their implanted data chips. The Editor tells Suki she was promoted because he's discovered she really isn't a journalist; she's a freedom fighter from Earth attempting to get to the bottom of Satellite Five's true nature. However, before Suki is able to kill him with a weapon she's smuggled aboard, she is confronted by the Editor's 'boss,' as she looks up into the rafters and screams...

Adam feigns exhaustion from being overwhelmed by the culture shock, while the Doctor and Rose set off with Cathica to do some investigating. Adam discovers that he can't access the computers here - after attempting to gain some information about this future and transmit it back in time to his parents' answering machine while using Rose's modified mobile phone - and goes to the medical floor. There, a nurse (Tamsin Greig) tells him about the data implant that he can have put in. Adam decides to get the implant, so he can access the information and again call his home. Meanwhile, the Doctor and Rose access Floor 500 as a frightened Cathica follows them. The Doctor and Rose are captured by the Editor and his undead henchmen, which now includes a brain-dead Suki, and are confronted with the truth: Satellite Five is the home of the Mighty Jagrafess of the Holy Hadrojassic Maxarodenfoe, a massive alien creature that sits in the space above the Editor's control room, guiding Earth along its predetermined path through the manipulation of broadcast media. The Editor demands to know who the Doctor and Rose are, as they don't show up on any census reports... but suddenly the Editor becomes aware that the Doctor is a Time Lord and that they travel in a TARDIS, and shows them how he knows: Adam is now in the data link chair, and everything within his mind has been transferred into the network, including the Doctor's identity.

Cathica discovers a forgotten data link area nearly frozen over outside the Editor's control room, and gets into the chair. As the Doctor and Rose are about to be devoured by the Jagrafess, Cathica uses her link to reverse the temperature controls, forcing the heat to spike in the control room and injuring the enormous creature. The Editor attempts to escape, but one of his undead lackeys traps him, while the Doctor, Rose and Cathica barely escape Floor 500 before the Jagrafess is pulverized. The TARDIS crew departs Satellite Five, leaving the cleanup in Cathica's capable hands. The TARDIS later materialises in Adam's parents' home, where the Doctor uses his sonic screwdriver to destroy the answering machine, and the data about the future that Adam left there. Adam asks the Doctor to take him back into the TARDIS, as he's got the data terminal in his forehead and can't stay like this forever, but the Doctor leaves him that way, noting that Adam will now have to stay silent in order to not attract any attention to himself... and that he only travels with the best, and Adam isn't it. As the TARDIS departs, Adam's mum comes home, but soon realizes something strange has happened to her son...

1 - 8 FATHER'S DAY

Rose (Billie Piper) wants to see the day that her father died, as she never got to meet him, and asks the Doctor to take her there. The Doctor grudgingly agrees, and lands in London on November 7, 1987, as Rose and the Doctor approach the street corner where Peter Allan Tyler (Shaun Dingwall) is getting out of his car, only to be struck by a passing motorist and never knew what hit him. Rose wants to see it again, and the Doctor allows her one more glimpse as he materializes the TARDIS again in a new location and the two see their earlier selves watching. But this time, Rose makes a decision, and heads out into the street to knock her father out of the way. Pete is now alive, and takes Rose and the Doctor back home with him, somehow wondering why he feels he knows this strange girl.

The Doctor is extremely cross with Rose, wondering if somehow the fabric of time might be in jeopardy. Elsewhere in the city, strange things begin to happen; people suddenly start vanishing for no apparent reason, including at a local playground where a young boy, Mickey Smith, is rocking on the swings. While the Doctor heads back to the TARDIS, Pete takes Rose with him to a wedding at a local church that he will be attending. Once there, Rose meets Jackie (Camille Coduri), a younger version of her mother, who wonders if this is the latest girl Pete has latched onto. In fact, Pete and Jackie are in the middle of severe marital problems that are about to lead them to divorce.

At the TARDIS, the Doctor discovers that the police box is a hollow frame, while something terrifying watches him from above. The Doctor arrives at the church just as strange alien creatures begin materializing and attacking the bridegroom's father and the vicar, while the Doctor has everyone go inside and bar the doors. The alien beings are Reapers, parasites that act like antibodies, destroying anything and everything that exists in wounded time until all trace of any paradox is destroyed. The Reapers are attacking things in reverse sequence; first, the most recent additions to the planet, its people, and then other things that are older, until it destroys the entire world. London, and in fact all of planet Earth, is now an empty shell, and the only survivors are locked in this church while the Reapers fly about the building.

Inside, Pete surmises the truth about this young girl he's met, and has a day of reckoning as she reveals she saved him because he was supposed to die today. The Doctor notices his TARDIS key is glowing, indicating that somehow, somewhere, the TARDIS still exists, and he begins to use the key to call it back. However, when Rose touches the baby version of herself, it allows the Reapers to break into the church -- and destroy the Doctor! Their hope gone, Pete, Rose and Jackie -- who now also knows who this girl is -- flee with the last survivors. Barricading themselves in, Pete realizes there is only one thing he can do, as he spies the same car again and again, the one that was supposed to have hit him in the first place, circling the church but disappearing and reappearing at random. Pete leaves the church, runs outside... and allows the car to strike him. As he dies in Rose's arms on the pavement, the Doctor and the other people reappear and the Reapers vanish -- time has been cleansed and all trace of the paradox is gone. As the Doctor and Rose leave, we discover that history has resumed its normal course, except on a slightly different tangent... Pete died, but gave his life heroically so that others, including his daughter, might live.

1 - 9 THE EMPTY CHILD

The TARDIS is following a cylindrical-shaped object through the Time Vortex; the Doctor is pursuing it because it appears to be an emergency craft, and is heading toward Earth. The ship loses it in the void, but the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) materializes the ship in London, circa 1941, at the height of the Blitz.

While the Doctor goes after the mysterious craft, Rose (Billie Piper) is enticed by the cries of a young boy asking for his mummy. She follows the voice and attempts to climb a rope to get up to the top of a building; however, the rope is attached to a barrage balloon, and soon Rose finds herself floating over London. She accidentally releases the rope, but during her plummet to the ground she caught in a tractor beam from an invisible spaceship owned by Captain Jack Harkness (John Barrowman), a former Time Agent from the far future... and now a mercenary who believes he's met up with his contact for the sale of the century.

The Doctor also hears the mysterious cries of the young boy, but during an air raid, he meets Nancy (Florence Hoath), a young woman who seems to know more than she should. Nancy is a philanthropist for local orphaned children; during air raids, she enters homes to steal food. During one of her meals, the Doctor confronts her, but soon the dining table is cleared when the mysterious boy, whom Nancy knows and says is "empty", comes calling.

Rose and Jack get to know each other atop the invisible spaceship, tethered just off the top of Big Ben, while Jack begins to wonder where her accomplice is; he's somehow involved in the crash of the object here on Earth. Elsewhere, the Doctor follows Nancy to her hideout, and she tells him to look for answers with Dr. Constantine (Richard Wilson) at Albion Hospital. There, the Doctor discovers a mysterious plague has stricken many of the residents of the community... physical manifestations of plague, for they all now seem to wear gas masks and appear to be dead. Except they're not, and the plague is communicable, because Constantine becomes its latest victim.

Rose and Jack come to the hospital and meet up with the Doctor, who discovers Jack is really a con artist who was trying to pawn off the cylindrical object: a Chula medical transport ship, somehow related to the plague which started the same day it crashed. However, the empty child is looking for his mummy with renewed interest, and as the plague victims suddenly revive, the Doctor, Rose and Jack are trapped inside the hospital...

1 - 10 THE DOCTOR DANCES

The Doctor (Christopher Eccleston), Rose (Billie Piper) and Jack (John Barrowman) narrowly escape the zombie plague victims in Albion Hospital by using some clever moves and Jack's disruptor pistol to exit through the floor. They stumble upon the mysterious Room 802, where they learn that the 'empty child' was infected with whatever the Chula transport ship was carrying. However, the child is now following them again.

Nancy blackmails the owner of a home she was stealing into giving her food for the children and some wirecutters, as she plans on breaking into the crash site herself. She is caught by the officers at the crash site, however, and chained to a desk alongside a young man who also has the plague, and who starts to change before her eyes into a gas-masked zombie. However, she puts the officer to sleep with a lullaby.

Meanwhile, Jack teleports himself out of the hospital, but the Doctor and Rose are still trapped – and later pulled out via the teleporter in Jack's ship while she's teaching the Time Lord how to dance (or so she thinks). The three then go to the crash site, where they find Nancy... just as the rest of the soldiers there start to change. The Doctor realises that the Chula transport ship was carrying nanobots, microscopic robots that heal damaged tissue; unfortunately, without a proper pattern to base their work on, they used the young boy – Nancy's son, Jamie – as a model, and are now turning everyone they come into contact with into something like him.

As the zombies march on the crash site, the Doctor learns how to manipulate the nanobots. Nancy tells the boy that she's his mummy, and the nanobots inside him recognize her for the 'superior' human model, and clear him. The Doctor then focuses all the nanobot energy on the zombies, freeing them from 'death' and allowing everyone to live.

However, Jack's initial con is suddenly coming to fruition; before a German bomb destroys the crash site, which was always foretold by history, Jack takes his ship and captures the bomb, then takes it out into space. A malfunction doesn't allow him to jettison it, but before certain death in deep space, the TARDIS rescues him. The Doctor and Rose welcome Jack as part of their crew.

1 - 11 BOOM TOWN

Present-day Cardiff is the site of a new public works project, Blaidd Drwg, a massive nuclear reactor to be built on the site of the present Cardiff Castle. However, when an investigator gets too close to the truth about it, he has a run in with the city's new mayor... Margaret Blaine (Annette Badland), the last Slitheen survivor on Earth after their battle with the Doctor (World War Three).

The TARDIS arrives in Cardiff as Mickey (Noel Clarke) is there to meet them; he's brought Rose's passport, and now the four Mickey, Rose (Billie Piper), Jack (John Barrowman) and the Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) are able to spend a little time on vacation. It doesn't take long, however, for the truth to out; the Doctor spots Margaret's face in a newspaper.

Margaret avoids killing a local reporter, Cathy Salt (Mali Harries), after feeling sorry for the girl; it seems Margaret is developing emotions she's not used to. However, when the Doctor and his friends come to call, she makes a quick getaway... or so she thinks, as the Doctor is able to outwit her. They take her aboard the TARDIS, where the Doctor says he will return her to Raxacoricofallapatorius. But she's under death sentence, and anyway, the TARDIS is refueling from temporal energy excised by the Gelth rift ("The Unquiet Dead"), so they must stay overnight. Margaret says she must eat, so the Doctor takes his prisoner to dinner.

As Jack attempts to connect a piece of technology found in Margaret's office - a 'surfboard' type of object that creates an energy bubble that allows a rider to sail shock waves - Mickey and Rose spend some time together. Mickey tells her that he's dating again, but he's come for one last chance to patch things up with Rose. Elsewhere, Margaret bids the Doctor for her freedom, and preys on his feelings about death.

Suddenly, the Gelth rift starts to open; Margaret takes advantage of this, attempting to seize control of the TARDIS. However, the heart of the TARDIS opens to her and regresses her back into an egg. Mickey decides to let Rose go, grudgingly, and the Doctor, Jack and Rose set off to deliver Margaret in her egg state back to her homeworld, where she will hopefully live a second life different from her first.

1 - 12 BAD WOLF

The Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) wakes up, with a spot of amnesia, inside a house the 'Big Brother' house, to be exact. Rose (Billie Piper) is on the set of 'The Weakest Link' but it's not quite as she remembers it from television: instead of Anne Robinson, there's now a robot host called the Anne Droid. Jack (John Barrowman) is caught in a futuristic version of 'What Not To Wear' complete with robot hosts who wish to give him a makeover.

But soon, the Doctor realises not all is what it seems... especially when the occupants of the House are disintegrated, as are losing contestants on 'Weakest Link'. The Doctor befriends Lynda (Jo Joyner), one of the last House mates, who accompanies him as he breaks out of confinement, only to discover that he's on a space station the Game Station, formerly known as Satellite Five, where one hundred years before he thought he'd set humanity right (The Long Game?). Instead, humanity has fallen down a dark path, and reality television is a charnel house.

1 - 13 THE PARTING OF THE WAYS

The Doctor (Christopher Eccleston) faces the Daleks as he fights for Rose's life. He and Jack (John Barrowman) materialize the TARDIS on board the Dalek command ship outside the Solar System, where they find Rose (Billie Piper)... and the Daleks' master, the Emperor Dalek, who reveals that he also escaped destruction at the end of the Time War, and has slowly been using humanity to rebuild the Dalek species. Except now, the Dalek Emperor believes he's a god.

The TARDIS escapes back to the Game Station, where the Doctor realises he can create a weapon capable of destroying the Daleks, and Jack attempts to lead a defence against the imminent Dalek onslaught. As Jack attempts to incite volunteers to help, Rose is sent back in time by the Doctor to the present day, fulfilling a request Jackie Tyler (Camille Coduri) made upon him to protect her daughter. Rose is consoled by Jackie and Mickey (Noel Clarke), but she's determined to return to him.

The Dalek Emperor realises what the Doctor is planning: a pulse of energy that will not only decimate the Daleks but also kill off all life on Earth. The Doctor is given the choice to make while Jack and the small group of rebels still on the station attempt to stop them from their assault. Unfortunately, the Daleks make their way in, killing everyone in the process, including Jack.

In a local playground in London, Rose and Mickey discover the words 'bad wolf' written on the playground and Rose realises what it is: a message. She attempts to restart the TARDIS by opening its console, to no avail. Later, Jackie realises what the Doctor means to her as she helps Rose attempt to open the console, sending the time ship back toward the future.

The TARDIS arrives as Rose peers into the heart of the TARDIS and absorbs the Time Vortex. This strangely altered Rose confesses that she herself is responsible for 'bad wolf,' scattering the message across time so that she herself would see it and return for the Doctor. With almost godlike energy, Rose reaches across time and space and utterly destroys the Daleks, the Emperor and their fleet – as well as breathes new life into Jack's lifeless body – but before the vortex finally consumes her, the Doctor kisses her, which releases the energy into himself. He then sends the energy back into the Vortex, but not before damage is done. The TARDIS leaves the station, leaving behind Jack Harkness who neither realises is still alive.

As the TARDIS travels through the Time Vortex, the Doctor begins a breakdown. While the helpless Rose watches, he bids farewell to her, and then begins to regenerate into a new body...

1 - 14 THE CHRISTMAS INVASION (SPECIAL)

On Christmas Eve, Jackie Tyler (Camille Coduri) and Mickey Smith (Noel Clarke) hear the familiar sound of the TARDIS arriving at the Powell Estate in London... but are startled when the craft comes crashing down and out steps a man they have never met before, but who seems to know them -- and then passes out. Rose Tyler (Billie Piper) then exits the ship and tells them all the incredible story: the unconscious man is the Doctor, recently regenerated, his hearts still beating but somehow slipping away. As the Doctor sleeps inside Jackie's flat, Rose and Mickey head downtown for an evening of shopping, which is soon halted as the two -- and the entire crowd -- are attacked by a musical band of Santas with strange face masks that nearly kill them before they are able to get away. Back at Jackie's flat, the three take cover as the Christmas tree comes alive... a weapon designed to destroy them, for whatever's following them is attracted to them, probably because of the Doctor. Except that the Doctor is asleep on the bed, until Rose puts his sonic screwdriver into his hands and pleads for help, and he momentarily wakes up and stops the living tree. Whatever is attacking them -- the tree, the Santas now standing outside their flat -- are 'pilot fish', they learn before he passes out again. Mickey and Rose realize these 'pilot fish' are simply precursors for an invasion of a much larger force.

Meanwhile, all of Britain is watching BBC television as reports are about to come in from Guinevere One, Britain's newest Mars probe. As scientist Danny Llewellyn (Daniel Evans), leader of the Guinevere project, reports, the probe will soon send back photographs of the Martian surface. But Guinevere won't be snapping photos of Mars any time soon; it encounters a massive space-borne craft, vaguely shaped like an asteroid, which sucks it inside. Guinevere later broadcasts pictures of an alien race whose language is unfamiliar, setting all of Earth on alert and drawing Harriet Jones (Penelope Wilton), the new Prime Minister of Britain, to the headquarters of UNIT to investigate. Harriet's aide, Alex (Adam Garcia), works on a translator code to understand the aliens, while Major Blake (Chu Ornambala) of UNIT tells her that "Torchwood," a secret project, can soon be ready; Harriet, meanwhile, wonders where the Doctor is, and why he hasn't appeared to help.

The aliens make their intentions known: they are the Sycorax, and they have come to Earth to take it over and enslave its people. The Sycorax leader (Sean Gilder) teleports up Harriet, Alex, Major Blake and Llewellyn, where he kills the latter two and demands that Harriet Jones surrender in the name of the people of the Earth. In order to ensure their victory, they have fashioned a frightening weapon: they have taken over everyone on the planet with A-positive blood (due to a sample of that type of blood on the Guinevere probe as a memento of humanity), fully a third of the planet's population, and have readied them to commit suicide by jumping off rooftops. Meanwhile, back on Earth, Rose and Mickey have taken the comatose Doctor into the TARDIS, which is also teleported to the Sycorax ship; Rose and Mickey are taken hostage along with Harriet and Alex. All seems to be lost...

But aboard the TARDIS, thanks to a spilled thermos of tea...

As Rose attempts to parlay with the Sycorax leader -- an attempt that is rejected as being 'funny' -- they once again call for the surrender of the Earth... and suddenly the Sycorax language can be understood by the hostages. Which means the TARDIS translator circuits are still working. Which means that--

Out of the TARDIS steps the Doctor (David Tennant). Still unbalanced from his regeneration, still mentally unsure of what kind of Doctor he's going to be, he calls the Sycorax bluff -- the blood control was merely a hypnosis, and never would have worked as the human instinct for survival is too great. The Doctor then challenges the Sycorax leader to a duel, for control of the Earth. The Doctor and the Sycorax take up swords, a battle that continues out onto the wing of the massive Sycorax ship. The Sycorax cuts off the Doctor's hand, but because he's still within the fifteen hours of his regeneration, the Doctor simply grows a new one... and then vanquishes the Sycorax leader. He then tells the Sycorax invaders that he's won, that they're to leave the Earth and never return. The Doctor and the humans are then sent back to Earth.

As they celebrate the flight of the Sycorax ship, the Doctor, Rose and Mickey are reunited with Jackie. However, Harriet Jones learns from Alex that Torchwood -- a secret defence project based on alien technology -- is ready, and orders it to fire... a particle beam that destroys the Sycorax ship. The Doctor loses all his love for Harriet Jones, condemning her for the murder of the Sycorax, while she defends the action as necessary because he's not always around to help them. As the Doctor leaves, he plants a suggestion with Alex that Harriet Jones is 'looking tired'... a promise that he can bring her down fulfilled, as she later faces a vote of no-confidence.

As the embers of the Sycorax ship rain down on London, the Doctor, Rose, Mickey and Jackie enjoy Christmas dinner, and then the Doctor and Rose make their goodbyes... he ready to return to the great unknown out in space, and she now convinced that even with a different face and a different demeanor, he's still the same old Doctor she knows and loves.

2 - 2 TOOTH AND CLAW

Scotland, 1879. A priest from a nearby parish, Father Angelo (Ian Hanmore) leads a small army of fellow disciples of a strange evil to a quiet manor, where they attack the estate's owners, Sir Robert and Lady Isobel (Derek Riddell, Michelle Duncan) and their staff... an attack in which the disciples use strange, superhuman abilities...

The Doctor (David Tennant) has promised Rose (Billie Piper) a trip to 1979 London, to take her to a concert by the Blockheads, but sadly the TARDIS manages to land one century earlier (naturally) on the Scottish highlands, materializing right next to an armed traveling party and a horse-drawn coach, inside which is none other than Queen Victoria (Pauline Collins). Introducing himself as a scientist (using the name Dr. James McCrimmon) and Rose as a Eliza Doolittle-esque waif, the two join the caravan, which is en route to Balmoral castle, the Queen's usual trip via train having been waylaid by a mysterious accident on the tracks.

The caravan stops for the night at the home of Sir Robert, who attempts to dissuade them from entering, all the while watched by the mysterious Father Angelo and his men. Victoria, however, is not easily persuaded, and calls upon Robert - who says his wife is away visiting family, but who in actuality remains trapped along with the rest of the staff in the cellar guarded by something evil - for his hospitality. For a brief time, the Doctor and Rose join Victoria and her men in believing this is merely a stop for the night. That changes when Rose discovers a woman hiding in her closet: Flora (Ruthie Milne), one of the members of Lady Isobel's staff, who escaped the sinister evil creature guarding the prisoners below.

Before Rose and Flora can tell the others about what's happening, however, the Doctor is suddenly clued in, as a ghost story told by Sir Robert at the evening meal provokes Father Angelo. Victoria's guards have all been knocked unconscious by an additive in their tea, and Rose and Flora are taken down below, while the Doctor, Victoria, Sir Robert and the head of the Queen's guards, Captain Reynolds (Jamie Sives), head for the basement. They are all reunited to watch as a solitary man trapped in a cage, suddenly struck by moonlight, begins a transformation... into a werewolf.

The group escapes and flees, and the Doctor begins to put the story together. Centuries before, an alien craft crashed on Earth; nothing survived but cellular matter, which has affected one person in every generation... a consciousness passed from one person to another, growing in strength and manifesting itself through werewolves. Father Angelo and his people worship it; the Doctor, on the other hand, is quite convinced that while bullets cannot stop it, something can. As the werewolf continues its rampage through the house, something prevents it from entering the master study; the Doctor deduces that oil of mistletoe has been spread upon the walls, which somehow repels the creature. Victoria, meanwhile, reveals the package she is carrying with her: the Koh-i-noor Diamond, the famed, cursed diamond that the Doctor realizes is connected to this as well.

Suddenly, the Doctor puts the mystery together, and just as the werewolf begins its newest attack, killing Captain Reynolds, the Doctor, Rose, Sir Robert and Victoria flee to the manor observatory. There, Sir Robert's father's prized, uncompleted telescope sits. The Doctor realizes that Robert's father and Prince Albert, Victoria's late spouse, had known of the werewolf legend and had planned accordingly; Victoria was meant to come to this place with the diamond. Sir Robert gives his life to buy time, convinced that his final act will counter the treason he committed by cooperating with Angelo when his wife was threatened, while Isobel and her staff concoct more potions based on mistletoe to keep the creature at bay. The Doctor inserts the jewel into the telescope, which, impacted by moonlight, suddenly becomes a weapon that can be used to destroy the werewolf, which it does post haste.

In the aftermath, Victoria bestows honors upon the Doctor and Rose... but then, surprisingly, banishes them from her kingdom, informing them that they are no longer welcome because they bring death and destruction with them wherever they go. The two make their way back to the TARDIS, convinced that the bite of the werewolf passed to Victoria before it died, and that her bloodline carries the curse all over again, which humanity will eventually have to deal with. The TARDIS departs the Scottish plains.

Back at the manor, Queen Victoria bids Lady Isobel to keep open her manor, which she says will become their first line of defense against the nightmares she believes will come; it will become an institute that will protect Britain against even the Doctor himself. Her institute will be named after the manor itself... Torchwood.

2 - 3 SCHOOL REUNION

It's the first day for a new teacher at Duffry Vale High School, a new instructor who calls himself John Smith who knows that something's wrong with this school. Led to the school by Mickey (Noel Clarke), who's been following mysterious UFO sightings and strange staff changes at the school, the Doctor (David Tennant) has now come to Duffry Vale to find out why, led by nothing other than his curiosity. Rose (Billie Piper) is there, too, having joined the kitchen staff for a job she is thoroughly unhappy with and finds bizarre, especially the incident with a barrel full of viscous, caustic yellow goo. But all remains quiet, until the headmaster, Finch (Anthony Head) -- a sinister man with beady eyes who came to the school in recent months and replaced most of the staff with his own people -- introduces a journalist from the Times who's come to the school to write a story about him... a woman named Sarah Jane Smith (Elisabeth Sladen).

The Doctor, caught off guard upon the sight of one of his dearest friends from his long days of travel within the TARDIS, at first doesn't let on about his identity; instead, he plays along as the new teacher, sounding Sarah Jane out about her real motivation for coming here, which is as he suspects: the same reason he's here. True to form, later that evening, as the Doctor, Mickey and Rose have returned to the school to do a bit of snooping, Sarah Jane has also broken into the school, and discovers the presence of the TARDIS. At that moment, she is reunited with the man who abandoned her so many years before, but who she has remained eternally fond of. Mickey, meanwhile, discovers a closet full of dehydrated rats, while on top of the school, Finch and a bat-like creature watch the four with eagle eyes. When the Doctor suggests that they analyze the liquid Rose discovered in the kitchen, Sarah brings him to the boot of her car, where she reveals the broken-down, but possibly still functional, robot dog, K9 (voice of John Leeson).

While Mickey and Rose remain curious about the Doctor's relationship with Sarah Jane, the two reminisce about their traveling days together. The Doctor succeeds in repairing K9, who tells him the goo is Krillitane oil, a nasty substance that heralds the presence of the alien Krillitanes, beings who have evolved by taking on the characteristics of other species. Somehow, the Krillitanes here -- Finch being their leader -- are doing something with the oil to the children of Duffry Vale High School, but Finch himself promises the Doctor that it's not evil, just impressive on a galactic scale. Meanwhile, Rose and Sarah Jane have words - taking an immediate dislike to each other - while Mickey contemplates his role in their group, feeling consigned to the same status as K9, the 'metal dog' role, always on the sidelines.

Later, Finch offers the Doctor the chance to take control of his destiny after the Time Lord discovers the secret about the project the Krillitanes are brainwashing the children into completing: they're trying to crack the Scasis Paradigm, the universal theory that controls the building blocks of the universe. With the 'godmaker' powers unleashed, the Doctor would in essence be able to recreate the Time Lords from scratch and run the universe. It is an opportunity the Doctor decides to pass, which sets the Krillitanes on the loose. With the aid of a young student who's escaped the Krillitane mind control devices, Mickey crashes his car into the building to rescue everyone, but they, the Doctor, Rose and Sarah Jane are stranded inside the cafeteria....

...until K9 arrives on the scene, using his rapidly-depleting laser to ward the Krillitanes off.

The Doctor concocts a plan to deal with the invaders, while Mickey helps free the children by pulling the plug on the computers. The Doctor says goodbye to K9 for one more time, before evacuating the building. In the kitchen, the Krillitanes converge on K9, before he's able to stun them by blasting the vat of oil -- exposing them to the viscous goo which has become highly toxic to them -- and then blowing up the entire room, taking himself in the process.

Sarah comes to see the Doctor and Rose off within the TARDIS; having made peace with Rose, with whom she now shares a bond as friends and confidantes of the Doctor, Sarah turns them down on his offer to join them. But Mickey asks to go as well; he wants to shed his place as the man on the other end of the phone, and instead wants to see the universe. While Rose and Mickey prepare to leave in the TARDIS, the Doctor says one last goodbye to Sarah Jane Smith, who is finally able to put the past, and her trip beyond time and space, behind her. But the Doctor has left her a gift: a fully rebuilt K9 whom she spots as the TARDIS slowly fades away.

2 - 4 THE GIRL IN THE FIREPLACE

Deep space, the fifty-first century: the TARDIS arrives on the deck of a derelict spacecraft whose occupants have mysteriously vanished. The Doctor (David Tennant), Rose (Billie Piper) and their newest traveling companion Mickey (Noel Clarke) start to look around and make some curious discoveries, most especially of which is an antique French fireplace. Not just any fireplace, too, but one that seems to be anchored to some kind of space-time disturbance, for the Doctor looks inside and discovers the face of a little girl staring back at him. Her name is Reinette (Jessica Atkins), and she is currently in eighteenth century Paris.

The Doctor trips a switch that twists the fireplace around and suddenly he's back in time, in Paris, along with the little girl, but several months have passed; the portal is out of sync, meaning that time goes by much faster on this end. Noticing that the clock above the mantelpiece is broken, but there is still a ticking noise in the room, the Doctor discovers a monster under the bed: in fact, an android, made of clockworks. But before he can examine it completely, the robot - which follows him back onto the spaceship - teleports itself away.

The Doctor returns through the fireplace portal, but it's over a decade later, and Reinette (Sophia Myles) has now grown into an adult. Though he has only seen her as a child, Reinette has spent her entire life thinking about the mysterious man, and has obviously fallen for him. Before she leaves, she kisses him, and the Doctor discovers why he knows her - she is the Madame De Pompadour, mistress of Louis XV, King of France.

Back on the ship, Mickey and Rose make a frightening discovery - a human eye in a sensor, and a human heart beating in the middle of the ship's interior. The Doctor, meanwhile, discovers another portal, and a horse that has come through it; the portal leads to the exterior of the Palace of Versailles, where he spies Reinette and a friend strolling through the gardens. Later, the Doctor realizes that there are many 'gateways to history' aboard this craft - time windows, not to just any history, but Reinette's own, a fifty-first century spaceship stalking an eighteenth century woman. Through another window, the three go to Paris to rescue Reinette from another clockwork android, where they learn that while the robots are stalking her, they haven't done anything to her yet because she's 'not ready'. And they're after her because, as they say, they are 'the same'. The Doctor makes a mental link with Reinette (which she uses to see inside his mind as well as the reverse) in order to discover the truth as to why the clockworks are following her, but the only thing he really discovers is that she is in love with him.

On the ship, Rose and Mickey are taken prisoner by the clockwork androids, while the Doctor later returns apparently quite drunk, but in fact it's a ruse to shut the androids down. While it doesn't work, the Doctor learns that the clockworks are repair androids; they followed their instructions to the letter when the ship was damaged, salvaging parts first from the rest of the ship, and then the human crew itself, manifesting their bodies to keep the ship running. Now, they are convinced that Reinette is the last link to repairing their damaged craft.

Later, Rose steps through the portal to warn Reinette about the day she will be turn 37 years old, when she will be 'ready' and when they will attack. Reinette is ready, so that a few years hence, when the androids come again, she yells into the fireplace, calling the Doctor to her. Yet, for some reason, he does not come this time.

The time windows into the palace have been shut down by the clockwork androids before their attack, or so they think - the Doctor leaps in through another window on the back of the horse. He's also sealed up the windows as he's left, leaving the clockwork androids to realize that they no longer have a purpose since their window to the future, and their ship, is broken. The Doctor is stuck, back in time.

Later, though, Reinette makes a confession to him: the fireplace, the one that he originally spoke to her through, has been reconstructed in her bedroom... and the portal is still open, far enough from the disturbance that shut the others down. The Doctor goes back to the future, telling her that he will be right back... but forgetting the time variation, so that when he returns again, Reinette has died, and Louis XV and the Doctor watch as her hearse is carried away toward Paris.

The Doctor returns to the TARDIS to read a letter Reinette left for him, knowing he'd be back one day. Mickey and Rose ask why Reinette was so important to the androids, but the Doctor, his heart heavy with her death, says they'll probably never know. The TARDIS departs, its occupants unaware of the name of the ship, emblazoned on its outer hull: the SS Madame De Pompadour.

2 - 5 RISE OF THE CYBERMEN

The TARDIS encounters a massive anomaly which causes it to suddenly lose power. The Doctor (David Tennant) discovers that the time vortex has vanished and his TARDIS is dead. Things begin to look up when Mickey (Noel Clarke) discovers that they've arrived in London, but it's not the London they know... there are zeppelins in the sky and Rose (Billie Piper) is startled to discover a billboard advert with photos of her late father, Pete Tyler (Shaun Dingwall). The TARDIS crew has entered another universe and the ship cannot draw power from this reality's time vortex. However, it turns out there is one component of the TARDIS that still has power... but it will have to be nurtured, and will take a day or so.

Cybus Industries is a major power in this alternate version of London, run by a man called John Lumic (Roger Lloyd Pack), who is confined to a wheelchair but still exhibits hostile tendencies toward his workers while attempting to complete a top-secret project. One of the people involved in his project is Pete Tyler, who has been invited to a meeting to discuss a new project, a meeting also to be attended by the President of Britain (Don Warrington). At his home, Pete's wife, Jackie (Camille Coduri) stops functioning normally when a signal is received by an earpiece set she wears, from Cybus Industries... an earpiece worn by most of the inhabitants of London.

The Doctor warns Rose and Mickey not to interfere with this world; it's not theirs, and the people here are not the ones they know. Mickey goes to see his grandmother, whose death in his reality he feels some guilt over, blaming himself for a fatal fall she took, but he's kidnapped by the occupants of a van. Inside the van is Jake Simmonds (Andrew Hayden-Smith), a member of an underground resistance group against Cybus Industries called the Preachers who witnessed the rounding-up of large numbers of homeless people by one of Lumic's henchmen, Mr Crane (Colin Spaul). He and his associate Mrs Moore (Helen Griffin) believe Mickey to be his alternate-universe counterpart, Ricky. However, later when they arrive at their headquarters, Ricky is present, and Mickey has some explaining to do.

Rose and the Doctor discover that Cybus is putting out a strange signal, which has affected everyone wearing the earpods. They make way for a party being held at the Tyler estate, where they become part of the servant staff in order to gain access. Rose realizes the people she believes she knows as her parents aren't really a part of her life, and that in this universe, "Rose" is the name of their dog.

Lumic has Crane move to the next phase of their secret project, while the Doctor discovers the terrible truth about what Lumic is trying to accomplish. At the party, the Doctor and Rose watch as hundreds of metal men approach the house with orders to destroy all resistance. They are Cybermen, and the rise of their order is happening all over again in this universe. As the President dies and Jackie flees, the Doctor, Rose and Pete, united with Jake, Mickey and Ricky, confront the Cybermen, who instead of taking them as hostages, prepare to delete them...

2 - 6 THE AGE OF STEEL

The Doctor (David Tennant) manages to stop certain death at the hands of the Cybermen by using the power cell from the TARDIS, and he and the rest of his party -- including Rose (Billie Piper), Mickey (Noel Clarke), Ricky, Pete Tyler (Shaun Dingwall) and Jake (Andrew Hayden-Smith) -- are rescued by the van driven by Mrs Moore (Helen Griffin). Pete confesses that he's the Preachers' spy inside the Cybus Corporation. They escape and split up, but Ricky is killed by pursuing Cybermen, electrocuted while struggling to get free.

John Lumic (Roger Lloyd-Pack) begins operating his master plan. Cybus Industries sends a control signal to everyone wearing the earpods, including most of London; the controlled populace begin a march toward Cybus facilities where they will be "upgraded" to Lumic's design. However, the Cybermen are one step ahead of him, realizing that he too is human and inferior to them; they set about "upgrading" him as well.

When Jake realizes Ricky is dead, he lashes out at Mickey, but the two are forced to team up again when they attack the main Cybus facility. Mickey and Jake spot a zeppelin hovering over the plant, while Rose and Pete masquerade as controlled Cyber-subjects, marching in the front door. The Doctor and Mrs Moore enter through the cooling tunnels below the station, but after meeting a Cyberman who they realize has been affected by a faulty inhibitor (one who remembers her origins), Mrs Moore is killed and the Doctor is captured. Rose and Pete, meanwhile, discover that Jackie (Camille Coduri) has already been turned into a Cyberman inside the plant.

The Doctor confronts the Cyber-Controller, the "upgraded" John Lumic, while on the zeppelin, Mickey and Jake attempt to take control of the ship and fight off a Cyberman at the same time. They are able to stop the control signal and the humans are released. The Doctor pleads with Lumic to stop what he's doing; Lumic, in his quest to create a utopian society, has bred all humanity out of his subjects. Mickey, meanwhile, discovers the code for the Cyber control systems, and the Doctor uses it to make all of the Cybermen go mad -- they realize what Lumic has done to them, and are no longer a threat. As Lumic's facility goes down in flames, Mickey and Jake take off in the zeppelin, but drag a ladder behind them so that the Doctor, Rose and Pete are able to escape. The Cyber-Controller pursues them, but falls from the ladder to his death.

The Doctor, Rose and Mickey return to the TARDIS, where Mickey confesses that he has decided to remain behind -- in this universe, he is no longer the useless sidekick but, in Ricky's shoes, has the chance to do good. Rose resists the idea but eventually the two say goodbye to their friend and the TARDIS departs, fully recharged but unable to return to this universe in the future. As the Doctor and Rose return to our universe, Mickey contemplates his future, telling Jake he's not his counterpart, but his own man, and the two set out to set Cybus Industries' terror to right

2 - 7 THE IDIOT'S LANTERN

On a rainy night in 1953, a freak lightning bolt hitting the antenna of Magpie's Electronics Store leads to a strange phenomenon: the television begins to talk to the owner, Mr Magpie (Ron Cook) in the form of a presenter (Maureen Lipman) who addresses him personally, and has a plan he must help her with...

The Doctor (David Tennant) and Rose (Billie Piper) have arrived, ostensibly to see Elvis Presley perform but startled that they're back in London instead of New York at the time of Queen Elizabeth's coronation. They are startled to see two men rush a man, covered by a blanket, into a car and drive away. The Doctor and Rose meet Tommy Connolly (Rory Jennings), a local boy who says that this has been happening all over their street. He's stopped by his father, Eddie (Jamie Foreman), a brutish man who threatens both his son and his wife, Rita (Debra Gillett), because he's 'respected' in this part of town and wants no part of whatever's going on. The Doctor uses his psychic paper to convince the Connolly's that he's a government official, and putting Eddie to work feeding off his patriotism, he quests Rita and Tommy about the disappearances... and about something strange that has affected Grandma (Margaret John), which has completely removed her face from her body.

The Doctor goes investigating and runs into Detective Inspector Bishop (Sam Cox), who has been looking into the strange ailment that has robbed people of their faces. To cover it up in the face of the expected press onslaught as a result of the Coronation, they've been roping up the victims and bringing them to the station. Meanwhile, Rose does her own sleuthing, ending up in Magpie's shop because everything that's happened seems to be linked to people who bought television sets from him. However, the strange creature on the television screen begins to talk to her, and soon, Rose's face has been removed from her body... and she's inside the television, crying out.

The Doctor and Bishop return to the Connolly home, where Tommy defies Eddie when he learns that his father has been turning people in for the "good" of their neighborhood. They make their way to the Magpie shop, where the Doctor discovers the truth about what's happened to Rose, and confronts the evil image on the television screen. It calls itself the Wire, an alien who escaped execution by transforming itself into pure energy, and it has come to Earth to reconstitute itself... but it will need a massive amount of human energy in order to do so, which will be provided by the many television sets the reluctant Magpie has issued. Bishop is robbed of his face by the Wire, but the Doctor and Tommy attempt to stop Magpie and the Wire from using a portable device to turn the Alexandra Palace broadcast tower into a receiver, which the Wire can use to consume as many souls as it wants.

The Doctor climbs the tower, pursuing Magpie and the Wire. It's too late, however; the Wire starts to consume the people of London, gorging itself on their energies. However, Tommy stops her by following instructions the Doctor gave him, trapping the Wire - now reduced to a single signal - inside a Betamax cassette. The faces of the Wire's victims are returned to them and Rose is restored.

Later, during a block party held in honor of the Coronation, Rita throws Eddie out of the house once and for all, but the Doctor convinces Tommy to go to his father's side out of love for his family.

The Doctor (David Tennant) and Rose (Billie Piper) discover strange symbols on the wall that defy the TARDIS' ability to translate, which indicates that the writing is older than his people might know. They're suddenly startled, however, by a group of bizarre alien creatures - which they later discover are called the Ood - who they believe are attacking them but are, in fact, perfectly docile subordinates (or slaves) to the humans who inhabit this base, including the makeshift captain, Zack (Shaun Parkes), scientist Ida (Claire Rushbrook), archaeologist Toby (Will Thorp), security chief Jefferson (Danny Webb), maintenance trainee Scooti (MyAnna Buring) and Danny (Ronny Jhutti) who works with the Ood.

When a massive impact hits the base, the Doctor and Rose realize where they are... an impossible planet, an airless world orbiting a black hole which cannot possibly exist, which in legend is called the Bitter Pill. The expedition is now stuck here, monitoring the black hole in a place where by all scientific probability it - and they - cannot exist. The team is drilling to reach a power source, which keeps the world in balance, ten miles below... something buried down within the planet that they have not yet identified. But soon the Doctor realizes the depth of his misfortune: when the impact hit, it wiped away part of the base including the TARDIS. Now he and Rose are stuck here, forever.

The archaeologist, Toby, has been examining the ancient writing but has also started hearing voices. Other manifestations that something is wrong occur: Rose and Danny both believe they hear the otherwise docile Ood say something they shouldn't, and Zack fails to see the image of an enormous demon in the holograph tank. Toby discovers that the ancient symbols have begun to appear on his hands, and soon he is not in control of his body. Possessed by something terrifyingly evil, he goes outside the base, watched by Scooti, who is then killed when he shatters the window. But by the time the Doctor and company respond, Toby has returned to normal and has no memories of what's happened.

The drill reaches its destination ten miles below, and the Doctor accompanies Ida down the mine shaft, while on the base the Ood are all confined after demonstrating unusual behavior and psychic patterns. Down below, the Doctor and Ida discover the ruins of an ancient civilization along with a huge engraved coverstone. Back on the base, Toby is once again transformed into a hideous servant of something called the Beast. The Ood are now completely possessed as an army for this 'beast,' which is also called other things in many tongues - including, in the language of Earth, Lucifer... or Satan. Suddenly the planet's gravity field starts to collapse and the world starts moving toward the black hole, while in the depths of the planet, the Doctor and Ida watch helplessly as the coverstone opens and something alien inside starts to become free...

2 - 9 THE SATAN PIT

Jefferson (Danny Webb) opens fire on the approaching Ood who are possessed by the Beast. He kills them, and he, Danny (Ronny Jhutti) and Rose (Billie Piper) then hear from Zack (Shaun Parkes) who informs them that the planet is now stabilising around the black hole again. Jefferson recommends "Strategy 9" and Zack agrees, so the Base then makes contact with the Doctor (David Tennant) and Ida (Claire Rushbrook) and discover that the Pit is open. Zack orders Ida to return under the conditions of Strategy 9, but she is reluctant to obey, wanting to explore the Pit. The Doctor thinks on it for a while before deciding they should follow Zack's order. Meanwhile, Jefferson turns on Toby (Will Thorp) with his rifle, but Rose points out that he is no longer possessed. He's terrified by the ordeal, and tells them that he had the Devil inside his head.

The Beast, acting through the Ood, then takes control of the viewscreens to deliver a message to the crew. The Doctor asks him which version of the Devil he is supposed to be, and he says he is all of them. He explains that he was imprisoned before the creation of the universe before going on to taunt each of them about painful events from their past, except Rose, who he predicts "will die in battle, so very soon." The message ends, and the Doctor tries to restore some confidence and faith in the crew by explaining how the Beast just preys on basic fears and how they can rise above it, until the Beast snaps the cable supporting the lift. The Doctor and Ida leap out of the lift as the cable comes crashing down, and Ida suggests she ventures into the Pit as they only have one hour of oxygen left and not much left to lose. The Doctor disagrees and says he will go instead.

Back on the base, Rose rallies the crew into action, getting Zack to restore the lights and Danny to find a method of rendering the Ood unconscious. To administer the latter, they have to travel through the ventilation shaft below to Ood Habitation, through discrete pockets of atmosphere created by Zack in order for them to breathe. The Ood follow them, and Jefferson falls behind defending the rest of the crew. His final request is that the atmosphere be removed from his section of the shaft to avoid "death by Ood", and Zack honours it. The rest of the crew barely escape the Ood, and Toby is almost caught by them until his eyes go red again and he puts his finger on his lips to signal to them that he must not be harmed as he is still possessed. Danny sets off the signal to paralyse the Ood just as they are about to enter Central Control in pursuit of Zack, who was only armed with a single shot in a bolt gun.

Below, the Doctor reaches the end of the cable, but not the bottom of the Pit. Realising that he may only be thirty feet from the bottom, a drop that he could survive, he detaches himself from the cable despite Ida's protests, and drops the rest of the way, into the impenetrable darkness. This happens just as Zack and Rose make contact, so Ida tells them what happened, only to be told that she will run out of air soon and that there is no way of reaching or rescuing her. Zack then determines that the survivors should leave the planet and ensure no one ever goes back, but Rose refuses to go, not believing that the Doctor is dead. Danny administers a sedative on her and Zack carries her to the rocket they will depart in. At the bottom of the Pit, the Doctor wakes up and finds he is alive and able to breathe the atmosphere. He explores the cave and finds a huge demon chained to the cavern wall; the Beast.

On the rocket, Rose regains consciousness as it launches, and is restrained despite her threats to shoot Zack with the bolt gun she found discarded near to her. The Doctor begins to speak to the Beast, but is puzzled by his lack of a response. He realises it is only the body that is imprisoned, and the Beast's mind is what has been possessing Toby and the Ood. He comes to the conclusion that he can breathe here not because the Beast needs him for something, but because he is trying to escape, and his jailers want the Doctor to stop him. He's about to do so by smashing the vases that are the gateway to the prison, when he realises that doing so would mean the loss of the rocket's protection from the black hole. Onboard the rocket itself, the Beast's mind is delighted with the prospect of making it to Earth to further corrupt and terrify humans, but when the rocket is just about to move out of range of the black hole, the Doctor smashes the vases, violating the orbit of the planet around the black hole.

The rocket starts to be dragged backwards into the black hole, and the Beast's mind is enraged, making Toby take on the appearance he had when he was first possessed. Rose takes the bolt gun and shoots the windscreen of the rocket before undoing Toby's seatbelt. Toby is sucked out into space, and the rocket continues to move towards the black hole. In the Pit, Ida finally collapses, just as further below, the Doctor is thrown backwards against something. He turns around and discovers it's the TARDIS. Just as the rocket is about to enter the black hole, it stops, and the Doctor announces he is towing it using the TARDIS via a comms link. Rose is delighted to hear the Doctor again, and Danny and Zack are delighted to hear that Ida will be OK, as the Doctor has rescued her. Rose re-enters the TARDIS and hugs the Doctor. The two crews say their goodbyes, and Rose again asks why the Beast said she would die in battle. The Doctor reassures her that it was lying, and they take off in the TARDIS, leaving the impossible planet behind...

2 - 10 LOVE & MONSTERS

A man named Elton Pope (Marc Warren) runs towards a deserted industrial area. He spots something and stops dead; a blue police box. He walks towards it tentatively, about to touch it, when a shout from inside a factory gets him on the run again. He runs around a factory towards the source of the shouting. He sees light coming from a closed door at the end of the corridor, so he edges towards it and opens it. An alien (called a Hoix) lunges towards him, roaring loudly. Elton's now in his room, and it is revealed that the previous sequence is a flashback, and he's narrating the story of his life for his video diary. In another flashback continuing the previous one, the Hoix continues to roar at Elton until the Doctor (David Tennant) distracts it with a pork chop and yells at Elton to run away. As he starts to run, Rose (Billie Piper) charges past him and throws a blue bucket of steaming liquid at the Hoix, for which the Doctor berates her saying she's made it worse. What follows, including a madcap chase, is not entirely reliable as it's Elton's memory of the events...

The chase ends with the Doctor stopping and recognising Elton, who runs out of the factory without answering. It is now revealed by Elton that this was not the first time he met the Doctor and it would not be the last. He talks to the camera about how his ordinary life was transformed, starting with the night he first met the Doctor in his old family home when he was three or four years old, and continuing with his experiences with the Auton, Slitheen and Sycorax invasions of Earth that took place a couple of years before. It was the Sycorax invasion that led him to meet his friend Ursula (Shirley Henderson) who then took him to meet a group of her friends who were also studying the Doctor. The group then started to have regular meetings under the name Elton suggests: LINDA (London Investigation 'N' Detective Agency) As time goes by, the meetings become less and less about the Doctor, and more of a social gathering.

They were in the middle of a meeting, one in which they form their own band, when Victor Kennedy (Peter Kay) turned up and commandeered the group. He refuses to touch anyone or anything because of his "ex-eema", apparently a more serious form of eczema. His more active approach to finding the Doctor makes them more knowledgeable in investigation techniques, and they track down a police box which they know to be the TARDIS in Woolwich. This however, is the sequence from the beginning in which Elton ran away. Victor is furious with him about this, but appears to calm down when Ursula threatens him. It's from there that the group focus more of Rose, and they are deployed around London to find her. Elton almost immediately finds Jackie (Camille Coduri) and becomes acquainted with her easily, regularly paying visits to fix things she supposedly has broken in her flat.

As this is going on, it goes widely unnoticed that members of the group are disappearing, including Bliss (Kathryn Drysdale) and Bridget (Moya Brady). One night while Elton is doing some DIY, Jackie attempts to seduce Elton, but a phone call from Rose interrupts the mood. Elton has a revelation at this point; he really does like Jackie, but there's someone else he likes even more, and that's Ursula. He goes out to get pizza for himself and Jackie, but when he returns to the flat, she's found the photo of Rose in his coat pocket. She confronts him and angrily tells him that she will never let Rose or the Doctor down and to get out. Elton storms back to LINDA HQ and tells Victor he had enough. He says that Victor has ruined what LINDA had, and that it's no wonder that Bliss and Bridget left. He then asks Ursula out on a date, and the pair of them, along with the other remaining member of the group, Mr. Skinner (Simon Greenhall) walk out, but not before Victor calls Mr. Skinner back. Elton and Ursula leave, before realising that Ursula has left her phone behind.

When they return to retrieve it, Mr Skinner is no longer there. Only Victor is left, holding a newspaper in front of him. When asked where Skinner is, Victor makes up several excuses before Ursula notices that his hands are green; not human. He puts the newspaper down and reveals himself to be a bloated green alien creature, which Elton dubs an "Abzorbaloff". They realise that Victor has absorbed the missing members of LINDA, including Mr. Skinner, and their faces can be seen all over his body. Victor tells them he wants to absorb the Doctor, and so he enlisted their services to find him, which ultimately failed. Ursula demands that she returns his victims, but he absorbs her instead. She tells Elton to run, which he does, chased by the Abzorbaloff. He is cornered in an alley, and appears to be about to surrender when the TARDIS appears nearby. The Doctor steps out and glances at Elton before Rose storms out and berates him for upsetting Jackie.

Their attention turns to the Abzorbaloff, who reveals himself to be from Klom, the twin planet of Raxacoricofallapatorius, and threatens to kill Elton if the Doctor doesn't surrender. The Doctor bluffs and says he doesn't care, and the members of LINDA work together from inside the Abzorbaloff to restrain him. Elton then snaps the cane that Victor carried around with him, and the Abzorbaloff melts into the ground, along with all his victims. The Doctor explains that the cane created a restriction field, and now that it's gone, the Abzorbaloff can't stop absorbing, and so he is absorbed by the Earth. Elton breaks down in tears, realising he'll never see Ursula or any of the members of LINDA ever again. The Doctor sits him down and tells him what happened the first night they met, when he'd stopped something called an elemental shade that had escaped into Elton's house, but was unable to save Elton's mum. That's when we realise that Elton's mum died the night he met the Doctor.

The final thing that the Doctor can do for Elton is tap into the absorption matrix and save the last victim. It's too late to bring her back completely, but at the end of the episode we see Ursula's face in a paving slab. Elton doesn't mind that she's just a disembodied face, because he loves her, but he then muses upon what happens when you come into contact with the Doctor, and how life is so much different from the way you think it's going to be. The real world is so much stranger, so much darker, madder, and so much better.

2 - 11 FEAR HER

London, 2012. In a quiet suburb on an average street, children play and construction work goes on... though an old woman named Maeve (Edna Dore) seems to know that there are connections between a rash of recent disappearances on the block. Nobody will listen to her, but another boy disappears while playing football, without a passing thought. And in the meanwhile, alone in her room, a little girl named Chloe (Abisola Agbaje) draws another picture, this one of the missing boy, which takes on a life of its own...

The Doctor and Rose (David Tennant, Billie Piper) arrive in the neighborhood as preparations continue for the Summer Olympic Games, which are soon to be held in London. Rose is concerned about the number of bills posted about the missing children in the neighborhood, which leads them to begin an investigation. Rose notices that cars mysteriously stop in a part of the street, as Kel (Abdul Salis) a street construction worker, tells her, while the Doctor feels an uncertain amount of energy in the places the children disappeared. The two meet the neighbors, including Trish (Nina Sosanya), the mother of the little girl that peers at them through her second-storey window. The Doctor believes Maeve's story and continues his pursuit of the truth, and Rose watches as a cat disappears right from under her nose.

Inside the house, Trish attempts to get through the Chloe, who's absorbed by her continued drawings all over her bedroom. Rose is attacked by some sort of creature in a garage -- a creature made of graphite, the same material used in pencils. More interestingly, the Doctor notices he can erase the creature with a standard pencil eraser, realizing that whatever created the "squiggle creature" as he calls it just drew it into existence... some sort of child's drawing. The two end up at Trish's house, after remembering Chloe's interest from her window. Trish realizes the Doctor can help her, so she invites him and Rose in, telling them about her daughter, a lonely little girl who sits in her room all day and draws. The Doctor detects something unusual coming from Chloe, while Rose snoops around and discovers there's something lurking in Chloe's closet. In fact, it's a drawing of Chloe's father, an alcoholic who mistreated the two of them. The Doctor puts the pieces together -- Chloe can manipulate reality by drawing, trapping people in her sketches or, in the case of the closet, recreating things from fantasy.

The Doctor makes contact with a being inside Chloe -- a wayward Isolus, part of a gestalt mind that was accidentally left behind on Earth. The Isolus doesn't mean any harm; it's lonely, having spent an eternity with millions of its brothers and sisters, and believes the drawings that trapped the children are bringing new friends for it to play with. The Doctor and Rose return to the TARDIS, where he attempts to create a device that will allow the Isolus to free itself and be reunited with its traveling pod. Unfortunately, the Isolus believes the Doctor has hostile intentions, and so Chloe traps him and the TARDIS inside a drawing!

Remembering that the Isolus crashed in the neighborhood and its pod radiates heat, Rose determines that the pod is stuck in the asphalt on the street (hence the cars coming to a standstill). She digs it up, to Kel's dismay, out of one of the newly filled potholes. The Isolus, which has already stolen the population of the Olympic stadium waiting for the arrival of the torch, prepares one last drawing - a picture of the Earth, which will trap the entirety of humanity within a drawing. Outside, the Olympic torch comes down Trish and Chloe's street, and Rose, realizing the Isolus pod needs a heat source, throws it at the torch; ignited by the torch's heat, the pod reactivates and summons the Isolus, so the two can be rejoined and leave Earth. The Isolus leaves Chloe, who is reunited with her mother, but also frees the terrible image of Chloe's father from the closet -- until it is banished when Trish and Chloe sing together, ridding the bad feelings and making the beast lose its form.

Everyone is returned from the drawings back to the way they were... except the Doctor. But he's alive, and grabs the Olympic torch and carries it into the stadium to light the flame. The Isolus leaves Earth and the Doctor can feel the love from the audience. Back on the street, as everyone watches the fireworks overhead, celebrating London's Olympic spirit, the Doctor realizes that there is something terrible coming... a storm is approaching...

2 - 12 ARMY OF GHOSTS

This is the story of how Rose (Billie Piper) died...

The TARDIS materialises in a playground on the Powell Estate to visit Jackie (Camille Coduri) who is overjoyed to see both Rose and the Doctor (David Tennant), but causes Rose concern when she says that she is expecting Rose's grandfather, Grandad Prentice, to come by any minute. Rose explains to the Doctor that her grandfather has been dead for ten years. However, a blurred, ghost-like figure appears in her kitchen at ten past the hour. Stunned, Rose and the Doctor run outside and see more ghosts all around the estate. Jackie follows and tells them that they won't be around for long as "the midday ghost shift only lasts a couple of minutes". Elsewhere in London, a technician pulls a huge lever and the ghosts fade away. A woman called Yvonne Hartman steps out of her office and informs her staff that they've just had an excellent ghost shift.

Back in Jackie's flat, the Doctor observes various TV cash-ins on the ghosts including Trisha Goddard, Eastenders and Most Haunted, and he asks where it all started. Jackie tells him she just woke up one morning and they were just there. The Doctor notes from Jackie's description of the cigarette smell of the Grandad Prentice ghost that the ghosts are using humans' desires in order to imprint themselves upon the Earth, e.g. Jackie's wish that her father was still alive fuels the non-existent smell of the ghost impersonating him. Back in the London office, Yvonne contacts Dr. Rajesh Singh (Raji James) who works in a lab somewhere in the building. She asks if he's seen any reaction from the Sphere, a huge black spherical spaceship, and he says it still doesn't exist according to his readings. Two workers on Yvonne's floor, Adeola (Freema Agyman) and Gareth (Hadley Fraser) have an office romance going on, and they sneak out to the section of the building under construction work for a snogging session. Gareth goes back without Adeola, and she goes into the section to look for him. She sees a tall, oddly shaped silhouette, which she asks about Gareth's whereabouts. It lunges at her and she screams.

In the playground where the TARDIS has landed, the Doctor sets up equipment to find the origin of the ghosts by triangulation. It works as a ghost appears in the centre and takes a swing at him before disappearing. The interruption in the ghost shift has been detected, and Yvonne has a worker tap the CCTV network to get visual. The Doctor goes back into the TARDIS, headed for the source of the ghosts, and the CCTV boots up, showing the TARDIS, which Yvonne and the worker recognise. The Doctor realises he's accidentally took off with Jackie still onboard the TARDIS, and they land in the office building with her complaining all the way. Noticing the armed guard outside, the Doctor says he's going alone, but Yvonne's knowledge of him forces him to bring out Jackie, introducing her as Rose. Rose stays inside the TARDIS as Yvonne welcomes the Doctor and Jack to Torchwood. They soon find out that Torchwood's motto is "If it's alien, it's ours" and so the TARDIS is seen being taken away to storage.

Yvonne tells Rajesh that the Doctor has turned up, and she, the Doctor and Jackie head down to the lab with the Sphere in it, hoping the Doctor will identify it. On the way, Yvonne explains that the Doctor has been the whole basis of Torchwood since Queen Victoria set it up following their encounter with the werewolf. Her naming of the Doctor as an enemy means that he is now a prisoner in Yvonne's eyes. They arrive in the lab and the Doctor immediately identifies the Sphere as a Void Ship, a ship capable of travelling through the nothingness between dimensions. He is told that it came through a breach in time and space that is in the office upstairs, and the ghosts followed it. The Doctor tells them to send the Sphere back to the Void, and demands to see the breach. Upstairs, he tells Yvonne to cancel the next ghost shift, which she does after a fair amount of bluffing by the Doctor.

Meanwhile, Rose has come out of the TARDIS, found a lab coat and brought the psychic paper with her, and is now trying to find out what's going on. She goes into the Sphere room, and tries to fool Rajesh into believing she is a technician sent to check up what's happening with the Doctor by using the psychic paper. Unfortunately, Torchwood employees have psychic training and so the paper remains blank to Rajesh, who calls security. He tells a man in a lab coat called Samuel to keep an eye on her. As Rose discovers, "Samuel" is really Mickey (Noel Clarke). Upstairs, the Doctor explains that the ghosts are bleeding through the faultlines caused by multiple ghost shifts, out of their world and into ours. Rajesh contacts Yvonne and tells her about Rose, and she asks the Doctor if he knows her. He tries to bluff but it doesn't work, and he admits that she's Rose. At that moment, the ghost shift continues regardless. Yvonne tries to order the workers to stop, but Adeola and Gareth, amongst others, are unresponsive.

The Doctor notices they're all wearing earpods, and says he's sorry to Adeola before deactivating her earpods with his sonic screwdriver. She dies, and so do the other workers, but it's too late to stop the ghost shift, unless the Doctor can find the signal origin of the earpods. He traces it to the construction area, where he tells Yvonne that their universe is colliding with another. He traces the signal to his left, and a Cyberman bursts out of the plastic sheet beside him. All around them, Cybermen burst out, and the Doctor tells the soldiers to do as they're told, as they're all frogmarched back up to the office by the Cybermen. They start to kill remaining workers as the ghost shift begins. Millions of ghosts now come through, all over the world, and one by one, they lose their disguise as ghosts and become Cybermen. In the Sphere room, the readings suddenly go wild as the Sphere suddenly exists. Rajesh unsuccessfully tries to contact Yvonne, as Mickey tells Rose that the Sphere has some kind of super-Cyberman in it.

The Doctor notices on a monitor in the office that the Sphere has been activated and asks the Cybermen where they got the technology to build a Void Ship. The Cyberleader tells the Doctor that it does not belong to them, and they simply followed it through the breach it made. In the Sphere room, Rajesh, Mickey and Rose gather in front of the opening Sphere, as Mickey recovers a concealed gun from under a table. He points it at the Sphere, but when he sees what comes out of it, he realises he's wrong. Rose is astonished by the sight of what's really in it. A black Dalek, followed by three gold ones and a strange device, flying towards them screaming "EXTERMINATE"...

2 - 13 DOOMSDAY

Rose (Billie Piper) surprises the Daleks with the fact that she knows about them, telling them that she, Mickey (Noel Clarke) and Rajesh (Raji James) know all about them and the Time War, leading the black Dalek to decide that they will be "necessary" and must not be exterminated. The black Dalek asks the status of the strange device, the "Genesis Ark". It orders the awakening of the contents of the Ark and that it must be protected at all costs. Upstairs, surrounded by Cybermen, Jackie (Camille Coduri) asks the Doctor (David Tennant) what was in the Sphere and what has happened to Rose. He promises to get her and Rose out of Torchwood alive. The Cyberleader then broadcasts on all wavelengths to the people of the world. He informs humanity not to fear, as they will be "upgraded", removing fear as well as sex, colour, creed and class.

The Cybermen invasion is met with military resistance, and the Cyberleader does not understand why humanity has not either acknowledged Cybermen as superior or embraced the prospect of becoming like them, and why they resist. The Doctor snaps that they are obviously going to meet resistance, as the Cybermen are in every street and home. Back in the Sphere room, the Black Dalek demands that the humans indicate who is the least important of them. Rose initially refuses, but Rajesh volunteers himself. He is ordered to kneel so they can learn about current Earth history. He says he'll tell them what they want to know, but instead they extract his brainwaves using their manipulator arms. He screams as they crush his skull. The Cyber-Leader has detected alien technology in the "sphere chamber" and sends two Cybermen down to investigate. At the same time, as Singh's burned-out corpse collapses to the floor, the black Dalek has obtained the information about a second species invading Earth. It, too, sends one of the Daleks, which it calls "Dalek Thay", to investigate. Both groups are feeding video information back to their respective leaders, and so the Doctor sees the Dalek as it encounters the two Cybermen.

Each side demands that the other identify itself, and the Dalek lets slip its identity when it proclaims that Daleks do not take orders. The black Dalek also notes that the steel cyborgs bear some resemblance to the "inferior species" known as Cybermen. The Doctor surreptitiously calls Rose using Jackie's mobile phone, confirming that she is still alive when she answers the call. Rose does not speak but keeps the line open, allowing the Doctor to listen in as the Daleks mention the Genesis Ark. The Cybermen propose an alliance to the Daleks: together they could upgrade the universe, but the Daleks refuse. Declaring that "hostile elements will be deleted," the Cybermen open fire on Thay, but their beams simply bounce off its force field. Thay fires in turn, exterminating the two before him. The Cyber-Leader speaks directly to the black Dalek, accusing him of declaring war. Both sides continue to taunt each other, boasting of their military might. As the black Dalek cuts off the transmission, however, he sees the image of the Doctor in the background, identifying him as an enemy. The Daleks turn to Rose, demanding that she identify him. Rose does so, noting with satisfaction that while the Daleks are confident of taking on five million Cybermen, the thought of one Doctor frightens them more.

Requiring more troops in order to fight the Daleks, the Cyberleader orders that Jackie and Yvonne (Tracy-Ann Oberman) be taken to be upgraded. They are, and Yvonne responds tearfully to Jackie's blame by saying she was only trying to do her duty. She is then converted before Jackie's eyes. Upstairs, the Cyberleader tells the Doctor that he is proof that emotions are self-destructive, and seconds later, a group of soldiers materialise in the middle of the office floor and they fire on the Cybermen with energy weapons. Their leader destroys the Cyberleader, and reveals himself to be Jake, (Andrew Hayden-Smith) Mickey's comrade from the parallel universe. Downstairs, the Cybermen sense that their leader has been killed and download new information on rankings. This offers Jackie the chance to escape onto the stairwell. The Doctor is surprised to see Jake, and asks him how he got there. Jake responds by throwing him a panel with a large yellow button on it and telling him about the alternate Torchwood. He presses the button, transporting the two of them to the Cybus Earth before the Doctor can stop him. Once in the parallel Torchwood Tower, Pete Tyler (Shaun Dingwall) steps out of the shadows and tells the Doctor that they're in trouble, and that it's the Doctor's turn to listen.

Rose and Mickey talk downstairs about why they are needed. She tells Mickey about how her touch regenerated a Dalek the first time she met one because she was a time-traveller, and perhaps this is why she and Mickey are needed; they have both travelled in time. The black Dalek overhears and tells them that the Genesis Ark is a piece of Time Lord technology that must be activated because it is "the future". The Doctor and Pete argue in the other universe about how continual crossing between universes makes the breach bigger, and both worlds will boil and fall into the Void if it continues. Eventually, the Doctor agrees to help, but not at the cost of abandoning his own universe to the Daleks and Cybermen. They cross back, and the Doctor calls a truce with the Cybermen, offering "a very good idea". The black Dalek demands that Rose activates the Genesis Ark, just as the Doctor enters the Sphere room. The Daleks and the Doctor exchange words for a while, and it is revealed that these Daleks are part of a group called the Cult of Skaro. The Cult's purpose was to think as the enemy thinks, to find new ways of killing, including daring to take on individual identities. They escaped the Time War in a Void Ship, taking with them the Genesis Ark. Throughout this scene, as throughout the whole two part story, the Doctor puts on 3D glasses every now and then and surveys things.

The black Dalek eventually declares that the Doctor is to open the Genesis Ark, a claim that he laughs off and then gives the signal to the Cybermen and parallel universe soldiers to burst in. Their guns have been modified to work on the skin of a Dalek, but it's still ineffective. As the humans slip out of the room to escape, Mickey falls and puts his hand on the Genesis Ark before escaping. Pete blasts two Cybermen that were about to grab Jackie, and the couple (divided by the Void) are reunited. As the battle rages on between Daleks and Cybermen, the Doctor sneaks into the Torchwood hangar, dodging the crossfire, in order to grab the two magnetic clamps seen in the previous episode. The black Dalek moves into the air and outside the building with the Genesis Ark, and the Doctor follows it to the top floor of the building to see what it's doing, still not knowing what the Time Lord technology is. As they reach the window, the Genesis Ark opens, and starts shooting out Daleks in all directions. The Doctor now realises it's Time

Lord science, and so it's a prison ship- bigger on the inside than on the outside.

As millions of Daleks descend on Earth, Pete declares the situation hopeless and tells everyone to go to the other universe and close the breach. The Doctor disagrees as he puts on his 3D glasses and looks out of the window. He explains that the glasses allow him to see the harmless background radiation around things that have travelled from one universe to another, and all the Daleks and Cybermen are steeped in it. His plan is to reverse the ghost shift, sucking everything that has been through the Void back into it before closing the breach. The Doctor tells Rose to go with Pete and the others back to the parallel universe, even though it means she'll never see him again. She refuses and although he sends her anyway, she comes straight back, and Pete refuses to let anyone go back for her. The Doctor and Rose then set up the ghost shift and put the clamps on the wall to prevent them from being pulled into the Void as well. The Cybermen head for the office floor to stop them, but they are met by a Cyberman carrying a large gun levelled at them. They question it before it opens fire. It says "I did my duty for Queen and country" and we realise that this is Yvonne in Cybernised form.

The Daleks and Cybermen are all sucked into the Void screaming, except for the black Dalek, which vanishes in an "emergency temporal shift." Halfway through, one of the huge levers nearest to Rose is partially opened, risking the cancellation of the process. Rose lets go of her clamp to put the lever upright, risking the cancellation of the process. Rose lets go of her clamp to put the lever upright. The shift is put back online and the lever is locked, but Rose is left clinging for dear life to the lever as the Void tries to consume her. She can't hold on, and she lets go, flying hopelessly towards oblivion. The Doctor screams in anguish, but right at the last minute, Pete materialises in front of the breach and grabs her before quickly crossing back. The Doctor looks relieved that she's alive, but now bears the knowledge they can never be together again. In the parallel world, Rose cries and screams, begging to be taken back, but the breach is closed now, and the discs have stopped working. The Doctor places his hand on the blank wall where the breach used to be, and Rose does the same on the other side in the parallel world.

Several months later, Rose wakes up, having heard the Doctor's voice in a dream calling her. She tells Pete, Jackie and Mickey, and they get in Pete's car and follow the voice. They end up on a beach in Norway called Bad Wolf Bay, and Rose sees an image of the Doctor, who tells her they've got two minutes left and that's it, forever. She can't touch it, but they can interact. She reveals she's working with the alternate Torchwood with her experience of aliens, and that Jackie is three months pregnant. She tearfully tells the Doctor that she loves him, and he's going to reply with the same. He gets as far as "Rose Tyler..." before the image expires and he disappears. Rose sobs and runs to her family... back to her new life without the Doctor.

Back in the TARDIS, as the Doctor deals with his grief, something catches his eye: a woman in a bridal gown, facing the other way, standing inside the TARDIS. She turns, and seems just as surprised to see him as he is to see her...

As the Doctor leaves Earth, the bow of the Titanic crashes through the TARDIS' wall. Though momentarily stunned, he quickly pushes some buttons to repair the TARDIS walls and push the ship out. The TARDIS then materialises aboard the ship. The Doctor soon learns the Titanic is a large luxury spaceship from the planet Sto, orbiting present-day Earth. He decides to stow away to enjoy the party, only confessing his status as such to waitress Astrid Peth, who has a desire to travel the stars.

Astrid has found her new job disappointing, as she is not allowed off the ship to visit destination planets. The Doctor cheers her up by sneaking her onto an excursion to London via teleport, along with couple Morvin and Foon Van Hoff, Bannakaffalatta a small alien with a red head, and the ship's historian Mr Copper, who gives a skewed description of British culture. However, London is deserted, except for a few people including the Royal Family and a newspaper seller called Wilfred Mott, due to the public's fear of a third consecutive Christmas attack.

Meanwhile, on the Titanic's bridge, Captain Hardaker dismisses all the officers so they can take a break. Only one, Midshipman Frame, refuses to go, due to regulations that two officers must remain on the bridge. The party returns to the ship just as Hardaker commits an act of sabotage by causing meteors to collide with the ship, wounding Frame when he attempts to prevent the disaster. Hardaker is killed in the resulting collision, as are the bulk of the crew and passengers. With the teleport system offline and the engines losing power, the Titanic is heading for an extinction-level collision with the Earth. The Doctor makes contact with Frame, and then leads a small group of survivors in a climb through the shattered vessel to reach him.

Complicating matters are the Host, information androids resembling angels that have been reprogrammed to kill everyone onboard. The Doctor's party is harassed by Host all the way, and the Doctor's sonic screwdriver proves to be useless against them. While fleeing, Bannakaffalatta reveals to Astrid that he is actually a cyborg, which he kept a secret on Sto for fear of being an outcast. While crossing a bridge over the engine, he saves the party from a Host attack by transmitting an electromagnetic pulse from his cybernetic implants, killing himself in the process. At this point, the Van Hoffs also die: Morvin falls from the ledge into the nuclear engines, and Foon subsequently commits suicide while pulling a surviving Host down with her, causing the Doctor to make a grim promise that no-one else will die. The survivors take Bannakaffalatta's EMP unit with them as their only effective weapon against the Host.

The Doctor sends the remaining survivors on ahead with the EMP unit and the sonic screwdriver, while he attempts to reach the place from which the Host are controlled. He convinces the Host to take him to their leader, who is the cruise line's owner, Max Capricorn, who is revealed to be mostly robotic. Having been forced out by the company's board of directors, he is seeking revenge. The collision of the Titanic into a heavily-populated world will not only break the company, but see the board charged with murder. Outnumbered by Host and faced with death, the Doctor is saved by Astrid, who had teleported to his position and rammed Capricorn with a fork-lift truck until both are forced off a precipice to their deaths.

Assuming control of the Host upon Capricorn's death, the Doctor makes his way to the bridge. Working with Frame, he uses the heat from entry of the Earth's atmosphere to try to re-start the ship's engines, but discovers that they are headed straight for one of the few places in London currently inhabited, Buckingham Palace, which the Doctor calls to evacuate before managing to get control of the ship.

With the danger over, the Doctor suddenly realises that there might be hope for Astrid after all. As she was wearing a teleport bracelet at the time of her death, her molecular pattern might still be stored in the teleport's system's buffers. However, despite desperate efforts, only a shadow of Astrid can be generated due to extensive damage to the system. The Doctor watches allow her to dissipate into atoms that float free into space, so she can at least fulfill her dream of exploring the universe, forever.

The Doctor teleports back to earth with Mr Copper, who is no expert on Earth, but a former salesman who lied his way onto the ship to explore the stars. The Doctor leaves him on the planet to build a new life, funded by the ship's expenses card, which contains £1,000,000. The Doctor then heads off in the TARDIS, alone.

DOCTOR WHO CONFIDENTIAL

Doctor Who Confidential is a documentary series created by the British Broadcasting Corporation to complement the revival of the long-running British science fiction television series Doctor Who. Each episode is broadcast on BBC Three on Saturdays, immediately after the broadcast of the weekly television episode on BBC One. The running time of the first two series was 30 minutes, being extended to 45 minutes in the third. BBC Three also broadcasts a cut-down edition of the programme, lasting 15 minutes, shown after the repeats on Sundays & Fridays.

Described as focusing on the human element of the series, Confidential features behind-the-scenes footage on the making of Doctor Who through clips and interviews with the cast, production crew and other people, including those who have participated in the television series over the years of its existence. Each episode deals with a different topic, and in most cases refers to the Doctor Who episode that preceded it.

Series 1 (2005)

The first season was narrated by Simon Pegg (who played the Editor in "The Long Game") and produced and directed by Gillane Seaborne, airing at 7.45pm. In addition to being broadcast on BBC Three, each episode of Confidential was also made available for viewing on the Doctor Who Confidential website. Initially, repeat airings of the series were the full length episodes; however, beginning with Episode 6, BBC Three broadcast fifteen-minute versions, entitled Doctor Who Confidential: Cut Down, containing only the new series-related footage. These more easily clearable versions since they contained no old series clips or pop music tracks, there were few licensing issues to overcome for commercial release were released on the Series 1 DVD box set. There are no plans to release the full versions of the episodes in any format.

Two documentary specials were made for broadcast on BBC One, incorporating material from the Confidential episodes. The first was broadcast on the evening of the first episode, "Rose", and was narrated by David Tennant, prior to his being named as the Tenth Doctor. The second was broadcast immediately prior to the final episode, "The Parting of the Ways", and was narrated by Pegg. These episodes were not given the Confidential title, and are therefore separate from the series proper. Thirdly, a special DVD-only episode of the series, containing behind-the-scenes information on "The Christmas Invasion", was also made by the production team for release on the set.

Series 2 (2006)

A second season of Doctor Who Confidential was commissioned to accompany the 2006 series. Mark Gatiss replaced Pegg as narrator. A special episode of the programme was produced for BBC's Doctor Who Night on April 9, 2006. Due to a wide range of schedule changes that either delayed or altered transmission of Doctor Who, the series aired at various times during its run. Unlike the first series, no episodes were webcast. These were also released on the DVD in edited-down format (once again subtitled Cut Down); the first episode of the season - "One Year On" - was not released to DVD.

Series 3 (2007)

A documentary special was made for broadcast on BBC One on the day of the 2006 Christmas Special, "The Runaway Bride". The special was broadcast with the Confidential title (albeit with "Christmas Special" attached), opening theme, and unique titles (with images from "The Runaway Bride") - it was narrated by the series three narrator, Anthony Head, and followed the creation of the Doctor Who: A Celebration concert. This is noteworthy as being unrelated to its companion episode although a brief preview of the episode appeared as part of the concert. It is also notable as being the only Confidential episode to appear on one of the 'vanilla' DVD releases.

Anthony Head (who played Mr Finch/Brother Lassar in "School Reunion") replaces Gatiss as narrator for this series, whilst David Tennant did the entirety of the series' tenth episode himself. The episode running length was increased to 45 minutes, with 30-minute and 15-minute versions also prepared for broadcast.[1] The 15-minute versions are available for download from the official website.

DOOMWATCH

The programme title stood - loosely - for the Department for the Observation and Measurement of Science, a fictional government department set up to watch and control advances in science. Doomwatch was headed by Dr Spencer Quist, an abrasive but incorruptible scientist who didn't give a damn for the vested interests of politicians and businessmen. He ran a highly strung and independent team, including the dashing duo, Dr John Ridge and Tobias 'Toby' Wren, who were constantly clashing with the authorities.

Doomwatch was the first 'Green' television drama series. It caught the stirrings of ecological awareness in the early 1970s and hit the target with a string of prophetic bullseyes. In this drama series, the first about dangers to Earth's Ecology, a group of scientists, aggressively ready to take on the Establishment and headed by caustic Dr Quist (John Paul), is set up as a watchdog over the rest of the scientific community. Stronger safeguards in the use of everything from chemical weapons and pesticides to new drugs and in vitro fertilisation are urged, while some lines of research should be abandoned altogether; the not too deeply hidden subtext appeared to be that scientific research is dangerous per se.

Pedler and Davis departed before the 3rd season, repudiating what they claimed was D's increasing lack of seriousness, but in fact from the beginning the hoariest SF Clichés had appeared beneath the display of social conscience; apart from its overbearingly moralising tone there was little difference between D and the mad-scientist movies of the 1930s and 1940s.

Doomwatch was the first 'green' television drama series. It caught the stirrings of ecological awareness in the early 1970s and hit the target with a string of prophetic bullseyes. The advances of science and technology promised a bright future, but here was a show that pointed out clouds not silver linings. As a word, Doomwatch quickly entered the national vocabulary; newspapers learning the new language of ecology saw in it a ready-made banner headline.

The series was devised by Gerry Davis and Dr Kit Pedler and evolved out of their private obsession with the inherent dangers to mankind in scientific progress. The two had worked together on DOCTOR WHO and, finding common cause, kept tabs on each new, devastating hazard, filling scrapbooks with examples on pesticides, defoliation, chemical and atomic waste, pollution, genetic experiments, noise and so on. They called their new series 'sci-fact' and, indeed, many of the issues it raised became mirrored in real headlines over the coming months and years.

It soon gained a huge following and its first series audience of 12 million was the record for a first run. There were other surprises, too. The death of Toby Wren, blown up while trying to defuse a bomb on a South Coast pier, astonished viewers who weren't used to seeing their TV heroes die. But it couldn't last. New faces came and went - including Dr Fay Chantry, brought in to give women a higher profile, but increasing emphasis on character conflicts was pushing the show away from its roots, and towards more conventional drama.

By the third season Pedler and Davis had left and were soon publicly disassociating themselves from the programme. After the third series' opening episode in which Ridge held the world to ransom with phials of anthrax, Pedler said he was 'absolutely horrified'.

'When we started it,' he commented, 'the clear object of the series was to make serious comment about the dangerous facts of science which should be drawn to the public. They have made a total travesty of the programme.' Producer Terence Dudley defended the show, insisting that the third series was confronting the issues, and it did cover such subjects as lead poisoning, the population explosion, pesticides and river pollution. But the end was nigh and Doomwatch didn't come up for a fourth time. Actor John Brown also starred in THE MASTER.

The better episodes were produced in the first series, when the programme was still under the guidance of its creators Kit Pedler and Gerry Davis (the duo responsible for creating the Cybermen on Doctor Who). The first series contained some of the more fantastic episodes including the pilot: The Plastic Eaters about a virus that eats plastic and Tomorrow the Rat about intelligent man-eating rats. Over time the stories became more and more mundane with episodes in the final series concerning such topics as student activists attempting to build an A-bomb and a debate on the effect of televised sex and violence.

The series was quite popular when it first ran in Britain and between the 2nd and 3rd series of the programme a feature film was produced based on the series. The film's producers, fearing that the cast from the TV show might not be big enough stars to create a draw at the box office, placed the series' regulars into supporting roles while recasting new characters with bigger name performers.

The producer for the series was Terence Dudley, the script editor was Gerry Davis for season one and two. The script consultant was Anna Kaliski, and the music was by Max Harris, the series was seen on BBC1. The various designers for the show were Ian Watson, Barry Newbery, Moira Tait, John Hurst, Stuart Walker, Graham Oakley, Jeremy Davies, Stanley Morris, Tim Gleason, Colin Shaw, Ray London and Oliver Bayldon. A third season episode "Sex and Violence" was recorded but was never shown, this was deemed so because of its use of real footage from an execution, it remains unshown to the present day.

In 1999, a second film based on the Doomwatch TV series was made, until the first film based on the series which was released as a feature film, the second film was made for Channel Five (UK). Tervor Eve and Amanda Ooms star in this entertaining thriller that carries a legacy of an earlier sci-fi series. Eve plays astrophysicist Neil Tannahil, whom Dr. Quist keeps trying to draw into his network of eco-warriors. When Tannahil realises his own work has been hijacked to create a nuclear waste disposal system, he realises he can no longer stay neutral. Shot through with foreboding and paranoia, this is an enjoyable grim suspense drama.

Quist convenes a conference of the world's top scientists to make recommendations on various dangers of pollution. Many of the delegates become ill, victims of what is thought to be food poisoning. Are they being got at?

Wr Terence Dudley

Dir Eric Hills

1 - 10 TRAIN AND DE-TRAIN

Doomwatch look into the mass extermination of wildlife in Somerset, and the person to blame appears, to Wren's horror, to be Ellis, his old tutor. But as Ellis finds himself slowly pushed out of his job by American 'de-training' methods, suspicion slowly falls on Mitchell's firm.

Wr Don Shaw

Dir Vere Lorrimer

1 - 11 THE BATTERY PEOPLE

Tough ex-miners in South Wales drinking gin instead of the traditional beer, giving their wives the cold shoulder and secretly turning to cock-fighting. It all sounds wildly out of character to Dr Quist and his team. They investigate the possibility that pheromones have been introduced into the local food, despite the fact that all this is occurring in the Minister's own constituency.

Wr Elwyn Jones

Dir David Proudfoot

1 - 12 HEAR NO EVIL

How do you combat unofficial strikes? One northern firm's answer is to use the latest scientific discovery to manipulate the lives of their employees - private as well as public. Quist is forced to fight them with their own methods.

Wr Gerry Davis

Dir Frank Cox

1 - 13 SURVIVAL CODE

An object is washed up near Byfield Regis pier on the South Coast as the RAF search for a plane which has ditched with three nuclear devices on board. To Geoff and Sam, the object seems to be a weather detecting device, so they start to strip it down for spare parts ...

"I've done it!

Wr Kit Pedler & Gerry Davis

Dir Hugh David

2 - 1 YOU KILLED TOBY WREN

"I'd say Quist's goose is cooked: in fact I'd say it's positively overdone!"

Toby Wren has been killed trying to defuse the device at Byfield Regis pier. Quist, riddled by self-doubt, turns to a psychiatrist for help to face the tribunal ahead, and fires Ridge who turns against him. It is left to Ridge to listen to Geoff Hardcastle when he arrives at the office with terrifying news about Professor Hayland's genetic experiments.

Wr Terence Dudley

Dir Terence Dudley

2 - 2 INVASION

"Are you saying that anything that comes up out of the ground in this place gets shot?"

Two boys go missing whilst exploring caves beneath a mansion and when Ridge visits the local village he is arrested by an army unit which has invaded the area and evacuated all the locals. It seems chemical weapons stored in the area have leaked into the water supply.

Wr Martin Worth

Dir Jonathan Alwyn

2 - 3 THE ISLANDERS

"You say if we go back our lives will be shortened. What if we stay here? Isn't it the same? The air you breathe here ... and the food you eat ... all the chemicals ... I don't know how much but aren't there poisons here too? Don't you die younger because of them?"

Recent earth tremors in the area of the tiny Pacific island of St. Simon prompt the government to evacuate the outpost's two hundred inhabitants to the mainland. But once in the metropolis of London, the islanders find they are joke fodder and curios. More importantly, the culture shock to them could be deadly.

Wr Louis Marks

Dir Jonathan Alwyn

2 - 4 NO ROOM FOR ERROR

"We could be on the verge of an epidemic, and absolutely no effective drugs to fight it with."

Doomwatch is approached by Dr Fay Chantry, who is worried about the work her firm is doing on the new 'wonder drug' stellamycin. It seems that several children could have died from its use ...

Wr Roger Parkes

Dir Darrol Blake

2 - 5 BY THE PRICKING OF MY THUMBS...

"It's ironic, really, that images as beautiful as these should come from the blood of violent men." Sixteen year old Stephen Franklin may have a slight abnormality of his hands, but suddenly he is expelled from his local comprehensive school after being involved in a laboratory prank. His father, journalist Oscar Franklin, claims that this is because of an obscure genetic defect - an extra Y chromosome - found after his son's blood test by a scientist called Ensor.

Wr Robin Chapman

Dir Eric Hills

2 - 6 THE IRON DOCTOR

"Without this machine I could not exist. But I'm sentimental and I would prefer to hold hands with a human being." A patient dies at the intensive care unit at Parkway Hospital when the computer treating him stops treatment. Dr Carson warns Quist that Dr Whittaker's modified 20/90 computer is able to learn and watch and take decisions on who should live, and who should not.

Wr Brian Hayles

Dir Joan-Kemp Welch

2 - 7 FLIGHT INTO YESTERDAY

"Is the Minister aware of recent tests conducted by industry and the Minister of Defence into the physical and mental dislocation likely to be brought on by rapid long-distance flights across different time zones ...?"

On the eve of battling major businesses and addressing a major ecological conference in Los Angeles, Quist is ordered back to London by the Minister. After his flight back he is very tired, and it is assumed drunk. The Minister and Ridge replace him, but the Minister falls foul of the scheming conglomerations.

2 - 8 WEB OF FEAR, THE

"Be careful! ... these spiders are infected. Don't let either spider or web come into contact with your skin ... Be very, very careful!" The Scilly Isles are sealed off following an outbreak of Yellow Fever on one of the islands, which at first is thought to be an outbreak of flu at an exclusive health clinic for top people. Quist's team gets permission to investigate and suspect that an experiment into yellow fever vaccines has got out of control.

Wr Gerry Davis

Dir Eric Hills

2 - 9 IN THE DARK

"Have you considered the implications once this gets out? Look what happened when they started heart transplants before they were ready!"

Quist travels to the south coast to investigate mustard gas dumped in the sea during the war. He learns that a colleague he respected, McArthur, is living nearby. But his friend's life is now only sustained by machines, and soon McArthur will lose all life signs completely.

Wr John Gould

Dir Lennie Mayne

2 - 10 THE HUMAN TIME-BOMB

"By the year 2000 there'll be over eighty million people living in this country. They'll want cars and places to park them. They'll want clothing and feeding, and education, and work to do ... to say nothing of housing ..."

A new age demands a new architecture: this is the call by property millionaire Sir Billy Langley at the Institute of Town Planning. But the battery idea of housing people in tower blocks has dangerous side effects, and Fay learns about the deeply depressing urban neurosis.

Wr Louis Marks

Dir Joan Kemp Welch

2 - 11 THE INQUEST

"How long is it since anyone in this country died of rabies? A ten year old child is dead, and they don't even know how she got it!"

At the noisy inquest into the death of Marion Duffy, the schoolgirl who died of rabies, Colin Bradley's recommendation that every dog within a five mile radius of Silby is destroyed is met with uproar.

Wr Robert Holmes

Dir Lennie Mayne

2 - 12 THE LOGICIANS

"Logic, in a child, is in many ways superior to that of an adult."

Industrial spies are blamed for a break-in at Beresford Chemicals in Hampshire. The police have no clues as to how the thieves penetrated the sophisticated electronic security system to steal vital papers, vital to the company according to Managing Director Jack Priestland. Nobody considers his son Malcolm, a mathematical genius taught by computers ...

Wr Dennis Spooner

Dir David Proudfoot

2 - 13 PUBLIC ENEMY

"At the rate we're going ... at the rate we're polluting ... overcrowding ... chemicals ... noise ... we've got thirty years. Thirty years of slow, dirty dying."

When a boy retrieving a ball from a factory roof and then a man at work on a chimney have their lungs burnt out, Doomwatch investigates pollution from a new chemical process introduced at the northern firm of Carlingham Alloys, with respect to the factory's waste disposal and ventilation systems. But the workforce are not happy that Quist's team are threatening their jobs.

Wr Patrick Alexander

Dir Lennie Mayne

3 - 1 FIRE AND BRIMSTONE

Ridge finds the pollution in the world too much to bear and resorts to new levels to get the governments to meet his anti-pollution terms. He steals phials of anthrax and threatens to destroy humanity. The hunt is on to find him before it is too late.

Wr Terence Dudley

Dir Terence Dudley

3 - 2 HIGH MOUNTAIN

"Every man has his price, and from what I've heard lately, Quist will come cheaper than most."

After the Ridge incident, Doomwatch is assessed. Quist finds himself invited to a large country estate in Scotland where he is offered a high post with power and wealth ... if he curbs his investigations into disocyanate. And the Minister feels he should have his own man in Doomwatch.

Wr Martin Worth

Dir Lennie Mayne

3 - 3 SAY KNIFE, FAT MAN

"A kid held a knife to my throat when I was six years old. Even at that age I knew he wasn't going to kill me; but I know he could. That's enough. A state of war exists."

Quist knows that 'Say Knife' is a provoking threat, and 'Fat Man' was the codename of the first atom bomb. A group of student activists break into a plutonium base and with their stolen rods construct their own atomic device.

Wr Martin Worth

Dir Eric Hills

3 - 4 WAITING FOR A KNIGHTHOOD

"What we have isn't ours to bespoil and pillage. We have it in trust ... not just for our children but for future generations of mankind."

When Ridge starts his recovery it is decided that he cannot return to Doomwatch. Paint is discovered stored in his garage and Quist suspects that lead poisoning from the paint could have affected his mind, leading to his actions. Minister Richard Massingham finds himself drawn into the debate over the dangerous chemical processes, and is then personally involved when a similarly affected man kidnaps his son.

Wr Terence Dudley

3 - 5 WITHOUT THE BOMB

"... free will is an illusion. We must manipulate man's behaviour on the pretext of ensuring his survival."

A new brand of lipstick is launched on the market, one using pheromones as an aphrodisiac to make the wearer compulsive to men. Quist and Bradley investigate the effect that pheromones can have on the behaviour of a person, for good and for bad, and its ethical implications.

Wr Roger Parkes

Dir Darrol Blake

3 - 6 HAIR TRIGGER

"Man isn't born free. For him ... the dreadful has already happened. He has to live with the nightmare, or rise above it. And natural evolution is too slow."

Anne Tarrant goes to investigate a research unit where patients with personality disorders and epilepsy are to have their conditions improved by temporal lobotomies. But there are side effects too. People can be balanced so that a single phrase can turn them into killers.

Wr Brian Hayles

Three teenagers are captured by Doctor Shrinker, a mad scientist, after their plane crashes on a remote island, the home and headquarters for the evil doctor. The three teens, B.J., Brad and Gordie, are held prisoner and used as guinea pigs for Doctor Shrinker's diabolical invention: a machine that shrinks objects. When reduced to the height of a mere six inches, the kids manage to escape the doctor's lab and later establish a base of safety in the woods nearby. The show revolves around Doctor Shrinker trying to recapture the "shrinkies" while the kids try to regain their normal size and escape from the island.

This series formed part of the Krofft Supershow which was hosted by a musician group Kaptain Kool and the Kongs and aired from 1976 to 1977. One episode of Dr. Shrinker was broadcast during each episode of The Krofft Supershow. For syndicated reruns the episodes have been paired up to fill up a half hour time slot, with episodes 1 & 2, 3 & 4, etc. being run together. The original broadcast dates for the show are unknown, as are the remaining directors, and some of the writers. The series was seen on ABC as part of the Krofft Supershow, in the US. The series has never been broadcast in the UK.

Dr. Shrinker was a TV series on ABC network, and was part of the first season of the ABC network's Krofft Supershow in 1976.

Dr. Shrinker was a mad scientist who creates a shrink ray that can minimize anything. Three young adults named Brad Fulton (Ted Eccles), B.J. Masterson (Susan Lawrence) and her brother Gordie Masterson (Jeff McKay), crash land their plane on an island. As they make their way to the only house on the island, they meet the aptly named Dr. Shrinker (Jay Robinson) and his assistant, Hugo (Billy Barty). Dr. Shrinker, in an effort to prove that his shrinking ray works, shrinks the three people down to six inches tall. The remainder of the series was different efforts by the 'Shrinkies' to get unshrunk, while Dr. Shrinker and Hugo want to catch the trio so that they will have physical proof that the ray works when they sell it to whatever world power wants to buy it. (The good doctor also implied that he would give the unnamed buyer the Shrinkies to use however he wanted as a free bonus.)

Each episode was basically the same. As Dr. Shrinker himself said in one episode. "I chase the Shrinkies. I catch the Shrinkies. The Shrinkies escape. It's a vicious cycle and it's driving me mad!"

Dr. Shrinker lasted only one season on the Krofft Supershow. During the second season, it was dropped along with Electra Woman and Dyna Girl. One episode, "Slowly I Turn", is available on DVD with the Krofft Box Set. Marty Krofft has said that he and his brother will be recording commentary for a DVD release of Dr. Shrinker.

DRAMARAMA

Anthology series which sometimes covered science fiction, but not most of the time.

British Anthology show from the mid 1980s made exclusively for children and shown on the ITV network. Dramarama lasted for many years on Children's ITV, but most stories concerned teen angst. The various producers for the series were John Dale, Peter Miller and Allister Clark. The episode "Mr. Stabs" was designed by Pamela Lonsdale. Most of the ITV regions contributed stories to Dramarama, the companies responsible for these five episodes are shown here.

DRESDEN FILES, THE

Based on Jim Butcher's best-selling novels, The Dresden Files tells the story of Harry Dresden (Paul Blackthorne), a regular-guy private detective with extraordinary abilities. While most people see assaults, kidnappings or murders as the work of people with a depraved indifference for human pain, Harry is as likely as not to see the work of supernatural villains.

That's because he's a wizard. The real thing (and the only one listed in the Chicago phone directory). Whether consulting for the police on seemingly inexplicable crimes or following his own cases, he battles dark forces with a wry sense of humor.

The Dresden Files was an American television series based on the books by Jim Butcher. It premiered January 21, 2007 at 9:00PM EST on the Sci Fi Channel in the United States and on Space: The Imagination Station in Canada. It was picked up by Sky One in the UK and began airing on February 14, 2007.

The series ran for a single season of twelve episodes, and has since been released on DVD. The Sci Fi Channel announced on August 3, 2007 that The Dresden Files would not be renewed for a second season.

Development

In 2005, the SciFi Channel announced that it had optioned The Dresden Files as a two-hour film and backdoor pilot. Nicolas Cage executive produces alongside Hans Beimler, Robert Hewitt Wolfe, Norm Golightly, and Morgan Gendel. It is produced by Lionsgate Television in association with Cage's Saturn Films. Production began during the Autumn of 2005. Originally, a Summer 2006 release was anticipated, but on May 23, 2006, a January 2007 airdate and 11 episode pick-up was announced on JBAAnnounce, the official Jim Butcher announcement list. It was confirmed the next day by Sci-Fi.

The pilot film was made from a screenplay by television writers Hans Beimler and Robert Hewitt Wolfe, and based on Butcher's novel Storm Front. David Carson directed and shooting took place in Toronto. It was announced in November 2005 that Paul Blackthorne had been cast in the lead role. The two hour pilot was originally intended to serve as the premiere, but certain last minute developmental and casting changes delayed its completion. Episode three (in production order) was aired in its place. Along with the re-shooting of several scenes, the two hour pilot has been cut to an hour and was the eighth episode to air. The full version will most likely be shown later but it will not follow the show's continuity.

Principal cast

Harry Dresden (Paul Blackthorne) - The main character of the series, Harry is a reluctant hero, a professional wizard who often helps the police with cases involving "unusual" circumstances and others who seek his help. Harry's mother, a powerful wizard, died when he was young. He was raised by his father, a stage magician. When he was about eleven, his powers began to emerge, and his uncle Justin Morningway wanted to take him and teach him about his abilities, so he murdered Harry's father with black magic when his father did not relinquish Harry to him. Bob makes reference to Harry "self-defensing" his uncle to death. Justin Morningway left a programmed doppelgänger behind to resurrect him if he died. It is later revealed that Harry inherited a large amount of money that he gave to charity and owns the Morningway estate, in which he refuses to live.

Lt. Connie Murphy (Valerie Cruz) - The Chicago policewoman who often seeks out Harry's help with cases that are hard to solve and may be supernaturally related - although she refuses to outright believe in magic, because such things do not fit with her "rules." She is dedicated and takes her job seriously, even going as far as seeking out the only wizard in the phonebook to help with cases. Lt. Murphy is a tough, no-nonsense woman who is divorced and has a daughter (Anna) who she says spends a lot of time with her father because of the long hours she has to work. Connie apparently has some romantic feelings toward Harry as she pointed out at the end of season one that if he kissed her again she wouldn't slap him.

Hrothbert "Bob" of Bainbridge (Terrence Mann) - The old spirit who is owned by Dresden. He was once owned by Dresden's uncle, Justin Morningway before Dresden "self-defensed" him to death. He advises Dresden on both personal and magical matters. Bob is an invaluable source of knowledge which Dresden taps to solve supernatural crimes. In the first episode, Bob is seen redesigning a "Doom Box," which he describes as "a supernatural jack-in-the-box" that contains and amplifies magical energy. The original Doom Box formula was included in a grimoire that Bob wrote while he was alive; the book had been in Justin's possession until Harry burned it. Bob's current state is a punishment: he was executed, his soul sealed into his own skull for all eternity, for using black magic to bring a sorceress he had loved (Winnifred) back from the dead several hundred years ago. The exact date of his death is unknown, but the large crack in his skull may be some indication as to the way in which he died; also, in the first episode he threatens to "start belting showtunes from the sixteenth century," suggesting that he is at least that old.

Warden Donald Morgan (Conrad Coates) - Morgan is a Warden of the High Council, the governing body of the wizarding community, and is assigned to the Chicago area. He is a stickler for the rules, powerful, and will often confront Harry because of their differing ideals and personalities.

Recurring characters

Det. Sid Kirmani (Raoul Bhaneja) - Lt. Murphy's partner on the Chicago PD, he is perennially skeptical of Dresden's abilities.

M.E. Waldo Butters (Matt Gordon) - a Chicago PD medical examiner who has assisted Lt. Murphy on several of her more bizarre cases.

Justin Morningway (Daniel Kash) - a warden of the High Council and Dresden's uncle, believed to be dead.

Bianca (Joanne Kelly) - one of the most powerful vampires in Chicago, and a member of the Red Court.

Ancient Mai (Jane McLean/Elizabeth Thai) - the High Council's "top dog" who handles contact with other supernatural powers.

Laura Ellis (Natalie Lisinska) - a waitress in a local diner, Harry's love interest in several episodes.

Minor magical characters

Scott Sharp (Dylan Everett) - a ten-year-old adoptee with magical talent who was targeted by a skinwalker.

Heather Bram (Kathleen Munroe) - a recently-converted lycanthrope who has left Chicago to face her new condition on her own.

Sirota (Kim Coates) - an earth-bound demon responsible for converting humans into hellspawn.

Sharon Mirell (Kerry Lai Fatt) - a former Chicago PD coroner who practices the very dark art of reanimation.

Dante Arrias (Nathaniel Stephenson) - a magically-talented college student who temporarily wielded the power to create doorways.

Amber (Christine Horne) - a Warden of the High Council, she helped Morgan protect Ancient Mai from a Kirtonian Dracoform.

Sgt. Darren Munzer (Yannick Bisson) - a daring Chicago detective who cheated death by stealing other people's second chances.

Departure from novels

Several major changes were made for the series, including:

Harry's "Blue Beetle" Volkswagen has been replaced with a Korean-war era Jeep.

While Bob exists as a disembodied voice emanating from a skull in the books, he can appear in a (spectral) human form that emerges from the skull in the series. He is also the ghost of a human wizard, rather than a spirit of air and intellect as in the books.

Murphy's name was changed from Karrin to Connie to avoid confusion with real-life Chicago police officer Karyn Murphy. Her character history was also altered significantly, including a daughter, Anna, who does not exist in the books.

Justin Morningway (known as Justin DuMorne in the novels) is Harry's uncle rather than simply a Warden who took him in after his father was killed.

Jim Butcher released the following statement on his website bulletin board in response to fan criticism of the changes: "The show is not the books. It is not meant to follow the same story. It is meant as an alternate world, where the overall background and story-world is similar, but not all the same things happen. The show is not attempting to recreate the books on a chapter-by-chapter or even story-by-story basis."

DUKSEDRENGEN

It was about a high school kid named Arno, who was in love with his classmate Loise, who was in love with her classmate Donny, who was in love with himself. Arno dreamed about being a superhero and knock out the competition from Donny, so he snuck into the school chemistry lab and made a potion that gave him superstrength. Next he got himself a suit and a superhero license and became Duksedrengen. His first heroic deed was to save Loise from two punks who were harassing her with a rubber spider that jumped when they squeezed an airpump. Then he ran away holding his arm out like Superman, making a SWOOOOSH sound.

There was also a comic book which was inspired by the series also called "Duksedrengen"

DUNE

AKA: FRANK HERBERT'S DUNE

In the 11th millennium SHADDAM IV., ruler of the Galactic Empire, rids himself of his competitor Prince LETO by giving him control of the desert planet Dune also called Arrakis; fully aware that its present owner, Baron HARKONNEN, will not give it up without a fight. The reason is that Arrakis is the source of the valuable spice, a substance produced by enormous and dangerous sand worms, which bestows special mental qualities on anyone who consumes it. A short while later Harkonnen does indeed succeed in ambushing and massacring Leto and his men.

Leto's mistress JESSICA, who is a member of the clairvoyant order of Bene Gesserit, manages to escape into the desert with her son PAUL, and after a long and dangerous march they finally encounter the Fremen, the long suppressed desert tribe of Arrakis. Impressed by Paul's clairvoyant abilities, tribal prince STILGAR takes in the fugitives. Very soon the Fremen are convinced that Paul is their long-prophesied redeemer, and Stilgar prepares him for his great task. While Paul is being instructed in the secrets of desert life he falls in love with young CHANI, who bears him a son. During the next few years the Fremen, led by Paul, wage a guerilla war of attrition against Harkonnen, who suffers heavy losses. Most important of all, they sabotage the planet's spice production: this brings Shaddam IV. onto the scene, who senses that the basis of his power is being threatened. The rebels on Arrakis want to finish off the imperial forces once and for all, but after a terrible battle which costs him almost all his men, Shaddam is finally forced to concede defeat...

It's a mixed blessing, but Frank Herbert's Dune goes a long way toward satisfying science fiction purists who scoffed at David Lynch's previous attempt to adapt Herbert's epic narrative. Ironically, director John Harrison's 288-minute TV miniseries (broadcast on the Sci-Fi Channel in December 2000) offers its own share of strengths and weaknesses, which, in retrospect, emphasize the quality of Lynch's film while treating Herbert's novel with more comprehensive authority. Debate will continue as to which film is better; Lynch's extensive use of internal monologue now seems like a challenge well met, and Harrison's more conventional approach is better equipped to convey the epic scope of Herbert's interplanetary political intrigue.

This much is certain: this Dune is a sumptuous treat for the eyes, with sets and costumes that were conceived with no apparent limits of budget or creativity. In terms of architecture alone, this is one of the most impressive films in science fiction history. And although the special effects fall short of feature-film quality, writer-director Harrison (who rose from an extensive background in TV) admirably tames the sprawling narrative that pits the opposing houses of Atreides and Harkonnen in a struggle to control the lucrative market for the spice melange. This is as accurate as any Dune adaptation is likely to get (i.e., there's no need for another attempt), and even then, it can be tricky to keep track of who's doing what to whom. Unfortunately, the film's biggest flaws are the casting of a nearly comatose William Hurt as Duke Leto, and a wooden Alec Newman as the messiah-to-be, Paul Atreides. These are regrettable shortcomings, but this Dune remains altogether respectable. That Frank Herbert would be impressed is perhaps the biggest compliment one can pay.

I consider Frank Herbert's "Dune" to be the greatest science fiction novel of all time. Others would disagree, but they would have to admit that it is up there, even if it isn't their #1. I'm not talking about the whole book series, I'm just talking about the original novel. So I'm a serious fan of the material.

The 1984 film adaptation was an abortion. The depth of this novel cannot be conveyed in a two hour film, and David Lynch was badly undercut by the producers, who changed things to match their own desires. In its defense, however, it contained very high production values, lavish production design, a stellar cast, and much incredible visual imagery that sticks in the mind. If you can just try to forget that rain falls on Arrakis at the end (without reason), the rock group Toto's score, the ridiculous and distracting attempt to allow the characters' inner monologues be heard on screen, and the truncation of many plot elements, you can stand it. If you don't know the novel at all, you could be lost.

John Harrison's new adaptation takes the breadth and depth of the book and really makes a go of it. He slowly unfurls the intrigues and action of the novel, allowing character to be built and introducing the nuances of the novel, sometimes in clever ways, at other times not so subtly. One gets the feeling when watching that Harrison really cares about the source material, and wants the viewer to be included in its richness. This causes it to be slow moving at times, but it becomes more and more engrossing as time goes on. For many elements of the film his production designers, who did a first rate job, borrowed heavily from the 1984 Lynch adaptation, especially in their portrayal of the Harkonnens, who are comic-book villains again without a dash of dangerous cunning. In other cases I was thrilled by Harrison's renderings - of the Fremen sietches, much more livable than in the book, and the scenes where Jessica becomes a Reverend Mother. I don't feel gyped by this adaptation - it feels proper.

The movie is hamstrung a bit by a lack of budget - considering the subject matter, $20 million for six hours isn't much, and every penny and then some is there on the screen. He makes do by using a lot of international actors, and filming in Prague and Tunisia had to help. The special effects are for the most part CGI and bluescreen and are very effective for the money spent. Production design is EXCELLENT, especially when reminded of the total outlay for the film.

The calibre of the cast in the first film was so high that they pose a hard mount for any followers to climb. The only one who is clearly better is William Hurt in the expanded role of Duke Leto, as opposed to Jurgen Prochnow in the original. Alec Newman is fairly new to the screen and was a bit old, and not self-absorbed enough, to play Paul as well as Kyle Maclachlan did in 1984, but he has developing charisma and his performance at times radiates Muad'Dib's complexity. Saskia Reeves is good as Lady Jessica, but once you've fallen in love with Francesca Annis as Jessica it would be hard for anyone to replace her. Of course the original's Patrick Stewart as Gurney Halleck, Dean Stockwell as Yueh and Freddie Jones as Thufir Hawat are insurmountable, regardless of the brevity of their roles. I rather liked the Scottish Duncan Idaho, although I don't know if his brogue will hold up well in the potential sequels.

The nicest thing, for a fan of the book, is to see so many of the great scenes of the novel finally brought to the screen that could not be included in the two-hour film. These add a depth to the proceedings that was only hinted at in the 1984 adaptation. I am thoroughly enjoying this adaptation, and hope that the expanded Lord of the Rings that will be released theatrically will have as much care as this one did.

I have already written a review for this film before, though on a second viewing, I felt the need to push the rating up to a perfect four stars. Why is this? Originally, I had stated the desert backdrops had annoyed me. The second time I viewed this film, it honestly didn't bother me anymore. Also, Barbara Kodetova, who I found rather annoying as Chani, is still slightly annoying, but the fact is that she plays a character who's lived a harsh, dangerous life in the caverns of Arrakis who's learned not to trust outsiders, so I can be sympathetic to the way her character is played. Besides, she's better than Sean Young was at playing the same role.

What I love so much about this miniseries is still the same as before. It truly focuses on telling an absorbing story and gives it the full treatment that David Lynch failed to accomplish. Yes, I realize the original film has a lot of fans, most of whom are quite rabid, but the thing is, I don't see them willing to go beyond their simple outlook of Lynch's Dune as the "best sci-fi film of all-time." That movie simply was NOT the best sci-fi film of all-time, for so many reasons it would take several pages to go through it all. I'm sure even die-hard fans of that film would find it difficult to defend a lot of that movie's faults, but they all seem more than willing to forgive it because they believe Lynch somehow gave that movie a startling and awe-inspiring surrealism.

Because this remake is rather conventional compared to the Lynch film, there's an immediate backlash against it, with many proclaiming that it fails to capture the depth of Frank Herbert's novel. Well, wait a minute, when did surrealism immediately equal to capturing depth? For that matter, who ever said that David Lynch even actually grasped surrealism? He seemed mostly content with stringing together "poetic" images into several dream sequences, all of which serve to do nothing more than constantly repeat what I was aware after the second time he gave us one of these montages.

John Harrison's adaptation sticks fairly closely to Herbert's novel, and the running time allows him to pace much of the film evenly without having to rush a lot of individual scenes. I'm not one of those people who consider making Dune into a 137 minute film impossible (as was the case with Lynch's movie), but if you do so, you'd better focus on as many vital scenes from the novel as possible to keep the plot moving ahead, which is not what Lynch attempted to do.

Harrison's film takes itself seriously, but manages to be highly entertaining and extremely enjoyable. At 265 minutes (And I keep hearing there's a version 30 minutes longer), this film is never dull for a single moment and the length actually helps make this an even more engrossing tale. By the end, I was actually disappointed the film even ended! Harrison brings soul and spirit to the project, and he's great contributed by a fine cast and crew. Acting-wise, Alec Newman is pretty good as Paul Atreides, taking on a tough role but delivering on most counts. Matt Keeslar is similar solid as his opposite, Feyd Rautha, but the best performance of them all is definitely Saskia Reeves, giving a turn that has impressed me even more the second time I watched this film. She is also, indeed, a very beautiful woman.

There's one aspect of the cast that I definitely much prefer over the original, and it has to be the appearance of each of the characters. Possibly because of Star Wars, Lynch felt the need to make his character as odd-looking as possible, and believe me, it was an incredibly distracting element on his part. Kyle MacLachlan's Paul Atreides had some damn big hair, Thufir Hawat had eyebrows the size of a Chia pet, and Dr. Yueh has a bare space in between his mustache (Very unintentionally hilarious). The cast in this remake are rather normal-looking individuals, and for that, they're made much easier to relate to.

Visually, both movies have their own distinct look which separates both, thus I doubt anybody would be confused as to which version it is they're watching. The miniseries is the definite winner in this department. While the ambition of the sets and special effects in the original were quite amazing, the whole movie was repellant to look at, due mainly to the ugly world that Lynch created. Harrison's movie creates a world that is harsh, but simultaneously exotic and enticing, no small feat. The visuals are also more breathtaking, with the planetscape shots equivalent of any recently theatrically released sci-fi film. The giant sandworms and the guild navigator are the best CGI designs, rendered amazingly life-like and simply mesmerizing to stare at. The production design is incredible, we're treated to palaces, cities, the interior of spacecrafts, and desert towns, and I would place this film even above The Phantom Menace in this category.

If you haven't seen either version yet, I think you've gathered which version I recommend. This Dune remake isn't completely perfect (In my opinion, every movie has at least a flaw) but it's the best representation of science fiction I've seen in years, and I honestly don't feel any other sci-fi/fantasy coming out above this with the possible exception of this miniseries' own sequel.

As anyone who has ever read the books will know, this is pretty much a direct adaptation of the book, compared to Lynch's 1984 interpretation. However, like the clichéd example of two similar yet incomparable stories such as the original Star Trek and The Next Generation, Lynch's Dune and the series cannot truly be compared.

Anyone who really appreciates Dune will know that the Lynch's film is an under-appreciated masterpiece of artistic interpretation of the book, and the series is a straightforward adaptation. I have read reviews of the series that have began '.forget the awful Lynch film.' at which point I have lost all respect for this person and not even bothered reading the rest of the review.

To respect the series for what it is, you must first appreciate the film. Dune is Shakespeare in space, however, the series (as does the book) takes the worst elements of Shakespeare such as pointless, unnecessary and over-stretched conversation that is utterly meaningless to the plot. The film has taken the best elements of Shakespeare such as the epic scripts and phrases such as '.fear is the mind killer' and '.plots within plots' and retained them, as well as powerful, memorable performances from utterly underrated and since Dune underused actors such as Richard Jordan, Brad Dourif and Kenneth McMillan, whilst skillfully dispensing with the unnecessary sections of dialogue and story.

And of course, there is the visual costume adaptation on Dune the film. Lynch's understanding was that an almost colonial feel was required, consequently the contrast in appearance from the troops of House Atreides to the stillsuits worn by the Fremen, to the uniforms of the troops of House Harkonnen, was startling and left a memorable impression. Lynch's stillsuits, quite frankly, was a demonstration of genius.

Compare it to the visual design of the series, and indeed what was described in the novel, and we have a more Arabian, flowing-cloak style, with brightly-coloured silks and cottons weaved around each character. Nice, but nowhere near as powerful. The series should be used as a device to aid in appreciation of the film. As a result of having to cut out sections of the novel in order to produce a film of manageable proportions, obviously Lynch was going to have to leave out portions from the book. The series represents a chance to see these in a visual adaptation. Granted the cast and acting isn't anywhere near as powerful as the film (the scene where Doctor Yueh is killed thinking he will meet his wife was pitiful compared to Dean Stockwell's performance in the film), but if you remember that the series should be treated as a study aid to the film, than you can appreciate it for what it is.

The Dune miniseries opens with a "flashforward" montage of action sequences. The realisation quickly dawns that these are the best scenes out of the 265 minute running time, and they're not good. Not good at all. Oh dear.

But let us not judge a book by its cover (even though that's exactly what we're being invited to do). Let's give Dune a chance to redeem itself.

Well, here's the expected watery opening on Caladan. But who's this petulant, strangely ugly man? Paul Atreides? This is Paul Atreides? This generic plastic puppet? And why does he look so old? What's that? The actor's only 25? Well, he doesn't look it, and that's way too old anyway.

But at least he has charisma, right? Wrong. Alec Newman is a stumbling, mumbling buffoon. I'm picturing him being discovered sitting in the dark in a remedial acting class because nobody liked him enough to tell him the class was over, and he's just too dumb to realise it. When your Paul Atreides has all the screen presence of soggy toast, and an acting range from "petulant" to "blank" your production of Dune is doomed from the start.

The other actors take pity on poor Alec though, and give uniformly insipid and incomprehensible performances so that he doesn't look too bad by comparison. At least, I assume that is what they are doing. Because I'm charitable, you see.

To be fair, they are clearly being given no direction at all. Random gestures, blank or inconsistent deliveries, missing their marks, it's all here. This is like a master class in how not to do it.

And sure, there are more elements of the book in this miniseries than there are in the 1984 movie, but there aren't twice as many, because of all the. Pauses. To fill. Time.

But we can forgive all this because of the small budget of $20 million, or only $5 million per hour. Nobody could be expected make quality science fiction on that sort of budget.

Except perhaps "Stargate SG-1" which makes do with $1.4 million per 50 minute episode, or "Farscape" at $2 million. And frankly I'd rather watch four episodes of either of those while being punched in the kidneys, than have to sit through the travesty that is Dune the miniseries again.

The last time somebody attempted to adapt Frank Herbert's much-loved novel Dune to the big screen resulted in both a commercial and critical disaster. As everybody knows, David Lynch was the man who helmed that infamous film, which has now gained a cult following but is still held in many regards as the ultimate big-budget sci-fi bomb (this dubious honor is challenged by Battlefield Earth). Thus, it's not with a little praise when I say that I loved this miniseries adaptation. Written and directed by John Harrison (believe it or not, he played the zombie that got the screwdriver in the head in Dawn of the Dead.), he realizes that a film that makes sense is far more important than looking weird and offbeat.

As opposed to the original film, the story is now very comprehensible. The focus is on a young man named Paul Atreides (Alec Newman), the son of Duke Leto (William Hurt) and Lady Jessica (Saskia Reeves) of House Atreides. Their rival is House Harkonnen, who are currently mining the valuable spice melange on planet Arrakis, which is also known as Dune. The Emperor (Giancarlo Giannini) has made arrangements to move the Harkonnens out and bring in the Atreides to mine the spice, but secretly has a plan to bring the Atreides down with the help of the Harkonnen.

Eventually, House Atreides is thrown into ruins and Paul and his mother are forced into a fight for survival on the desert, eventually encountering a tribe known as the Fremen, who are led by Stilgar. Slowly, Paul begins a rise in the ranks and becomes the leader of the tribe, and many believe he is the one to fulfill their prophecy. Paul grows accustomed to the tribe, falling in love with one of the native women, Chani (Barbara Kōdetova), and he proceeds to foil the Harkonnen in all their spice mining, as well as take back Arrakis and re-establish House Atreides.

There are so many things Harrison does well with the film that it's surprising he wasn't given a larger budget to work with. Plus, at a running time of 265 minutes I can say for sure that, while this certainly isn't a lightning-paced film by any means, I found myself engrossed during the whole film. As I said before, the story is no longer a confusing mess, but is now an absorbing epic given a great treatment. The movie takes its time developing the situations, the intrigue, and the characters and never fails to lose momentum.

With a production cost of 20 million dollars, I'm shocked by just how visually extravagant Dune is. The special effects are mostly great, and while certain scenes are obviously CGI, I never found them distracting. The production design is even better, as the architecture and the sets are among the best I've ever seen. In my opinion, with the possible exception of Star Wars: Phantom Menace, in terms of volume, quantity, and depth I don't believe I've seen a sci-fi film this visually awe-inspiring in many, many years (if not for all time). Among the film's best visuals are the giant sandworms, given a look that is ultimately both wondrous and frightening. Believe me, the special effects are infinitely superior to David Lynch's original.

Yet, what makes a great sci-fi film is the story and its characters, and I have already mentioned that this film has a fine story. The actors are perhaps the most inconsistent part of the film but are mostly very good. Playing the most important role is Alec Newman as Paul Atreides, who portrays the part quite differently than Kyle MacLachlan did. As to where MacLachlan was quite and reserved, Newman is more outspoken and active, and even sometimes quite moody. He delivers a fairly good performance. William Hurt as Duke Leto is fine, equalling Jurgen Prochnow's portrayal from the original. Those who do not match the original's performances are P.H. Moriarty as Gurney Halleck, who lacks the nobility Patrick Stewart featured, and Matt Keeslar as Feyd, who isn't nearly as fun to watch as Sting. As the Baron Harkonnen, Ian McNeice is suitably shrewd, intelligent, and calculating. Yet, the best performance of all goes to Saskia Reeves as the Lady Jessica, who superbly portrays a woman with immense love for her family, as well as a woman of duty as a Bene Gesseritt. She plays the role with strength and warmth.

For a sci-fi film there's a resoundingly minute amount of cheese in the whole production. Since David Lynch's rendition was sometimes a paragon of unintentional camp, I was a little unsure of how this one would turn out. Thinking of this, I am reminded of that final battle in the original in which no Fremen are killed (thankfully, it's done far more realistically here). Overall, the dialogue is quite well-written and the direction is very steady and sure throughout (part of that credit should go to the beautiful cinematography of Vittorio Storaro). Also worthy of mention is Graeme Revell's score, which differs vastly from Toto's; this one is a far more subtle approach, and though it's been getting some negative responses, I find it effective and well-blended with the material.

As much as I liked the film, there are some flaws. The desert scenes were obviously not shot in a real desert, thus it comes off looking a little cheap. A couple of scenes feel quite rushed, particularly a Harkonnen invasion on the Atreides fortress that just seems to end as quickly as it began, and a couple of characters aren't given quite a deep enough look. Plus, as a whole, I pretty much despised Barbara Kodelova as Chani, and she and Newman have very little chemistry. Hell, Julie Cox as the Princess Irulan strikes far more sparks with Newman in their brief moments together.

But overall, this version of Dune is likely to be among the best sci-fi films of the decade. Considering how awful some of the recent theatrically released sci-fi has been, it's great to see a film that breathes fresh air into the genre. There's always going to be a huge division among those who prefer David Lynch's film and John Harrison's, but for my money, this is the one true and epic version of Dune.

After the production's completion and before its premiere, the Sci-Fi Channel authorized writer/director John Harrison (I) to write and direct a sequel miniseries. Harrison planned to base the next miniseries on Frank Herbert's Dune Messiah and Children of Dune. Earned the Sci-Fi Channel's highest ratings to date.

UK video version (episode 1) was cut by the distributor (Fox Pathe) for violence (a man having his neck broken in a fight sequence) to achieve a "12" certificate although a "15" certificate was available for the uncut version.

The Region 1 DVD is the American TV censored version. All scenes involving nudity are edited out. Most of the scenes involving the sultry seductress and spy Farrah have been completely removed, which makes her role in the Region 1 version of the story almost inexplicable. Other scenes have been severely truncated or re-shot. There is a scene with Feyd Harkonnen in a bath being pampered by three women. In the Region 1 version the women are fully clothed. When Princess Corrino seduces Feyd Harkonnen for information, in the Region 1 version the scene fades out abruptly, implying that the Princess gave herself to Feyd for the information. In the Region 4 version, after extracting the information, the Princess presents a topless Farrah as a gift to Feyd, and during the 'love scene' that ensues, the Princess slips away. Considering that the Princess' virginity is the prize offered to both the male heirs of the Atreides and Harkonnen clans, this clumsy cut significantly changes the story in the Region 1 version. There is a scene where the Fremen remove their desert camouflage and uniforms, revealing their nakedness to Paul Atreides. It is a symbolic scene, for Paul sees that under their uniforms, the Fremen are people, just like he and his mother. The Region 1 scene is so heavily cut that Paul seems to be just looking blankly into space.

DYNAMAN

In order to help him save Japan from his evil former partners, Bernie Tanaka and Mel Fujitzu, Dr. Ho convinces five young adults to wear different color costumes, take code-names, wear gadget watches and ride around in a mech called "The Dynaship."

We are introduced to Doctor Ho who sets the stage for the series with the backstory on how Bernie Tanaka and Mel Fujitzu became totally evil, due to a freakish lab accident that disfigured their rugged good looks... (but who really knew about acid back then?). They went to the centre of the earth, with Dr. Ho's stolen gene splitting machine, which creates the monsters, the reptiles that go "wee," etc.

Enter our five good looking Japanese friends from all walks of life, none of whom own a timekeeping instrument; recruited by Dr. Ho to stop the production of "illegal music videos" by Bernie; Mel; Nigel Cochrane [lead singer who can't even sing in English]; and Cy Steinberg, the one eyed crab monster who was not only filming without permits, but who was also kidnapping orphan girls to be in the videos.

Dr. Ho, gave the time-impaired five the "gadget watches" which enables them to transform into the spandex-clad Dynakids, who after detonating several cases of color co-ordinated smoke bombs, they rescued the orphans, and eventually defeated Cy Steinberg and kept Bernie, Mel and Nigel from flooding MTV with cheaply produced videos.

Produced by Cali Alpert (assistant) , Debra Drimmer (assistant) , Cynthia Friedland (associate) , Trevor Grossman (assistant) , Tom Jaye (assistant) , Mark Phillips (associate) , Scott Samowite (assistant) , Eric Trigg (associate) & Patrick Whitley. Original music by Jon Spurney, Film Editing by Joe Baron, Arnold Davis, Bob Luke & David Pentacost, Sound Department - Paul Sucek - sound effects , Special Effects - John Grier-special effects, Other crew Monica Alves - script supervisor, Arnold Davis- assistant editor, Don Dickson - sound mixing engineer , Chuck Hammer - audio supervisor , Lianne Klapper - script consultant , Pat Southerland - assistant editor.

So began a television series unlike any other produced before the dawn of recorded time, or since. A series that was on the cutting edge of sound and motion at a time when the music video was the state of the art in television entertainment (until BABYLON 5 came along, of course).

KAGAKU SENTAI DYNAMAN (aka SCIENCE TASK FORCE DYNAMAN started life in 1983 as the fifth of a continuing series of "Super Sentai," produced in Japan by the Toei Co., where each year the shows change in characters and plots, but which all share the common theme of five or so young people who are recruited to fight evil monsters; while wearing brightly coloured spandex uniforms and helmets, and in each episode will get together to form one or more giant robots to eventually defeat the monsters, who for various reasons, grow up to giant size themselves, causing much property damage in the process. (the infrastructure costs in Japan must be enormous to rebuild everything in time for the next monster to destroy it...or maybe there's a section of Tokyo set aside for the exclusive use of giant monsters and mecha.

The original Japanese series lasted 51 episodes (one per week for a year with no reruns), with a more complex storyline than any we have ever gotten in the USA ...when suddenly and without warning, a Canadian comedy group with much time on their hands and an unlimited supply of mind altering substances (Jolt cola?) took this dead serious series and turned it into a parody complete with a rocking soundtrack which pretends such as Saban's Power Rangers has never come close to matching at any time since that series started in 1993. [though I really enjoyed POWER RANGERS IN SPACE and POWER RANGERS LOST GALAXY]

And thus television history was made.

Sadly, Dynaman only lasted six episodes and a one hour "Dynaman Convention" on USA's "Night Flight" (Dynaman had also been seen on Nickelodeon). I don't know why it was cancelled, except that it was probably due to two factors: that the producers had no rights to the music used on the show (mostly 1980's Top 40); and/or that Toei got pissed at those who made their serious series into a comedy.

EARLY EDITION

Stockbroker Gary Hobson's life is in shambles. He has just been thrown out by his wife, his boss isn't happy with his work, and things have never looked worse. Then a cat shows up with a newspaper filled with tomorrow's news. At first he goes through the typical greed-related emotions, but ultimately he realises he has a special gift and gets to work preventing tragedies.

At the end of the second season Fisher Stevens who played Chuck Fishmen left the series. Executive producers for the series were Bob Brush, Michael Dinner, Lillah McCarthy and Deborah Jay Levine. Co-executive producers were Ian Abrams and Richard Hues. The producer was Robert Rabinowitz, consulting producer was John Romano and the co-producers were Patrick Q. Pace and Vik Rubinfeld. The series was shown on CBS in the US. The series remained relatively popular in the US, but at the end of each season the show has been threatened with cancellation, mainly because it did not attract the 18-49 age group.

For season three Fisher Steven's Chuck Fishman departed for Hollywood, the character would return however for a two part story later on. Joining the show for the third season were Erica and Henry Paget from episode 3.2 who were played by Kristy Swanson and Myles Jeffrey. Swanson was the star of Buffy: The Vampire Slayer in the cinema. Billy Worley played the new bartender Patrick.

The series was slow to be picked up in the UK with only Season One being broadcasted first on Sky One and then on ITV. While far too many TV shows are centred on cops, lawyers or doctors, and are often based in major cities like Los Angeles or New York, Early Edition boasts an innovative concept and a refreshingly different locale. Filming in Chicago, the production team often battle against the elements - but the wintry, snow-covered city always looks tremendous on film. Kyle Chandler had previously had starring roles in the film Homefront and has had a recurring appearances in TV show Tour of Duty.

Mixing cosy and comfortable scenarios with daring and ground breaking ideas, Early Edition was a success. The series became a key player in CBS' schedule. The show has had a pottered history in the UK, the series was first seen on Sky One, where they showed the first season, but then stopped showing any more. The series was then promptly bought by ITV and shown on a Saturday afternoon slot, as filler material, never getting a good or consistent run.

In the UK there was a long gap between the showing of the first season and the second, almost two years had passed before second season episodes started airing on Sky One.

Season Four - Romance will be in the air including a flint with a detective played by Constance Marie but Kirsty Swanson who played season three's love interest Erica Paget, did not return, or her son Henry (Myles Jeffrey). Gary also has a new sparring partner in the form of Chicago Sun-Times photographer Miguel. Played by Luis Antonio Ramos, Miguel is extremely suspicious of Gary's excessive interest in the news.

EARTH 2

Earth 2 was a series set 200 years in the future about a group of human colonists out to settle a 'new world. In this future society, mankind had made the Earth uninhabitable through a depletion of resources, pollution, the destruction of the ozone layer and atomic war. Everyone now lived on space stations orbiting the Earth.

This change of habitat has had one big negative side effect. Over the generations a disease called the syndrome had begun to afflict more and more people. Devon Adair's son Ulysses was afflicted; with the disease Devon believed that the Syndrome had been caused by mankind's move to a sterile environment. She hoped that moving her son to the open air would cure him of his condition. Since the Earth was uninhabitable. Devon decided to look elsewhere for a new home. She found one in a planet known Only as G-889. G-889 was 22 light years away from Earth. Mankind had been aware of its existence for some time. No effort had been made to settle the planet since after generations of living in space stations everyone thought that was the only way to live.

Devon was able to find a small group of people who were willing to settle the new world. They decided where the ideal place on G-889 was to live and embarked for the new world. The journey proceeded well until they reached G-889. The spaceship was forced to crashland on the opposite side of the planet from where they intended. All on board, including several people who were planning to return to Earth, were stranded on G-889.

The colonists decided to make the long journey to their original destination. On this journey they found that their new world had an abundance of natural resources and also had several intelligent native life forms. The most prominent of these races were the Terrians. The Terrians lived underground in tribal communities and were only able to communicate with the humans in dreams. The Grendlers were a race of nomadic scavengers. They were traders and at times helped while at other times they hindered the colonists. The Koba were a race of small animal-like creatures. True took one on as a pet despite the fact that they were known not to be safe. The colonists found themselves thrust into the role of alien invaders. Although they had not come to G-889 to wreak havoc with the natives, they unintentionally often did.

Central characters in Earth 2 consisted of: Devon Adair, it was her vision which mounted the expedition to G-889, she became the colony's leader and the others looked to her for guidance Her son Ulysses was the boy in the plastic bubble. He had spent his entire childhood living in virtual reality and was only now learning about the real world Yale was a mysterious man who had been employed by the Adair family for two generations. Yale was a cyborg. He had an immensely strong robot arm and also had a computer chip implanted in his head. This chip contained vast amounts of information.

He did not know much about his past, since he had no memory about himself before he became a cyborg. Initially Yale had been hired to tutor Devon, a role he has now taken on for her son. John Danziger was a mechanic on the ship. Although he was not intending on becoming a colonist, he soon finds himself becoming one of the colonist's leaders. True was Danziger's teenage daughter who was a tomboy and was also on the trip with him. Morgan Martin was the government liaison who was on the trip to see the colony set up then return to Earth. Not wanting to be on G-889, Martin was least able to accept life on G-889. His wife Bess was a bit more able to adapt to life on the new world, Bess had been raised on Earth. the daughter of one of the few people forced to mine the few remaining resources there.

Dr. Julia Stern was the colony's medical officer. She was the product of genetic engineering, with the predisposition to become a doctor implanted into her before her birth. The ship's pilot was Alonzo. Alonzo was born over a hundred years ago despite appearing to be in his early 20's. This was due to the fact that he has spent numerous years in suspended animation while flying. Zero was a robot designed for construction work. Zero liked his work and was not all that smart.

Star Trek may once have been dubbed a 'Wagon Train to the stars', but this one-season drama deserves the tag far more. The cast is fine - NYPD Blue cast-off Debrah Farentino as the mission leader, Devon, Sullivan Walker as a philosophical cyborg, Clancy Brown as a rugged single-parent handyman, and for added sex appeal, Jessica Steen as a fresh-faced doctor who is also a Council agent, and Antonio Sabato Jr as a pilot. Also lurking menacingly, for a while, is Tim Curry, guest starring as a dangerous schemer who somehow got to the planet before them.

Despite a highly impressive pilot - the pre-crash sequences are excellent - Earth 2's problem is that it gets too repetitive too soon, and it's a hardy viewer who can complete the full season trek with them.

Unusually for a sci-fi series, its trio of creators, Michael Duggan, Carol Flint and Mark Levin had virtually no previous sci-fi experience. Duggan was a writer on St Elsewhere, Flint a writer/producer on China Beach and Levin the same on The Wonder Years, It shows.

American TV can be tough if a show doesn't deliver the ratings, and so it was with Earth 2. But it's hard to see how British TV would've even given a show 21 episodes if it wasn't winning an audience. Earth 2 aired in America from November 1994, and on Sky One in the UK, from 4th October 1995. Jessica Steen was also in the SF show CAPTAIN POWER AND THE SOLDIERS OF THE FUTURE. Executive producers for the series were Michael Duggan, Carol Flint and Mark Levin, the music was created by David Bergeaud. The co-producer was P. K. Simonds, the production manager and producer was Tony To. Associate producers for the series were Janace Tashijan and Chip Masamitsu, the music was created by David Bergeaud. The costume designer was Deborah Everton, the casting was by Megan Branman, C.S.A., the visual effects were by Dream Quest Images, the visual effects supervisor was Michael Shea.

The special effects supervisor was Kevin Pike, the creature and make-up effects were created by Greg Cannom. Creature effects supervision was by John Logan, the creature effects coordinator was Keith Vanderlaan. The set designer was Maya Shimoguchi and Suzanne Feller-Otto. The production designer was Victoria Paul and the director of photography was Felix Enriquez Alcala.

A solid network production, Earth 2 promised to bring high class SCI-FI back to the big three television prime time. While in part succeeding, Earth 2 suffered from some rather silly plot devices, and a very confusing alien race that rather than bring mystery or intrigue, just served to make one grimace with confusion. Not a good way to gain popularity. Okay, let's see if I have it (I know I am dense, but wow this is tough stuff).

The Aliens are part of the planet...or symbiotic to the planet or maybe it's both. Humans are able to also be symbiotic or part of the planet too (we have the leader's son growing up and becoming more and more "one with the planet" (Spock would be so pleased!))). Then there is the long lost prisoner daughter who has been raised by the aliens. She is a complete convert as she can, like the other aliens, drop down through the ground and be transported by the planet to some nearby caves. Or I guess.

Then the planet itself as these little portals that even mere humans can use to bip across many miles to the opposite hemisphere. Okay I just about think I've got that sub-plot. Now for another one. The colonists are by their mode of departure from the space station, a group of renegades. They have been sabotaged at about every turn. Also, they have been tricked into being sent to a prison planet, a planet with known weirdness. To top it off, it appears that Central (that's the bad guys back home) knew all along that this would turn out to be some kind of experiment in biology and adaption. Nice idea guys, why didn't someone tell us, whine the colonists. But hey, wake up! That is what colonization is all about. IT is problematic, however, that Central didn't tell them all the facts, cuz this planet is like, HOSTILE MAN!

Well I guess it wasn't that hard...but wait, there is even a third sub-plot. We have the G.P.-cum-psychologist-cum-spy who is linked by VR headset back to Central and while unhappy about it, being the connection back home unknown to the rest of the survivors. When she falls in love with one of the colonists (a hunk naturally), all can see it will soon be time for her to make a choice.

Now I think I am there, got all the ...BUT WAIT. No I'm tired by now. This show is like Hill Street Blues for the Space Race. There are so many little nits and dats, that you miss a show and you're light years behind. Like Babylon 5 (which is light years ahead of this show), you really need to either read the book or tape it all and go back and watch it front to back. Only in this case, you're not doing it to fully appreciate the quality of the work (as would be the case of Babylon 5), but to fully understand what the hell is going on! It appears the show has vanished however, and this IS a pity. Even with the confusion factor, there was much to say for the plight, solutions, and endurance of the characters. I also fell in love with the semi-popular female leader of the survivors. I guess I am a sucker for strong woman.

EARTH WARP

One hundred years ago, Aliens sent a probe to Earth. The purpose of this probe was to monitor the pollution levels of the Earth.

One day the probe surfaces and detects a high pollution level and signals the aliens. A plump little alien, called Ollie, comes to investigate the town of Southbeach because of the probe. The town is also suffering from a mysterious illness found in the children. The local children befriend Ollie, who informs them that the pollution in Earth's atmosphere is causing things created by his species - like the probe - to malfunction. He also informs them that the malfunctioning probe is going to explode and blow the town up.

Earth Warp was a story produced by the BBC as part of their Look and Read programme. It aired between January and March in 1994. The story was 10 episodes long and focused heavily on pollution.

Charectors.

Ollie

A plump little alien who comes to Earth to investigate after receiving a signal from the probe his species sent. He has the ability to turn invisible and has a mysterious ball which can be used to cure the illness.

Martin

One of the three friends who are amongst the first to encounter Ollie. His mother owns a hotel which is doing badly due to the mysterious illness. During the series he briefly betrays Ollie to try and save the hotel.

Amina

One of the three friends who are amongst the first to encounter Ollie. During their investigation into the pollution, she gets sick. This is cured by Ollie using a mysterious ball.

Jenny

One of the three friends who are amongst the first to encounter Ollie.

Lowin

A reporter investigating the mysterious illness. He is the one who persuades Martin to betray Ollie.

Mr. Belcher

A factory owner dumping dangerous waste into the sea, and attempting to conceal this activity. He repeatedly attempts to buy the hotel from Martin's mother.

EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT

AKA: GENE RODDENBERRY'S EARTH FINAL CONFLICT

Three years ago, Earth started picking up radio transmissions: "People of Earth, we are here to help. People of Earth, we are the Companions."

Seventy-one aliens calling themselves Taelons or "Companions" arrived and established diplomatic relations with every major world capital. They offered their vast knowledge of science and technology to help us solve our most oppressive problems. Famine became a thing of the past Global divisions waned. They quickly became an invaluable resource. However, a small group of individuals refuse to believe the Companions are as good as they claim and have organised an underground resistance. They managed to infiltrate the Companions' circle of human aides with one of their own, William Boone. As Head of Interspecies Relations, Boone is implanted with the Taelon technology and comes to play a pivotal role in the resistance.

This show was actually created in the mid 1970s by the late Gene Roddenberry but was scripted after he got the go ahead for the first Star Trek film. In 1996, Gene Roddenberry's widow Majel Barrett Roddenberry decided to send her husband's script to different studios in the hope that somebody would make it, and they did. Gene Roddenberry is the creator of STAR TREK and STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION. Lisa Howard was also a regular cast member in several seasons of HIGHLANDER: THE SERIES, as well as guest star roles in Forever Knight and ROBOCOP: THE SERIES. She spent three years on daytime Soap Opera Days of Our Lives, and has appeared in numerous shows, including Cybill, Hope and Gloria, Wings, Perry Mason and the aforementioned Suddenly Susan.

Despite his subsequent ventures in the field of science fiction, the late Gene Roddenberry is almost singularly remembered as the creator of STAR TREK. Following a formula popularised by BABYLON 5, Final Conflict's producers have moulded the concept around a five year story arc. However, on its debut, the series suggested none of the clever, intriguing storylines set to unfold throughout its first season. Hampered by embryonic special effects, weak characterisation, and confused foundation-building, Roddenberry's tale of alien-occupied Earth initially resembled the anaemic offspring of ALIEN NATION and V.

Fortunately the series' opening episodes were overflowing with sparkling examples of Roddenberry's imagination. If one element was responsible for seeing the show through its first faltering chapters, it was the abundance of concepts surrounding the Taelons. Cyberviral implants, inter-dimensional travel, organic firearms, and the enigmatic, energy-based aliens themselves were features that helped sustain audience interest until the series hit its stride.

The series has however not been without its problems, at the end of the first season actor Keven Kilner who played Captain William Boone decided to leave, he formed an integral part of the five year story arc the producers had set out for the show.

Based on a number of completed scripts by Gene Roddenberry—who quit work on this project to concentrate on launching the syndicated STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION and never took it up again—Earth: Final Conflict offers many of the same humanist themes found in STAR TREK. Since it has become the highest-rated new syndicated science fiction program, expect it to be around for quite a few seasons to come.

The series was first seen in the UK on Sky One. The executive producers were David Kirschner, Majel Barrett Roddenberry, Richard C. Okie and Seaton McLean. Co-executive producer was Paul Gertz, producers were Stephen Roloff and John Calvert, production design was by Stephen Roloff, executive story editor Malcolm McMurray, visual effects designer was Neil Williamson, costume designer Madeline Stewart and the music was by Micky Erbe and Maribeth Solomon.

Gene Roddenberry's Earth Final Conflict (to give its correct title) was the show that was doomed to fail. Based on STAR TREK creator's old scribbling, even the most ardent SF fans expected to be underwhelmed, but were pleasantly proven wrong. Taking a plot premise that had already done the rounds in V and ALIEN NATION, E:FC offered something different by adding characterisation to its scripts and using effects only when they were needed. The androgynous Da'an, misguided Sandoval and feisty Lili proved to be the best reasons to tune in each week, but by killing off lead character Boone in The Joining, E:FC reminded us that nothing is sacred under the Taelon regime.

Earth: Final Conflict was originally titled Battleground Earth, but was retitled to avoid confusion with Battlefield Earth, an upcoming SF movie based on the best selling book by L. Ron Hubbard. The series was shot in Toronto, Canada, in the very same studio that once housed ROBOCOP: THE SERIES. Production designer Stephen Roloff partly based the unique look of the Taelons on the Bio-luminescent Jelly-Fish. To enable the cast and crew to hit their stride, the opening episodes of Earth: Final Conflict were shot out of sequence. Miracle, the series' third instalment, was filmed first, followed by Truth (Episode 2), and then the shows pilot, Decision. Also watch out for the pictures of the distinguished gentleman on Dr. Belman's desk - it's none other than Earth: Final Conflict's late creator, Gene Roddenberry!

On paper the show read like a hybrid mish mash of ideas stolen from ALIEN NATION and V, but in execution it has proven to be anything but that, and developed its own identity within only a few episodes. One wonders how much the original pilot script written by Roddenberry has been re-written, because it does come across as very contemporary and fresh. There are fewer effects than expected, but those on display are state-of-the-art CGI, and used at appropriate junctions in the stories. I'm not sure that the fickle American audience would have enough patience to wait three seasons to find out what the Taelons have in mind for us Terrans.

Cube star Maurice Dean Wint and Forever Knight's Lacroix, alias Nigel Bennett, both sink their teeth into Live Free and Die and Pandora's Box; HIGHLANDER: THE RAVEN'S Paul Johansson files to the rescue in destruction, and just to make life confusing, Leni Parker plays the Taelons Ma'el and Quo'on in various first season episodes. Leni Parker has numerous theatre credits to her name, the actress has appeared in such productions as Million Dollar Babies, Lassie, The Sleep Room, Emily of New Moon and Screamers. Parker was the producers first choice to play Da'an in Earth: Final Conflict.

Season Three: Heavily criticized last season for its flights of fancy, the return of David Kirschner as executive producer for Season Three should see a more grounded show with a creation of added mystery. Robert Leeshock's Liam Kincaid will have his powers considerably reduced which means there will have to be more ingenious resolutions to stories than was the case during much of season two. The series has the advantage of having at least two years to run enabling storyliners not to worry about non-resolution of set-up this year, although most shows will also seem self contained. The season opens with Lisa Howard's Lili Marquette arrested for treason and the Resistance nearly crushed. Howard will be largely absent during the first half of the season, due to the actress having her baby. Her play will be taken by Jayne Hietmeyer (who appeared in season two of NIGHTMAN) as Renee Palmer, a double agent associate of Johnathan Doors who rescues Robert Leeshock's Liam Kincaid and Richard Chevolleau's Augur in the opening instalment. Forthcoming plotlines involve a look at the Skrills (largely ignored in season two) and more Taelon machinery falling into the wrong hands. The Next Generation's Marina Sirtis guest stars as a woman who seeks enlightenment through spiritual union with the Taelons. Hopefully Zo'or will not be quite so 'hiss the villain' bad this time out and the story arc will open some new Doors!

The closing moments of Earth: Final Conflict's second season left viewers with a number of mind-blowing questions to consider. Was the Human-Kimera hybrid, Liam Kincaid, set to follow in the footsteps of the series' original central character, the late William Boone? With both the Resistance and Da'an seemingly doomed, could anything stop the Taelons' conquest of Humanity? And, perhaps most important of all, had Earth: Final Conflict's revamped second season really fulfilled the show's true potential?

That final question was the one which filled Robert Leeshock's mind as he finished filming the show's second season finale, Crossfire, at the beginning of 1999. Several months later, during a Season Three pre-production meeting, the series' leading man outlined his hopes and fears for Earth: Final Conflict's future to its writers and producers. Much to his delight, Leeshock's views were shared by his colleagues, and have actually helped to shape the tone and direction of the show's third season.

"Every gripe about last season has been completely addressed this season," explains Leeshock, who previously outlined his thoughts on Earth: Final Conflict's second season in Cult Times #44. "You can't poke a hole in anything this season, which is really phenomenal.

"We went through a lot of pre-production discussions and just intellectual gabbing over the hiatus, and everything we spoke about seems to be coming to fruition. Things couldn't be better this season; there are a lot of really great, great shows. I remember when I saw the first show [Crackdown], I thought it was just brilliant, and wanted to watch it again." Leeshock's enthusiasm for Earth: Final Conflict's third season certainly isn't misplaced. Since the season's Stateside premiere last October, the American audience has embraced its increased emphasis on stand-alone, reality-based tales, as well as its renewed sense of mystery.

Viewers have also warmed to Leeshock's compelling work in the show as never before, thanks to an important revision of his character. Whereas Season Two saw Liam Kincaid armed with a special, allpurpose alien energy known as the Sha'karava, Season Three redefines him as an 'everyman hero.'

"The longer Liam is on Earth, the more he becomes human," elaborates Leeshock. "So at the start of this season, Liam experiences a loss of power and gradually becomes more human, which happens both in a physical and a psychological sense.

"Last season used Liam to raise this great metaphor about being part alien. I think the idea was to show that, as human beings, there are situations in which we all feel a little alienated. I thought that was really interesting. But somewhere along the way, the whole vision was abandoned... It's been so much more liberating for me to play Liam this season, because I can grasp it a bit more readily. And I think viewers can relate to him more as a human being."

Liam's revised characterization is reflected by his new wardrobe, which seems to have been designed to play-up Leeshock's 'hunk' factor. "Pretty soon I'll be walking down the catwalk over in Europe!" he declares with a hearty chuckle. "They have made me a little 'funkier' this year. You might pull out some of the clothes from a fashion makes me feel like we're really trying to create a character." On a more serious note, Liam Kincaid's new-found sense of humanity has serious ramifications for his interaction with the Taelons, especially his former mentor, Da'an. "Liam's relationship with Da'an changes incredibly," reveals Leeshock. "As a character, I've lost my innocence in regards to Da'an. Our relationship gets much more antagonistic, and our allegiances are really, really tested."

As Liam's struggle with the Taelons intensifies, the Resistance leader finds a potential new ally in the exotic form of Renee Palmer (Qayne Heitmeyer). Renee was designed to give Earth: Final Conflict an added sense of espionage (or, to use the late Gene Roddenberry's word, 'Spy-Fi'), and also provides Liam with a potential love interest. "From my character's perspective, Renee seems like a loose cannon," notes Leeshock. "It's hard for me to determine exactly how much I can trust her.

"But there's a lot of heat beneath everything. I saw the two of us on camera and I thought, 'Yeah there's something going on there.' Jayne's really great. When she's on camera, she basically sizzles."

Leeshock hasn't been short of attractive female co-stars this season. In The Cloister, he is joined by none other than SF icon Marina Sirtis (alias Star Trek: The Next Generation's Counselor Deanna Troi, interviewed on page 30), who plays the mysterious Sister Margaret.

"Marina Sirtis is great," declares Leeshock. "She's wonderful. I can't say enough about her. She is funny, she's beautiful, she's just phenomenal. At the end of the episode, I was like, 'We've got to have her back!'

"We talked a lot and I readily sought out her counsel," he continues, with a knowing grin. "She's very unpretentious, and was helpful in explaining the impact of the Roddenberry legacy on the fans, just in the Science Fiction milieu. She told me things about publicity, about working on Star Trek, and a lot of wonderful tidbits."

Sirtis's appearance in The Cloister is just one of many treats that Earth: Final Conflict's third season has in store for viewers. In addition to the dazzling visuals and excellent performances for which the show has always been famed, the season is packed with imaginative storylines, character development and jaw-dropping plot twists. While Robert Leeshock has always enjoyed being a part of Alliance Atlantis's SF drama, he believes that his work on Season Three has, for the most part, been richer and more rewarding. Perhaps even more importantly, he also feels that both Liam Kincaid and Earth: Final Conflict are now fulfilling their full potential. "It's going to be exciting to see how people respond to this year," he concludes. "But whether it does well or not, when I finish this season and go home, I will know on a personal level that we did something special. And in the end, you only have yourself to answer to."

Do not trust Da'an. He will betray you." What a difference eight words can make. For most of Earth: Final Conflict's second year, Da'an was clearly the 'good' Taelon: the Taelon who was willing to defy his own people to save Humanity from a fate worse than death. But things took a dramatic turn in the late second season instalment Defector, when the rogue Taelon Bel'lie denounced Da'an as the architect of the aliens' evil plans for the human race. While Bel'lie's claims were never verified, his words did cast some serious doubts over Da'an's true motives and intentions. And according to Da'an's real-life alter ego, actress Leni Parker, that sense of doubt is only set to grow during Earth: Final Conflict's third year.

"There's a lot more mystery this season," promises Parker. "What you see is not what you get this year, as opposed to last year. Da'an was extremely passionate about humanity in Season Two. Therefore, the ambiguity and mystery of the character was flushed away. I also felt very human last year, in terms of my behaviour and dialogue. I had a lot of action scenes last year, which I enjoyed doing, but I don't think it was fitting for the character. In a way, it undermined Da'an's grace and dignity. So for me, the challenge of this season is to inject those nice elements of ambiguity and mystery back into the character. And it's been really hard, because I realize that I have established a lot of stuff last season that people have gotten used to. But I think, as an actor, I'm back on track with my character."

To help her play the character appropriately, Parker has been given a brief outline of Da'an's story arc for both Earth: Final Conflict's third and fourth seasons. Although the exact details have yet to be decided, she is already extremely excited - and notably concerned - about what the future has in store for Da'an.

"I sort of know where I'll be in Season Four," she explains. "It all comes down to something Da'an said last season: 'I am a Taelon and I would never betray my own species'. That, for me, is, I guess, my key phrase. It's who Da'an is. It's very complicated, and it will be interesting to see how the audience reacts. I've thought about this. I've thought, 'Oh my fans. Oh the audience loves Da'an so much'. There's part of you as an actor who doesn't want to let the audience down and always seeks approval. I hope Da'an comes through in the end because I'm really afraid of what's going to happen this year. I don't know how Da'an will explain whatever turn of events happens." Naturally, as Da'an's role in the series is redefined, so too are his relationships with many of its characters.

Da'an no longer acts as Liam's mentor, and their interaction becomes increasingly hostile. He also shares much more screen time with Agent Sandoval, after their apparent estrangement during Season Two. Most intriguingly of all, though, an early third season episode makes a startling revelation about Da'an's relationship with Zo'or. "It's a big one," agrees Parker. "It's one of those moments that hopefully, if you're sitting at home watching it, you won't be talking through it! Because if you do, you'll miss that line. And if you do hear it, you'll wonder if you've heard what you think you heard."

"It's really exciting. It was an intense scene, but it was fun to shoot and provoked a lot of spin-off jokes" Listening to Leni Parker discussing Earth: Final Conflict with her customary eloquence, wit and passion, it's hard to believe that in the Spring of 1999 it was widely reported that she was planning to leave the series to become a mother. But, as the actress explains, her comments had simply been taken out of context. "That was sort of a misquote. I loved the interview, it was with my local newspaper here in Toronto, but then the Internet got wind of it, and then the producers and a lot of people here [on the show] heard about it... For me, it's in the future. If I did venture into motherhood, it would be a complete accident."

At least all those reports have stopped people thinking that the androgynous Da'an is played by a man, haven't they? "No, it still happens," replies Parker with a chuckle. "I still have people say to me, 'I'm so embarrassed. I thought you were a six-foot man!' And sometimes, I think people see me at conventions and they're not sure I really play Da'an. They think I'm Da'an's representative or something! But I always take it as a compliment." Reviewing her time on Earth, Parker points to Avatar, The Secret of Strandhill, Volunteers, Defector, The Cloister, Thicker Than Blood and A Little Bit of Heaven as her favourite Conflicts of interest to date. While she has been thoroughly delighted by the way the series has reclaimed its form during its third year, the actress readily admits that Earth: Final Conflict's first season will be hard to top.

"I think the first year was really special," she says. "Season One of Earth: Final Conflict will be like a watermark. It just set a precedent for a certain kind of TV. It had all the elements of perfect Science Fiction TV. It was a magical formula, which we can't repeat because certain elements are now gone, including Boone, and Da'an's relationship with Boone. "The show skirted in another direction in Season Two, and I think it will stay there, although it will be a bit more honed-in. But they've brought some very nice elements from Season One back into Season Three. It's really hard to say until the season's over, but I'm pretty confident that viewers will enjoy this season." Regardless of what the future holds for Da'an and Earth: Final Conflict, both the character and the show will remain dear to Leni Parker's heart.

The passing of time certainly hasn't blurred her love for Da'an, the series, or its cast and crew. Similarly, the benefits of playing the role continue to outweigh the inevitable drawbacks, such as the daily three-hour make-up ritual which transforms her into everyone's favourite Taelon. "Playing Da'an has made me ask a lot of questions about myself and who I am as an actor," she declares. "I'm also very lucky because I get to do something I love doing - I get to act every day. I have an obligation to the character and to the viewers. Obviously, it's a mixed blessing, because the costume and make-up are not the easiest things in the world to deal with. But I'm not going to look a gift horse in the mouth. This role brings a lot of joy to my life, and to the people who watch the show."

It Began in the closing moments of Season One, with the stunning revelation that he was keeping secrets from his Taelon masters. Then, during the course of Season Two, viewers learned that he had broken free of his Cyber-Viral Implant (CVI) and was no longer simply dedicated to doing the Taelons' bidding. Now, as Earth: Final Conflict's third season kicks in tv high gear, actor Von Flores promises that the on going guessing game about Companion Agent Ronald Sandoval's true motives and intentions will finally start to shed some answers.

"Sandoval really does have an agenda and we'll see more of it this year," he explains. "This season will show the initial execution of that agenda; we'll see Sandoval's first steps towards completing his goal. And all of that will be very clearly defined. "Viewers will get a sense that Sandoval is preparing for something. And although he's putting 100% of his efforts into making it happen, he's not sure that it's going to work. So you'll see that he's a bit scared about that; he'll become a little short-tempered and edgy. "As far as I'm concerned, Sandoval's storyline is looking really good this season. It should tie up a lot of loose ends and hopefully will leave everyone feeling satisfied."

Sandoval's hidden agenda really comes to the fore for the first time in Season Three's second instalment, The Vanished. This gripping episode reveals that the duplicitous Companion agent has been secretly implanting missing humans with modified CVIs, seemingly in the hope of sending them on reconnaissance missions beyond our solar system. His first test subjects include none other than Lili Marquette (Lisa Howard), whom he despatches into Deep Space. Like the show's audience, Von Flores can't wait to learn what events in The Vanished actually signify for his character. "I thought The Vanished raised some great questions, and the answers should be really interesting for the viewers," he notes. "That's definitely one of the juicy things we're going to explore this season. And what an incredible twist it all seems to be."

As Sandoval pursues his private master plan, his furtive behaviour comes under increasing suspicion from his Taelon master, Zo'or (Anita La Selva). Perhaps even more intriguingly, though, his relationship with the son he-doesn't-know-he-has, Liam Kincaid (Robert Leeshock), takes an unexpected turn following events in Thicker Than Blood. Flores places the early third season episode just behind the first season classic Sandoval's Run as his character's finest hour to date. "Thicker Than Blood was a lot of fun," he says. "It allowed me to play with the emotional baggage that Sandoval carries around. It's a quasi-Sandoval's Run. Although Sandoval's story in Thicker Than Blood was the B-story, it's still very integral to the character's development."

The development of Sandoval's character and his secret agenda have been just two aspects of Earth: Final Conflict's third season which have been warmly embraced by the show's audience. After a controversial second year which alienated many viewers with an unfocused and often over-ambitious story arc, Season Three has confidently re-established Earth: Final Conflict as one of the best SF drama series currently in production. "I think this year is fulfilling the potential we showed in the first season," agrees Flores. "The writers and producers have a clear idea of where they want this season to go, and this year's scripts contain a better balance between action, character, plot and drama. There have been a lot of really great scripts."

"Everyone's aware of what happened last season, and we all seem to have learned from it. And it's a credit to [executive producers] David Kirschner, Paul Gertz and Majel [Barrett Roddenberry] that they were open enough to make those changes." During his last conversation with Cult Times (over a year ago, in issue #40), Flores expressed his hopes that Earth: Final Conflict's second season would build upon the success of its remarkable first year. Unsurprisingly, he now readily acknowledges that his hopes for the season were largely unfulfilled. Similarly, he also admits to being completely baffled by much of Sandoval's story arc for Season Two, especially the character's involvement with his parallel self, the Immerian freedom-fighter Jason, and Jason's wife, Maiya (Montse Viader).

"I have no idea what that was all about," he sighs. "It was an interesting exploration, and Montse is a lovely, lovely person. But by the end of the season, there was really no point to that storyline." Despite the trials and tribulations of Season Two, Flores' compelling and beautifully understated performance managed to maintain Sandoval's position as one of Earth: Final Conflict's most popular characters. And the ever-exuberant actor remains as enthusiastic as ever about his involvement with Alliance Atlantis' top-rated SF series. "I still feel blessed to be working and doing a job that enables me to do the things I love doing, like travelling," he states. "I work with a wonderful cast, the crew are very talented and everyone at Alliance Atlantis are great people. I genuinely like getting up in the morning - unless it's four in the morning! And going to work and goofing around. And I get paid to do that!"

"I enjoy meeting the fans as well, and recently started to attend conventions, which has been very interesting. I'm amazed by how much attention people pay to the show. It's also been interesting to get pointers from the fans about the characters and hear their ideas about their relationships." With Earth: Final Conflict's third season currently in post-production, Flores is taking a well-earned rest from the covert machinations of Ronald Sandoval. Rest assured, though, that he plans to be back on the show's awe-inspiring soundstages when work begins on its fourth season later this year. In the longer term, he also has every intention of fulfilling his five year-contract with the production. Of course, by the time Von Flores shoot; his final scene on Earth: Final Conflict, it's anyone's guess where Sandoval's secret agenda will have taken him. But if you've been watching the show closely enough, it seems that you might already have developed an accurate picture of what the future hold for his CVI-enhanced alter ego.

"There was one fellow at a convention who had actually figured out what Sandoval's agenda was!" reveals Flores. "And this is something that probably won't be revealed until towards the end of the season - if not later. That was really shocking. But the clues are there, so I guess you could work it out."

If Zo'or decided to confess all his sins to a local minister, they'd probably have to make a day of it. And Heaven only knows how many prayers the treacherous Taelon would be ordered to say for his penance! Following his debut in Earth: Final Conflict's first season episode, Resurrection, Zo'or has ruthlessly claimed the leadership of his own people, and spearheaded the Taelons' attempts to enslave humanity. Along the way, he has undermined the noble Companion, Da'an, and been responsible for countless deaths, including that of the show's original central character, William Boone.

Yet throughout everything, actress Anita La Selva has always insisted that Zo'or was far more than just an out-and-out villain. And much to her obvious delight, viewers will finally get a chance to see her androgynous alter-ego in a different light during Earth: Final Conflict's third season. "This season really shows Zo'or in a different context," explains La Selva. "Last year, Da'an and Zo'or got into playing the roles of good cop/bad cop; Da'an was the 'good alien' and Zo'or was the 'bad alien'. But this year, there are a lot more levels to the aliens. Zo'or will still be up to his evil plans, but you will see a more vulnerable side to his character this season. Zo'or has to face a number of personal crises, and by seeing his vulnerability in those crises, viewers might come to realize why he is the way he is. So after seeing Zo'or's exterior personality in the first two seasons, we're going to see what's underneath.

"I'm very pleased about the way things have developed, because I felt we played Zo'or as a dictatorial, slightly domineering character to the max last year. We've infused more layers to him this season, which has made him much more interesting." As part of the character's increased complexity, Zo'or's relationships with several of the show's other protagonists take some unexpected turns. First and foremost, in the third season premiere, Crackdown, the Taelon leader forms an unlikely alliance with none other than his former arch enemy, Jonathan Doors (David Hemblen). "We are attempting to go into business together," elaborates La Selva with a grin, "but neither of us really trust each other - nor should we. It's one of Zo'or's latest attempts to get humanity to be more malleable, and it's given David Hemblen and I a chance to do some interesting stuff."

While Zo'or and Doors pursue their latest battle of wills, the Taelon leader will become increasingly distrustful of his once-loyal henchman, Companion Agent Sandoval (Von Flores). He also remains suspicious of the undercover resistance leader, Major Liam Kincaid (Robert Leeshock). Perhaps most surprisingly of all, though, Zo'or's regular interaction with Da'an (Leni Parker) will take a startling twist when the true nature of their relationship is revealed. "Leni and I had always been fascinated by what Da'an and Zo'or's history is," reveals La Selva, "so it was really good to come up with a piece of history for them. We had discussed different options with the writers and they then went for that particular type of relationship. It's interesting because it allows the viewers to see these aliens in a context which is not very different from their own."

La Selva's unbridled enthusiasm for Zo'or's refined characterization this season is matched only by her love for Earth: Final Conflict itself. Like all of her cast and crewmates, she firmly believes that the series has learned from the mistakes of its hit-and-miss second year and has produced a third season which is packed with "great stuff". She is also full of praise for her colleagues and the season's high-profile guest star, the "fabulous" Marina Sirtis (of Star Trek: The Next Generation fame), who spent a week in Toronto worshipping her Taelon counterpart during the making of The Cloister. In fact, La Selva's lone disappointment about Earth: Final Conflict's third season is the fact that both she and co-star Leni Parker were denied an opportunity to appear in the show as uncredited background extras - sans Taelon make-up.

"Leni and I were going to play humans in an episode, but the producers got scared and decided not to do it," she reveals. "They decided it was too silly. But I'm hoping it might still happen one day." Even without a surprise human role, La Selva has been given plenty of opportunities to shine as Zo'or. Looking back at her two-and-a-half years with Earth: Final Conflict, she points to Resurrection, Infection, If You Could Read My Mind, First of its Kind, Atavus, High-jacked, Defector, Crackdown, The Once and Future World and The Cloister as her character's most memorable offerings.

Another highlight was the scene between Doors and Zo'or in the second season episode, Isabel. Considering just how many great episodes have centred around Zo'or, it's ironic that La Selva only joined Alliance Atlantis' SF drama midway through its first season, and initially played Zo'or on an episode-by-episode basis. "I never thought it would snowball this way," she admits. "When I was originally hired, I thought, 'Two episodes yahoo!' It's all been a real surprise to me." Despite her enormous success and popularity as a character Earth: Final Conflict viewers love to hate, La Selva is seldom recognized as the actress behind Zo'or. Even now, she still meets people who assume Zo'or is played by a man.

"I was at the Toronto Trek convention a while ago, and a gentleman came up to me and said, 'I watch your show and I had no idea you were a woman,'" she recalls with a chuckle. "I've also had good friends and even relatives look at the show and not recognize me. One of my husband's relatives thought it was Da'an for quite a while! The whole thing's kinda funny." Regardless of whether they realize who is beneath Zo'or's prosthetic mask, viewers are set to be engrossed by the Taelon leader's activities during Earth Final Conflict's third season. And Anita La Selva couldn't be more enthusiastic about what lies ahead for Zo'o: as the season progresses. "The general arc for Zo'o this season is that he will become more vulnerable as he tries almost anything to get at humanity," she reveals. "He will become obsessed with this goal, and that obsession will eventually lead to a type of demise for him; one that will knock him off his high horse. "There are lots of different avenues to explore, and that will allow the character to experience a lot of different emotions. It should be very exciting."

1 - 1 DECISION

After Police Captain William Boone's wife is killed, he is recruited to work for the Taelons, a seemingly benevolent alien race that has been on Earth for 3 years. To do so he will be implanted with a CVI, a cyber viral implant that will expand his mental abilities and allow him to control a bio-weapon of unlimited power. However, before he can make his decision he is also recruited by the resistance, a group of humans that oppose the Taelons being on Earth. Led by Jonathan Doors, the resistance informs Boone that the Taelons are not what they appear to be. The CVI implant brainwashes its subjects into following the Taelon blindly, in effect controlling them. The resistance informs Boone they can remove this aspect from the CVI on the condition that he works for both the Taelons and the resistance. Boone accepts and now searches for the truth of why the Taelons are on earth and if they are responsible for the death of his wife.

3 - 9 IN MEMORY

Lili awakens as a beam locks on to the shuttle. A Jaridian enters the shuttle as a Taelon warship arrives, engaging the shuttle in battle. Later, Lili finds herself to be a patient at a military hospital. Dr Reed tells Lili that she has been in a coma and that her CVI has been removed. Liam arrives to tell Lili that she has lost 3 years of her life and that the Taelons are gone after the Jaridians defeated them. She also learns she is responsible for saving Earth and Sandoval is scheduled to be executed. After Colonel Bramson debriefed her, Lili learns that Sandoval's last request is to speak with her. She agrees when she realizes that this will be her only chance to find out why Sandoval sent her out on the shuttle. However, Sandoval only reveals to Lili that he now has his own resistance, made up of faithful Taelon followers, who will kill her. Meeting Augur, Lili finds out that he is the CEO of a large company with a wife and a child. Watching Lili and Augur, Dr Reed and Bramson discuss the need to win Lili's trust. That night, Liam thwarts an assassination attempt that Tate made on her life. The following day after security is tightened outside her room, Dr Reed suggests that watching Sandoval's execution may aid in Lili's recovery. The Jaridians developed an elaborate scheme to trick Lili into repairing a Taelon ID drive, changing the fate of Earth.

3 - 10 THE CLOISTER

The Companions are invited to join with a religious order in a ceremony. The group is made up entirely of women and seeks that special spiritual connection with the Taelons that will bring them to an enlightened state. Liam finds a former resistance member, Elizabeth, in the group. During the ceremony, the Companions share their energy with The Cloister. Worried about the possible security leak, Liam and Renee have to stop Elizabeth from telling the cult everything.

3 - 11 THE INTERVIEW

A reporter after being exposed to Taelon radiation seeks to expose the Taelons during a live television interview with Zo'or by airing secret Taelon video.

3 - 12 KEEP YOUR ENEMIES CLOSER

Zo'or and Liam crash in a remote area of Wyoming. Naraina Durrant, a resident of a local commune of natural purists known as the Children of the Earth, rescues Liam from his crash bubble and assists him in his search for Zo'or. Meanwhile Zo'or's bitter rival T'than calls an emergency meeting to propose Da'an take Zo'or's place as the Synod leader.

3 - 13 SUBTERFUGE

Zo'or discusses with Ro'am, the Latin American Companion, his idea to make President Thompson an advisor to the Synod. Sandoval approaches Tonio Arias, Ro'am's Protector, and secretly attaches a microchip to Tonio's skull. Ro'am and Tonio are killed while travelling in the ID Portal. T'than becomes suspicious of Zo'or because Ro'am's death shifts the balance of power in the Synod in Zo'or favour.

3 - 14 SCORCHED EARTH

Another secret Taelon manipulation is discovered.

3 - 15 SANCTUARY

When Zo'or contacts an ancient deadly plague for which there is no known cause or cure, Renee suggests to Liam that the virus could be used to create a biological weapon to fight the Taelons. She recruits Augur to research the virus and its potential.

3 - 16 THROUGH YOUR EYES

At the Taelon Embassy, Da'an shows reporters the Taelon Galactic Database. A sniper fires a Pulse Gun that penetrates the virtual glass of the embassy. Liam and Da'an are stunned to see gaping holes in the virtual glass that is impervious to all human weapons. Sandoval and Liam find the Hammerlin CD-57 Pulse Gun and the transducer. Sandoval tells Liam he does not want the media informed. Later, Sandoval informs Zo'or that he has leaked all the information to the media, as per their plan. Augur identifies Scott Pierce from a webcam as the shooter, but discovers that Pierce is a patient at St John's Neurological Centre. On the Mothership, Zo'or transfers his energy into Pierce's comatose body to convince humans to ban energy weapons that could threaten the Taelons.

3 - 17 TIME BOMB

Liam and Renee uncover Ma'el's directives to the Taelons.

3 - 18 THE FIELDS

Liam is asked by a Church of the Companions member, Devon, to help find his girlfriend, also a member who has mysteriously disappeared. Sandoval gives Da'an some energy dust. Liam and Renee join the Church as homeless people. At the church's shelter they find that the food has a Taelon additive. In an underground environment on Church of the Companions land, Volunteers force drugged Church of the Companions members to harvest Kryss, a substance necessary that is vital to Taelons survival on Earth. Liam knows that Taelon plants only grow in 98F degree temperature. They discover that humans are being used to grow Kryss.

3 - 19 APPARITION

While Carson Briggs works overtime at the New World Commonwealth Bank, a hopeless cry introduces a blue light that swirls around him. The energy light chases and tortures Carson, pushing him onto the floor. The energy whirls in circular motions around Carson, setting him on fire. At the same time, Liam dreams of the exact horrifying events that Carson experiences. Liam goes to the death scene. Recalling the events of his dream to a investigator, he offers a piece of evidence that had not yet recovered - Carson's ring, which designed with the bank's logo and the ancient Taelon symbol for impurity. At Carson's home, Liam discovers circular burn marks throughout the house. The blue energy appears, which leads Liam to a Taelon datalog. The energy takes the shape of the deceased Taelon Ku'don, who mutters the word 'exile' before disappearing. Suddenly, Liam hears loud banging and he hides the datalog as commandos storm the house. Liam overpowers one of the commandos and escapes as a commando. When Ku'don returns to haunt Zo'or, it is revealed that Zu'or is stealing profits from the Taelon co-ventures.

3 - 20 ONE TAEOLON AVE.

At One Taelon Avenue, Dr Sato and Joshua Doors begin a test with an ID shuttle prototype. The craft explodes, sending everyone ducking for cover while Sato calmly watches. Joshua tries to persuade Renee Palmer to leave Doors International and join him at One Taelon Ave. Jonathan Doors encounters his son in Renee's office and the two exchange opinions about business. Jonathan, concerned about his son, asks Liam to find out what's really going on at One Taelon Ave. At One Taelon Ave, Renee meets with Joshua while Liam is tracked by Control, a computer, while he investigates. Control tracks Sato and begins a bio-purge function. Sato tries to escape the energy walls, but they disintegrate him. Zu'or and Da'an review the security video of Sato's demise. Da'an is concerned that Control may be overriding the Taelon programming and creating its own agenda. Sandoval reports he has begun an investigation at One Taelon Avenue, but Zu'or orders him to close his investigation. Liam and Augur find that Control is using mind-controlling techniques on the workers. Jonathan dies after pushing his son out of the way of an energy wall that Control created to kill Joshua.

3 - 21 ABDUCTION

Da'an checks with Andrea Myzar on the decoding process of one of Ma'el's messages. Da'an is shot by Andrea. Andrea leaves the MotherShip with Ma'el's message relic. Augur's holo-computer finds that Andrea is Emma King, a mathematician killed 3 years ago. Liam retrieves the relic and discovers that humanity is the genetic link between the Taelons and Jaridians.

3 - 22 THE ARRIVAL

While Lili returns to earth after being tricked into giving the Jaridians interdimensional transportation, an auction is held at the Antarctic Republic of Rostok for some mysterious alien weapons. Sandoval must stop the bidding taking place while Liam and Renee try to find out what the weapons are.

4 - 1 THE FORGE OF CREATION

Lili Marquette gives birth to a half-Jaridian child, with the help of Taelon core energy, that may be the last hope for the Taelon and Jaridian race. Auger goes into hiding from volunteer investigations, an old friend of his J Street agrees to help Liam and Renee while Auger is on the run. EARTHFASTS

Two young boys discover a drummer from the past going through a tunnel and entering into the present, with him he carries a strange candle which never goes out and is cold.

The series was dramatised by Martyn Fox from a novel story by William Mayne. The peculiar mix of fantasy and time travel was shown on BBC1 at a 5.10pm slot. This was a more successful attempt by the BBC to produce a mystery suspense tale, with some good acting and a solid plot. On this occasion it looks like they actually spent a bit of money on this production.

Earthfasts was brought to Childrens' tv by the BBC with little fanfare. The first episode certainly tries to pack in many story elements, introducing adolescent leads Keith and David, standing stones which move mysteriously, and an 18th Century drummer boy out of Time. With Nellie Jack (John Cherry), the wan-dering drummer, returned to the mysterious tunnels in part two, I found it irksome that Keith and David did not set about digging their way in. After all, would any half curious teenager decide to leave this particular stone unturned? However, Keith and David are left with the candle, an ingenious plot twist, that Nellie Jack has brought out of the tunnels. The mystery deepens as the two boys begin to analyse its properties, trying to fathom how it burns without oxygen.

We are left tantalising hints about the stones which 'stand while the world rushes by like a wind', and by part five one wonders if so many disparate story threads can be brought together for a satisfying conclusion. There is the whole ghostly Arthurian army bearing down on Keith, and some gripping Arthurian hokum with a scene reminiscent of TIMESLIP as the boys emerge to a different Time where snow now covers the land. Fortunately only a brief break in Time has occurred, and we return to the status quo as the stones have re-appeared and Nellie Jack begins a new life at Swan Farm. Great fun for Fantasy devotees starved of new drama.

EDGE OF DARKNESS

On the surface it begins with a murder investigation with Yorkshire police detective Ronald Craven facing his most harrowing case - the death of his own daughter. But as he uncovers her mysterious involvement in an ecological group called Gaia, Craven reveals with author Troy Kennedy Martin called the 'silhouette' of modern British politics and Whitehall's relationship with America, and he opens a sinister can of worms concerning, defence, nuclear waste and the environment.

Helping him lever off the lid is a burly American secret agent, Darius Jedburgh, who, with Craven, breaks into a nuclear reprocessing plant, Northmoor, where he steals some Plutonium. This he subsequently reveals to startling dramatic effect in a speech to a NATO conference. Through the series Craven is driven by conversations with his dead daughter Emma, who keeps appearing to him as a pretty substantial spectre.

Gripping political thriller given an apocalyptic twist by some haunting mystical symbolism and its chilling nuclear theme. Kennedy Martin's inspiration for Edge of Darkness was the image of Gaia, the name of the Greek Earth Goddess and, more recently, the theory of former NASA scientist James Lovelock, that the Earth is a sort of self regulating living being maintaining the planet's inhabitable environment.

Central to his story was the idea of 'Man versus Planet' and the 'betrayal of Gaia' - evocatively captured in the series' haunting final image of the black flowers, symbol of the Earth's preparation for the apocalypse.

The producer for the series was Michael Wearing, the designer was Graeme Thomas, the photography was by Andrew Dunn, the music was created by Eric Clapton and Michael Kamen, the series was first seen on BBC2, the series has been repeated on UK Gold, many times.

Ultimately, Edge of Darkness is about the future of mankind, and whether humanity wants to work with nature or leave Earth behind for some techno-future among the stars. And fortunately they abandoned the original ending, where Craven became so in tune with The Green Thing he's transformed into a tree..

The shows director was Martin Campbell, previously at the helm of such action series such as The Professionals (1977-80) and Bergerac (1981-91). More notable was his work on Charlie (1984) which, with its intricate tale of trade union skulduggery, was a splendid dress rehearsal of Edge of Darkness.

One clever decision was to shoot Edge of Darkness using a telephoto lens which has the effect of squeezing the foreground and background very close together. The dramatic implication of this expresses the script's theme of conspiracy and oppression. Combined with some moody, noir-ish lighting it lends the production a very powerful visual style. In addition scenes such as Craven's escape from the MI5 computer room and Jedburgh's discovery of Terry Sheild's body are thrillingly visualised with the aid of a stedicam.

Even by the BBC's standards Edge of Darkness scored low ratings on its first screening. Because of its huge critical acclaim, however, it was repeated ten days later on BBC1, an unprecedented occurrence. Television critic James Murray, in the right-wing Daily Express, opined; "Political propaganda is always at its much dangerous when disguised as entertainment. Edge of Darkness was very, very good entertainment indeed."

With threats from Mrs. Thatcher about abolishing the licence fee, the success of Edge of Darkness couldn't have come at a better time for the corporation and marked the start of some sort of quality overdrive in BBC drama. The following year saw The Singing Detective, The Life and Loves of a She-Devil and an outstanding season of screen two.

Even if one chooses to ignore events in the real world, Edge of Darkness still has immense appeal. The story of a grieving father, seeking to understand the truth about his beloved daughter, is a deeply human one. It's also a damn good thriller.

EERIE INDIANA

If you head out of Cicely, Alaska, and take a left at Twin Peaks, you might find yourself in Eerie, Indiana. Tagged as a Twilight Zone for kids, Eerie, Indiana was a Nineties venture into American small-town weirdness that deserved better than its brief run. This eccentric community - described in the opening credits as 'the centre of weirdness for the entire planet', was the home of teenager Marshall Teller who, with his friend Simon, encountered all manner of oddballs, aliens and paranormal freaks. Even Elvis seemed to have taken up residence here.

Gremlins director Joe Dante was creative consultant on the show and directed several episodes himself, including the pilot about a body-snatching cult of kitchenware fanatics. It's that kind of weird. Other episodes featured a dental brace that acted as an antenna, tuning into the thoughts of dogs; a man who downloaded his brain onto an eight-track tape; veteran actor Ray Walston as an alien explorer who transports Simon to Pluto; a travelling museum of the parabelievable; a killer tornado with a personality - plus a tornado hunter (played by Max Headroom, Matt Frewer); a cashpoint machine that develops a crush on Simon; and a vast warehouse under the town which stores everything that ever gets lost in the world.

Throughout, the tone of the show was light, sometimes even matter-of-fact in its weirdness, rather than scary. It was also wonderfully original, coming up with some very off-the-wall concepts. In The Lost Hour, for example, when Marshall forgets to put his watch back one hour in the autumn, he finds himself trapped in a time warp with several other citizens who also forgot. Marshall was played by Omri Katz, formerly John Ross Ewing in Dallas, while Justin Shenkarow, who co-starred as his pal Simon, went on to become a resident in another offbeat town, Rome, Wisconsin, location for the Emmy Award-winning series Picket Fences. Joe Dante remained as the show's creative consultant.

After seven years the series was revived in a similar format with EERIE INDIANA : THE OTHER DIMENSION with a whole new cast, and production team, the series followed on from where Eerie Indiana left off. The executive producer was Karl Schaefer, co-executive producers were John Cosgrove and Terry Dunn-Meurer. Producers for the series were Jose Rivera, Gary Markowitz, Walter Bennett and Michael Cassutt. Story editor for the show was Matt Dearborn and the creative consultant was Joe Dante. The series was first seen in the UK on Channel Four, the series was shown between the 23rd March and 27th July 1993.

EISENBORGAKA: DINOSAUR WARAKA: KYORYU SENSO AIZENBOGUAKA: AIZENBORG

The dinosaurs have survived in secret to the present day, hidden in underground caverns. Their leader Ulul (Takiguchi), a dinosaur with an IQ of over 300, decided it's time to reclaim the surface world. Professor Tachibana is killed trying to stop them and his children Ai (Asagami) and Zen (Kami) are gravely injured, Tachibana's fellow scientists gave them cybernetic augmentation to save their lives, and they become the newest members of the anti-dinosaur taskforce Team D. They can also fuse together to form the Super Aizen cyborg when the day calls for a giant robot, which is rather often.

The follow up to BORN FREE, splicing stop motion and cel animation into the live-action sections. After episode 20, the dinosaur threat was replaced by Goddess the Evil Witch-Queen (Hazumi), who invaded with aliens from planet Gazaria.

ELECTRA WOMAN AND DYNAGIRL

ElectraWoman and DynaGirl led double lives, in their civilian identities of Mara and Lori they were two of the top reporters for Newsmaker magazine. Operating out of their secret headquarters, the ElectraBase, the dauntless duo would spring into action whenever they were warned by the crimescope that criminal activity was occurring in the area. The Crimescope was an ultra sophisticated computer developed by Professor Frank Heflin, who had also developed a wide array of weapons which could be activated from their ElectroComps, devices worn on their wrists.

Deidre Hall is best known for her role of Dr. Marlena Evans on the Daytime Drama, "Days of Our Lives.". Judy Strangis is best known for her role as Dyna Girl in "Electra Woman and Dyna Girl". She also had small parts in the original Twilight Zone ("The Bard"), The A-Team ("In Plane Sight"), and CHiPs ("Moonlight"), as well as the roll of Brooke on Batman and Robin series.

ElectraWoman and DynaGirl were a pair of beautiful superheroines who were featured as part of the Krofft Supershow. Somewhat reminiscent of the BATMAN tv series. ElectraWoman and DynaGirl was a wee bit campy featuring a plethora of over the top super villains for our heroines to battle. Also when the series was first run as two part episodes, it had cliff-hanger endings with our heroines in mortal danger at the end of part one. The series was shown on ABC in the US, and has never been seen in Britain, except for clips on Sky One.

A pilot for a new series of Electrawomen and Dynagirl was made in 2001, since this database is meant to include only series that made it to air, it would be inappropriate to have a separate entry for this show, therefore, for the sake of completeness, information about the remake pilot episode is contained below.

The producers and creators of the original series produced in the 1970s, were also responsible for this sequel made in 2001.

Produced by Marty Krofft (executive producer), Sid Krofft (executive producer), Makeup Department Joel Echallier (special makeup effects artist), Production Management - Brendan Ferguson (production manager), Second Unit Director or Assistant Director - Steve Eathorne (second assistant director), Sound Department - Michael Dittrick (music editor), Stunts - Suzi Stingl (stunts), Other crew - James Thompson (assistant location manager (pilot episode)).

Narrator: "The Coptic Eye-- the sacred mystic symbol of the ancient Egyptians. But the great Pharaohs, for whom it was so important, are all gone-- with one regrettable exception." In their secret lair, gazing at a replica of the Coptic Eye, are Electra Woman and Dyna Girl's old nemeses: The Pharaoh and the notorious Princess Cleopatra. The Pharaoh says that with the Coptic Eye's extraordinary powers, he could rule the world. The Coptic Eye is buried deep in the main chamber of King Tut's pyramid in Egypt. However, entrepreneur Mr. McLintock has recently spent billions of dollars to have the entire pyramid brought, stone by stone, 6,000 miles from Egypt to just outside the city, as a tourist attraction. By coincidence, Lori and Judi, ace reporters for Newsmakers magazine, are interviewing Mr. McLintock at this very moment. Due to an ancient curse, the tourists stopped coming-- now Mr. McLintock plans to "seal up the pyramid forever." Just then, Lori and Judi get a signal on their Electra-comps -- they are being summoned back to Electra Base by Frank Heflin, on a matter of urgent importance! At Electra Base, Frank tells our superheroines that Crime Scope has detected The Pharaoh in the area. Dyna Girl says, "Electra-wow!" Frank has also developed a new attachment for their Electra-Comps, a night-tracking device which he named Electra-Vision; it can "turn night into day." Our heroines punch it up with a bypass. Bright, dazzling light floods the room. Dyna Girl says, "Electra-blinding! Wow!" Cleopatra cuts in on the Crime Scope monitor with a broadcast; she tells them of the Pharaoh's plan to steal the Coptic Eye. It's a trap, of course-- but our brave heroines decide to use the opportunity to trap the villains. Our heroines speed to the pyramid in their Electra-Car; their Electra-scan reveals footprints of the Pharaoh and Cleopatra going inside; the door is open, even though the pyramid is supposed to be sealed shut. The villains lure our heroines into a dead-end chamber. Then the exit door closes, trapping our heroines inside. A 20-ton rock slab descends from the ceiling! Even at full power, the Electra-beams can't stop the rock of death! Electra Woman and Dyna Girl put their hands over their heads-- they push on the rock, but it keeps coming down! Back at Electra Base, Frank quickly figures that if he can eliminate certain Crime Scope functions, he can redirect more energy to their Electra-beams. Our heroines are down on their knees! Now they are laying flat on the floor, and the rock of death keeps descending! Finally, with the giant rock just inches above their heads, the extra power diverted to their Electra-beams pushes the rock back up to the ceiling! That was close! The Pharaoh and Cleopatra go to the main chamber; behind a secret panel, they find the Coptic Eye, which the Pharaoh then wears as a ring. Electra Woman and Dyna Girl catch up to the villains; Electra Woman puts a Force Shield around the Pharaoh. But using the Coptic Eye's hypnotic power, the Pharaoh hypnotizes Electra Woman, and makes her put the Force Shield on Dyna Girl! With our heroines helpless-- Electra Woman hypnotized and Dyna Girl in a Force Shield-- Cleopatra releases some deadly asps!!!

ELECTROMAGNET TASK FORCE MEGARANGER

AKA: MEGARANGER

AKA: DENJI SENTAI MEGARANGER

AKA: ELETROMAGNETIC BATTLE TEAM MEGARANGER

AKA: DENJI SENTAI MEGARENJAA

When evil Nejirejia Kingdom has emerged from Nejire dimension in cyberspace and started to invade our world, DATE Kenta(MegaRed), an ordinary high-schooler with attitude, and his four classmates- ENDOU Kouichirou (MegaBlack, the team leader), NAMIKI Shun(MegaBlue), JOUGASAKI Chisato(MegaYellow), and IMAMURA Miku(MegaPink), are recruited to be Megarangers-- the mighty heroes of our world, supported by the power of super science and technology. On their side are supervisor Dr. KUBOTA from World Science Federation, and gigantic robot named Galaxy Mega.

The MegaRanger team initially consists of 5 Rangers. A Red Ranger, a Black Ranger (the leader), a Blue Ranger, a Pink Ranger, and a Yellow Ranger. Approximately halfway into the series, the five Rangers are joined by a Silver Ranger. Each of the five Rangers have their own symbols. The Red Ranger's symbol is a desktop Personal Computer, the Blue Ranger's symbol is a High Definition Television, the Black Ranger's symbol is a satellite, the Pink Ranger's is a cellular telephone, the Yellow Ranger's symbol is a digital camera, and the Silver Ranger's symbol is a microchip.

The MegaRangers initially have an orbital space station and a space shuttle capable of linking together to form their first giant robot(or Zord as is called in Power Rangers) called the Galaxy Mega (called the Astro MegaZord for Power Rangers In Space). The robot can fight with either a sword, shield, or large gun. Later the MegaRanger gain a new robot called the Delta Mega which can link up with the Galaxy Mega to form even more powerful mecha. The Silver Ranger has his own Zord called the MegaWinger, a large vehicle that can operate on ground or in the air. Approximately 30 episodes into the series the MegaRangers gain a group of five vehicles which can combine together to form a new robot.

A virtual reality spin on the traditional sentai show, ironically one also attempted with the US version of the much earlier METALDAR in VR TROOPERS, Megaranger was more basic then the previous year's CARRANGER, perhaps a sign that the previous year's show overreached its budgetary limits. The special vehicles were limited to a series of numbered star fighters, which would off course combine to make robots such as the Super Galaxy Mega and the Voyager Machine. "Based on an idea by Saburo Yade," and featuring music in the original version from Toshihiko Sahashi. The next show in the super sentai chronology was the following year's GINGAMAN, adapted for the US market under the titles Power Rangers Lost Galaxy.

The chief writer of "Megaranger" series is TAKEGAMI Junki, whose prior works include Toho's tokusatsu TV title "Cybercop"(1988), in addition to other anime titles. The plot is a little bit more original. I like how Toei added the friendship thing and the other dimension concept, but it's still your average aliens vs. humans plot. The reason it's reminiscent to Jetman me is how both series' heroes used technology to fight off the baddies.

This is where Megaranger shines the most! The heroes are hilarious, but I like how they mature over time, but still maintain that immature side. Even Dr. Kuboto has his moments. In the case of Kenta, he never really matures through the series. He learns a lesson here and there, but he still goofs off most of the time. The villains are more serious than the heroes. They have good characterisation, but Dr. Hinera is so boring at times!

That's what kept it from getting a five star rating. Their suits also kept it from getting perfect for the same reasons as Gingaman. What gives it a plus is the tension between Gurail and Yugande. It gives it atmosphere. The hint of romance between Shibolena and Yugande shows that there is a soft (and i use the term lightly) side to the villains. Bibidebi is comedic with his usage of humor to lighten things up around their headquarters.

Another bright spot for Megaranger! Everything is good with the visuals except for the action. It suffers the same "disease" as all 90s Sentai series except in the cases of Dairanger and Gingaman. The fights are too short and most battles focus on Kenta. Everything else is great. Now the music. Lively, upbeat, and catchy! There are hints of techno in the opening which sets the show up as high-tech and fast paced. The ending makes you think the show is a sort of drama even though it isn't. It's still a nice tune, though. Overall, check this one out. If your into a Sentai series with a combination of all types of atmosphere (i.e. sci-fi, comedy, drama, etc.), you'll love this one.

Mega Red / Date Kenta

Kenta is the least hard-working of the Megaranger team. He is always trying to find ways to get out of studying and only wants to play the Megaranger game at the arcade. He is a hot-headed overconfident person who thinks he is strong enough to take anyone on. When he tried to take on Yugande all by himself, he got badly beaten and had to be rescued by his teammates.

During this fight, Mega Black received a serious injury and this taught Kenta the value of teamwork. He also is always looking out for pretty girls to flirt with, and loves to eat yakiniku. Kenta does have a gentle side, though, which he showed when he adopted Anglerfish Nejire's brother and raised it to be a kind creature instead of the Nejire Beast it would have been. Kenta and Shun have gotten to become close friends.

As Mega Red, Kenta's forehead symbol is a personal computer. He was told by Professor Kubota that the computer has no special abilities of its own, but it allows him to program any type of skill into himself, making him a potentially omnipotent warrior. His weapon is the Drill Saber, a swordlike weapon with a drill replacing the blade. With this weapon he can perform a diagonal slash called the Saber Slash. He can also do a jumping spinning thrust with the Saber called the Screw Drill Saber.

After his Drill Saber was broken by Yugande, Mega Red received an enhanced version of the weapon that can combine with his Mega Sniper to form the Drill Sniper Custom. It has a double-barrelled cannon attached to its tip that spins with the drill and fires a double blast of powerful energy.

Mega Black / Endou Kouichiro

Kouichiro is a very dedicated and intelligent student who is the brains and leader of the Megaranger group. He is always arguing with Kenta because of Kenta's apparent laziness. Kouichiro consistently gets top grades in his classes, and gets extremely concerned if he doesn't. When he received a low grade on an exam for skipping a problem (which caused all subsequent answers to be wrong), he became so distraught that he almost resigned from school, thinking that he couldn't handle both school and his duty as a Megaranger. It took an oversleeping, easygoing teacher to teach him that one test is only a small part of life, and that as long as he doesn't give up, he hasn't lost. He also is very conscious of nature and protecting the environment. He befriended a forest spirit and was the only one who could see him, helping him protect the forest from Mushroom Nejire. Kouichiro has a younger brother named Shinji who plays soccer, and Kouichiro himself is a talented soccer player, performing the "Miracle Shoot" to attack Porcupine Nejilar by kicking a soccer ball bomb so that it flew past him and then turned in midair to hit him from behind.

Mega Black's forehead symbol is a communications satellite. This allows him to use several searching abilities, including the "Satellite Search" and "Satellite Scan" to trace communications sources and transmissions. His weapon is a staff with a crescent shaped blade on one end, called the Mega Rod. With the Mega Rod, he can perform the Rod Break, a diagonal slash with the blade end of the rod.

Mega Blue / Namiki Shun

Shun dreams of becoming a computer graphics artist, and is somewhat of a loner. His artwork is very important to him, as is the flute used by his deceased mother, a famous flute player. On the anniversary of her death, he spends time by himself remembering his mother. He and Kenta have become close friends. Shun is adept at devising combat strategies, such as reasoning that the Nejirangers would not be able to fight as well if they did not engage their correspondingly-colored Megaranger opponents.

Mega Blue's symbol is a digital television. This allows him to create three-dimensional holographic images of anything he can think of. He can also use a skill called "Virtual Vision", in which he sends an opponent into a movie-like world where the opponent is attacked by the characters in the movie. His weapon is a single small axe called the Mega Tomahawk. With this, he can perform a spinning slash called the Tomahawk Hurricane.

Mega Yellow / Jougasaki Chisato

Chisato wants to become a photographer, and often sets up her camera on rooftops to take panoramic views of the city. She enjoys taking pictures of people and has no tolerance for people who steal things or bully children. She is attracted to Kouichirou. She also enjoys singing and although she has wanted to participate in the school festival singing contest every year, something has always happened to keep her from being in it (appendicitis one year, a fever the next, and in the latest festival Canary Nejilar switched her voice with his own old-man's voice and she couldn't get it returned until after the contest. However, her classmates and teacher wanted to hear her sing anyway, and so she sang for them).

Mega Yellow's symbol is a digital camera. She can use this to telescopically search for things using the "Digicam Search". Her weapon is a slingshot-like weapon called the Mega Sling, which fires balls of energy. Mega Yellow also can turn her forearm into a blade of energy, the "Blade Arm", which she first used when Shibolena had deprived her of her weapons.

[In case anyone is interested, Chisato is my favorite Megaranger.]

Mega Pink / Imamura Miku

Miku is a cheerful girl who hates class as much as Kenta (so the two get along quite well), but actually is attracted to Shun. She and Kenta often shirk studying together, and head for the arcade or to get some food. She is very bright and cheerful in personality, although she can get so caught up in something she likes that she is oblivious to anything else. She loves to eat but is self-conscious about her weight, often vowing to go on a diet but not going through with it.

Mega Pink's symbol is a cellular phone. By using the "Telephone Search", she can track and analyse soundwaves. Mega Pink's weapon is a parabolic dish-like gun called the Mega Capture, that can fire supersonic soundwaves.

Professor Kubota

Kubota Eikichi was in charge of the Megaranger program, using the Megaranger video game as a test to find people skilled enough to become the Megarangers. He is a member of an international scientific organisation called INET, and though he knew of the threat of Nejirejia, when they attacked the INET base, Kubota was caught off guard and had no choice but to give the 5 Digitizers to 5 highschool students who were in the INET building at the time. These 5 became the Megarangers, and they still often need to ask Kubota for help in times of crisis. He and the INET team are based on the Mega Ship, a gigantic spaceship orbiting the Earth, which changes into the Galaxy Mega when giant Nejire Beasts attack.

Mega Silver / Hayakawa Yuusaku

Yuusaku is a mysterious man who appeared out of nowhere and shocked the Megarangers when he revealed that he knew their secret identities. At first just an observer, when the Megarangers were in trouble he transformed into Mega Silver and saved them. Yuusaku is actually the chief of an INET space project, although he frequently leaves his work to help the Megarangers. He is actually more concerned about being Mega Silver than with his INET work. He often receives phone calls from his space research team on his cellular phone / changing item, the Keitaizer ("keitai-denwa" is Japanese for "cellular phone").

The Mega Silver suit is actually the prototype for the Megarangers' Digital Suits. His forehead symbol is a microchip. His weapon is called the Silver Blazer, a device that can clip onto his arm and change into either a gun mode or a sword mode. His final attack with this device, the Blazer Impact, is a barrage of blasts from its gun mode as Mega Silver runs towards the enemy; but when he gets near, he changes the Silver Blazer to sword mode and slashes the enemy with it. At first, Yuusaku could only remain as Mega Silver for 2&1/2 minutes before automatically changing back, but he has since eliminated that time limit. He changes using his cellular phone, the Keitaizer, by pressing "M E G A" on it, and saying "Install!"

Mega Silver rides the Auto Slider, a hover-board that operates like the Megarangers' Cyber Sliders (below), but can also transform into a Bike (motorcycle) Mode. While in Bike Mode, the Auto Slider can fire energy beams ("Slider Beam") from its fairing.

Digitizer

The Digitizer is a bracelet with a numeric ten-key pad on it that the Megarangers use to transform. Depending on the 3-digit code input into the Digitizer, one of several functions can be utilized:

335 ENTER: Transform (the command is "Install! Megaranger!")

259 ENTER: Call the Cyber Sliders

751 ENTER: Call the Digitank

108 ENTER: Launch the Mega Shuttle

541 ENTER: Mobilize the Galaxy Mega

Battle Riser

The Battle Riser is a new bracelet given to Mega Red by Professor Kubota. It has three numbered buttons on it, each with a different function. "01" increases Mega Red's chop power, allowing him to perform the "Riser Chop". "02" does the same to his punching power, letting him perform the "Riser Punch". "03" powers-up the Mega Sniper, making its shots 1.5 times as powerful as without the Riser.

The Battle Riser also allows Mega Red to remotely control the Delta Mega. When placed into a special compartment on the Galaxy Mega's cockpit, pressing "01" initiates the combination of the Galaxy Mega and Delta Mega into the Super Galaxy Mega robot.

Mega Sniper

The Mega Snipers are the guns carried by each Megaranger. They are blue guns that can split apart into two smaller guns, the Mega Magnum and Mega Shot. Each Mega Sniper can also join with each Ranger's special weapon, forming the Drill Sniper, Rod Sniper, Tomahawk Sniper, Sling Sniper, and Capture Sniper. The Megarangers use these weapons in the "Final Shoot" attack, blasting the enemy with all of their Snipers at once.

Multi Attack Rifle

The weapons of all the Megarangers except Megared can combine into a large gun, the Multi Attack Rifle, which combines all four of their digital powers at once into a deadly beam of energy.

Cyber Sliders

The Cyber Sliders are anti-gravity hover-boards that the Megarangers use for transportation. They can fly at high speeds and with great control, and apparently have some kind of built-in life support system, since the Rangers have taken them into space and have been able to talk and move (not to mention breathe) with no problems. The Rangers use the Cyber Sliders to fly up to the Galaxy Mega from Earth to transform it to robot mode.

Galaxy Mega

The Galaxy Mega is a giant blue robot that the Megarangers use to fight the enlarged Nejire Beasts. The Galaxy Mega is a combination of a large spaceship called the Mega Ship (in which Prof. Kubota and the INET team are stationed), and a smaller craft called the Mega Shuttle, which becomes the robot's head.

The Galaxy Mega's main weapon is the Mega Saber, a long silver sword with which the Megarangers can perform many different types of attacks. These include the Mega Side Cutter (a horizontal slash), Mega Flying Cutter (a jumping slash), Mega Cross Cutter (a pair of diagonal slashes that form an X), and Mega Dash Cutter (a dashing horizontal slash). The sword can also extend into an energy whip, the Saber Electromagnetic Whip. In addition, the sword can extend itself while remaining rigid, turning into a spearlike weapon, the Galaxy Lance; or it can be thrown as a spear of energy, the Flash Arrow. When fighting Toad Nejire, Mega Pink created a new attack with the Mega Saber, the Saber Electromagnetic Snake. Because toads are afraid of snakes (?), the tip of the sword turned into a snake-shaped energy projection that scared Toad Nejire and gave the Galaxy Mega an opening to finish him off.

The Galaxy Mega also uses a round shield called the Mega Shield for defence. To fight Owl Nejire's eyebeams, Mega Blue outfitted the Mega Shield with a mirror coating to reflect Owl Nejire's beams back at him. In addition, it uses an energy cannon called the Booster Rifle, which detaches from the bottom part of the Mega Shuttle. The Booster Rifle can either fire powerful energy blasts or a cloud of freezing gas.

The command to combine into the Galaxy Mega is "Denji Gattai!" (Electromagnetic Combination!).

Digitank

The Digitank is a blocky six-wheeled emergency vehicle used for transportation and rescue. It has a turret on top with three lenses that fire energy, the Mega Particle Cannon. It can also extend a long claw called the Digihand, allowing it to pick things up. It has a tough outer coating that can deflect enemy attacks, and can even climb up staircases.

Delta Mega

The Delta Mega is a triangular spaceship developed to add to the Megarangers' fighting power. It can transform into a robot mode to battle alongside the Galaxy Mega. In robot mode, the Delta Mega's fingers are small machine gun barrels, and it uses these in its deadly attack, the Gatling Blaster, in which it fires rapid-fire shots of energy from its hands, which spin around like machine guns. It also has two smaller guns on its shoulders, the Delta Lasers.

The Delta Mega is controlled by Mega Red using his Battle Riser as a remote control. Mega Red uses it to initiate the transformation as well as to guide its movements.

Super Galaxy Mega

The Galaxy Mega and Delta Mega can combine together to form an even more powerful robot, the Super Galaxy Mega, with the command "Chou Denji Gattai!" (Super Electromagnetic Combination). In this mode, the Delta Mega's Gatling Blasters are positioned on the shoulders of the Super Galaxy Mega, and are three times stronger than normal. The Super Galaxy Mega's deadly attack is the Super Galaxy Knuckle, in which it fires off both of its fists like rockets to blast through the enemy. The Super Galaxy Mega is activated when Mega Red presses "01" on the Battle Riser.

In order to combat Mad Guirail, a new attack of the Super Galaxy Mega's was used: the Big Bang Attack. The Super Galaxy Mega spun around at blurring speeds, flew up into the air, and then shot down like a comet and blasted right through the enemy.

Voyager Machines

When the super-strong but mindless Mad Guirail nearly destroyed the Super Galaxy Mega, the Megarangers were forced to abandon the Galaxy Mega and instead take the Delta Mega to an INET Moonbase, where Yuusaku was working on the "Space Mega Project". The project was revealed to be the 5 Voyager Machines:

Rovoyager-1, piloted by Mega Red, is a humanoid robot with two large missile batteries on its shoulders.

Shuttle Voyager-2, piloted by Mega Black, is a space shuttle that can fire an energy blast from its nose.

Rocket Voyager-3, piloted by Mega Blue, is a large rocket ship that becomes the Voyager Spartan weapon for the Mega Voyager robot.

Saucer Voyager-4, piloted by Mega Yellow, is a UFO-like spaceship that can fire energy blasts from its wings.

Tank Voyager-5, piloted by Mega Pink, is a covered tank with two large cannons on top.

The Voyager Machines can combine into a giant robot, the Mega Voyager, with the command "Ginga Gattai!" (Galaxy Combination). The Mega Voyager uses a triangular shield, the Voyager Shield, and the Rocket-Voyager-3 becomes a handheld bazooka like weapon used by the Mega Voyager in its deadly attack, the Voyager Spartan, in which the nose of the rocket detaches and blasts through the enemy.

Mega Winger

The Mega Winger is a mecha created and piloted by Yuusaku. It is a white aircraft that can change into a land mode with tank treads on its underside, and can also change into a robot with the command "Dengeki Henkei!" (Electric-Shock Change). In robot mode, the Mega Winger's weapon is the Winger Cannon, a large triangular array of four guns.

The Mega Wing from the Mega Winger's back can detach and attach onto the back of the Mega Voyager, creating the Wing Mega Voyager. The Wing Mega Voyager can fly at high speeds (Mach 2.8) and its deadly attack is the Winger Spartan, which is essentially just the Voyager Spartan launched from midair.

Nejirejia ("nejireru" means "to be twisted")

Nejirejia is the name of the organization of invaders from the Twisted Dimension. Their base is a saucer-shaped fortress called the Death Nejiro in their own dimension, from which they send their forces to try to take over the Earth. The Nejirejia forces used a giant flying warship called the Nejire Crusher, which was destroyed by the Galaxy Mega in a space battle in the second episode.

Javious the First

Javious is the supreme leader of Nejirejia. He only appears on a screen in the Nejirejia base as a giant eyeball. He commands Dr. Hinelar, who seemed to serve him unquestioningly. However, Hinelar used some of Javious' cells to create the evil team of warriors called the Nejirangers, and because of this, whenever the Nejirangers used a lot of energy it caused Javious to feel pain. Hinelar didn't tell Javious the truth because he wanted to cause the Nejirangers to use up all of Javious' life energy. Then Javious would die and Hinelar himself could take over Nejirejia. His plan succeeded when the Nejirangers' energy reached a peak during a fight with the Megarangers. The Megarangers destroyed the Nejirangers but Javious was destroyed also, leaving behind only a metallic box-shaped object, the Javious Heart, which Hinelar took. Hinelar used the power of the Heart to help him create Hinelar City, a large city created for Nejirejia.

Dr. Hinelar (aka Dr. Hinerara -- "hineru" means "to twist")

Dr. Hinelar is the leader of the active Nejirejia forces. He answers only to Javious, and was actually once a friend of Professor Kubota's named Samejima. The two of them worked together but five years ago, when Samejima discovered a new dimension and wanted to explore it, Kubota tried to stop him. Headstrong and curious, Samejima was absorbed into the other dimension and became who he is today. Kubota realised that Hinelar is actually Samejima when Kubota recognised the Nejiranger suits as the prototype designs created by Samejima. Hinelar believes that Kubota is foolish for choosing imperfect humans to be his warriors, and he wants to bring the Earth under his control (or something).

Hinelar also wanted to gain control of Nejirejia and so set into motion a plan to kill Javious, the Nejirejia ruler (see Javious, above). When his plan succeeded and Javious died, he left behind the Javious Heart, a metallic box that Hinelar is using to help create Hinelar City for Nejirejia.

Shibolena ("shiboru" means "to wring" or "to squeeze")

Shibolena is a young woman with light blue armor who is second-in-command to Dr. Hinelar. Shibolena casts the incantation used to create new Nejire Beasts by saying "Nejirero, hinekurero, nejirero, hinekurero / Ware wa motome, uttaeri!" over the Nejire Mahoujin ("Nejire Evil Magic Circle"), a hole from which the Nejire Beasts are born. She can disguise herself as a normal human in several different outfits and is often the one commanding the Nejire Beasts on their missions. She fights with a rapier-style sword and many times is the one who devises new plans to take over the Earth.

Yugande ("yugamu" means "to warp")

Yugande is a master warrior of Nejirejia. His body is black with a green grid over it (making him look like something out of TRON). Yugande fights with a long sword from which he can fire blasts of powerful energy. He can also create a duplicate of himself to attack, detach his head and fight separately from it, and enlarge himself to giant size. Yugande was destroyed by the Galaxy Mega once, but soon after was revived in a stronger form with powerful new energy coursing through his body. After being used as a shield by Guirail, Yugande was badly injured and was once again revived in an even more powerful form. His new weapon, the Dark Crisis, is a black sword with three buttons on the handle, which each activate a different attack: the Dark Blade, a boomerang-shaped energy blade; the Dark Fire, a blast of flame; , and the Dark Lightning, an electrical attack.

Bibidebi

Bibidebi is a small round white creature with wiry arms and legs and a giant grin. Floating around making wisecracks, he seems to be a pest, but Dr. Hinelar found out a way to put him to some use. Hinelar "modified" Bibidebi so that he can now enlarge the Nejire Beasts by biting them and injecting an "Enlarging Virus" into them.

Guirail ("Gireeru" -- "kireru" means "to cut")

Guirail was a new commander sent by Javious to oversee the take-over of Earth in place of Dr. Hinelar.

Guirail used methods entirely different from Hinelar, such as using children as human shields to prevent the Megarangers from fighting back. Guirail could move at blurring speeds, and could warp space around him to teleport rapidly from one place to another. He fought with a short dagger that could elongate into a full-sized sword. He also performed strange experiments on the Nejire Beasts, such as creating clones of Moray Nejire.

In order to finally destroy the Megarangers, Guirail combined himself with Yugande to become Giga Guirail, who held two swords (Guirail's and Yugande's) and could fire a beam when he crossed the swords that could imprison people in large boxlike prisons. The Megarangers managed to separate them but when the Megarangers attacked, Guirail shoved Yugande in front of himself to take the full attack. This left Yugande severely injured and to get revenge, Hinelar tricked Guirail into taking a "Nejire-Gen Capsule" that Hinelar said would give Guirail great power. It did at first, but later it also stole his mind, turning Guirail into the extremely powerful but mindless Mad Guirail, who had tusks sticking out from all over his body.

This stronger form allowed Guirail to move at blurring speed, fire a blast of lightning from his eyes, infuse his sword with energy, and use the chains on his body as energy-whips to attack and hold enemies. Mad Guirail managed to nearly disable the Super Galaxy Mega, which forced the Megarangers to abandon the Galaxy Mega and take the Delta Mega to the INET Moonbase where they received the Voyager Machines. Mad Guirail was the first opponent killed by the new Mega Voyager robot's Voyager Spartan.

Gigire

Gigire was a creature that split off from Mad Guirail when he was attacked by the Super Galaxy Mega. Gigire could fire a blast of energy from his head and could also go into space and fight.

Nejire-juu (Twisted Beasts)

The Nejire-juu are monsters created by Shibolena's spells to carry out the Nejirejia missions. All of them are animal-based, some with mechanical parts.

Psycho-Nejilars

After Mad Guirail was destroyed and the Megarangers acquired the Mega Voyager, Dr. Hinelar started using the Psycho-Nejilars in place of the Nejire-juu. While the Nejire-juu had a very organic look to them, the Psycho-Nejilars are very mechanical-looking with shiny armor plating, and are supposedly more powerful than the Nejire-juu were.

Kunekune ("kuneru" means "to turn and twist")

The Kunekune are the soldiers of Nejirejia. They are purple with yellow wavy lines across their bodies. Their heads have two round black eyes and a twisted frown.

Jaden Sentai Nejirenjaa (Evil Electric Task Force Nejiranger)

The Nejirangers are Nejirejia's evil fighting team, counterparts to the Megarangers. The Nejirangers were created from cells of Javious himself, so that whenever the Nejirangers over-exert themselves or are injured (or killed), Javious feels pain. However, Javious does not know this and it is being kept a secret from him by Dr. Hinelar, who hopes to secretly use the Nejirangers to cause Javious' death and take over Nejirejia for himself. The Nejirangers are colored the same as the Megarangers, and each Nejiranger wants to kill his correspondingly-colored Megaranger. They also use weapons that are twisted versions of the Megarangers weapons, except for Nejipink who uses a bow and arrow instead of a counterpart to Megapink's Mega Capture weapon.

The Nejirangers can move at blurring speeds and fire powerful lightning-like energy blasts from their hands. They can also join their powers together to perform the "Jaden Energy Attack" ("Evil Electric Energy Attack"), in which each Nejiranger creates a sphere of energy in his/her hands, and they all hurl them forward together (think of the Dairangers' Kiryoku Bomber, and that's it). Their true forms are giant monstrous creatures that they reveal when their humanoid forms are defeated.

When Nejired found out that he and the other Nejirangers were just tools for Hinelar's plan, he tried to turn on Hinelar. But Hinelar fired a beam at his head that removed his free will, making him want nothing but to destroy the Megarangers. In the following battle, the Nejirangers used their energy to its maximum. The Megarangers used their robots' weapons to destroy the Nejirangers at their peak energy level, and at the same time Javious also died.

The members of the Nejirangers are as follows:

NejiRed

Nejired was the leader of the Nejirangers and used a red and black sword called the Nejisaber. His true form was NejiPhantom, a red creature that looked like flame.

NejiBlack

Nejiblack used the Nejirod, a long staff with two hornlike projections on the end. His true form was a black rocklike creature called NejiVulgar that could extend a long thick tentacle from his arm.

NejiBlue

Nejibblue was an obsessive maniac who waedts nothing but to kill Nejibblue (over and over again, if he can). He used the Nejitomahawk, a small blue double-bladed axe from which he could fire crescent-shaped blades of blue energy. His true form was a blue creature called NejiBizarre, that could breathe a cloud of freezing wind to encase anything it touched in ice. NejiBizarre was destroyed by the Winger Spartan.

NejiYellow

Nejiyellow appeared to be the most devious of the Nejirangers, using disguise techniques to get close to her opponents and surprise them. She could teleport away by sinking into a portal under her feet. She relied more on cunning than brute force, and often did not engage in a battle that she had no personal stake in. She used the Nejisling, a slingshot-like weapon much like Megayellow's Mega Sling. Her true form was a reptilian-looking creature called NejiSofia (?).

NejiPink

Nejipink, in contrast to Nejiyellow, often rushed into a battle without preparing for it, and the two of them were rivals, competing to see who was the most powerful. She used the NejiArrow, a bow that fired arrows of energy. Nejipink's true form was NejiJealous, a plantlike creature that attacked with strangling vines. NejiJealous was destroyed by a special version of the Voyager Spartan, with all of the Mega Voyager's energy concentrated at its tip.

Denji Sentai Megaranger is the twenty-first sentai series. It aired from 1997-1998 and is what POWER RANGERS IN SPACE was developed from.

Trivia

The first seven episodes of Megaranger aired 17:30-17:55 on tv asahi. Upon the airing of Episode 08, it was switched to 7:30-8:00. Both were on Sundays.

The plot to how the Megarangers get their powers is very similar to the American movie The Last Starfighter.

One of the INET Techs would eventually become the future Sazer Tawlon of Gransazer.

Takumi Hashimoto (Boi in Zyuranger) is a guest star in this series.

Actor who played Mega Silver, Shigeru Kanai, also played Daisaku Katagiri/G-Stag in Toei's 1995 Metal Heroes series, Juukou B-Fighter.

First Sentai team to have the color set of Red, Black, Blue, Yellow, Pink and Silver. This would be repeated 9 years later in 2006's Gougou Sentai Boukenger. Also, Mami Higashiyama, who played MegaPink/Ikamura Miku would play another character in Boukenger as Takaoka Kei, the mother of Takaoka Eiji, otherwise known as BoukenSilver.

Yuusaku/MegaSilver's henshin device, the Keitaizer, was the first henshin device based off of a cell phone. Since then, many recent Sentai series (specifically, Hyakujuu Sentai GaoRanger, Mahou Sentai Magiranger, and Gougou Sentai Boukenger) and at least one Kamen Rider series (Kamen Rider Faiz) have featured heroes with cell phone-based henshin devices.

This is the first Sentai series in which the names of one or more mecha (in this case, Mega Voyager and Mega Winger) were kept in the show's Power Rangers counterpart.

Voice Actor Hiroataka Suzuoki (Yugande) Passed away in 2006 August 6th due to Lung cancer. This series was his only Single Tokusatsu Role, While Voiced at many animes.

Looking closely, Megaranger borrows or pays homage to Choudenshi Bioman, particularly in the ranger's individual "electronics" abilities and Galaxy Mega's numerous sword attacks (it actually has the second most of any Sentai robo, after Bio Robo).

ELEVENTH HOUR

Professor Hood works for the UK Home Office, and is in charge of investigating the abuse of power and scientific invention.

Professor hood (Patrick Stewart) - Is an emertius professor of physics and an unaffected yorkshireman. He has been employed by the government to ast as a man in the field, to investigate scientific issues first hand. He isn't afraid to speak his mind and, if need be, upset the status quo. He is passionate about defending the cause of good science and rooting out bad science.

The unexpected death of his wife hit him harder than he is willing to admit and he's glad of the new challenge and the chance to leave his empty house behind him . His willingness to pursue the truth means that he manages to upset a wide range of powerful people - from animal rights activists to multinational pharamaceutical companies. And so he needs a special brand protection officer - Rachel Young.

For a talented scientist, he is surprisngly clumsy at operation new technology such as mobile phones and he's also a terrible driver. But he has acute powrs of perception and an incredible thirst for knowledge, and depite his occasionally gruff manner, Hood has a good heart.

Rachel Young (Ashely Jensen) - Is a special branch officer from Dumfreisshire she is self-contained and self-reliant and has a wicked sense of humour. She is not afraid to stand up to anyone - especially Professor Hood with whom she enjoys a combative and warm relationship. She may not have as many academic qualifcations as him but she is more in touch with reality and he relies on her robus common sense to get him out of many tricky situations. Her only weaknesses are letting Hood irratate her - and her hypochondria.

The series was a sort of mix of THE X-FILES and DOOMWATCH (another series which was about scientific endeavour gone wrong).

Starring Patrick Stewart (more famous for his role of Captain Jen-Luc Picard in STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION).

Stephen Gallagher was also creator of OKTOBER (see seprate entry) and also worked on BUGS (see separate entry).

Interview with Creator - Stephen Gallagher

For each episode I ended up with a manila file a couple of inches thick consisting of printouts, cuttings, personal interview notes and oddments like HPA press handouts. Outside of the files I had a list of bookmarked sites and some actual books - not many technical reference but stuff like Defoe's JOURNAL OF THE PLAGUE YEAR and Camus' LA PESTE, both of which fed elements into show 2.

Hood's character is informed by the biographies of key figures like Richard Feynman, Fred Hoyle and Robert W Wood. Hoyle especially - a down-to-earth Yorkshire polymath who was never afraid to be controversial.

The key to Rachel's is a Dani Behr documentary in which they sent her on a bodyguarding course hoping to see a cute girl struggle, and she passed with the top mark. The procedures she uses are mostly sourced from THE MODERN BODYGUARD.

For the devising of the show format I got together a bunch of science thrillers from the last few decades to work out exactly what distinguishes the ones who pull it off from the ones that fall on their faces.

Probably the single most heavily-used resource was the New Scientist searchable online archive - in a world of unreliable assertions the magazine's editorial line on any issue provided the 'spine' of the show.

For anything heavyweight I'd a friend with access to the national online science reference network via her department. Steve Connor's function was to troubleshoot my chains of consequences and to advise me on the comparative reliability of sources.

1 - 1 RESURRECTION

Professor Ian Hood (Patrick Stewart) and his bodyguard Rachel Young (Ashley Jensen) have been tasked with investigating cases of science abuse throughout the UK. When a police chase leads to a field where almost 30 fetuses are buried, Hood suspects that "Gepetto" - a rogue clone maker - is at work in the country. They soon discover that not only must they try to find and stop Gepetto, but they must also locate a young pregnant girl who is carrying one of the cloned fetuses, and whose life is in danger from a complication with the pregnancy. They are not the only ones searching for the girl, though. One of Gepetto's men, a millionaire, and the girl's abusive ex-boyfriend all have their own reasons for wanting to find her.

1 - 2 CONTAINMENT

When a mysterious lethal virus claims the life of a crypt worker, Professor Ian Hood (Patrick Stewart) must contain the outbreak before a global pandemic ensues. Together with a group of volunteer scientists, he succeeds in locating the source and containing the outbreak, but Professor Ian Hood (Patrick Stewart) realises that his work is only just beginning when Rachel Young (Ashley Jensen) is put at risk.

1 - 3 KRYPTOS

Professor Hood (Patrick Stewart) meets an old friend who believes his research into global warming is being sabotaged by persons unknown. He subsequently vanishes, having apparently destroyed all his work - and a few equations are all the clues he's left behind. The professor takes on the challenge of solving the puzzle, but he's forced to call on Rachel (Ashley Jensen) for protection as the mystery thickens.

1 - 4 MIRACLE

In this last episode Professor Hood (Patrick Stewart) sets out to discredit a doctor's claims that one of her patients has been cured of cancer by drinking ordinary spring water, convinced she's perpetrating a cynical hoax. To his surprise, she seems every bit as baffled and sceptical as him, and readily offers to help investigate the case. Unfortunately, just as an explanation seems within reach, she is found dead, having apparently committed suicide.

ENGINE SENTAI GO-ONGER

AKA: ENGINE SQUADRON GO-ONGER

The Machine World is another reality other than our own in which exists giant vehicular beings called Engines. The Engines waged a war against the Gaiarc, who desire to pollute their world. Losing, the Gaiarc escape through time and space to enter our world for a more easy location to create their ideal paradise. Three of the Engines manage to pursue them, selecting three humans to become their partners, the Go-ongers. The team are joined by two more Go-ongers chosen by two Engines who manage to enter the human world as well.

Engine Sentai Go-onger (translated as Engine Squadron Go-onger) is the title of Toei Company's thirty-second Super Sentai series of Japanese tokusatsu television dramas. It premiered on February 17, 2008, following the finale of Juken Sentai Gekiranger. It aired as part of TV Asahi's 2008 Super Hero Time block alongside Kamen Rider Kiva. The motif of this series is animals and the motor industry.

Go-ongers

Based in their RV the Ginjiro, the Go-onger team is composed of the core three and two back-up members who support the main team. Each of the Go-ongers has his/her own role call phrase and a nick-name.

Sōsuke Ezumi/Go-on Red

Nicknamed, the "Speed King," Sōsuke is a former racer with a sunny disposition. Unyielding and always full of confidence, he confronts anything without hesitation to fight right away. As Go-on Red, his attacks are performed at high speed. After transforming into Go-on Red, Sōsuke says, "Mach Full Force!! Go-on Red". He wields the Road Sabre.

Renn Kōsaka/Go-on Blue

Nicknamed the "Cyclopedia," Renn is a former bus driver who can be talkative, but he likes to keep quiet at times. As Go-on Blue, Renn's physical strength is magnified. After transforming into Go-on Blue, Renn says, "Just Correct!! Go-on Blue". He wields the Garage Launcher.

Saki Rōyama/Go-on Yellow

Nicknamed "Sweet Angel", she used to work at a racing store. Cheerful and anxious, she keeps smiling with a upbeat attitude even in a crisis. As Go-on Yellow, she can fight in any hard terrain. After transforming into Go-on Yellow, Saki says, "Smile Blooming!! Go-on Yellow". She wields the Racing Bullet.

Hant Jō/Go-on Green

Nicknamed, the "Vagabond", Hant is a freeter working part-time at a pizzeria, becoming a Go-onger out of boredom. After transforming into Go-on Green, Hant says, "Doki Doki Delight!! Go-on Green". He wields the Bridge Axe.

Gunpei Ishihara/Go-on Black

Nicknamed the "Chaser", Gunpei is a former police officer with excellent marksmanship and a passion for justice. After transforming into Go-on Black, Gunpei says, "Dash Dynamic!! Go-on Black". He wields the Cowl Laser.

Engine Soul

The Go-ongers' technology revolves around the Engine Souls, sentient chip-like items that are hearts of the Engines, whose power they allow the Go-ongers to employ. When not in use, they are kept in the Engine Soul Holster.

Go-on Gear

Henshin Cellphone Go-Phone: The primary Go-ongers's transformation devices, installing a chip-like item called Change Souls to evoke the transformation. By installing an Engine Soul in the Go-Phone, the Go-ongers can communicate with their Engine partners.

Henshin Brace ShiftChanger : Go-on Green and Go-on Black's transformation devices, use dependant on the Change Souls.

Self Change-Gun MantanGun: A team sidearm that resembles a gas pump dispenser and has both a Gun Mode and a Rod Mode.

Highway Buster: The combination of the primary Go-ongers' Go-on Gear: the Road Sabre, the Garage Launcher, and the Racing Bullet. When an Engine Soul is set in the weapon, the Racing Bullet is fired, unleashing the destructive power of the Soul's respective Engine on the target.

Junction Rifle: The combination of the secondary Go-ongers' Go-on Gear: the Bridge Axe and the Cowl Laser.

Engines

The Go-ongers' mecha are the Engines, denizens of Machine World with some of them pursuing the Gaiarc, choosing the Go-ongers as their partners to fight Gaiarc with them. While in the Human World, the Engines cannot exist in their full size and thus remove their Engine Souls to assume small forms called Engine Casts which are kept in the Engine Attache until they are needed, resuming their true size on Earth for only 10 minutes.

Engine Gattai EngineOh : The Go-ongers' primary robot, refered as the "King of Engines". Its finishing attack is the Go-on Grand Prix. It is comprised of:

Engine Speedor (a hybrid between a condor and a sports car): Go-on Red's partner, his speed is unmatched. He forms the head, chest, and arms.

Engine Bus-on (a hybrid between a lion with a bus): Go-on Blue's partner with brute strength, he forms the hip, legs, and Go-on Sword.

Engine Berrv (a hybrid between a bear and an RV): Go-on Yellow's partner, she is a gutsy Engine who forms the abdomen and V-Shield.

The secondary Go-ongers' Engines act as combinatory weapons for EngineOh.

Engine Birca (a hybrid between an orca and a motorcycle): Go-on Green's partner, best at quick movements, he forms the left arm of EngineOh Birca.

Engine Gunpherd (a hybrid between a German Shepherd and a police car): Go-on Black's partner, he pursues enemies in a hot chase and can combine with EngineOh to form the right arm of EngineOh Gunpherd.

Allies

Bonper is a pink robot created by the Engines to support the Go-ongers, creating the Go-onger arsenal and performing maintenance on the Engines.

Gaiarc

The Go-ongers fight the Barbaric Machine Clan Gaiarc , machine-men from the Machine World who desire to pollute the Earth. The Gaiarc based themselves in the Hellgaia Palace on an isolated island.

Land Pollution Minister Yogostein

Golden armored general who leads the Gaiarc's land-based Barbaric Machine Beasts, he uses a spear as his weapon

Water Pollution Minister Kegalesia

Human-looking general with a whip, she leads Gaiarc's sea-based Barbaric Machine Beasts.

Air Pollution Minister Kitaneidas

Leads Gaiarc's sky-based Barbaric Machine Beasts and uses a staff as his weapon.

Barbaric Machine Soldiers Ugatz

footsoldiers to support the Barbaric Machine Beasts.

Barbaric Machine Beasts

The Barbaric Machine Beasts are monsters created to pollute the Earth. They are each separated into one of three types that are under the Pollution Ministers: Savage Ground, Savage Sea , and Savage Sky.

Shoukyaku Banki : An incinerator Savage Sky Barbaric Machine Beast under Kitaneidas, the first to face the Go-ongers.

Songs

Opening theme

"Engine Sentai Go-onger" by Hideyuki Takahashi

Ending theme

"Engine First Lap -Type Normal-" by Project.R (Takayoshi Tanimoto , Sister MAYO, Kenichiro Ōishi with Engine Kids ,Insert songs are performed by Hideyuki Takahashi, Takayoshi Tanimoto, and NoB.

Notes

"Engine" literally translates as "Flame God." The logo for the series uses the English word "Engine" in the title instead of the romanization of the kanji as "Enjin."

"Go-onger" is a portmanteau of the Japanese words for "thunderous sound" and "Ranger" . It is also related to the English words "go on."

"MantanGun" comes from the Japanese phrase for "fill 'er up".

ENTERPRISE

In the early twenty-second century, the starship Enterprise is launched. Her mission is to explore strange new worlds, seek out new life and new civilizations and to boldly go where no humans have gone before. Along with an alien chief medical officer and first officer, this crew with only NASA-level training and what the Vulcans know of local space, begin to explore and begin the legacy set for other Enterprise crews and captains like Robert April, Christopher Pike, James Kirk, John Harriman, Rachel Garrett, Jean-Luc Picard, William Riker, Edward Jellico and others.

The Fifth Star Trek series begins with Enterprise, a retrospective look at how the universe of the federation was formed. Struggling for ideas, the producers of Star Trek come up with this idea. Probably the best idea that could have come about. This could very well be the last Star Trek series, and with it the death of space based Sci-Fi shows in the US. . (at least for the moment). The show has been a success but it never lived up to the ratings of STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION.

After the derivative Voyager, this puts the energy back in the "Star Trek Universe." It's not yet as good as Deep Space 9, but that was a different kind of show: Enterprise, like the original Star Trek, Next Generation and Voyager, follows that stereotyped Sci-Fi format of a ship flying around meeting people. What made Deep Space 9 the best of the lot was that it actually told a story through to its conclusion. The space station incorporated some of the "alien of the week" elements, but the ongoing war storyline made DS9 a true drama with real meaning, rather than just another space thriller. And to its benefit, Enterprise shows signs of some of that same narrative drive. I have some fear that its "prequel status" may constrain the storytelling, but I believe the writers will be up to the challenge. The other thing that makes Enterprise a more-than-worthy addition to this franchise is the characters. Scott Bakula's Captain fits in the Star Trek captain tradition well: he's competent, strong, and stoic, but human. T'Pol was offputting at first, until I realized that it is her Vulcan nature that makes her so--I remembered that I didn't really like Spock at first either, and he was half-human. But the best character in the new series is Trip--smart, goofy, and a real dreamboat. It was the lack of appealing characters that dampened Voyager (and Next Generation to a lesser extent).

From my view of the series, is this is stab at fresh material no one has covered before on television for Star Trek.

May very good novel have come out in the past which shown to be better than some TV shows. I remember a novel which best suits the original history of Star Trek. This one Star Fleet: Year One, which fully embraced idea of very limited technologies and thing human's and allies had to overcome to become the UFP.

Enterprise, is a completely different take. It rushed technology which were commonly are used to The Original Series (TOS)and prematurely introduced character races that wouldn't have been meet (Klingons) over hundred years earlier than they should have.

NOW, this being said, its a good series. IF you blank out previous stated events and histories that TOS and other later series layed down.

However, Star Trek: Enterprise (TV show) is trying save itself from cancellation by making itself more exciting and showing that original (non-USS) Entepriase is saves universe as Star Fleet only has ONE ship in its entire fleet.

Being one few scifi shows on the air that futuristic and have high budget, its CGI effect and some of its stories are good. However, the show is very unbalanced and sloppy. Everything is being rushed to just save the show and keep viewers. I think this is a losing battle when show strayed away from its original history. This can be traced back to Star Trek: First Contact. Basis of the show's altered history of Star Trek. However i believe the show hints to the fact that this Time War thats occurring is in fact causing things to change thust why we suddenly don't think things are matching up to what has been said in the past.

As science fiction show, its a good one. However as Star Trek Fan who cares....i think its poor in writing and keep up to history which had been established. Ignoring what was and making it hip and cool only works wher its done by people who care about it and know what their doing.

I never understood the abstract amount of hatred for this show. All I can really pin it down to are too many veteran Star Trek fans expecting too much of the same thing repeated yet again in another series. Enterprise, I have always thought, is in a league of its own for many different reasons, and unfortunately it's taken too long (or not at all happened) for people to realise this.

I most probably have found myself hooked onto this series and not any of the others because of its superb characterisation. When first tuning in about half way through season one I fell head over heels in love with T'Pol, and she has always been my firm favourite - a rebel in her own subtle way and right without being extravagant or 'too human'. And then of course there's Archer, a fine Captain who's stubborn-ass, no nonsense nature only adds to his appeal and compassion. Trip - adorable without being too sweet and sickly and poster-boyish; and having a fine streak of empathetic personality in him, and Malcolm who you can't help pitying sometimes, and underestimating the rest of the time. Hoshi who is by far not in it enough to remind us that this is humanity's first venture into space, and we're not entirely certain of what we're doing, and Mayweather who has the best 'experienced' nature for such a young explorer, as well as a stunning smile. Phlox almost goes without saying - the smile is freaky but the heart is lovable in every way.

Almost every episode has managed to surprise, impress and entertain me with all the genres - drama, angst, humour and full out, no expenses spared action. It's fresh and new and something very different to the Star Trek archives, something it has been needing for a while. It's a little above sci-fi in that it does not indulge entirely in techno/alien/deep-space jargon, instead at many times managing with grace to stay human and relative to the now. It tackles issues of the day as well as having a laugh and still living up to the title of a fine sci-fi show. It more than deserves a fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh series, almost without saying.

I only pity those who have still to realise that they're watching a new series of Star Trek, and not what has already been done and done to death.

STAR TREK: VOYAGER

1 - 1 BROKEN BOW

Captain Archer volunteers to go where no human has gone before to return a Klingon to his home planet - over the objections of Earth's Vulcan allies.

Wr Rick Berman & Brannon Braga

Dir James L. Conway

1 - 2 FIGHT OR FLIGHT

As they continue their deep space exploration, the NX-01 crew comes across an alien ship where they discover 15 humanoid corpses that seem to have been part of a scientific experiment. The horrific sight inspires Sato to panic and demand a return to Earth, but Archer insists on continuing the mission and finding out more about the abandoned dead. Trouble comes calling when the aliens that were conducting the gruesome experiments return and begin attacking Captain Archer and his team.

Wr Rick Berman & Brannon Braga

Dir Allan Kroeker

1 - 3 STRANGE NEW WORLD

Crew members begin to experience hallucinations and paranoia while investigating an uninhabited planet.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir David Livingston

1 - 4 UNEXPECTED

When Trip is dispatched to assist a Xyrillian ship with its power source problems, he is delighted to have a friendly encounter with one of the ship's female engineers. However, shortly after returning to Enterprise, he discovers that their special moment has resulted in his becoming pregnant. Now Enterprise must try to track down the Xyrillians in the hope of transferring the rapidly growing embryo to another host.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Mike Vejar

1 - 5 TERRA NOVA

The Enterprise crew alters course to investigate the mystery of Terra Nova, a legendary Earth colony whose inhabitants mysteriously disappeared decades ago. However, when they arrive, they are confronted by descendants of the colonists, who have become more alien than anyone could ever have imagined.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir LeVar Burton

1 - 6 THE ANDORIAN INCIDENT

Enterprise chooses an inopportune time to visit a Vulcan monastery, as the monks there are being held captive by the paranoid Andorians.

Wr Fred Dekker

Dir Roxann Dawson

1 - 7 BREAKING THE ICE

A Vulcan starship interferes with Archer's probe of an oversized comet.

Wr Maria Jacquemetton, Andre Jacquemetton

Dir Terry Windell

1 - 8 CIVILIZATION

Captain Archer and the crew discover a fully inhabited, pre-industrial, Menshara class planet. However, upon further investigation, they discover what appears to be advanced technology being used secretly, which may be responsible for a terrible illness.

Wr Phyllis Strong, Mike Sussman

Dir Mike Vejar

1 - 9 FORTUNATE SON

The Enterprise crew is dispatched by Starfleet Command to assist Fortunate, a human freight vessel that has been attacked by Nausicaan pirates. On arriving, they are surprised to find that Fortunate's crew is resistant to Archer's efforts to help them and determined to seek revenge against their attackers, no matter what the repercussions.

Wr James Duff

Dir LeVar Burton

1 - 10 COLD FRONT

Archer invites a group of stargazers aboard, not realizing that Silik, a Suliban enemy, is among them.

Wr Tim Finch, Stephen Beck

Dir Robert Duncan McNeill

1 - 11 SILENT ENEMY

When Enterprise is attacked by an unidentified enemy ship, the crew must work frantically to get their new phase canons to operate. Meanwhile, the captain charges Hoshi with finding out Malcolm's favourite food in time for a surprise birthday dinner.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir Winrich Kolbe

1 - 12 DEAR DOCTOR

The crew visits a planet that is home to two distinct humanoid species. When it is discovered that one of the two might be headed toward extinction, Archer and Phlox have to make a difficult decision whether or not to become involved.

Wr Andre Jacquemetton, Maria Jacquemetton

Dir James A. Contner

1 - 13 SLEEPING DOGS

While investigating a gas giant, Enterprise comes across a damaged vessel hovering in the atmosphere, and T'Pol, Hoshi and Malcolm go aboard to investigate. However, once aboard, they are ambushed by a hostile female Klingon who hijacks their shuttlepod, and strands them on the Klingon ship, which threatens to implode under the pressure of the planet's atmosphere.

Wr Fred Dekker

Dir Les Landau

1 - 14 SHADOWS OF P'JEM

Archer and T'Pol are caught between warring factions on Coridan shortly after T'Pol has been ordered to return to Vulcan.

Wr Phyllis Strong, Mike Sussman

Dir Mike Vejar

1 - 15 SHUTTLEPOD ONE

Tucker and Reed set out on a mission in a shuttlepod, as Enterprise is busy investigating an asteroid field. While the pair are away, the shuttlepod is damaged, leaving them without sensors or communications. They manage to make it back to the rendezvous coordinates only to discover Enterprise was apparently destroyed when it crashed into an asteroid. With the ship seemingly no more, the pair are left abandoned in the middle of nowhere with only a few days of air remaining.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir David Livingston

1 - 16 FUSION

The Enterprise encounters a group of Vulcan civilians who have split off from the normal way of Vulcan life in an effort to explore their emotions. T'Pol is disturbed by the new visitors and warns the Captain that all attempts in the past to integrate Vulcan emotions into their lives has proven disastrous. Meanwhile a message from Admiral Forrest leaves the Captain with the difficult task of trying to convince one of the visiting Vulcans to call home to speak with his dying father.

Wr Phyllis Strong, Mike Sussman

Dir Rob Hedden

1 - 17 ROGUE PLANET

While exploring an uncharted planet, Enterprise crew members encounter a group of aliens who are hunting down indigenous creatures for recreation. During their exploration, Archer is mesmerized by visions of an elusive, yet familiar woman who needs his help.

Wr Chris Black

Dir Allan Kroeker

1 - 18 ACQUISITION

When the Ferengi, a group of intergalactic thieves, stun the Enterprise crew and try to rob the ship, it's up to Trip to work covertly to stop them.

Wr Maria Jacquemetton, Andre Jacquemetton

Dir James Whitmore Jr.

1 - 19 OASIS

While exploring a crashed vessel on a desolate planet, the Enterprise crew is haunted by some ghostly figures, and they encounter an alien race that has survived despite insurmountable odds. Trip helps repair their derelict vessel and is befriended by Liana, an attractive humanoid alien who develops feelings for him.

Wr Stephen Beck

Dir Jim Charleston

1 - 20 DETAINED

While exploring a planet, Archer and Mayweather enter a "military zone" and are detained in an internment prison by an alien race called Tandarans, who are at war with the Suliban. While the Enterprise crew's previous encounters with the Suliban have been disastrous, Archer and Mayweather find themselves sharing a cell with some Suliban detainees who they believe may be wrongfully imprisoned.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir David Livingston

1 - 21 VOX SOLA

A strange, symbiotic alien creature boards the Enterprise capturing a few of the crew members, including Archer and Trip, and cocooning them in its web while feeding off their bodies to survive. With the captured crewmembers' lives in jeopardy, Hoshi, under T'Pol's command, faces her biggest challenge by trying to find a way to communicate with the lifeform in order to return it to its home planet.

Wr Fred Dekker

Dir Roxann Dawson

1 - 22 FALLEN HERO

The Enterprise is sent to the planet Mazar to pick up a Vulcan ambassador who has been expelled for misconduct.

Wr Alan Cross

Dir Patrick Norris

1 - 23 DESERT CROSSING

When Archer answers a distress call and has Trip repair the alien ship, the two are invited by the man they helped, to his desert-like planet. However, they soon find that the invitation was motivated by more than simply hospitality. In command of Enterprise, T'Pol, must rescue Archer and Trip from the desert while trying to not to get involved in a war.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir David Straiton

1 - 24 TWO DAYS AND NIGHTS

Archer, Hoshi, Travis, Malcolm, and Trip have decidedly different experiences during shore leave on Risa. Meanwhile, on Enterprise, Phlox enters his annual hibernation cycle.

Wr Chris Black

Dir Michael Dorn

1 - 25 SHOCKWAVE (PART 1 OF 2)

Starfleet orders Enterprise to return home when the crew seemingly causes the destruction of an alien planet they were exploring. Archer is visited by former crew member Daniels, who traveled through time to warn him that the Suliban are trying to sabotage Enterprise's mission, and the two travel through time to try to thwart the Suliban's plans.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Allan Kroeker

2 - 1 SHOCKWAVE (PART 2 OF 2)

Daniels and Archer must find a way back to the 22nd Century in order to make sure history plays out as it should. Meanwhile, on board Enterprise, the Suliban have taken over the ship, but Reed, Trip, and T'Pol formulate a plan to eject the aliens.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Allan Kroeker

2 - 2 CARBON CREEK

After Archer and Trip become curious about a visit she made to a Pennsylvania mining town called Carbon Creek, T'Pol explains to them that Vulcans actually had their first contact with humans in 1957. That year, a Vulcan ship crashed on Earth and three crew members survived, including T'Pol's great grandmother. They posed as humans in Carbon Creek and took on jobs while waiting for rescue and soon found themselves becoming more involved with the town's residents.

Wr Chris Black

Dir James A. Contner

2 - 3 MINEFIELD

When attempting to explore a new planet, Enterprise triggers a cloaked mine. While the crew deal with the resulting damage, it's discovered another mine is stuck to the hull. During Reed's attempt to disarm it, a spike is driven into his leg, trapping him out there. While Archer goes out on the hull to help him, the rest of the crew learn they are in a minefield belonging to the Romulan Star Empire, who demand Enterprise leave or face destruction.

Wr John Shiban

Dir James A. Contner

2 - 4 DEAD STOP

Suffering from damage inflicted in the Romulan minefield and unable to complete repairs on their own, Archer orders a distress call to be put out. A response leads Enterprise to a repair station, which surprisingly has no crew aboard it and is run by computer. Repairs on Enterprise are carried out quite efficiently and quickly, though the price for all this is much higher than the crew could've guessed.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir Roxann Dawson

2 - 5 A NIGHT IN SICKBAY

Archer spends a night in sickbay with Dr. Phlox after Porthos contracts a deadly virus on the Kreetassan homeworld. Crew members suspect Archer's increased stress level is due to Porthos' illness, but Dr. Phlox suspects it has to do with Archer's repressed sexual tension.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir David Straiton

2 - 6 MARAUDERS

In need of fuel, the Enterprise arrives at a Quonset mining colony for deuterium supplies. They discover that Klingons are forcing the colonists to give up all their deuterium. Archer and the rest of the crew work to train the colonists so they can fight back against the Klingons.

Wr David Wilcox

Dir Mike Vejar

2 - 7 THE SEVENTH

Archer, Mayweather and T'Pol travel to an arctic world to apprehend a fugitive, when T'Pol is contacted by Vulcan High Command. The mission takes a dangerous turn when T'Pol begins having flashbacks that suggest the events she remembers about a former mission may not accurately relate to what happened.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir David Livingston

2 - 8 THE COMMUNICATOR

Archer and Reed return to a pre-warp society that is on the verge of war to recover a lost communicator.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir James A. Contner

2 - 9 SINGULARITY

While Enterprise is surveying a black hole in a trinary star system, the stellar phenomenon causes strange effects on the crew.

Wr Chris Black

Dir Patrick Norris

2 - 10 VANISHING POINT

After Hoshi's first transporter experience, strange after-effects lead her to believe she wasn't reassembled correctly.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir David Straiton

2 - 11 PRECIOUS CARGO

Trip boards an alien cargo vessel to help repair a stasis pod, which holds a beautiful woman in suspended animation. When the woman accidentally wakes up, she reveals she's not a passenger, but a prisoner.

Wr David A. Goodman

Dir David Livingston

2 - 12 THE CATWALK

When a lethal neutronic storm approaches faster than Enterprise can escape, the crew take shelter in the maintenance shafts inside the warp nacelles. They also provide refuge to a group of aliens, who aren't exactly honest about themselves.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir Mike Vejar

2 - 13 DAWN

During a solo test mission on Shuttlepod One, Trip is attacked by a territorial alien and forced to land on the night side of a moon. As he tries contacting Enterprise, he discovers his alien foe has made an emergency landing nearby. The two contend with each other as an extremely hot sun rises and threatens both their lives.

Wr John Shiban

Dir Roxann Dawson

2 - 14 STIGMA

While at an Interspecies Medical Exchange conference, Dr. Phlox tries to obtain research on a terminal disease from the Vulcan contingency, without revealing T'Pol has been infected by it.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir David Livingston

2 - 15 CEASE FIRE

Both the Vulcans and the Andorians make a claim to a small planet and military conflict soon erupts. As the fighting goes on, the Vulcans announce they are willing to discuss cease fire terms. However, Imperial Guard officer Shran believes only Captain Archer can be trusted to mediate the situation, which drags the Enterprise crew into the tense situation.

Wr Chris Black

Dir David Straiton

2 - 16 FUTURE TENSE

The Enterprise crew find a small craft drifting in space and are surprised to find it contains a human corpse. More questions arise when both the Suliban and Tholians make claims to the craft.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir James Whitmore Jr.

2 - 17 CANAMAR

Archer and Tucker are wrongly arrested and placed on a prisoner transport heading for a penal colony named Canamar. Things go from bad to worse when one of other prisoners plots a takeover of the ship.

Mayweather discovers his father has died and that things on his old home, the E.C.S. Horizon, have greatly changed.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir James A. Contner

2 - 21 THE BREACH

When militants take over a world, the Enterprise crew move to evacuate Denobulan geologists that are deep underground. Meanwhile, Phlox has to save a dying Antaran that refuses treatment due to the history of their races.

Wr Chris Black, John Shiban

Dir Robert Duncan McNeill

2 - 22 COGENITOR

The Enterprise crew makes first contact with the Vissians, a species with three genders. Trip meets one of the species' third gender, known as Cogenitor, and learns how badly Vissians treat all Cogenitors. Trip attempts to help the Cogenitor, even though it interferes with Vissian culture.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir LeVar Burton

2 - 23 REGENERATION

The remnants of an alien ship and two frozen cybernetic bodies are uncovered in the arctic by a research team. These aliens soon thaw out and flee Earth, taking the research team with them. Starfleet orders Enterprise to find them, but the crew aren't prepared for just how dangerous these aliens really are.

Wr Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir David Livingston

2 - 24 FIRST FLIGHT

Archer tells T'Pol the story of when he and a rival named A.G. Robinson were in competition for breaking the Warp 2 barrier.

Wr Chris Black, John Shiban

Dir LeVar Burton

2 - 25 BOUNTY

Archer learns the Klingons have put a price on his head when he is captured by a Tellarite bounty hunter. As Enterprise pursues, a virus causes T'Pol to go into premature Pon Farr.

Wr Hans Tobeason, Mike Sussman, Phyllis Strong

Dir Roxann Dawson

2 - 26 THE EXPANSE

An alien race known as the Xindi launch an attack on Earth, causing great casualties and massive damage. As Enterprise heads back home, an unlikely source informs Archer about the Xindi and that their next attack will destroy Earth.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Allan Kroeker

3 - 1 THE XINDI

After six weeks in the Delphic Expanse, Enterprise is desperate to find the Xindi in an attempt to save Earth.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Allan Kroeker

3 - 2 ANOMALY

Many of Enterprise's systems are disabled when the ship encounters strange spacial anomalies common to the Expanse. Before the crew can make repairs, they are caught off guard by a group of Osaarian space pirates.

Wr Mike Sussman

Dir David Straiton

3 - 3 EXTINCTION

Captain Archer, Malcolm, and Hoshi become infected with a strange virus that seems to mutate them into another species.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir LeVar Burton

3 - 4 RAJIIN

Enterprise journeys to an alien market to get the formula to synthesize Trellium-D from a chemist. While on the planet, Archer rescues a slave named Rajiin and brings her onto the ship, planning to return her to her home world. Rajiin begins using her strange powers on members of the crew, which is all part of a plan to gather information for the Xindi.

Wr Chris Black, Brent V. Friedman

Dir Mike Vejar

3 - 5 IMPLUSE

Responding to an automated distress call from a Vulcan starship, Archer, T'Pol, Reed and Hawkins attempt a rescue mission, but soon become trapped on board with the Vulcan crew who have gone insane and become extremely violent.

Wr Jonathan Fernandez

Dir David Livingston

3 - 6 EXILE

A mysterious telepathic alien contacts Hoshi with an offer - he will use his powers to obtain information about the Xindi and their weapon, if Hoshi agrees to be his companion while he works on getting the information

Wr Phyllis Strong

Dir Roxann Dawson

3 - 7 THE SHIPMENT

Archer, Reed and Major Hayes conduct reconnaissance at a Xindi-Sloth facility producing kemosite, a substance crucial to the Xindi weapon. When the head of the facility reveals that he was unaware of what his kemosite was being used for, Archer attempts to convince him to help them.

Wr Chris Black, Brent V. Friedman

Dir David Straiton

3 - 8 TWILIGHT

Twelve years into the future, T'Pol reveals that she and Archer are living in a colony of the last surviving humans. While in the expanse years earlier, Archer had become infected with parasites in a state of temporal flux, which prevented him from forming new long-term memories. With Archer unfit for duty, the mission to save Earth had failed.

Wr Mike Sussman

Dir Robert Duncan McNeill

3 - 9 NORTH STAR

Archer, Trip and T'Pol head down to a planet where humans are living in a wild west-like society. Archer learns that aliens named Skagarans brought humans from three hundred years ago there for slave labor, but the humans resisted and turned the tables on them. Now the humans' descendants are in charge and the Skagarans are forced to endure prejudice and unfair laws. The crew have to decide what to do with the humans and the prejudice will lead to a showdown.

Wr David A. Goodman

Dir David Straiton

3 - 10 SIMILITUDE

Something goes wrong during an attempt to improve the warp engines, causing Trip to be severely injured and leaving Enterprise crippled in a dangerous polaric field. Archer allows Phlox to create a simbiot of Trip, which will only live for fifteen days and provide neural tissue needed for a vital transplant. The simbiot is named Sim and, aging years in a matter of days, actually thinks of a plan to free Enterprise from the field. However, a difficult decision must be made after it's learned Sim will be prematurely killed by the transplant, even though there is a chance to exceed his lifespan.

Wr Manny Coto

Dir LeVar Burton

3 - 11 CARPENTER STREET

Archer receives a visit from Daniels and learns three Xindi-Reptilians are in Detroit, Michigan in the early 21st century. Archer and T'Pol arrive in early 21st century to find the Reptilians and to learn what they're doing there. They discover the Reptilians are operating out of an old factory and that a man named Loomis has been kidnapping people for them. It turns out the Reptilians are using the kidnapped people to further work on the bio-weapon and they're getting closer to completing it.

Wr Rick Berman, Brannon Braga

Dir Mike Vejar

3 - 12 CHOSEN REALM

Enterprise saves a Triannon crew, a race that worship the creators of the spheres in the Delphic Expanse. However, it was all a set up as D'Jammat and his followers seize control, threatening to destroy the ship unless Archer cooperates. D'Jammat wants to destroy those opposed to his beliefs and orders the ship to the Triannon homeworld. D'Jammat is also not happy after learning Enterprise has explored the spheres before and tells Archer one of the crew must die as punishment.

Wr Manny Coto

Dir Roxann Dawson

3 - 13 PROVING GROUND

Enterprise detects a signal leading to a testing ground for the Xindi weapon prototype, but they have to move through a field of anomalies in order to get there faster. Enterprise takes heavy damage in the process, but is ultimately saved by an Andorian ship under Shran's command. Shran offers Archer assistance in the battle against the Xindi and both work together to take the Xindi weapon prototype. But Shran and the Andorians have different plans for the weapon.

Wr Chris Black

Dir David Livingston

3 - 14 STRATAGEM

Degra wakes up on a cargo shuttle that is under attack and being piloted by Archer. Archer tells him three years have passed and that they escaped together from a Xindi-Insectoid prison colony. However, this is really all a carefully planned deception being carried out by the crew three days after they captured Degra's ship. Archer hopes this deception will get Degra to tell him where the Xindi weapon is being built.

Wr Mike Sussman

Dir Mike Sussman

3 - 15 HARBINGER

Enterprise comes across a massive convergence of anomalies and an alien pod is found inside. After rescuing the pod's dying occupant, Phlox attempts treatment while Archer tries to learn what he was doing, unaware that this alien has a hidden motive. Meanwhile, a series of training drills with the Starfleet officers and the MACOs lead to an explosive fight between Reed and Major Hayes. Also, T'Pol learns Trip has been having neuro-pressure sessions with Corporal Amanda Cole, bringing certain feelings to light.

Wr Manny Coto

Dir David Livingston

3 - 16 DOCTOR'S ORDERS

Journeying to Azati Prime becomes more difficult when Enterprise encounters a trans-dimensional disturbance that would take two weeks to go around. Archer allows Phlox to put the human crew members into comas to protect them from the disturbance so the ship can move across it at impulse. However, the disturbance has unforeseen effects on Phlox as time goes on and he begins experiencing hallucinations. Even worse, the disturbance is expanding and could leave Enterprise trapped inside for weeks if Phlox doesn't take a drastic course of action.

Wr Chris Black

Dir Roxann Dawson

3 - 17 HATCHERY

Archer leads an away team to study a crashed Xindi-Insectoid ship, discovering that the adult Insectoids have died and, finding a hatchery. Archer decides they must make sure the Insectoid offspring hatch safely and survive, saying it will help prove to the Xindi that their beliefs about humanity are wrong. However, Archer's orders and behavior become more and more unusual, putting Enterprise's mission at risk. Some of the crew decide they'll have to do something extreme in order to ensure their mission will succeed.

Wr Andre Bormanis

Dir Michael Grossman

3 - 18 AZATI PRIME

After getting to Azati Prime, the crew discover the almost complete Xindi weapon is on an ocean planet. Their plan to destroy it calls for someone to pilot the recently acquired Insectoid shuttle on a suicide mission and Archer decides he'll do it. However, Daniels brings Archer to the future to tell him that he must instead make peace with the Xindi and convince them that they've been manipulated by the Sphere-Builders. Archer refuses to put Earth at risk and goes on the mission, but he's captured by the Xindi and gets interrogated. Even worse, Enterprise has been found and the crew face a devastating attack.

Wr Manny Coto

Dir Allan Kroeker

3 - 19 DAMAGE

The Xindi ships are recalled from the battle, leaving Enterprise with heavy damage and losses. As the crew struggle to make repairs, some Xindi manage to send Archer back to Enterprise. Not long after his return, Enterprise encounters an Illyrian ship damaged by anomalies. Archer attempts to make a trade for a vital warp coil, but the Illyrian Captain states they can't spare it. To ensure his mission's success, Archer will have to cross a line and take the coil by force. Meanwhile, T'Pol tells Phlox the secret behind her unusual behavior and divisions between the Xindi Council continue to grow.

Wr Phyllis Strong

Dir James L. Conway

3 - 20 THE FORGOTTEN

Still suffering from the battle with the Xindi, Enterprise makes it to the rendezvous point and docks with Degra's ship near one of the Spheres. Learning the Xindi weapon will be launched in several days, Archer works to prove to Degra and the Xindi-Arboreal that everything he's said about them being manipulated is true. However, a ruptured warp plasma conduit threatens Enterprise and the arrival of a Reptilian ship later threatens the meeting. Meanwhile, Trip has been asked to write a letter to the family of a dead crewman, but it proves to be very difficult for him.

Wr Chris Black, David A. Goodman

Dir LeVar Burton

3 - 21 E²

Before the crew attempt to enter the subspace corridor that will help them get to the Xindi Council chamber, they suddenly encounter an NX class ship. Surprisingly this NX class ship is really Enterprise and is controlled by the crew's descendants. Lorian (Trip and T'Pol's son) and Karyn (Archer's great grand daughter) explain that Enterprise did enter the subspace corridor, but something went wrong and the crew were sent over a hundred years back in time. Trying to make sure history doesn't repeat itself and that the mission succeeds, Lorian has a plan to increase the ship's warp speed. However, T'Pol's older counterpart thinks his plan will cause Enterprise to be destroyed instead and that entering the subspace corridor can still work if certain modifications to the ship are made. When Archer decides the corridor is the best option, Lorian makes a difficult decision.

4 - 3 HOME

With both the Xindi and the Temporal Cold War behind them, the crew of Enterprise finally return to Earth. The crew receives a heroic welcome complete with parades, news broadcasts, and schools renamed in their honor. But the troubled captain is having trouble putting the experiences of the past year behind him. When Archer blows up at Ambassador Soval during his mission debriefing, he is ordered by Admiral Forrest to take a vacation and get his act together. Meanwhile, T'Pol invites Trip to visit her mother T'Les on Vulcan since he no longer has a home or a family. It's the first time T'Pol has been home in years, which gives T'Les a chance to see the changes her daughter has undergone during her time among humans. Also, Travis, Mayweather, and Phlox learn firsthand the extent of the xenophobia that has plagued Earth since the Xindi attack.
