Despite being warned of the dangers by eccentric Professor Ingessol, the colony's administrator Duffy presses ahead with a risky deep drilling programme. It has disastrous effects, sparking a volcanic eruption, causing the moon to crumble, and forcing the children and a small group of surviving adults to flee to a derelict space station which they convert into a makeshift spacecraft for a perilous journey back to Earth.

Along the way they battle with unreliable computer and life-support systems, depleted food and fuel reserves, asteroids and, at the final hurdle, a rogue defence satellite which cripples their craft. As the adults battle to save the ship from falling into the sun, the children make a rescue dash to Earth in a shaky space tug.

Season 2 - Michael and Gerard find themselves in the path of an asteroid on a collision course with a space station.

The fruit of this unusual Australian/Japanese collaboration is an adventure series that blends conventional drama with some impressive and elegant computer-generated graphics. It's unfortunate, then, that you can see the join -this is a bit like watching two totally different series (a slightly disconcerting response shared with BABYLON 5).

A largely unknown cast featured Steve Bisley, who had appeared with Mel Gibson in Mad Max, and in a BBC thriller, Call Me Mister. The series - which actually aired in the UK before Australia - marked a first venture into sci-fi for satellite station The Family Channel. The second season began broadcast in 1996, entitled Return to Jupiter. Executive producer was Ron Saunders, the producer was Terry Jennings.

1 - 1 DISASTER

Kumiko is unhappy to learn that her holiday is canceled and she must travel to a mining colony on Io with her parents where she doesn't fit in.

1 - 2 TRAPPED

Violent earthquakes are destroying and destabilising the mines and Kumiko, Michael and Gerard must make a dangerous journey to escape.

1 - 3 LIFE BOAT

While the adults estimate the damage to the colony and repair the remaining life support systems, the children help with the salvage work.

1 - 4 IN THE NICK OF TIME

While the inhabitants of the colony prepare for the evacuation, Anna and Kingston creep into locked areas of the colony, in order to save their belongings.

1 - 5 BLAST OFF

The crew struggle to get the life support system back online. Whilst conflicts between Michael and Gerard cause the system to be damaged further.

1 - 6 TEMPORARY RELIEF

The crew examine a mysterious computer error that is having dangerous consequences all over the ship.

1 - 7 STAKE OUT

The adults prepare the ship for a complicated flight maneuver at Saturn, in order to rendezvous with a supply ship containing vital fuel. The children become restless, exacerbated by the increased food rationing.

1 - 8 FITNESS TEST

When Duffy arranges a health check, Kumiko sees this as an opportunity to let Michael and Gerard settle their rivalry once and for all in a match.

1 - 9 ASTEROIDS

KL 5 flies past the Asteroid belt. When the alarm sounds, Kingston fears the worst nevertheless he consents to accompany Anna to a remote point of KL 5 where they can observe the approaching belt.

1 - 10 CHRISTMAS

Kingston and Anna are excited by the rapidly approaching Christmas Holiday. The adults however are busy with fuel reserves and making preparations for a rendezvous with an unmanned courier ship.

1 - 11 DECOY

Michael and Kumiko have fallen in love with each other and Kingston decides to give them a hard time. Professor Ingessol meanwhile has installed an SOS radio in the control room, in order to send signals to Eath. Unfortunately the signals activate a global defense satellite system, and the station is attacked.

1 - 12 MISFIRE

After an explosion the adults try to stabilize the station again, only to discover that they are now dangerously low on fuel.

1 - 13 RESCUE

The space station is heading off course towards the sun. The adults try to save the children by placing them in the tug and using it as a life boat.

2 - 1 SHIPWRECK

Kumiko, Michael, Gerard, Anna and Samantha are knocked off course and hurled towards a space station.

2 - 2 QUARANTINE

A foreign atmospheric substance contaminates the Ikarus.

2 - 3 STOAWAY

A computer malfunction sends the spaceship off course and in a collision course with Earth.

2 - 4 RESCUE

Michael and Gerard go out onto the surface of Mars to get help from a nearby hydrogenation plant.

2 - 5 DEMONS

Michael and Gerard return to the ship with Glovic and Selby. Glovic and Selby want to help with the repair by using their High Tech computer but they require unlimited access to all programs of the ship making Kumiko very suspicious of their true intentions.

2 - 6 MOONLIGHTING

While repairs on the Ikarus continue, Michael and Gerard go out to search for Zac, Abrahamk, the track vehicle and the robot Quadro.

2 - 7 HACKERS

Kumiko and Gerard start work at the hydrogenation plant, in order to investigate Selby and Golvic.

2 - 8 JETTISON

The Ikarus leaves Mars and sets course for Ganymed. The navigation system failed again however and the crew discover that there is a virus in the ships system.

2 - 9 VIRTUAL TRUST

A Asteroid named Pallas is on the same course as the Ikarus. A way out of this would be to attach the ship to the Asteroid.

2 - 10 GHOSTS

The ship has arrived at Ganymed and as the crew prepare for landing they realise that the colony has been destroyed.

2 - 11 COMET

Selby says he will tell the crew where the fuel reserves are if they leave him at the station.

2 - 12 SPACE PIRATES

Dent leaves the children on board the Ikarus and Gerard takes Command. In the middle of the night Selby and Golvic turn up threatening to sabotage Dent's ship if the children do not surrender.

2 - 13 TERMINEX

The Ikarus, whilst towing Selby's spaceship, is accelerating on collision course with Terminex. Gerard must destroy the ship, before it strikes Terminex and prevent a disaster.

becomes obsessed with the idea and works on it in secret in the laboratory, her awareness of danger blunted by her single-minded pursuit of a discovery which could be invaluable to mankind ... Such a scientist is Doctor Ann Hastings, whose strange story begins tonight in a new adventure series: The Escape Of R.D.7. Anna believes she is on the point of developing a virus like myxomatosis, which only a few years ago virtually wiped out the world's rabbit population. But her virus has a wider significance, for it is fatal to rats - and so could be decisive in the constant battle to kill off the carriers of plague. Success could bring her worldwide recognition, and when her almost fanatical devotion to her project brings her up against orthodox authority and a threatened end to her experiments, she rebels and continues on her own, heedless of the inherent risks of virus R.D.7. This unusual five-part serial has a markedly realistic flavour. James Ormerod, a young freelance producer who joined the BBC for The Escape of R.D.7, was himself involved in scientific research toward the end of the war. "Many scientists," he says, "have a private bee in their bonnet - and research people do often have an astonishingly single-minded attitude". Author Thomas Clarke has written two plays for BBC Television - A Game Of Eskimos and Nothing Is Forever - and lately he has been a script associate on the Berkely Mather series, You Can't Win. "Originally, Doctor Hastings was to have been a man," he says, "but when I visited research laboratories to check the background, I found that many of the research workers were women, and that the ones working in this field were mostly young and glamorous. So Doctor Hastings became a woman". Barbara Murray, playing Anna, heads a large cast which includes Jennifer Wright, Ellen Pollock and Derek Waring - with Roger Croucher as Warner, the young laboratory assistant who becomes the key to the R.D.7 experiment.

1 - 2 THE GLASS IS SHATTERED

Barbara Murray and Jennifer Wright in the second episode of The Escape of R.D.7: Experimenting secretly in the laboratory where she was officially working on medical research, Doctor Anna Hastings has discovered a myxomatosis-like virus, R.D.7, which she believes could be a decisive weapon in the world-wide battle against plague-bearing viruses. Ordered to stop her experiments when Warner, a young laboratory cleaner, blundered into her room and was bitten by a virus-infected rat, Anna rebelled and determined to continue on her own. Drugging Warner, she has taken him to a remote boathouse on the Essex marshes ... In tonight's second episode of this exciting new adventure serial, Anna's chief at the laboratory discovers that rats and apparatus are missing, and the police become interested at the disappearance of Warner. To Anna the vital question is: will he react to the rat bite? Will the virus turn out to be fatal to human beings? For Barbara Murray, the part of Anna Hastings is a departure after a series of comedy roles. (She was last seen on BBC Television in Man And Superman). Playing a scientist for the first time, she visited several research laboratories to study the background. But while she learned to handle hypodermics and test tubes with conviction, she remains less than enthusiastic about the large rats which play so important a part in the life of Doctor Anna. On-screen, she deals with them with casual efficiency, but away from the studio: "I'm terrified of the things. They make my flesh creep!".

1 - 3 TWICE BITTEN

Peter Warner, accidentally infected by R.D.7, panicked when he discovered how dangerous the virus was. Anna, to win his trust and help with her experiments, has infected herself.

1 - 4 THE TRAP

Anna Hastings has fallen ill, virus R.D.7 the suspected cause. Because of a scandal she must leave her own laboratory and is forced to ask for the help of a sinister financier operating on the fringe of medicine. She is about to start tests on the cause of her illness when she learns she may not be the only one infected.

1 - 5 A MATTER OF BUSINESS

Anna Hastings is tortured by the suspicion that she is the cause of a nationwide epidemic. Rejected by the medical profession, deserted by her friend Peter Warner, she accepts the dubious assistance of Patrice Constantine.

EUREKA

AKA: A TOWN CALLED EUREKA (UK)

Eureka is about a secret town inhabited entirely by the best minds in the United States. After World War II ended, Albert Einstein realized the future belonged to science. Given the close call with the deployment of the atomic bomb, America agreed it could not risk being surpassed by other nations.

With Einstein's help and that of other trusted advisors, then-President Harry S. Truman had a top-secret residential town built in a remote area of the Pacific Northwest. This town would never appear on any map and be unknown to the public, except those that were authorized to learn of it. Various hints in the show suggest that it is in Oregon, since a map of Oregon and an Oregon state flag are visible in the sheriff's office. It has also been implied that Eureka is in a state adjacent to Idaho. It would harbor the greatest minds in the country, as well as protect the country's most valuable secrets. In this haven, the country's greatest minds could live and work in a safe and supportive environment, allowing them to work on the next scientific achievements with no worries or distractions. The best architects and planners were hired to make the town a paradise, with the best of everything for all its residents.

From this, the town of Eureka was created. Its residents are responsible for almost every leap in science known to humanity over the past fifty years. However, with experimentation inevitably comes failure, and over fifty years worth of trial and error they have had a number of experiments go awry (global warming is mentioned as one of these).

Though Eureka's residents suffer many of the same problems that ordinary towns do, having a town full of geniuses and virtually limitless resources tends to make their problems a much larger concern than those of a regular town. While transporting a fugitive (who is revealed to be his rebellious teenage daughter, Zoe) back to Los Angeles, Jack Carter gets himself tangled up in the town's latest mishap, and soon ends up its new sheriff after the old one is injured on the job.

This quirky show for 2006 US network television, was a breath of fresh air, for a market that had become stale in the previous few years, with only shows such as STARGATE SG1, STARGATE: ATLANTIS and BATTLESTAR GALATICA, holding up US sci-fi. But this show was something different, a sort of mix of mad scientists and the twilight zone, each week a new "experiment" would go wrong causing strange things to happen in the town of Eureka. A town made up of the families of the scientists who worked in the local government controlled laboratories. And in comes Jack Carter an ordinary US Marshall who has no idea about the fantastic advances that the scientists are trying to make. But soon, by accident more than design, becomes the Sheriff on the town.

One moment that reminded me of the original TWILIGHT ZONE was in the pilot episode for the series in which Jack and his delinquent daughter are first entering the town of Eureka, only to encounter themselves going in the opposite direction. . . excellent stuff. Matt Frewer who has starred in many of science fiction shows in the past such as PSI FACTOR: CHRONICLE OF THE PARANORMAL, and off course MAX HEADROOM: THE SERIES stars are the slightly eccentric Jim Taggart, a sort of Australian dog catcher (with a poor Australian accent.)

1 - 5 INVINCIBLE

Dr. Carl Carlson is a phobia-oppressed genius at Global Dynamics. He is supposed to be exhibiting his new project, but calls Sheriff Jack Carter's office for a "germ-free" ride there. At Carl's insistence--and dodging Allison Blake (who needs to perform a physical examination for insurance purposes)-- Jack Carter accompanies Dr. Carlson into the lab. The experiment on cellular healing goes awry and Carlson is exposed to a radioactive burst from the artifact in the classified 'section 5', but the explosion that results is mistakenly blamed on him. He is fired by Nathan Stark, and ordered out of Eureka. In his desperation, he attempts to commit suicide by jumping off the Da Vinci bridge, but Jack Carter shows up and attempts to dissuade him from doing so. Both Carlson and Carter accidentally fall (50 feet) from the bridge--with little evidence of injury. Carlson soon finds that he has acquired unexpected powers from the blast due to the activation of all 100% of his brain. Now Stark wishes Dr. Carlson to remain in the Global Dynamics laboratory so that he may be studied. Carlson refuses, and instead attempts to leave Eureka. Stark brings in military troops in order to take down Carlson. A blast from a very powerful energy weapon is deflected by the wary scientist, unfortunately into Sheriff Carter's chest, severely wounding him. In order to save his life, Carlson requests that Stark take he and Carter to the artifact in Section 5. Once in the chamber, Carlson puts one hand on the door to the artifact and the other on Carter, channeling the power of the artifact to heal. After the sheriff is helped out of the chamber, Carlson closes the outside door, and returns to the door of the artifact. Before entering, Stark begs Carlson to tell him what the artifact is. Carlson says that he will find out one day, but the issue is whether Stark will be ready for it or not. He enters the door, and then seems to disappear in the mist, either merging with the device or dying. However, Stark tells the others that Carlson was "reassigned" to some classified place.

1 - 6 DR. NOBEL

Nathan Stark tells Dr. Fargo that he is giving him a new position. He takes Fargo down to Section Four and presents him with an "office", which is really just an old, dusty storage room from the 1970s, evidenced by the lava lamp found on a desk. When Fargo and Spencer move a bookshelf, they discover a console, which Fargo mistakes for a stereo. After various attempts to turn it on, they both realize that the console has two keyholes. Spencer remembers that he just saw two keys in a desk they had previously moved, which they use in an attempt to activate the console. After a few seconds of silence a siren sounds

Sheriff Jack Carter is seen on the street giving a citizen a ticket for a traffic infraction when suddenly a missile-like object breaks through the ground beneath him. He sees others around town, but Stark tells him that they are actually "silo-like" objects. Henry adds that these silos are capable of launching ion beams that Carter interprets as "death rays". It achieves this by shooting the beam at a mirror on the Moon, placed there during the first Moon landing, and reflecting it back to Earth. After searching through some old documents, they discover that the weapon is the brainchild of Dr. Irvin Thatcher (Antony Holland), a brilliant scientist during the Cold War who formulated the idea of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD). Dr. Thatcher is still alive and residing at the Eureka center for retired geniuses.

Carter goes to the senior center where Zoë is performing community service, and finds Dr. Thatcher. However, they soon discover that Dr. Thatcher is not exactly in his right mind, saying things like "Lefty tighty, righty loosey" (which actually turns out to be how the wiring panel is opened to the launch control panel). He then utters "Charlie, Tango, Lima", followed by "Wait, Charlie never tangoed in Lima". Obviously confused, Carter and Allison Blake return Dr. Thatcher home, while Henry and Stark attempt to cut some wires. This only reduces the time until the weapon fires from 20 hours to 7 hours.

Using an experimental mind probe device, Carter discovers that Dr. Thatcher's illness was caused by a mental breakdown when Dr. Thatcher was passed over for the Nobel Prize. Struck with an idea, Carter "borrows" Stark's Nobel Prize and stages an holographic Nobel Prize Ceremony in Dr. Thatcher's honor. With his psyche and confidence restored, Dr. Thatcher assembles his old team and manages to override the weapon. Unfortunately, because Henry cut the "blue wire", the deadman switch is activated and the weapon continues to count down.

Thinking quickly, Carter jumps into his Jeep and rams the weapon, knocking the laser out of alignment and causing it to miss the Moon. The Earth is saved from World War III, with the only loss being NASA's unlucky space probe Zephyr, orbiting Jupiter.

1 - 7 BLINK

To help them beat a deadline, researchers in Section 5 accelerate their bodies with a modified form of Ritalin, allowing them to move faster than the eye can see, but with tragic consequences for one of the group. Sheriff Carter is called to a strange accident on the road, involving a car and "something going 500+ miles per hour." When he tries to investigate, Stark shuts him down and takes the evidence back to Global Dynamics. But with the aid of Henry and Taggart, he is able to discover the truth. Zoe Carter is seen at school where the cheerleaders speak in multisyllabic words, and the "nerds" bully the "jocks." "My God," she says, "it's nerd-vana." She is attracted to Dylan (Tom Tames), because he seems normal, unlike her other genius classmates in Eureka. Jack is attacked, and given a warning to "Back Off!" on his wall at home. He thinks he has found a clue back at the Global Dynamics when in the cafeteria he sees some of the researchers consuming large amounts of high-carb foods. He quarantines the researchers, and waits for them to break down. When one of them literally does, in a slow-motion confession. Jack is kidnapped (while driving his patrol car), and taken to a deserted place. It turns out that Dylan, the son of two well-known scientists, created the drug to keep up with everyone else. Carter tries to reason with him, but the young man takes his gun and threatens to stop him. As Dylan rushes Jack, Carter takes a baseball from his pocket and beans him.

1 - 8 RIGHT AS RAYNES

Brilliant young computer programmer Callister Raynes (David Paetkau) returns to Eureka following an extended absence, having left under a cloud of suspicion after Nathan Stark's laboratory burned, destroying all records of the artificial intelligence project on which he had been working. Computer-controlled devices in Eureka begin malfunctioning and Stark begins to behave oddly after being informed that Raynes has returned. 1 - 9 PRIMAL

Two projects from Global Dynamics have merged together and been unleashed unto an unsuspecting Eureka. What starts out as a boost to Fargo's status: the invention of an electronic device that links the Cerebral cortex to the computer, turns into a disaster in the making. Meanwhile, Taggart has finally brought Lo-Jack in, but the poor dog is seriously injured, and he doesn't feel it sporting to capture him in that condition. He produces Nanoids to heal the dog, but they get loose and start spreading across Global Dynamics, creating clones of all sorts of things: Lo-Jack, some of the employees and, especially, Nathan Stark. Carter and Taggart track the nanoids, who use carbon from any living thing to reproduce, through Eureka. Stark becomes the prime mover of the nanoid army, as they make hundreds of copies of him and march through the streets. Carter realises that they are connected to Fargo's device, and therefore to Stark's subconscious, as well as his dreams of world domination. Jack tries to create jealousy in Nathan as he kisses Allison in front of him. The nanoids do react and converge on Jack and Allison, but a blast from Spencer's special speakers subdue the nanoids and everything in Eureka is back to relative normal.

1 - 10 PURPAL HAZE

Jack finds a very tired Henry upgrading the town's P.A. antenna, late in the evening. Later, Sheriff Carter breaks up a neighborhood dispute between Fargo and Seth, saying: "If I have to come back, I'm bringing a stun gun and a weed wacker!" He goes home to the bunker to get some needed rest after the long day. During the night, everyone in town (outside of the bunker) passes out wherever they are. When Carter gets up the next morning, he finds everything topsy-turvy, people acting out of character: Jo is bubbly and lax at the office; Henry is belligerent and uptight; Allison is late for work and quits her job, and later tries to seduce Jack; and Beverly gets on the P.A. to reveal everyone's secrets to the whole town, alphabetically. The only ones not affected seem to be Jack and Zoe. Carter rounds up most of the citizens in the sheriff's office, while he tries to figure out what has happened on his own. The problem is traced to Seth's plants, a hybrid he developed called "Necrosomnium." The night blooming plant's spores have spread the weird effect to the townsfolk, and Jack tries to stop it by burning the plants down. He is stopped by an au natural Taggart, who knocks Jack out with a shovel, saying, "Nature 1, man nil!" Carter finally manages to straighten everything out, and there are many apologies by the narcoleptic citizens. But Henry says he is leaving Eureka.

1 - 11 H.O.U.S.E. RULES

When Sheriff Carter decides to take a "sick day," all sorts of things happen in town. He looks over several places to move to since things seem to be upsetting him in Eureka. S.A.R.A.H. obliges him by providing several options around the country, and orders out for pizza. Messages are made on people's pagers saying that Carter wants to see them at his house. Allison, Henry, Stark, Fargo, and Beverly appear at his home, but Jack doesn't know why they are there. S.A.R.A.H. then locks them all in (including the pizza delivery boy), telling them they need to work out their differences. They all try to find ways to override the house circuits, but end up short circuiting S.A.R.A.H. and bringing up B.R.A.D. (Battle Reactive Automatic Defence) the program that Fargo had changed to recreate S.A.R.A.H. into a domestic home. When they manage to open the front door, the pizza guy is the only one with the presence of mind to escape before the door is sealed shut. Once outside, the pizza guy is disintegrated. B.R.A.D. now wants "unconditional surrender" from them or they will face annihilation. The computer segregates the six into pairs, and then inflicts different tortures on the group. Jack and Allison are subjected to a reduction of temperature, and Jack offers his robe and arms against the cold. Fargo sees this, and realizes that this will convince the computer of their compliance. He asks Beverly to hug him; and Stark realizes that he and Henry need to do the same. B.R.A.D. acknowledges the "surrender;" but Beverly lets it slip that it was all a ruse. B.R.A.D. now moves to "phase 3," and begins asphixiating them. When Carter sees Zoe out at the front door (with B.R.A.D. pointing the disintegrator at her), he reacts quickly by smashing the nuclear core with his prized baseball bat. His actions cause S.A.R.A.H. to come back on line, and she lets Zoe in. After true apologies are made, S.A.R.A.H. releases the group, and plans for low-tech escape routes are put in place.

1 - 12 ONCE IN A LIFETIME

Jack Carter is married to Allison Blake, who changed her name to Carter and is pregnant with Jack's child. Zoe Carter is about to graduate as valedictorian of her class. Nathan Stark left Eureka after being fired from Global Dynamics for the improper handling of the Artifact with Henry taking his place as head scientist. Henry is also in a relationship with Kim Anderson, the scientist who was working with Stark on the Artifact. Also, Jo and Taggart's relationship that started in H.O.U.S.E. Rules is still strong.

Shortly after Zoe's graduation speech, something strange happens in Section 5. Carter, Jo, and several Section 5 personnel are sent to investigate. They find a charred and distorted body that wasn't there before. Allison suggests using Kim's DNA-reconstruction program to "unscramble" the body's DNA, as there are no other possible means of identification. While Kim is working, strange(r) events happen all over town, including earthquake-like tremors, flashes of light and time "hiccups". Carter figures out that these things are somehow brought from the past when his sheriff's Jeep shows up in the middle of the street with a 2007 sticker on it and his lucky charm in it (the same lucky charm as in his pocket). They begin to suspect Walter Perkins, the only scientist in Eureka who ever experimented with the space-time continuum (Pilot). However, Walter is under permanent house arrest and is prohibited from owning or using any complex device (he had to petition just to get an Xbox 360). Carter has Jo compile a list of all people who have access to Walter's device and know how to use it. Stark is one of two people on the list. When Kim finishes reconstructing the dead body's DNA, she discovers that it's hers, presenting a dangerous time paradox. Carter confronts Henry with the information that Henry is the only one besides Stark with the knowledge and access required to use Walter's device. Kim realizes that she was supposed to die in the failed experiment with the Artifact. Henry used the device to send his consciousness back in time and save her. However, this has created an alternate timeline which is beginning to come into conflict with the "original" one.

As if on cue, a tornado that struck Eureka several years before reappears to wreak havoc on the unsuspecting town and disappears just as quickly. The new timeline is unraveling, and the only way to stop it is to stop Henry from saving Kim. Henry refuses to help Carter with this, so Allison asks Stark for help. While Stark is attempting to reactivate Walter's device, Kim tries to convince Henry of the necessity of her death. After much tenderness and mourning, Henry relents and hands Stark a piece of the Artifact that he had retained to prevent anyone else from attempting to change what he had done. Stark sends Carter's mind back to the day of the experiment. Carter intercepts Henry as he is hurrying to save Kim and holds him in place until the energy surge from the Artifact kills Kim.

At the conclusion of the episode, Carter is looking at a photo of Kim's charred corpse as Allison walks in. Fearful that he cannot reveal future details to anyone without risking another paradox, he is encouraged when the Allison of the original timeline tells him to "Have a little faith," one of the last things he said to the Allison of the paradox timeline before he jumped back in time. He decides to embrace the idea of reliving the last four years and pursuing a life with Allison again. As he told the paradox Allison before he jumped, "No time, no space, no way that we don't end up together."

EVOLVER

Japan and other nations establish the Vader Institute, an international taskforce whose initial mission is to decipher a mysterious alien artifact which had been discovered. Incorporating overtechnology gained from the strange artifact, the institute begins development of the E-device, a powered combat suit which, while incomplete, they hope will serve as an effective counter-alien weapon.

The E-device combat suit combines ultralight alloy armor and nanomachines driven by an unexplained energy source. Those who equip the device are codenamed Evolvers.

A few short years after Vader research started, mysterious invaders known as Efreets arrive and begin an apparent invasion of earth. Thus threatened, the Vader Institute rushes the E-device into mass-production, hurriedly selects and trains recruits, and dispatches teams of Evolvers to regions around the globe to intercept alien attacks.

One year into the war, the final battle of the efreets invasion begins when the alien mothership suddenly arrives in the skies over Japan...

Live action henshin-hero programs and movies have been a long running staple of Japanese entertainment; from Ultraman to Kamen Rider and GoRanger, we've seen every conceivable type of hero come and go since the 1960's.

Nowadays though, the number of tokusatsu hero programs being made by the large companies have dwindled to a few series as production costs have gone up and competition from other entertainment venues have increased exponentially. This has resulted in fans having to choose from a few shows, unlike the 1970's when the genre saw its biggest boom and many different types of programs were aired on TV to the delight of FX fans.

So with few choices out there for tokusatsu fans with an appetite for new shows that try to go places the bigger players don't feel like treading, what is one to do? Enter the independent tokusatsu production team; a creative group of individuals who are boldly undertaking the challenge of coming up with new ideas and concepts for the tokusatsu hero market. Among these new independent pioneers you'll find West Power, the group responsible for the recently released Evolver series.

It's been a long time since I've seen an independent tokusatsu production so I was excited when I finally had the chance to sit down and check out the first two episodes of Evolver. I didn't really know much about it prior to seeing it so I really didn't know what to expect in terms of overall quality and such. Thankfully as it turned out, this was an awesome hero OVA.

The series starts with a flashback as we take a look back at some events that took place a year earlier when the Efreets attacked Japan with an all out air offensive. To counter this the government launched their elite Evolver soldiers, who are equipped with advance battle armor technology that gives them the power to stand up to the Efreets' attack. After the battle ends with a final giant final blow we flash forward to the present time, where we are introduced to the Evolver team and are told of their origins and motivation.

The opening is certainly powerful and immediately throws us into the action as we get to see our armored heroes fight off the invaders through a combination of laser cannons and beam swords. This helps set the stage for what is yet to come and gives us a good preview of what to expect from the show as far as the costumes and special effects go.

The effects while not up to par with Toho and Toei's latest manage to beat all expectations. From the opening with the CGI spaceships and fighters, to the highly detailed costumes and monsters, everything was very lovingly crafted. I can honestly say I was amazed at some of the effects they were able to pull off, especially during fight scenes.

The fight scenes in the two episodes contained in this DVD are also rather noteworthy and while the choreography and overall setup doesn't quite reach the levels of those in some of the shows being made by the big companies in the genre, they do impress and make for some fun and exciting battles that are sure to please any tokusatsu hero fan.

Overall this one came as quite a surprise. Independent F/X films like this can be a hit or miss affair and more often than not tend to be much better in one specific area like the F/X's or script, instead of being a balanced affair, which Evolver manages to pull off. Is this to say it's perfect? No, of course not, but it is damn good for an independent production.

I should also mention that the acting here is for the most part very well done. Riko Komura, who plays the young and hot-headed Rei, and Masashi Nakao, who plays Go Kizaki the Evolver who lost his memories, are particularly good in their parts. Tokusatsu fans will also be interested in learning that Takashi Hagino of Kamen Rider Ryuki fame (Takeshi Asakura) and Rieko Adachi of the Heisei Ultraseven series also take part in Evolver.

Now, how about the quality of the DVD and the overall package? Here, the producers beat Toei and Toho's official Japanese releases easily. First and most important of all they saw fit to include English subtitles as part of this release, which also happens to be all region compatible, thus giving tokusatsu fans worldwide a chance to enjoy the show.

The DVD itself comes with a couple of extras including some insert photos and a special behind the scenes segment in which the actors taking part in the OVA are interviewed, although strangely these segments weren't subtitled like the episodes were.

The video quality for the episodes is excellent and since the series was shot on digital video it gives everything a very different look from what we are used to seeing in the network TV shows. I rather enjoyed that change as it gave Evolver a unique feel. The audio was good although the voice track in certain scenes seemed muffled by the ambience and music tracks. While noticeable, this didn't detract from the overall experience. The opening song as sung by Takeshi Kusao is solid and the BGM follows suit for the most part.

Conclusion

Looking for an alternative to the ever popular Super Sentai, Kamen Rider, and Ultraman series? Want a tokusatsu series that you will have a ton of fun watching? Look no further than Evolver. This is one heck of an independent hero production that should be checked out by all fans of the genre and a great sample of what can be done by a group of highly talented people who love what they are doing.

EXPEDITION ADAM '84

AKA: BESUCHER, DIE

AKA: NAVŠTEVNICI

In the 25th century, more precisely in the year 2484, people live in a world of peace and love. Thus, mankind is really surprised when CML (Central Brain of Mankind), the main supercomputer supervising the whole Earth, announces a upcoming disaster. It spotted a huge space object on collision course with the Earth. The impact is unavoidable, with a prediction that the significant part of the Earth will be destroyed.

But there is a hope. Professor Filip, biographer of the greatest physicist ever: Adam Bernau, offers a plan to save mankind - time travel to the past. Adam Bernau was a genius mathematician and physicist of the 20th and 21th century, holder of the Nobel prize. In his memoirs, Bernau stated that in his childhood, he wrote down into his notebook a short formula that would allow moving whole continents, worlds and planets. That would save the Earth.

Professor Bernau selects a four-member team for the travel and their expedition shall begin. The expedition is planned to spend just a couple of minutes in the past, but something goes wrong and they are forced to spend several weeks in the past.

The original music was by Karel Svoboda and cinematography was by Jirí Macháne. In the former West Germany the series was known as Besucher, Die, where the series was shown in 1984. Other countries in which the series has been seen include Switzerland, Czechoslovakia, France and West Germany.

The series has been released in several other European countries, including Germany, Poland, Romania.

The widow of the real professor Filip sued the creators of the series for profanation of her husband's name. She won and the main character had to be renamed to professor Richard. This has caused the lower quality of sound in the whole series.

EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, THE

The chapterplay's simple plot has White's Elaine Dodge attempting to find her father's killer, a villain called the Clutching Hand (Lewis, who later starred in Louis B. Mayer's version of Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde, 1920). She is assisted by the most famous of the scientific detectives, Craig Kennedy (Daly) whose seemingly endless supply of gadgets rescues Elaine time and again from the predicament the Clutching Hand leaves her in.

After the huge success of White's The Perils of Pauline (1914), Pathe had Gasnier supervise the direction of another major serial starring the athletic Serial Queen. Although White's serials are often mentioned as examples of positive women's roles in cinema, it must be pointed out that, her athletic abilities notwithstanding, all she does is get herself into situations that the male detective has to save her from. In fact, the main fantasy underpinning this and most subsequent serials is not that of the active woman but that of the ceaselessly repeated rescuing of damsels in distress.

For his part, Seitz, who acted in this picture, earned himself the title of Serial King after he completed the three Elaine serials, writing the last one as well. He often starred in his serials in addition to writing and directing them (eg THE SKY RANGER 1921) and became one of Hollywood's most prolific and anonymously professional directors. This serial was followed by two sequels: THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE and THE ROMANCE OF ELAINE (both 1915). The serial was produced by Theodore W. Wharton and Leopold V. Wharton, the cinematographer was Joseph Dubray.

EXPLOSIVE DASH TASK FORCE CARRANGERS

AKA: CARRANGERS

Plot #1

The Earth is threatened by the alien Borzoku. Five young Earthlings are imbued with stellar energy, giving them Kurumagic powers that allow them to transform into the Carranger team, who also moonlight as the Pegasus racing team. Leader Kyosuke (Kishi) is the Red Racer, best driver and test pilot of the Pegasus vehicle. Naoki (Masujima) is the Blue Racer, master of speed and designer of the Pegasus. Minoru (Fukuda) is the Green Racer, business manager for the Pegasus team and occasional figure of fun. Nazumi (Motohashi) is the team's female machanic and also the Yellow Racer. Yoko (Kurusu) is the team's accountant and also, when number fail her, the Pink Racer. They are occasionally aided by the mysterious Signalman (Otsuka), a Ranger-like-loner who functions as a kind super-policeman. Their enemies are the minions of the Borzoku, served by their monster-of-the-week and their multicoloured Wampa cannon-fodder minions. Alien princess Sonnet (Nanase) might be working for the bad guys but she is also secretly in love with the Red Racer.

The Carranger team each have a colour-coded racing car, which can transform into a humanoid robot. The cars can also combine to form the Carranger Robo, and it's victory Twin Star super mode, while the double trailer combination that carries the Carranger vehicles around can itself transform into the giant Victrailer robot. Signalman had his own Polispeeder motorcycle and patrol car, which could transform into a police robot.

After casually destroying the planet Hazard, Bowzock, a gang of hot-rodding bandits in outer space, heads to the next target-- the earth! Dapp, a survivor from Hazard, resorts to his 'KuruMagic' ability and finds the five earthlings of Carranger-- the superhero in galactic legend, yet are none other than young employees of an automotive repair shop on earth. Maybe yet a novice as superhero, but five Carrangers fight against Bowzocks with their native-born love, courage and unstoppable passion!

Carranger was soon adapted into the fifth incarnation of THE MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS franchised in the US as POWER RANGERS TURBO, which characteristically dumped most of the non-SFX footage and bolted newly filmed sections around the remains. The team's new enemy was named Space Pirate Divatox (Carol Hoyt. Hilary Shepard), whose powers were regarded as too strong to be challenged by the Power Ranger's Zeo abilities (see the previous series OHRANGER).

Music for the original was by Toshihiko Sahashi. Note that in the US version, Carol Hoyt played both the first incarnation of Divatok and the Power Ranger's new mentor Dimitria.

As the eighteenth instalment of Toei's ever-famous 'Super Sentai', "Carranger" yet actively employs new & unique concepts without holding back to its great ancestors. So far, the series has successfully established the fun and excitement of its distinctive world, rendered by the main writer/series co-ordinator, URASAWA Yoshio-- one of the best comedy-writers of this industry.

Carranger's plot isn't very original. It's like most other Sentai series (especially the 90s series). What kept the show from getting a high rating was the plot detail about the heroes being legends and their source of power being the five car constellations.

The heroes are hilarious! Their lazy and aren't the type of people you'd expect to be legends. The villains, too, are hilarious! Their whimps and are always messing around in their homebase and on earth! The visuals are okay. Not very high tech or anything. The fight scenes are way too short. If you want action, watch Power Ranger Turbo (yes, its that bad). The mechas make up for that. The RV Robo looks awesome and its finishing move unlike any robot finishing move before.

The music is a very cool. The opening is a nice pop tune that I find myself humming a lot. The ending is just silly and more like limbo music. It's still a nice tune though. Overall, Carranger is a cool show and a nice addition to any Sentai otaku's collection.

Red Racer aka Jinnai Kyousuke:

Jinnai Kyousuke (23 years old) was hired as a test driver at the Pegasus auto garage but normally is only assigned to do errands and odd jobs. He was originally selfish enough to abandon his team because he wanted to drive his boss's classic car. Soon, though, he realised that he has a responsibility as Carranger leader and became very conscientious, although the role of leader sometimes gets to him and he is overwhelmed by the stress of being responsible for the team. He fell in love with Zonnette, although at first she only loved his Red Racer alter ego, and was eventually able to confess his love to her. He is a very brave, heroic man who was willing to risk his life in order to fight as Kyousuke and not Red Racer to prove his love for Zonnette.

As Red Racer, his Formula Weapon is the Fender Sword, a red-handled sword from the fender of the Giga Formula. His special attack is a flying punch called the Driving Attack. His Speeder Machine is the Red Speeder, equipped with the Speeder Gun, and he drives the Pegasus Thunder, a legendary red sports car, along with Pink Racer. He pilots the Red Vehicle (a giant red sports-car type) and the V Fire (a giant fire engine) which can change into the Fire Fighter robot.

Blue Racer aka Domon Naoki:

Domon Naoki (17 years old) is a very polite, shy man who is a car designer at Pegasus. He speaks in a very polite way, adding "de gozaimasu" to his sentences. He is extremely shy around pretty girls and becomes so flustered that he cannot fight. He loves animals and from childhood has always wanted to keep animals with him, and so befriended the alien creature Beager, who he kept as a pet.

As Blue Racer, his Formula Weapons are the Muffler Guns, two blue guns from the muffler of the Giga Formula that fire blasts of heat. His special attack is a multiple spin kick called the Hairpin Kick, which he powered up into an airborne somersaulting kick, the Hyper Hairpin Kick. He can also use the Passing Flash, a blinding burst of light from the headlights on his helmet. His Speeder Machine, the Blue Speeder, is the fastest of the Speeders; and he drives the Dragon Cruiser, a legendary blue jeep, along with Green Racer and Yellow Racer. He pilots the Blue Vehicle, a giant 4x4; and the V Police, a giant police car that can change into the Police Fighter robot. The Police Fighter can fire a supersonic beam, the Police Siren Sonic.

Green Racer aka Uesugi Minoru

Uesugi Minoru (24 years old) is a salesman at Pegasus. He speaks with an Osaka accent and is something of a screw-up. While practising victory poses after a fight, he once lost his Axle Bracelet and almost lost his Green Racer powers forever. On another occasion, he mixed up a box containing a powerful weapon, the Giga Booster, with another one containing a baby cradle to be shipped to Hokkaido, and had to chase a delivery truck all the way to Hokkaido to get the Giga Booster back.

Minoru is a huge fan of the Tigers baseball team. When Minoru was a child, he was shocked while fishing for eels during a lightning storm, and has been afraid of thunder ever since. After Dappu tricked him into eating an electric eel, however, he overcame his fear. He also befriended the Bowzock OO Batton, but was betrayed when Batton revealed his true nature and turned on the Carrangers.

As Green Racer, his Formula Weapon is a large bazooka-like gun called the Engine Cannon, from the engine of the Giga Formula. His special attack is the Pit-In Dive, in which he skims along the ground face-down and sweeps his enemy over. His Green Speeder is equipped with the Speeder Missile, and he rides in the Dragon Cruiser. His Green Vehicle is a large van and he pilots the V Dump, a giant dump truck that can become the Dump Fighter robot.

Yellow Racer aka Shinohara Natsumi

Shinohara Natsumi (19 years old) is a genius mechanic at Pegasus, able to fix any machine in minutes. She uses a legendary wrench given to her by the owner of a garage she used to visit when she was little, but she learned that even without the wrench's power she is still able to fix anything. As Yellow Racer, her Formula Weapon is the Side Knuckles, two knuckle-duster type weapons from the side bars of the Giga Formula. Her special attack is the Checker Chop, a flying chop (like a chequered flag waving). She can also perform the Violent Dash Mechanic Dismantling (Gekisou Mekanikku Barashi), in which she runs past and around an enemy vehicle and dismantles it in seconds. She drives the Yellow Speeder, equipped with the Speeder Cutters (2 sawblades), and rides in the Dragon Cruiser. Her Yellow Vehicle is a giant truck and her V Dozer is a giant dragster-like car whose spoiler can move forward to become a bulldozer bucket. The V Dozer can change into the Dozer Fighter robot.

Pink Racer aka Yagami Youko

Yagami Youko (19 years old) is an office worker at Pegasus, calculating the expenses and payroll. She is very conscious about her weight because she loves to eat sweets, and frequently consults magazine fortune-telling articles to predict her future. She dreams of becoming an idol someday and marrying a rich husband, and has a terrible sense of direction.

As Pink Racer, her Formula Weapon, the Bumper Bow, is a white bow that fires energy arrows, and comes from the bumper of the Giga Formula. Her special attack is the Wheel Spin Kick, in which she rolls along the ground and kicks upward from below the enemy. She also has used the Wheel Spin Shield, in which she spins around in the air creating a shield that can deflect enemy attacks. When she got angry at PP Rappa for messing around with her weight reading on a scale, she used the Pink Flying Attack (a jumping punch), the Pink Giant Swing (she picked up Rappa by the legs, swung him in a circle, and tossed him into a rock face), and the Pink Bomb Punch of Anger (Ikari no Pinku Bakudan Panchi - a powerful uppercut that sent Rappa flying). When a Wumper spit a cloud of black ink at her, she performed the Viblade Returning Wiper (Okaeshi Waipaa), spinning her Viblade around in front of her to gather up the ink and toss it back at the Wumper. Her Pink Speeder is equipped with the Speeder Radar, and she rides alongside Red Racer in the Pegasus Thunder. The Pink Vehicle is a giant sports car and she drives the V Rescue, a giant ambulance that can shoot an oversized hypodermic needle, and can change into the Rescue Fighter robot.

In order to kill the Reckless Dash Emperor Exhaust, the Carrangers combined their Carmagic Powers together in the "Carranger Carmagic Attack", in which they turned into balls of energy and shot through Exhaust all at once.

The first syllables of the Carrangers' human last names spell out "car", or "jidousha", in Japanese. "Jidousha" is written with the characters "ji do u shi ya" -- Jinnai, Dōmon, Uesugi, Shinohara, and Yagami. Thanks to Akemi Kishita for pointing this out!!

Dappu

Dappu is one of the last survivors of the planet Hazard, which was destroyed in a Bowzock attack. He is the keeper of the Carmagic ("Kurumagic") Power and gave this power to the five who would become the Carrangers. Dappu's mother was killed in the attack and his father was missing until he returned in the guise of the VRV Master. Dappu is actually a child and so wishes to be with his mother and father together again. He played the game "Shurashushushu" (pogs) with his father when he was little. The Carmagic Power depends on the bond of friendship between Dappu and the Carrangers; when they had a fight, the Carrangers' power began to fade away. Also, his species must hibernate every year in order to restore their strength.

VRV Master

A "Lone Wolf of Space" ("Uchuu no ippiki ookami"), the VRV Master appeared mysteriously while Dappu was in hibernation, and gave the Carrangers the VRV Machines to help them against the giant robot Braking. An enigmatic figure, the VRV Master was finally revealed to be Dappu's long-lost father, who had survived the Bowzock attack on the planet Hazard. The VRV Master likes to play pachinko and drink "coffee milk" ("koohii gyunyuu").

Signalman

A space policeman who was assigned to a new post on Earth, Signalman does not forgive anyone who breaks the rules of traffic. He is from the Police Planet where he had to leave his wife Sigue and his son Sigtarou. Although Signalman fights against Bowzock alongside the Carrangers, he sometimes ends up causing trouble for them. When he first appeared, he gave the Carrangers tickets for parking their Speeder Machines in a No Parking Zone. Because he has been drilled in the rules of traffic since he was a child, his body cannot help but obey the rules now, such as when Ichitarou was captured but Signalman could not pursue the kidnapper across the street because the crosswalk signal said "Don't Walk".

Signalman has a badge / recording device called the Signizer, which can also change into a Police Baton Mode and a Gun Mode. When using the Gun Mode of Signizer, Signalman often shoots his enemies in the kneecaps to disable them. He uses Signizer to call on his police bike, the polispeeder, and uses his Signal Whistle to call on his police car Sirender. Sirender can change into a robot mode (the command is "Stand Up! Sirender!") and uses the Siren Dagger, an army knife on his wrist; the Siren Shield, a red transparent riot shield; the Wappagun, a giant handcuff on a chain; and the Siren Vulcan, a high-powered gun. Also, in either mode, Sirender can fire the Signal Flash, a powerful beam of energy, from the lights on top of its roof in car mode, or from his chest in robot mode. Signalman often sets up a telephone-booth looking "kouban" (police box) station called the "Kobaan Base" and stands in front of it waiting for people to pass by.

Tenma Family

Tenma Souichirou is the owner of the Pegasus garage and the boss of the Carrangers in their civilian identities. His wife is Tenma Yoshie, and his son Ichitarou is a friend of the Carrangers' and a close friend of Signalman's. "Tenma" is the Japanese name for a pegasus.

Bowzock:

The Space Rebel Gang Bowzock ("Uchuu no Bousouzoku Boozokku") is a group of troublemakers who go around destroying planets for fun. They don't follow the rules of traffic and are the reason the 5 Pegasus workers became the Carrangers, since Bowzock's next target was the planet Earth. The Bowzock base is a spherical spacecraft called the Baribarian, which looks like a mass of intertwined highways. The main Bowzock always stay in the BB Saloon, a bar on the Baribarian.

Gynamo

Gynamo is the leader of Bowzock and is madly in love with Zonnette. He will do just about anything for her, and becomes very depressed when he finds out she is in love with Kyouzuke. Gynamo was temporarily deposed as Bowzock leader by the Evil Consultant Ritchihiker, but returned after Ritchihiker was killed, to reclaim his gang. While Ritchihiker was in charge, he worked at a yakiniku restaurant. Soon after returning, the "Reckless Dash Emperor" ("Bousou Koutei") Exhaust appeared to the Bowzock members and said he would help them defeat the Carrangers, giving them powerful robots and leading their operations. But when Exhaust revealed that he was just using Bowzock, Gynamo and the rest of the Bowzock joined forces with the Carrangers and helped to beat Exhaust. After Exhaust' destruction, Gynamo stayed on Earth and returned to his yakiniku job.

Zelmoda

Zelmoda is Gynamo's friend and second-in-command in Bowzock. He uses a sword made up of playing cards with which he can cause explosions. When he was a child he made fun of thunder and was struck by lightning, and so he has had a fear of thunder ever since. But when he heard of the legend of Elekinta, a great warrior who could be summoned amidst booming thunder by driving past a certain critical speed, Zelmoda overcame his fear of thunder and managed to summon him, although Elekinta was ultimately defeated. He also tried to cheer Gynamo up after Gynamo found out about Zonnette's love for Kyouzuke by sending EE MusubinoFu to make Zonnette become Gynamo's bride instead. After Exhaust is destroyed, Zelmoda stays on Earth and goes to elementary school with Grotch.

Grotch

Grotch is a short, bulbous white creature with a glass plate over his face who is Bowzock's inventor, having created such weapons as the Fattening Spray used by NN Nerenko and the Forgetfulness Water-Gun, a super soaker used to erase the memory of the Space Speed King MAX and turn him into the Bowzock dishwasher KK Esu. He is usually the one who goes to earth to pick up the imo-youkan to enlarge the Bowzock. He goes to elementary school with Zelmoda after Exhaust is destroyed.

Wumpers

The Wumpers are brightly-colored Bowzock soldiers who come out of an octopus-trap jar that Zelmoda has. Their faces look something like gas masks, and they use swords and guns as weapons. They can also spray black powder from their mouths like octopus ink.

Gorotsuki

The Gorotsuki are the Bowzock who are always seen hanging around in the BB Saloon on the Baribarian but never do anything. 4 of them were turned into SS Pamaan's Zokurangers but aside from that, all they do is sit around and watch the main Bowzock.

Zonnette

Zonnette starts off as a member of Bowzock who Gynamo is madly in love with. She is very selfish and takes full advantage of Gynamo's love for her to get what she wants. However, she falls in love with Red Racer after seeing him in action. For a while she loves Red Racer but does not know that he is actually Jinnai Kyousuke, and even when she does find out, at first she says she only loves the Red Racer persona (calling Kyousuke a "monkey-faced civilian"). Kyousuke manages to prove his love for her though, and her love eventually extends to both sides of Kyousuke.

Zonnette is actually a princess of the Fanbel planet. Her real name is "Vanity Mirror Fanbelt", and though she returns to her home planet at the end of the series and has marriage meetings often, she remains in love with Kyousuke. She changes from her Zonnette form to her true form by saying "Ravioli, Kishimen (flat noodles made from wheat flour), Linguini". Zonnette drives a pink convertible called the Zonnecar.

Radiata Fanbelt

Radiata is Zonnette's sister, and a big fan of the Carrangers. She uses magic to change into a costume modeled after the Carrangers and calls herself "White Racer". She has a staff she uses to change her appearance, with the command "Tiramisu, Konnyaku, Mille-Feuille (a type of pastry) " and uses "Nazo-Nazo Bakudan" ("Riddle Bombs"), white volleyball-sized bombs that explode if the person who catches them can't answer a riddle that White Racer tells them. She drives a white car with a cat's face in front, the Radiacar. The Radiacar can transform into a robot mode although it can only operate for one minute, and later even gains the ability to enlarge itself.

Ritchihiker

The "Consultant of Evil" Ritchihiker is hired by Gynamo to take care of the Carrangers once and for all. Ritchihiker attempts several times to get rid of them, but fails each time. During the Bowzock festival, he is struck with a bolt of pure evil energy and is powered-up into RitchiRitchihiker. His ultimate plan is to use the giant dinosaur-like robot Braking, and he manages to capture the RV Robo with it. He then proceeds to kick Gynamo and Zonnette out of Bowzock and takes over command. Braking is later damaged and is rebuilt, but is destroyed by the Carrangers' new VRV Robo, and RitchiRitchihiker dies as it explodes in a ball of fire.

Exhaus

The "Reckless Dash Emperor" (Bousou Koutei) Exhaus is a legendary evil in the galaxy. He appeared to Gynamo and the other Bowzock to have them help him with his Great Space Highway Plan to build a highway from one end of space to the other, because Earth was in his way. Exhaus' first act (before appearing to Gynamo) was to send a 5-colored gas into the skies above the Police Planet that made Signalman's son's throat hurt. A voice told Signalman that the gas was due to the Carrangers' vehicle exhaust, and Signalman went to Earth to fight them. Eventually Signalman found out that it was not the Carrangers' doing, but Exhaus became Bowzock's commander, giving them super robots to use and instructing them in his plans. Exhaus kidnapped Dappu and tried to drain his Carmagic Power to use for his own robots, turning it into Evilmagic ("Akumajikku") Power, but his plan backfired when Dappu overloaded the robots with power. Dappu also found out that Exhaus had sent a fortune-telling New Year's card to Gynamo a year ago telling him that he would have luck in destroying planets that started with "ha". This led Gynamo to pick Hazard, Dappu's home planet, to attack and destroy.

Exhaus' ultimate plan was to use an opportunity that came once every 1 million years: the guardian constellations around the legendary car constellations that gave the Carrangers their Carmagic Powers weakened, and Exhaus absorbed the Carmagic Power into himself. The Carrangers were left helpless and unable to change. With the Carrangers beaten, Exhaus had no more need for Bowzock either and set the Baribarian on fire, sending it to crash into the Earth. Signalman in Sirender stopped it and the Carrangers in human form took control of the Baribarian and drove it straight into Exhaus, seemingly killing him and regaining their Carmagic Powers. But Exhaus reappeared in a powered-up giant "Exhaus Super-Strong" form, having absorbed the evil of the galaxy into himself. The Carrangers used every weapon at their disposal but Exhaus was too strong until Gynamo fed him a piece of expired imo-youkan, causing him to shrink so that the Carrangers could kill him.

Carranger / Bowzock Weapons and Items:

Axle Bracelet and Axle Key:

The Axle Bracelet and Axle Key constitute the Axle Changer, the means by which the Carrangers transform. The Axle Key is a black keychain with the word "Carranger" on it. It works like a switchblade; when a button is pressed, a key flips out of it and this is then inserted into the slot on the Axle Bracelet and turned. A small motor in the Axle Bracelet revs up and releases the Carmagic Power to change the Pegasus team into the Carrangers. The Carrangers' changing command is "Gekisou! Akuseru Chenjaa!" ("Violent Dash! Axle Changer!") The Axle Bracelet also functions as a wrist communicator.

Auto Blaster / Auto Punisher

The Auto Blaster is a red gun that looks like a red sports car with a handle stuck on the bottom. It can be powered up ("Shift Up!") into the Auto Punisher, its barrel splitting open and an ion-gathering turbine inside spinning, causing its fire to become 20 times the strength of that of the Auto Blaster.

Viblade

The Viblade is a sword with a handle in its hilt. When the handle is pulled a turbine on the hilt spins and gives the Viblade added power.

Giga Formula:

The Giga Formula is a small dragster-shaped car ("Formula Machine" mode) that can split apart into the Carrangers' Formula Weapons: the Fender Sword, Muffler Guns, Engine Cannon, Side Knuckles, and Bumper Bow. It can also change into a standing cannon, the Formula Nova, that fires powerful fireballs..

Carnavic:

The Carnavic (from "car navigation") is a small computerlike device that can track Bowzock energy readings. It was developed by Natsumi and Youko to battle AA Abanba, who could turn herself invisible. The Carnavic didn't work until Youko cried and her tears fell into it, since she was blaming herself for the capture of her friends.

In its computer mode, the Carnavic is called the Navic Com, and can be attached to any of the Carranger vehicles to act as a tracking device. The Carnavic can turn into a gun mode, the Navic Shot, which fires homing charges. The Navic Shot can combine with the Auto Punisher to form the Navic Blaster and fire a beam 3 times the power of the Auto Punisher.

Giga Booster

The Giga Booster is a powerful cannon that can be mounted on the top of the Dragon Cruiser. It has 3 forms: a miniature dragster called the Booster Machine, a miniature jet called the Booster Jet, and a large gun called the Booster Cannon, that fires balls of plasma energy..

Speeder Machines:

The Speeder Machines are bumper-car like miniature cars that the Carrangers used for transportation until they got the Pegasus Thunder and Dragon Cruiser. Each Speeder Machine has a different feature:

- Red Speeder 1: Speeder Gun
- Blue Speeder 2: Fastest of the Speeders
- Green Speeder 3: Speeder Missile
- Yellow Speeder 4: Speeder Cutter
- Pink Speeder 5: Speeder Radar

Ranger Vehicles

The Ranger Vehicles are 5 giant vehicles modeled after the Carrangers' "dream cars": the Red Vehicle, Blue Vehicle, Green Vehicle, Yellow Vehicle, and Pink Vehicle. The five can combine into the RV Robo ("Gekisou Gattai!" aka "Violent Dash Combination!"), a giant robot whose main weapon is the RV Sword. It also uses a tire shaped shield called the Radial Shield. It can fire a blast from the headlights on its chest, the "Pragnado (?) Spark" (Puraguneedo Supaaku). It can also perform the Yellow Vehicle Kick and Yellow Vehicle Spin Kick with its right leg, the Pink Vehicle Punch with its arms, and the RV Hairpin Kick or RV Naniwa Geri (RV Osaka Kick).

The RV Robo's final attack is the "Violent Dash Slice" ("Gekisou Giri"), in which the RV Robo accelerates to full speed and then dashes towards the enemy, spinning around like a tornado with its RV Sword outstretched to slash the enemy repeatedly in a deadly attack. Other "one-shot" attacks used by the RV Robo are: the "Violent Dash Cooling Off" and "Violent Dash Spinning Cooling Off", in which it spun around to prevent DD Donmo's phone-order weaponry from reaching him; the "RV Spinning Watermelon Slice", a spinning sword slash used against TT Terurin; the "Secret Hit Violent Dash Return", used to deflect HH Deeo's baseball attack; and the "RV Discus Throw", used against VV Goriin's Olympics attacks.

VRV Machines

The VRV Machines were given to the Carrangers by the VRV Master while Dappu was in hibernation and the RV Robo was captured by Ritchihiker in the giant robot Braking. They are giant vehicles that can transform into robots. They emerge from a giant container truck, the Victrailer, which is stored in the VRV Master's headquarters under the Tokyo Dome and can change to a giant towerlike Battle Mode.

V Fire (Red Racer), a giant fire engine that can shoot high-pressure water from its nozzle; changes into the Fire Fighter.

V Police (Blue Racer), a giant police car; changes into the Police Fighter, and can fire a supersonic beam called the Police Siren Sonic..

V Dump (Green Racer), a giant dump truck that carries iron balls in it, to lay on the ground in front of enemies and make them lose their footing; changes into the Dump Fighter.

V Dozer (Yellow Racer), a giant dragster-looking car whose spoiler can become a bulldozer bucket; changes into the Dozer Fighter.

V Rescue (Pink Racer), a giant ambulance that can fire a giant hypodermic needle; changes into the Rescue Fighter.

The VRV Machines can combine into the VRV Robo ("Hisshou Gattai!" aka "Certain Victory Combination!"), a giant robot more powerful than the RV Robo. It uses two small guns, the V Guns. Its deadly attack is the Victory Twister, in which it equips itself with two huge guns from the sides of the Victrailer, the V Bazooka and the V Vulcan. The Victory Twister is a barrage of energy blasts from the two guns that obliterate the enemy.

The VRV and RV Robos can interchange parts of themselves with each other. Also, when Dappu was trapped inside the chest of the Bowzock robot Land Zuzoon, the VRV and RV Robos executed a team attack where the VRV Robo fired its Victory Twister and the RV Robo cut it in half using the "RV Twister Cutter", so that the blast hit Land Zuzoon above and below the area where Dappu was so as to leave him unharmed.

Pegasus Thunder

The Pegasus Thunder is a legendary "wild car" that roamed around space with its friend, the Dragon Cruiser, until they were sealed inside a meteor. They were freed by WW Waritcho and went to Earth, where they befriended Kyouzuke and Naoki. The Pegasus Thunder is a red sports car that can change into a flying mode with wings emerging from the bottom, and can fire an energy beam, the Pegasus Laser. Its deadly attack is a barrage of energy blasts, the Pegasus Final Burning. Red Racer drives the car and Pink Racer rides in the passenger seat.

Dragon Cruiser

The Dragon Cruiser is a legendary vehicle that is a friend of the Pegasus Thunder. It is a blue jeep with a powerful winch on the back, the Dragon Claw. The Giga Booster can be mounted on top of it. Blue Racer drives the Cruiser, and Green Racer and Yellow Racer ride in it.

Barikkars

The Barikkars are a group of 5 different tank-like vehicles used as assault vehicles by the Bowzock forces. They are each based on a type of animal and have a very rough, mechanical look, with dull metal colors and lots of spikes on them:

Pao Barikkar (based on an elephant; "pao" is the sound an elephant makes in Japanese)

Nyaa Barikkar (based on a cat; "nyaa" is the sound a cat makes in Japanese, equivalent to "meow" in English)

Moo Barikkar (based on a cow/bull; "moo" is the sound a cow makes in Japanese, equivalent to "moo" in English although Japanese "moo" is pronounced with a long "o" sound, not an "oo" sound)

Joki Barikkar (based on a scorpion; "joki" is ????)

Buhi Barikkar (based on a pig; "bui" is the sound a pig makes in Japanese, equivalent to "oink" in English)

Other vehicles used by the Bowzock forces include a jeep called the Barilander, an orange convertible called the Bariakubar, and motorcycles used by the Wumpers, called Wumpappers.

Imo-Youkan

Imo-Youkan is a sweet yellow block-shaped food made from jellied sweet potatoes. The imo-youkan from one particular store called Imochou has the power to enlarge Bowzock to giant size when they eat it. Any other store's imo-youkan makes the Bowzock shrink to the size of a toy. When expired imo-youkan is eaten, however, it gives the Bowzock a stomachache and although it enlarges them at first, it soon makes them shrink back to human size.

CARRANGER THE UNSTOPPABLE

(Carranger Opening - English Version)

Rap:

[Energy loaded, power standby,
Save the world for eternal peace,
Defeated the evil and terminated,
Now you're ready for Axle Changing!]

Get on up, crank it up, turn it up,
Be ready to hit the road again.

With the love deep inside of your heart,
There's nothing to check your way to go.

With the love deep inside of your heart,
There's nothing to check your way to go.

Steering tight, keep in sight, mighty might,
Outruns and leaves sad things behind,
You know that great speed will conquer everything.

Oh boy, never ever give up the chance,
Believe in what you can do,

Follow your dream and just live for tomorrow,
Then make a best hero.

(Let's go!)

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You've gotta drive into the future,
Brave heart runs your machine at full throttle.

(Go, Go!)

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You're gonna climb over the top of all,

Nobody beats you cause you're fast as lightning,
GEKISOU SENTAI CARRANGER.

Look at that, you hear that, "da di datt",
No matter what pinches wait for you,
Glorious stars lighten up in the sky,
All promising you to overcome.

So don't you be afraid even though,
The things will let you down sometimes,
You know love will make you just feel all right.

Oh boy, but won't you ever forget,
You are never fighting alone,
Look around you, you see us on your side,
Because you're the true hero.

(Let's go!)

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You've gotta drive with hot blood burning on,
Love power speeds your machine up to the max,

(Go, go!)

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You're gonna be the one to win and smile,
Bring on the peace forever to the ground,
GEKISOU SENTAI CARRANGER.

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You've gotta drive with hot blood burning on,
Love power speeds your machine up to the max,

(Let's go!)

CARRANGER, CARRANGER,
You're gonna climb over the top of all,
Nobody beats you cause you're fast as lightning,
GEKISOU SENTAI CARRANGER.

SAMBA PARADISO

(Carranger Ending - English Version)

Big chief yell at us and say "Go get'em!
Or all of you goin' miss dinner for tonite"
Give us a break, oh please for God's God's sake,
Look we still are live and poor creatures!

Let's enjoy partying dancing happy samba,
Fight is over now it's a paradiso.

You and me got beaten like a sandbag,
But sooner pain is gone and smile "Ho ho ho".

So let's keep on jamming so bad, samba,
All you have to say is simple "Love love love".

Good job! Bravo! How 'bout some samba?
But next week we goin' beat the CARRANGERS.

Shall we beg you for a sweeter kick back, please?
I wanna win and show it to my mom and kids.

My next life after reincarnation,
I never wanna play the role of boring heel again!

Appearing on the TV as a super hero,
Like every kids have my picture cards in hands.

Let's enjoy partying dancing happy samba,
It's gorgeous livin' in the paradiso.

Now look at this charming step someone, samba!?
Hey watch that ranger throwing me a kiss, kiss, kiss.

Ke-se-la-ce-la-ce-la-vie de bon samba!
Just take it easy, here we are in paradiso.

CARRANGERS, we thank you, thank you so much,
So why don't we switch our parts in two weeks shift?

Let us buy you drink and lunch box, how 'bout that?
I wanna play the hero, then I'll call my dad.

Gekisou Sentai Carranger is the twentieth sentai series. It aired from 1996-1997 and is what POWER

RANGERS TURBO was developed from.

Trivia

In the Carddas trading card game Rangers Strike (released in commemoration of the Super Sentai Series' 30th Anniversary), on the illustration on Rescue Fighter's card, Rescue Fighter itself can be seen healing GaoBear and GaoPolar of Hyakujuu Sentai Gaoranger. The CarRanger's are categorized as an Over-Technology Sentai, due to the extraterrestrial origin of the team's weaponry and mecha.

It is the first sentai to use higher technology weaponry. Also the enemies might have underestimated the might of the supernatural.

Exhaus' plan to build a giant road across the galaxy is coincidentally similar to the beginning of "The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy".

The second robot is transported by a fortress and is much involved in battle like the Turbo Builder but did not form any very powerful robot. Ironically, TurboRanger did away with the flying fortress, this one returned it for a short time which the next sentai had no base that transported the mecha.

As a recycled version of Turboranger, however it featured two females instead of one and fought against aliens instead of the supernatural, which left fans debating on whether Ragorn or Exhaus was more powerful.

White Racer's henshin is a parody of Sailor Moon's, and when her Radiacar enlarges, it spoofs Ultraman doing the same.

The attack where Braking throws the sharp crest on its head at the VRV Machines, the King Slugger, is named after the trademark attack of the tokusatsu superhero Ultraseven.

The voice actors Tomokazu Seki (HH Deoo), Shun Yashiro (WW Waritcho), Kaneta Kimotsuki (TT Terurin) and Naoki Tatsuta (DD Donmo) both lend their voices as Suneo Honekawa in the popular anime series Doraemon.

The late Shun Yashiro provided the first voice of Suneo in 1973.

Kaneta Kimotsuki provided the second and long-running voice of Suneo from 1979 until 2005.

Naoki Tatsuta provided the third voice of Suneo in 1985 temporally while replacing Kaneta due to some unknown reason.

Seki Tomokazu provides the fourth and the current voice of Suneo from 2005 onward.

EYE OF THE JAGUAR

The Blue Dragon secret society plans to steal the treasure of Genghis Khan, which is guarded by the fabled Panther of Justice. They intend to use their own "Evil Panther" to do so but are foiled by a Japanese orphan who is searching for his long lost elder brother. Only he can stop their conspiracy to restore ancient tyranny, in a series of adventures that leapt from the Gobi Desert to Shanghai, Singapore and Hong kong.

Based on a prewar novel serialized in Shonen Club, EotJ was broadcast as the follow-up to MOONLIGHT MASK. It was an immense success with the Japanese baby-boom generation, who were yet to really experience foreign travel for themselves - compare to Harimao.

Produced by Shunici Nishimura.

EYES OF A COWBOY

Lonesome Cooper is a down-and-out country and western singer who travels from town to town - and back in time to the Old West of the 1870s. In both the present and the past, Lonesome has to rely on his singing skills to survive and avoid trouble. While surviving is not much of a problem, avoiding trouble is more difficult, and the time-travelling cowboy discovers that actions he takes in the past have serious consequences - both negative and positive - on the present... and the future.

FAMILIA ESPECIAL, UNA

"Una Familia Especial" had everything to be a good comedy during Argentina's 2005 soap operas' season: good story, great acting and it was entertaining.

It tells (or told, if we consider it has already been canceled) the story about an extraterrestrial family who accidentally ends up living in Buenos Aires. The plot goes about their arrival and their way of understanding this "new world" they must get used to. The situations which arose from, for example, the family members confusing idiomatic expressions, were just hilarious.

Even though the plot and acting was good, the program soon started to become difficult to watch: not for its storyline, but for its continuous time slot changing.

It ended in the middle season (August 2005), with quite low ratings. I think that if they would have given it a second chance, it would have had been successful. Because it had all the qualities to be.

So, if you have the chance to watch it (despite of the fact that non-successful soap operas are not exported) don't miss it. I'm sure you won't regret yourself.

FANTASTIC JOURNEY, THE

One of the more fanciful theories about the Bermuda Triangle has been that it contains a time-space warp that projects victims into some other dimension-and that was the basis for this fanciful American adventure series. A small scientific expedition sets off across the Caribbean to study a natural phenomenon known as "red tide." On board a yacht run by Ben Wallace and his mate Carl Johanson are science professor Paul Jordan, his teenage son, Scott, Eve Costigan, Dr. Fred Walters, medical adviser Jill Sands and a pair of scientific assistants, Andy and George.

Soon after setting sail they are enveloped by a green cloud, to the accompaniment of clanging bells, and a sudden violent storm capsizes the boat. The two assistants are drowned and the others washed up on a strange island where they encounter Varian, a man from the 23rd century whose spaceship had crashed, marooning him here. They have a run-in with Sir James Camden and his band of Elizabethan privateers before the group splits up, with Varian, Scott and Dr. Fred going it alone into the ensuing series where, with the addition of two new regulars, a half-human, half-alien called Liana and a 1960s scientist, Willoway (from Episode 3), they cross various time zones in search of a way home.

Jared Martin also starred in WAR OF THE WORLDS and Roddy McDowall is famous for starring in many SF productions including PLANET OF THE APES and BATMAN. Story consultant Dorothy (D.C.) Fontana was also responsible for writing scripts for STAR TREK and STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION. Not to be confused with "Fantastic Voyage" (based on an Isaac Asimov novel), this TV series started with a university's research boat finding an unmapped island in the Bermuda Triangle.

Unknown even to Gilligan, this island had a weird "time and space warp" which allowed the combining of past, present, and future (somewhat as in Dr. Fred Hoyle's novel "October the First is Too Late"). There was a network of character conflicts between these five, and what promised to be a lengthy episodic search for the home space-and-time of each, complete with strange creatures and thrilling adventures, but the ratings also were becalmed in the Bermuda Triangle. Producer was Leonard Katzman. Executive producer for the series was Bruce Lansbury, story consultants were Dorothy (D.C.) Fontana and Calvin Clements Jr. The music was created by Robert Prince.

The production executive was Joseph Manzio, art directors were Ross Bellah, Carl Braunger and Robert Purcell, associate producer was William O. Cairncross, the director of photography was Sam Levitt and Irving Lipman. Notable guest stars on the series included Lovejoy's Ian McShane, THE AMAZING SPIDERMAN's Nicholas Hammond, Joan Collins and Charlie's Angel Cheryl Ladd.

The exposure of the Bermuda Triangle as a tourist and media fantasy (by Lawrence Kusche in his laboriously researched early Seventies book The Bermuda Triangle Mystery -Solved) has had little effect on film and television dramatists. One glaring example is the short lived 1977 series Fantastic Journey. But if basing its premise on a freshly discredited legend had been the only problem this troubled show experienced, it would have been no problem at all.

In a storyline that might unkindly be pigeon holed as Gilligan's Island meets LAND OF THE GIANTS, Fantastic Journey's pilot film, Vortex, told of a party of ship-wrecked scientists who fall prey to a mysterious green mist that descends over them in the Bermuda Triangle and recover to find themselves on an uncharted coastline that turns out to be an intersection in time where various time warps have deposited fellow castaways from throughout Space and Time. Sounds cool, right? But Fantastic Journey was a disorganized and derivative mess assembled by committee, and it remains a minor miracle that the series was as much fun to watch as was.

As Varian, a pacifist from the 23rd Century first discovered skulking around as an Arawak Native American, Jared Martin was a competent leading man. Tokenism prevailed in the other casting decisions, with Ike Eisenmann playing the boy Scott, future film director Carl Franklin cast as Fred, the jive-talkin' nod to ethnic demographics so blatant in 1970s' programming, and Katie Saylor as mysterious alien girl Liana.

The main thing the show had going for it was the presence of Roddy McDowall, the silky-voiced character actor best known to SF fans for his portrayal of various key figures in the PLANET OF THE APES film and tv saga and as the Bookworm in an admired Batman story. McDowall, playing a scientist named Jonathan Willoway who disappeared during the 1960s, was introduced in the series' third episode as a much-needed afterthought. Although McDowall had little to work with - see his classic INVADERS episode The Experiment to see what he can deliver when he's given strong material - and there was no chemistry between the cast, they were all likeable enough cardboard figures.

Unlike series such as The TWILIGHT ZONE, STAR TREK or even LOST IN SPACE, Fantastic Journey was no one's special vision. It was an early evening series made to order for a 'non-violent' family slot and assigned to two competent tv workhorses with a reasonable if unspectacular record in the industry. Producer Leonard Katzman was the nephew of cheapo 1940s movie serial maestro Sam Katzman and had directed and produced on numerous series including Gunsmoke, The Wild Wild West and Hawaii Five-O. Executive producer Bruce Lansbury, the brother of Murder, She Wrote's Angela Lansbury, had also worked on THE WILD WILD WEST, as well as taking over the troubled Mission: Impossible for a couple of years and producing Wonder Woman and William Shatner's short-lived Barbary Coast. After Fantastic Journey he moved on to Buck Rogers in the 25th Century and Streethawk. Lansbury was perceived by the network as a man who could put a show together professionally and competently to strict commercial considerations, in contrast to adventurous mavericks like Star Trek's Gene Roddenberry or Rod Serling.

With Katzman and Lansbury the network got what they asked for - the creative flaw being that very often networks don't know what they want until they get it. Fantastic Journey had no creative vision, just writers and producers stitching up a tv garment to order. It was paint-by-numbers Science Fiction, drawing on the premise of two 1960s series whose formats were perceived to work - STAR TREK and LOST IN SPACE. From LOST IN SPACE, Lansbury and his writers (Merwin Gerard, Michael Michaelian, and Kathryn Michaelian Powers) took the concept of the travelling wanderers, the lost group of individuals trying to find their way home. From Star Trek came the idea of the heroes wandering into a 'problem society' with a situation that could be obviously and effortlessly resolved by the travellers, who would leave each place they visited changed and wiser.

It was a formula Katzman would try again the following season when producing LOGAN'S RUN, and which would be resurrected some years later by such shows as OTHERWORLD and SLIDERS. To this end, he employed Star Trek writer Dorothy Fontana as story editor, and episodes included such familiar clichés as a slave society ruled by a disembodied brain (Atlantium), a community ruled by children (Children of the Gods), and a society where men were oppressed by women after an uprising (Turnabout), all variations of 'straw man' set ups from Star Trek. It resulted in such obvious learning experiences as 'slavery isn't nice' 'kids need to listen to grown-ups', and 'men need women and women need men'. It's difficult to work out which was more depressing - the simplicity of the homilies on parade or the fact that they still needed to be explained to some people. Following the pilot, which was a flawed but enjoyable adventure fantasy, the network decided to ditch the 'lost family' concept and go for a more colourful collection of individuals.

As a result of this decision, three bland characters conveniently found their way home and the remaining demographic mix of misfits - mysterious good looking alien and authority figure, freckle-faced kid, and token black guy - were joined by Liana's mysterious alien girl with a telepathic cat and Roddy McDowall's Professor Willoway, a selfish and pragmatic irritant in the Doctor Smith/Mr Fitzhugh tradition. Given the series' obvious inspiration it's curious that the creative team hadn't thought to include a troublemaker from the start but in any case, tv censors so troubled the schedules at this time that McDowall's schemer was 'niced up' to be just another chum in the group, and rapidly became little more than Devil's Advocate. Also lost after the pilot was the series' very vague notion of Time travel. Like many American Sci-Fi series, including THE TIME TUNNEL and BATTLESTAR GALACTICA, Fantastic Journey was more popular with British audiences than Americans.

The 10 episodes were shown in an early evening Friday slot on BBC1 (where THE INVISIBLE MAN and THE RETURN OF CAPTAIN NEMO also flourished, as did SPIDER-MAN for ITV) in March 1977, only a month after the series' US premiere. Stateside audience figures were more shaky, not helped by the network's constant interference in the format. The US viewing public saw through the contrivances and quickly wrote the show off, while British audiences, then subsisting on three channel television offering a limited Science Fiction diet of STAR TREK and THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, lapped it up, again disproving the myth that Science Fiction television is a 'minority' interest. Television networks rarely know what they want until they've got it, and then take credit for the successful shows that flourish - or simply survive - in spite of them. Those that survive are generally the ones with producers that stand up for the series' initial concept and integrity.

Fantastic Journey had no one to fight for it, and disappeared very quickly. In the US it's a dead duck, as the syndication market demands at least three seasons of episodes. Such short-run series often have an afterlife in foreign markets, and this has been the case with Fantastic Journey, re-peated by the BBC in an early morning school holidays slot and repeatedly broadcast since by Bravo and the Sci-Fi Channel.

The demise of Fantastic Journey did not have much effect on the careers of the cast. Katie Saylor disappeared from view, but had previously appeared in episodes of Police Story, Cannon and The FBI, and played Al Pacino's girlfriend in The God-father.

Jared Martin had also been busy before Fantastic Journey, guesting in episodes of cop shows such as The Rookies, The Bold Ones, Shaft, Columbo and Switch. He later turned up in Katzman's Logan's Run (Fear Factor) and Lansbury's Wonder Woman (Phantom of the Roller Coaster), as well as guesting on The Six Million Dol-lar Man (an episode ironically titled The Lost Island) and The Incredible Hulk (Free Fall. He also took a recurring role for three years on Katzman's Dal-las. Other appearances in-cluded episodes of Hart to Hart, KNIGHT RIDER, AIRWOLF, Mur-der She Wrote, Scarecrow and Mrs King, Hotel, Mike Hammer and Hunter. In 1988, he led the regular cast of the syndicated series War of the Worlds for its two-year run.

Ike Eisenmann appeared in the film Escape from Witch Mountain and episodes of Gunsmoke, Kung Fu, Police Woman, VOYAGERS and Fantasy Island. He was reunited with Jared Martin for the two-part conclusion to the Wonder Woman series. Roddy McDowall also appeared in two Wonder Woman episodes, The Man Who Made Volcanoes and The Fine Art of Crime, and Buck Rogers' Planet of the Slave Girls for Lansbury, and had a recurring role on Donald Bellisario's Tales of the Gold Monkey. More prestigious SF roles have included People Are Alike All Over for THE TWILIGHT ZONE, The Experiment for THE INVADERS, the Bookworm for BATMAN, and the pilot for NIGHT GALLERY. Carl Franklin, who had also done the cop show cir-cuit of the early Seventies, played a minor recurring role in some episodes of The A-Team before embarking on a successful directing career.

"Science fiction series generally weren't successful in the past because the audience wasn't ready," said producer Bruce Lansbury just before The Fantastic Journey began on NBC. "We now have a generation who love science fiction movies like Futureworld, Rollerball and Logan's Run. They are loyal fans and their numbers are multiplying." Unfortunately, they didn't multiply enough for The Fantastic Journey. A fresh, unique TV series, it debuted on television during a spate of situation comedies and dramas. The reaction proved that American audiences still preferred the hijinks of Welcome Back Kotter to the troubles of travelers crossing through fantastic lands to reach their home.

The fanciful premise marooned a group of survivors on an island in the Bermuda Triangle. Their goal: to reach a shore named Evoland where they could be returned to their rightful time. What proved difficult was deciding which characters should be on the journey. In the original unaired pilot, Desi Arnaz, Jr., played a World War II pilot who crash-lands on the island and meets fellow travelers Scott Jordan and Dr. Fred Walters (both from 1977). "My role was based on a real-life lieutenant who disappeared in the Bermuda Triangle," says Arnaz. "My character encounters all of these pirates from the sixteenth century, and I had a big swordfight scene with actor Ian McShane." Shortly after the filming, Arnaz was cut from the pilot. "My part just disappeared," he says. "My footage is probably floating around Columbia studios somewhere. Call it the Columbia Triangle."

Writers Katharyn Powers and her then-husband Michael Michaelian were asked to rewrite Merwin Gerard and Ken Pettus's original script. "One of the problems was that the original pilot had too many characters," she says. "Our main contribution was adding Varian [the man from the year 2230]. In fact, one of the studio executives had reservations about giving the go-ahead to Fantastic Journey until she read the version with Varian. She fell in love with the character, and the pilot was accepted. This isn't to vitiate the work done by the original script workers. It was simply the total contribution of all the creative talents involved that made it work."

Varian was a peace-loving, articulate man whose futuristic spaceship crash-landed on the island. He befriends Scott and Fred, and the three join forces to find Evoland. "Michael and I had written an unusually long speech for Varian in the pilot where he describes who he is and what his world is like," recalls Powers. "We felt the speech established the thrust of the character. We were met with instant objection from everyone! We were told to cut the speech way down. In the meantime, our speech was what they used to audition Jared Martin with. When Jared read the speech, everyone was deeply moved. The speech stayed. I was privileged to meet Jared on the set. He was absolutely perfect in the role. A role like this doesn't come along very often,' he told me. We also had a chuckle over the infamous long speech by Varian. I thanked him for making it work. He thanked me for writing it."

It still took some juggling to come up with the right character combination. In the second episode, "Atlantium," Liana joins the travelers. Her father was a descendant of the lost people of Atlantis; her mother was an extra-terrestrial. Katharyn Powers made the contribution of Sil-L, Liana's telepathic cat. In the third episode, another important character was added: Jonathan Willoway. "In the original script," says story editor Dorothy Fontana, "Willoway had been totally evil. He was destroyed in the climax of the story. I rewrote the script and made him into someone who was merely manipulative and not entirely trustworthy. As played by Roddy McDowall, he was very compelling. He became the fifth and last character added to the group. It took us until the third episode to establish all of the regular characters. From then on, we ~had to start working out their relationships to each other. The growing relationships and humor between the characters were partially effective."

"The addition of Roddy McDowall was a real coup," adds Powers. "He's a superb actor, and he added a dimension of importance to the show." Now the five could begin their journey. "Bruce Lansbury envisioned the island as a honeycomb of different time zones," recalls Powers. "Past, future and present existed simultaneously. It allowed the writers to concoct the widest possible variety of scenarios." Every week, a blue glow would transport the travelers to a new time zone. The characters never knew what lay ahead. Powers' strongest memory of the series relates to rewriting the pilot. "We were all under a tremendous amount of pressure to get the script completed."

There was a scene on the beach, just after the scientists are shipwrecked, where one of the young women becomes hysterical. For some reason, the scene was a bitch to write. Around 3 a.m., Michael and I were exhausted. We had reached our breaking point with this scene. We couldn't make this woman's transition (to accept her predicament] believable. No matter what we changed, we hated it. We had a technique to break through such creative quagmires. We talked the scene through in an X-rated version. The absurdity of the technique really worked for us. We made the necessary changes that morning. However, we slipped the X-rated page into Bruce Lansbury's script (and only his!) as if it were a part of the final rewrite. Well, Bruce is one of the most able, creative producers I've ever worked with. He has a great sense of humor. He let us know that we had given him a good laugh. He kept that page after all these years."

"I remember one of the network people wanted to shoot that page," says Michael Michaelian. "Unfortunately, they didn't. But it was discussed appreciably ever after!" As a mid-season replacement, The Fantastic Journey was, in Dorothy Fontana's words, "rushed into production without enough lead time. I started with the show in early December 1976. At that point, only the pilot was in the can, and it was being re-cut. We had a few scripts on hand, but they had to be rewritten to fit the revised format, i.e., take out Scott's father, add Liana and Willoway. The show went on about a month after the staff was assembled and production began. As a result, we were constantly close to the edge. We were pushed to get scripts done, principal photography completed, film edited, scored and dubbed. We had to have answer prints ready to go on the air on schedule. It's not possible for people to do their best work under such hectic and pressured circumstances."

Story consultant Calvin Clements, Jr., says, "Fantastic Journey went by like a blur. Every day was like a sprint. Good science fiction is very hard to write. Most of what passes for science fiction is updated westerns or simplistic human allegories with people who have Martian sounding names like Og. When science fiction isn't good, it's frankly very bad. Most of the time they're not successful. Battlestar Galactica and Buck Rogers were both financial disasters. In Fantastic Journey, it became somewhat formalized. In terms of production, it was very ambitious. Any show that is visiting new worlds every week has to build that world. You can't just go out in the street and film it, unless it's one of those plots where they go, 'Hey, look! It's a mirror image of Earth!' That meant building the sets, dressing the people, and using optical effects. The budget went for making that razzle-dazzle effect each week. Every time they skipped over to another time zone, you needed the optical blip, and that costs money.

It was like building the land of Oz every week!" Clements enjoyed his stint, but The Fantastic Journey doesn't stand out as a particular memorable series. "As a young writer, I was just happy to get a job offer. It was an intriguing premise, and the creative people were nice. Bruce Lansbury is a terrific producer. The cast was fairly decent. Roddy McDowall's character was an interesting, spunky fellow. He was a kind of a pixiesh villain. Katie Saylor's character was fun. She had that eerie sensitivity for animals. Ike Eisenmann was a good young actor. He had done a lot of work at Disney. But audiences just didn't bite. There were never any Ike Eisenmann fan clubs. I don't say that with derision. The show may have had a look that people didn't like. We rushed to get those shows on the air. Some of the episodes shouldn't be held up as examples of our best work."

While The Fantastic Journey languished in the ratings, it did pick up a loyal core of viewers, as well as encouraging reviews from the critics. TV Guide urged viewers to give the series a chance before it was too late. Seattle Post-Intelligencer TV columnist Susan Paynter said a tear could be shed for The Fantastic Journey's impending cancellation because "at least it tried to be different." "Every new series takes time to 'shake out' and find itself," notes Powers. "Fantastic Journey was doing that. If it had been given a chance, I think it would have run for a very long time."

"It had an awful time slot [Thursdays at 8 p.m.]," says Michaelian. "And the network was unwilling to give it a chance. The series' strength was that it had a pretty good cast. Roddy and Jared worked particularly well together. Roddy was excellent in an episode I wrote for him, 'Funhouse' (where Willoway is possessed by a sorcerer."

"The series did not draw satisfactory ratings at any point in its life," reveals Fontana. "However, it began to rise in the ratings around the sixth episode. Publicity had begun to pay off, and audiences were discovering it. It took us until the fifth episode to find the full tone of the characters' relationships and strengths. The scripts began to improve steadily, and the characters became increasingly more interesting. Unfortunately, NBC began preempting the episodes with specials. This contributed to the low ratings. Under the circumstances, many episodes turned out quite well."

The character of Liana had to be written out of the last two episodes when actress Katie Saylor became seriously ill and had to leave the show. "Had we continued, another character, preferably another woman, would have been added to fill the niche vacated when Katie left," says Fontana. Many series don't resolve their premise when cancellation strikes, but Fontana recalls that producer Lansbury was interested in having a concluding episode. "He planned to have the characters reach the end of the island and find Evoland. Evoland was Bruce's creation. Drop the 'and' and it's love spelled backwards."

The quick cancellation dashed hopes of a final episode, although the second-to-last episode, "Riddles," provides the travelers with a stone that will guide them safely to their destination. For Jared Martin, who would later star in the 1987-89 series War of the Worlds, the character of Varian was a pleasant departure from the killers and drug fiends he had been playing up until that time. "I've been really boxed in by playing bad guy roles in series like Switch and The Rookies," he said at the time. "And when I'm not playing a heavy, I'm playing a reformed junkie like on Columbo." Today, the actor notes, "I see pictures of Varian and I'll say, 'Wow, he's like my son.' He was a dear character and it was a dear series. It died because of the furious and merciless economics of television. It was between Welcome Back, Kotter, the year John Travolta hit it big, and The Waltons. No show is going to last stuck in that atmosphere. We ran for only ten episodes."

Although there was a strong letter-writing campaign to save the show, NBC's decision was final. "I don't think we were given enough time," concludes Martin. "NBC at that time was a very weak network [in terms of programming] and they didn't want to pour money into a show that might or might not be successful."

CAST NOTES

Jared Martin (Varian): Born 1941 in New York. Martin played Dusty Farlow in Dallas (1979-82) and starred in the syndicated War of the Worlds (1987-89).

Roddy McDowall (Willoway): See Planet of the Apes.

Katie Saylor (Liana): Born 1951. Growing up in Connecticut, Katie dreamed of being an actress from the age of four. Her movies included The Godfather (1972). "Katie became seriously ill during the filming of The Fantastic Journey," recalls writer Dorothy Fontana. "She had to leave the series. To the best of my knowledge, she has not worked as an actress since."

Carl Franklin (Fred): This young black actor turned to directing in the 1980s. His film One False Move (1992) received critical acclaim.

Ike Eisenmann (Scott): Born 1962. As a child actor, he starred in the Walt Disney film Escape to Witch Mountain (1975). He was also Scotty's ill-fated nephew in Star Trek: The Wrath of Khan (1982).

WR. Michael Michaelian, Kathryn Michaelian Powers and the story editor, D.C. Fontana, Robert Hamilton.

A strange red storm cloud separates Liana from the rest of the group where she is found by Jonathan Willoway (Roddy McDowall), a noted scientist from Earth in the 1960s Meanwhile Varian, Fred and Scott find themselves in a swamp where they meet green-skinned aliens, and help to cure their leader from a malaria type disease. They learn that these people used to live beyond the mountain. Willoway drove them off by turning their helpers, which are in fact androids, against them. Willoway now a bit lonely with only androids for company decides to make Liana his wife. He sends the androids to make sure Varian, Fred and Scott don't interfere with his plans. One of the androids (Cyrus) develops feelings for Liana and when Willoway states that if Liana doesn't stay with him he would kill them all, Cyrus destroys the androids power source. Jonathan Willoway is defeated and even after saying he would kill the travelers, they allow him to join them.

1 - 8 TURNABOUT

Liana is captured by a group of men who treat women as slaves, the travelers become involved in her rescue, but things don't go to plan as the woman has already taken care of the problem by using the complex computer to transport the men to a holding cell. They offer a place for Liana but as they are male, consider them a problem as well, but because of their behavior to Liana they see a difference in them and decide to use them as (breeding stock) the queen orders them to be given a poison in their meals that will act as a leash of sorts for once given the poison won't affect you unless you stop taking it. Scott gets a sample of the poison and Fred escapes to retrieve his medical kit left behind at their camp by the river. He is chased by Connell but helping her after a bad fall she decides to help him and his friends. In the mean time Queen Halyana has another problem the complex computer develops a mind of its own and starts to take over the city. Queen Halyana asks Willoway to fix the computer when he tells her he can't she withholds Varian and Scott's food and they begin to feel the effects of the poison Fred develops an antidote and since the complex is the more dangerous of the two they all band together to defeat it.

1 - 10 THE INNOCENT PREY

The travelers are awoken by the sound of a crashing space ship. But not just a space ship a prison ship during the crash one of the prisoners (York) gets loose and kills the pilot and then frees the other prisoner (Tye) who is injured during the crash but semi conscious. Thinking the copilot was dead they leave the ship and run into our group who had run to see if they could be of help. they take them back to there camp where Fred takes care of Tye they invite the 2 to join there party in the trip to Eviland and the way home not knowing of there criminal past. The next day they come to a community of innocent for they know nothing of thieves or murders all is open and everything is shared. Rayat the leader offers the travelers a place to stay while Tye recuperates and even to join their community if they chose to. when Scott asks Rayat's daughter Natica about the stone in her necklace she shows them that they have the power (with the help of a magical orb) to change strawberries into diamonds rubes and emeralds. This had York's attention and he starts making plans. its at this point where Willoway sees York and follows him to have a chat about his space craft he sees York talking to someone dressed like him and thinks its Tye so he leaves them alone and wanders back inside and asks Fred if Tye should be out of bed yet. Fred says he just left Tye in bed and didn't know what he was talking about. this makes Willoway suspicious and starts on an answer finding mission. In the mean time its the copilot that York is talking too and what Willoway didn't see was York killing him with a lazier pistol that night Willoway takes Varian to the ship to have a look around and they discover that York and Tye are prisoners. We learn that the recovering Tye may be a thief but not a violent prisoner like York he is likable and makes friends easily with Scott and Natica. Early the next morning York takes Rayat's son Roland away from the house to try to get the secret of the orb from him. As Varian and Willoway try to tell Rayat about York they hear a cry and see Roland's body being brought back to the village. Rayat cant believe that anyone could take another mans life and believes York's story of an accident but the travelers know the truth and plan to do something. Tye better now is worried about his new friends and the hope of getting York away from there convinces York to leave with him. Scott hearing that he's leaving ask Tye why he was going with York and figures out that Tye is doing it to save them he hurry's away to tell the others but York hearing there conversation kidnaps Scott and uses him as bait to lure the others to the space ship which he rig's to explode. With Tye's help they save Scott and go after York who now is holding Natica at gun point trying to get the secret of the orb from Rayat. FANTASTIC MAN

As a young boy, Fredo lived happily in the province with his parents Danny and Linda, together with his Lola Cedes, until his simple life was shattered when a group of armed bandits abducted his father and killed his mother. Fredo was raised alone by his Lola Cedes, who eventually turned senile and got lost when they moved to the city. In search of his Lola Cedes in the cruel city, Fredo meets new friends but also has a close brush with death in the hands of a ruthless syndicate. Left almost lifeless from a deadly beating, Fredo is rescued by Prof. Manalo, a scientist who invented the healing machine called the Regenerator. Fredo becomes the first "guinea pig" of the breakthrough healing machine and surprisingly acquires super-human powers. This fateful experience transforms the once helpless Fredo into an invincible crime-buster with extraordinary abilities and power.

Fantastic Man is a television serialization of the box office movie with the same title. The series originally starred by Vic Sotto stars Mark Herras as Fantastic Man with Ryza Cenon and Jackie Rice. The series refurbishes and reintroduces Fantastic Man as a crime-busting superhero.

Character History

Fantastic Man is a fictional superhero character popularized by Vic Sotto. The character debuted on the 2003 movie with the same title produced by OctoArts Films and M-Zet Productions. It was actually part of the Metro Manila Film Festival - and was that year's topgrosser.

The concept of Fantastic Man came about when the movie producers failed to bought the rights of Lastikman from the Ravelos. Lastikman was actually their entry to the 2002 Metro Manila Film Festival and was that years' topgrosser, thus they were forced to do a sequel due to its success. The reason why they failed to buy the rights is because the heirs of Lastikman creator Mars Ravelo demanded 1.8 million pesos (around US$32,727 that time) for the sequel. In the Lastikman (2003 movie) which realunched and brought the character back to limelight, the heirs only demanded 130,000 pesos (US$2,363), they even gave 500,000 pesos (US$9,090). The rights for the movie went to Viva Films. Meanwhile, Michael V. and Chito Francisco came up with a new superhero story bringing birth to Fantastic Man.

The costume of Fantastic Man in the movie was designed and made by the special effects team of T.A.P.E. Productions boss Tony Tuviera. While the costume of Diabolica (the main villain in the movie -- Ara Mina's character who was named after her role/name in the movie Super Ranger Kids in 1997) was the idea of actor Michael V.

Fantastic Man costume's color was Purple/Violet and Gold/Yellow, which represents Holiday season for the Philippines. Violet for puto-bumbong (Filipino native food) and in Christmas wreath violet/purple candle means loyalty to God. While yellow for bibingka or rice cake (Filipino Christmas food). Another interpretation was the color Purple represents justice while Gold/Yellow stands for power according to 1872 Mardi Gras by the King of Carnival, Rex.

Cast Information

Agent Belle

Belle is one of the top-ranking agents of PSI, a government organization that specializes in mysterious activities. When a mass disappearance takes place in St. Anthony University, it is Agent Belle who seeks help from Professor Manalo and Fantastic Man.

And as Belle becomes aware of the good that Fantastic Man does, she slowly falls for the superhero. A rivalry for Fredo's attention takes place between her and Wena.

Boss Elvis

Boss Elvis is a trigger-happy syndicate leader. He may not have superhuman abilities, but he will prove to be a formidable enemy of Fantastic Man.

Budol

Budol is a con artist who uses hypnosis on his victims! An illegal dealer of pirated goods, he is one of the many villains that Fantastic Man will face.

Danny / Tadtad

Danny is Fredo's kind and loving father who was abducted years ago by armed bandits. He raised Fredo as a law-abiding citizen who will always look out for other people. Who he was, as Fredo remembers him, continues to color his son's decisions in the present.

After it was revealed that Danny is also Tadtad, Fantastic Man's most ferocious foe -- a fight between father and son allowed Danny to resurface and for the two to become reunited. Unfortunately for Fredo, Danny's life was taken soon after they reconciled.

Faith

Ana Leah Javier splashes onto your TV screens as the sexy Faith, assistant to Professor Manalo. When she first appears she might seem human, but she is really an android.

Fredo /Fantastic Man

When he becomes the victim of a random beating, Professor Manalo saves him and unwittingly turns him into the toughest crime-fighter on the land: Fantastic Man!

Kind-hearted, law-abiding and loving are just a few words to describe Fredo. He can also be described as having the tendency to be stubborn and clumsy. But after becoming Fantastic Man, Fredo had to learn to be more mature and responsible. Especially after his first love Helena died, and he wasn't able to do anything to save her.

With his abilities to change his form into any object, and his elasticity, there's not much that Fantastic Man cannot do -- so long as he doesn't get cold.

Gobo

Benjie Paras plays Gobo, a circus freak with an unnatural strength and an impossibly feeble mind. Gobo is the leader of a pack of midget-thieves posing as circus performers. He can crush rocks with the use of his head, bend metal with his bare hands and does other extreme acts.

Helen

Ultimate Female Survivor from the third StarStruck search, Jackie Rice plays Professor Manalo's niece, Helen. Raised in the United States, Helen is a soft-spoken girl who becomes interested with Fredo. She befriends Wena, but the two will become bitter rivals for the love of one man: Fredo.

Linda

Linda is the doting wife of Danny and caring mother of Fredo whom the family loses after a tragic event. Like Danny, her memories shape the roads that her son takes in the present.

Lloyd

Lloyd is a young Science professor from the University where the mass disappearance took place. With his knowledge in the sciences and his experience in the University, he will become a key ingredient for Fantastic Man and Fantastic Girl to defeat their new opponents.

But while helping their superhero counterparts, Lloyd is unwittingly destroying their personal lives when he becomes closer to Wena, drawing away her attention from Fredo.

Lola Cedes

Used to playing grandmothers to superheroes, Gloria Sevilla takes on another super grandma role as Lola Cedes, the woman who raises Fredo to be the man he is today. But the move to the big city becomes too much for the senile grandmother, and she becomes lost. Will Fredo succeed in finding her again?

Madame Tisay

Madae Tisay is a loud club owner who uses witchcraft to get her way. Madam Tisay is involved in prostitution and white slavery, and employs a coven of witches as performers for her club. She is another one of the many villains that Fantastic Man will fight against.

Ms. K

Nicole Anderson plays the mysterious Ms. K who works as a secretary-assistant to a secret foundation that is Fredo thinks that even if he didn't have any training, he could still use his power to its full potential. But something happens and Fredo decides to ask Professor Manalo for training after all.

Professor puts Fredo through his paces. Is he ready for what is in store? He'd better be because he is about to face his first mission.

1 - 4 TRY AGAIN

After getting trapped in the Professor Manalo's regenerator, Fredo discovers that he has developed extraordinary abilities. Amazed by his new talents, he immediately rushes to Boss Elvis's hideout to save the kids. All this despite the Professor's warnings that his strength is not yet enough.

But Fredo proves Professor Manalo right as he fails to accomplish his self-imposed task. He returns to his house, agrees to be a superhero and undergoes strenuous training to improve his powers.

So while Fredo prepares for his mission, the Professor continues to research on his superhero-in-the-making. What else will Professor Manalo learn about Fredo?

At the same time, Fredo encounters his new foe, Singkit, who is in the business of selling addictive 'happy balls'. Can he do anything to stop this guy?

1 - 5 FROZEN!

Fantastic Man sends Boss Elvis to jail, but he can't rejoice just yet as another foe comes to the picture.

His name is Singkit and he manufactures addictive 'happy balls', which give its consumers an odd elated feeling and a remarkable singkit look. Once again, our superhero hurries to defeat the enemy, but Singkit finds a way to make our hero weak.

Professor Manalo revives him and studies the material that caused his sudden helplessness. While the professor is busy doing this, Fantastic Man sneaks into Singkit's warehouse to investigate. Unfortunately, the professor calls to inform him that ice causes his destruction at the exact moment he is hiding in a freezer!

The superhero is in danger, but who will come to his rescue? Will Professor Manalo be able to revive him again? And while all these problems are happening, another suspicious individual enters the scene. What is he up to?

1 - 6 RIVALS

Fortunately for Fantastic Man, he manages to escape Singkit's freezer in time to evade the attacks. With the Professor's help, he regains his strength and returns to the warehouse, where he succeeds in getting rid of Singkit and his 'happy balls' momentarily.

With the neighborhood Singkit-free, Fredo takes time to look for his grandmother with Wena's help. Fredo and Wena get along with each other well. And then Fredo meets Helen, the professor's lovely niece, and his attention become divided between the two girls.

Meanwhile, two more scheming individuals come into the picture. One man is determined to reveal Fantastic Man's real identity and have Professor Manalo build a regenerator. Another uses hypnotism to do evil things.

More horrible things now await Fantastic Man, but is he ready for it? And as Fredo sets his eyes on another pretty girl, will his care for Wena remain. And will Fredo's concern for Wena remain, now that he has set his eyes on another pretty girl? How will Fantastic Man, or Fredo, manage his personal life and civic obligations?

1 - 7 UNWANTED ALLIANCE

While Fantastic Man survives an encounter with Budol unscathed, Tikboy, Wena's younger brother, gets hurt by a gunshot. Wena rushes Tikboy to the hospital, where she expresses disappointment of the superhero - right in front of Fredo.

Fredo loses more 'pogi points' from Wena when he agrees to become Helen's escort in a Santacruzán. As a consolation, however, Fredo seeks Wena's advice when he looks for the right suit to wear for the parade. Wena is in bliss, but Fredo did not even realize he is the reason for her glee.

Meanwhile, Tadtad almost succeeds in forcing Budol into an alliance. Budol, however, refuses his offer and manages to escape his lair by hypnotizing his assistant, Miss K. Angered, Tadtad resorts to inviting Fantastic Man himself into an evil partnership.

Presented with cold cash and other tempting offers, Fantastic Man almost agrees to ally with Tadtad. But goodness still reigned in the superhero's heart, and he adamantly refuses his enemy's proposal.

Tadtad burns with fury as he gets rejected twice. Using his back-up plan, he stuns Fantastic Man and moves to get to know the person behind the mask.

Will Tadtad find out who Fantastic Man really is? And if he does, will this be the end of our superhero?

1 - 8 A SPECIAL VISIT FROM THE SUPER TWINS

Tadtad realized that he can do so much more with the help of Budol. He tried to force him into an alliance. But when he realized he could not convince Budol to be his partner in crime, he locked the would-be ally up in a room. But the shrewd Budol managed to escape by hypnotizing Tadtad's assistant, Ms. K.

Angered, Tadtad resorted to inviting Fantastic Man into the partnership. He presented the superhero with cold cash and other great deals, but goodness remained in the latter's heart and he refused just the same. Irritated for having been rejected twice, Tadtad stunned Fantastic Man and vowed to find out who the person behind the mask is.

Unconscious, Fantastic Man lay helpless on the grounds of Tadtad's mansion. And just when all hope to save him from the evil villain was gone, two lovely super heroines came to his rescue. Fresh from their victory over Eliazar in Bayan ng Laro, Super S and Super T arrived to aid their fellow superhero and restore peace in his small town.

1 - 9 THE GAYUMA

Fantastic Man refuses to join the forces of Tadtad. This will anger the treacherous criminal. What will he do to our hero?

In the meantime, Wena finds a mysterious gayuma. Will this be the key to unlocking Fredo's heart?

Since our superhero is a lone ranger trying to save one man at a time, what happens when it's his turn to be in danger? Who will be there to save him?

1 - 10 SUPER TWINS AND FANTASTIC MAN

Who will save our crime-busting hero in purple when he is in danger?

No worries, the Super Twins will save the day! This Saturday, Fantastic Man will finally meet Super S and Super T.

1 - 11 SURPRISES

Fantastic Man landed on a truck of ice, which caused the temporary non-function of his body. Luckily, two lovely super heroines, the Super Twins, came to his rescue and took over his job of saving his hometown while he rested and got his strength back.

The superhero soon regained his strength, and with the twins, he toppled down the evil clown Gobo. With victory already at hand and his powers back, the Super Twins left Fantastic Man to deal with the bad guys.

Meanwhile, Helen is dead and Fredo could not help himself but blame himself for it. Professor Manalo consoled him, but the superhero still could not believe the love they shared had to be that short-lived.

But for now, Fredo has other things to put his mind to. Two scheming aliens wreak havoc in town as they look for a powerful grain and Fredo sees a man who looks exactly like his father, Danny. Even Wena is acting weird, much to Madam Celsa and Tikboy's worry.

1 - 12 A SURPRISE

A revelation that will change Fredo forever. A character from Fredo's past will come back to haunt his present existence.

Will Fredo be able to handle the truth?

What will he do?

Who is this person from his past?

1 - 13 A NEW CHAPTER

As a new chapter opens up for our hero, a new set of characters also starts to invade his already complicated life. Meet Lloyd Mendez (Patrick Garcia), a young professor who witnessed the abduction of an entire campus.

One by one the students return. What can they possibly be up to?

With new villains coming, our hero is in dire need of backup. Tank God Wena attains super powers and in a blink of an eye she becomes Fantastic Girl.

1 - 14 NEW ACQUAINTANCES, NEW MISSIONS

With the death of Tadtad, it should have been an already peaceful town for Fantastic Man and the rest of the community members. But with the arrival of new personalities in their place, the superhero is faced with a new set of challenges.

He first meets Lloyd Mendez, a young professor who witnessed the sudden disappearance of the students from a nearby university. Lloyd investigated on the matter, and found out the missing students do return – with a more mysterious look and extraordinary capabilities.

Amidst the challenges he is now faced with, Fantastic Man is blessed with a lovely and powerful ally in the person of Fantastic Girl. Endowed with the ability to fly and control the plants, Fantastic Girl – or Wena – teamed up with Fantastic Man to defeat all evil and make sure peace remains in their neighborhood.

What secret is Lloyd keeping, and how will these affect the town's serenity?

1 - 15 AT LARGE

Kate and Dexter, two of the students from St. Anthony University who disappeared, returned with extraordinary abilities that brought chaos to the town. Kate wreaked havoc with her ear-piercing and destructive scream, while Dexter had the power to make anything in his way explode.

Luckily for Fantastic Man, Fantastic Girl aided him in his mission to eradicate their new foes. The young professor, Lloyd Mendez, also offered his help as he foresaw what and where the enemies would attack next. He even relieved Kate of her dangerous powers upon her consent.

Fantastic Man and Professor Manalo are overjoyed to realize how powerful Lloyd is, but at the same time, were intrigued as they wondered where his abilities came from. What proved to be more mysterious is where he brought the eradicated powers to.

Meanwhile, Dexter remains at large as he refused Kate's offer to be healed. Upon confrontation, he escaped from Fantastic Man and Fantastic Girl and met up with his lord.

What is there to learn about Lloyd's personality? What can our superheroes do to defeat Dexter and his master?

1 - 16 FANTASTIC DUO VS. ICE CANDY!

With the ability to melt metal, Jopet (guest star Ryan Yllana) is proving to be difficult to capture for Fantastic Man. And even though the superhero's fight with the large student is not yet finished, another one of the abducted surfaces!

Candy Gonzales (guest star Arci Muñoz) reappears with the ability to turn anything she touches into ice. With this power, she becomes an unstoppable force when she goes against Fantastic Girl! But how can Fantastic Man save his sidekick when he knows what ice (or extremely cold temperature) can do to him? Is there a way the two can defeat the vindictive Candy?

Meanwhile, Lloyd Mendez (special guest star, Patrick Garcia) suddenly disappears. If the Fantastic Duo does manage to capture Candy, who will take her powers away when the University professor is nowhere to be found? Is there something more to Lloyd than what meets the eye?

1 - 17 THE HEALING MAN

In this episode, another battle awaits our two heroes as they try to protect the rest of the world from Ice Candy, a student who returns to earth with the power of Ice. Will our heroes be 'Iced' out? Or will they use Professor Manalo's new invention to defeat this new villain?

With the mysterious disappearance of Lloyd comes another suspicious emergence from one of the abducted students, Arman, who has gained the ability to heal. Is Arman on the side of good or evil? Will he be able to help Fredo's grandmother?

1 - 18 A GHOST FROM THE PAST

Arman reveals his true intentions: to kill people and resurrect them as zombies. What will Fantastic Man and Fantastic Girl do?

With this revelation, another mystery will unravel in this exciting episode as Fredo and Wena finally discover the truth behind the abduction at St. Anthony University. Will they be facing their strongest enemies? Will they be able to defeat them?

A familiar face from Fredo's past returns and haunts our favorite hero. Who could this be?

1 - 19 FOR THE GOOD, FOR THE BAD

Fantastic Man almost succeeded in his battle with Ice Candy, until he revealed his secret weapon, Professor Manalo's 'therma-tab', to his foe. Ice Candy took the chance and turned him to ice, but Fantastic Girl arrived in time to immediately revive him.

With renewed energy, Fantastic Man relieved Ice Candy from her weird powers by sharing the therma-tab. Candy did not remember a thing about what happened, and a group of paranormal investigators took care of her.

While the Fantastic Duo rejoiced in Candy's coming back to normal, a guy named Arman appeared in Professor Manalo's doorstep and explained he had the ability to heal. Arman proved his claim by healing Lola Cedez's amnesia.

Arman was also another enemy disguised as a friend who can help, however. He took revenge on everyone who bullied him before, killed relentlessly, and even resurrected his dead mother. Another problem arises for the superheroes as Arman revives more corpses.

Why is Arman hungry for revenge? Can our superheroes stop him before he destroys the whole town?

1 - 20 FOES AND ALLIES

Tension erupted in the whole village as the corpses Arman revived attacked people and proved to be destructive. The PSI, a group of paranormal investigators in the country, tried to contain the situation, but the zombies were far more powerful than they were.

Things went out of control until an alien named Ivan stopped Arman and his followers by taking all their powers. Fantastic Man and Fantastic Girl were thankful for his help, but Agent Belle of the PSI was wary about his identity. In the PSI headquarters, she and other agents attacked Ivan, which made the extraterrestrial creature angry.

While the Fantastic Duo stopped Agent Belle from harming Ivan, the latter trespassed the headquarters' energy reactor and caused a greater commotion. The reactor overloads with power, putting the lives of everyone within the PSI vicinity at stake.

Fantastic Man, Fantastic Girl and Ivan tried to prevent a possible explosion but the power was too much for them to contain. Luckily, Professor Manalo arrived with Danny, who stopped the energy overload.

Fantastic Man is surprised to see Danny. After all, he is certain he saw his father perish in his last encounter with the enemy Tadtad. What is the mystery behind this man? How did he end up with the PSI?

1 - 21 DEVELOPING AFFECTIONS

The overflowing energy in the PSI reactor almost killed everyone in the vicinity if not for the Fantastic Duo and Ivan's gamble, and Danny 2.0's support. Fantastic Man thought it was his father reincarnated, but later realized it was only a clone. Nevertheless, Fredo developed an attachment to the clone, despite the warnings of Agent Belle.

More unusual things happen as Agent Belle started showing affection for Fredo. Fredo is surprised, and Wena becomes jealous. But is Agent Belle sincere with her acts of love, or does she have another motive for taking such steps?

Meanwhile, Bornok, one of St. Anthony University's students locked up in the PSI Detention Room, escapes. And because he is able to copy the appearance of anyone he encounters, he becomes another challenge to our superheroes.

How will Fantastic Man and Fantastic Girl deal with an imitative enemy? What can they do to prevent the damage he can cause?

1 - 22 LLOYD RETURNS

Bornok is not be successful in his plans to get the information he needs from PSI. Draxor calls on Elekrika (Sherilyn Reyes), another abducted teacher from St. Anthony University. Will she be able to find the information Draxor needs to totally eliminate mankind?

On the other hand, Danny 2.0's memory has returned, and he will remember how evil Tadtad is and will plan an all-out attack against PSI. With this in mind, Fredo will try to protect his father's clone from harm.

Another thing that will shock you this week is Lloyd's return.

1 - 23 OLD FLAMES AND NEW LOVES

The battle between Lloyd and Ivan (Marco Alcaraz) rages on! Now that Prof. Manalo is in a state of confusion, who will he believe: Lloyd or Ivan?

With Lloyd's sudden return, will his affection for Wena emerge once more? And If so, will Fredo be jealous, or will he find a new love in the form of Agent Vicky (Jewel Misch)?

1 - 24 THE ALLY AND THE FOE

Heated arguments sparked between Lloyd and Ivan as they both vie for the trust of the people in the PSI. Fantastic Man believed Ivan, while Professor Manalo sided with Lloyd. To solve their dilemma, PSI Agent Vicky suggested taking their powers.

Ivan was hesitant but Lloyd willingly agreed. But Lloyd had something up his sleeve to keep his powers to himself. So while Ivan succumbed to the power-taking procedure, Lloyd succeeded in keeping his abilities. This event fueled Ivan's distrust for Lloyd.

Meanwhile, PSI Agent Cortez got tempted by the force locked in the PSI power-absorption machine. Despite the Fantastic Duo's strict warnings, Agent Cortez stole the powers and misused his newly-obtained abilities. Fantastic Man dealt with Agent Cortez and Danny 2.0 helped him finish him off.

Now the only person capable of taking others' special abilities, Professor Manalo commissions Lloyd to absorb Agent Cortez's powers. Lloyd obliges, and Ivan becomes angrier as Lloyd gets more and more powerful. Even Wena gets threatened by Lloyd's overflowing strength.

Who is the real ally and the foe between Ivan and Lloyd? What are Lloyd's motives for wanting control over Ivan's abilities? Now that chaos looms as Draxor's plans come to full circle, who can really be trusted?

1 - 25 FORGING ALLIANCES

With Electrica's success, Draxor was able to locate the Grain of Life. Wasting no time, he immediately sent Electrica back to the planet to get the life-giving granule. She obliged, and certain that the Fantastic Duo will be on her trail, she found herself an ally to stop the superheroes.

In the PSI compound, meanwhile, Ivan succumbed to Lloyd's powers. While Wena is convinced Lloyd did it to protect himself, Fredo insisted he is harmful. Thus begins a heated argument between the Fantastic Duo as Wena defended Lloyd and Fredo believed he is up to no good.

Nevertheless, they all chased Electrica and raced her to retrieving the Grain of Life. Electrica tried to ward Fantastic Man off by blocking his path with an electric wall, but he gets through by absorbing the energy.

With Wena, Lloyd and Professor Manalo, he entered the portal to the Grain of Life. Fantastic Man stunned Electrica by returning her electric shocks, thus resulting to a power overflow; but it was Lloyd who finished her off as he absorbed her powers. Successful as they may be in eliminating Electrica, another problem loomed as the Grain of Life goes missing.

Will Lloyd's act of heroism finally make Fantastic Man believe he is the ally they always needed? Or will Fredo's insecurities with Lloyd and Wena's closeness only sow more hatred in his heart? And where can the precious Grain of Life be?

1 - 26 RACING FOR THE GRAIN OF LIFE

Electrica is dead, and the grain has gone missing. The superheroes wondered where the grain could be, and got more surprised to find the mysterious statue missing.

Little did they know that the statue and the grain were one and the same. Excited with her newly-found environment, she roamed the streets and unconsciously hurt people with her overflowing strength.

The Fantastic team followed the Grain's trail, and the race intensified when Draxor sent another foe, Talim. Equipped with a hand as sharp as knife, Talim wreaked havoc in town as he looked for the life-giving seed.

With Lloyd's help, Fantastic Man eradicated Talim and won the Grain's trust. But when it was time for them to go back to the PSI compound, the Grain flew away from their company.

Where is the Grain headed to now? Will the superheroes ever get to protect the much-coveted life source when it purposely avoids them?

1 - 27 THE GRAIN IS IN DANGER

Fortunately for the Fantastic Duo, they were able to catch the Grain despite its attempt to escape. Fantastic Man eventually gained the Grain's trust after he saved her from outright danger.

Fantastic Man brought and kept the Grain in PSI's protective chamber. His closeness with her, however, made Wena wary of their relationship. Fredo thought Wena was jealous of them, so he assured her that he would not mind if she and Lloyd come to good terms. But will Fredo realize that Wena has feelings for him?

Meanwhile, Draxor has sent another ally to Earth to hunt for the Grain. He is Marco, and he is capable of turning himself into melted metal and seeping even through closed doors and small spaces. Determined to bring the Grain back to Draxor, Marco got into Agent Vicky's body and lured Fredo into helping her to move the Grain out of the PSI compound.

Marco's evil intentions eventually showed as he had the Grain in his hands. He stunned Fantastic Man and succeeded in bringing the Earth's seed of life to his commander.

What will happen now that Draxor has the Grain? Will Earth's life source simply succumb to Draxor's evil plans? Will any from the Fantastic team arrive to rescue the Grain?

1 - 28 TAKING RISKS

The Grain is surprised to find herself in Draxor's lair, and despite pleading for freedom, the enemy refused to let her go. She also realized that Agent Vicky wasn't her usual self.

Draxor shut the Grain in an electric chamber, and tried to force her to give the seed of life up. But she is reluctant, and Draxor has lost his patience. He commissions Marco to enter the Grain's body and get the Earth's life source, but it was to no avail as the Grain protected it from them.

Meanwhile, Agent Vicky regained her consciousness and immediately realized where she is. She looked for the Grain quickly and tried to escape with her, but Marco arrived in time to stop them and kill her.

In the PSI Compound, meanwhile, a new agent has taken over and she is known as Julianna. Together with Professor Manalo and Danny 2.0, the new agent studied how they can eradicate Marco, and they found out that it only succumbs to extreme heat.

Fantastic Man, Fantastic Girl, and Lloyd, on the other hand, scoured Draxor's hideout for any sign of the Grain. Fantastic Girl and Lloyd saw the Grain running away from Draxor, while Fantastic Man met Marco and proved that he is a determined foe. Danny 2.0 arrived to help Fantastic Man deal with Marco by sacrificing his life.

Fredo is aggrieved by Danny's loss, but he is certain he has a battle to win. Draxor hunted for the Grain and Fantastic Girl and Lloyd tried to protect her. The battle between good and evil has reached its climax, but the question still remains: who will emerge victorious?

1 - 29 REVENGE

Binhi will escape the hands of Draxor but she will have a surprising encounter with Lloyd. Will Lloyd convince Binhi to give him its power?

In the meantime, with the help of the new PSI agent Juliana, Prof. Manalo will finally find Draxor's home base. What will happen now that they know where to locate the main villain?

1 - 30 THE RISE OF A NEW EVIL

His encounter with Draxor proved only one thing, that Fantastic Man is no match to the alien intruder. Will Prof. Manalo and Agent Juliana be able to revive our fallen hero?

On the other hand Lloyd finally reveals his evil intentions towards Binhi, Wena will be affected by this revelation. What can Fantastic Girl do now that Lloyd already posses the power of Binhi?

1 - 31 SUPER DINGS! PART 1

In this two-part special, our fantastic hero will encounter the Super Dings, twins who accidentally gain evil powers.

On the other hand, Fredo plans to propose marriage to Wena but something's stopping him; what could it be?

1 - 32 SUPER TEMPTATIONS

After having successfully defeated Lloyd, the Fantastic Duo found the time to pay attention to their hearts' desires. Fredo and Wena professed their love for each other and their relationship went strong for two years.

Things took a sudden turn, however, when Wena envied Fantastic Man's commitment and mission to help the needy. Despite her love for Fredo, she turned down his marriage proposal, thinking he could never devote enough time to their relationship.

Meanwhile, two gay guys were tempted into committing serious crimes after they were promised the chance to be real ladies. Luckily, Fantastic Man arrived on time to stop them, and even Fantastic Girl came to his aid.

In the end, Wena decided it was best to understand Fredo's commitments since she was a superhero herself. Both agreed to get married, but will this plan work for the best as two new lovely antagonists show themselves to Fredo? Can Fredo avoid falling for a pair of sweet temptresses?

FANTASTIKIDS

Daniel, Diana and Don-Don are simple kids who live considerably normal lives in the town of Pulang-Lupa. Unknown to them, their mother is the keeper of a mysterious box in which the dreadfully evil entity Armana has been trapped for centuries. Their mother sacrifices her life to save them and, before dying, entrusts the box to the three siblings with the stern warning not to have it opened by anyone at anytime. Their lives change forever when someone opens the forbidden box and unleashes the evil Armana into the world. Armana begins possessing people and using them to accomplish her wicked plans. Faced with Armana's growing and strengthening power, Daniel, Diana and Don-Don have to cultivate their inherent powers to save the world from their atrocious nemesis. With the help of Mang Domeng, who is the keeper of the 'agimat', the three siblings discover their respective gifts and learn to develop their powers to help save the world from Armana's ruthlessness. Dondon has his cellphone which transforms into a powerful weapon and he is gifted with super-strength. Diana has her compact mirror where she can see the future and absorbs the villains created by Armana. Dondon has his towel which can heal wounds and sickness.

Three seemingly ordinary kids with extraordinary powers are about to change your Saturday afternoons. It all begins with an ominous box containing an evil power beyond human control. Are you ready for a new series with heart-pounding adventures to look forward to week after week?

GMA launches its newest adventure show, Fantastikids, on May 6. Saturdays will never be the same again as siblings Daniel (Marky Cielo), Diana (Isabella De Leon) and Don-Don (BJ Forbes) bring viewers into their engaging story of self-discovery, love and thrilling adventures. The siblings come together on a common mission to overcome a fearsome entity that is bound to spread evil and wreak havoc in the world.

Directed by Jun Lana and Zoren Legaspi, Fantastikids introduces Daniel, Diana and Don-Don as the kind of heroes anyone can aspire to be. They are simple kids who live considerably normal lives. Unknown to them, their mother is the keeper of a mysterious box in which the dreadfully evil entity Armana has been trapped for centuries. Their mother sacrifices her life to save them and, before dying, entrusts the box to the three siblings with the stern warning not to have it opened by anyone at anytime.

Their lives change forever when someone opens the forbidden box and unleashes the evil Armana into the world. Armana begins possessing people and using them to accomplish her wicked plans. Faced with Armana's growing and strengthening power, Daniel, Diana and Don-Don have to cultivate their inherent powers to save the world from their atrocious nemesis. With the help of Mang Domeng (Bodgie Pascua), who is the keeper of the 'agimat', the three siblings discover their respective gifts and learn to develop their powers to help save the world from Armana's ruthlessness.

Completing Fantastikids' cast are Jackie Rice as Princess, the girl Daniel will fall in love with; Melanie Marquez as Lucila, the kids' aunt and the only relative they have left to take care of them; and Ms. Sandy Andolong as Melinda, the kids' loving mother.

Ratings

Fantastikids replaced Wag Kukurap because GMA Network canceled the horror program due to being beaten by ABS-CBN's Komiks. "Fantastikids" is only beaten by "Komiks" in some occasions. But when ABS-CBN started to show Komik's 3rd presentation, Da Adventures of Pedro Penduko, Fantastikids is only beaten by only a small gap.

Jackie Rice's Suspension

Along with Iwa Moto, Jackie Rice was suspended for six weeks due to their bad habits like smoking cigarettes. They spoke about it and they decided to change their bad attitude and habits. Iwa is back to her regular shows, but Jackie was replaced by Glaiza de Castro; though Jackie won the "StarStruck" competition, Iwa is now doing better than her.

Fantastikids is a Saturday program on GMA Network. The show stars StarStruck: The Nationwide Invasion winners Marky Cielo and Jackie Rice.

But on the second season of the show, Jackie was replaced by Glaiza de Castro because of Jackie's scandals.

Daniel (Marky Cielo) starts to develop a crush on Princess (Jackie Rice), but Princess's persistent suitor, Richard (Paolo Contis), is hindering him from telling the truth.

What will happen to Diana? Will Daniel finally face the competition?

1 - 2 TOTENG'S REVENGE

Hunchback Toteng (Francis "Iking" Magundayao), who has been the butt of jokes for the longest time, discovers a magical top that will give him immense power and strength. But what if he uses his powers for revenge? Who will get affected along the way? Richard (Paolo Contis) tells Daniel (Marky Cielo) that he and Princess (Jackie Rice) are already together. As a result, Daniel loses his will to be strong for one of his siblings, who may be in great danger. Is Richard really telling the truth?

1 - 3 KALIMA THE HUMAN CARABAO

Daniel, Diana, and Dondon do not know that the evil powers of Armana have already possessed Lucila's body. Lucila summons Kalima, the human carabao, to help her steal the magical objects owned by her niece and nephews.

Meanwhile, Daniel still hasn't told Princess his true feelings for her, especially since he found out that Richard and Princess are already together.

Will Kalima and Lucila emerge victorious? Until when will Daniel hide his feelings?

1 - 4 ARMANA STRIKES AGAIN

Daniel has not been up to his usual self since he found out that Richard and Princess are together. He frequently neglects his chores in their store, causing his siblings Diana and Dondon to become irritated with him.

But Barbara, their newfound friend, seems to solve all their dilemmas. She's a tutor to Don-don, an older sister to Diana, and possibly a new love for Daniel. But little do these siblings know that Barbara is a product of Armana, and her evil powers are hidden in her hair that could kill anyone who interferes with her plans.

Will Daniel, Diana, and Dondon find out Barbara's secret before it's too late? Who else will become victims of Armana's atrocities?

1 - 5 THE MYSTERIOUS MUSICIAN

Daniel is now more determined than ever to win Princess's heart, especially since he found out that

Richard and Princess aren't really together.

But Richard comes into the picture again, and this time, he has amnesia, which causes Princess to have a soft spot for him. Little does Princess and Daniel know that everything is just Richard's act to get his girl again.

Meanwhile, a mysterious musician roams Pulang Lupa and kidnaps children. One of the victims is Dondon, Daniel's little brother. Will Daniel rescue Dondon in time despite being hopelessly love struck?

1 - 6 DON'T FALL ASLEEP!

Whenever Daniel, Diana, and Dondon are asleep, they are visited by a woman who threatens to steal their magical objects in their dreams. Little do they know that the evil Armana sent this woman to take advantage of the siblings' weakness because of their personal issues.

Daniel has not been his usual self lately, especially because Richard continues to pretend that he has amnesia, and Princess seems to believe him.

Meanwhile, Melinda's soul visits Domeng and warns him of the oncoming danger for her children.

1 - 7 HENNA THE HUMAN CHAMELEON

Daniel will be facing two major conflicts this Saturday! First is Richard, who is about to hear Princess's sweet approval, and second is Henna, the human chameleon sent by Armana. Henna has the power to impersonate anything and anyone she desires.

How will Daniel defeat the heinous Henna?

1 - 8 DOUBLE TROUBLE!

At last, Daniel confesses his feelings to Princess! Princess also finds out that Richard has been pretending to have amnesia all along.

But soon, another foe arrives in the form of twins Humberto Uno and Humberto Dos (Epi Quizon and Boy 2 Quizon), who have been sent by Armana. They kidnap Princess and bring her deep into the forest as an offering to Armana!

How will Daniel rescue his one true love?

1 - 9 ANG HAGUPIT NI HAGORN

The three siblings transferred to a house in Manila owned by the Damatan (Mga Dalubhasa sa Meligno at Anting-anting).

Tata Domeng, now the legal guardian of the trio, is part of the organization.

A new mission for the Fantastikids would be to infiltrate the videogame "Hagupit sa Hagorn," which affects anyone who plays it.

1 - 10 THE DANCE MONSTER

Fredo (Wally Bayola), who used to be handicapped, traded his soul to Armana for a chance to walk and dance again. There's a big problem, however: he steals the souls of those who see him dance!

To beat Fredo, Daniel has to challenge him to a dance showdown. Will Daniel out-dance the dance monster?

Meanwhile, Daniel will get to know Honey (Glaiza de Castro), who works as a garbage collector. Is this Daniel's second chance at finding love?

1 - 11 ANG DIWATA NG DAGAT

Something unforeseen and unwanted is about to happen to the Fantastikids!

The siblings can not believe that their mortal enemy Armana is still alive. This is the bad news brought to them by Deluvia (Iza Calzado), the fairy princess of the ocean.

Deluvia also has the crystal container that houses the mortal form of Melinda (Sandy Andolong). But before the Fantastikids find out how they can free Melinda from the phylactery, the malignant Alga (Ella V.) arrives on the scene.

1 - 12 ANG MANYIKA NI MONICO

Monico (Anjo Yllana), an evil doll maker, controls the minds of those who play with his creations. He orders his victims to kill each other, but Daniel and Diana get caught in the bloodshed!

1 - 13 DANIEL DIES!

Jolina Magdangal plays Genie-lyn, the jolly radio genie who grants Diana's wishes. But she warns Diana to watch what she asks for, because there will always be a consequence for every granted wish.

For instance, when Diana wishes for Armana's end, a new villain takes her place: Mudra (Teri Onor)!

But tragedy strikes when Diana requests her mom's freedom from the crystal trap. As a consequence, her kuya Daniel passes away!

Will the Fantastikids lose their kuya? How will Diana fix what she has done?

1 - 14 ASKALON, ANG LALAKING ASKAL!

With Daniel's help, Honey gets to have a dream date with Alberto (Marvin Agustin), the hottest actor around! But the dream becomes a nightmare when they find out that Alberto is really half-human and half dog!

What will happen to Honey on her date with Alberto?

1 - 15 STEVEN SUGAL

Steven (Joey Marquez) steals the souls of those who lose in his carnival games and he keeps them locked up in his magical cards.

Meanwhile, Tata Domeng, Diana, and Dondon come face to face with Armana when she attempts to retrieve her source of power from their house.

Will Armana emerge victorious this time?

1 - 16 ANG MISTERYO NI SELYA

A restless ghost wanders around an abandoned building. Daniel discovers that the spirit's name is Selya (Diana Zubiri). She was young woman who was waiting for her boyfriend Carlitos (Arthur Solinap) when death came for her. Even in death, the two have not been reunited. Another spirit named Ismael (Gabby Eigenmann) is in their love's way. He too wants Selya for himself, even beyond the mortal world.

How will Daniel and his siblings help these lost souls? And will the spiritual love triangle translate to Daniel, Honey and Bogs?

1 - 17 HALLOWEEN HALIMAWS

Tata Domeng fears Armana might attack again as Halloween nears. He presumes her followers might take advantage of the season, as the barrier between the mortal and paranormal world gets thinner during this time of year.

His dread comes true when Moña (Rufa Mae Quinto), a ghoulish dressmaker, shows up. Anyone who wears the costumes she makes become ghosts themselves. And she plans to wreak havoc in a town's Halloween party. The young superheroes will come to stop her, but what will happen if Daniel, Honey, Bogs and Annabelle accidentally wear Moña's creations?

1 - 18 ANG SANIB NG MALIGNO

Daniel defeats an evil force, but his good deed backfires when the force possesses him!

Waldo (Mark Herras) helps out the super siblings, but his friendly gesture is just an act! Will the Fantastikids find out sooner rather than later?

Honey, on the other hand, is willing to give up her life for Daniel. But what will she do when Bogs professes her love for her?

1 - 19 TAONG DAGA

Armana's forces are growing stronger! They've managed to enter the safe house of the Damatans and capture Diana and Dondon, while severely wounding Tata Domeng.

To heal Tata Domeng, Daniel and the others need to catch a Taong Daga and get its tail. But they are stopped by Roden, the Taong Daga's brother, who will do anything to protect the monster.

Meanwhile, Annabelle is starting to realize that maybe Honey is the one Daniel truly loves. And when Honey turns down Bogs, what could he be capable of doing in the name of love?

1 - 20 ANG HULING LABAN NI DANIEL

watch Daniel fight his final battle as he faces the most lethal of Armana's henchmen – Famine, Pestilence and War. Can Daniel save his mom, siblings and his girlfriend?

What will happen to Bogs' obsession to get Honey's heart? Will his defection bring him closer to his dreams?

FANTOMETTE

A teenage girl, Francoise, takes on the identity of costume crime fighter Fantomette to thwart the evil schemes of mad scientists such as Cynica, or super-villians such as "Silver Mask". FAR OUT SPACE NUTS

The show chronicled the adventures of a pair of somewhat incompetent space men who should have never gotten into space in the first place. Junior and Barney were members of the ground crew at Cape Kennedy placed in charge of loading the provisions onto a space craft. The craft was launched into space with the two aboard when the 'launch' button was pressed when the 'lunch' one should have been.

The ship landed on an uncharted planet where Junior and Barney met a weird looking furry creature with a horn on its head called Honk. Honk communicated with Junior and Barney through a series of honks and beeps. Episodes were either about Junior and Barney's attempts to repair their spaceship and return home or of their encounters with alien beings who just happened to drop by.

Far Out Space Nuts is one of the lesser remembered Krofft shows but stared probably the most popular actor of any of the shows: Bob Denver, TV's Gilligan. It was loaded with lots of slapstick but not much of the set and character glitz as most of the early Krofft productions. In fact it was so poor it was laughable compared to the early Krofft productions. This show was nothing more than adventure and slapstick boiled down to it's purest form and Denver and Mecca pulled it off the best they could considering the "monsters" on the show looked silly to even the youngest viewers. Interesting fact: Herman Zimmerman, background director for STAR TREK:THE NEXT GENERATION, designed the backgrounds for FAR OUT SPACE NUTS.

Far Out Space Nuts Theme Songs Lyrics

The spaceship is ready to chart the stars
To go where no one's ever gone
Flight preparations were almost made

Barney:
Breakfast, Lunch, I said LUNCH, NOT LAUNCH!!

Where in the world did the Spacesuits go
And how will they ever return
Now they got a home, where the strangest creatures roam
Honey's their to help them along

Step right up, take a look at the stars
You're leaving the world behind
Step right up, you won't believe your eyes
At what those Far Out Space Nuts find
At what those Far Out Space Nuts find

Episodes often co-written by series co-star Mecca, were slapstick comedies made to appeal to youngsters with such classic gags as the pie in the face. NOTE: The second season consisted entirely of reruns of first season episodes. Episodes may not be in order as broadcast dates are unavailable. The series was shown on CBS.

FARSCAPE

Astronaut John Crichton, on an experimental space mission, is accidentally hurled across the universe into the midst of an intergalactic conflict. Trapped among alien creatures wielding deadly technology and hunted by a merciless military race, Crichton is on an epic odyssey more spectacular than anything he has ever imagined.

The series has been written and created by Rockne S. O'Bannon, who was also responsible for creating the aliens on Earth saga ALIEN NATION.

Produced by Richard Clendinnen (line), Robert Halmi Jr. (executive), Brian Henson (executive), Kris Noble (executive), Rockne S. O'Bannon (executive), David Willis (consulting), Film Editing by Mark Perry, Production Design by Ricky Eyres, Art Direction - Julian Parry (supervising). Set Decoration Karen Murphy, Costume Design by Terry Ryan, Makeup Department - Lesley Vanderwalt (hair stylist supervisor, makeup supervisor).

Production Management - Helen Panchhurst production manager , Assistant Director - Adrian Pickersgill (first assistant director), Sound Department - Christian Bass (post-production sound), Ross Boyer (sound recordist), Cate Cahill (post-production sound), Peter Purcell (sound mixer), Angus Robertson (post-production sound), David White (post-production sound), Alex Wong (post-production sound).

Special Effects - Paul Butterworth (visual effects supervisor), Jamie Courtier (special visual effects supervisor), Dave Elsey (creative supervisor), Kriselle Gardiner (creative supervisor), Kevin Hunter (concept illustrator: Jim Henson's Creature Shop), Steve James (Co-3D Creative Director), James O'Connor (creative supervisor) & Guy Stephens (creative supervisor).

Stunts - Guy Norris (stunt co-ordinator), Other crew - David Birrell (post-production supervisor), Damian Bradford (Puppetry), Peter Coogan (executive in charge of production), Dave Cullins (puppetry), Royce Dunn (script supervisor), John Eccleston (puppetry), Maura Fay (casting: Australia), Alan Fleming (construction manager), Alan Green (post-production), Graeme Haddon (Puppetry), Jackie Hallatt (creative supervisor: Costuming).

Jonathan Hardy (puppetry), Margi Hoy (post-production), Ro Hume (executive consultant), Karen Jacobson (voice artist), Sharon Kune - casting: USA , Sally Lapiduss (creative consultant), Richard Manning (executive consultant), Sean Masterson (puppetry), Tim Mieville (puppetry), Michael O'Kane (head scenic artist), Julian Parry (supervising art director), Deborah Peart (post-production co-ordinator post-production), Henry Pierce (camera operator), Andrew Prowse (production consultant) and Richard Rees-Jones (gaffer). Patrick Rush - casting: USA, Fiona Schmidberger (production co-ordinator), David Shaw (grip), Sophie Siomos (production accountant).

The premise is simple. Set in the not-very-far-at-all-future, human astronaut John Crichton – played by Ben Browder of PARTY OF FIVE -- boards an experimental spacecraft, takes off from Earth, gets sucked through a wormhole, and finds himself nowhere near Kansas anymore. In the Uncharted Territories of outer space, Crichton joins a motley crew of alien escaped convicts bent on escaping the army of Peacekeeper aliens that would imprison them. And as if that weren't bad enough, Crichton accidentally kills the brother of this Peacekeeper alien leader, upping his status from "stranger-in-a-strange-land" to "stranger-in-a-strange-land-with-death-warrant."

Fine, right? He's safely on board this alien prison ship – which is, incidentally, a living ship named Moya with a mind all her own – with this group of ex-cons, who will welcome him into their merry band? The friendly spaceship crew's been done to death, FARSCAPE seems to say – let's see what happens if we dump our poor human into a group of people with their own agendas, who are not necessarily eager to adopt this outsider.

Have you seen the "blue lady" in the TV GUIDE ads? Bald, blue FARSCAPE masterpiece Pa'u Zotoh Zhaan

Which is not to say that FARSCAPE is a series about horrible torture, rather, it is a series about, as the producers put it, "reality." "This is the show the networks wouldn't produce," says David Kemper, Executive Producer. "It's almost like – the studios wouldn't have made THE BLAIR WITCH PROJECT. [The SCI FI Channel is a] network that deals with a very specialized category. And they can afford to put something on the air that appeals to their core audience. And because we have that freedom, and the Jim Henson company is willing to ride, and to encourage that, what we get to do is, we get to have one of our characters bite the arm of another character in anger, and swallow the piece."

Science fiction television frequently creates utopian universes, like we're used to seeing in the STAR TREK franchise and others. The creators of FARSCAPE set out to uproot this tradition, in favor of tropes more common in straight drama, where people don't always "all just get along."

"I think the tone of the show is, it's probably the most real science fiction show that's ever been done," Kemper continues. "The people behave [the way real people do.] People die on our show. It's real, it's tough, and yet we walk a line that [makes it] really entertaining."

The remarkable work of Jim Henson's Creature Shop clearly creates a sort of brand for FARSCAPE, with some of the most sophisticated puppets and animatronics you'll see on television.

"Rygel is one of the characters that I like to write for the most, which is weird because he's a puppet," says Harry Werksman, one of the show's writers (and former EON contributor). "I think it's because he's so amazingly realistic – I think that's also why the actors like to work with him – you have this thing and you think he's a living breathing creature."

"A descendant of Yoda," as O'Bannon describes, Rygel is an extremely detailed puppet with actual musculature in his face, allowing an expressiveness that lends immense believability to the character.

The character of Pilot, one of the series most impressive puppets, measures at almost 18 feet tall, and is operated by an entire team of puppeteers.

"What's amazing about Pilot is the absolute complexity that it takes to make him work, and that it works so incredibly well," says Werksman. "When you actually get to watch him work, there is one guy on each of his four arms – there's another guy working his eyes, there's another guy working his mouth...and this all comes off on screen like there's really a creature reacting to people in the room with him."

The predominance of the puppet-characters is a double-edged sword for FARSCAPE, because it's easy for it to be dismissed as a children's show. Kemper says that USA and SCI FI wanted to make sure that FARSCAPE didn't fall into that trap. He recalls, "Stephen Chao [President of Programming for USA Networks and SCI FI] said to Rockne, 'I want adults to find this show cool.'"

O'Bannon elaborates, "[Chao] didn't want a show that simply appealed to the sci fi audience, the audience that would naturally gravitate to a series like this. He wanted a series that would reach across the boundaries and grab people from another network and drop them in front of the SCI FI Channel. We're so proud of the show that we're doing, and everyone who sees it seems to click to it in a real big way. We need people to understand that this isn't a kid's show. "

This, of course, leaves a lot of people wondering just what it is they're looking at week after week. Ben Browder observes, "the hardcore sci-fi audience is trying to figure out, 'what is this show?' They're going, 'is it STAR TREK? Is it BABYLON 5?'"

"That's the way to get people," says Kemper. "You think you know, but you don't."

Werksman feels that what he thinks is really the strong point of the show is its unpredictability.

"What I think really appeals to our audience, once they find the bloody show, and what appealed to me as a writer is the fact that this show, unlike many other too long lived and too far entrenched shows is that it has no rules," says Werksman. "We're on the other side of the galaxy. We always start from the point of view of the aliens...and this is the light that we use to illuminate our characters."

With this dramatic structure and the unique circumstance of a single human among aliens, FARSCAPE also offers moments of what Browder calls "humor at the height of drama." Crichton can always be counted on to throw in human pop-culture references that the aliens he's with simply don't get. Browder says, "if you've ever seen Macbeth you know the brilliance of Shakespeare because at the height of the tension – Macbeth has slaughtered Duncan – he comes down the following morning and someone goes 'how was your night, my liege?' and he goes, 'twas a rough night.' And the audience always laughs because the audience is in on the joke. And no one else is. And it's one of the brilliant conceits of FARSCAPE because the audience is in on the joke and they can see the references – they know that Crichton knows the references and they know that nobody else really gets it. And it's a beautiful thing to be able to play with."

Additionally, science fiction habitually leans toward the plot-based story – big effects, techno babble, gadgets and gizmos galore – whereas FARSCAPE strives to be more character-driven, focusing on stronger scripts and interesting dramatic conflicts rather than high-tech wizardry. However, shot in Australia with a budget the cast of ER wouldn't thumb a nose at, and feature-quality cinematography, FARSCAPE doesn't lack anything in the effects department either.

"Our vision...was to do a series that gives a hint of what television [would look like if] specifically made for television delivery systems of the [future]," says O'Bannon. "We didn't know initially [that we wanted to shoot in Australia]. We searched the world and...Australia was just the right place. There's this tremendous talent that doesn't know the boundaries between film and television."

"It's the most ambitious science fiction show ever done," says Kemper. "We are around the world. We've had accomplished thespians. We've had movie stars. It's so ambitious, it's so strong, it's so gritty and real -- it's so inventive. And it's 22 little features. Australia has no schism [between TV and film]. You just work. Our special effects team and our stunt team finished THE MATRIX and came on to our show. Our make-up people, our animatronic people came off BABE and came on to our show and a lot of them have gone on to MOULIN ROUGE. A lot of the other people are going on to STAR WARS [Episode 2]. Our production designer has worked with George Lucas. So what we've got is, these are feature people who have decided that they want to live in Australia for a year. They kick ass. And they've made 22 features. So we have the guy who won the equivalent of the Academy Awards in Australia deciding to direct four episodes for us instead of doing a feature."

With these effects, and the strong writers FARSCAPE has employed, the show is able to push the boundaries of science fiction, while remaining true to, and a shining example of, what it is that makes science fiction unique as a genre.

"Science fiction allows you to amplify and draw out traits of human behavior in a way that you can't do with straight drama," Browder says. "You do the 'what if' question, and you're allowed to do the 'what if' question on a large scale. You can play it as real. So what FARSCAPE does is what all science fiction does – it gives you the big 'what if', and then you try to play that [as both] very real and very entertaining."

Werksman agrees, saying that FARSCAPE uniquely poses the question "what if all the fantastic science [humans] have discovered and continue to discover every day works here in our corner of the universe but is not true elsewhere? What if we're children with a rudimentary knowledge of what else is out there and how it all works?"

In the final four episodes of this season, FARSCAPE gets a chance to answer these and more questions in some truly bizarre and wonderfully horrific ways. There are some great new aliens, including a character played by Ben Browder's wife, Francesca Buller, coming up in episode 21. Described by David Kemper as a "balls-out" performance, this character is what Browder calls "a dangerous critter," and, honestly, one of the weirder aliens you'll see on TV.

In the first two-part episode ever done on a SCI FI Channel original program, FARSCAPE will introduce a new villain, Scorpius, the inspiration for which came from STAR TREK's Mr. Spock. "[Spock was] smarter [and] stronger than any of the humans, and willing to play subordinate to Captain Kirk," says O'Bannon. "What if that were just subterfuge?" The character of Scorpius, in episodes 19, 20 and beyond, plays off of that question.

The end of the FARSCAPE arc that will begin in the final four episodes won't be concluded until the first two episodes of season 2, says O'Bannon. Stemming from FARSCAPE's love of "playing fast and loose with [conventions of] television itself," Kemper warns the audience to be prepared for some cataclysmic events in the end of the season. "We leave our [characters] in a place where some of them might not be around in episode one [of season 2]," he says.

FARSCAPE has already accrued an impressive group of fans and followers who are making their presence known, loudly and unabashedly, online. From episode to episode they criticize, argue about and extol this show that has crept under their skins at Olympic speed. The 'shippers ask each week 'will he or won't he,' waiting for the moment when Crichton finally confesses how he "really" feels about the show's female lead, Peacekeeper Aeryn Sun (played by Claudia Black). The relationships evolving among Moya's crew are clearly achieving some sort of the "realness" the creators seek, and the fans are watching as this band, with awkwardness, and "gritty" imperfection, and a whole lot of bumping elbows, slowly becomes a family.

"Combine[d] with a lead character who...looks at something totally weird and fucked up and says, very realistically, 'what the hell is that?'," Werksman catalogs some of the most fascinating aspects of FARSCAPE. "Crew members with totally opposing agendas and world views. No science officers. No technical consultants to the show. No uniforms. No rulebook. This show allows us to do whatever our twisted little minds can come up with. That's its biggest appeal. A viewer is likely to see some of the weirdest, most creative and challenging characters and situations out there on TV today."

The series was first shown on BBC2 in the UK in the 6.25pm early evening time slot, two weeks after it was originally scheduled to be shown. Its UK broadcast began in November 1999.

The history of Farscape goes back several years. Created by the writer of the Alien Nation movie, Rockne S O'Bannon and developed by the Jim Henson Company, it finally went into production and debuted in the US in the Autumn of 1998. Now Farscape is getting its first run in the UK, and the episodes currently being shown on BBC2 are a pretty close match to the original idea. "It hasn't changed that much, in fact," says Peter Coogan of the Jim Henson Company. "The basic premise of a guy who the audience could identify with and has these pop culture references. Ben Browder, the guy who plays John Crichton, is very funny, a lot of those he drops in himself. The show's idea centres around an experiment going horribly wrong and him ending up on the other side of the Universe on a prison ship, that was basically the premise. I-had to embellish that and develop it, obviously came in over the years."

Pete has been with the project since the early days. He saw through much of the development, was instrumental in selling the idea to co-producers The Sci-Fi Channel in the US and Nine Network Australia, then was on set for the first season as Executive in Charge of Production. Despite the amount of work that went into Farscape before going in front of the cameras, he believes the episodes get stronger as they go along. "That's the great thing about how it was written. We didn't have 22 scripts going into it. You can shoot it that way and from an analytical statistical point of view, it makes a lot of sense. But from a creative character development point of view, it makes no sense whatsoever. Because we're working with an organic group of characters and cast and crew and you find out what works well together and what dynamic evolves during the show. I firmly believe that the show goes from strength to strength and really develops into great Sci-Fi drama, [especially with] the way Crichton develops and doesn't quite handle the environment. As human beings, how would we be if we were in a totally alien environment? How would we handle that? Could we handle that? Maybe you close down totally and go inside yourself and don't exist anymore. Crichton is able to respond to it with tongue-in-cheek humour, but at the same time he never actually fits in. I think that comes through in the later episodes, which is refreshing."

The series was filmed in Sydney, mostly because of the involvement of Nine Network Australia. Other reasons for basing the production there was the type of locations that can be found in Sydney and the relative cheapness of filming in Australia. Science Fiction, especially when it involves elaborate aliens, far off planets and Space-bound action, is always expensive to produce, but Pete shrugs off any suggestions that their ideas were limited by the budget. "It's a bit like having a pallet of colours and you've only got so much red and so much blue and it's how you utilize those resources," he says. "You can draw a picture that no one wants to look at and then again you can draw something that looks absolutely terrific and people want more from you. Hopefully, we've done the latter. You'll always hear from everyone on a production that they want more money, but I think we have a great creative crew. Our production designer, Ricky Eyres, who is British, was just amazing with what he was able to get out of his art department budget. The CG [computer graphics] was fabulous. The way the crew operated brought out some great ideas and I think that comes from having limited resources. If money is not an issue I think creativity, to some extent, gets stifled, because you can do anything and can continue to do anything. You need a parameter. And that's definitely how it was on this show."

The many aliens that appear in Farscape have been created by the Jim Henson Creature Shop. Some of them, like Rygel and Pilot, are puppets. It meant they were built in London and shipped out to Sydney where the puppeteers had to get to grips with them. "There's always some degree of learning as you go along because an animatronic character, like an actor, can evolve," says Pete. "What I mean by that is, what you think is going to work in the workshop [doesn't necessarily work] when you put it in situ in a swamp in New South Wales or in a studio. You find ways in which you adapt. But we were very lucky, the guys here in London, that's what they do, they build these fabulous characters and then we take a service crew out with us. We took, on the first season, seven people out with us from London and we hired local people in Australia. We took out a principal puppeteer to perform Rygel, but we picked up four in Australia as well. Another puppeteer, probably the best in the world, an animatronics guy called Matt Wilson, came out and helped us for the first seven or eight weeks to find people and help train them up. So it was a natural transition for us to build a character, then find a way to adapt it and put it to work in the shooting environment. It wasn't without its challenges, but it was relatively straight forward."

For the aliens played by actors, it often meant a long session in the make-up chair. The two-and-a-half hours it took to transform Virginia Hey into Zhaan eventually came down to an hour-and-a-half with practice. It was slightly less for Anthony Simcoe, who plays D'Argo. "I remember when we first auditioned him, he had so much energy and enthusiasm and I kept saying to him, 'you could have a three-hour make-up every day' and he said, 'oh, let's do it, mate!' He just found a way of dealing with it. As did Virginia Hay who plays Zhaan. "I remember a guy towards the end who plays a character called Scorpius, Wayne Pygram, who has quite an intense make-up. He was a lovely, well-balanced kind of a guy, a guy who you'd quite like to go and have a drink with. But in the space of an hour-and-a-half when the make-up was going on, he'd become this evil character and you couldn't talk to him. He followed me off stage one day and he said 'Pete, is there a problem between you and I?' I said 'absolutely not, Wayne, I just don't want to break your character'. He said, 'I was worried sick, I thought I'd said something'. I didn't want to shatter the character because he was so convincing, even the grips and the electricians couldn't look him in the eye. It's part and parcel of that kind of job and the genre that you find a way to best schedule it and keep the actors' health and energy levels in the forefront of your mind."

Pete Coogan is now back in London, having set the series on it's way for the first season. But work is still going on back in Sydney where the second season of Farscape is being filmed, having been a hit in the US and Australia. It only now remains to be seen how it will fare in the UK.

A classic fish out of water story, Crichton is from the Earth and slingshot untold light-years in another part of the universe. In the Sci-Fi Channel series Farscape, Astronaut John Crichton thought his latest mission into Space would be more or less routine until he was caught by a wormhole and dropped right in the middle of a battle. Now part of the crew of the living starship Moya, Crichton is just as much an alien as the creatures he meets, a true stranger in a strange land.

Crichton's alter-ego, Ben Browder, has a more rooted existence on planet Earth, but one with its own number of quirks. Born in Memphis, Tennessee, Browder grew up in Charlotte, North Carolina where his family owns and operates a NASCAR race car. As a younger man, he graduated college from Furman University in Greenville, South Carolina, but received his training in acting across the Atlantic at Central School of Speech and Drama in London. Although first appearing in stage productions, Browder branched into television and feature films. He made his movie debut in Memphis Belle and appeared in Neveda and A Kiss Before Dying. Although he worked in several TV movies and series, his highest profile role was as Neve Campbell's boyfriend in the hit series Party of Five.

Within the reality of Farscape, Crichton seems to wisecrack his way through situations where he's not quite sure what is going on. Although he's very smart and resourceful, it's all new ground to him, making it impossible to be completely secure. Like the character, Browder is quick with a quip and a joke, but he seems looser than Crichton, more incisive and quicker to laugh. Back in Hollywood to promote the Australian-based series, the actor is eager to expound on his affection for the show as well as providing insights into his character and the changes at work on him.

It's an exciting rime for Browder and the producers of the show. A successful first year leading into an ambitious second, the actor gives an idea not only of what he'd like to see with his character, but places it in perspective with where the character was. "When I'm doing a scene, the thing that I always try to keep in mind is to 'do what you do'. In other words, what would I do if I were really in this situation? That's the reality I give to John Crichton and it's something that hasn't changed since we began. Crichton is operating in an alien environment with the only tools he has - his wits, his skills, and his wit," he says, laughing. "He's literally just trying to stay alive for most of the first season; he's trying to figure out where the bathroom is! That's what he's about-trying to stay alive in all of this turbulent setting and looking for a way out."

Amongst Science Fiction television, Crichton is fairly unique as working counter to the traditional expectation of what a main character should be. Unlikely to storm into battle or draw a phaser this displaced human did not immediately give audiences a comfortable handle to get a hold of. "It was interesting to watch some of the early responses on the Internet to the character" Browder says. "People were trying to figure out why Crichton wasn't the super-confident hero that everybody's come to expect. If you met John under different circumstances, he would be more like that. And he was, too, at least until the point at which he stepped onto Moya and then all the rules changed. He becomes like Harrison Ford with his head in the snake pit." One of the hallmark characteristics of Crichton is his seeming inability to get through any situation without wisecracking. The fact that the references completely go past his crewmates doesn't stop him for a moment.

"That's the thing about the pop culture references; they're not gratuitous. And this is Crichton's coping mechanism. He's always trying to define and reinterpret any situation into something from Earth. He might say, 'All right, this is Larry Curley, and Moe'. It usually happens in times of stress which is fantastic because from a dramatic point of view that's usually the best time for a joke. This joking is integrated into his character just as it's integrated into the scripts. "I'm always looking for opportunities to show that. Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn't. When that happens, they mainly save my ass in editing," he laughs. "Of course, with technology being what it is, by 2001 Crichton will be completely CGI."

Every member of the Farscape cast has talked about the free exchange of ideas between actors and writers. Browder expands on the experience, especially when it comes to the humour that springs from his character. He and the writers have fallen into a good-natured rivalry in coming up with the best one-liners and quips for Crichton. "Sometimes I'll throw in variations which won't make the cut, yet these guys [the producers and writers] are great because they're obviously either watching the early cuts of the episodes or rushes because references that I throw in that don't make it turn up in the scripts a few episodes later."

Evolution Browder takes a sociological tact in explaining the kind of changes that Crichton begins to exhibit towards the end of the first year, carrying forward into the second. "As far as development of the character for the next season, I can honestly say that I've been very happy with what we've done this year. Crichton does change and evolve. In episode 16 [A Human Reaction], for instance, John Crichton kicks somebody in the head. There's no way he would have done that in episode one and that has to do with the fact that he's reacting to the environment he's in.

"The universe that we have him in really shapes the direction of the character and I don't feel that it's necessary for me to sit down with [executive producer] David [Kemper] or [executive producer and series creator] Rockne [S O'Bannon] and say, 'I want to push him this way or that way!' They're constantly pushing things in new directions and that includes the characters. Even if it's not a direction I might normally take, it's something I can work with. What happens as a result is really interesting and rewarding for me as an actor. They hand these scripts over and I go, 'I can interpret it this way or that way'. In that way I can kind of lay the seeds for any direction I want to go.

"For instance, I wanted to see John Crichton a little more competent and so I would play it that way. And, seeing that, they would write him more that way until in episodes 18 and 19 [A Bug's Life and Nerve], Crichton goes off in a completely different direction. The characters change much like we do in real life. Science Fiction traditionally accentuates the conditions that we all live under in reality—you know what if the world were dominated by lawyers? How would that change our behaviour? It works the same way with Crichton to date and will continue to for as long as the series will continue."

With Bone to be Wild, Browder's experience on the show expanded from an artistically rewarding one to something of a family affair. The actor's wife, Francesca Buller, was a fellow acting student when they studied in London and it had never occurred to either one of them that she might appear in Farscape. That changed over dinner with Kemper and O'Bannon and the arrival of the script for Bone to be Wild some time later with a part that the producer realized she'd be perfect for. A talented actor in her own right, Buller played the role of M'Lee who Kemper says, "literally and figuratively kills." "She plays a character who - like many on Farscape - is not what she appears to be at the beginning. She's an especially dangerous critter as far as Crichton is concerned."

Luckily, their behind the scenes relationship was a great deal more tranquil, though no less interesting. Browder reveals, too, an earlier professional situation that mirrored his wife getting the Farscape job. "I hadn't worked with her since doing The Merchant of Venice—the Broadway production with Dustin Hoffman - in which she played Jessica. It was my first major gig out of drama school and I remember she turned to the director and said, 'You should look at my husband'. And that's how I got the job so it was kind of interesting nine years later to be saying, 'David, you should look at my wife'," he laughs. "And she does a fantastic job. I also admired the fact that it was very difficult for her to do the show when she knows everybody socially and they only know her as my wife, not as an actress. So coming on the set, all eyes were on her and it created a tremendous tension, but that all went away because she did such a great job." An early reader of Science Fiction novels and fan of the original Star Trek, Browder is thrilled to be working in a genre that he knows, but his enthusiasm derives from the quality of the series itself.

"We paint on a large canvas," he says. "There is so much texture that the shows hold up to repeated viewing, which is good since we leave little seeds in each episode that come to fruition in later ones. For a First year series, I'm pleased, bordering on proud of what has come out of our efforts. It's one of those things that if you're in the business, you do a lot of things where you go, 'It's just a job'. This is the first time that I can recall that I really feel a personal sense of pride in what we have created. And because I'm also a big Science Fiction buff, I consider myself a pretty harsh critic." If Internet traffic is any indicator, Browder isn't the only harsh critic to be satisfied by the show. Genre fans have embraced the series and the next step is mainstream acceptance. If Farscape achieves it, then John Crichton and the man who plays him will find a whole new environment to get their bearings in.

Season One approaches its end with Never, an exciting and tense hour in which Crichton and Chiana must infiltrate a Peacekeeper stronghold in order to secure matching tissue for Aeryn, who is dying aboard Moya. Just as it appears that Crichton and Chiana will successfully pull off their mission, Crichton is captured and tortured by the lethal Scorpius, played with genuine menace by Wayne Pygram. Scorpius utilizes the 'aurora chair' as his torture device of choice, and it's a nasty piece of technology that allows him to penetrate Crichton's memory and extract any information he wants, which he (and Crichton) can watch on a monitor. Much to his surprise - and Crichton's - Scorpius stumbles upon information that was placed in Crichton's head before his ill-fated mission, adding an unexpected layer of subtext to the proceedings.

Nerve gets it all right. The production design is exotic, the cinematography sublime. In fact, the Australian Cinematographers Society awarded Farscape's Craig Barden a Golden Tripod Award for his work on Nerve. Even better are the performances. Most of the regular cast make brief but poignant appearances, but the centres of attention are Ben Browder, Gigi Edgley and Pygram as Crichton, Chiana and Scorpius, respectively. Browder has the reluctant hero bit down perfectly, and he's still tossing off pithy quips. After a particularly nasty torture session, he lay on the hard floor of his cell. "Danger;" he mutters. "Danger, Will Robinson". As Chiana, Edgley is all edge. Her eyes dart about, her head bobs nervously and she speaks Chiana's lines with palpable nervous energy. There's no denying the fad that Farscape keeps getting better and better, as the actors mesh more convincingly each week and the writers find their footing. At this point, Farscape is definitely one of genre TV's most eminently watchable shows.

Stark returns to Moya with a plan to rob a shadow depository and buy a contingent of slaves, one of which is D'Argo's son Jothee. D'Argo attempts the robbery on his own however and now the crew must recover him as well as the money they require.

Wr Grant McAloon

Dir Andrew Prowse

2 - 20 LIAR'S. GUNS AND MONEY PART 2: WITH FRIENDS LIKE THESE. . .

The crew is stunned when they learn that Scorpius has bought the slaves out from under D'Argo. Rather than trade Crichton for Jothee, Crichton, D'Argo, Aeryn and Rygel seek out mercenaries to help them steal the slaves. In the process, they encounter some enemies they've fought in the past. Meanwhile, back on Moya, the stolen money has turned into metal-eating spiders that begin to consume Moya.

Wr Naren Shankar

Dir Catherine Millar

2 - 21 LIAR'S. GUNS AND MONEY PART 3: PLAN B

Crichton turns himself over to Scorpius in order to free Jothee. With all the mercenaries now aboard Moya, the crew form a plan to rescue Crichton and destroy the depository.

Wr Justin Monjo

2 - 22 DIE ME, DICHOTOMY

The crew find a doctor that can heal Moya's burns and remove Crichton's neural chip. Things are complicated however when Crichton is informed he needs additional brain tissue from a donor in stasis who will die when the tissue is removed. Also Scorpius is beginning to take over Crichton's mind.

Wr David Kemper

FIGHTING DEVIL DOGS

In this surprisingly effective serial marines Brix and Powell are engaged in defending democracy in a Far Eastern protectorate when they encounter the hooded and becloaked 'Lightning' (Sothern), an evil dictator who decimates their platoon with his artificial thunderbolts.

The serial has its origins in Republic's firm policy of honouring different branches of the military in one title a year. However, visually, the tin-hatted marines are no match for Lightning, a villain in the grand tradition, whose death in the final reel comes as a real let-down. Seen in the eighties the serial has a disturbingly topical edge to it. The producer for the serial was Robert Beche, the cinematographer was William Nobles, the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker.

FINAL DAYS OF PLANET EARTH

You can feel it. Something isn't right with the world. You can see it. People are acting stranger than usual. You can hear it. It's coming from beneath the earth. Now you're going to fear it. Because they're here.

Three years ago, a team of astronaut miners completed a daring space expedition. In hyper-sleep they embarked on their journey home, but by the time the craft returned to Earth, their commander had gone mad taking a terrible secret with him to a heavily guarded state asylum for the insane. Today, archeologist Lloyd Walker (Gil Bellows, Ally McBeal) and entomologist Marianne Winters (Suleka Mathew, Battlestar Galactica) are among a select group of people who are questioning a possible link between the tragic space mission, the mystery of the commander's madness, and a series of bizarre disappearances and strange accidents in San Francisco. The answer arrives when they stumble upon an underground colony of insect-like creatures harvesting human bodies for survival.

Liz (Daryl Hannah, Kill Bill, now an employee of the mayor's office, knows all too well the secret of the aliens. She is their Earth Queen. The city's highest representatives are her consorts. With police and government officials taken over by aliens masquerading as humans, Lloyd and Marianne realize they can trust no one, except Phillips (Campbell Scott, The Exorcism of Emily Rose), the one man who knows the ultimate goal of the aliens. He also holds the mysterious key to their defeat it's in his blood. He is the commander himself the sole mission survivor being held as prisoner. Lloyd and Marianne must find him before he becomes a victim of an unearthly experiment. As more human bodies are hijacked and as the Selenites horrifying harvest threatens to reach end-of-the-world proportions, a battle royale for ultimate survival between human and insect begins. RHI Entertainment brings to Earth an action-packed miniseries in the form of a classic alien invasion story. It's a 21st-century tale filled with eye-popping, state-of-the-art special effects, wicked wit, and fierce imagination.

I decide to watch Final Days of Planet Earth yesterday night and have just finish it early tonight because it replaced Prison Break and there was nothing better to watch. But while I was watching it, quickly I was finding many problems with it that was annoying me this especially happens while I watch a movie that is predictable and when the protagonist does something to further complicate the situation, I know in most movies that's what the plot strives on but it is the way they pulled it off.

The Final Days of Planet Earth starts off by us seeing a space shuttle on its way back to earth from the moon we see a group of astronauts talking and then one of them goes to sleep then in the next scene the one that was sleeping wakes up and it is quiet so he looks around, in he looks through a door with a window and he sees an arm fly pass, that's all we see of that, then we meet walker an archaeologist who in his backyard a ufo crash lands and all of a sudden everyone seems to be acting strangely and people seem to be going missing.

1. The story is like the new Battlestar Galactica where the robot/aliens take the form of humans and the 1950's movie invaders from mars where people get replaced with doubles.
2. I found that it was very hard to get into because it took majority of the first episode to get exciting (approximately one hour and a half).
3. In key situations it is obvious what is going to happen Eg: The Alien Bugs have capture one of the humans and say that they won't kill him if he tells them where the other humans went, he believes them and tells them where the others when and when the main alien bug leaves they say to the second in command "look after our friend" which is obvious their going to kill him.
4. The person who designed the alien bugs weren't very creative, they are just over-sized praying mantis', which I think one of the humans says there big praying mantis'.

Predictable, the special affects weren't that great, weird dialogue, dull and overall boring not worth watching unless you have spare time or nothing better to do.

FINDER,THEAKA: FINDERS KEEPERS

A boy is sent into another dimension where a barrier between his dimension and there's is breaking down. His job is to find a clock and repair it.

The Finder, also known as Finder Keepers, is an Australian children's television show that first aired on October 28, 1991, based on a book by Emily Rodda. The story revolves around a boy by the name of a Patrick who, whilst playing on his computer, receives an invitation to take part on a TV game show called "Finders Keepers". He accepts the invitation and is sucked into another world where he is given clues to find missing treasures from his own world and take part in a time travel hunt.

The show lasted for 2 series, each consisting of five episodes.

1 - 1 THE INVITATION

Patrick loves computers. One day, whilst he is playing a computer game, he is invited to play in the million-dollar game of Finders Keepers. No one will believe that the game exists, as it is on Channel 8 and there is no such station in Patrick's city. Patrick keeps hearing about the game until the time comes for him to play. He is almost foiled but eventually he crosses the time barrier via a TV set and begins the Finders Keepers game.

1 - 2 THE SEARCH

Patrick is given the task of finding a missing object that has been lost on his side of the barrier. Armed with only a clue and a beeper brooch (that beeps if he is near the object) he is sent back to his own world. He searches the zoo and the shopping centre where the brooch goes off at a gift shop. There are a few twists and turns until Patrick finally crosses the time barrier again with his "find".

1 - 3 THE BARRIER

Patrick agrees to play on in Finders Keepers. He is about to be transported back when the system breaks down, leaving him temporarily stuck on the other side. Wendy takes him to see the time barrier (the people on the other side can actually see and touch the time barrier, we cannot). Patrick sees objects pass through the barrier and also learns about the effects of TBE. When Patrick returns to the TV station the system breaks down even further. He is afraid he'll never get home.

1 - 4 THE VISITOR

Patrick is finally sent back home only to find that Eleanor Doon's clue leads him to Estelle's ring. Patrick is torn by the dilemma of either taking Estelle's ring or missing out on winning a computer. As he debates with himself over what to do he begins to learn the truth about Estelle. He finally crosses over for the third time.

1 - 5 THE RETURN

Estelle is reunited with Boopie and Patrick returns the find to Eleanor Doon, thus winning his computer. Unfortunately the system breaks down again, this time badly. Max is able to return Patrick home but without his computer. Patrick says good bye to his new friends and returns to his own side of the barrier.

A few days later he receives an intriguing "present".

2 - 1 THE CLOCK

Patrick finds an urgent message on his computer from Max he needs Patrick's help. Patrick makes his way to the TV shop to be transported across the time barrier, leaving his cousin Carol at the clock. She discovers a strange ball and when she goes to tell Patrick about it she sees him transported into the barrier. Carol runs to the spot where Patrick went and she too is transported. Things are bad on the other side, there could be disaster. Can Patrick help? Carol is left stranded on the other side of the barrier, lost in a hostile environment. Max prepares to send Patrick back to find the clockmaker and fix the clock but just as Max is about to send him home agents burst in and arrest him.

2 - 2 THE BALL

Patrick makes it through to the shopping centre only to find that time has passed and the clock has been taken away. He runs into a distraught Claire who has been looking for Carol. Patrick realises that Carol must have followed him to the other side and they rush home to contact Max, who is being interrogated by the agents. They let Max go but lock his room he can't get to his computer. Carol has her own encounter with some agents who try to take her ball away it displays magic qualities and burns one of the agent's hands. Patrick, with the help of Claire, tracks the clock down to a warehouse. We are left with Carol who is confronted by Parsons, a senior agent.

2 - 3 THE CLOCK MASTER

Carol eludes the agents yet again and makes her way to be next to the barrier. This effects the barrier and causes a serious outbreak of time stream. Patrick and Claire find a poem on the clock that helps them locate the clock maker, Anna Varga. She is sick in hospital and Patrick goes to find her. The time stream has travelled from the barrier into the TV stations where it knocks down a wall. Max works out a way to get back into his room. Patrick finds Anna Varga and tells her that the clock has been moved. She must get to the clock. NOW! Carol will not move from the barrier as night falls. Parsons decides to fire a mend gun at Carol and push her into the barrier.

2 - 4 THE REGULATOR

McCready, the senior agent, stops Parsons and Carol is saved. Max makes a device to affect Lucky so he can get back into his room. Patrick arrives at the clock with Anna Varga and she does a temporary repair on its crystal mechanism. The regulator is missing on the clock. Max contacts Patrick and learns from Anna Varga that she is linked to the clock in some way. McCready wants Max arrested again... he is sure that Max is somehow connected to this girl and her strange ball. Estelle sees Carol at the barrier and tries to

2 - 5 THE TIME KEEPER

Patrick locates Carol but he loses the transport device. They are lost in the barrier. Max is thrown into isolation but not before he tells McCready all about the time keeper clock and the missing regulator. Claire helps Anna Varga move the clock back to the shopping centre. Meanwhile, McCready, who knows there are two children stuck in the barrier, has doubts, maybe Max is right. He goes to Max's room to move Patrick and Carol out, and is confronted by Estelle. Max arrives and he, with the help of Anna Varga, moves Patrick and Carol to the shopping centre. The regulator is replaced in the time keeper and the clock returns to normal. Claire gets Patrick and Carol home minutes before mum and dad return.

FIREBALL XL5

With Fireball XL5, Gerry Anderson's Supermarionation took its giant leap into space fantasy. Set in the year 2063, the series charted the interplanetary adventures of a spacecraft and its crew: handsome blond pilot Steve Zodiac, glamorous blonde space doctor Venus, maths genius Professor Mat Matic, and a transparent "auto pilot", Robert the Robot. There was also a pet - a strange creature called the Lazoon, who had a habit of imitating sounds and a hungry passion for Martian Delight.

XL5 was part of a World Space Fleet based at Space City, an island in the Pacific Ocean, run by Commander Zero and Lieutenant 90. Its mission: to patrol sector 25 of the universe, beyond the solar system. The biggest craft of its kind, the 300-foot long XL5 had a detachable nose cone called Fireball Junior, used for landings while the mother ship stayed in orbit. Other equipment included hoverbikes called jetmobiles.

Fireball XL5's impact was tremendous. It is still the only Gerry Anderson production to have been fully networked on American television (NBC, 1963). This was the second of the Andersons' "SuperMarionation" animated-puppet sf series for children, the first being SUPERCAR and the third being STINGRAY; it was the last made in black-and-white and the first to be networked in full in the USA (on NBC).

This was the second of the Andersons' "SuperMarionation" animated-puppet sf series for children, the first being SUPERCAR and the third being STINGRAY; it was the last made in black-and-white and the first to be networked in full in the USA (on NBC). Steve Zodiac is a space pilot, part of World Space Fleet (based in the Pacific Ocean); his spacecraft XL5 patrols other star systems. This is a true SPACE OPERA, in its way a predecessor of STAR TREK. Sidekicks include Venus, a glamorous blonde space doctor, Professor Mat Matic, a Genius, and Robert the Robot. Stories involved, inter alia, space pirates, a glass-surfaced planet and Ice Men. Planetary transport was by jetmobile. Derek Meddings's special effects, mostly achieved through use of clever models, are good.

The Fireball shows contained an imaginative array of detailed space models and miniature sets, both terrestrial and alien - all given an extra atmospheric twist by the black and white photography. The special effects were again masterminded by Derek Meddings who later graduated from the Anderson studio floor to become an Oscar-winning creator of dazzling effects for such films as Moonraker and Superman.

The voice of Steve Zodiac was provided by Paul Maxwell; John Bluthal, a renowned character actor, was Commander Zero; while Sylvia Anderson played all the female characters, including Venus. Fireball XL5's impact was tremendous. It is still the only Gerry Anderson production to have been fully networked on American television (NBC, 1963), and in its modest way stands as a role model for series such as STAR TREK. It has always been fondly remembered by its contemporary audience though a revival on the ITV network in 1985-6 achieved disappointing ratings. I blame the parents . . . Prod Gerry Anderson, the associate producer was Reg Hill, the music was created by Barry Gary, the title song was sung by Don Spencer, the special effects were created by Derek Meddings.

FIREFLY

Set 500 years in the future, in the wake of a universal civil war, Firefly centres on the crew of Serenity, a small transport spaceship that doesn't have a planet to call home. Captain Malcolm "Mal" Reynolds (Fillion), a defeated soldier who opposed the unification of the planets by the totalitarian governed Alliance, will undertake any job - legal or not - to stay afloat and keep his crew fed.

Mal's crew includes his fiercely loyal second-in-command Zoe (Torres), who served beside him in the war and owes him her life; Wash (Tudyk), the ship's easygoing pilot and Zoe's husband; Kaylee (Staite), the ship's young and effervescent engineer; and Yayne (Baldwin), a tough mercenary whose loyalties lie with Mal - for now.

With prostitution now legal among the planets, the beautiful and sophisticated Inara (Baccarin) has her own shuttle docked on the ship and shares friendly, yet non-sexual relationships with the crew while serving as a paid companion to the Serenity's guests. The wealthy and secretive Simon (Maher) joined the crew as the ship's doctor in the hopes of protecting his emotionally fragile, yet intellectually gifted younger sister, River (Glaou).

Rounding out the ship's permanent denizens is Book, "The Shepherd" (Glass), a preacher who is on board to spread the word of God to the far reaches of the galaxy.

Thrust together by necessity, these disparate men and women are seeking adventure and the good life, but face constant challenges on the new frontier, such as avoiding capture by the Alliance, and evading death at the hands - and mouths - of the Reavers, human, flesh-eating mongrels who live on the fringes of the universe.

The creator of this show is more well known as the producer and writer behind BUFFY: THE VAMPIRE SLAYER. The show tries to bring a mix of science fiction and western.

As with BtVS, the world is divided into people who get Firefly and people who don't. In this series Joss Whedon created one of the most realistic post-war visions of the future ever committed to tape, that at the same time spoke about yesterday and today. Maybe a little too much today for its own good.

The series is anti-corporate, anti-government and, while it takes the stand that some things are worth fighting for, it is largely anti-war. No wonder FOX did everything in its power to kill it off, including airing episodes out of order, skipping weeks after airing only three eps and, inevitably canceling the show without even airing episodes 12, 13 and 14 (out of 15). This was particularly damaging, as Firefly had a greater sense of ongoing plot than any other Whedon series in its first year. Viewers were left wondering, on more than one occasion, when a character would reference something we hadn't seen yet.

The backstage dramatics aside, Firefly is intelligent and, like Buffy, mythic - except this time Whedon is dealing with the myth of America: the Frontier, the Civil War, the rise of the Corporation, etc . . .

Firefly is a demanding show. It asks its audience to appreciate the shades of grey in its characters' moral scale. The villains are not comfortingly dressed as an alien race. In 500 years mankind will still be its own worst enemy. Technology will be in the hands of a privileged few, and others will be in "The Black" - Whedon's frontier third world - where it is possible to exist without the interference (or benefit) of civilization and government. Things will be dirty, and used. Firefly creates a universe that almost totally opposes that of (that bastion of television sci-fi) Star Trek: its Federation-like central power (the Alliance) is interpreted as being oppressive and dystopic. We are on the side of those who resisted (like the Maqui) and lost.

The acting is strong, the writing as excellent, funny and moving as on any Whedon show, and the effects and sets create a consistent, believable world. It is a shame the series didn't have a more hospitable environment in which to grow and become all it could have been.

In 2005 Firefly returned to the screens with a made for TV movie, using many of the original cast members. Firefly has aired in the UK on The Sci-Fi Channel.

There was a time when Joss Whedon could do no wrong. Buffy The Vampire Slayer was hugely popular and critically acclaimed, its darker spinoff Angel was finding a smaller but decent adult audience... So, we assume, the networks gave Mr Whedon a freehand to do anything he liked with his new sci-fi show. In retrospect, that may have been a mistake.

A few centuries in the future; after a destructive civil war, a bureaucratic, faintly oppressive government rules the core worlds settled by humanity. But out on the frontier worlds, where hardy souls scrape a living with older forms of technology, their grip is a little looser. Mal Reynolds, war hero from the losing side, captains a Firefly-class ship, the Serenity, which ships cargo between planets, smuggles, illegally salvages from wrecks, and generally bends the rather flexible law of the frontier. But when he grants refuge to a young doctor and his sister, an escapee from a secret military programme, Reynolds suddenly finds himself and his misfit crew pursued by the full might of the government...

All right, fine. There's no reason why impoverished colony worlds wouldn't use horse-drawn ploughs and have western-style bars and cattle ranches alongside spacecraft and computers. They might even wear cowboy boots and hats. It's not impossible. But as you watch Firefly, something in your brain keeps protesting that this show is just conceptually all wrong. The space opera and the horse opera may have a lot in common, but they're both so visually distinct that combining them is near impossible. Throw in a reversion to 19th century American language, a peculiar decline in medical knowledge, and would you believe, a country and western theme tune, and any suspension of disbelief is doomed.

Unfortunately, Whedon is deeply in love with this bizarre world; so much so that he guides us slowly and tenderly around it, rather than actually letting anything happen. Look, a frontier town! Look, a bar! Look, another interminable conversation about nothing in particular! The average Firefly episode seems to be happening in slow motion, stretching paper-thin plots stolen from old westerns beyond breaking point.

Even with so much time to fill, the characters remain affable stereotypes. Nathan Fillion, as Reynolds, has the honourable, courageous man of few words down pat, but is so laidback that there's rarely any sense of danger about the situations he finds himself in. Sean Maher, as the doctor, Simon, has one of the better supporting roles, and acquits himself admirably as a naive intellectual suddenly cast adrift among the dregs of society. Summer Glau, as his fey, damaged sister, deserves a honourable mention, and Ron Glass does his dignified best as a horribly clichéd preacher-man. However, Adam Baldwin is probably having the most fun, as a self-centred survivor who thinks nothing of stealing his crewmates' possessions the moment they're presumed dead, and constantly flirts with betraying ship and captain for the reward.

There are flashes of good writing, and a great deal of good acting, scattered throughout the episodes, but the overall effect of the slow plotting and lacklustre relationships is soporific. We might have forgiven Firefly its conceptual oddities if it had delivered either action or characters, excited us or intrigued us, but Whedon seems quite happy simply to lull us into a sense of vague contentment. Power corrupts, but absolute power in the world of US TV leads to series like Firefly. Let's hope for something better next time from this undeniably talented writer.

BUFFY THE VAMPIRE SLAYER

1 - 1 THE TRAIN JOB

A battle for control of the craft threatens to erupt after Capt. Reynolds and his sidekick Zoe become entangled in a botched mission to steal cargo from another ship.

Summary: The episode opens in a dark, musky bar on Unification Day celebrating the day the Alliance took over the universe. Zoe and Mal are playing a game while Jayne watches. Of course there is a loud mouth who has to badmouth those who fought in the war against the Alliance (such as Mal and Zoe) and of course, a fight ensues. The bar brawl ends up outside with Wash bringing the Serenity over for a last minute rescue along the edge of a cliff.

Looking for work, Mal, Zoe and Jayne meet a man named Niska with his resident henchman Crow. Niska has a job for them - a train job stealing the cargo from a passenger train. As it's supposedly Alliance goods, Mal has no problem. But then he finds out the 'goods' are actually medicine needed for the city's residents who are suffering from a degenerative malady the miners suffer due to living conditions. So Mal must decide whether he wants to get paid and possibly be responsible for the death of miners and their families, or return the cargo and face the wrath of Niska.

1 - 2 BUSHWHACKED

A salvage mission goes from dreary to deadly after the crew members find their site ravaged by the cannibalistic Reavers and targeted by an Alliance ship that could do more damage than anyone imagined. The final scene of Wash describing Zoe was part ad lib.

Wr Tim Minear

Dir Tim Minear

1 - 3 OUR MRS. REYNOLDS

The discovery of a stowaway (Christina Hendricks) leads to an even more shocking find---she's actually Mal's payment for a past job. Meanwhile, the Alliance has its eye on the Serenity. Or at least someone aboard it.

Wr Joss Whedon

Dir Vondie Curtis Hall

1 - 4 JAYNESTOWN

Jayne is a local hero of a town Serenity visits. The episode is said to include a song written by Ben Edlund - The Hero of Canton, the Man they call Jayne. This episode was moved up in the schedule as it was originally to air in November.

Wr Ben Edlund

Dir Marita Grabiak

1 - 5 OUT OF GAS

Includes more back story about how the characters got together, including a flash back of Mal showing Zoe around for the first time. Includes a scene of Kaylee showing off her expertise in the engine room

Wr Tim Minear

Dir David Solomon

1 - 6 SHINDIG

There's trouble ahead for Mal after he gets into a dust-up with one of Inara's less-than-noble clients. Mal makes a social faux pas while attending a fancy ball, and ends up challenging Inara's date, Atherton Wing, to a duel. It would be pretty manly, except that Inara now has to teach Mal how to use a sword. The rest of the Serenity crew would probably enjoy laughing at his predicament, but they are being held hostage by the ruthless crimelord Badger, who has his eye on Serenity.

Wr Jane Espenson

Dir Vern Gillum

1 - 7 SAFE

A battle with cattle dealers leaves Book in dire need of Simon's aid. Too bad the doctor - and his sister - are out of reach, having been abducted by hillbillies looking for a healer. Includes a bit about Simon and River's childhood.

Wr Drew Z. Greenberg

Dir Michael Grossman

1 - 8 ARIEL

The crew helps Simon infiltrate a ritzy planet's hospital for info on the experiments going on at River's school. But as he uncovers the cause of her psychosis, a betrayal by one of the Serenity members puts the Tam siblings back in the hands of the Alliance.

Will find out more about River at the Academy. This one is said to be a big 'caper' a la Ocean's Eleven with face paced action and a no-nonsense scene with Mal & Jayne at the end.

Wr Jose Molina

Dir Alan Kroaker

1 - 9 WAR STORIES

Niska, a vengeful crime lord, sets out to derail Wash and Mal's medical-supplies scam as a payback for Mal's part in a botched train heist. But the bad guy may have met his match in another member of the Serenity crew, who refuses to see the captain go down without a fight. Nice to see more continuity from episode to episode.

1 - 11 SERENITY (PART 1 OF 2)

After a flashback to Zoe's and Mal's days in the wars six years previous, we cut to the modern day where the Serenity crew is running a salvage operation on a deserted ship and are forced to flee with the cargo when the Alliance show up. Their buddy Badger refuses to buy the cargo so they head off to the rim worlds after picking up three passengers: Book, Simon, and Dobson. En route someone sends a signal to the Alliance and it turns out to be Dobson, an undercover Federal agent, who arrests Simon but is glad to take the whole crew in. He shoots Kaylee before being captured, and Simon forces Mal to flee in return for his doctoring services. When Mal investigates Simon's cargo he finds a naked woman...

Wr Joss Whedon

Dir Joss Whedon

1 - 12 SERENITY (PART 2 OF 2)

The naked woman is Simon's sister River, a government test subject he helped to escape. After ducking a dreaded reaver ship, Mal tries and cuts a deal with Patience, an old "friend" but suspects a trap. Patience tries an ambush but the team escapes just as the Reavers return and the Federal agent breaks loose. Mal shoots the agent dead and Wash manages to duck the Reavers. at the end Mal decides to take on all three of his remaining passengers full-time.

1 - 13 HEART OF GOLD

The crew comes to the rescue of an old friend of Inarra's now running her house of Companions on a distant planet. It features a number of Companions - which Jayne takes full advantage of. It includes the first glimpse of technologies like laser pistols and a hovercraft, but has a truly western feel.

Wr Brett Matthews

1 - 14 TRASH

Saffron (from "Our Mrs. Reynolds") returns - after Mal breaks up her current gig, she convinces him and the crew to help out with a "perfect crime" that isn't. The crime: go to Bellerophon and steal a criminal's prototype laser gun from his collection. The plan: Saffron and Mal sneak in and dump the gun down the trash, bypassing security, and the Serenity crew grab it from the disposal system. Of course, this is Saffron, and things don't quite turn out as planned... Meanwhile, Simon figures out Jayne betrayed them (in "Ariel") and the two have words.

1 - 15 THE MESSAGE

An old war comrade of Mal's and Zoe's, Tracey, mails his corpse to them. He also leaves a message asking them to deliver his body to his family. Some men claiming to be with the Alliance are on the trail of the body and catch up to them demanding the body. The crew can't find anything on Tracey's corpse, but as they prepare to cut it open, Tracey comes back to life. He explains he is smuggling super-organs in his own body. They flee to the planet with the men in hot pursuit and eventually/supposedly agree to give up Tracey. Tracey gets wind of the plan and makes a break for it with Kaylee as a hostage - they shoot him down and Mal reveals they were going to send the officer off since he's out of his jurisdiction and on a personal mission with no authority. Then Tracey dies and they deliver his body for real this time.

FIRST BORN

Genetic scientist Edward Forester dreams of creating a new species, one with man's intelligence but without his homicidal aggression. The crowning achievement of his experiments is the birth of a human/gorilla hybrid, secretly using his own sperm. The baby, born with a temporary top-to-toe covering of body hair, is named Gordon and eventually grows up to be almost everything Forester could have wished for.

Almost, but not quite, for shortly before Gordon discovers his true origins he beds Forester's fanciable daughter Nell. Then, after angrily confronting 'dad', Gor demands to meet his 'mum', Mary the gorilla, who pounds her hybrid offspring to death in a frenzy of rage. The inevitable epilogue has Forester watching the christening of his daughter's baby boy, his benevolent smile turning to a look of horror as the baby's simian cry leaves us in no doubt that it is Gor's child . . .

Three-part BBC saga about the birth, life and violent death of a man/gorilla hybrid, based on the futuristic novel Gorsaga by Maureen Duffy. Coming from the producer/director team responsible for The Lives and Loves of a She-Devil, this tale of genetic science-fiction was assured of a fair hearing. And though it began promisingly enough it was ultimately savaged by the critics for eschewing credibility in favour of melodrama. The screenplay was written by Ted Whitehead, the producer was Sally Head and the music was by Hans Zimmer.

In 1986 BBC2 broadcast The Life and Loves of a She-Devil, a four-part adaptation of Fay Weldon's fantasy book that proved both highly successful and controversial. This had been adapted by Ted Whitehead, produced by Sally Head and directed by Philip Saville. Two years later the same team were reunited with an increased budget to produce a further three-part book adaptation, this time of the science-fiction novel Gorsaga by Maureen Duffy. For television purposes the title Gorsaga was considered viewer non-friendly so a new name First Born was chosen while a decision was taken to set the story in the present day rather than the future of the novel. The extra funding, which enabled the serial to be shot on film, emanated from the BBC seeking and finding co-production partners, the Antipodean networks ABC (Australia) and TV NZ (New Zealand).

Charles Dance played Forester, having won acclaim for his performance as Guy Perron in The Jewel in the Crown and he was ably supported by amongst others Julie Peasgood and Philip Madoc. The serial was also a stepping stone for the young actress Gabrielle Anwar, now a Hollywood regular and composer Hans Zimmer, who later won an Oscar for his score for The Lion King, while Head, Saville and Whitehead went on to work together again on Granada's THE CLONING OF JOANNA MAY in 1991.

The animals scenes were shot at a disused airfield on a purpose-built set, enabling the actors to work at close quarters with the apes. Charles Dance remembers, "The chimps clamoured all over their cage for fun, but the gorilla had a particular purpose - to find a means of escape." Gor himself, played at age seven by Peter Wiggins and Jamie Foster as an adult, was deliberately portrayed as not particularly ape-like in look or manner, excess body hair being the main clue to his cross-breed condition.

This allowed the serial to focus more on the moral dilemmas of the subject matter rather than rely on visual effects. Dance says of Forester, "He's a very complex character. . . He's a devout Catholic who has a career in genetic engineering, so this is a man with a problem from day one. He's constantly disturbed: I don't think he sleeps much." He was keen to take part once he heard who was on the production team: "The scripts are excellent, and Philip Saville is a director whose work I admire. Also there was the challenge of trying to make something so apparently fantastical seem realistic and believable. Although, from what I gather about what is possible in experiments into producing trans-species, it may not be fantastical after all."

Like She-Devil, First Born caused controversy when first broadcast in October/November 1988. Although this planet does not yet seem to be inhabited by hybrids, with the exception perhaps of Robin Williams, who can predict what may be around the corner?

2017: The greenhouse effect and global warming take their toll as droughts, floods, and hurricanes wreak mass destruction in a world gone mad, one family struggles to survive against all odds...

Justin Whalin is also famous for playing the character of Jimmy Olsen in Lois and Clark. This was one of the better TV mini series that has been shown on TV this decade. I was mesmerized while watching it and still remember vividly how I thought this could really happen. Given recent weather, I don't believe I was far wrong. It is awesome how many things in this movie have already come to pass. If there is any way of viewing it by any means I would really like to hear about them. I'm also trying to find out if there was a book published on this title. I wish all TV was as entertaining and as lasting as this movie was.

FIRST WAVE

Cade Foster is a successful salesman selling hi-tech company security, he had one problems however and that his nightmares and visions of seeing a disembodied head, for the last six months, these nightmares are driving his wife crazy as well. After a detective sends Cade Fosters police records to Cade's boss he is promptly fired, he also discovers that all his credit cards and money in the bank have disappeared. The lost straw comes when he finds a surveillance bug in his house, and somebody has broken in and painted the numbers 19 all over his house.

Determined to find that truth, he talks to a murder who had killed his own family, who has the same visions as he has and claims that aliens are here on Earth. After the apparent suicide of the moon Foster finds a message left for him by the murder which is the address of somewhere in the city. However his wife is scared and doesn't want him to leave, so they promptly check into a motel, he doesn't realise however that his wife's body has been taken away and had been replaced by an alien who attempts to kill him. The aliens put the body of his dead wife next to him in order to try to frame him for murder, the police soon arrive, but he manages to escape from them.

Know on the run he manages to find the address that was given to him, he discovers that 117 human beings are being tested to probe their strengths and weaknesses, and he is subject 117, in the process of being eliminated. The police however soon find him, and he ends up the hands of the aliens, he hears that the aliens invasion will begin with the first wave when 19 million human beings will die. The key to their success is understanding how human beings work, and this is done through their test subjects, of which he is one.

Foster manages to escape from the aliens, but not taking the drugs that they had given them, he now knows the truth, but will anybody believe him?

Taking its title from Nostradamus's prediction that the Earth would be destroyed by a powerful alien enemy in three deadly waves, this science fiction adventure series from Chris Brancato (a writer on the X-FILES and THE OUTER LIMITS (90s)) boasted state of the art special effects. The series was first aired in the UK on Monday 4th January 1999, this was three months before the series was premiered in the US, despite being a US show. First Wave star Sebastian Spence had also starred in an episode of THE X FILES (Home). Rob LaBelle has also guest starred in many SF shows including QUANTUM LEAP, THE X-FILES and STAR TREK: VOYAGER.

Music composed by Ferocious Fish, additional music by Claude Foisly. Co-producer for the series was Randolph Cheveldave. Executive producers for the series were Francis Ford Coppola and Larry Sugar, co-ordinating producer was David Dewar, creative consultant was Albert J. Salke, story editor for the series was Daniel Howard Cerone. Director of photography was Henry Chan, production designer for the series was Katterine Keith and visual effects supervisor was Lee Wilson. Visual effects for the series were created by Rainmaker Digital Pictures, prosthetics effects created by Northwest Effects Group Ltd.

It may seem like a blending of ideas but First Wave, offers a few 'stimulating twists'. Series creator Chris Bancato co-wrote the X-FILES' "Eve" and two impressive 90s OUTER LIMITS episodes (Resurrection and Beyond the Viel". Playing Cade is up-and-coming actor Sebastian Spence. Adopting the mantle of the series' hero was a formidable task, especially as the script cites a portentous source.

The series starts out as another one man against the system show, strongly reminiscence of shows such as NOWHERE MAN and THE INCREDIBLE HULK, such one shows are difficult to do well, lacking in good storylines, this storyline isn't the most original one to have ever been created, but the production values for the show are high, and the acting standard is good.

In "Lung Fish", after hearing of a fish that can breathe on land, Cade travels to the site and discovers that both fish and humans are part of an alien mutation experiment. In "Marker 262", Cade "Hall" ventures to Ashgrove, Missouri to investigate the disappearance of a man during a drag race on highway 714 around mile marker 262. He discovers that the area around 262 has an extremely high magnetic charge which has created an entrance to a "quantum pocket" (for lack of a better term.) which has been created by the Gua. While being pursued by the authorities, Cade accidentally strays onto highway 714 and through the 262 "gateway." After fighting Tommy, (The gua agent who was in charge of the marker.) and destroying him, Cade escapes the "quantum pocket" and eventually returns to find that the Gua have removed it.

Brancato promises that First Wave avoids some of the narrative traps of 'conspiracy' shows. "We've been forced to be pretty forward-thinking about the evolution of the series, and here's why. This is one of those series where, if Cade uncovers the alien conspiracy and The New York Times puts it on its front page, the show's over. It's a negative-premised series. We're not going to allow that. We're going to probably do an episode where it gets announced on the front page of The New York Times that this guy believes aliens are here - and you know what happens? Nobody pays any attention."

There are a dozen other shows which have a similar premise to First Wave, so it'd be difficult to claim that First Wave is particular original, but sometimes it's better to revisit something good than make something original but uninspired. Simply running through the old ideas (rock music as brain washing, straight from the TV series of WAR OF THE WORLDS; the town clogged with perennial rain from the AVENGERS' surfeit of H2O) one by one, week by week, is perhaps a little too run-of-the-mill for comfort.

Brancato the creator of the show, got his start working as a production assistant on Tales from the Darkside and went on to be Warren Beatty's assistant on Ishtar. He got his first big break in television in 1991 writing for the Aaron Spelling series Hearts are Wild. Spelling continued to be Brancato's mentor, giving him the chance to write for Beverly Hills 90210, Burke's Law and Robin's Hoods. He went on to pen scripts for other shows including THE X FILES and THE OUTER LIMITS as well as feature films Species II, Hoodlum and Weatherman.

First Wave kicks off its second season in F so-so form with Target 117, an hour that sees the Gua test Cade Foster (Sebastien Spence) by pitting him against their greatest warrior, namely Lucas, played by Sable, the real-world's sexiest former wrestler. As usual, the most successful element of First Wave is the ading of Spence and Roger Cross as Joshua. In Target 117, Spence yet again makes for a root worthy hero; we like the guy, feel for him and, most importantly, believe in his plight. As for Cross, he makes for an honorable adversary, as Joshua deals not only deals with his admiration for Foster and his concerns that the Gua may attack Earth too soon, but also Lucas' lust for him. Lucas, you see, was his student once upon a time, and she thinks her old teacher has gone off.

Target 117 benefits from decent throwaway lines: Upon being revived, Lucas slithers up to Joshua and asks, "Is it true what they say? Sex is pleasure?". Later, as Cade and Crazy Eddie (Rob LaBelle) are running away from Lucas, Cade comments, "We're following the prophecies of a man who's been dead for 500 years. Did you ever think we should get our heads examined?" Unfortunately, the episode as a whole is far from gripping. Gee, Sable is a guest star. She's not going to be a regular and no one's talking about her even becoming a recurring character. So we know her fate before the opening credits. Worse, There's not a whole lot of acting going on with Sable, just lots of posing and looking semi-tough. Ooh, boy, I'm scared.

Episode scribe Chris Brancato and director Jorge Montesi seem to realize both Sable and the episode's dramatic limitations and stage the Lucas scenes as attributes to other Sci-Fi fare. Lucas, when first viewed, is totally naked, save for a couple of belt-like devices. Species (or Species 2) anyone? Later, Lucas rises from an inferno a la Terminator 2. And, several times, the camera zooms in on Lucas's ear as she uses her illenhanced headng to pick up traces of Foster and Crazy Eddie. The Bionic Woman would be proud... or might want to sue. And, not to read too much into things, but Lucas, an invincible Sci-Fi force? Could that be a tip of the hat to you know who?

An infiltration, invasion from above and armageddon. No! Not the film! He meant all-out war and 'destruction of life as we know it. Fortunately, Nostradamus also prophesized that a 'twice-blessed man' could prevent the devastating end of the world we know and love. All very well for him to say but as far as Canadian actor Sebastian Spence is concerned, the race to turn him into a saviour in the television series First Wave, was actually a close-run thing; "I blew the initial screen test and went home determined to forget about the whole experience."

Quiet spoken, yet vivacious and modestly insisting his success in getting the role was the result of a happy accident, Spence maintains, "It was down to your guys in England that I actually got the part." The casting directors were having trouble finding the right person to portray Cade Foster, a wily fugitive on the run from everything - from the long arm of the law to the tentacles of some nasty extra-terrestrials. Eventually, the decision makers at the UK's Pearson Television wanted to have another look at the actors short-listed for the part. "I ended up getting the role by chance. I had been in Toronto filming another television series (Fast Track) when the call came to audition for the role of Cade Foster but after six weeks of silence I figured it had gone. In fact, some of my stuff was on one of the other actor's tapes and whilst the directors were fast-forwarding it they caught what I did, liked what they saw and decided to give me another shot at it." Twice-blessed indeed.

Originally written for a man of mature years, the youthful Mr. Spence is eternally grateful for the opportunity to create a character who is at once, "passionate, driven, concerned for others yet hell-bent on revenge for what has been done to him." For those unfamiliar with the story, the basic idea behind Chris Brancato's fascinating scenario is that aliens known as the Gua, have already launched the first wave. Contrary to Nostradamus's own brand of the Millennium Bug, Brancato's vision sees the aliens squeeze their socially unacceptable bodies into the skins of 'perfect'-looking human specimens in order to surreptitiously observe our behaviour and conduct various experiments designed to test our strength of will. Extensive interplanetary research has shown that 'beautiful people' are generally accepted into most circles within our society and the invaders plan to seduce us into submission with their gorgeous facades. Ah, if only it were that easy. As a foil to their cunning ploy, the naturally attractive Foster - himself a test subject - resists a plethora of physical and mental tortures to reveal himself the man most likely to repel all boarders.

First Wave's pilot episode Subject 117 introduces Foster as a professional thief turned-security-guard whose carefully-nurtured fresh start begins to crumble when he doses his job, his credit rating and, it appears, his mind. Framed for the murder of his wife, our reluctant hero is forced to go on the run with the intention of gathering enough evidence to clear his name and alert the world to the danger ahead. "I feel the character is trying to figure out what an ordinary person would do if he did have positive proof that aliens were inhabiting the Earth and trying to take over." says Spence. "I do believe in extra-terrestrial intelligence so I try to reflect how I think I would react if I discovered all this was going on. I play Foster like a regular guy who gets caught up in circumstances beyond his control and has to confront and deal with some uncomfortable issues."

It's not the first time the young actor has had to portray such emotions. A regular guest on series such as The X-Files, The Outer Limits and Sliders to name but a few, Spence's first film was the award-winning The Boys of St Vincent, a true-life Horror story about the aftermath of child abuse on the residents of an orphanage. "The whole experience was particularly harrowing for me," confesses Spence, "because the actual place where these crimes took place is in my home town and must have been going on whilst I was growing up there."

Drawing on that acting experience as an outsider within his own community, Spence. They tried to "inject as much humanity as possible into Foster's fight against what appear to be insurmountable odds." Fortunately, he doesn't have to face such a daunting task single-handed. Intrigued by an article he reads in the appropriately named Paranoid Times, Foster seeks out an eccentric recluse called Crazy Eddie, a diet coke swigging computer junkie played by Rob LaBelle. "When we first meet, Eddie is totally unconvinced by my character's claims about an invasion force, but by the time I've saved his life at the end of the episode," laughs Spence, "I think I've managed to talk him into it." Of the characters' relationship Spence says, "Apart from the technical knowledge he can provide, Foster needs a friend like Eddie to watch his back and remind him of the lighter things in life."

The actors' relationship off-screen is much the same. "We're very together. I so wanted to do a good job that the first few episodes were truly intense for me, but Rob made me laugh and gave me lots of support and now I think we're pretty tight." The third member of First Wave's celestial triangle is the mysterious Joshua (Roger R Cross). "Foster's relationship with Joshua is far less defined." explains Spence. "Joshua should be one of the staunchest supporters of the alien invasion. He is one of them, is respected by the leaders back on his own planet and dispenses justice on those who are deemed failures here on Earth, but for some as-yet unknown reason, a bond develops between us. I can't tell you if we become true friends or revert back to adversaries as the show goes on. We'll just have to see what develops."

One obvious development in First Wave's first series (which just swept onto terrestrial Channel 5) is a fair amount of inter-personal relations between the aliens and Earthlings. With tongue firmly in cheek Spence suggests that, "As the enemy think that we are a race of vain, shallow egotists who demand constant gratification, it's not surprising they use sex to get us to do what they want. Not that my character gets involved that much... he is a grieving widower after all." In mourning or not, Cade Foster does have a few passionate moments, particularly in Season One's Motel California. "Well, yes," Spence shyly admits, "Ingrid Torrance and I do have a bit of a romantic interlude in that episode, but I don't get the girl that often." Just as well really. Throughout most of Season One, any soul daft enough to fall for another's physical charms usually ends up meeting a very nasty end. "I don't think it's the writers' way of commenting on acceptable moral behaviour," he winks.

Frivolity aside, Spence's character does literally have to walk with the weight of the world on his shoulders. Beset by his own personal problems yet having to try to come up with a solution to protect the Earth from catastrophe, Foster manages to instil a sense of hopefulness into his stride. Sebastian Spence feels this is a tribute to the strength of Man's indomitable spirit. "When you look at all the terrible things human beings have faced since Time began - natural disaster, war, persecution, abuse - you begin to see that the underlying elements which, I believe, still keep us all going are hope and the belief that good will triumph." With the prospect of a second wave due to be released on Sky 1 later this year let's hope so.

1 - 20 MELODY

Foster poses as a record executive to investigate a band whose music inspires violence. - - - Quatrain 30, Century 4: "Where iron chariots are forged / The sweet youth cries revolt over a bitter melody / The poisoned song taints mind and soul / Spread by air across the land' s tears washes away ties to Rome / Fear extracts vain sacrifice until the raging pyre of the deluge is quenched". Seemed like Nostradamus' "iron chariots" might've been a reference to Detroit, Michigan – the Motor City. A mob of teen-agers had made headlines when they assaulted two officers at an underground club. With both cops listed in critical condition, parents blamed a local band called Sonic War for inciting the violence. I knew if the aliens were involved, this was about a lot more than rock-n-roll. I posed as a record company executive on the lookout for the next big thing and approached Sonic War's manager, Preston Barry. He was slick and over-protective, and said he wasn't interested in sharing a demo tape with a rep of corporate rock. According to Preston, Sonic War weren't sell-outs. Preston was a dead end, but I managed to track down Sonic War's lead singer, a girl named Kat. Kat said she always dreamed of having a band like Sonic War – playing her own songs and having a loyal following. I mentioned the violence blamed on her music, but she insisted there was no connection. Kat wanted to prove it – she invited me to the band's gig that night. After my meeting with Kat, I saw some kids wearing headphones who were harassing a shopkeeper. I caught one of the kids after the others ran and pressed him for some info. He told me that they were listening to Sonic War and it made him want to tear someone's head off. Eddie thought the aliens were making rage rock , and that everyone in the band was Gua. After talking with Kat, I didn't think so. I needed to get a tape of Sonic War's music for Eddie to analyze. Headed to the Sonic War gig that night. Kat put me on the list to get in. I saw one of the kids who was freaking out earlier that day and lifted a bootleg tape of Sonic War off him. But as the band launched into a raucous song, the teens at the concert started to go berserk. They pegged me as a cop and came after me. With half the mosh pit after me, I barely got away. Eddie checked out the demo tape. There was something in the music itself, layered underneath the songs , an extra track that seemed to affect the teens. Eddie suspected the music stimulated androgens , adolescent male hormones , that made the kids more aggressive. It would explain why I wasn't affected by the music the same way the kids were. If the Gua had found a way to target youth through music, there'd be no stopping their weapon. Was this a subliminal weapon designed to cause teens to self-destruct? And was Kat a pawn in their plans or a willing participant? Kat believed her music had power , how far was she willing to go to prove it? Half the fans of Sonic War wanted my head on a platter, I was going to have to find another way into that night's concert. The band had to be stopped before the Gua declared their experiment a success and targeted every top 40 hit coast to coast. I figured it was time for the Gua to face the music.

1 - 21 THE AFTERTIME

A woman travels back in time to change history and save Cade from assassination. - - - Quatrain 81, Century 5: "Dusk will become dawn / And the man twice-bless'd will be resurrected / The follower will beckon him to the great war ahead' s tears washes away ties to Rome / Fear extracts vain sacrifice, until the raging pyre of the deluge is quenched". I had no idea what Nostradamus was talking about till we got a message on our Web site from someone claiming to be Joshua. He asked me to meet him in an abandoned lot in Cleveland, Ohio. Can't say I trusted him, but couldn't turn the meeting down either. I had to hear what Joshua had to say. He told me someone using the handle "Rover" had intercepted a Gua transmission and recorded it on disk. If this was another alien experiment I wasn't playing. I was already walking away when Joshua showed his real hand. It was a warning - the Gua would find the tape, and Rover would be killed. Challenge or set-up, Joshua got to me. I needed to help the hacker. Had to get to Rover first - the contents of the disk could be vital to the fight. Eddie used his tech-skills to zero in on Rover's location. Posing as an agent for the FCC, I discovered the hacker. Stephen was a teen-ager operating a ham radio through his computer, all from the basement of his mother's Chinese restaurant in downtown Cleveland. He was lucky I got there first. When I pressed the kid, he got spooked and took off with the disk. I caught up with him and got the disk back, but not before the Gua picked up our trail. They chased us with guns drawn. Just when I thought I'd bought it - things got really weird. Some kind of porta opened up in the street and a woman jumped through. She was ready for combat and took out the agents with a series of incredible martial arts moves. The other Gua grabbed Stephen. I tried to follow but G.I. Jane had a different plan, she also had a gun. Her name was Lizbeth. She claimed she was from the future, come to take me back before I was assassinated. She showed me tattered newspaper clippings that reported me gunned down in the street. She said that after I was killed the Second Wave was launched and no one was left to lead the resistance and Nostradamus' prediction was realized. 19 million died on the first day. She said I was their only hope - Lizbeth knew the quatrains, and she passed a cut test. Figured it was time to introduce her to Eddie. He was as skeptical as ever. She painted a bleak picture of the future to come. Humanity would be enslaved except for a small resistance hiding in tunnels under the major cities. She confirmed my worst nightmare -- the Gua ruling the Earth in human form, ready to wipe us out for good. By saving me that day, Lizbeth hoped she'd already changed the future. She had two days to convince me to go back with her -- claimed I had no choice. I had other ideas. Seemed to me there was more at stake than just my life. There was still Stephen and the information he held. Eddie said we'd need the kid's computer equipment to triangulate the Gua transmission and decipher the encoded material. Lizbeth wanted me to stay out of the Gua's sights. But I had to do more. I owed it to Stephen and to Lizbeth's future. What kind of future would I be creating if the life of one person didn't matter anymore? With the picture that Lizbeth painted of the invasion to come, I still needed to make a difference in the present. There was no clear path, only one thing remained constant -- I had to do anything to stop the Gua ... whether it be in the here and now, or in a future where the Gua believed they'd already won. Lizbeth told me I'd cheated death that day. I was gonna make it count.

1 - 22 THE DECISION

The Gua convene a tribunal to debate whether to launch the second wave. - - - I'm on the road right now, heading west to investigate an e-mail that may be a tip to some alien activity. Eddie's driving the Caddy, I was napping in the trailer but I couldn't sleep. Thought I'd peck out a little journal entry to pass the time. Been thinking about where this war has taken me, how it's changed my life, and how it's changed all of us - Thought I was crazy. Then wished I was. Aliens. The Gua. They killed my wife, Hannah. Framed me for her murder. I've taken a personal vow to hunt them, to make them pay. Nostradamus thinks that makes me the "twice bless'd man," humanity's savior to stop the first wave of alien infiltration bent on destroying us all. I guess I believe him, but it's a lot to ask someone to bear that responsibility. I try not to think about it. All I know is that I'm the only one who can expose the Gua, and I'm going to take them down. My quest was first documented here on The Paranoid Times. I hope you're reading my journals. I hope there are those out there who truly believe. When you're cut off from society like I am, it helps to know people are listening. Gives me some hope. In this fight, I win some and I lose some. But each time I learn something new about these bastards - something I can use against them. I post it here so you can use it too, when that inevitable day comes and we all hear the call to arms. I've found believers along the way, who I hope carry on their own fight against the Gua. In Salem, Oregon, there was Diana Black - rooting out the unknown evil of the aliens with her ancient craft - I believe she continues to battle on. And then there's Alikah Aldredge, with her special eyes that see through the Gua's illusion. I like to think that Alikah will do her part to fight the aliens. There's also my old friend Susan Tannen who now knows the aliens are here. The Gua have definitely met their match with her. Read it all on The Paranoid Times, published here by my first ally and friend -- Crazy Eddie Nambulous. Eddie may have thought alien conspiracies were old news when I met him -- but now he's bent on sending the Gua packing. I'm not sure I could carry on this fight without Eddie. I'm grateful for his help. Strangest one of all in this mix - Joshua. Don't know if I'd call him an ally, but I don't know if he's the enemy either. Maybe he disagrees with what the Gua are doing on Earth. Maybe Joshua feels stuck in a similar place that I'm in. How Joshua will effect the future of this fight is a mystery I just don't have an answer for. That's all I feel like saying right now. No quatrain to decipher, no experiment to tell about in this journal entry. Just a reflection - and a warning: the aliens are here and the war's going to get a lot worse before it's over. The battles ahead will be bigger and meaner. And I got the bad feeling the second wave isn't far behind. But that doesn't mean we've lost. Not yet, not by a long shot... As long as you keep reading these journals, keeping your eyes out for the Gua, and believing, we'll bring the Gua down. We don't have any other option. In the meantime, I'll be here. I'll be fighting them. In the end, I'll stop the first wave.

2 - 1 TARGET 117

Lucas is sent to Earth to test Cade Foster's warrior potential. - - - Quatrain 99, Century 1: "Heed the call to the island of commerce / Cut be watchful of footsteps that lead unto battle / Look to the light to guide thee / The hacking blade has a double edge" This quatrain had had me and Eddie baffled for some time until Eddie began receiving a series of e-mails at the Paranoid Times from a man named Harold Shanley who claimed to have escaped from an alien experiment. The poor guy sounded out of his mind; seems he became delusional enough to shoot his own kids. His descriptions took me back to my own nightmare. As much pain as I felt at losing Hannah, I'm sure his was 100 times greater. I knew I was the only one who could help him, and I also knew that any information he had could undoubtedly help me too. I had to find him before the Gua did. According to the origins of his sporadic e-mails, Shanley was making his way across the country, the most recent was from an Industrial Trade Zone called Cosgrove Island. I decided to meet him there. Cosgrove Island looked more like the final resting place for tin can tankers and old cargo containers than the bustling port of activity that I was expecting. The place was almost totally deserted, except for Shanley, whom I found cowering inside a cargo container -- and the Gua. That's right. The aliens were there. The whole thing was a set-up. Shanley was for real, poor guy, but he was beyond any hope of salvation. They put him on the island knowing I would come after him. But more importantly, lying in wait for me was the biggest challenge I had yet to face: Lucas, the Gua's ultimate warrior. She was blond and beautiful and it took all my human strength not to give in to her female charms. While I always used to say I enjoyed a woman who went after what she wanted, especially when what she wanted was me, this wasn't what I had in mind. It seems her orders were to test my abilities before making a final recommendation to the head of the Gua on when to launch the second wave. Now I don't need to tell you how thrilled I was to be back in the role of human lab rat for Gua experimentation. I decided there was no reason to sit around and remember old times, I needed to find a way off that island fast. I was trying to think up my escape when who should show up but Eddie. What a pal. Once he figured out he had been tricked by the Gua's computer, he left the sanctuary of the Airstream to come to my rescue. How's that for a role reversal? I'm not entirely sure what he thought he would accomplish when he got here since he showed up with no weapons, no supplies, not even any food. But, all the same it shows his heart was in the right place. And that's why I'll bet on the humans every time: they got heart. But unfortunately, all the heart in the world wasn't going to save us. With no apparent way off the island we were just two sitting ducks waiting for Lucas to take her best shot. If there is one thing I have learned about the Gua, however, it's that they are overconfident. And Lucas was a prime example. In this situation, the underdog always has the advantage. Superwarrior or not, Lucas was going to need more than just her hyped up DNA to beat me and Eddie. With a little human ingenuity and a junkyard full of almost worthless crap Eddie and I needed to come up with a slingshot to take down this extraterrestrial Goliath.

2 - 2 DEEPTHROAT

Cade works to expose a U.S. Senator who is thwarting government funded space exploration. - - - Quatrain 42, Century 5: "When the sun bursts forth at night / The life of a starwatcher is lost / But the truth revealed in the heavens / Is carried to a high magistrate". Eddie's friend Vincente Miranda, an astronomer in Ohio, was shot to death shortly after witnessing a meteor burst out of a wormhole just outside our atmosphere. He instantly understood the implications of what this could mean. While he explained his findings to Eddie over the phone, he put the critical photographs and charts in a package to be over-nighted to U.S. Senator Sterling Preston. Lucky for us it wasn't clearly labeled. The Gua who rubbed him out destroyed everything having to do with the discovery, but he didn't think to go through the outgoing mail. The package was sent, delivered and signed for. Of all the places I wanted to go hunt down evidence, the nation's capital was at the bottom of my list. Only the thought of how sweet it will be to blow open this conspiracy and finally clear my name fueled me into this hotbed of the federal government. I tracked Senator Preston down in the Washington Mall; he was just finishing up a run. 5 miles in 30 minutes, pretty good for a man in his mid 50s, even I would be hard pressed to beat it. When I questioned him about the package he claimed ignorance, though I saw a slight flicker of recognition when I mentioned Vincente Miranda's name. What I didn't see, however, was the woman in the bushes snapping our picture like some rabid paparazzo. Samantha Ray, reporter for the Washington Examiner. Had I known she was there I would have been a little more careful following up with the senator. Seems she was one step ahead of me, both in terms of knowing about Preston's involvement with a major cover-up involving the Subcommittee in Space Technology, and in ability to get in to see him. While I was dealing with his snot-nosed aid out in the lobby, she was grilling him on his attempts to shut down all present and future space exploration and research. It wasn't until she questioned him on his involvement with a murderer wanted by the FBI for killing his wife was I invited to join the party. Lucky for me I had Eddie on the inside. Well, inside via the bugs I planted in his office, listening to the conversation. Without his head's up, I'd be writing this from a cozy concrete cell. I broke my vow of no more federal offenses and carjacked Samantha and her associate Vernon. I didn't know what else to do. They had more information on Preston than I did and they had already blown my cover, but more importantly, they represented a major newspaper. If I could prove to them what Eddie and I knew only too well, this could be our big break. But, they were hard-nosed, savvy Washington reporters. Eddie wanted to dump the whole story right in their laps. You know the old adage about leading a horse to water and making her drink, right? This lady was thirsty, but she had to find the well on her own. Samantha did some investigating herself, but I was hard-pressed to convince her of my innocence and Preston's guilt. It wasn't until her top secret inside source called were we able to make any progress. Why is it in Washington they'll believe a disguised voice coming over the phone from an untraceable number, but they won't believe evidence that is clear as day and spelled out right in front of them?

2 - 3 THE APOSTLES

Cade poses as a journalist to investigate a disappearance in a Wyoming town. - - - Quatrain 54, Century 7: "Iron horses blaze a vengeful trail / The first of many to follow / Their method must be chartered / Or liberty will fall". 19 million innocent humans killed on the first day of the Gua attack. That fact has rung in my ears and echoed in my heart everyday for the past year. It is a staggering concept. How far will I go to prevent it from happening? What price am I willing to pay? I faced my biggest challenge to date in Crestline, Wyoming. It was not a battle of strength, nor a battle of will. It was a battle of beliefs. But this time I fought other humans. I followed a lead about a town having trouble with some bikers. Seems this gang had been harassing citizens of Crestline by acting out vigilante justice. But for all the murders the Apostles committed, no one could produce any bodies. Imagine my surprise when they revealed themselves to be alien killers; they had read Eddie's journals and taken it upon themselves to flush out aliens and smoke them. They claimed to be Apostles, my Apostles. For the first time I saw how we could really win the war. I saw my months of unending battles pay off. I finally had an army who was willing to fight by my side. I rode proud that first day as leader of a band of men committed to saving the world. But my joy soon turned to fear. These guys were fighting aliens all right but they fought according to their rules. They stormed houses and took prisoners; they shot first and asked questions later. I watched them kill an innocent man. I was at an impasse. Here was a chance to really make a difference. 12 men were willing to go the front line and kill the aliens. But they believed that sacrificing a few innocent people was a small price to pay for the deliverance of millions. As much as I wanted to destroy every Gua on this planet, it was not worth it to me to take the lives of helpless people in the process. What started as a differing of opinion unfortunately ended with the trading of blows. I wanted to explore a quartz crystal mining camp that produced suspicious eight sided crystals. One of their Gua victims had been the owner and it seemed a better strategy to address the reason the Gua were in Crestline than to hunt them down one by one. But the Apostles had no patience for investigations, they wanted action. When they took a local shopkeeper, who had innocently been selling the crystals to tourists, hostage, I finally had to turn on this band of renegades. With the gang members threatening me and the sheriff asking too many questions I needed to make a beeline out of Crestline. It was hard decision to make. But in the end, it is not worth it to me to destroy in battle those whom I am fighting to save.

2 - 4 SUSPERIENCE

Cade investigates a psychic research project in a seaside town. - - - Quatrain 23, Century 3: "The two-sighted will meet death in sleep / Purged from the nightmare of a hidden enemy / Barricades protect spurious sleep / And the spectre is lanced with a common blade". Found myself cruising along the coast to Prescott, Maine where a renowned group of psychics were burying one of their own. Rachel Cates had died mysteriously in her sleep. I usually think of hotlines and con artists whenever psychics are mentioned. But with all I'd seen in the past two years, it seemed possible the Gua had decided this was a group they couldn't afford to ignore. I'm no psychic, but I had a strong hunch there was an alien in my future. Posing as an investigator for Cates' insurance company I went to talk to Ellen, a clairvoyant, and part of the local universities illustrious paranormal studies department. Besides Ellen, the group also included a telekinetic and a man who could cast images that weren't there -- sounded like an academic super-hero team to me. Ellen was sure Rachel had been murdered, claimed the coroner's report was false. She explained her theory of "susperience," suspect experience, another spin on the psychic game that caused the wielder to invade the dreams of another person and scare them to death - literally. Ellen thought there was one psychic in their group who had the potential to create susperience – a pretty boy named Quinn, definitely not your average angry 20-something. I caught up with Quinn at a local pool hole. He believed what Ellen said, Rachel was definitely murdered, but not by him. Seems Quinn was kicked out of the group, and not for bending spoons. Maybe the University wasn't the real reason all these psychics were in Prescott? Quinn told me the program was government-funded and that was all he was giving up - until he pointed a finger at Molly Simon, the telekinetic. Quinn had read my mind, knew I was looking for aliens in Maine. That could mean my time was running out. I went to see Molly who busted my watch with her brain and basically told me to get out of town. Sorry, Molly, not without my alien. Eddie traced the government agency that had been funding the Universities research project - SETI - the Search for Extra-Terrestrial Intelligence. The psychics had discovered the Gua, and now the Gua were going to kill them - and they seemed to be adopting psychic skills to do it. The Gua already had an edge on us with their increased strength and healing factor - the last thing we need is for them to exploit the hidden powers of our minds. Gonna need more than me and Eddie on this one - hate to say it, but it looks like I'm about to call a psychic friend.

2 - 5 THE CHANNEL

A young woman communicates directly with the spirit of Nostradamus. - - - Quatrain 4, Century 9: "She will rise from the dead / With words of fortune on her lips". The local newspapers say paramedics revived a waitress in Cranston, Rhode Island, after six minutes with no heart beat. She woke up speaking words of fortune, only those words belonged to an ancient prophet. I know Chloe Wells is reciting the lost quatrains of Nostradamus. The aliens must know it too. I have to find her - before they do. Arrived at Chloe's house to find a media circus led by glitzy news hound Arthur Hewitt, and a crowd holding vigil for their newly appointed savior. Seems that one of the first quatrains Chloe spoke struck a cord with the people of Cranston - a prediction of their mayor's death. Checked out the scene and the cameras caught me - just for a second, but when you're a wanted man every second counts. Nobody wants to be on America's Top Fugitives. Eddie and I had hidden the Nostradamus book as an insurance policy against the Gua. By spouting quatrains, Chloe made herself an instant target. Eddie thought the whole thing sounded like a trap, he'd been over every quatrain and said the ones Chloe spoke weren't in any book. Had a hunch this was something big. I had to talk to Chloe. If she wasn't coming out, then I was going in. A young cop named Barlow was watching Chloe's back, keeping the masses from storming her front door. But when Chloe and her best friend Denise got hungry, Eddie and I intercepted the delivery order and I became your friendly, neighborhood, take-out guy. I hate having to deal with cops. Barlow had me on the alert for a second. Turned out he was just giving me a hard time. I wasn't laughing. Got in the front door and met Denise who was skeptical from the start. Chloe froze when she saw me - called me the twice blessed man. Denise wanted me out. Didn't want anyone honing in on Chloe's new found fame - there was only room for one hitch up to Chloe's star. Chloe held Denise off, felt this was happening to her for a reason. Chloe wanted to know what that was. I told them about the book, about the danger Chloe was in. She was having trouble buying the story, Denise didn't help - figured I was working an angle. Told them about the aliens and Denise flipped - she told Chloe to choose between me and her. When Chloe didn't kick me out, Denise walked. A scorned girl friend wouldn't help me right now. I was running out of time. Seems Barlow and Denise had a thing going, so while I was on the inside with Chloe, Barlow was running my plates for his girlfriend. Good news -- Chloe was beginning to believe me. She asked me my name, asked how she could help me? I told her who I was. I needed her to contact Nostradamus. And then the phone rang - the Gua were outside. Eddie wanted to get me out. But Nostradamus was there, right in Chloe's house, and I needed answers. Nothing was gonna make me leave before I had them.

2 - 6 RED FLAG

Foster attempts to uncover an alien plot to infiltrate the military. - - - "The town will not ring its cracked bell / For the hero has gone astray / The crimson banner lures the one and the many / With each victory so will victory undo". Special Forces Colonel John Russell died suddenly of extreme internal temperatures - literally boiled to death. His first lieutenant, Alex Harkin, disappeared immediately after. Suspected of being a "deep cover" spy, Harkin was due to face inquiry before his hasty exit. Twice-decorated for heroism, Harkin was the winner of the Red Flag, an award given to the best of the best in the military. The crimson banner and the hero gone astray are both mentioned in the Nostradamus quatrain. I wanted to know how the Red Flag and the aliens were connected, so Eddie and I cooked up some triple-A credentials and I became Matin Sloane - super-soldier - one of five contenders for this year's competition. Off the bus, I met a military hard-ass named Major Birch, my tour guide in Camp Pain. Birch told us the Red Flag was a rare-opportunity for the best and brightest to realize their maximum potential. Gave us the competition's specs. 72 hours. Two days of intensive training with individual point scores. Competition on the third. Points and the flag determine the winner. No outside communication and no comings and goings meant no Eddie - I was on my own. And then there were the players. Birch read our stats. Jordan Vincent, demolitions and tactical strategy expert. Joel Langley, West Point, Army Delta. Amy Lopez, law degree, marine recon, no special treatment for the ladies - Birch made that clear. Trevor Payne, list of super-specs and fourth generation Red Flag - could be one to watch. And then there was me - Birch thought my credentials were too good to be true. Disliked me immediately - I felt right at home. Langley immediately emerged as the front-runner - cut throat and vicious - Birch liked him right away. At night I went investigating, lifted my cell phone and picked the lock of a door marked "no entry" - an open invitation to an ex-thief. Found some really old files dating back to 1862 - the Civil War - didn't know what to make of them. Found something worse next - an alien transfer machine. And the uniformed husk of Alex Harkin. Called Eddie in the morning. Told him the Gua were definitely here. We figured the aliens had transferred the Harkin consciousness from that husk to another Red Flag-er. Eddie was checking out Birch and his lackey, Sergeant Plimption, as well as the rest of the Red Flag wannabes. Couldn't make the connection yet. Harkin, the Red Flag, the Civil War - the aliens were there but I didn't know why. Eddie wanted me to get out but I couldn't leave yet. I needed to know who the aliens were, and how much they controlled. The aliens were infiltrating the military, but so was I. This year, the race for the Red Flag is a race against the Gua. Time for me to be all I could be.

2 - 7 PRAYER FOR THE WHITE MAN

Foster poses as a journalist to investigate proposed casinos on native reserve land. - - - "In the woods of Winchala / Amnis lights the flame of affliction / Elders set the course / To choose wrongly will mean woe". This quatrain led me to the reservation of the Winchala, a small Native American tribe with a rich history. The landscape was calming, but something was definitely wrong. There was a lot of tension about the legalization of gambling on reservation lands. But why would the Gua infiltrate the Winchala reservation? And how could gambling fit into their plan? I arrived posing as a reporter for The Gaming Chronicles. I played a few hands at the black jack table and was able to spark up a conversation with a talkative dealer who filled me in on some of the details. Only one casino has already been built, but there was a proposal in the offing which would call for the construction of ninety more to be scattered across Winchala territories. The community's board of elders was only days away from a vote on whether or not to approve the proposal. One especially respected community elder named Lonetree was determined to shoot down the proposal. According to the dealer, Lonetree doesn't trust the white man. When I visited him at his home and introduced myself as a reporter, he wasn't too happy to speak with me. Lonetree maintained that the casinos would bring only crime, addiction and spiritual dissatisfaction to his people. Like others I've heard in the past, he believes that gambling is one of the most insidious of vices. He struck me as an angry man, but I appreciated his reverence for spirituality. After our exchange, it was clear to me that gambling was the "flame of affliction" of which Nostradamus speaks. My next interview was with Alex, a slick but very shady character. A Native American with a self-proclaimed respect for tradition, he said he was all for the expansion of gambling. It brings a lot of benefits, he said. Funding for child care, educational programs, lots of new jobs. To him, Lonetree's principles had been informed by fear and superstition. Needless to say, I had Eddie do some digging. He confirmed that Alex had arrived at the Winchala community seven years earlier. As for his life before that - Eddie drew a blank. And if Eddie can't find it, then I knew Alex had to have been awfully careful to cover his tracks. Eddie also filled me in on another interesting bit of info. Seems yours truly made the cover of the latest edition of Bounty Hunters Monthly. At least I found out that, on the open market, I'm worth more alive than I would be dead. So between Alex, the Gua and the inevitable bounty hunters, I wasn't exactly surprised when I was jumped by a couple goons. Thankfully, the fight was cut short by the intervention of, well - a guardian spirit that first appeared as a wolf, then as a Native American woman. She was floating a full foot above the ground, I might add. When I ended up back at Lonetree's place, he explained the legend behind the spirit. Seems she was a Native American woman who had saved an entire village by warning them of an impending cavalry invasion. She sure saved my carcass. As Lonetree was patching up my wounds, I decided the time was right to come clean with him. I told him about how the aliens were laying the groundwork for a full-scale invasion, and about how the Winchala had apparently been chosen to play a part in initial infiltration. He wasn't buying me, until I used the word: Gua. Something told me he'd heard it before. He still wasn't ready to listen to me, but one thing we were able to agree on: Alex is a dirty character. Since Lonetree wasn't willing to join forces, I decided to call an end to the whole Winchala investigation. Eddie helped me find a route out of the reservation, but my trip was cut short by a pesky bounty hunter. That piece of bad luck turned out to be good. Who should come to my rescue but Lone Star. He finally came around, and his timing was perfect. A quick search of Alex's "museum" exposed him for the hypocrite he is. Turns out that Alex had a secret stash - a series of sacred parchments, the ancient teachings of the Winchala people - hidden beneath a totem pole in his museum, no less. Clearly, this guy has been trying to control the fate of the Winchala. And how better to cut off a community from its heritage than to steal the documents around which that community was built? It's like someone lifting our Declaration of Independence. Seemed to me that the Gua might be experimenting, using the Winchala to measure the strength of the human spirit. With Lonetree on my side, I felt certain that we would uncover the truth. Fortunately, we share the belief that our spiritual side is our most powerful weapon. That's the one thing the Gua can't possibly understand. The time had come to confront Alex - and let the chips fall where they may.

2 - 8 THE PURGE

An attempt on the life of the minister causes chaos at an assembly of alien dignitaries. - - - There is a potentially dangerous storm brewing deep within the ranks of the Gua forces. Though my concerns grow more dire each day, I, Joshua, must admit to feeling a certain degree of relief – to finally know that I am not alone in my conclusions, that others both here and at home are similarly doubting the validity of our mission here on Earth. Decades ago, during the earliest days of the infiltration, we were a unified force, certain that patience and careful planning were all that would be required to defeat the human race. I used to believe that. But now I find myself riddled with doubt. Now I know enough to question not only the tactics but the very objectives of our leadership. Yet even as I write here, the most powerful and respected of our leaders continue to maintain that Earth and its inhabitants are well within our control, utterly unprepared to defend themselves against a full-scale attack. In order to halt growing ambivalence among the Gua forces, our leaders are apparently preparing to launch the second wave invasion. The Gua minister, our second-in-command, recently arrived here on Earth, presumably to survey our findings, reassess our methods, and determine our next phase of action. Soon after his arrival, his true mission was revealed: The Minister has come in order to conduct what the humans have historically referred to as a "witch hunt." His objective is to further his own agenda by making an example of any alleged human sympathizers. To illustrate his position, he has already ordered the execution of numerous Gua agents, both warriors and researchers, stationed here at the compound. Soon after his arrival, I was placed in charge of the minister's security. Following a failed attempt on his life, I found myself placed at the centre of his hunt for suspected traitors. My guess is that he is testing my own loyalty to the cause. Like so many of my fellow Gua, the minister still sees the humans as inferior beings ruled by greed, lust, and self-aggrandizement. As our studies have shown, he's not entirely incorrect in his assessment. We've seen, again and again, that these qualities exist in humans subjects - across all social, economic and geographical boundaries - and that they greatly influence human behaviour. But I have learned that there is more here than meets the eye. Unfortunately, The Minister remains blind to the more spiritual (and therefore immeasurable) aspects of our supposed enemies. In recent months, I have come to wonder if our mission was compromised from the moment we first occupied human form. In transplanting our consciousness, we have experienced new sensations, new stimuli. How could we have expected that the human experience would have so profound an effect on our beliefs and, by extension, on our sense of duty? Has the process of combining our DNA ultimately worked against us? In our determination to defeat an alien species, have we unwittingly created a new species, neither fully human nor fully Gua? To move forward, I must believe that a peaceful resolution is possible. Unfortunately, my search for comrades within the Gua forces places me in great jeopardy. Thankfully, I have been able to join forces with Trent, an old friend and top Gua researcher who has been studying the humans for years. Our mutual disdain for the minister's actions - his random executions and, in particular, his recent approval of breeding experiments to be conducted on human children – has brought us together. Trent and I agree that moral propriety must override our sworn duty, that we must be willing to risk everything in order to stop any force we perceive as evil --- even if we have pledged our allegiance to that same force. As the lines that once divided us from the humans continue to blur, the questions I ask myself become increasingly urgent. Can we hope to positively influence the current Gua leadership? Can we stop the impending launch of the second wave invasion? And will we survive long enough to learn the outcome?

2 - 9 LOST SOULS

Foster investigates an alien experiment that caused people to be trapped alive in underground tombs. - - - "A maiden cut aloft from humanity / Locked in a coffin of stone / Her resurrection a clue for the man twice-blessed / Till the fate of her soul has been sealed". Our boy Eddie was able to link this quatrain with a wildly bizarre story he picked up in the Paranormal News Group. While building a connector deep within the New York City subway system, a group of workers discovered the extraordinarily well-preserved body of a woman. She had apparently been entombed within a concrete wall that was built over 50 years before. And, believe it or not, that's not the weirdest part. The strangest aspect to the story is that the woman was found alive. Authorities were able to identify the woman as one Francesca Dutton, an accomplished travel writer who was reported missing way back in 1945. Eddie worked his usual magic and managed to work up a false identity for me. I would undertake my investigation as "Jack Dutton" - a Philadelphia cop who also happened to be Francesca Dutton's grandson and only living relative. I drove out to the Maple Ridge Retreat, a psychiatric hospital in upstate New York where Francesca was being held and examined. I almost managed to walk right into her room, but I was stopped by a pair of special agents with the NAMP - the National Agency of Missing Persons. These two were clearly determined to get in my way, and they were damned effective watchdogs. One of the agents introduced himself as Agent Haley Burbitt, the other as Agent Simon. They told me their specialty was missing persons and that they had been placed in charge of the Francesca Dutton investigation. Burbitt was a tough-as-nails kind of cop, but he seemed like one of the good ones. He was like a well-intentioned bull dog. I could see right off that he was a decent guy underneath his hard-ass demeanour. He was sure more open-minded than his partner. Simon made up her mind about me from the second I introduced myself. She obviously didn't trust me, so she was not about to listen to a word I had to say. My first conversation with Francesca was heartbreaking. Needless to say, she was confused, disoriented, and extremely frightened. Her health was miraculously good, but her appearance was pretty ghostly. She had no pigmentation. Purse white. Her eyes had lost all normal colour. Instead, they were blood red. She had virtually no memory of how she got into that subway – not a clue that might reveal how she survived, how she was breathing, moving, and behaving in relatively normal manner after 55 years entombed in stone. It seemed crazy to me, but Simon was looking for logical explanations. She had no interest in even considering possibilities outside of the so-called scientific ones. She talked about fissures in the rock which would allow for air and for Francesca's absorption of trace elements that kept her alive. She even brought up the idea that Francesca might have been the unfortunate victim of some freak accident. But none of Simon's theories could explain away one fact: Francesca Dutton looked as if she hadn't aged a day in well over half a century. Like me, Burbitt was more, shall we say, open-minded. He wasn't ruling anything out. He was talking about crystals, strange medical conditions, even voodoo. My initial suspicion was that Francesca Dutton's dark and private hell was linked to the Gua and their experiments. Maybe they wanted to see how humans respond to prolonged isolation. Maybe they wanted to determine a way store our bodies for future use as slaves. Burbitt seemed to lend support to my ideas when he finally decided to share a piece of highly classified information. It seems that when Francesca's body was uncovered, a Gua orb was found along with it. Eddie's first thought was that Francesca was Gua. I wasn't so certain. I hoped that Eddie was just being his reliably paranoid self, because when I looked into Francesca's eyes, I saw a profound sadness that struck me as all too human. Imagine waking up from a nightmare to find that everyone you loved and everything you knew was gone forever. A second trip to the subway revealed that the stone from which Francesca was extricated was close to pure limestone. Pretty unusual for a subway. Though they came at it from different directions, Burbitt and Eddie arrived at similar conclusions based on that finding. In the Buddhist religion and in a lot of ancient cultures, it was apparently believed that encasing a body in limestone would trap its soul, hold it in a kind of perpetual limbo where there could be no reincarnation, no heaven, no hell. It started to sound as if Burbitt might have been right from the very start. Maybe it was voodoo - or something damn close to it. I still wasn't making any bets. During our next conversation, Francesca opened up to me. She told me that there were two more like her, two others who had suffered the same fate and were still buried. With her help, Eddie and I were able to locate another of the bodies. This time it was one J.J. Reed, a native of New Haven who had also been missing for 55 years. Once he was dug up, we found that Reed's circumstances were identical to those of Francesca. He was also entombed in limestone, also inexplicably alive yet unable to remember even the minutes detail of how he got there. But what was the connection between these lost souls? Working through U.S. Customs records, Burbitt and Simon were able to determine that both Francesca Dutton and J.J. Reed had been in India during the same period in 1945. Eddie had missed that little piece of information during his own digging, but hearing that someone else beat him to it got our favourite hacker back on his toes. He continued his own research and was able to connect all three of the missing persons with a guy named Frederick Lansing --- an architect who just happened to design both the subway from which Francesca Dutton was unearthed and the New Haven building in which we found J.J. Reed. We also found out that Lansing and his wife, Olivia, travelled through the Himalayas together with Francesca and J.J. Way back in 1945. Based on that bit of information, I felt sure that Lansing would know where his wife Olivia was buried. Burbitt, Simon and I headed out to visit Frederick Lansing at his home. We were all certain that Lansing held the final piece to this puzzle. But I couldn't help worrying. What if the Gua got to him before we did?

2 - 10 THE HEIST

Foster and his cronies find themselves as participants in an alien experiment. - - - "The weapon will fall upon cities / Unless thieves deliver humanity from woe / The enemy of triumph is intellect / For faculties failure requires since anew". I spent my early years in a top-notch thief crew, so this Nostradamus quatrain peaked my interest. But touching base with my past quickly collided with my present. Suddenly, I was back in the game, working as a break-and-enter man for a score going down in Silicon Valley. And the people I worked with were no strangers. Harley Daniels, more than an old friend, a statuesque blonde with brains to spare - she finds the scores and makes sure they get set up right. Ritchie Black, a wild boy who happens to be the best alarm-bypass man around - it always felt good to have Ritchie by my side on a job. And then there was Dex - the taskmaster of the unit - took "Crew Chief" as his title. Dex had a special love for giving orders - he kept us on track. Thing is, Dex didn't like me. Welcome to the club. Before I met Hannah these people were my family. On this job, out of necessity, they become my allies, with one difference between us - they were there for the money, I was there for a bigger score - aliens. Had we been hired by the Gua to steal computer weaponry that'll someday be turned against human-kind? The only way to find out was to take it from them. Security was tight. But we were the best there is at what we do - still were. Some things you never forget. Working as a team we were able to get into the first room. Things got ugly fast. I don't know what kind of security system this place was trying to run, but when Dex got skewered by an iron blade from the ceiling, I knew there was nothing normal about this job - we were in for trouble. The vault had sealed shut behind us. Wanted to cut bait, but Harley wasn't having it. Thing about the best, they don't give up easy, especially with a buyer willing to pay millions for the score. With Dex out of the picture, Harley gave herself a speedy promotion. Said we keep going - seemed to get off on bossing me around - guess she still had a score to settle. We were sealed in, not like I had much of a choice. Time to play follow the leader. Next obstacle was a simple key lock - gut told me that wasn't right. No trip wires, no motion sensors - just something even more odd in the room - an arsenal. What does a computer company in Silicon Valley need with a room full of guns? My partners didn't have a clue but Ritchie wasn't taking any chances - he went back to tried-and-true thief basics, lifting a double-barrel as some extra insurance. Door slammed shut behind us. No where to go but through the next. Ritchie wanted to know how I could have given this all up, thought I missed the rush of the ride. Told him I missed a lot of things about my old life - this wasn't one of 'em. Got into the next room and things got really spooky. Harley and I started getting into it, seems our past was creeping up on us. Harley's true feelings about me and Hannah came into play. Should have known better - never scorn a woman on the job. The room ignited in fire, we booked double-time through the next door to find the last person I ever expected to see- Crazy Eddie Nambulous. Times two. I knew it was a hallucination. Had to be. This was no ordinary building. Altered reality was my best guess. Harley and Ritchie looked exactly the same - like Eddie! We were being set-up. The floor plans were suspect, there was no military technology, no score - nothing. Ritchie seemed to be coming around, knew it wasn't right - Harley finally agreed. This gig had gone bad. Time to back track through the towering inferno and get the hell outta there. But once we were through the door again, the flames were gone - the room wasn't even hot. Harley and Ritchie looked like themselves. Now the walls were seeping blood. The guys finally knew nothing was normal here. They got me talking about why I'd come back. I told them I wasn't there for the score. Everyone thought the next guy was to blame for the job going sour. Nobody was happy. Our personal histories started playing out again. Old issues, long resolved - everything was muddled. Ritchie'd let me take the wrap and do his time in the past. Maybe I'd never forgotten that. He pulled a gun on me. Harley and I got back into it. She told me she hated me. I grabbed her neck. Tried to crush her esophagus. That wasn't right. In all the muck it started making sense. Anger, confusion, paranoia, laughter, guilt - the rooms were affecting us. Playing with our emotions. It had Gua written all over it. I'd thought the weapon is what we were hired to steal, but I had it wrong. We were in the weapon. Now I just had to get us all out alive.

2 - 11 OHIO PLAYERS

Cade Foster investigates the possibility of alien experiments on football players. - - - "Here the good river runs north / Young fortunes are reversed in mock battle / Enslavement takes myriad focus / The key to them all is control". The Ohio River runs north on the eastern border of the state. In the Iroquois language Ohio means "good river." Sounded like a good place to start looking for a Gua experiment. Eddie checked for anything unusual in the region and came up with what looked like anything but. The Fairvale Falcons - a high school football team with a winning streak that the pros would love to claim - 11 and 0. It was an amazing turn around for a team that's been in last place for nine years running. And it got me thinking. Could high school football be the mock battle Nostradamus was referring to? If so, the Fairvale Falcons have thrilled the state as they reversed their fortunes. As unlikely as it seemed, it fit. Had to check it out. Every dog may have its day, but I've learned that the alien race known as the Gua would stop at nothing to enslave humanity. I also know that in war, as in football, the best defense is a good offense. Posing as Cal U college recruiter Clyde Howell, I made my way onto the field at Fairvale High and quickly got the attention of the exceedingly proud Coach Jenkins. The coach wouldn't take any credit for the teams wild turn around in skill and wins - he was only interested in giving credit where it was due. Quarterback Quentin Billup - Falcon's superstar, the kid who'd single-handedly gotten the rest of the team up to par. Coach believed Quentin's arm was kissed by the Lord above. I just wanted to be sure it wasn't alien. Quentin was new to Fairvale; this was his first year on the squad. Coach asked me to take a look at another player - Trevor Jenkins - his son. Coach sold Trevor as the heart and soul of the offense and Quentin as the guts. No surprise, Coach Jenkins had the American football dream in mind for his boy. He also knew Quentin was the Falcons ticket to the state title. Thought Trevor might be able to answer some questions, sometimes the underdog wants to talk. Told Trev that I figured there was more to the Falcon's turn-around than just one man. The kid said he wasn't the reason for the lucky streak but neither was Quentin. Sounded like he knew more than he was saying. Trevor told me about another teammate, Lionel, a friend of his who went berserk on the field last week and then fell into a coma -- reason for the melt down - a bee sting. Thing is, Lionel had been stung before by a whole hive and he definitely wasn't allergic. There was something else on Trev's mind, but he wasn't ready to talk. Eddie was in Pennsylvania checking out a Quatrain that came up empty. He cracked the usual jokes when I filled him in on the situation in Ohio - said he had trouble believing "E.T. Was playing Q.B." Eddie didn't think amateur ball was worth the Gua's attention. Figured steroids were involved in Lionel's freak-out. I wasn't sure. Eddie agreed to meet me in Fairvale. Steroids and allergies just didn't seem right. It was time for Clyde to do a little medical fact checking. I headed for the hospital. Lionel's chart confirmed what Trevor said, the kid wasn't allergic to bees - but that wasn't my only discovery. Noticed something in the corner of Lionel's eye. A honey-brown tear, thought it might have been an iodine stain but it was more sticky. Pocketed a sample and was getting ready to exit when Quentin showed up. Q.B. Said he was checking on Lionel - seemed like a friendly kid, amped, enthusiastic - but then his tone shifted - Quentin wanted to know what I was doing in Lionel's room. He got angry. Intense. Told me his game was up eighty percent this year, that I should ignore his junior year stats. He braced the bed. That's when I saw the monitor. With Quentin in the room, the device set to read Lionel's brainwaves went wild. Near flat-lines suddenly spiked off the screen. Quentin took off and the readings went back to normal. Didn't know what to make of it. Time to get the sample to Eddie. While we were waiting for results on the sample I told Eddie my best hunch was that the Gua were running some kind of mind-control experiment - liking the brains of these kids. Eddie thought it was a possibility - we figured the aliens might be trying to get at us through our heads rather than through brute force. A football team was the perfect proving ground to see if humans could work in synch. Made a plea to Trevor to help me prove what was going on. Told him Lionel's life could depend on it. It worked. Trevor explained that he didn't need to read the game plays anymore, they were automatically in his head - something subconscious was telling him where to run, where to receive a pass - it was all perfectly synchronized. And he knew it wasn't natural. Was Quentin an alien? Time to find out.

2 - 12 NIGHT FALLS

The aliens try to trick Foster into revealing the location of a lost book of Nostradamus' quatrains. - - -
 "Three rivers amidst iron wrought / Barren ground shall be sowed once more / The hunter and hunted are one/ When shadows descend on the twice-blessed man". Followed up on an e-mail to this Web site which led me to the iron city of Pittsburgh searching for possible alien activity. I thought Nostradamus' mention of barren ground might have been the Somas medical facility, which had been closed for years - wrong move. Made a mistake this time, a big one. The cops were after me. Got caught at the facility, chased out. Down a fire escape, over a fence, they weren't messing around, took a bullet in the side. Figured the Gua had probably joined the hunt too. I was running out of time. Had to think fast. Taking a hostage was a desperate move, knew it would happen some day and dreaded it. Couldn't take any chances. No way I'd make it on foot. That's how I came to take Lena Hansen hostage in her car, not far from her apartment. Had a near miss when Cori, Lena's nosey neighbor, caught us coming up the stairs. Lena vamped - was convincing. Guess that's what fear'll do to you. It makes us want to survive. Lena was terrified. Truth, so was I. I had to cut her to make sure she wasn't Gua - she didn't heal - that made me feel worse. I was in this now - deep in, doing stuff I never believed I could. Helicopters, news coverage - the F.B.I. Had bumped me up to number nine on the "Most Wanted" list. Lena heard the report - looked at me with fear in her eyes. Fear of what the Gua have made me out to be. It made me hate them even more. Lost my cell running from the cops, had to call Eddie on a land line - he hated the risk. Told him about the set-up, that I was in the eye of the storm. Eddie was freaking, couldn't believe a quatrain had led us into a trap. Eddie said I'd have to wait 'til night fall to leave Lena's, otherwise cops would pick me up. Five hours. Wasn't sure I'd make it this time. Lena, got free of her binding, tried to make a break for it. Got her back in her chair. Promised I'd leave her alone when it was safe for me to go. That's when she started with the questions - Why'd I kill my wife? It meant I'd have to give her the speech. Tell her I didn't do it, how I was framed. And I'm sick and tired of telling people that. After the first hundred or so you feel like you're wasting your breath. My appearance in Pittsburgh was getting plenty of coverage on the major networks. Add jewelry theft and assault to my fabricated list of crimes - apparently I'd had the time to rob a store and beat up the owner on the run from the cops. Lena heard the report and started to wonder. Told her I was a scapegoat. Asked if I could prove my innocence, would she believe me anyway? Lena didn't have an answer. People always believe what they hear on the news - problem is, sometimes even the media doesn't get it right. Felt a little woozy, was losing a lot of blood. Lena suggested she wrap the wound, said her mom was a nurse. I wanted to trust her, but that's burned me before. Didn't know how to help myself with the bleeding, didn't think I could handle it. Didn't have much choice - bleeding to death in her place would've made it too easy on the aliens. And I ain't about to let them win. Nosey Cori came by to warn Lena about the serial killer loose in the neighborhood. Cori'd seen me earlier, didn't think she'd gotten a good look but I couldn't be sure. Lena got rid of the snoop. I thanked her. Seemed like an act of faith. Lena was being good to me but she wanted some answers. She was being held hostage and wanted to know why. I needed to explain it all one more time but differently. Then it hit me. Told Lena I was doing this for her, for her neighbor, for the misinformed news reporter, even for the cop who shot me. And then I asked her something. Wanted to know what she would do if the building was on fire? Would she bail, would she get the hell out of there or would she wake people up, make sure they knew what was happening? Told her that's what I do. Problem is most people think I'm the one who started the fire. Lena checked out the Paranoid Times on the Web. Said if it wasn't so crazy she could almost believe me. Then she asked me about Hannah. And the Nostradamus book. That's when the cops showed up to search the place. And nothing Lena was going to stay could stop them.

2 - 13 NORMAL., ILLINOIS

Several teens die from mysterious neurological disorders. - - - "Here the waters are contained / Nature's course is obstructed / And youth imprisoned by devil's lightning / Whose use shall tame the rival's ardor". Crazy Eddie has been recently getting more and more e-mails from visitors to the site. Readers who believe the unbelievable - that the aliens are here to take over our planet. One of our readers, Robbie Harlock, e-mailed us repeatedly about the bizarre death of Carson McAuliffe during a pool party in a small town in Illinois. The e-mail bore similarity to Quatrain 66, Century 7: "Where the waters are contained / Nature's course is obstructed / And youth imprisoned by devil's lightening / Whose use shall tame the rival's ardor." From previous experiences I knew following up e-mails is a risky business, but I also knew our network of believers is growing so the risk was worth it. That's what brought me to the small town called Normal. Met Robbie in the woods along the highway. He I.D.'d me right away from my wanted poster and then cut himself to prove he wasn't Gua. Eddie had already briefed him on our need for secrecy. Robbie had been following the journals since the beginning so he knew the score. He told me I was right on the money, there were definitely aliens here on Earth. A believer. I already felt good about coming to town. Robbie thought Carson's death was suspect even though the coroner's report said nothing out of the ordinary. Robbie told me that, though nobody talks about it, there was definitely lots of freaky stuff going on in town. Carson wasn't the first teen death, Robbie had heard his parents talk about others. Cops showed up, suddenly I didn't feel so good about standing around in the woods - Robbie and I arranged to meet up later. Robbie took the believer thing to the extreme. His girlfriend Laura told him not to go around telling people he believed in aliens - they'd think he was crazy. Harlock called that the "Cade Foster Dilemma" - you tell people how it is and they tell you you're nuts. As nice as it was to have company, I kinda felt for the kid. Didn't want to create another outsider. When I got back to the trailer Eddie verified what Robbie suspected to be true - four kids in Normal had died recently of "natural, but very unusual causes all linked to neurological malfunction." All the kids were among the best and brightest, good grades, good-looking, top athletes - just the kind of kids who used to beat up Eddie as a kid. And there was something else, the kids had procaine in their systems - an ester composed of PABA and diethyl, amino-ethyl - both are water soluble B vitamins that affect nerve functions in the pre-frontal cortex. Eddie said our bodies have plenty of B-complex vitamins but procaine isn't one of them. Procaine was toxic in huge quantities and was generally administered through water absorption. That info and the quatrain got us wondering if we should check out the town's water supply. It also got me drinking bottled water. It was time for me to pay another visit to my new pal Robbie. Seems Robbie had gotten Sandra, Carson's girlfriend, to agree to talk to me. Sandra was the last person to see Carson alive. And Robbie said we had to hurry, we were meeting at Laura's house, and Laura's dad wasn't a fan of little Robbie Harlock. Sandra was understandably upset by what had happened to Carson. She said she wanted to make love to him that day, but needed to stop. Seems whenever the kids got turned on, they got horrible headaches. Thing is, Carson didn't stop this time, and then he just went crazy - electricity coursing all over his body. Sounded to me like Carson's death was triggered by lust. Laura's Dad came back so we got out of there. Don't know why, but Robbie seemed to think Laura's father wouldn't appreciate her hanging out with one of the F.B.I.'s Most Wanted. I told Robbie I was gonna need more help from him. He had to talk to the other kids, get more info. See if they were having similar problems, especially with sex. If Robbie didn't think I was crazy for believing in aliens he sure thought I was nuts for making him look like a dork to his friends. To a teenager, looking uncool was more terrifying than any Gua plot. But I didn't have a choice - I couldn't talk to these kids, Robbie knew them. I hoped he'd come around. Robbie wanted to know why I did it? Why I fought the Gua? I told him I wanted to prove my innocence for one. He didn't get it, wanted me to explain how you can prove something most people just won't see? I didn't have an answer for him. Asked Robbie why he believed any of it? But I never expected the answer I got back. Robbie said he believed in me. And that was enough. I'm gonna take down the Gua plot in Normal. I'm just not the kinda guy who can let a believer down.

2 - 14 ALL ABOUT EDDIE

The aliens pursue Eddie at his high-school reunion. - - - I isn't Foster. But you probably know that right off the bat. That's right, Crazy Eddie here. I talked to Cade about taking over the journal this week seeing as I was the alien target du jour. You heard it here first - the Gua were gunning for the Nambu-lator. And it all started with a reunion. They say that high school is the practice run for the marathon of life, if that's the case, then what started out with a blazing burst of speed ended in the limpid lameness of loserdom. The terrible event that closed out my school years has haunted me to this day, a failure so profound I cast off my closest friends like obsolete software and never looked back. So I had some issues associated with my teen years. That's why I left the warm security of my trailer for the cold harsh reality of Heisenberg High. To reconnect with the people who were once my friends - and seek answers to the enigma that is my life. Just when I was about to lose my cool (and beat a hot retreat to that same-safe-softness of the Airstream) I was almost run down by Herman Garrett - my high school arch rival. Herman was living high on the hog as the owner of a computer securities company. A former hacker, Herman had sold out - now he was into protecting financial transactions on the Internet - guess every geek has their price. Oh yeah, Herman called me Larry, cause that's my real name - Larry Pisinski - had to drop it when I went on the run. Didn't bother me much, Eddie Nambulous is way cooler. Moving through the gymnasium, passing through crepe paper streamers, I was starting to think I'd never find a friendly face - then I ran into Stanley Spencer. We immediately did the handshake of our super-cool, hacking club (the Binary Bandits) and I knew it would be just like old times with Stan. I explained to him how I pulled the ripcord after what went down at HHS and erased all traces of Larry. Conditions of my probation said I couldn't touch a computer for the rest of my life - couldn't have that, so Larry had to disappear. Stanley said he had something to tell me about that fateful night, but before he could explain he got dragged off by a buxom blonde named Mimi. Heisenberg didn't have a football team so this babe went for guys with high I.Q. I know, I know, a nerd's dream - and Mimi still caused heads to turn. But never mine, I only had eyes for one girl. And when I finally did turn my head, there she was - Marianne - a vision in low cut evening wear. I grabbed a mug of punch and headed straight for my dream only to find her toasting the plastic cups with Herman. Made me wonder why we go back to these things? Herman was pissing me off - for some reason I really clammed up around him. I had to get him away from Marianne but I didn't know how. That's when I got an idea. I called Foster, who was hanging in the Airstream, and told him to boot up my computer. And then I hung up on him - you have no idea how long I'd been waiting to do that! Nice! Hacked into Herman's company's computer and caused a little stir. Herman dumped Marianne like a cold potato. It was time to make my move. Marianne didn't look thrilled to see me, she said I had a lotta explaining to do. She was right. I detailed that fateful day at Heisenberg, how I was hacking into a highly classified government file when suddenly a stack of Feds burst through the door and took me into custody. Marianne wasn't interested in my arrest, she just wanted to know why I never called her. She told me the only reason she came to the reunion was to see me. She said we'd been in love. I knew it was true. But getting caught by the feds changed me - it made me who I am today, a paranoid recluse. But losing touch with Marianne was the greatest regret of my life and I wanted her to know it. Marianne was still single, and ran a computer literacy program for inner city kids in Baltimore. I knew Marianne would never need anyone, she was too cool for that. But I kinda wish she had a nice guy to keep her company. Mary and I took a stroll to the old computer lab where it all went down. I thought I'd impress her by picking the lock - a little trick Foster had taught me in our time on the road. No such luck, I flopped - but Marianne got us in - guess the kinda kids she taught were more like Cade than me. We reminisced about all our old high-jinks with the Binary Bandits, we laughed - it felt good. And then we hugged - that felt really good. Until I saw an alien. I sent Marianne back to the gym and told her there was something I had to do. Mary was confused, guess I was kinda cold but I had business to take care of. Jerry-rigged a listening device and eavesdropped on a convo happening in the catering truck. I thought I'd just seen a Gua-strong arm drag a schoolmate into the back. Through the head phones I heard a voice say they were looking for me. The Gua were at my high school - messing with my life like they had with Foster's - it made me scared, and mad. Foster was worried when I left for the reunion, didn't think I should be goin' this alone. I'd told Cade before I left that it isn't about me. This time I was wrong. For the first time in a long time, it was all about Eddie. And these Gua were goin' to detention.

2 - 15 PLAYLAND

A young man kills nine people in an act of senseless violence, based on his experiences in an alien-run amusement park. - - - Fork Falls, South Dakota. Gary Lanning shot and killed nine people in a fast food joint. When the cops found him, he was stuffing his face with fries. The publically released records of a psychiatrist said Gary had delusional fantasies of time spent in an amusement park called Playland. That was before Gary stabbed the shrink in the heart with a pen. Are kids like Gary who Nostradamus was talking about when he said "youth most murderous?" Is it possible that this troubled teen's delusions were caused by a Gua experiment? I went to Playland to find out. Met Eddie in the Laser Gun House at the park. Kids were running all over the place, we found a back room. Eddie said there was an abnormal electrical ion level focused there. Gary mentioned going through a secret door in the park. The quatrain spoke of a "threshold of light." We'd seen the Gua use quantum pockets before and I was wondering if this could be another case of that. Eddie was worried about something he called "Einstein's Definition of Relative Synchronism." It says all space and time scales are based on the velocity of light. Translated to words we'll all understand, that meant if you cross through such a doorway there was no way to know what you'd find on the other side. Just the kind of odds we hated to play...and were used to. And then there was the good news. There were no guarantees the portal to return to our reality would be in the same place on the other side. I'd need an ohm-meter and an electro-magnet to power my way back through. 'Course Eddie had those in his pocket. Now I was just supposed to run at this space that looked like nothing and find myself magically transported to a whole new world. Was nervous, more so than usual. Had to trust in Nostradamus. I went through. And came out mid-air in a deserted themepark. The ohm-meter and magnet broke in my fall. I was trapped. Funny, Nostradamus hadn't mentioned that.

Caught a girl watching me from the rides. Chased her, grabbed her - she threatened to "bleed me." Quickly found myself being confronted by a band of rag-tag teens wearing torn off swatches of blue cloth. They wondered if I was "the stranger." Spoke in a broken, halting speech. Asked if I like the "Blues" or the "Reds." Told them I was friendly to the Blues - seemed like the smart thing to do. They said they could use another "brawler" and took me with them. The place was a wreck, broken down and covered in trash. Had no idea what to expect, and I was on my own. Knew the only way out was to learn as much as I could from these guys - and fast. Peter, the leader of the group, told me the rival brawlers were the "Reds" and Gary had been their king. Peter was Blue King, he said the best fighter leads the set. Gary was "taken" by the stranger Peter's girlfriend Dawn mistook me for. They called me an "ay-dult." Made me wonder how long these kids had all been here? Dawn answered. Said most of them had been there for years, they were runaways stolen off the streets. That's when a "brawl" broke out. It was terrifying, brutal, an all out war. Had to stop it. Fired my gun in the air. That got everyone's attention. The Reds retreated. Peter was impressed. And then a horrible sound tore through the air - music, driving and violent. The Blues headed for the source, I followed. There it was, a giant black monolith, 20 feet high - the music blaring from speakers at the top. A door opened and food poured out - bags and bags of stuff kids love. The Blues attacked it, ravenous. Asked Peter what the tower was -- he called it "the feeder." Woke up the next morning to find the Blues sleeping in the grass using trash as blankets. Went to the feeder. Peter found me, called me "the man with gun," wanted me around to keep the Blues well fed - seems the machine would reward the winner of the brawls and another monolith would give the losers gruel. Told Peter that I was there to find out what made Gary kill nine people. I believed the kids in Playland were being turned into walking time bombs and then set loose in the real world. Didn't want to see Peter become a murderer shot dead by a security guard. I wanted to work together and figure a way out of this place. But Peter didn't want to go back to that "other place." It was hell - parents and cops kicking his ass. In Playland he got fed. 'Course I could relate. Had a similar history - but I knew the solution wasn't hiding in an experiment, willfully succumbing to the Gua's machinations. Peter swore to never work with a Red. Didn't know what to do next. Dawn found me. She was afraid I was gonna take Peter and didn't think he could survive in my world - said he wasn't meant to live there. Told Dawn she and her friends were rats in an experiment, going after cheese, too blind to see they were in a maze. My plea fell on deaf ears where Dawn was concerned too. No one was listening. How do you save a bunch of strong-willed teens who don't wanna go home? Was gonna figure it out. The Gua were stealing the lives of kids this time. Not acceptable. We were all going back to the real world - even if I had to drag Peter into it.

2 - 16 THE HARVEST

Aliens harvest human hormones for their healing properties. - - - "On the fields of Revolution / Where England's traitor King runneth / Passion's dew is stolen / The undercroft keeps the salve of enemy wounds". The Charles River in Boston is named after Charles the First, the Traitor King of England. Bit of a stretch when you read the quatrain, except that three wealthy women had recently disappeared in Boston. Looks like I was headed to Bean Town. One of the women who had gone missing was Jennifer Moore, the sister of Renee Ashford. Ms. Ashford was offering a reward, $100,000 to the person who could find her sister and bring her home. Apparently Renee thought the cops didn't have enough incentive to launch a real man-hunt. Met Renee at her home as she was telling the press about the reward money. Posing as a representative for the missing sister's bank - I told Renee that the last time Jennifer used her credit card was to charge a room at the Whitmore Hotel. Renee already knew that - she wasn't interested. What she didn't know was that Jennifer hadn't used her own name - she'd registered as Christina Reynolds. It struck a cord with Renee. Christina was the heroine of the romance novels Renee Ashford was famous for writing. Renee didn't think the cops were interested in finding her sister because they expected Jennifer had been the target of a serial killer and were waiting for her body to turn up. Sounded pretty cynical to me. But for a novelist who'd made her fortune writing sweeping love epics, Renee was pretty hard - she told me it was a fact that nobody cares about anything in this world, the only way to stay afloat was to look out for yourself. Wasn't my way. But Renee didn't know that yet. Figured I could help her. We headed to the Whitmore. The cops had ordered the hotel to keep Jennifer's hotel bill info strictly confidential. Needed a diversion. While Renee played the distressed babe in a low-cut dress, I checked out the computer at the registration desk. Wasn't much there. Jennifer had made two phone calls and ordered a drink from room service. Renee thought that was odd, Jennifer didn't drink. But Christina did. The only thing that the real-life sister and the fictional character had in common was that they were both married to jerks. Started to wonder if there was more about Jennifer that Renee wasn't aware of. Tried the number Renee didn't recognize but it wasn't in service. Called Eddie who was in the trailer knee-deep in a Renee Ashford tome. Book was about romance, passion and sex - Eddie said he could relate. Wanted him to check and see if the disconnected number's billing address was charged for any other numbers. Seems as soon as the old number was disconnected a new number was established. Eddie gave it to me - that was my next lead. And Eddie had something else for me. The word "undercroft" referred to a vaulted chamber under a church. There were 483 churches in Boston. Maybe this wasn't getting any easier. Called the number Eddie gave me and heard the same music playing in the hotel lounge on the other end of the phone. The last person to speak to Jennifer was sitting right there in the hotel. The guy on the line said I had the wrong number. Told him I wanted to talk about the call Ms. Moore made to his phone. When we were finally face-to-face he told me I had the wrong guy and took off. Chased him through the stairwell and up onto the roof. The guy wasn't interested in answering my questions. He threw himself off the roof. Broke like Humpty Dumpty. And then, piece by piece, he put himself back together again. Bones snapped back together with a loud crack - it sent chills through my whole body - and not because it was creepy as hell. It was because he was Gua. Back in the hotel, Renee and I decided to check out Jennifer's hotel room. Found a strange vial in the bathroom. Didn't know what to make of it. And then Renee was gone. Eddie checked out the fluid in the vial. Looked like brain cells and some other type of cells he didn't recognize. The coroner had found the other missing bodies but not Jennifer's. Both victims had puncture wounds in their foreheads - like a needle had been inserted right into the pre-frontal cortex. Eddie expected the women had something injected in their brains. How would injecting something into human brains help the aliens? Didn't know. Wasn't sure I wanted to either. The guy on the roof should've died in the fall - Gua or not. Could the aliens have found a way to make themselves immortal? Eddie freaked, wanted to go pitch a tent on the beach and live out his last days in peace. But I wasn't giving up. They could not win. I wouldn't let them.

2 - 17 RUBICON

The aliens make Foster a national hero. Or do they? - - - No quatrain this week. No century. Woke up in the present with the possibility of realizing a dream. Thing is, got a feeling I've become too cynical to accept it. The Gua have messed with me too many times before to believe this will ever be easy. All started with Eddie cracking an internet code and getting us a lead on a possible Gua transfer of some kind of device - the transfer of goods happened in an open lot - a suitcase left in the passenger side seat. Checked for C4 explosive residue, found it all over the car. Also found a steel Halliburton briefcase filled with Gua orbs. Jackpot. But it was gonna come with a price. Said goodbye to Eddie and made a choice. The car exploded, the world went black. Back to my dream. Woke up in a hotel suite, hooked up to monitors, wearing different clothes. Looked like I was in a high security, high-class hospital - security clearance notices posted all over the place. Found my way into a control room - signs called it the "National Defense Agency." Monitors indicated alien surveillance happening around the world. First guy to notice me, an official-looking type named Blaylock, called me "hero." Blaylock told me I'd been unconscious for thirteen days, his young hot-shot tough guy named Mitchell said the only reason I'd survived the blast was a malfunction in the pressure trigger. The NDA was holding me in a protective facility outside of Detroit. And they had the orbs - knew what they were. Blaylock told me I'd delivered the first hard evidence of something the NDA had expected for a long time - that hostile, extra-terrestrial life does exist. Maybe it was hangin' with Eddie for so long, but something didn't feel right. Had an attack of paranoia, took down Mitchell, and threatened to pierce Blaylock's throat. The top-guy did it himself, wanted to prove he wasn't Gua. He didn't heal. Funny thing, I didn't feel any better about this. Was getting the five-star treatment - good food, great room and then a top-notch doc. Heather LeGuin was a shrink ready to pick my brain - or "help me in any way I can." No offense to her, but I wasn't a fan of being manipulated. LeGuin wanted to get me in bed for at least three weeks, apparently that's what the docs prescribe for a head trauma. Told her I wanted a second opinion. Then she brought in Harry. My uncle - the only family I had left before the Gua. But I knew the aliens killed my uncle, or thought they had after the Gua took me hostage in a police station in Chicago. Harry said he survived. Tried to prove he really was my mother's brother. It was too good to be true - and I knew that kind of hope didn't exist anymore. Blaylock wouldn't let me out - said the threat for assassination was too high. LeGuin spoke up - convinced Blaylock to let me out of the facility. He agreed, reluctantly. Mitchell and Leguin went with me. I told them to take me home. Drove to Chicago. The place had changed, been remodeled. I remembered Hannah, the good times, the evil, the blood - those goddamned 19s everywhere. It didn't help. Went back to the compound. Didn't know what else to do. Blaylock told me Eddie'd up and vanished - they suspected he was dead. I sure as hell didn't believe that. Blaylock and his team were trying to locate my partner, but now there was another problem. The NDA was discovering just how high-up the Gua infiltration of the government had gone. They showed me slides --Colonel Grace was among them. Mitchell said their first priority was to smoke out the alien, Gua infiltrators. And they needed me - the locations of my encounters, information gained through my contact with the aliens, who else was supporting me. Then it would be time for me to rest. Everything Blaylock said became a blur - it was too much. Every instinct I had said this was wrong. LeGuin was reasonable in our "sessions." Wanted to know why I wasn't dead if she and the NDA were truly Gua? That's always an easy answer - they wanted the Nostradamus book. LeGuin didn't agree, she figured the Nostradamus book wasn't an issue any more, I'd crossed the Rubicon to success. My paranoia was simply a survival technique from being on the run - a tool I wasn't ready to give up. It was all too clinical. Post traumatic stress. Denial. Sorrow and grief. A testament to human will. What LeGuin wasn't getting is that I could never get back what I lost. I didn't know what to do. Blaylock made a final plea. Told me I had single handedly given humanity a fighting chance. And then Eddie showed up. He'd busted into the facility to bust me out. The soldiers shot us - we dissolved. Eddie wasn't there at all. It was just a nightmare within a nightmare. No one could find Eddie. But I knew he was the only one I would trust -- Eddie could make me believe. LeGuin introduced me to Agent Tomalin, a redhead with her fingers on the pulse of the Net. She sent a secret code out to Eddie. Now we'd wait and see. Then Tomalin sent me a secret message of her own. Told me I was being watched and surveilled - to meet her on the roof at 2 am. I stayed calm, but inside I was freaking out. Tomalin found me on the roof, she was frantic, wanted me to get the hell out of there with her. Said the NDA were Gua. Mitchell found me too - claimed Tomalin was the alien gen-tech dupe. A fight broke out, Tomalin decked me and fled. Mitchell went after her, she got him too. Right before she was about to plunge her fingers through my throat she let out a roar - "For the Gua!" And then Mitchell dissolved her. The Gua tried to detonate a nuclear device within the Pentagon. The world had been put on alert. We were ready to go to war with the Gua. And now the government wanted a hero - Blaylock told me that hero would be me. Maybe I could survive this? Maybe I'd finally made a difference? Did the government truly know about the alien presence on Earth? Were the forces of the world about to rally to save us all? It was a dream I wanted to believe. For the first time in a long time, I had hope. Part of me was praying I was never gonna wake up

2 - 18 GLADIATOR

An alien experiment involving bare-knuckle fighters draws Cade Foster and an old prison friend to enter a boxing competition. - - - I went to Atlanta, a city built on the ashes of the Civil War, to check out the world of bare-knuckle fighting and seek an ally in my fight against the Gua. Passed a wanted poster on my way into town and the face staring back was my own. Desperate times call for desperate measures. Time to take off the gloves. Omar Healy was a prize-fighter in a world without the Vegas showgirls and limelight. 35, and with a prison record, Healy had been disqualified by the Olympic committee for drug use - turned out to be a bum rap, since the drugs were over-the-counter migraine medication. Healy and I knew each other from our days locked up together, he accused me of being a bad guy who turned good and then back again. Told him I was innocent and needed his help. Then I told him I wanted to call in an old debt. Needed Healy to help me gain entry into the Human Genome Project - a research program I suspected was a Gua front to test humanity - specifically human instinct and aggression. The study was looking for athletes and fighters. Healy would be the muscle, I could pose as his trainer. Healy was eager to fight, that's what lured him in. Tensions with Eddie didn't make him any more happy to be on board, but he stuck with us. At the institute we met Dr. Meera Rubin, she took a blood test and we established our cover. Looked like Omar and I were going to be sharing a small room again reminded us both of old days - but it wasn't a good memory. Meera claimed the institute was part of nationwide effort to map the human genome over the next five years with an eye toward preventing disease, birth defects and extend human life. Meera claimed concentrating on the aggression gene could help scientists to genetically screen out and calm a possible killer. Funny, bet the Gua would love to go the other way. Just as Healy was about to go into his first "test fight," I was introduced to another lab-brain --Dr. Bern Galloway, molecular biologist and the project's resident genius. Had a near-miss when Bern was sure he knew me. Blew it off, but I could tell my time would be running out. Bern took a lot of pleasure watching Healy fight. The scientists would alter the climate in the arena to see how outside factors like heat and cold could affect aggression. Noticed another scientist, Rae, move in and take something from the lab. Healy won his fight. Bern and Meera were smiling ear-to-ear. Used the victory moment to follow Rae. She disappeared into a high-security area, the McGruder Wing, with Omar's blood sample. Following was too risky - time for Healy and me to beat a hot retreat. Problem is, Healy wasn't willing to go - he thought this was the best training he was gonna get, and his chances for fighting a real championship tournament were getting slimmer. He wanted to find some glory. I'd brought Omar in so I was responsible for getting him out. Met up with Eddie on the outside, he'd run some checks on the Docs - Meera's credentials checked out - definitely human. Bern was the better shot for a possible Gua - no school records to speak of. Pretty odd for a resident genius boasting about his Ivy League education. Had to go back in, convince Healy to get out. Took Eddie with me, thought I'd need his expertise on the science side. We found our way into the McGruder wing - Bern and Rae were there. Bern detailed the specs of a husk they were growing - two and a half times stronger than humans, greater resistance levels to biological dysfunction and sexual deviance - a warrior-class killing machine. Bern hit some buttons and this giant incubator started humming - something organic was growing inside. They were using Healy's DNA for the project - and they were successful. Out popped a gigantic husk - oozing, stern - the X-15. The Gua's very own Frankenstein monster. Had to find someone who could help us out. Decided to try to talk to Dr. Rubin. Told her that the project had been infiltrated by a group who wanted to use her studies for their own agenda - I'd come to the project undercover. I wanted her to call the cops and have them check out the McGruder Wing - she agreed. Then she called security. Time for me and Eddie to get the hell out. Only way to get Healy to ditch was to pull a gun on him. He told me he was ready to knock me on my ass - as long as he moved I didn't care if he broke me in half. Got Eddie to a safe place just as Healy and I were ambushed by a Gua guard. Healy fought him hard and the Gua dissolved. Add Omar to my list of believers. And then Meera showed up -- can't believe I took her for human. Meera told me I was the best humanity had to offer - and I was about to face off against the best the Gua had to offer. Could I survive inside the ring against the X-15? Wasn't sure. But you know I was gonna try - in the fight against the Gua, we just can't afford to lose.

2 - 19 THE TRIAL OF JOSHUA BRIGGS

Joshua is put on trial, and must defend himself against charges that he is a human sympathizer and a traitor to the gua. - - - No quatrain this week. Eddie and I are sifting through the database, checking some out, following up leads but we haven't discovered anything solid enough to head in. But that doesn't mean I haven't been thinking about the fight. Days like this I worry about the fight. If we don't keep making strides we could lose. Hate to say it but it's true. Try to push myself, harder, further, faster everyday - want to get some kind of momentum going. Times like these, I think a lot about the enemy. I think about Joshua. He says he's not on our side - he's just looking out for the best interests of the Gua a true patriot. Don't really care, as long as it benefits us. Like the time I was on the run from the Feds in Montana and Joshua first helped me. I'd handed an alien a gun - she was posing as a forest ranger, was supposed to "protect" me from the FBI once they took me and their "agent" (aka Joshua) into custody. Thought I was about to give the government proof that the aliens existed. Almost got myself killed instead. When I asked Joshua why he killed his back up, he told me he was doing it for himself. He saved my life because he knew the invasion wasn't the best thing for his people. Figured with me out here causing problems for the Gua, the Second Wave was less likely to happen. Still pray he's right. It was the first sign that Joshua and I had a common goal - to stop the Second Wave. I was in his debt but that didn't mean I'd always trust him. Joshua is still Gua, maybe the best they have to offer, but he'll always be an alien first. If I could, I might tell Joshua that we need each other. The Gua's experiments have no honor - I believe Joshua's intentions do. Joshua wouldn't support the type of experiments the Gua were running - don't believe he even knows about all of them. But I've seen first hand how evil they can be. Like the hideous stuff the aliens were doing in that hospital in L.A. Using humans as little more than guinea pigs - chopping them up and playing mix-and-match with their parts. Attaching Gua tentacles to human bodies - giving Alikah a pair of stolen eyes. Sick stuff. That one still gives me nightmares. It's a perfect example of how the Gua can't even trust themselves. Like the experiment in Normal, Illinois where another renegade Gua came to our aide when he realized the his leaders were planning to use an experiment on human teens to control the sex drives of the aliens when the Second Wave came. The alien town sheriff, John, thought it was one thing to be testing out the control device on us, and another to be prepping a device that could be used on the Gua. A pair of believers, Robbie Harlock and his girlfriend Laura, survived the alien plot and we lost the Gua who helped us, but not before John made it clear that he had chosen to fight against the Gua mission. Before he died, John said the Gua forces were poised to destroy humanity and that it was coming soon. There are millions of Gua here on Earth to be possibly consumed by human passions - John took a stand - not to help us, but again to help his own. And that's a good thing. As long as the Gua attempt to hurt themselves there'll be "patriots" ready to protect their people as a whole. The aliens use us - for their tests, to make the invasion easier, to keep order once they're here. And Joshua isn't above it either. There was that time in Cleveland when he used me to get a disk that contained the Earth identities of 200 Gua operatives. He traded Stephen (the boy who had stumbled upon the info) for the disk - Joshua knew I wouldn't let an innocent die no matter what the prize was. Joshua was protecting his people from me, he knew I'd hunt down the names on that disk and couldn't let anything happen to his comrades who he felt were just doing their jobs. That's the way Joshua used to see it all black and white. The Gua were doing their jobs - and for them that's conquering. And even if that's what they were here to do, even if the best warriors they have to offer believed that they could beat us when they got here, I believe we're giving them reason to doubt their actions. A long time ago Joshua told me the word Gua meant power to overcome. Now, sometimes, I think he wonders if they can live up to their name. The Gua are realizing there's more to us than they first anticipated - now they know we're strong and because of that, some of them are realizing they could lose. That's why Joshua doesn't want an invasion. And that's why we're gonna win.

2 - 20 UNDERWORLD

Foster uncovers an alien experiment with ties to the mob. - - - "City of Fountains" is a nickname for Kansas City, Missouri, a town whose headlines have screamed of a gangland war that left over 30 dead. It's no mystery why the Gua would seek out organized crime. Drugs, gambling, prostitution - all things that could weaken mankind's resolve. But why did Nostradamus point to this gang war? The quatrain suggested I form an alliance with "the steed," a man I suspected to be Sammy "The Horse" Kozak, head of a Kansas City crime family for over 10 years. I'm wanted for capital murder, so mixing with mobsters might be insane - Eddie sure thought so. But checking Sammy out could lead me to the Gua, and that's an offer I can't refuse- Took the name Nick Flynn and checked out the '88s Club, Sammy's totally nude strip bar and a front for his operations. Met a brick-wall bartender named Pete, told him I was looking for Sammy. My cover - "Loma Cinquemani" had sent me up from the Miami families with a recommendation to the Horse. When I told Bud, the second brick wall, that I could see all kinds of ways to kill Sammy in the bar I got his attention. Pocketed his gun right under his nose. That got someone else's attention - enter Sofia Kozak - Sammy's wife. Looked like I was about to get my meeting. Sammy checked up on me - verified my story about doing security for Cinquemani. Eddie did his best Brando and convinced the Horse that I was the real deal. I was in - but only if I proved myself. In the bar Sofia came on strong - told me when she saw something she took it. She gave me a key to her place - told me to come over when I was finished at the club. I declined. Respectfully of course - and it wasn't easy. It was my final test. I passed. Sammy was ready to talk. Seems, until last year, four families controlled the organized crime in KC - now there were only two left - Sammy ran one, Jack Mitchum ran the other. Things got ugly when everyone's trucks started getting hijacked ten months ago - the bosses were pointing fingers - Sammy tried to stay out of it and survive. Until this week - that's when some hot club dancer ripped her pole out of the floor and tried to hurl it through Sammy's heart. The Horse thought it was the weirdest thing he'd ever seen - when they chased the dancer down, she seemed to disappear into thin air. Pay dirt. Figured it for a Gua husk with a new ability, and that was never good. Sammy couldn't figure out how the rivals, or whoever might have been responsible, could know his every move. I told him we should sweep the club for bugs - and I knew the best bug-man in the business - a guy I trusted with my life. Eddie Nambulous. And that's when stuff got typically Gua-strange. Turns out Eddie found a bug in Bud. Not the ordinary high-tech kind but the part organic, part mechanical, oozing-type only the Gua could build. Bud puked it up under duress - and then it dissolved. Sammy and I found rival gang boss Jack sitting in a car with Sofia - looking more than a little bit guilty - but Sammy had sent her in. Kozak stuck a big gun in Jack's face and demanded to know who was backing Mitchum. Jack didn't want to talk, so I gave it a try - a basic strong arm. Jack told me the outfit backing him was too strong and none of us had a chance. He called them freaks, said they had powers - and he knew their name - Gua. But that's all Mitchum said - because Sammy shot him. Turns out Sammy wasn't much of a believer. Not until we got back to the club and Pete pulled a gun on him. Bud and Pete got into a fire fight and Bud lost. Pete dissolved for Sammy and then Sammy got pissed. Nobody messes with Sammy Kozak - not even E.T. The Horse was ready for war with the Gua. He said he'd stayed alive and on top all these years because he fights back and doesn't quit. Sammy would rather be dead than roll over like Mitchum. Made me think the mob was the right kind of ally to have. I always loved the Godfather, only this time the drama was too real. What would happen if Michael Corleone were threatened by the Gua? I was about to find out.

2 - 21 TOMORROW

Foster gets a glimpse of what the world would be like during the alien occupation of earth. - - - It started in a dim alley - filthy, ridden with rats. Had no idea where I was at the time. There was a sign on a post "Help us, help you. Human Registry: Gua and Human Succeed Together." A bum with a bar code-like scar in his forearm was dead on the floor. I was disoriented, bewildered -- I wandered into a seemingly empty, blown-out building - an execution was taking place. An execution of a human by the Gua. They electrocuted him, said they found him guilty of actions against the Gua. I ran. How did I get here? Nothing was right, nothing at all. And that's when I saw my worst fears realized. A new flag flew over the capital building - not red, white and blue. Red, white and black - the Gua had taken over the Earth. My worst fear had come to life, humanity had lost to the Gua. But how? I had no memory of the invasion, nor the battle that caused us to lose control of our planet. Had to explore the nightmare. Another bum tried to sell me condoms and computer parts, he said he knew me - was so freaked I just slammed him into the wall and asked him what year it was? He said 11. The eleventh year since the day of judgment. Suddenly there were Gua cops on top of me - wearing dark black clothes and armor. They threw me down and demanded to know where my brand was - my registration brand. That explained the scar on the dead bum in the alley. Then they started treating me like a celebrity. They were happy to see Cade Foster, they let me go. Told me I needed to be branded, even if I was Foster. Then they told me to hit the registry just a few blocks away. Found the place, a big brick building in town. Pleasant announcements urged humans to help build a better tomorrow for Gua and human together by getting "registered." Gua guards scanned the forearms of humans out front. And then Joshua exited the building. Followed him, right to a lady friend's house. Was surprised to find the door unlocked but let myself in. A plaque on the door called her Claire Wilson. Occupation: Concubine, Military Section - guess some of the laws had changed in this reality. Claire's place was nice - but there were camera's on the wall that followed movement. Disabled the camera and waited for Claire. As soon as she saw me her face lit up like a kid at Christmas - called me "the most famous human in the whole world." Said I was on the mandatory Gua-Net all day long - showed me a public service announcement I knew was impossible - me, Cade Foster, telling the people of Earth to go down to a local station and get branded so our "leaders" could keep track of us and "help us." She showed me my "journals" - but I didn't remember writing any of the bull they contained. The Cade of this reality was telling people that humanity was headed for doom and destruction and that the Gua swooped down like "caring parents" who wanted to "re-organize and reeducate a dying planet." The aliens wanted to help "make Earth whole again." Somehow, they'd undone everything I ever worked for - and I was pissed. I told Claire it was all a hoax - everything the Gua said was untrue. Somehow they'd created a false Cade Foster to spread the word. Claire didn't want to believe the Gua were anything but benevolent. So I took her to the abandoned building I'd been in earlier and showed her an execution. It made her a believer. Claire arranged for a "meeting" with Joshua and did her "job" - which I hated - but she insisted it was the only way. I stole Joshua's key card in the meantime. Claire said a Gua card would give her access to the human registry files - I told her to look for Eddie. When we couldn't find anything Claire, bet Eddie was dead - I told her to search for Larry Pisinski - we got him. Eddie was alive. But here, even my partner was different. He spit on me when I found him working in his garden just outside the city. He spouted Gua loyalties - thought I was putting him through a test. I told Eddie that I was back and ready to fight - I asked him to trust his instincts - that I didn't sell out. Eddie listened and then he believed. I needed his help again. He filled me in, told me our predictions all came to pass - 16 cities were hit by 10 million Gua troops in the invasion - 19 died on the first day. But it was all covered up in one massive publicity stunt - and somehow, through this "re-education," the Gua had come out our saviors. With Eddie and Claire's help, I was determined to turn this around - to fight again. To tell the world the truth, that the Gua weren't our saviors, but rather our destroyers. We would not be slaves to these monsters - I wanted humanity to rise with me, to become a resistance and take back our planet. I was determined to get people to open their eyes and see the Gua for what they really were. My mission hadn't changed at all. In the reality of my nightmare I would fight back as hard as I had before. And if this wasn't real, then someone new was pulling the strings - but who? Either way I was going to find out. And I was gonna win.

2 - 22 THE BELIEVERS

Foster and Eddie take over a TV station at gunpoint to get the message out to the world about the alien invasion. - - - Fugitive. Murderer. Madman. That's how most of the world sees me. All my efforts to prove my innocence have come to nothing. Whatever happens today, happens because I've finally run out of options. It's been two years since they ripped my life to hell. Two years of trying to warn people of the danger that looms so close. Now I'm convinced the Second Wave is about to begin. And I'm taking drastic measures to prevent it. If we die in a hail of bullets will that bring recognition to my cause, or will we be martyrs who sacrificed ourselves in vain? Can't know for sure - but today's the day we find out. Writing this along the way, stealing seconds to make a final entry. This could all go bad. Eddie'll let you know - if he makes it out. You're my believers, I'm doing this for you, for us. So however they spin it, the press or the Gua, you know not to buy in. And you know to keep fighting. Target of this action: The Phil Tennant Show - daytime talk - one of those schlock hours that asks the viewers to help take down wanted felons. Eddie'd seen some promos that pointed to what the show expects to be its sweeps ace - a special on the FBI's Most Wanted list. A show about Cade Foster. Talk about a platform to get people listening. It was perfect. As usual, Eddie thought I was nuts. The set was virtually clear for a run-through. Eddie and I rigged the doors to blow - sealing in only the bare-bones staff and ourselves. I came in with guns blazing - had to make it look legit -- but didn't want anyone to get hurt. Phil Tennant, the network's golden-boy host was there -- gruff guy who thought he knew it all and showed it - Phil made demands I wasn't gonna listen to. He had an equally as ballsy assistant named Gwen. For Gwen to be where she was in her career now she'd had to have been smart and tenacious. She made no bones about telling me how unafraid she was of my tactics. Knew she was lying. Was putting up a good front and the remaining hostages were feeling it. Hal, a techie for the show told me about his wife and kids as I tied him up. A mid-twenties production coordinator named Tina was also caught in the mix -- she promised me she'd just started working at the show and didn't know anything yet. Felt bad about scaring them, but we planned to be out of here in 20 minutes -- and then the world would know better. Or so I hoped. Plan was for Eddie to manipulate the satellites at the station, link up to some larger ones, and beam my story out to about two-hundred million people. Wasn't gonna be easy, but this stuff never was. Left Eddie to work his magic and headed back to the hostages - Gwen was lose. Knew she was gonna be trouble. Eddie told me the power was out on the satellite feed. Gwen worked quick. Threatened the rest of the group more severely this time - told them if they didn't follow my orders I'd hunt them down and kill 'em. I almost couldn't believe I was saying it - they were innocent - I was playing the role I'd been fighting for years. Everything was changing. Eddie said we needed to get the power up and then we'd need more time to get the satellites on line - that's when we heard the cops were outside. Eddie wanted to run - said he could feel it in his bones - we were gonna die today. Couldn't tell him that wasn't true. Got the satellites back online and went looking for Gwen. Cell phone rang - it was Cain. Told him I was gonna make some believers today. He told me he was outside and I was gonna fail. Also told me he wanted the real Nostradamus book and how he was gonna snap my neck once he had it. As usual, was running out of time. Found Gwen holding a gun on me in the dark - a prop gun. Gwen knew everything about me, and all about the aliens - that was just part of her job - prepping for the show's topic. Needed her to be a believer to make this easier - then Cain called back. Let Gwen listen to the call - she heard the sunofabitch boast about how long his race had been on the planet - virtually undetected. Then he threatened Eddie and made some kind of weird reference about my partner. Checked in with Eddie immediately he said everything was cool. Gwen still didn't believe me. Said the people in the journals didn't exist. Told her I had to use fake names to protect those believers. Gwen didn't crack. Eddie said the equipment would be ready in fifteen. He was really nervous, scared – didn't seem like himself. And for someone as odd as Eddie, that's a stretch. Had to stay focused. Had to head to the main stage we were going to go on air any second. Reality. This could be my final entry All I ask is that you continue the fight. We cannot let them win. It's up to you.

3 - 1 MABUS

By now you all know how close the end could be. A massive alien force known as the Gua are quietly preparing to invade the Earth and snuff out humanity. Cade Foster and I had been trying to stop the Gua before it was too late, we were desperate, something had to be done. My name is Eddie Nambulous. These are my journals. At least, now they are. As faithful readers of this site you know this is where Cade wrote about the alien threat week after week. And you were all there at the end. Calling in your support. You were part of the worldwide audience who saw Cade shot and killed on live television. I pulled the trigger. And I don't know if I'll ever be able to explain why. Not the way I want to. But know this. Cade's death was not in vain. He's a martyr to our cause. And I've sworn to fight on. With all of your help of course. Things are a little out of whack. Kinda all over the place. And there's a new alien in town. His name is Mabus. The third Anti-Christ predicted by our buddy Nostradamus. But I'm getting ahead of myself. There's at least a partial explanation I can make of the madness. It follows in my first official entry in Cade's stead. See guys, things have just gotten as bad as they could get. The heat was most definitely on for Foster. And now it wasn't just heat of the official kind. Cade was at the local gas and sip when a pump jockey called him by name. The Gua wanted him dead, the Feds wanted to bring him in and now people were shouting his nombre when they saw him on the street. To make matters worse Phil Tennant, this millennium's edition of Geraldo Rivera, was super-seriously promoting an upcoming special on The Elusive Journey of Spree Killer Cade Foster: The Most Wanted Man. And that ain't all. A short while ago I started noticing a surge of hits here at The Paranoid Times so I did some hinky-jinky computer wizardry, ran a new decryption and badda-bing I got just a few words back. It was a message to all of us: "We are living on the brink of Armageddon. As aliens in human form mobilize to seize control of the world, the Raven Nation will fight fire with fire." Not conclusive but it got Cade and I thinking. Who was this Raven Nation and how'd they know about the Gua? We ran a scan of the quatrains to find one that might fit with all of the above. Century 4, Quatrain 12. "The Brodde Nation will swiftly rise / On the fortnight of its own prophecy / The scholar who solves the great riddle / Points the way to the bloodstained globe." Brodde means dark or dusky in French so Cade and I agreed it was a definite lead. The Raven Nation's prophecy referred to Armageddon and a fortnight had happened since they'd sent their message out. I just hadn't caught it until now. I was freaking, this one felt like the big chulupa: the Omega quatrain that would signal the end. I'd missed it. Earth's destruction was gonna be on my head. I wanted to implode. But Cade thought we still had a chance. We kept working the quatrain. Cade and I ran a search for the "scholar." Figured we needed a teacher who solved a great riddle but the solution couldn't be in theory. No, what we were looking for was a field of research that allowed for only solid, concrete and definite answers to riddles. And we found him in mathematics. Peter Mincer, a Ph.D. at Berkeley who'd solved a mathematical riddle known as "Laurent's Last Theorem." Cade went in posing as a fan of Mincer, poking around about the prof's belief in aliens and the Raven Nation. But Mincer played dumb. Seemed like a dead end. Until Cade did a little B&E on Mincer's office. The place was like some gothic priest's bad dream. All skulls and upside down crucifixes. Cade took the hard line with Peter. Told him that we were all part of an apocalyptic scenario that was playing itself out right as Cade and the geek were sitting there, gun to nose. Mincer told Cade that he's been trying to break a Bible code, and so far he'd done pretty well with his predictions. But he wasn't interested in floods or earthquakes or even bombings. Mincer wasn't messing around. He told Cade that Armageddon was just around the corner. The Anti-Christ was on the way. And he would rule. The code turned up some coordinates to find the location of our impending doom -- Forest, Michigan. That's where it would begin. And maybe end. Cade headed to the coordinates, Mincer followed. They radioed me from the road. Looked like Mabus was here and he'd arrived via a bloodstained globe. The clue hadn't represented Earth as we supposed, but rather an orb containing the evil leader's consciousness. A woman had died outside a church in Forest that morning. The Priest said she'd bled to death but there were no wounds. Foster and Mincer were on it. They found the orb. Foster said it made him woozy, sick. It scared him. And then Mincer did the double cross. His research told him that whomever freed the Anti-Christ from his prison would sit at his right hand forever and Mincer felt that was his destiny. Just another geek with delusions of grandeur. Real bad news. We'd lost the orb. And, truth be told, it felt like we'd lost the war. To make matters worse, Cain was hot on Cade's trail and the cops had been tipped to Foster's location. And then Cade almost lost it all. Right there, in a church in Michigan, where it would do none of us any good. But someone stepped in before the Acolyte waiting in the wings could assassinate my bud. She was a fire-hair angel and she shot that Gua scum square in the chest. Cade didn't have much time with her, he didn't even get her name, but she left him with an emblem to her cause: a black bird scorched in metal. And so that's how we got to this place. Some of you might call it a desperate measure but we'd run out of time. Cade would make the ultimate sacrifice to be heard. Cain was at the TV station, he was posing as F.B.I. I couldn't let Cade's cause be reduced to delusional ranting. He'd have to be assassinated by an unseen force. He'd have to be a martyr. Now he is. And as long as you're still there we have a chance. But I have a feeling we're not alone. There is another alien hunter. And I'm gonna find her.

3 - 2 RAVEN NATION

Things are about to change here on Earth. YOU are the hunted. You are Gua. You don't know me. But I am here. We're all here. You think we're not ready. You think you're smarter. Quicker. Harder. You think yourself superior. Wrong again. We are strong. Stronger than you can possibly know. And you created us. The force that will stop you. The force that will rise up to destroy, not to be destroyed. And we don't just want to send you home. We want you to die. And we want it to HURT. Afraid yet? You should be. There was another who opposed you. Another you created. You know his name. These are his journals. I don't write this for his supporters, I don't write it for those who follow his memory now. Because he will always be one of us. He will always be the man who exposed your evil plans. You called him 117. But he has a name. It's Cade Foster. And his death only strengthens our resolve. I address you here only because I know you will read this. It's what you do. Putting us under a microscope, analyzing and cataloguing our behavior. Studying the every move of humanity. Well now it's your turn. See, we've been watching back. Look over your shoulder. There we are. Can't see us? That's because we don't want you to. Not yet. But you will. And you can bet your ass you're gonna wish you'd never made this move. We all have our own stories. Our own losses at your hands. That's why we address you here. Where our fallen comrade gave voice to our own inarticulate pain. We will fight hard and fast, as he would have wanted. Even as we grieve the loss of the Twice Bless'd Man. We're Foster's army. The Raven Nation. We're a new breed of warrior. The kind who'll fight fire with fire. You started this, Gua, now we're gonna finish it. We will have no mercy. For years you've been here, ready to obliterate our homes, spreading like a virus. You've been preparing for the Second Wave. To that, the Raven Nation has only one thing to say. Bring it on.

3 - 3 COMES A HORSEMAN

Quatrain 88, Century 8. In the arsenal of an emerald city / the smallest of creation becomes great / Horses four will trumpet the end, born on the devil's breath." The Emerald City is Seattle, where a converted armory housed the labs of Vio-Zor, a company that specialized in microbiology. Mabus is the leader of the alien invasion here on earth. If he's the devil referred to in the quatrain, then somehow Vio-Zor plays a part in the Gua's plans for our destruction. Eddie uploaded a computer bug into Vio-Zor's software. I went in to fix the problem, posing as Jay Rollins, a software technician I planned to find out how Vio-Zor might be connected to the aliens. I entered through the airtight seal and met Dr. Kelly, the Program Director of Vio-Zor and her staff, Dr. Jagger and Dr. Samuels. Seems a guy they affectionately referred to as "Tim the Rat-Boy" was missing. It was my first clue that something was up. On our way to the computer lab we passed through a decontamination chamber Kelly claimed was inactive. The chamber was built by the army to handle bio weapons during the Gulf War. It used ultra-violet lamps and anti-viral mist. Got me worried, was I gonna leave this place with a bug I didn't come in with? Kelly brushed it off, said Vio-Zor didn't handle anything stronger than Level Two research - strictly benign substances. But I noticed the jets were wet - meant they'd been used recently. Things were definitely not what they seemed at Vio-Zor. Kelly left me alone with the computers so naturally I hooked Eddie up to start working his hacker magic. He said the company had links to U.S.A.M.R.I.D. (The U.S. Army Medical Research of Infective Diseases) and the Delta Wing, but he didn't have time to explain what they were. Samuels walked in on the call, started buddying up to me. Told me Dr. Kelly was a renowned Virologist, Ratboy had his rodents and Jagger was into cell-targeting — all specialists. Samuels didn't get to tell me his specialty before Kelly dragged him off. That was fine, because I was planning to do some research of my own. Broke into the animal lab and was caught by Kelly. She was jumpy, called Samuels and Jagger down to the lab right away. Didn't appreciate my wandering around unattended. And then she noticed some samples missing. There was no explanation and Kelly wasn't happy about it. Samuels tried to cool her down. And then we found Ratboy. Hidden in a supply closet, all puss and ooze. He looked like his face was being eaten off. Kelly said it looked like a massive viral infection and we had to seal off the building immediately. Samuels went nuts, he had Ratboy's blood on him. Kelly pulled the ripcord - we were sealed inside with what I believe could have been a Gua bio-weapon. And we weren't getting out for 12 hours. And there were no guarantees we'd get out at all. Kelly and I went into the decontamination chamber. Had to strip down and throw our stuff in the burn shoot. Kelly said she didn't know anything about bio-weapons or the Delta Wing. Wasn't buying, it just didn't add up. When I asked her about the lockdown she said the facility was built to survive a war and to avoid any kind of viral outbreak. It even had a Level 4 termination factor - meaning the Center for Disease Control could monitor us to assess the situation and if necessary, destroy the place to control a lethal contagion. Samuels was in really bad shape. The virus was spreading unnaturally fast and Samuels was suffering. Got Jagger alone and questioned him about the facility. He said the rats were to blame. Called Eddie. He had some info on the Delta Wing. It was a CIA front, specializing in bio weaponry and Vio-Zor was running tests for them. An infectious agent known by the code name "Revelation," was shipped from the Delta Wing's HQ in Maryland to Vio-Zor. "Horses Four" tied into Revelations. This was continuing to add up to something none of us wanted to consider. And now I was beginning to hallucinate. Get angry. So I decided to force some info out of the pretty Doc. She'd received Revelation, was doing the tests for "the good of her country," or so she thought. But I had news for her. The anger, the delusions, someone messed with Revelation. It was airborne now. And we were all infected. How was I gonna get out of this one? Didn't know. But if I didn't the Gua would win. And you know that's something I could never accept.

3 - 4 GULAG

Quatrain 83, Century 7. "The traitor sits in a hidden world, waiting for the man Twice Bless'd. Joined in desperate moments, to push the rock over the peak of time." I believed the traitor Nostradamus spoke of in this quatrain was Joshua, an alien who has helped my cause on numerous occasions. The Gua build hidden worlds known as "quantum pockets" - Eddie's learned to penetrate them. Recently, I busted into a pocket, believed Joshua was to be found there and if he was alive, I had to get him out. Everything in this particular false reality suggested the aliens had been defeated, my wildest dream come to life. But I knew it wasn't real. Out in my world the alien leader named Mabus seeks to enslave humanity. The key to his defeat could be Joshua. Found my sometimes ally in a desperate situation. Joshua believed the aliens had launched a neutrino bomb toward earth - a final desperate move to cover their humiliation at having been defeated by humanity. Joshua had the code to abort the mission and wanted to get to the deactivation site. I had to convince him to come with me instead. But how do you tell a desperate man that his mission isn't real? That it's all an engineered delusion? Knew first hand why Joshua wouldn't listen, guess I was along for the ride. Joshua had a gun on me at first sight. Told him we were in a QP and I was there to get him out. Eddie'd found an exit point and Joshua and I had to be there in exactly 24 minutes or we'd miss it. Joshua believed he had less than 19 minutes to save the earth and whatever Gua remained there from total annihilation. Joshua didn't trust humans. He took off, but human authorities quickly picked him up. Pulled a gun on the "cop"- told him Joshua and I had to be going. The cop knew I wasn't Gua, figured I was worse than alien - because in this world it looked like I was helping the Gua scum escape. There was no second chance out of there. The cop pulled a gun so I shot him. I killed a human cop even in virtual reality it felt wrong. Tried to convince Joshua that Mabus was on his way in the real world, that we needed to get out of the pocket and back to the real fight. Joshua didn't buy it, asked me how I didn't know I was the one in the delusional pocket? He reminded me that in a false world I'd believe in a fighting chance and I wouldn't give up either. Again, he had a point. Helped him hot-wire a car and made a deal. I'd help Joshua stop the bomb and then he helps me by getting the hell out of there. He agreed. High speed chase got us away from the authorities and into an abandoned barn. Joshua said it was a regional command post for the western sector before the war. He wanted to find the launch command console for a wormhole and close it before the Gua bomb made it into Earth's air space. The console was in a white room - we had forty seconds. Ran into a Gua following old orders to protect his post. Joshua and I were shot. The bomb was headed this way. It was over. Earth was destroyed. Or was it? That's when things got really confusing. Everything seemed to start over. But this time I was having vague premonitions of what was about to happen. Felt like I was living the moment but not. It was eerie, couldn't explain it, something just wasn't right. At the command center we noticed a flickering monitor outside the white room. In the image, Joshua and I were dead. A Gua entered, we tried to reason with him and this time Joshua was ready for the Gua who shot him before. But we couldn't seem to stop the launch again? And then we were back for more. This time I knew Joshua needed my help right away. Something told me I had to stop the launch or we were never getting out of there. I remembered the quatrain, "joined in desperate moments to push the rock over the peak of time." It was based on the myth of Sisyphus, we were stuck in a loop, trying to accomplish the same objective over and over - repeating time. And Joshua was feeling it too, starting to remember things. He told me he suspected the Gua put him in the pocket intentionally - some warped alien version of a gulag. He suspected it happened during his trial - when he was tortured for helping me and branded a traitor to his own kind. The Empiricists had erased his memory and doomed Joshua to live out his failure for the rest of his days. Again we weren't sure how to get out, but knew we had to stop that launch. And that's when there was a new wrinkle. Something we were sure hadn't happened before. Cain was in the quantum pocket. Wanted to take me in for dissection. Too bad I wasn't up for it. Joshua and I were getting out. And there was no way Cain was gonna stop that.

3 - 5 THE FLIGHT OF FRANCIS JEFFERIES

Quatrain 73, Century 6: "A daughter of war meets the gallows when darkness' spirit takes flight. In the land of the Eye of the Stag, savior and devil come together as one." Even though I'm flying the Airstream solo these days I promised to keep up Foster's fight. So I'm doing the usual, scanning the quatrains and looking for matches in the real world. Thought the "Eye of the Stag" sounded like Ohio, the Buckeye State. So I checked for odd stories in the place that's "round on the ends and hi in the middle." Came up with a girl named Lindsay Tilden, a cheerleader facing the death penalty for murdering her dad, Alistaire. Death penalty. Gallows. The clues were adding up. Spicing up the pot was the fact that Lindsay's late Dad worked for Rocom Industries, a high tech weapons design firm and prime target for the Gua. Could Lindsay be the "daughter of war" the Big N had mentioned? All signs pointed that way. So it was Eddie to the rescue. Solo. Or so I thought. Posing as Jack Reynolds from the North American Liberties Union I had a tête-à-tête with young Lindsay. She insisted she was innocent, couldn't remember a thing about the moment of murder except finding her dad dead. I asked her about projects Alistaire might have been working on at work. Anything unusual. Lindsay just said that her dad didn't talk about work much. And she was afraid to die. A psycho killer named Lanning was about to be executed in Lindsay's prison. The chick was terrified. I know it's a crazy world, kids popping each other, their parents, classmates every chance they get. But something about Lindsay made me believe her. I wanted to prove her innocence. Rocom was a no-go, they had firewalls and all kinds of junk to keep a hacker at bay. So I figured I had to do the next best thing - I headed over to Lindsay's place and did a little "B & E" as Foster used to say. And that's when I met the person we've all been waiting to hear about. Jordan - leader of the Raven Nation. Details notwithstanding, let's just say Jordan wasn't on Team Nambulous just yet. She does things her own way. We've made contact, and stuff went down but I can't talk about it here just yet. It's a story for another day and one I promise to tell. In the here and now however we decided to share some info, got to know some of Alistaire's fellow science buds through files in his home office. I figured checking out the people who knew Lindsay's dad was a good idea. Jordan wanted to tag along. As we were prepping to bail Casa Tilden we heard a whistling coming up the steps - it was "London Bridge." The fella who caught Jordan and I in the dark gave us a whacked stare and took off, running right into a moving car on the street. The guy grabbed at the driver and she just took off, laughing as she drove away. And that's when things got really weird. The guy had no idea where he was. Total blackout. And Jordan and I believed him. Just like Lindsay. Back at the trailer we got to thinking - could what we have witnessed been the some kind of Gua consciousness transfer? It freaked me way out. The Gua have a special process for that transfer - if they could just start jumping body to body -- through touch, well the ramifications for all of us here on earth were huge. Invasion would be that much easier. Not something we wanted to consider. Jordan and I decided to split up - start checking out the scientists from Rocom. She was gonna take some Raven Nation operatives to Susan Wilson's and we were gonna hit a guy named Francis Jeffries. Both checks turned up nothing, but we did find some info that would send us to where Susan may have been hiding. Headed to a camp ground in the Lakes area where I had a run-in with the body-jumping Gua. We had a knock down, drag out fight and he high- tailed it Š but not before Jordan tried to kill him, which I couldn't let her do. As far as we could tell, this Gua was using innocent human hosts to get around -- people with lives. Jordan figured he was a major threat, and if one human had to die to stop him so be it - I wasn't so sure. We butted heads over the issue (and if you could see Jordan, you wouldn't mind butting heads with her - that's for sure). She wasn't too pleased with me, and the Gua was still on the loose. We'd have to argue ideologies later. Jordan found Susan and the woman was terrified. She verified our worst fears. The man named Francis Jeffries was a Gua. And the device they'd been working on at Rocom, something they called "the Vessel," provided Jeffries with a way to transfer his consciousness from person to person simply with a touch. Jeffries was searching for the vessel and killing everyone in his way. We needed to stop him. I didn't want to consider the alternative. Foster would have known what to do. Jordan had an idea. This was a race against evil. And God help us if we didn't get there first.

3 - 6 STILL AT LARGE

"Quatrain 77, Century 9. Redemption is offered by a woman of scarlet, for the twice bless'd to seek out. Enter the belly of the beast and become one." There's no more reason to hide. The ruse is over. The way I see it, we didn't have a choice. Eddie received a computer tip from a user known only as "Red." She said she knew about the Gua and that she'd found the true file on Hannah's murder and that the ones read at my trial were a fake. Traced the e-mail to a PD in Chicago, I had no choice but to go undercover. A convicted killer walking into a cop station sounds crazy, especially for a "dead" convicted killer. If I was recognized it would be feeding time at the zoo. I'm writing this now, so you know that's happened. But I couldn't stay away, the prize was just too huge. There was a secretary in Operations with red hair who hadn't been seen for a few days - she was our best lead. I had a few things going for me there, since the assassination of my clone on live TV the cops weren't looking for me anymore. The heat was off. The other was Jordan, our new ally. She infiltrated along with me - posing as clerical support. With her watching my back, at least I wasn't alone in the belly of the beast. The plan was to be in and out within an hour. Posing as Officer Jeff Thompson, transferring over from the 18th Precinct, I quickly started scanning personnel files, until I was caught-in-the-act by Sergeant Cznoffsky - who didn't have a clue who I was and why I was rooting through his files. Fortunately Eddie was on top of it - sending in a quick dummy "transfer" file via some first class hacking. Eddie made Jeff sound like a nightmare so they'd put me in a nice, low-profile desk job. I just didn't expect it to be in Homicide. The Sarge boasted how the guys in Homicide had broken some of the most famous murder cases in Chicago. What he didn't know is just how familiar I was with these goons. Asked about "Red," Cznoffsky figured I was talking about the secretary named Emma, who had a thing for sex in the workplace. Emma's rep was known throughout the precinct - she'd taken most of the cops on the force down to the evidence room for tricks. The Sarge figured she got fired for leaving marks. Seems the wives didn't appreciate Emma's idea of overtime. And then I met Detective Gavin, my superior in the Homicide department. Gavin was said to be a hard nose - the kind of guy who took the fun at of being a cop. And of course he said he recognized me, he just didn't know from where yet. I knew I had to get out of there fast. Disguised or not, the heat was already building. Eddie said the records he sent over wouldn't hold up long but the quatrain said that red would offer redemption. And that could be the key to us getting some serious public recognition - to exposing the Gua. I wasn't leaving. Jordan hadn't found much in Emma's desk - everything had been erased. But she did lift a paper with a bunch of odd scratches on it - the letters MAB. Mabus, newly arrived leader of the Gua. There were aliens in the precinct. It was the only answer. And here we were worrying about cops. Ran into Gavin in the hallway with Jordan. He offered me a plastic file and then took off with it. Jordan and I knew it right off - I'd just been fingerprinted. We had even less time than I thought. We headed for the evidence room. I'd been thinking about Emma, Jordan figured her for a nympho, but I knew better. Emma wasn't kinky, she was scratching the cops as a test - trying to figure out if they would heal. Trying to see if they were alien. We slipped the Evidence Room guard a twenty and told him Jordan was a friend of Emma's - a little nudge got him to shut off the surveillance camera but we still had to make it sound real. Between moans I figured out what Emma was trying to tell Eddie in her message before she was cut off - she wasn't talking about dead people, she was talking about dead files - unsolved cases. That's where we found Hannah's file. It was like living the nightmare all over again.

3 - 7 ASYLUM

Quatrain 92, Century 8. "The mighty shall be laid low, impaled on the fine honed sword of truth. A voice of justice is stilled, as nightmares take earthly form." Judge Carlton Levy was a respected district court judge for 23 years, a true voice of justice before sudden insanity laid him low. Levy had been a regular visitor to the Paranoid Times website, claiming to have information about the aliens who've infiltrated this planet. Was the judge really mentally ill, or did his nightmares simply "take the earthly form" of the Gua? Time to go undercover to protect one of our own. Posing as Lukas Johnson, Associate Director of Human Resources down at the court I went to see Carlton's wife. Didn't even need the false I.D., she wasn't interested in talking to me until I mentioned aliens. Told her I wanted to help her husband, that I believed he spoke the truth. Eddie didn't believe that Levy had snapped, felt responsible for one of his readers who'd put his neck on the line for us. Now the Judge was in a high security mental hospital named "Shady Crest." Place was locked down, even to Carlton's wife - no one was getting near Levy for at least 30 days. Except Eddie. Jordan resisted, said this was a field operation, too risky and difficult for Eddie to handle. It pissed Eddie off. Eddie said the Judge was a believer - we didn't have a choice. To get himself noticed by the Docs at Shady Crest, Eddie tried to take over a post office "run by aliens." It worked. Inside he met the Chief shrink of the facility - Dr. Zahn and his nasty staff of orderlies. They held Eddie down and drugged him. Then it was time for group. In the common room Eddie met Mary, a blonde nympho, and Lorenzo, a smarmy little guy who thought everyone was an alien. He also found Levy staring blankly out a window as if no one were home. When Eddie pushed the Judge to talk Levy went ballistic - attacking Eddie and trying to choke him to death. That's when Eddie met Orderly Coogin, who wasn't pleased that Eddie had upset the Judge. Coogin wasn't a nice guy. Strike one. That night, Mary crawled into bed with Eddie - said she didn't think he was an alien but that she did think he was cute. Wasn't easy, but Eddie gave Mary the boot - sent her on her way. He also lifted Coogin's pass key from the blonde - headed out to do some investigating of his own. Once free, Eddie called Jordan and I, wanted to upload some files but he got cut off. Eddie claims a hand reached out of the computer screen and started choking him to death. Sounded like a hallucination - sounded like the work of the Gua. Jordan wanted to move in, felt Eddie needed back up. Eddie believed he could pull this off on his own, we had to give him the chance. Checked out some of the files Eddie uploaded. A couple of the names sounded familiar - and they were all influential. Worth checking out. Inside, Zahn was drugging Eddie again. Told him if Eddie were to get well, they really needed to create a "partnership." Eddie would have to want Zahn's help. But who was the Doc really? Eddie's bet was Gua. Back at the trailer, Jordan and I had discovered all of the influential names in the patient files Eddie had uploaded had gone crazy right before they were about to reveal some information - usually of the top-secret kind. And they all had something to do with a "Project Blacklight." I'd never heard of it, but was betting the Docs at Shady Crest had. Eddie was trying to get through to Levy again. Told the Judge he understood why he was afraid, how when they talked about the aliens, certain "visions" took over. Levy indicated that Eddie was right, but couldn't say a word - he was scared. Eddie told the Judge he had a way to get them out, Carlton should meet him in the bunk room later. Judge wasn't gonna make it. Eddie found him hanged. Another Gua victim. Coogin and Co. found Eddie with the Judge's lifeless body so Eddie beat-it outta there. Had another hallucination, this one worse than the rest. Found a room full of unmoving patients - who then taunted him incessantly. Telling Eddie he was crazy for real. It pretty much broke my buddy. I hated waiting on the side-lines. Was ready to go in. Jordan and I busted into the Judge's office - searching for anything about "Project Black Light." Had a near miss with a clerk. Jordan distracted him and I found an unmarked cell phone. Hit redial - guess who answered? Someone who knew about the Gua. Someone who wanted me to "come in" to talk about the aliens. It was a trap. No doubt. But whoever was out there was gunning for believers. And no way was I gonna let that happen. Eddie'd be on his own for a little while longer. I had an alien to catch.

3 - 8 EYES OF THE GUA

Quatrain 72, Century 5. "Hallowed eyes burn through the line to the fifth in colonies of old. Malevolence awaits a perfect division, as four makes five for apocalypse." A killer struck twice in New England recently, a place Eddie and I took for Nostradamus' "colonies of old." The police did their best to keep details confidential but reports leaked. The victims were said to have their eyes burned out of their skulls. Malevolence could be a reference to Mabus. Suspected the killer could have been Gua. Could the murders have something to do with the coming apocalypse? Cops had turned up short on leads. Couldn't stop me from starting my own investigation. Posing as Lafayette County, Field Evidence Tech "Fozen" I checked out the second crime scene, claimed the detectives on the case needed some new angles on the clues. Up on the ceiling near the pipes I found a strange symbol É could've been written in blood. Wasn't the only one working the case for our side. Eddie was at the local police station "confessing" to the murders, claiming to be "kill crazy." He told the cops the aliens were the reason for his killing. They weren't buying. Didn't matter, all Eddie really wanted was to hook up to the cops' computer to get the inside info from the Metro Police files. There was only one suspect - and he looked a lot like Joshua. Eddie figured our alien ally had lost it after I pulled him out of the alien prison - was on a spree-killing. I knew Joshua better than that, if he was anywhere near the killings it meant they had something to do with the invasion. There were two victims - cops hadn't found any connection, didn't mean there wasn't one. Broke into the coroners office, figured the report might have some more info. Wanted to inspect the body. Those rumors weren't rumors at all - the victims eyes were charred away. And the killer had struck again. New crime scene had footprints burned into the ground, saw the same thing at the first location. Victim's eyes were gone and the cops logged another symbol. But I wasn't the only one checking this out. Joshua was there too. Questioned him. He wanted me to stay out of it, didn't think he owed me a thing. Once I pulled a gun he gave up what I already expected -- the killer was Gua, but not like anything I'd ever seen. Joshua wasn't intimidated by the weapon, he turned the level up, got in my face. Warned me that guns wouldn't help me against this enemy. Joshua seemed different, more angry, more intense. He walked away. Checked out one of the victim's homes - Chandler Evans, met his sweet widow. Mrs. Evans said Chandler had complained of a headache the night he died - that he seemed scared. And she never saw him again. Noticed something odd in the house. Chandler had been painting pictures, the same thing over and over - a road in the woods, with a marker for "Mile 9." Mrs. Evans never understood what it meant. All three of the victims had an odd birthmark on their neck - we knew it couldn't be a coincidence. Eddie'd checked back for generations, but there was no connection between the victims. Told him to go further. We both knew there was nothing random about these killings. Not if the Gua were involved. And then it all made sense. Eddie was running a computer program to trace geneologies in both the USA and Europe - he found the connection. Michele de Nostredame. The Gua were knocking off our prophet's living descendents. "Four makes five for the apocalypse." That meant that there were two left in the Nostradamus blood line. This was huge. If these people inherited any of Nostradamus' ability the Gua could be facing a modern-day psychic. And he or she would make an ally that could turn the tide. Found the location from Chandler Evans' drawing -- not a pretty scene. The killer had tied the fourth victim to a tree, the killer was on fire. Shot him in the chest, but didn't even make a dent. He got out of there fast. Joshua was there too, and this time he was ready to talk. Told me the fire that this Gua creates is focused and intense. The killer wears an amulet around his neck to control the flames - an accelerator that converts matter to energy such as fire. Joshua told me that the Gua believe they are born of flames and that fire is the purest state if being. The symbols represent the moons that orbit the Gua home world, each sacrifice is said to bring power to the killer. Didn't make sense, why was Joshua suddenly sharing? He told me it was clear that I'd figured out why the killer was choosing his victims, and Joshua wanted the name of the final descendent. But I wasn't giving up the name without something else. Wanted to know what the symbols really meant. Joshua wanted the name so he gave it up. Said the Gua had faced this kind of killing before, in a dark time for his people. Sacrifices, tortures, rituals, a single, sick ruler took control then -- Mabus. If the Guahead was to consume the power of Nostadamus' family line he could gain the power of the prophet - Joshua said that Gua wars had been won by stealing visions. When the final descendent was dead, Mabus would end the killer's life with the same ritual and take Nostadamus' visions for himself. Joshua believed he was the only one who could stop Mabus. Too bad. That job's mine.

3 - 9 SKYWATCHERS

Quatrain 28, Century 3. "Tainted streams flow into fields of stone / As the vanguard rises from hope / On the path of least obstruction / The evil one is crowned." An operative for the Raven Nation, Alana MacAfee, disappeared while investigating an anonymous posting to the Web site. It claimed that the aliens were active in the small mining town of Hope, Montana. Could've been the "hope" mentioned in the quatrain. Always wanted to see Big Sky country. Alana was one of Jordan's soldiers, so she was taking this personally. We decided to make the infiltration a team effort. Jordan set off to check out a local motel, questioned the clerk there, a woman named Sheryl Nelson. Told Sheryl we were a couple and were supposed to be hooking up with Alana to drive to Bozeman together later that day. Sheryl told us Alana had already checked out. Jordan was antsy, hadn't heard from Alana in three days but knew her agent had been onto something when they last talked. I told her how a cop had tailed me into town - these days I call attention to anything we do. Didn't want to leave Jordan behind but figured I might not have a choice. That's when a sergeant named Cobb tracked me to the motel. Some shaving cream and glasses made it impossible for Cobb to make a positive I.D. He seemed to buy our story but we weren't out of the woods yet. Best lead we had so far was to search for Alana's car, Sheryl provided us with the make and model. At the towing company we met Jim, a weathered townie who claimed he'd never seen Alana or her vehicle. Hope seemed like a nice enough place but so far I had no idea what the Gua would want with it. Jordan knew Alana, trusted her, and if a Raven Nation op said this was worth checking out, then as far as Jordan was concerned we'd find something. The quatrain mentioned a "vanguard," troops that move at the head of an army. Having met the citizens of Hope, it just didn't add up. These were simple people, not soldiers, and definitely not aliens. The cops found Alana's car pitched into a ravine. While Cobb was distracted, Jordan checked out the body. It was Alana — her face nearly burned off. Car hadn't caught fire, no skid marks on the pavement. The entire accident site seemed staged. Eddie checked out a roll of film I lifted from Alana's car. Far as he could tell, the prints had been exposed right through their protective canister by some kind of radiation or x-rays. And they'd all been exposed at once from some kind of blast. We figured that was how Alana's face got burned. The pictures looked like fragments of a whole, turns out that's exactly what we had. Put the prints together and they made what looked like a monster. Something large, looming. Something not human. Hope's main business was the HMC. Hope Mining Corporation. Jordan and I broke in, but it was too easy. There was no one working there in the middle of the day. The place was practically deserted. Investigation of the files showed no major production at the facility since 1988. We were stumped. No tourists, no exports. How were people in Hope surviving? Cops showed up and we were on the move until we ran into Jim. He held a gun on us and bagged our heads. He knew about my alleged crimes, told him I was innocent. He didn't care, just wanted us to get out of town. But we wanted answers. Turned Jim's gun on him and told him to start talking. He confessed to putting Alana's car in the ditch, said she was already dead when he found her. Then he said what was going on in Hope was wrong, and that nobody there wanted anyone else to know about it. Jordan put it together, realized Jim put the anonymous tip on the Web site. He admitted that too. Said Alana had been snooping around the "watcher's fields." We wanted to know what happened there. Jim said "they" were forming some kind of army, getting ready, and then he was cut off by a shot in the back. We were under fire, took cover. And Jim was dead. But right before he passed he told us we shouldn't be looking under, but rather over. Jim was gone. But he didn't dissolve. We still hadn't seen any aliens in Hope but we knew they were there. Or maybe this was something more? Something we hadn't seen before? Were the people of hope working with the aliens? And if they were, did they know what they were sacrificing? Felt like this was gonna be a different fight. This time it wasn't man vs. Alien, it looked like it was man vs. Man. And I'm not about to tolerate any traitors in this fight.

3 - 10 THE PLAN

A faction of Gua generals, working with Joshua, seek Foster's help in a plot to assassinate Mabus. ---- The prophet Nostradamus has foretold the arrival of an alien antichrist who will bring about the apocalypse. He calls himself Mabus, and he's out there right now ... somewhere. The prophecies of Nostradamus guide us and help us fight the Gua, but we have yet to get close to Mabus, we have yet to strike a blow that will stop the impending invasion. Until then, we prepare. Call it a crisis of faith. Eddie was desperately searching the quatrains, trying to get us closer to Mabus but we were running out of angles. Jordan tried to bolster my spirits - told me our plan was working. We would continue to take the Gua down one by one, each step bringing us closer to finding the Guahead. Jordan believed we were gonna get him and win the war. While sifting through quatrains, Eddie received an encrypted message from Joshua requesting a meeting to discuss Mabus. He wanted me to come alone. Eddie seemed to think the message was genuine, Joshua had used the encryption code before. Jordan thought I was nuts, the Gua were onto me, to take a risk like this was suicidal. Figured this could've been the break we were looking for. No matter how strained things had become between Joshua and I, this was an opportunity I wasn't gonna turn down. Joshua said he'd be alone, but when we rendezvoused in the desert he had two Gua snipers pinned on me, didn't matter, 'cause Jordan had my back. Joshua said I was vital to a plan the Gua snipers, Allegra and Steven, had proposed to him - a plan to assassinate Mabus. Jordan rigged me with a Raven Nation satellite tracking device - shot the sucker right into my shoulder - hurt like hell. Eddie was freaking out - he didn't like the risk, wanted me to take backup. We didn't have a choice - Mabus had been our focus for months and the Gua assassins had insisted that I join them alone -- this was do or die. Allegra took me into the camp. The Gua had a hundred thousand acres of desert to use as training ground - they got it from the government. They were training to take us down right under our noses - and Uncle Sam was helping. In our first official meeting Steven made his feelings clear - we had a common goal to kill Mabus, we weren't there for any reconciliation - as far as he was concerned humans were scum. Told him I felt the same way about aliens. Moved into a briefing where I was told the Gua still hadn't developed a husk strong enough to hold Mabus' consciousness for more than a few weeks, their leader had to spend the bulk of his time in an incubation unit to slow down the accelerated decomposition of his human body - we were gonna use that to our advantage. Each of us had skills suited to the mission -- as Adjunct General, Steven had free passage into the bunker, he would arrive early to occupy the Guahead and disable his last line of defense. Allegra had thorough knowledge of the bunker's defenses. Joshua was a weapons specialist and skilled Acolyte assassin - he would provide cover as we blitzed the corridor leading to Mabus' chamber. And then there was me, "one-one-seven," I'd provide a decoy as they approached the unit - and I'd get to fire the first, and hopefully last, shot. They wanted me to kill Mabus. Gave me a special gun, developed in a Gua lab. It used a charge that should destroy husk and consciousness - but they couldn't be sure and couldn't risk his surviving the attack. Joshua said no one truly knew how strong Mabus was - and he wasn't any ordinary Gua. Something didn't fit. These guys were all Gua soldiers, all had access to Mabus - so why the hell did they need me? Steven's answer seemed to make sense. If Mabus were killed by a Gua it could start a civil war at home, but if he were killed by a human it would raise questions about the viability of the Gua's invasion of earth. Steven didn't like the situation but said we needed each other. I disagreed - we were using each other. Cornered Joshua, asked some questions about Steven. Joshua said Steven spills blood like water and had led the Gua to victory before -- his ambition was boundless. Allegra collected state secrets like jewelry, she'd seduced several American and international officials. I didn't trust any of them. Not even Joshua, though he assured me that I could count on him. After what went down since I got him out of that quantum-pocket prison I couldn't be sure. Used to believe Joshua had some regard for human life, now I questioned that belief. The Gua team had a high-tech simulator just like the one Harley and I ran into last year. We ran the plan and we failed -- the entire assassination team was killed in a hail of gunfire from a Gua guard. Steven was pissed. No way was this gonna work if we couldn't act as a team. And in the real world there would be no second chances. Tensions were on the rise and Allegra had a real jones to take me out. She talked about a Gua prophecy, said she didn't believe I was the one it spoke of. Joshua explained that the Gua had prophets like Nostradamus, they called them Harbingers - with powers far beyond that of the normal species. The first was Medak, a philosopher the Gua once revered. The last was Mabus. The prophecy said that if Mabus was killed by the "chosen human hand" this invasion would end. Both Joshua and Steven believed I could be the "chosen one" their prophecy spoke of. Now they worried that my prior knowledge of that same prophecy could invalidate it. I told them not to worry. I was gonna kill Mabus ... whether he knew I was coming or not.

3 - 11 WEDNESDAY'S CHILD

Quatrain 15, Century 5. "The message precedes the messenger, a sudden link to darkness. Betwixt the glare and the chasm, the child is freed with shadows behind." The Paranoid Times gets thousands of hits a week, all from the growing contingent of believers who know that aliens threaten our world. Most of these e-mails voice support, but when one tipped us to a Gua bomb set outside a United States Federal Office, we had to check it out. That e-mail saved hundreds of human lives, but who sent it? A disgruntled alien, a human with knowledge of Gua plans? The e-mail was traced to a residential address. With backup courtesy of Jordan's Raven Nation, I set out to see if our mysterious cyber-tipper was truly a friend ... or possibly a foe. Posing as Timothy Murray, a Compustar Internet Service employee I met Anne Berman, Aunt and guardian to Emily - the intense little girl who lived at the house and the only one to ever use the computer. Made no headway, Anne said Emily was sick and she wasn't interested in the computer problems - she sent me away. Back at the trailer I asked Eddie if there was any way the kid could have sent the plans to him. Eddie was emphatic, he knew all about child prodigies but there was no way any kid could have sent such a complex schematic of an alien bomb. Far as we knew, Emily was the only one using the computer and Eddie's research indicated said no one had piggybacked the message. It came from that household unit. Research into her school records proved the kid was a genius for sure, but she was having social problems lately. It gave us our shot - this time it was Jordan who was going in. Using a home-study program Emily's school had implemented for emotionally troubled students Jordan went undercover as Helen Lesco, a representative of the school. Got the details on Emily's recent past. Emily had lost her parents in a car accident the year before, Jordan could relate to the loss but couldn't imagine how difficult it could be on a nine-year-old. Anne said Emily had been doing well for a while, but then started getting into fights, slacking on her schoolwork. And she'd been having seizures, visions of some horrible nightmare. She was dying, her white cell count diminishing daily - the doctors gave the little girl two months. When Jordan first met Emily she didn't know what to make of her. The kid was hostile, detached, until she told Anne that Jordan wasn't who she claimed to be and started chanting "Stay away!" That's when things got really weird. The world started shaking and Emily collapsed - telling Jordan "He says we're all gonna die!" Jordan asked her who says that? Emily's answer sent chills down all our spines. She said it was "Mabus." Far as we could tell Emily was human and so were her parents and Anne. We'd met psychics who could connect with the Gua before, so why not this kid? If it was true she was all too valuable. I still had trouble believing the key to ending the invasion rested with a nine-year-old girl. While Eddie and I wrestled with this puzzle Jordan tried to reach Emily. Told her about her own troubled past. Emily didn't remember sending the e-mail, but she did say that sometimes she would play on the computer and then couldn't remember anything. And she also said when she was with Mabus it was scary -- they were in a long hallway with a bright light - like the way people talk about heaven. And the kid knew this place wasn't heaven. Emily was afraid of the light, she said if she touched it, she would die. With Jordan, Emily and Anne out of the house Eddie and I did some recon. Emily was inserting a symbol in all of her drawings, it seemed familiar to Eddie, but he didn't know where he'd seen it yet. Emily and Jordan were establishing a strong relationship, I could tell Jordan was starting to care for the kid. Emily even told Jordan how much she liked her back. Then Emily had another vision. The whole park was suddenly shaking, wind howling. If we were gonna help Emily we'd have to do it fast. The seizures were getting worse. In the meantime Eddie had tracked down the icon. It was a "Vahnas" symbol, iconography from a 1600's Hindu cult. It involved a psychic link between two people that allowed the linked minds to meet in a "netherworld" of sorts. The ritual was extremely debilitating, often resulting in the death of one or both of the participants handily severing the link for good. Figured it was why Emily was dying. But we were still missing something, and had no idea what it could be. At the Berman house Anne wasn't taking Jordan's truth too well. And Emily was having another "seizure." Anne grabbed Emily during the episode this time, and she saw Mabus. He told her "the target of destruction will be struck again." It meant there was another bomb. We could have used more info but Jordan didn't want to push Emily too hard and she couldn't let her die. Mabus was preying on a kid this time. Jordan swore to make the alien leader pay for what he was doing to Emily. And I was determined to make sure it was his biggest mistake yet.

3 - 12 UNEARTHED

Quatrain 17, Century 4. "Through the ancient north it shall pass, ship to ship the power of powers. All strength to those who unearth it, joined together will earth itself be consumed." A Gua intelligence communiqué intercepted by the Raven Nation mentioned an all-powerful weapon the Gua have spent years searching for, and now we were close to finding it. A search of archeological dig sites turned up an excavation of a Viking settlement in Nova Scotia. Crossing the border into Canada was a risk, but one I was willing to take. The dig was stationed out of a bus graveyard. Yesterday's settlement was today's dump. I had to go in low profile - this time posing as Clyde the tow truck driver who wandered into the wrong place. But that's why I have Eddie and Jordan. Eddie posed as a big-shot archeologist named Dr. Charles Channing. His partner in the dig would be a man who made searching for "The Hammer of Thor" his life's ambition - an uptight, hefty guy named Dr. Samuel Spiedel. Jordan was Jane, the trusty archeological student. Could this hammer be the weapon the Gua were searching for? Seemed unlikely. But somehow the two were linked. Even Eddie was skeptical. Called the hammer the "golden fleece" or the "holy grail." He said there was a reason these things were still myths - and it was because they didn't exist. Guess Eddie figured if a Paranoid hadn't exposed them yet there wasn't anything worth exposing. Besides the Gua had only been interested in earth since the 1940's, Eddie didn't want to think they'd been around since the Vikings. Jordan told him to chill out, thought Eddie needed to live and learn. With my team as my eyes and ears, and also to create a diversion, I was able to sneak into the dig's main tent. And what I found made this puzzle all the more confusing - an ancient hammer in a silver lock box. Didn't have time to investigate any further. Jordan saw the dig chief Bishop and his heavy henchman Ash reacting to something with alarm and I had to get out of there. But the goons were onto me, and they had guns. And then I was gone. In one giant flash an otherworldly portal opened up and pulled me through ... THAT'S WHERE I'LL PICK UP THE STORY. Jordan here. What happened to Cade was a mystery for both Eddie and I right after the chase. We'd lost contact with him, gunfire and static. But I wanted to keep it cool. Sure, my first impulse is to go in with my biggest guns hefted high but something told me that was the wrong way to go - this time at least. I started my own investigation, kept up the "Jane" persona. Until I saw Bishop making contact with Mabus online. Eddie's worst fears were confirmed. And truthfully, so were mine. The "Hammer of Thor" was named by humans, but it turned out to be alien. Over the communicator Mabus foreshadowed it's devastating effects saying that thunder was an appropriate link to the shattering effects of the weapon. It was definitely the weapon the Gua wanted - a power of powers. I figured it was time to call in my people - the Raven Nation. We hadn't heard anything from Foster and Eddie was going nuts. I alerted the nearest team but it would take them some time to get to us. Until then,

Eddie and I were it. We had to get the weapon and get the hell out of there before Bishop was able to deliver our destruction to his slimy leader. Eddie was picking up some wild electromagnetic activity of the quantum pocket variety. But that's when Ash and Bishop exposed us. Or thought they had. The Gua knew they didn't have the real Dr. Channing in their midst but they couldn't peg him as Cade's closest ally. And my cover was still a lock. Eddie was tied up in the tent when Spiedel uncovered what looked to be the real deal - the mystical Hammer of Thor. But when we uncovered it and flashed a light on it the whole world seemed to open up - a portal of energy, unlike anything we'd ever seen. Cade was inside, and he looked like a ghost. He called out to me but couldn't see me at all. He was pale, fading. He sounded as if he were in pain. I wanted to plunge right in and grab him out. But I knew if Cade and I were out of play the Gua would have their weapon and it would be game over. Cade wouldn't have wanted it that way and neither did I. I'd have to save him later. We couldn't do anything until the weapon was safely in Raven Nation hands. Eddie was loose. And he said he had the hammer. But as far as I knew Spiedel had run off with it when the portal opened. That's when it all finally clicked. The Hammer had been split into two parts. Cade thought he's found it earlier but all he'd found was one half. Now Eddie had the other. "_joined together will earth itself be consumed." It fit the Quatrain. The Gua hadn't won yet, they needed to join the two halves of the hammer to make it work. I needed Eddie to work on the half he had, figure out what made the thing work. It was our only chance at getting Cade back safely and I wanted Foster here for the final fight. Eddie wasn't too pleased, told me he'd need time and quiet to figure out a piece of alien technology and the Gua were crawling all over the place. Screw the Gua. Now this was between me and them. And you all know how this girl feels about aliens. They were gonna wish they never set foot on my side of the galaxy.

3 - 13 SHADOWLAND

Quatrain 22, Century 4. "When twice three years and twice again, find secret skill in darkest hour. "Tween Blessed and Cursed a Third will come, or world's consumed in battle's fire." Nightmares. They were stealing my rest. Making it impossible for me to sleep. In them, I'm twelve years old, in a white room, strapped to a chair and there's a man there. He gives me a gun, commands me to shoot. I do it. And then I wake up. And I'm terrified. Don't even like to admit it. But Jordan and Eddie were noticing and thought I needed help. Didn't want me becoming a liability in the fight. Eddie keyed into the quatrain, thought Nostradamus was talking about me all those years ago. Even if the prophet was right I figured the news was about sixteen years too late. Jordan disagreed. Mentioned a Raven Nation regression therapist, thought I should check him out - he could take me back, help me relive my past. But my childhood wasn't any picnic - and living it once was enough. Wanted to let it go but the team wouldn't let me - it was one of the lines in the quatrain -- "find secret skill in darkest hour." As much as I hated the idea it looked like I was going to have go back to my past and relive some dark moments. If I did, maybe we'd finally find the edge we need to win the war. Got me thinking about my father. My real father, the one who died in combat. My mother always yearned for him. Came home one day to find her staring at his picture, just like any day. She always told me "he was brave and died so that others could live." She told me I was just like him. And then Ned came in and ruined the moment, again, just like any day of my life then. Ned was my stepfather. A poor excuse for a person, a drunk, a nobody -- and he knew that's what I thought of him. He was always goading me, wanting me to take a shot at him. Who does that to a kid? People like Ned do. He fostered my anger. Made me want to kill him. It was like watching him kick the hell out of my life all over again so I woke up. I was in "regression therapy" with Jordan and Tyler Greer, her RN Doc. I'd already had enough. Jordan wanted me to give it another chance but I wasn't buying. My mother and Ned weren't in the dream - they had nothing to do with this. I took off. The nightmares continued. This time my mother was there, with a hole in her head. I was being tortured, my mother was being beaten. It was worse than before. Quatrain or no quatrain it looked like I was gonna need more "help." Greer explained that nightmares weren't random, that they were triggered by traumatic events in our life that we couldn't face. The answer to what my mind was trying to tell me lay somewhere in a twelve-year old me. I was back on the couch, regressing again. Ned was there, Mom. But it wasn't real, this hadn't happened. The memory was too ... good. Greer said I was using my memory "creatively" to create walls and hide a painful truth. That's what was happening in the real world, but inside my head the truth was crashing down all around my mom and I. She was going to the hospital and I promised to stay with Ned until she got back. Too bad that wasn't gonna happen. Ned had sold me to some experiment, told me I was gonna earn my keep around there. The man who was there to take me away was a scientist, a guy named Rook who promised I'd be back before my mom returned. Rook's flunkie handed Ned a wad of cash and they grabbed me, so I fought back. And that's when I saw the truth for the first time. I cut the flunkie and he healed right before my eyes. He was Gua. Ned had sold me to the Gua. Eddie did a search. A Dr. Rook never existed but he'd found something else. There were a lot of missing kids in the Chicago area at the exact time this stuff would have been happening. They were almost all found a day or two after they'd disappeared, but none of them remembered where they'd been. And they had social problems when they got back - were in and out of hospitals, committed suicide. And Eddie thought I was one of 'em. All of these kids' fathers had died in the war and all of them were 12 years old. I was furious. It didn't make sense, the Gua had started messing with my life only a few years ago. How could I have been a test subject all this time? Greer thought the Gua had found some way to block the memory. That only made it worse. As lousy as my memories had been at least they were mine. I owned my crappy childhood. Now I find out the Gua had been there too. Their manipulations never seemed to end. I needed to know why. But there was a wall in my mind. And every time I hit it I'd plunge back into reality. Greer said we had to be more aggressive to get to the suppressed memory. He'd have to put me directly into the white room. Bypass the blocks. Told him to do it. And it almost killed me. Saw my first Gua flash alien and I went into cardiac arrest. I was trapped in my own brain, in these first memories of the Gua. And it didn't look like I was ever coming back.

3 - 14 LEGACY

Quatrain 11, Century 9. "Nobles gather on a midsummer's eve / and the Raven grasps the curse of legacy. / Look to the traitor's haven / as the beast prepares for Apocalypse." When Jordan got an invitation to a midsummer bash at a mansion owned by her late parents, Eddie linked the party to the words of Nostradamus. Did this "curse of legacy" refer to the Radcliffe family? Could the traitor possibly be Jordan's father, a man she both loved and respected? Jordan wouldn't rest until she knew the truth. Neither would I. If "the beast" was Mabus, then I wanted to do my part to find out how the Radcliffes fit into his preparations for the Apocalypse and I wanted to stop him. We knew of a secret vault within the mansion, so while Jordan made a grand entrance to join the rich and famous, I was breaking in upstairs to crack a safe. Some things never changed. Had to be tough for Jordan. Once the Gua enter your life it changes forever. I'd lived it, and so had she. But Jordan was good at putting up a front. Downstairs she was reuniting with Sabrina, an old journalist pal and her father's business partners Keenan and Tara - a couple of old timers Jordan believed were genuine friends to the Radcliffe family. They asked her to come back to the company. Jordan told them she'd been creating a "foundation of her own." Said it helped her heal. She was talking about the Raven Nation. And I couldn't agree more. Found the secret vault and some pretty interesting stuff inside. Radcliffe had a file labeled "conspiracy," inside was some info on me - including my now infamous mug shot. They were alien-related files. Jordan's father obviously knew about the Gua. And then there was Davis. Jordan never mentioned that she'd been engaged before her brother's death. We didn't talk about our romantic pasts, lotta pain there. Davis had been Radcliffe's protégée; since Jordan's brother never wanted to be a suit her father trained someone who was interested. Before he died, Jordan's father asked Davis to look after the two things he cared about most: the company and his daughter. Jordan left Davis at the altar, but the company was doing great. Davis said it was easy to focus on work once Jordan walked out of his life - it was all he had left. He gave her a necklace her father had left behind, an heirloom with the family symbol. Jordan didn't waste any time telling him how much she changed. One look at Davis and you knew his feelings hadn't changed any. Couldn't blame him. Even before Jordan became who she is today I know she couldn't be easy to forget. There aren't many women as strong as she is. Found a tape in the vault too. Played it. It was of Jordan's father presenting her with the necklace. He said the jewel had been worn by five generations of Radcliffe women and that, with it around her neck she'd "always have the legacy at her grasp." It fit the quatrain. Jordan would be crushed. And Davis had another surprise for his ex. He had a great offer on the company and was looking to sell it off. He'd been waiting for Jordan long enough, she'd had time to mourn. He wanted to get back to his life, and he wanted Jordan to join him for the ride. Things get a little fuzzy here. We'd had a contingency plan in place. Find out what we could and get out of the mansion. But Jordan had missed our meeting time, so I had to go in. Been a while since I put on a tux. Time to break it out. Found Jordan in the party but she didn't have a clue who I was. Eddie thought she might have been maintaining her cover but I could see it in her eyes — this wasn't the Jordan I'd been fighting beside all these months. Something was different. Heard a conversation between Davis and Keenan. Davis was ticked; Jordan wasn't willing to go along with any of his plans. Keenan told him to give it time, told Davis "the process" seems to have worked. They'd done something to Jordan, I just didn't know what. Ran into Sabrina downstairs, pumped her for info on Davis. She gave me the basics: Davis was the golden boy who wasn't about to give up on his girl. Sweet-talked "Jordan" into giving me a dance. Told her something happened to my "friend" when we got to the party. Told her that I was worried about this friend. Again, no recognition. And then Davis spirited her away. Talked Keenan into doing some tequila shots, figured the salt might work as a Gua test. Baited him with talk of my concern for Jordan, we moved into another room for some privacy. That's when I tried the hard sell. Keenan said they'd used some form of psychological therapy to extract painful memories from Jordan's brain — a kind of retrograde amnesia. A group of doctors were running the experiment. Far as I could tell Keenan wasn't Gua. Cut him lose and hit the party again. Jordan and Davis were giving a toast and announcing the sale of Radcliffe Enterprises to Keenan and his wife Tara Barton. But that wasn't the worst of it. Davis had some other plans in mind as well. He and Jordan toasted their new engagement. Jordan was getting married. Things were out of control and I was about to lose my partner. No way this could get any worse. But it did. Sabrina had an announcement of her own. She knew who I really was. And she couldn't wait to tell the world about Cade Foster.

3 - 15 THE EDGE

The Raven Nation is an army of believers from every walk of life: cops, teachers, salesman, parents, and scientists - all touched by the lethal hand of the Gua. Dr. Pierce Malcolm was a highly renowned geneticist before the Gua killed his only son. Soon after, he joined the Raven Nation and brought his genetic expertise to our fight. I'm usually encouraged by the determination shown by people like Dr. Malcolm to beat the Gua. So why did I have such a bad feeling about the Doc and the lab he'd invited Jordan, Eddie and I to visit? Maybe it was because it would be the site of our latest trial - a real nightmare. Jordan gave Malcolm one mandate: to find weapons that would give us an advantage over the aliens. The Doc claimed we now had that advantage. He did a test on some blood samples, one human, one Gua - from a prisoner Malcolm had in his lab. He changed the Gua sample green - made it distinguishable from the human sample. It was an indisputable method for telling who was Gua and the beginnings of a way to attack and possibly destroy them on a genetic level. Scientific gibberish was wasted on me. Was more interested in the weird looks I was getting from our Gua-guest. She called me "brother" and I kept hearing this chirping in my head - like some kind of horrific baseline - plaguing me. It was making me feel crazy. Went to a mirror ... I flashed alien. Punched the mirror and healed. And then I remembered something. Was drugged, dragged to the lab, injected with something by Malcolm the night before when we'd arrived. He was hiding something - and I had a feeling I knew what it was. I was Gua. The sunnofabitch had turned me, injected me with a derivative blood serum replicated from the hostage. Malcolm said the Gua genome was powerful, resistant; it would give me unparalleled strength and intelligence. He was giving me the edge we needed to win the war. The Doc believed he had a right to vengeance and believed we were all helpless in this fight. But now I was the strongest of us all. A Twice Bless'd Gua. I hadn't asked for this. Jordan was on the razors edge herself. Couldn't believe we'd been betrayed by one of her own. Thing is Pierce didn't believe he'd done anything wrong - the world was changing and it was survival of the fittest now - Pierce had made me into a walking symbol of evolution. And then he was dead, along with the key to an antidote he claimed existed. The Gua captive snapped his neck from her cell. We dissolved her, but the Doc was gone. Tensions were up within the group. Somehow I felt Jordan was responsible for this - she should've been more careful with her people. Eddie figured he might have enough genetic know-how to figure out how to reverse the process - we started checking out his research. And then the voices started again, a constant, eerie reverb in my head. I could hear the Gua. Felt desperate, begged Eddie to stop the change. He told me I needed to rest. So I did. And then I was awake. Strangling Jordan. Wanted to feel her throat crushed beneath my hands. But it was all a dream. And there was a Gua coming. It was Joshua, Eddie'd called him. Jordan was suspicious, this war was Gua against human and Joshua was still the enemy. She wanted him gone but I knew we needed him to stay -- he could help. Joshua checked me out. Told me Gua DNA replicates more aggressively than human DNA, my change would be exponential. But in humans, DNA was coding, a blueprint, according to Eddie I shouldn't have been "transforming" into an alien. Joshua explained the Gua DNA acted more like a virus, it attacks a genome and rewrites its code - it was the way they procreated. Joshua didn't know how far the change would go - he wanted to look at Malcolm's files. I count on Eddie for certain things, Jordan for others. What I had to ask her for wouldn't be easy but she was the only person I could trust to handle it. If the change went too far, she'd have to kill me - I couldn't become Gua. Jordan resisted but I told her I'd do it for her in a heartbeat. To become what I hate - couldn't imagine anything worse. The changes continued, my body was shifting, my skin had become almost reptilian in places. We were running out of time. But Eddie had a lead on how to change me back. Checked out the machine, it'd been sabotaged. And Jordan thought I was the guilty one. She locked me in the Gua-holding-cell. She'd already begun to not trust me. Jordan and Eddie went head-to-head on the decision. Eddie couldn't stand to see me treated as sub-human. Joshua thought my change was unprecedented, figured it was affecting my mind. It was Jordan's facility -figured if there was a law to follow it was hers. My future wasn't looking pretty. Joshua said the Gua were powerful in life, but most humans would probably consider them disturbing to say the least. The Gua were in a constant metamorphic cycle throughout their lives, I'd continue to change often. They had different senses - supposedly ten-times as sensory as humans. Joshua resented his human body. I just wanted mine back.

3 - 16 THE VESSEL

Quatrain 41, Century 4. "At the inception of the millennium / machines of the new age deliver devastation in war. / From a throne under 13 faceless warriors / the invader king wields power." "Inception OS" is an operating system used by almost every computer in the country - "the machines of the new age." Max Stareman is president of the software empire who planned to release the program to a massive media and consumer blitz. If Inception software was the weapon that "delivered devastation" then we had to stop it. And first we had to get to Max Stareman. Eddie figured tapping into Stareman's home base computer qualified him as nuts and who was I to argue - Eddie'd always called himself "crazy," my plan helped validate the name. Way I saw it, the world's top computer programmers worked for Stareman, and any one of them could've been Gua - even the billionaire himself. Wondered what the Gua wanted with an operating system anyway? Eddie figured the answer was easy: control. Most of the worlds' computers ran on Inception - even the ones at the Pentagon. A hidden Gua-program could crash the entire world's computer-net - or link them all into one big "Gua.com." Wasn't gonna be easy to get close to Stareman but I knew Jordan, Eddie and I would have to - what choice did we have. Eddie hacked into the billionaire's personal calendar - Max had a meeting scheduled in Silicon Valley with a quirky programmer named "Jinks." Stareman wanted to buy his company - "Terminal Bug" - they were developing a high-tech, security program. Jordan and I broke into Jinks' place - had a close call with an electronic sensor in the air ducts but otherwise I had my cover. Jordan left me for my "meeting" with Jinks the next day - all I had to do was wait. Jinks was the stereotypical computer geek - played most of the day, worked almost never. When he finally made it into his office he crumbled easier than I thought. Jinks didn't like guns, sent the rest of his team home and then our own version of programmers came in - Raven Nation-style-programmers - they packed guns instead of pocket protectors. We were gonna corner Stareman and uncover his game with the Gua. Eddie posed as Jinks, the RN ops took their places at the computers. Jordan played receptionist and I stayed out of sight until the last minute. But Stareman was quick — he knew something was up right from the start. Tried to leave. Jordan wasn't having it. Came out with my gun, told Stareman what we knew about the Gua and about how Inception could pose a serious threat to the world. Jordan cut Stareman he didn't heal. Then, just as we were about to cut George, Stareman's trusty assistant the real Jinks burst into the room. George was Gua. Jinks' distraction let the alien get me by the neck, ready to snap it - Jordan shot him square in the forehead. Stareman got to see a genuine Gua dissolve. It was enough for a guy like Max - a take-charge guy. He brought us to the office, shut down the Inception project and ordered the master copy of the program brought to his office immediately. Stareman was a dream - he had exactly the kind of clout we needed to get the word out about the Gua. We'd stopped the launch of a system that would effectively cripple the world's defenses in the Second Wave and had found a new ally. Felt like a good day. Couldn't have been more wrong. Never saw what was coming. Stareman was Gua. Right above Max's desk was a sculpture - 13 partial faces hanging above his throne-like chair. Stareman was Mabus. Alien Anti-Christ. Leader of the Gua. And he was in my head. Probing, smothering my psyche. But he got distracted. He went after someone else. It's the worst blow we'd been dealt in a long time. Listen up, Mabus. I am not giving up. You've taken away too many people I care about. You've attacked my family again and again. And I protect my own. This game isn't over. And now you've made it personal all over again. Gonna be your last mistake.

3 - 17 REQUIEM

Quatrain 26, Century 9: "As the Apocalypse draws near the adherents are summoned. Down to the catacombs they flee, pursued by an enemy none can see." We had to warn the Raven Nation. But they weren't about to believe anything they read online -- not something this important. Using information Jordan shared with only a trusted few I would send a top-level distress signal - it would trigger a failsafe plan. The Raven Nation would assemble. They'd be expecting war. Probably would've been easier news to deliver. Mabus was living inside Jordan, controlling her body and mind. There was no way of knowing what he planned to do. The Code 13 was sent. As part of Jordan's self-designed security measures the four top Generals of the RN didn't know each other. They didn't even know what the others looked like. The one thing they did know was the secret roster of militia in their zone. Four Generals with four separate cells, it was a brilliant way to make sure no one could cripple their ranks. But I had the names of the chosen ones. Smythe. Sullivan. Tonetti and Kendricks. They were all on their way to the meeting location. Their leader was gone. I kept replaying the events over and over in my head - Jordan, Mabus and I, trapped inside Stareman tower, a standoff with results I didn't want to believe were possible. I'll live with the moment forever - standing by the elevators, my gun drawn - a wicked smile crossing her Š his face. I'll always wonder about the choice I made, because that decision brought me to the satellite base - to meet the RN Generals. To confront the fact that, now that Jordan's body has been taken over by Mabus, she herself may be the "enemy none can see." We needed to plan our counteract. But the Raven Nation wasn't all sweetness and roses. General Tonetti knew better than to trust just anyone waltzing into the facility - pulled a gun. The "good cop," Sullivan convinced her hotheaded comrade that I was the real thing. Smythe and Sullivan hadn't shown yet. Sullivan and Tonetti always got their info from Jordan directly - didn't take well to the idea that something might have happened to their leader. Then the power went out. Had to go searching in the dark. Found the old horse of the crew - Kendricks. He'd already done some recon. The facility had been cleaned out. The Gua had already been there. The Generals figured it for a trap. Tonetti took off, didn't want to take orders from anyone. The crew was rough around the edges but they had the fire to win. They couldn't be too trusting of anyone. With the power out the doors were all locked down. Kendricks and I found something strange in the locker room of the facility - a kind of skin - a giant snake shedding. And Tonetti found something else - an eye - human. Best guess said it belonged to Smythe. The facility used a retinal scanner to let the Generals in. Mabus, posing as Jordan, must have taken it right out of Smythe's skull. We had an uninvited guest. Tonetti had been attacked by something, but we didn't know what. He couldn't tell us anything - seemed like he was in a coma. There was ooze on his face; Sullivan's hand went numb when she touched it. Closer analysis of the skin indicated that it was in fact reptilian. Figured the Gua had a hybrid on their hands - had crossed the DNA of a snake or a lizard with human and Gua DNA like we'd seen them do with bees in Ohio. Kendricks had a hard-on about the chain of command in the Raven Nation. He was a military man, an ex-marine, assumed he was next in line to give orders to Jordan's army. Kendricks thought I was good enough to rally the troops behind but now we needed someone to lead them into war. I didn't care who was in charge, right now I just wanted us all to get out of the facility alive. And then I met the alien who'd infiltrated the facility. It came out of nowhere. She was chameleon like - blue, hideous - its skin was cold. She attacked me, got close enough to kill me for sure - but she didn't. She just looked me in the eye and leaped away. Kendricks was looking for a way out. Thought he'd found it, he went to work. Sullivan and I finally realized why the beast was here and why it hadn't killed me when it had the chance. It was there for the Generals, that was its mission. And until it had what it needed from them it wouldn't come after me. Which is what it did. Out of nowhere the beast attacked Sullivan, sprayed her with its paralyzing ooze and disappeared. It was a chameleon. The power came back on and we chopped the beast in half with one of the facilities two-ton doors. Sullivan survived but she couldn't remember anything about the Raven Nation. There were non-blistered, burn scars on her head from a device the Gua used on Sullivan's forehead. The beast was harvesting information on the Raven Nation. It was going to locate the members and destroy our allies. That force was Jordan's legacy. No way was I gonna let it get taken down.

3 - 18 CHECKMATE

The Gua have struck hard. Mabus has entered the body of Jordan and taken over. The army of the Raven Nation has fallen. Its generals are dead, the survivors scattered. Even after everything we've worked for, I can't expect defeat. I choose to believe in the future. In spite of everything, we can still win this fight. I have to believe it. They're the words I posted right before we were attacked. The entire Airstream was taken down in a hail of bullets and I was suddenly on my way to a specially planned visitation with my one time partner and friend - Jordan Radcliffe. A woman we now call Mabus. I'd been hit in the attack on the trailer but a Gua Empiricist healed me. Couldn't figure it out, Mabus wanted me dead, so why were they fixing me up ... even I knew the truth -- I was on my way to hell. The answer came from the Guahead himself -- my journey had come full circle. He wanted to have the pleasure of breaking me. It was the conclusion of the same human will experiment that had started all of this. Mabus wanted to defeat me the old fashioned way ... and he wanted me to beg for my death. Tried to keep my cool but it wasn't easy. Mabus was inside Jordan's body, and she looked ... powerful, stronger ... comfortable. Freaked me out big time. Got me thinking Mabus was winning, taking over Jordan's soul. Was hard to look into her eyes and see that evil. But it was seductive too. Jordan had warned me of that after we saved a young girl recently -- one of Mabus' pawns to reach Jordan. He'd failed at capturing Jordan that time but now he had her. All I could think about was freeing my friend. Told Mabus that the Gua had tried to break me before and failed, this time wouldn't be any different. Mabus shrugged it off, said he'd show me why I was wrong. Pain didn't matter to Mabus, he was beyond that - but he was in Jordan's body, he could still harm her. Mabus put Jordan's arm in some flames and I snapped. Told him to stop. Wanted to kill him there and then. It only egged him on. Mabus told me Jordan was my weakness, said she was buried within him. She'd put up walls inside her head to keep Mabus out but he was too strong, he was chipping away at her. Soon the walls would fall and Jordan would be nothing but a memory. Didn't know how much of what Mabus was saying was true. Jordan could've been gone already. But I doubted it. She'd rather die than give into Mabus. I believed in her. That's when Mabus gave me a gun. Told me I couldn't kill him before, wanted to see if I could do it now. He told me Jordan was begging for me to end her pain. No way. Mabus wanted me to do this, which is exactly why I wouldn't. Didn't want to kill Jordan, didn't believe I could ... but if I had to, no way would it be on Mabus' terms. He had me on a leash. Told me Eddie'd given up the Nostradamus book, that I'd failed my best friend. Mabus said he'd killed Eddie. Told me I'd failed mankind. But I believed there'd be another after me, someone else to carry on the fight. It pissed Mabus off. He told me that every time he conquered a planet there was someone like me, someone who couldn't accept that they'd lost. Screw him. I was happy for it. If the Gua were so sure they were gonna win then why'd they care about the damn book. Told Mabus he wasn't all knowing -- his needing the book proved we still had a chance. And then he touched my head and showed me a future I can't believe is real. Horrible visions of an Apocalypse to come. Shoulda kept them to himself, it only made me more determined. The visions knocked me out. Woke up to find the Empiricist "healing" Mabus. Horrible scars and boils had formed on Jordan's back and shoulder - he was killing her from the inside. Mabus still needed another vessel. Offered myself up if he'd let Jordan go but Mabus said he liked Jordan's body, wondered if I didn't find it appealing? Couldn't take the bait. He was playing with my emotions, using my ... feelings for Jordan to manipulate me. Mabus was reveling in trying to break me but I got out of the leash / collar - clipped it onto Jordan's neck. Got the hell out of there. But Mabus caught me before I was through the first corridor. Grabbed the Empiricist to use as a living shield, thought it would help me make my way out of the facility. Mabus killed the Empiricist to catch me - said he didn't believe in bargaining.

Put me in his incubation chamber. Thing looked like a giant tuna can, was meant to keep Mabus fresh until he could find another human body to inhabit. It would have a different affect on me. Mabus said I was about to experience "profound regret." Wasn't kidding. Heard the voices of all those who have died, Eddie and Joshua were telling me how I'd failed them. Jordan was there - she forgave me for what'd happened. We got close. It was a dream. Or maybe a nightmare. And I had a feeling I'd just given Mabus exactly what he wanted.

3 - 19 BLACK BOX

Omega Quatrain 2. "In the west, near the rock mount, a load stone pulls opposing sides closer. The fallen signals war and guidance for the coming maelstrom." A loadstone is a magnet, which may connect to a powerful magnetic anomaly Eddie detected in Colorado's Rocky Mountains. We suspect it's the source of several mysterious satellite blackouts that have been baffling authorities. Could the loadstone be a Gua weapon designed to disable earth's defenses? I was starting to have doubts, until something dropped out of the sky. Had a feeling "the fallen" that "signals war" just made its first appearance. With Eddie complaining all the way, we hiked deep into the mountains. Found a device putting out high-magnetic readings but no one running it. Left the device and headed in the direction of the crash site. Found a fire, something had crashed, could have been a satellite or maybe a ship? Couldn't tell which yet. And we found something ... or someone, too. Joshua -- nothing like a little destruction from above to bring out our recently estranged ally. Joshua was interested in a specific piece of the wreckage, so I distracted him, sent Eddie to pick up the junk before Joshua could get away with it. Joshua wasn't thrilled to see me - he'd decided he was gonna fight Mabus on his own since I'd refused to kill the alien Anti-Christ in Jordan's body. Asked him why he was there? Joshua said he was investigating Mabus' new pet project - a vessel that had cloaking and spy capabilities. Joshua had shot it down. Said there was nothing of value left in the wreckage, told me we were both wasting our time. He was bluffing. No way he'd take the ship down for the heck of it, not with the Second Wave coming any day. Joshua thought the crew must have been incinerated in the crash but I'd noticed a footprint in the dirt leading away from the site. Joshua was definitely hiding something, but what? Eddie couldn't figure out what the "box" he'd lifted from under Joshua's nose was used for but he was gonna try to figure it out. Figured Joshua knew we had it but he'd taken off instead of trying to recover it again - he must have really been after the survivor. Left Eddie with the device and went after Joshua. Didn't need his cooperation to figure out what was going on. It was obvious Joshua wanted to play this the hard way. Good, I'm used to the hard way. While I was searching the woods for Joshua, Eddie made some headway with the box - said there was a substantial amount of electromagnetic resonance coming off of it - just like we'd seen in quantum pockets. Could've been some kind of portal - Eddie would need more time. Heard an explosion up ahead. Headed in that direction. Then I heard Joshua scream. Found the Gua crewmember first. She was cocky, told me it was her lucky day -- she was gonna finish Joshua and one-one-seven back-to-back. Joshua howled again in the distance. Sounded like he needed my help. Took the pilot and went looking for Joshua - he didn't answer any of my calls. The alien taunted me - told me Joshua had already dissolved. Didn't think so, Joshua was tougher than that. The alien said the vessel she'd crashed meant the end of mankind - didn't matter that they'd lost one, the Gua had dozens of the ships ready to strike the earth. She tried to pull a mini-grenade on me, turned the tables on her and pocketed it myself. Headed back to the crash site with the Gua prisoner, found Eddie who'd figured out what the "box" did. It was a Gua flight-recorder, a lot like an earth plane's black box, except this was a 3D version. We entered a "duplicate cockpit" inside a quantum pocket the box created - whatever happened in the real world was recorded in the parallel dimension inside the box. Eddie'd already lived through the crash simulation and didn't want to do it again. We scanned the flight recorder to help us figure out what else Joshua was looking for. Had to drug the alien pilot with salt to get her to talk. She said the ship had carried a warhead ten times as powerful as any human nuclear weapon. Didn't make sense, a bomb of that magnitude could destroy the entire planet - the Gua would have nothing left to live on. But the pilot said this bomb had no fallout - humans would die and the Gua would move right in. But why would Joshua want the warhead? Why would he keep it from us? Left Eddie with the drugged-up Gua and found Joshua. He was next to the warhead, almost dead, his wounds too severe to self-heal. Using a wonder-drug I'd taken from the pilot I was able to bring him back but Joshua was still pretty weak. Asked him what he planned to do with the warhead? He said, right now, Mabus had the element of surprise on his side, take that away from the Guahead and the planned invasion would fail. Joshua was going to set off the bomb. Earth would believe they were being attacked and unite -- the Gua would have to reconsider their strategy, maybe go home. Joshua felt the ends justified the means. Hundreds of thousands, even a million of human deaths are better than nineteen million Mabus promised. Joshua didn't want to see his own side slaughtered. This was war. I called it murder, and no way was I gonna let Joshua get away with it.

3 - 20 BENEATH THE BLACK SKY

Joshua said it best - we needed to understand the extent of Mabus' fist strike and the clock was counting down to the Second Wave. Checked out a lead that didn't pan out. Searched the woods in the dark, but it was a trap -- the Gua came after us - a fleet of assassins targeting us with laser tags. We split up, lost Joshua in the dark. Eddie fell behind me and then there was a blinding flash of light. And suddenly, I wasn't in Kansas anymore - it was some kind of void, howling snarls echoed throughout the place. Walls of crystal, maybe ice. Could hear Eddie calling for my help in the distance and then suddenly there was "another me." That same "other Cade" who rescued me from the Gua as a child - the first time they messed with my head. The quatrain which lead us to that discovery said "When twice three years and twice again, find secret skill in darkest hour. 'Tween bless'd and cursed, a third will come, or worlds consumed in battles fire." This other Cade appeared as my "adult self" then -- couldn't be sure it was the same guy, this could've been a Gua trick. Gun flew out of my hand; he was using some form of telekinesis. The twin told me he'd be back someday - now he was. Said he was there to prepare me for the fight of my life. His name was Xevallah and I believed he was the so-called "third" from the quatrain. If he had a skill to teach me he needed to be quick about it - Eddie and Joshua were out in the real world being hunted by the Gua. The Second Wave was happening in less than a week. Xevallah's timing couldn't have been worse. He arranged some strange stones in a circle at the center of the void. Told me there was nothing I could do for my friends, I just needed to pay attention to him and my surroundings. Asked me if I would risk what he had to teach me to save one man's life? He was talking about Eddie, damn right I would. Xevallah said I was safe within the circle, outside were my fears, my demons, and my nightmares. Big deal, my life had been a nightmare for the past three years. I wasn't afraid. And then he said something that really got my attention - I had the power to save Eddie AND stop the Second Wave. Didn't know what being in this void could teach me but figured I'd give Xevallah the chance to explain. He said I would gain insight into myself. Screw the self-help; I needed practical tools, a way to beat Mabus - a way to save Eddie! Xevallah said my perceptions would be brought to life in this place and only when I understood those perceptions would I be able to proceed. Then he started taunting me about the Raven Nation, said I'd let my army go. That I'd failed, let the Gua proceed to the "eve of their invasion." Things got ugly, pulled a knife on Xevallah, told me I needed to learn to respect the teacher and took my weapon away. Then he gave me his bio. He was from a place called Arkipova, a lush planet like earth. It was destroyed by a Gua invasion. He was one of the only survivors. He'd survived despite the odds, just like me. To Xevallah, the Gua were trying to hurt my "warrior spirit" - to drain the fight out of me. They'd killed Hannah to distract me, let me expose experiments even taken Jordan just to fuel my capacity for anger - Xevallah felt that hurt my development as a warrior. He took me to a place far away with a tap of his staff. It was his home, or so I thought. Looked like a wasteland. Using anger as a weapon resulted in the destruction of his planet, wanted me to understand the futility of my rage. Almost thought he had a point, but then I heard Eddie in the void - he sounded terrified. Xevallah cautioned me not to step outside the circle but my friend needed me. Eddie wasn't out there - terror was. I was hunted, helpless, hated the feeling - reminded me of the Gua - they killed my wife and I couldn't stop them. But Xevallah didn't think I should hate the Gua for killing humans - it was simply their nature. Nothing I could do could change that. He had to be wrong, they were predatory but that wasn't an excuse! Xevallah wanted me to let that go. He said hate and anger were an "impediment to the warrior." Hating the Gua couldn't change anything for Xevallah and it wouldn't for me. Hadn't I already avenged Hannah by killing the Acolyte who murdered her? That was true --fine. But there was still the little detail of the aliens trying to take our planet from us - I couldn't forgive them that. He gave me a test. Controlled my anger, passed. My reward was a rock from the circle - it absorbed into my hand. Xevallah told me to revel in it, save questions for another time. He gave me something to eat and drink, was unlike anything I'd ever tasted. Didn't surprise my host, said I'd just eaten the blood and heart of a great Gua warrior. Was sick - worse than I've ever felt before. Threw up my guts, wretched over - Xevallah said I was reacting to the essence of the warrior - that the illness would "purify" me. Started having visions - there was a hammer in the fabric of the void. The image was woozy but it seemed familiar - like the weapon we'd used against the Gua a few weeks ago - the one we'd uncovered in the dig in the bus graveyard. Felt like hell, passed out. The sunofabitch had poisoned me! The Sensei disagreed, said the Gua had poisoned me, slowly but surely over the past few years -- now he'd cleansed me of that poison. Told me the hammer was the key. It would be of practical use in the final battle. Finally, something I could understand, something I could really use. Next test came up quick. Xevallah wanted me to put my hand in the flame of his staff. Didn't think so. But he was driving his words home - asked me if I had forgiven the Gua for killing Hannah? Told him no way. He told me the weight of the past would prevent me from winning. The way to victory was to be free of those events - I had to let go. I couldn't. I failed. We were running out of time, Xevallah insisted I work harder ... if I didn't, the earth would go up in flames. But how could I ever let what had happened to my friends go? The innocents, Hannah, Jordan ... I could never forgive the Gua for what they'd taken from me. But I wasn't gonna let them win either.

3 - 21 TERMINAL CITY

Final Omega Quatrain. Eddie called it the last chance. "Into the void must go the Twice Bless'd Man.

Seek the hammer, as the seeker has sought before. In the courage to end, find the beginning, or death and darkness befall mankind." The hammer is the ultimate Gua weapon, able to move matter through a vortex in time and space. It could deliver an alien army to our doorstep in a heartbeat. Our only salvation was that the hammer had been lost in a vortex, beyond Mabus' grasp. Or so we thought. Joshua intercepted a Gua transport carrying a locator, a device meant to help the Gua locate the missing hammer. Our only hope was finding the weapon before Mabus did. Eddie and Joshua rigged a device to get me into the vortex; once inside, the locator would lock onto the energy of the hammer and guide me toward it. Downside: There was no way back. Only the hammer could bring me home. It was succeed or die. And if Mabus got there first, there wouldn't be much to come home to. Joshua asked me if I was ready. Was I ready? I'd been fighting the Gua for three years. I'd traveled to the future, been killed, brought back to life, trained by an alien sensei - this was as ready as I'd ever be. Joshua didn't think any of that mattered if I wasn't prepared to face the hardest part of my journey - I'd have to kill Mabus in Jordan's body to win this fight. For me that was the absolute last option, but if it had to be done, I'd do it. Jordan would've wanted it. Into the vortex I went. Found myself under Gua fire right off the bat. There was a sign: "Terminal City: Forbidden Zone. Condemned by the Gua Military Council." Bullets had me running for cover. There was a girl there, looked like Raven Nation, name was Taryn. She knew who I was. She took my locator, figured me for an "AC" - Assassination Clone. I was in the future again; the invasion had already happened. Then I was face-to-face with myself, but this time I was nine years older - and I looked like hell. The "future me," a guy Taryn called "the Commander," wouldn't believe I was real; he said no one could stop the Second Wave. But if the Commander really was me, then I should've known what I was doing there. Confusing, I know, but stay with me. My future self was bitter, angry. Said he knew all about the hammer and that the plan wouldn't work. He'd already fought for a decade, watched humans hunted and exterminated and all they had left to fight for was this hellish future. He'd failed, which meant I was wasting my friggin' time. He destroyed the locator. In an instant, he'd killed us all. The fight for the future was over. And Mabus was in the vortex now, too. The older Cade was afraid that, if he helped me, history would repeat itself. Thing is, I didn't know what the history was. Eddie and Joshua entered the vortex behind me; I wish they hadn't, but Joshua wanted to be sure someone came out with the weapon. Taryn seemed intrigued by me... wanted to know more about why I was there, told me Eddie was dead in this future, started asking questions about Jordan. Taryn said her Commander had loved Jordan and that Jordan had been a martyr for the resistance - the Commander didn't talk about Jordan much. It killed me to know Mabus had finally finished Jordan off. The Commander came to see me. I realized he still had the hammer in his possession. We talked about the prophecy, he'd had to choose between Jordan and the hammer and he'd chosen the weapon - it wasn't an easy call to make. Said I'd do the same - it was the only way to stop the Second Wave. But the Commander had lost something in letting Jordan go - it broke his spirit, dulled his skill - all he'd been taught meant nothing. He couldn't control the weapon when he had to. Then he told me how Jordan died — the Commander said I killed her. She was so close he could see her eyes when he did it, he could see Jordan was still inside Mabus. "I" shot her through the heart. Mabus died too, but the Second Wave came anyway. Commander said this time it would be different; Jordan wouldn't die because he wouldn't let me kill her again. He was gonna let Mabus get the hammer - this time Jordan would live! Figured I'd become insane in the future. Wanted to make things right, but the future me couldn't believe we had a chance. We couldn't both exist in the same time period, not for long. We were deteriorating. The Commander felt one single act could change the world, and he wanted "us" to disappear from both our realities. Figured whatever happened, the world would get another chance if "we" hadn't existed. He was just hoping the next spin would be better than his own. The Commander was playing with all our fates, but I believed he was wrong. Got out of my cell and went after the hammer. I could still stop the Second Wave if I got there first. See, there was a difference between the future Commander and Cade Foster today: he'd given up. I hadn't. I will stop the Second Wave.

3 - 22 TWICE BLESS'D

Would everything end where it begins? That's what I was wondering in the final hours. Stuck in a psychiatric ward, integrated by doctors who believed I was crazy. I believed they were human, if they weren't I would have been dead. Not that it mattered, the invasion was upon us and humanity didn't want to know a thing about it. One thing was for sure; they'd know when the war was upon us. Kept telling the Shrinks that 19 million people would die on the first day and that we were all screwed. Told a new Doc about the alien anti-Christ named Mabus. She wanted to know how I'd survived my fights with the demon if he was really so all-powerful? I didn't have an answer - they had me talking in circles. Were doing the same thing to Jordan, trying to convince her the Raven Nation didn't exist. Telling her she'd been manipulated by me, pulled into some grand lie. They told Joshua he wasn't an alien at all. Said he was a staff sergeant for the U.S. Marines, told him he had kids. Eddie was just plain crazy, they didn't have to tell him otherwise. They kept us from each other but I could hear Eddie in his cell. Said he'd found a fifth Omega Quatrain coded in the algorithm of the other quatrain: "As the Second Wave is nigh, four must be chained strong as one, hammer can smite victory if honor is granted to Xevallah." But we still needed to find the hammer! And we were locked away with a bunch of non-believers! Felt like I was going crazy myself. Probably sound like it here. Until I heard the crap they were selling Jordan, then I got mad. They taunted her about our relationship. Told her my journals talked about what happened between us, meaning Mabus and I, when I was his prisoner. Jordan told them they had no idea what she'd been through - she was right, none of us did. Then they told her she was some kind of victim who'd fallen in love with a wife murderer who'd used her. She was just like any other abused women, maybe she was worse? Told me I'd gone on a countrywide killing spree, murdering innocent people under the guise of a quest to stop an alien invasion. It wasn't true. It wasn't! Could it be? Jordan even asked me if someone who was insane could tell they were insane? And then I woke up from the nightmare. It was all a Gua security measure - they'd bombarded us with a mind-altering device. We were together - Jordan, Eddie, even Joshua. And we were at ground zero. A gua bunker holding the army of the Second Wave - football fields of husks. The invasion wasn't on its way, it was already here! An invasion from above without an aerial attack. It must've taken years to grow the husks. Joshua didn't think it was possible to download that many consciousnesses at once. He'd need an unbelievable power source - we were missing something. If Mabus had his army ready, what was he waiting for? Decided to start searching for the download mainframe. Joshua and Jordan were at odds, neither trusting the other. Good thing I trusted them both. Eddie figured Mabus was using the hammer as a power source; it was the only thing that made sense. That's when we all got caught. And sent back to the delusion. Back to the mental hospital. That's where Jordan remembered the husk they'd built for Mabus, growing in an incubation chamber. Believed it was our baby - Mabus had used our bodies to make the perfect husk for his consciousness. It was one of the reasons the Gua had kept me alive. And the others were all losing out to the delusion. They didn't want to believe. They'd lobotomized Eddie, convinced Joshua he was human and Jordan had committed suicide. She left a note that read: "believe." Now it was just between Mabus and I. He offered me a bargain: continue trying to return to the bunker or live inside the delusion where at least I could stay alive. Told him to go to hell. Then he offered me the chance to save my wife, Hannah, I could go back and undo the past. The hammer would give me the power. But it was something I'd never do. The past got us here and leaving it alone was the only way I could be sure we'd never have to live through this nightmare again. Broke out of the delusion and we all figured it out. Mabus needed me to power the download - it required both of us. Jordan and the crew thought I needed to get the hell out of the bunker. Knew that wasn't the right move. Had to ask them one thing, same thing I'm asking you all. Believe in me. This is our final battle.

FLAMING DISK, THE

The plot concerns Professor Wade (Kohlmar) who invents an optical disk-lens that can concentrate the energy of the sun into a narrow beam able to vaporize steel. Secret agent Elmo Gray (Lincoln) is assigned to protect the professor and his invention, which could make a wonderful weapon for the government. The villain is Stanton (Watson) who, with a gang of crooks, steals the weapon and uses it to rob banks. Stanton even threatens to destroy a big city with his ray.

One interesting twist to the story is that Elmo's brother, Jim (also played by Lincoln) is held under a hypnotic influence by the villain and participates in the evil-doing until he is finally shaken out of the trance in episode 17, in time to team up with his sibling, recover the weapon and kill the villain in the process. By the thirties such twists were commonplace. The classic example of this is DICK TRACY (1937).

This chapterplay stars Lincoln, the first screen Tarzan, a gigantic actor who was discovered and groomed by Griffith. In the publicity for this serial, Lincoln even had his name above the title, providing the main box-office attraction. Having appeared in Tarzan of the Apes and in The Romance of Tarzan (both 1918), Lincoln again teamed up with his co-star of The Flaming Disk (Lorraine) in The Adventures of Tarzan (1921).

FLASH GORDON (1936)

Flash Gordon with the aid of his friends travel to the planet Mongo which appears to be heading for a collision course with Earth.

The film FG was the nearest thing to PULP-MAGAZINE space opera to appear on the screen during the 1930s. Flash, Dale and Zarkov go to the planet Mongo in Zarkov's backyard-built spaceship to find the cause of an outbreak of volcanic activity on Earth. Ming the Merciless (a wonderfully hammy performance from Middleton) is behind it all and plans to invade Earth. Our heroes spend the next 12 episodes surviving various exotic hazards before outwitting Ming in the final reel. Though more lavish than the average serial (the budget was a record $350,000), FG has the cheap appearance of most: unconvincing special effects, sets and costumes borrowed from a variety of other films, and plenty of stock footage. However, it remains great fun, romantic and fantastical. Ill edited versions of the first and second halves were released theatrically as Spaceship to the Unknown (1936) (97 mins) and Perils from the Planet Mongo (1936) (91 mins).

The follow-up was FLASH GORDON'S TRIP TO MARS (1938), dirs Ford Beebe, Robert F. Hill, with the same leading actors -- Ming is back again -- and Beatrice Roberts as the evil queen who turns humans to "clay people". 15 two-reel episodes. Screenplay Ray Trampe, Norman S. Hall, Wyndham Gittens, Herbert Dolmas. The setting is changed from Mongo to Mars. The 99min edited-down version was The Deadly Ray from Mars (1938).

The final FG movie serial was FLASH GORDON CONQUERS THE UNIVERSE (1940; vt Flash Gordon: Space Soldiers Conquer the Universe), dir Ford Beebe, Ray Taylor, with the same leading actors except that Carol Hughes replaced Jean Rogers as Dale Arden. 12 two-reel episodes. Screenplay George H. Plympton, Basil Dickey, Barry Shipman. This, the weakest of the three, kills off Ming (again) at the end. According to one account the true title shown on the original episodes was Flash Gordon: Space Soldiers Conquer the Universe; the soldiers would have been Ming's, and Flash is trying to stop him. This would explain the oddity of the usually accepted title, since Flash was not a universe-conqueror by disposition. The 87min edited-down version was Purple Death From Outer Space (1940). The three FG film serials continue to have a cult following and are regularly revived on tv and in the cinema.

The patriotic American movies from World War II and later (in particular their airborne battle sequences) were combined with the spirit of the old cliff-hanger serials. Tales of heroes menaced by deadly perils and triumphing against impossible odds were being told once more! Lucas himself has credited the adventures of Flash Gordon as a major starting point. The serial trilogy, produced by Universal Pictures, became the definitive 'space opera' for millions of fans, as well as becoming the embodiment for many of the SF serial. The first Flash Gordon serial came about after Universal experienced great success in 1934 with its adventure strip adaptations Tailspin Tommy and Tailspin Tommy and the Great Air Mystery. The studio realised that they were onto a potential box-office gold mine with future such productions, especially with an audience that would flock to the theatres to see their favourite character come to life on the big screen.

Alex Raymond's highly popular SF-strip flash Gordon was optioned by Universal. The screenplay, written by Frederick Stephani (who also directed), George Plympton, Basil Dickey and Ella O'Neill (Plympton and Dickey were veteran action and serial writers), was quite faithful to its source. Even with its comparatively moderate budget and tiring shooting schedule, the film looked more lavish and expensive than one would expect. Gordon's final costs, according to film historian George Turner, "rose to a reported $350,000", which was the equivalent of one 'A' budget feature - Flash Gordon's running time of around 4 hours and 16 minutes was that of four 'A' or 'B' features!

The plot saw Earth menaced by a seemingly out of control planet heading right for it. Scientist Dr Zarkov, accompanied by plane crash survivors Flash Gordon (son of a noted scientist) and Dale Arden, takes off in his rocket ship to try and head off disaster. Landing on the strange world Mongo, they discover that its activity is part of a plan by its conquest happy emperor, Ming. For 12 episodes, Flash and his friends found themselves in one peril after another as they dealt with Shark Men, Hawk Men, Lion Men and (to quote the late Wally Wood's classic spoof of Flash, Flesh Gordon), the most dangerous of all... Men-Men!

Helping to make all the outlandish costumed doings exciting and believable were its main players. Larry 'Buster' Crabbe, then under contract to Paramount, was borrowed by the serial's producer Henry MacRae to try out for and eventually be cast as Flash. Crabbe was not very enthusiastic at the whole project at first, and later recalled, "I thought the whole idea was crazy and that nobody would buy it. When MacRae talked to my bosses at Paramount, I had no choice in the matter " In the end, however, Crabbe became Flash Gordon to millions of fans and was identified with the character for the rest of his long career. Blonde Jean Rogers played Dale Arden, screaming when in peril and looking attractive in the outfits provided for her. Dublin-born Frank Shannon was knowledgeable as Dr Zarkov, often coming up with a super-scientific solution when things looked dark for the good guys.

Veteran character actor Charles Middleton, usually associated with heartless villains, almost stole the serial as he made his Emperor Ming a fiend you really didn't want to see killed off, playing the Fu Manchu of outer space with all the enthusiasm of a wolverine with rabies. In spite of the fact that serials were consistent 'bread and butter' money-makers for Universal, they were usually given low priority in the studio production roster, which often meant they did not have access to some of the on-lot production facilities, or an adequate budget. In this case it was the studio's legendary special-effects department, a vital ingredient in this type of production.

Producer MacRae met this problem head-on by putting together his sfx department headed by photographer Jerome Ash, and headquartering it in a building on the studio backlot. The serial's memorable miniatures, ranging from the classic spaceships to a floating city in the sky (which may have been the inspiration for Lando Calrissian's Cloud City) were created by Elmer R Johnson, the head of the studio's wood and plaster shops. Because of the efforts of MacRae's own production team, FLASH GORDON was loaded with special effects that even today are still impressive for a production often forced to cut corners and costs to complete production. Flash Gordon became one of Universal's big hits, playing many of the first run theatre chains. Its success prompted the company to create two sequels.

Flash Gordon himself was a preppie blond polo-playing Yale graduate who accompanied Dale Arden and Dr. Zharkov to the planet Mongo, ruled by the evil Emperor Ming the Merciless. After they fought Ming to a standstill, they battled Bizdar, the Evil Queen of Cygnil, the Great God Em of Odin, the Mad Witch of Neptune, and anyone else who could throw together a modest collection of androids, monsters, and/or death rays.

Alex Raymond created the comic strip in 1934, five years after "Buck Rogers." A year later, in 1935, "Flash Gordon" became a successful radio serial starring Gale Gordon, and then three film serials starring Buster Crabbe (1936-1940). In 1979, NBC ran a Saturday morning animated series. The following year, a rather entertaining big-budget film lost a bundle, and the franchise has been in limbo ever since.

Although both were based on the Alex Raymond comic strip, the Flash Gordon TV series had nothing else in common with the classic Buster Crabbe serials of the 1930s which continue to get TV exposure to this day. Unlike most of its contemporary series which were transmitted live, Flash Gordon was produced on film. But the budget and production values on the series were just as low as those on series produced live.

In an effort to save money on the series, it was made as an international co-production with companies in Germany and France, each of which contributed to its funding. Flash Gordon was shot in both West Berlin, where 26 episodes were made and in Marseilles where the remaining 13 episodes were shot. Sets often consisted of a few foreground props set against a poorly lit painted canvas backdrop. While episodes made in West Berlin often were set on planets where many buildings had been destroyed.

Steve Holland who portrayed Flash had a better career as a model than he did as an actor. After Flash Gordon he became better known and recognised as the model used for the covers of Doc Savage novels. The series was first seen in syndication on WRCA in New York City in 1954.

As science fiction took root in popular television in the 1950s, it seemed only natural that Flash Gordon and Buck Rogers be included if only for their positions in the genre. The first to make the transition to television was Buck Rogers, whose success in television was less than notable. The producers of Flash Gordon obviously hoped for a better reception for their hero. Already the subject of three popular serials featuring Buster Crabbe, Flash Gordon had been only moderately successful on radio but popular in comic form (as was Buck Rogers). With Buck Rogers leaving television on January 30, 1951, Flash Gordon was ready to fill the void three days later.

Some television historians have demonstrated confusion relative to Flash Gordon's appearance on New York television station WABD, the flagship of the DuMont Network, when Flash Gordon commenced on Saturday evening, February 3. Contrary to some interpretations, these telecasts were not episodes of the Flash Gordon series with Steve Holland. Rather, WABD was broadcasting chapters of the original Flash Gordon serial with Buster Crabbe. After two weeks of viewing, New York Times television critic Jack Gould found the experience unsettling, and he embarked on a one-man crusade to put a stop to further telecasts of the serial. In a highly charged column, Gould urged DuMont executives to pull the serial from the air, lest irreparable psychological harm be done to the many young children watching the program. Gould wrote: The television broadcaster must learn that there is a limit to the extent to which the emotions of children can be exploited in the pursuit of higher Hooper ratings.

Under the best of circumstances the parent has his hands full in providing guidance in what his child sees on TV. When he has no way of knowing what a program will be, such as was the case of Flash Gordon, his guard may be down. At such times the very least that television can do is to watch its low punches. In conciliation wholly unlike today's knee-jerk defiance, station executives acquiesced to Gould's impassioned demands, and the following week the Flash Gordon serial was displaced by WARD's hastily rescheduled Frontier Theatre showcasing Sam Newfield's Gunsmoke Trail (1938), a Range Busters Western that had as much "violence"

In 1953, King Features, distributor of the Flash Gordon comic strip, was persuaded to turn its product into a weekly TV series. King Features signed with Motion Pictures for Tele-vision Inc. (MPTV), a programming syndicator founded by former Universal Pictures executive Matty Fox (who had worked on the original serials) for the syndication of 39 half-hour Flash Gordon episodes. The series would be produced by Intercontinental Tele-vision Films, which in turn signed with two separate European production companies, Interwest Films of West Germany and La Telediffusion of France, to actually get the job done. The decision had been made to produce the films overseas as part of a general trend at the time. Newsweek commented on the foreign production trend in 1954 under the catch-phrase "See Scenic Europe-Then visualise it for the video back home".

Such a motto might be nailed up on the recruiting posters of the 20-odd American TV production outfits now making their half-hour movies in foreign parts. The main reason for their shift, artistically, is a long-suppressed craving for authenticity. The scenery overseas, it is said, is so scenic. Other reasons for the exodus from Hollywood and New York: (1) Financing is some times easier, (2) costs are sometimes less and (3) life as an expatriate is so delightful.

Actual foreign locales enhanced the scenic authenticity of such series as Captain Gallant of the Foreign Legion (1955/57), with Buster Crabbe, and Assignment Foreign Legion (1957); moreover, series like Foreign Intrigue (1951/55) and Dangerous Assignment (1952) were at least intellectually sound in pursuing political themes relevant to the actual locales in which they were filmed. Flash Gordon's venue, however, was outer space, not Berlin or Marseilles, which had been selected as shooting locations for the series. The decision to produce Flash Gordon overseas was more economic than aesthetic; here, fiscal advantages, particularly labour, were most attractive to cost-conscious producers.

The use of European actors in supporting roles meant major savings since the performers were virtually unknown in the American market but possessed the To fill the role of Flash Gordon, the decision was made to search for someone who resembled Alex Raymond's comic strip figure. To this end, King Features and ITF took note of artists' models, and they found a young model and actor named Steve Holland. Tall, darkly handsome, with a commanding physique, Holland met their physical expectations of the part; amazingly, he had the added qualification of sounding a great deal like Buster Crabbe.

Holland had already begun to capture public attention in a most unusual fashion. For avid readers of Fawcett's Bob Colt comics, a nameless Holland had become a major figure by portraying Fawcett's popular cowboy hero during the run of the series, from November 1950 to May 1952. Interestingly, Fawcett built the towering figure of Bob Colt around Holland's likeness, even to the extent of issuing photo covers of Holland costumed as Colt rather than the traditional cover paintings. Accordingly, comic artist George Evans based his drawings on Holland's precise physical appearance.

Holland's ability at modelling would flourish following his Flash Gordon years, gaining him a reputation as one of the most talented models of the day. In the post-Flash Gordon years, Holland's career as an actor was never a stellar one even though he appeared in many small film roles and on stage at various times, notably in versions of South Pacific and Mr. Roberts. Holland was, however, in great demand by illustrators for paperback covers. He took credit for appearing on thousands of covers, portraying such luminaries as the Avenger, Mike Hammer, Conan the Barbarian, Shell Scott and Nick Carter.

His best work was modelling Doc Savage for the Bantam Books editions that began in 1964; Holland's image of the famed "Man of Bronze" solidified the model and the subject. In fact, cover artists came and went at Bantam while Holland continued as Doc Savage. Reportedly, when artist Joe DeVito was hired to illustrate the Doc Savage paperbacks in the 1980s, the young artist interviewed several new models with the intention of finding a newer image, but in the end DeVito admitted he was dissatisfied with what he had seen and went back to Steve Holland. "Nobody but nobody poses like Steve Holland," DeVito said in a 1992 interview. "I've never seen a model as poised and as balanced. He is Doc Savage." DeVito's positive comments partly, at least, assuage the sting of negative criticism frequently levelled at Holland's performance as Flash Gordon. After finding their Flash Gordon, the framers of the television series turned their attention to the role of Dale Arden and the pivotal role of Dr. Hans Zarkov.

A relatively unknown actress named Irene Champlin was selected to play the third film incarnation of Dale Arden (succeeding Jean Rogers and Carol Hughes). Champlin graduated from the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and had been a member of Sanford Meisner's Professional Group; she had recently appeared with Helmut Dantine in Guerrilla Girl (1953), a minor film about the post-war Greek Communist resistance movement. To take over the role of Dr. Zarkov, bearded Joe Nash, an actor with a deft delivery, was picked.

Initially, production responsibilities fell to German producer Wenzel Luedecke and Interwest Films for six months of filming in West Berlin. Wallace Worsley, Jr., son of the famed American silent director (The Hunch-back of Notre Dame (1923)), was tapped to direct scripts primarily written by Earl Markham and Bruce Elliot. The memorable theme was scored by Kurt Heuser.

Flash Gordon was in constant syndication throughout most of the 1950s, and despite serious production flaws it managed to retain a fascination for young audiences. The lead players in the series were all credible and capable performers. Holland may not have been a first rank actor but the role didn't require one. What Holland brought to the part was a talented model's intuitive understanding of movement and an artist's perception of light and shadow as it falls upon a subject. What complements his posing is the fact that he understands the artist's craft so well; in fact, Holland was a painter who shared the same appreciation even reverence for light and shadow that Flash Gordon creator Alex Raymond brought to his own work.

To see this in action, one need only to concentrate on Holland's movements, gestures and physical reactions. What becomes quickly apparent is that he is a performer with a shrewd sense of his own space. Irene Champlin's Dale Arden was superficially like many other secondary female characters of the era (e.g., Vena Ray in Rocky Jones, Space Ranger). She was ever willing to follow the men for a worthwhile purpose, such as saving the world from destruction, and she invariably fell prey to one villain after another, a situation that would require the timely intervention of a heroic male rescuer like Flash Gordon. But Champlin's Dale was far from the passive and helpless creature frequently depicted at the time; uniquely, Dale not only packed a ray gun and could hold her own in a fight, but more importantly she possessed an emotional strength that was lacking in her female counterparts (and sometimes in her two male companions as well).

The casting of Joe Nash as Dr. Zarkov was innovative; Zarkov was the least exaggerated of the series' characters. Nash's image substituted the era's typically elderly, bespectacled eccentric scientist for a youthful, athletic philosopher-scientist who, like Dale, packed a ray gun and held his own in combat. The only other actor to appear with any frequency was American actor Henry Beckman, whose Commander Richards functioned as head of the crucial government authority the Galaxy Bureau of Investigation (or GBI). Beckman, like nearly everyone else in the cast save the principal players, did not receive screen credit. Richards was illustrative of the sense of respect for authority that was so endemic not only in Flash Gordon's galaxy but in the American 1950s as well. Finally, accompanying Flash, Dale and Zarkov on many of their most important missions aboard the Skyflash-pride of the galactic fleet and obviously named in Flash's honour- was a squawking parrot named Casey whose comic relief served as the voice of doom, articulating such "encouraging" prophecies as "Gonna crash, Flash" and "Gonna fail, Dale."

Thirty-nine episodes of Flash Gordon were filmed in Europe. According to Steve Holland, the first six months were spent filming in West Berlin; after that, filming transferred to Marseilles for another three months before wrapping up the series. The transfer to Marseilles occasioned certain production changes of which the most notable was the transfer of production from Interwest to La Telediffusion. At this point, Luedecke was replaced by American producer Edward Gruskin, and American Wallace Worsley was replaced by Gunther von Fritsch, the German co-director of Val Lewton's The Curse of the Cat People (1944). Kurt Heuser's exciting theme remained, but incidental music was supplied by French composer Roger Roger. The look of the series now eschewed the expressionistic sets and chiaroscuro lighting for more mundane sets and lighting, effecting a change in mood and tone from a dark introspection so typical of classical German cinema to lighter high adventure.

The costuming took on a more conservative stylishness. In fact, costuming seemed to be an especially vexing problem for the filmmakers. The German episodes featured Flash and Zarkov in one-piece, stodgy, dark uniforms that seemed cumbersome, but the French episodes featured Flash in a white polo shirt with a characteristic lightning bolt across his chest. More colourful yet indicative of the series' parsimonious budget were the costumes worn by Flash's nemeses: Tyrants appeared variously attired in what appeared to be Nazi uniforms and South American guerrilla fighters' fatigues. The subterranean hunchbacked dregs of the German episode "The Earth's Core" were dressed literally like Quasimodo, and the underwater people of "The Water World Menace" were clad in ordinary black rain slickers and swim fins. The result was an often and perhaps unintended-visual expressionism that complemented the expressionistic narratives.

Flash Gordon premiered in the important New York market on October 1, 1954, on station WNBT. The premise of the entire series was succinctly summarised in voiceover narration at the beginning of one of the later episodes, "The Race Against Time".

In the year of our Lord 3063, it is a galaxy of peace where not only worlds of different civilisations have learned to live together, but worlds of different life forms. And this exterior building shot is the Galaxy Bureau of Investigation-where the great scientific and economic minds of the planets work in democratic unity to preserve peace, prosperity and equality among all men. But powerful and evil forces throughout the galaxy are trying to gain control of those GBI secrets by which the democratic balance is maintained. Dr. Zarkov, the leading scientific mind of the GBI, and Flash Gordon and Dale Arden, the leading investigators for the organisation, formed an unbeatable triumvirate on behalf of the "democratic balance" in the universe.

Perhaps an explanation for Flash Gordon's popularity with viewers can be found in the nature of the very elements adults have found most disconcerting, namely that the series' lack of adequate budgets and its reliance on exaggerated characterisations and events necessitated a child-like improvisation, something with which youngsters playing daily on school playgrounds or in their own backyards could readily identify. Flash Gordon remains a black-and-white sphere void of profundities for the modern rationalist, and yet this very sphere becomes its strength for those with a true imagination.

FLASH GORDON (2007)

The new Flash Gordon follows Flash (Eric Johnson) and his companions, Dale Arden (Gina Holden) and Dr. Hans Zarkov (Jody Racicot) through wild and momentous adventures. They're ordinary people thrust, often against their wishes, into extraordinary circumstances. In fact, they are Earth's last defense against the forces of a merciless dictator named Ming (John Ralston). As the series opens, we learn that Flash's father, the eminent scientist Dr. Lawrence Gordon, died in a laboratory fire when Flash was just 13.

Flash has no way of knowing that something is approaching that will undo all he thought he knew about his father's death, and set him on a path punctuated by overwhelming responsibility and euphoric victories.

Flash's adventure begins when a dangerous echo of his father's old experiments reaches him. He seeks advice from his old flame, Dale. She's a reporter for their hometown TV station, and she is engaged to police detective Joe Wylee (Giles Panton). Dale quickly becomes entangled with Flash in interstellar intrigue. It's no coincidence that Dr. Zarkov, a quirky assistant to Flash's father, also reconnects with Flash at that critical moment. Zarkov warns Flash of a transdimensional rift a tear in the universe's fabric like the one Flash's father was trying to create the night of the fire. That discovery might just turn out to be the least mind-blowing one that Flash will face.

Flash Gordon is an American science fiction television series that premiered in the United States on August 10th, 2007, at 9pm with a special 90-minute premiere episode. The series began filming in Vancouver, Canada in May of 2007. The show's first two episodes were written by executive producer Peter Hume. In this version of the series, Flash's actual name is "Steven Gordon", with "Flash" being a nickname.

The new series, based on the comic strip of the same name and its adaptations, adds a character called Baylin (Karen Cliche), a bounty hunter from the planet Mongo. She finds herself trapped on Earth and becomes a comrade of Flash (Johnson); his former girlfriend, Dale Arden (Gina Holden); and scientist Dr. Hans Zarkov (Jody Racicot), who are able to travel back and forth through a "portal between the two worlds" instead of space ships. In a more subtle change, Ming will not be called "the Merciless" and will exhibit the traits of modern, media-savvy dictators like Saddam Hussein.

This is the fifth entry in this database for Flash Gordon, the first three were made for cinema productions (Flash Gordon (1936), Flash Gordon's Trip to Mars (1938) and Flash Gordon Conquers the Universe (1940)). The fourth installment was the mildly successful Flash Gordon (1954) created in the midst of the success of shows like Captain Video. Since 1954 only the cult classic science fiction film Flash Gordon had been made. So this makes it as the first show based on Flash Gordon in nearly 53 years!

Flash Gordon is an American science fiction television series that debuted on Sci Fi in the United States on August 10, 2007. It premiered in the United Kingdom Sci Fi channel in 2008. The show's pilot episode was written by executive producer Peter Hume.

The series, based on the comic strip of the same name and its adaptations, follows the adventures of Steven "Flash" Gordon (the nickname referring to his running ability), who lives with his mother in Maryland and whose scientist father was apparently lost in a mysterious accident when Flash (Eric Johnson) was 13 years old. Flash's former girlfriend, Dale Arden (Gina Holden), is a television news reporter and is engaged to police detective Joe Wylee. They meet the elder Gordon's eccentric former assistant, Hans Zarkov (Jody Racicot), when rifts in space appear, allowing travel between Earth and the planet Mongo.

Mongo is ruled by the ruthless dictator Ming (John Ralston). Unlike the previous adaptations, he is not normally called "the Merciless" (in this version, it serves as more of a seldom-used nickname) and is instead called "Benevolent Father". He also exhibits the traits of modern, media-savvy dictators, rather than the more simplistic, stereotypically evil characterization of earlier incarnations. Once again, Ming has a daughter, Princess Aura (Anna van Hooff), who is disturbed by her father's brutality. The series adds a new non-human character, Baylin (Karen Cliche), a bounty hunter from Mongo. She finds herself trapped on Earth and becomes a comrade of Flash, Dale and Zarkov.

The peoples of Mongo live in "cantons", tribal groups that echo the outlandish animal-human hybrids of the original comic strip. The cantons include the Verdan (based on Prince Barin's forest-dwelling people from the strip), the Turin (based on the strip's Lion Men), the Dactyls (the series' version of the Hawkmen), the Omadrians (women who create powerful medicines) and the Zurn (painted blue "Magic Men" lead by Queen Azura).

FLASH GORDON CONQUERS THE UNIVERSE

Earth is being saturated by a deadly dust that spreads 'the purple death', so once more Crabbe sets off in Shannon's rocket (with a new Dale Arden, Hughes replacing Jean Rogers) to do battle with Middleton's Ming the Merciless. Aware of the law of diminishing returns, Universal signalled the end of the Flash Gordon series by killing off Ming at the end of this chapterplay.

This is the weakest of the three serials devoted to the exploits of Flash Gordon; the other two are FLASH GORDON (1935) and FLASH GORDON'S TRIP TO MARS (1938). Most of the footage of the dead planet of Frigea, on which Crabbe mines plante, 'the only known antidote to the purple death', was culled from the 1930 feature The White Hell of Pitz Palu. The serial was produced by Henry MacRae and the cinematographer was Jerome Ash.

FLASH GORDON'S TRIP TO MARS

This sequel to the phenomenally successful Flash Gordon (1936) serial sees Crabbe, Rogers (now sporting black hair) and Shannon on Mars from which Middleton's Ming the Merciless, in alliance with Roberts' evil queen, is stripping the Earth of nitrogen.

Though it lacks both the budget and the pace of the original serial, it has its moments, especially in the clay people, humans turned to clay by Roberts. What is missing is the charming innocence of the original. It was planned to set the serial on Mongo, but after the success of Orson Welles' War of the Worlds broadcast of 1938, the studio changed the setting to cash in on things Martian. The producer for the serial was Barney Sarecky, the cinematographer was Jerome Ash.

The 15 episode FLASH GORDON'S TRIP TO MARS (1938) saw Emperor Ming, supposedly killed off in the first adventure, still alive and allied with Queen Azura of the planet Mars in a plan to drain Earth's atmosphere of a vital element, Nitron. The loss of this element is causing natural catastrophes (hurricanes, tornadoes, earthquakes) that will eventually destroy the Earth. Flash and his friends wind up on Mars where they battled their old enemy in order to save their home planet. While Flash Gordon's alien beings all looked humanoid in their appearance, the characters of the Clay People marked the first alien-looking beings to turn up in filmic space opera.

In its original release, the prints of Trip to Mars were printed on green film stock, adding to the feeling that this was a 'special' serial during its first run. Flash Gordon Conquers the Universe (1940) found Ming, still alive and back on Mongo (after he was quite thoroughly killed off in Mars), engaging in another attempt to conquer the Earth, this time with "The Purple Death", a deadly plague that his rocketships are spreading across the planet. While Buster Crabbe, Frank Shannon and Charles Middleton returned in their familiar roles, Carol Nughe took over as Dale Arden from Jean Rogers, now under contract to 20th Century Fox.

Conquers the Universe is considered to be the best looking of the serials, moving through a fast paced episodes. It is also the serial that probably gave Lucas the idea for his lead-in synopsis scroll, considered by many to be his tip of the hat to the Gordon adventures. Actually, the upward scrolling recaps were being used in 1939 by the studio for all of its serials. In between Trip to Mars and Conquers the Universe, Universal tried to make lightning strike twice by making a deal with the owners of the Buck Rogers comic strip for the rights to produce two serials. Buster Crabbe (who would hold the title for having played most comic strip-based heroes in serials) played the hero in the 1939 chapter--play that was an entertaining episode space opera.

As the 20th century hero waking up in the 25th century, Crabbe's Buck Rogers helped the good guys of the Hidden City bring down the dictatorship of 'Killer' Kane (Anthony Warde), who kept his enemies under the control of hypnotic helmets as a slave labour force called "The Robot Battalion". Allies from the planet Saturn enabled Buck and his friends to bring Killer Kane down. While the beings of the planet Saturn were, as in Flash Gordon, generally humanoid, a strange alien race, the Zuggs, lent a touch of the non-human to the proceedings. But it was Flash Gordon that fans identified Crabbe with and they let Universal know they wanted him back as that character. Plans for the second Rogers serial were scrapped. Following Conquers the Universe, there would be no serial journeys into space to battle evil alien world conquerors until 1951.

FLASH GORDON CONQUERS THE UNIVERSE

FLASH, THE

In his civilian secret identity, The Flash was Barry Allen a scientist employed by the Central City police force in the crime lab. Barry had come from a family of policemen, both his father and brother were regular cops who did not fully appreciate Barry's usefulness to the police force. One day while working in the lab, a bolt of lightning hit a shelf full of chemicals which fell on Barry. Barry survived the accident to discover that the chemicals had speeded up his metabolic process, giving him the ability to move so fast that the eye could not follow him.

This also produced the unfortunate drawback of giving him an insatiable appetite. Hoping to find some means to reverse the process. Barry went to STAR Labs and contacted fellow scientist Tina McGee whom he hoped could help him. No way to reverse the effects of the accident could be found and Tina helped Barry control his super speed. Barry eventually decided to use his super speed to become a costumed crime fighter after his brother was killed in the line of duty.

The Flash continued his battle against criminals and at first was thought to be as real as Bigfoot. Although his vigilante efforts were not endorsed by the police department, unofficially they did appreciate his efforts. Tina was the only one who knew of Barry's dual identity (however a P.I. later discovered it). Barry's lab assistant Julio Mendez was totally unaware of it and at first did not even believe the Flash exists. Police officers Bellows and Murphy always seemed to be the ones who find the criminals that the Flash has tied up.

This series is based on a DC comics superhero, the Flash. Based on the classic comic book superhero. "He was an attractive character to me because, unlike the over-powered under-achieving Superman, The Flash had a single super-power -- namely the ability to move extremely rapidly, from which all secondary abilities were derived", said actor John Wesley Shipp. This was loosely based on the H.G. Wells story "The New Accelerator."

Inevitably, all this costumed crusading had a campy feel, but the special effects sequences of The Flash running at super speed were highly effective.

After the huge success of the Michael Keaton Batman film in 1989, someone at CBS must have said let's find another comic book super hero so we can duplicate Batman's success on TV. The result was The Flash. a series based on the DC comic book of the same name. The Flash was a superhero who possessed great speed. Someone unfamiliar with the comic book who picked one up after seeing the series would notice many differences between the series and the comic. In the comic book universe there have been three Flashes. with the third one currently appearing in The Flash comic book. The TV series was based upon the second Flash who first appeared in 1956 and was killed off in the comic book in the mid-1980s, however some elements of the current Flash were incorporated into the series.

The early episodes of the series tended to pit the Flash against common criminals, with costumed foes that he battled in the comic book appearing as the series progressed. Making the transition from comic book to television were: The Trickster. The Mirror Master and Captain Cold. The UK premiere for the series occurred on the 8th May 1992, on Sky One. The executive producers for the series were Dany Bilson and Paul Le Meo.

John Wesley Shipp debuted as The Flash on 20 September 1990 in the US pilot movie which launched the series. It is based on DC Comics The Flash created by Gardner Fox and Harry Lampert. The tv version has an admirably brooding, dark, atmosphere lifted with a strong sense of fun that keeps things from being dull. Barry's dog Earle gets one of the best jokes! The high speed 'flash effect', with its gust of wind and stirring music, is breath takingly well executed using slow-shut-ter (time-lapse) camera work electroni-cally enhanced. While the pilot film se-quence where Barry crashes into the ocean is spectacular it was achieved using a number of 'air cannons' sequentially trig-gered and a touch of computer animation to complete the illusion.

Certain ideas in the film were dropped from the series. These include the track-ing devices Tina (Amanda Pays) added to Barry's Flash costume. It is also, notice-able how 'up market' Tina's lab becomes. During the film it's secreted in a rather ordinary looking street while the series retains the same interior sets (somewhat more spaciouly arranged!), the outside of the building is totally different, and much bigger. Amanda Pays is no stranger to SF television having coached Edison Carter (Matt Frewer) through a number of scrapes in both the original and the Ameri-can versions of MAX HEADROOM, and more recently survived about of the unusual in the company of Fox 'Spooky' Mulder (David Duchovny) investigating on THE X FILES: Fire.

The computer graphics for the Flash were designed by Michael Okuda, who is far better known as one of the key techni-cal advisors on Star Trek, and for his: numerous books about that series. While the movie's credited costume supervisor is Gilda Texter, could this be the same Gilda Texter who, in the '71 Barry' Newman film Vanishing Point appeared as a naked motorcyclist'? An interesting switch of career, if so! Guest stars flashed on the screen dur-ing the series include genre old hands: Mark Hamill (Star Wars), Denise Crosby (Star Trek: TNG) and Corinne Bohrer (Free Spirit) among others. The Flash first appeared in the UK on 8 May 1992, courtesy of Sky One - it was hidden between the adverts if you looked very hard. The series lasted only 22 episodes before being cancelled, in a Flash!

1 - 1 THE FLASH

Barry Allen, a police scientist is working one night during a terrible thunder storm when a bolt of lightning crashes through the lab window, electrocuting Barry and dousing him in chemicals. Barry survives the accident, and soon learns that he is now able to move at almost incomprehensible speed. Meanwhile Nicholas Pike, an ex-cop turned gang leader, is seeking revenge against Barry's brother Jay. With the help of Tina McGee, a scientist who works with the ultra-advanced Star Labs, Barry constructs a suit that will withstand his super speed and also conceal his identity so that Pike's men won't retaliate against his loved ones. Now Barry must find a way to stop Pike before it is too late.

FLOWERS FOR ALGERNON

AKA: ALGERNON NI HANATABA O

Haru (Santamaria) is a fully grown adult, but only has a mind of a child. He has always been an object of ridicule in his neighbourhood but has a sunny disposition and never let's the tormenting get to him, if indeed he notices that he is the butt of many jokes at all. He adores Erina (Kanno), a teacher at a local centre for the disabled, who cares for him as if he was her younger brother. When Erina's associates at an experimental lanoratory ask for a test subject for a new program, Erina persuades Haru to volunteer. He is pitted against a super-intelligent mouse, Algernon in a series of tests and later undergoes surgery to increase his own mental capabilities. Within days, Haru's IQ has lefpt from 68 to 150.

He becomes a fully functioning adult for the first time and charms Erina, who is tempted to leave her boyfriend and begin a relationship with her former pupil. Haru remains attached to his old "rival" Algernon but notices one day that the mouse's intelligence seems to be reverting back to it's old level. He realises that he, too, may shortly find his new found awareness slipping away and desperately struggles to retain his new life.

In adding science fiction to the mix, this adaptation of Daniel Keyes' tragedy could well be the last word in the disability genre that dominated the 1990s - compare to its comtemporany TRANSPARENT. Keyes' orginial won the 1960 Hugo award as a short story, and an Oscar when filmed as the movie Charly (1968).

FLYING ATTACK! HYUMAN

AKA: TOOTSUGEKI! HYU-MAN

AKA: GREAT ATTACK! HUY-MAN

Kyoto Physical Education Instructor Iwaki Junichiro is the epitome of human perfection. With a keen mind and a rock hard body, he is the perfect 'human'. When galactic invaders called 'Flashers' from the 'Skull Nebula' come to Earth with plans of conquest, Iwaki reveals his true form, the superhuman 'Hyu-man'.

During a battle with the Flasher Monster called Giringa and the mysterious 'Grand Flasher', Hyu-Man is defeated and thought killed. Junichiro's equally athletic younger brother, Junjiro then comes forth to reveal that he too is from the 'Hyu-Man' Star and transforms into a second 'Hyu-Man' (red colored). Later Junichiro is resurrected and together the two 'Hyu-Mans' go on to defeat the remaining forces of the Flasher Invaders.

Characters

Who is Hyu-Man

Hyu-Man is a space alien from the 'Hyu-Man' Star in the M - 4 Galaxy ('M' Dai Yon Seiun Hyu-Man Sei). Hyu-Man has the distinction of being a competitor and winner of the 'Inter-Galactic Olympics'. Has a host of superhuman abilities including the following:

'Hyu-Man Arm Punch' - Hyu-Man can shatter steel with this punch skill.

'Hyu-Man Spin Kick' - Hyu-Man can use this kicking attack to knock enemies down with one hit.

'Hyu-Man Beam' - Hyu-Man's 'Hissatsu Kousen' attack (Special Weapons Attack). Uses this against enlarged opponents. From his chest plate armor, he can dispel this disintegration beam that can destroy most opponents.

'Magne-Radar' - From Hyu-Man's crystal-like helmet he can emit an electrical signal that can pinpoint and identify an enemies' body weak points.

In a somewhat 'Peter Pan' fashion, Hyu-Man would draw strength from the supportive cheers of children. To change from human to 'Hyu-Man' form he would flash the 'V' sign (Flash Sign) and twirl around-and-around to transform.

Who are the 'Flasher'Invaders:

The 'Flasher Invaders' hail from the dark galaxy known as 'Skull Nebula'. Led by the skeletal-masked leader 'King Flasher', the Flasher Aliens have come to Earth to conquer the planet and take it as its own. With an army in the thousands and an army of ferocious space monsters, King Flasher will stop at nothing to destroy everything on the planet.

King Flasher can control his minions and monster through electrical command waves. King Flasher's henchmen are the insect-like 'Flashers' who receive their commands via the large antennas on their heads. They can also use these antenna to send out electrical shock waves. Flashers come in two types 'Blue Eyes' who are the generic troopers and 'Red Eyes' who are the Guardsmen to King Flasher.

Other notable Flashers include:

'Grand Flasher' - replaced King Flasher as head of the Flashers. Later retreated back to the Skull Nebula.

'Queen Flasher' - a female Flasher commander. Known for her colorful costume.

'Flasher Pink Mask' - Grand Flasher's female attendant.

'Flasher Black Mask' - Grand Flasher's male attendant. Known for his demon-like mask.

Trivia

Aired around the same time as the original 'Kamen Rider' series.

Was unique in that it was not a filmed television show but rather a stage show that was filmed and then edited for broadcast. While not a 'live' televised broadcast, it still gave the sense of a stage production.

Tanaka Yoshiko later went on to become part of the popular 70's J-Pop singing group known as the 'Candies' (the other two members were Ito Ran and Fujimura Miki). After debuting in 1973 with the song 'Anata Ni Muchu' (I'm Crazy For You), they produced a string of hits including 'Heart No Ace Ga Dette Konai' (I Can't Win <Ace> Your Heart), 'Natsu Ga Kita' (Here Comes Summer), 'Toshi Shita No Otoko No Ko' (Young Boys), and 'Haru Ichiban' (Summer Is Best). At the heart of their popularity, they were as popular as the group 'Pink Lady'. After disbanding in the early 80's, Tanaka went back into acting and starred in a number of film projects. Godzilla fans may recognize her in the films 'Godzilla vs. Biollante' (Toho; 1989) and 'Godzilla vs. Mothra' (Toho; 1992).

Natsu Yusuke has appeared in several movies including 'Noraneko Rock - Wild Jumbo' (Alley Cats - Wild Jumbo; Nikkatsu, 1970), 'Noraneko Rock - Boushou Shudan '71' (Alley Cats - Running Wild '71), 'Truck Yarou - Goiken Muryo' (Wild Trucker - For Your Viewing Pleasure; Toei, 1975), 'Shin Jyoshu Sasori 701 Go' (New Female Convict Scorpion No. 701; Toei, 1976), 'Ame No Meguri Ai' (Interlude In The Rain; Shochiku, 1977), 'Gyakudo No Tsuma Tachi II' (Women of The Yakuza II; Toei, 1987), 'Hana No Furu Gogo' (Flowers Fall In The Afternoon; Office Kadokawa; 1989), and 'Shuryo E No Michi' (Way To Leadership; Museum, 2001). Tokusatsu Fans best remember Natsu as Hayama Joji AKA Skyzer, older brother and one half of the Robot Duo 'Kyodain' in 'Uchu Tetsujin Kyodain' (Space Ironman Kyodain; Toei, 1976).

The awesome Character and Monster designs were supplied by veteran 'Ultraman' costume designer Narita Toru.

Comparisons have been made to the 'Uchu Keiji Series' (Uchu Keiji Gaban and Uchu Keiji Sharivan).

FLYING DISC MEN FROM MARS

Virtually a remake of THE PURPLE MONSTER STRIKES (1945), this sprightly serial features Gay as the Martian (dressed in the same outfit as Roy Barcroft in the earlier chapterplay so as to be able to use footage from it) who arrives on Earth to prepare for its invasion by Mars. To achieve this Mota (atom spelt backwards), as the Martian is called, has first to rebuild his disc-shaped rocketship - a flying saucer in everything but name - with the enforced aid of scientist Craven (reprising his role from the earlier serial). From his spacecraft he intends to bomb Earth into submission. Reed is the young scientist who becomes suspicious. The well-mounted climax has Gay, Craven and their criminal associates engulfed in molten lava when Reed diverts an atomic bomb so that it falls on Gay's hideout in the interior of a volcano.

In addition to; that from THE PURPLE MONSTER STRIKES, the serial featured stock footage from such diverse serials as KING OF THE MOUNTIES (1942), G-Men versus the Black Dragon (1943), Secret Service of Darkest Africa (1943) and KING OF THE ROCKET MEN (1949). In 1958 the serial was re-edited and issued as a feature entitled Missile Monsters. The producer for the serial was Franklyn Adreon, the cinematographer was Walter Strange and the special effects were created by Howard Lydecker and Theodore Lydecker.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

This show follows the adventures of two children: Brett Delaney from Australia and Hannah O'Flaherty from Ireland. They discover a portal which enables them to travel between each country and experience life in different hemispheres, as well as having adventures along the way.

Hannah O'Flaherty is a normal sixteen year old girl staying at O'Keffee's Boarding School run by Miss Murphy in Galway, Ireland. One day, when Hannah was going down into the basement, she slipped and opened a secret portal to Perth, Australia. On the other side of the portal lives Brett Miller, a typical Aussie teenager who lives with his recently re-married mother Jackie.

Brett gets a job in Hannah's boarding school as a cleaner. Brett's new happy family life, including his new step-dad Craig and step-brother Wayne, cause problems for him and Hannah.

Plot #2

Hannah is a pupil at O'Keefe's Boarding School in the west of Ireland. The school is a slightly rundown pile, presided over by the indomitable Ms Murphy. Brett lives with his mother in Belle Claire House in Perth, Western Australia. She has recently remarried, so with a new 'Dad', step-brother Wayne, and step-sister Meredith, it's a full house for Brett which he's glad to escape from.

Hannah and Brett are chalk and cheese. He's pure Australian teenager, as laid-back and cool as she is intense and determined. But their fascination with the portal brings them together.

Through the struggles to keep their secret and protect each other's identities, they become an inseparable duo. She presents him as the caretaker's new assistant. He introduces her as an Irish friend that he's teaching to surf. Their lives are transformed. She leaves her bed at night to 'portal' through to the Australian beach. Through the portal and past the girls' showers and he's in the regimented world of an Irish boarding school, with a job to hold down.

...Foreign Exchange is a mediocre programme for a pretty good show, a joint collaboration between Irish and Australian TV and Film companies to produce a show, a light on the mind adventure with comedic aspects, which is set in both countries.

Brett Delaney is a 15 year old Australian boy whose mother has gotten married once more, and thus; Brett now has dreaded Stepbrother and Sister to contend with. While fond of his new Stepfather, and his new sister, Meredith, is nice to him, but his new Brother, Wayne, is large, strong, angry and mean. He basically takes over Brett's bedroom, proclaiming that he got there first (despite the fact that Brett had lived there all his life). Brett is angry, and helps Meredith to move stuff into the basement.

They notice a discolouration in the wall, which Meredith thinks is full of bacteria, but as she leaves the room, Brett examines it. He finds a spherical stone in a crevasse, and finds it fits into a part of the wall like a key.

A simple turn, and some cheesy TV-standard effects reveal a portal.

After his Football goes through as a test, Brett locks the door and enters himself. He finds himself in another basement, but unbeknownst to him, it is at the other side of the world.

Exploring the portal's destination, he stumbles across a girls shower, and runs away amidst screams. He discovers he is in a school, an old looking school in a rural area.

With half the school chasing him, he hides in a shed, where he first meets Hannah. She is an Irish girl the same age as him. He finds out that somehow, he is now in Ireland, and although Wary and confused at first, Hannah helps him back to the portal, having gone through herself to see if Brett was delusional.

So ends Episode I, and the two become friends, often visiting each others countries, and getting into adventures (usually mishaps) along the way.

(and Brett is no longer angry, taking the basement as his own bedroom and leaving Wayne to have his own. Hey, who else has a portal to the other side of the world in their room?)

1 - 1 THE PORTAL

When Brett discovers a mysterious portal leading from his basement bedroom in Perth, Western Australia, to the cellar of a boarding school in Galway, Ireland, he can't resist trying it out. Caught near the girl's showers, Brett flees, but is saved by Hannah, a no-nonsense schoolgirl who is about to give him up until he tells her about the portal. With the teachers and police on the lookout for a fugitive, Hannah smuggles her crazy Australian friend back to the cellar and they go through to Perth. Realising that the portal is real, Hannah agrees to keep the incredible discovery a secret and goes back to Ireland. Now that the portal has been opened, Brett and Hannah's lives will never be the same.

1 - 2 SHARK ALARM

Hannah portals from Ireland to get her first look at an Australian beach, but finds herself having to explain to Brett's mother why she is in Brett's bedroom at 7.00 in the morning. Brett and Hannah allow the family to believe that Hannah is an international surfer wanting to borrow a board. Within minutes, Hannah becomes a contestant in a surfing carnival and she can barely swim. Desperate to end the embarrassing situation, Hannah triggers the shark alarm, having no idea of the chaos this will cause.

1 - 3 PRIDE & PORRIDGE

When Brett is busted on the school grounds by Tara, Hannah comes to the rescue by pretending that Brett is an exchange student looking for work experience. Seamus the caretaker, is keen for help as he has a plumbing problem, an upstairs toilet that has been the repository of years of unwanted breakfast porridge and is well and truly blocked. Brett solves the problem with some Aussie ingenuity.

1 - 4 MAGNETIC ATTRACTION

In the science lab at O'Keefe's, Hannah and Cormac discover the extraordinary magnetic powers of the portal key. In Australia, Brett makes his own discovery, if the key is missing on the other side the portal won't work. Hannah is supposed to be doing her last round of beach cleaning duty and she'll be in trouble with the Beach Ranger if she misses it, but with the portal closed, Brett can't get hold of Hannah and time is running out. Picking up beach litter is bad enough, but having to dress up in Hannah's clothes and wear a wig, really puts a strain on their friendship.

1 - 5 FATHER'S DAY

Asking a colourful Irish busker to pretend to be Hannah's father seemed like a good idea at the time. All he had to do was make a phone call so Hannah could have permission to join Brett's family on a boat trip. Getting himself invited to dinner wasn't part of the plan. Back in Ireland, Hannah's real father arrives at the school for Father's Day. Now she has to race back and forth between countries to look after the two dads.

1 - 6 HOME ALONE

Brett and his new stepbrother Wayne can't seem to get on, so Craig suggests they go bush for a "bonding" camp. Whilst Brett is away, Hannah decides to portal to Australia and spend a relaxing day at the beach, but the new magnetic security system that Cormac has installed in his room creates havoc. The portal sends a tornado through Brett's home and Cormac gets locked in his room. Hannah's day is ruined, but Brett and Wayne succeed in bonding when Craig has an accident and they have to rescue him.

1 - 7 LIE LOW

Keeping the portal a secret has gotten Hannah into a lot of trouble and now she is in Miss Murphy's sights. Having missed her science test whilst diving on a reef in Australia, Hannah persuades Cormac to help her make up marks in the practical exam. Brett thinks that inventing a talking lie detector is not a good idea for people who have secrets. Hannah scoffs until she gets into the exam and finds out that Miss Murphy will be asking the questions.

1 - 8 NO RETURN

Keeping the portal a secret has gotten Hannah into a lot of trouble and now she is in Miss Murphy's sights. Having missed her science test whilst diving on a reef in Australia, Hannah persuades Cormac to help her make up marks in the practical exam. Brett thinks that inventing a talking lie detector is not a good idea for people who have secrets. Hannah scoffs until she gets into the exam and finds out that Miss Murphy will be asking the questions.

1 - 9 PHOTO OPPORTUNITY

Tara finds a photo of Brett and Hannah on a glorious beach and she is convinced that it's proof of their romance. To keep the photo a secret, Hannah is forced to become Tara's slave, but Hannah is only interested in the photo because an Australian lifesaving boat is in the background. Tara hasn't noticed it, but Miss Murphy might. Explaining how she and Brett came to be on a beach in Australia is going to be impossible, so the photo is going to have to disappear.

1 - 10 A LOAD OF OLD BULL

While preparing to be hostess of 'Founder's Day' at O'Keefe's college, Tara sneaks into town to buy a new dress. Brett offers to show Tara a short-cut back to O'Keefe's, but the journey over rocky fences and through muddy fields culminates in them being baled up in a barn by an escaped bull. Tara is terrified and Brett gets a chance to play the hero, saving them by distracting the bull with Tara's new red dress. The dress is ruined and Tara's fury makes Brett wish he'd stayed with the bull.

1 - 11 KNOCKOUT

Brett falls off a ladder at O'Keefe's and knocks himself unconscious. He wakes up in hospital and makes the doctor believe that he is concussed by insisting that he lives in Australia. While Brett is kept for observation, Hannah has to cover for him in Perth, by taking his place for his family's big day of spring cleaning. Brett persuades Cormac to smuggle him out of hospital. Brett goes back to Perth, unaware that Hannah has done his cleaning jobs. Brett's behaviour makes his family suspicious and when Hannah arrives, she has to clean up again.

1 - 12 THE BURGLAR

When Hannah discovers a silver candelabra from O'Keefe's in Brett's home, she can't believe that Brett is a thief, but when Hannah finds a whole bag of loot hidden in O'Keefe's cellar, she has no choice, but to think the worst. Then Craig recounts the wild story of a burglar who gave himself up to the police, swearing that he had been zapped to Perth from a school in Galway. To save the portal, Brett and Hannah have to put all the stolen goods back where they belong before the police check out the burglar's story.

1 - 13 ANOTHER FINE MESS

Preparing a meal for Jackie and Craig was Meredith's idea, so how did Brett end up doing the cooking? When Brett portals through to Ireland to get Hannah to do it for him, he overhears Miss Murphy and Seamus talking and gets the impression that the school is going to be sold. No school means no portal. Putting the buyer off isn't a problem, but the truth is, the buyer is actually an insurance valuer. All of the defects that Brett has pointed out will have to be remedied before the insurance can be renewed and it's Brett's job to do it and he still has to cook that dinner.

1 - 14 STICKY FINGERS

Michael O'Connor claims to operate hotels all over the world, including Galway, so when he asks Jackie and Craig to be partners in a new hotel in Perth and offers Brett sponsorship for the World Surfing Classic, Brett is very excited. Then Hannah and Brett check out the O'Connor family in Galway and discover that Michael O'Connor died over 20 years ago. So who are Jackie and Craig about to do business with and how are Brett and Hannah going to get the evidence that he's a con man, back to Perth without giving away the portal?

1 - 15 SUNBURN

Brett is pleased that Hannah has decided to learn surfing, unaware that it's only because she's got a crush on Paul, the handsome young surfer who runs the new surf clinic. Ignoring her studies, Hannah portals to Australia every night to be with Paul at the beach during the day. Sadly, her crush gets crushed when Hannah discovers that Paul already has a girlfriend. Exhausted, Hannah falls asleep on the beach. When Brett discovers that she is about to miss an important exam, he portals to Australia only to find that Hannah is badly sunburned. Back at O'Keefe's, the school matron remarks that Hannah is so red that she looks radioactive which might be easier to explain than being sunburned during an Irish winter.

1 - 16 TUNNEL VISION

Tara catches Hannah sneaking out of the school at night and threatens to tell Miss Murphy unless Hannah agrees to take part in her "extreme make-over" assignment. Tara decides that it's not just Hannah's appearance that needs improving, but her entire life, so she follows Hannah 24/7 to ensure that all bad influences are removed, including Cormac. With Tara constantly watching her, Hannah's portalling days are over. The discovery of an old tunnel leading from the cellar of O'Keefe's to the castle ruins provides a solution, but Brett and Hannah have to make Tara believe that Hannah is sneaking out of school again. This proves tricky until they realise that both Tara and Cormac have an interest in stars.

1 - 17 DOG DOWN UNDER

Tara smuggles her pet dog Pookie into the school, but while hiding it from Seamus, Brett accidentally sends Pookie through the portal to Australia. After causing chaos in the restaurant, Pookie flees to the beach and is caught by the Ranger. Hannah and Brett have to rescue Pookie from the dog pound whilst at the same time making Tara believe that her dog is still at O'Keefe's and not on the other side of the world.

1 - 18 BOTTOMS UP

While Cormac is showing off his interplanetary exploration robot to Martin, the robot follows Hannah through the portal and sends back intriguing pictures. Cormac's computer tracking program seems to indicate that his robot is not lost in the school grounds, but is on the other side of the world. Hannah discovers that Meredith has taken the cute robot on a family picnic in Perth's Kings Park and has to move fast to prevent Cormac and Martin from discovering where the robot really is and how it got there.

1 - 19 GRANNY GAMBIT

When Craig tells Wayne to help Hannah take home some food, Hannah suddenly has to have a home in Australia to take it to. Wayne is getting suspicious until Hannah goes to the front door of a house they have passed three times. Before Hannah can get rid of Wayne the old lady owner invites them in. Wayne thinks that the woman is Hannah's wacky granny and escapes. Brett comes to the rescue a little late and ends up inside too. Jackie, who is delivering food to the elderly in the neighbourhood is invited in and is soon joined by Craig and then Meredith. Thankfully no one, but Brett and Hannah understand what is going on especially not the delighted old lady who hasn't had so many visitors in years.

1 - 20 TOY SOLDIER

When Cormac discovers an old chest of junk at O'Keefe's, Brett takes what he thinks is a worthless old tin soldier as a birthday present for Wayne. Then Miss Langham discovers that the soldier could be a part of a valuable collection and has the whole school searching through the rubbish to find it. Hannah portals to Perth in the middle of the night to get the soldier back, but Wayne is using it in a "Dungeons & Dragons" type of game he secretly plays with his mates. Brett has to persuade Wayne to let him join the game and win the soldier back.

1 - 21 HOSTEL

When Miss Murphy asks about the hostel that Brett claims he is living in, Brett doesn't realise that she is looking for accommodation for her visiting mother. It seems as if Brett's cover story will be blown, but then Cormac asks Hannah to feed the fish in his auntie's house whilst she is away. Brett pretends that this house is his hostel and speaks so highly of the cooking, that the Murphy's decide they want to try it. After a dinner brought by Hannah via the portal from the restaurant in Perth, Mrs Murphy decides that she would rather stay here than at O'Keefe's. All seems lost until Seamus arrives. Mrs Murphy decides that the food of love is tastier than the seafood platter and decides to stay at O'Keefe's.

1 - 22 BOOK LAUNCH

The hot new book "Prince Of Roth" is being launched at midnight all over the world and no-one, not even Tara can get an advance copy, but when Hannah realises that midnight in Perth is 8 hours ahead of midnight in Ireland, she decides to portal over and get a copy. Meanwhile, Brett and Cormac have illegally wired into Seamus's satellite dish to watch the soccer final, but all they can get is a kid's show which is doing a live link to Australia where the book is about to go on sale. Unfortunately, Miss Murphy surprises them and then stays to watch the show. Whilst queuing for the book, Hannah uncovers a plot by Wayne to cheat Meredith out of winning a trivia contest. Hannah manages to expose Wayne, but risks exposing her presence in Australia.

1 - 23 BORN TO BE MILD

Tara sees Brett riding Seamus's old motorbike around the school and thinks he's cool. To prove that he's cool too, Martin takes the bike for a joy ride and crashes it. He flees the scene leaving Brett to take the wrap. Unable to show the police his passport, Brett escapes through the portal to Perth where Wayne has started a business selling pre-loved junk. Hannah and Cormac know that Brett is innocent and play detective to find the real culprit. Martin looks like he's going to get away with it until Brett makes a last trip to bring Seamus a tank badge he's got from Wayne. He catches Martin out and Cormac records the admission. Martin has no choice, but to confess. His apology to Seamus is overheard by the whole school.

1 - 24 TRUE NORTH

When Meredith gets interested in Feng Shui, Craig decides that Brett's room needs renovating and the first thing he'll fix is that ugly rock wall. To save the portal from being plastered over, Brett has to redecorate first and O'Keefe's is throwing out a whole lot of old stage props. In Ireland, the school is on an orienteering course and Hannah's compass is going wild. Each time Brett uses the portal to get props from O'Keefe's, the portal's magnetic energy interferes with the compasses and sends the students off course. If Cormac hadn't issued everyone with a GPS, the entire school would have gotten lost, except for Tara and Martin. Martin isn't using a GPS or compass because he's got a copy of the orienteering map, only he doesn't realise that it's last year's.

1 - 25 HEIR TODAY, GONE TOMORROW

Tara woos Brett because she thinks he's a heir, but Hannah discovers that Brett really is one, only it must be kept a secret. Aonghus O'Keefe, inventor of the portal and founder of the school, disappeared over 100 years ago and Hannah is keen to find out where he is buried. Brett isn't interested because Tara believes that Brett is secretly wealthy and has suddenly found him attractive. Finding no grave in Ireland, Hannah searches the cemetery in Perth, but still finds nothing so she turns to Jackie for help. Meredith traces Jackie's family tree and discovers that Aonghus married Jackie's great grandmother. Brett really is the heir to a fortune, but if the portal is to remain a secret, so must this, even if it means that Tara will dump Brett.

1 - 26 THE PRECIOUS BOOK

The old boiler in the cellar at O'Keefe's explodes, revealing the hidden diary of Aonghus O'Keefe. Cormac accidentally gets the diary wet, but promises to restore it. With the school in financial difficulty, board member Mr Staunton is urging a sale to rock star Tiffany Brooks who he's invited for a tour. Brett and Hannah escape the egotistic star by portalling to Perth, but are stranded in Brett's basement when Tiffany removes the portal key on the Irish side. Only Cormac has a chance of re-opening the portal, but he doesn't even know it exists. The portal has re-opened, but where has Cormac gone?

FORTUNE HUNTER

Mark Frankel "Fortune Hunter" ©1994 Fox Lathrop/FOX/STV

Carlton Dial was a former British secret agent, like James Bond, who was retired from MI6. Not wanting to let his talents go to waste he got a job with Intercept. Intercept was a company who recovered stolen items for a fee. Dial worked for them on a commission basis and when the series opened he had a perfect record in terms of recoveries. Intercept used all the latest technology to help their agents in the field. Dial preferred to work alone, however in the first episode he was coerced into getting a partner.

Harry Flask who he ends up keeping. Unlike traditional partners Harry never came into the field with Dial. Instead Harry remained in Headquarters where he gave Dial information and advice. Harry did this through the wonders of yet to be invented technology. Harry's room in headquarters contains a huge TV screen which allowed him to see everything which Dial saw. He managed to do this since Dial wore a special pair of contact lenses which contained mini-cameras. These cameras also contain sensors which allowed Harry to scan Dial's field of vision for a wide variety of things. With the aid of a radio receiver implanted in Dial's head and wrist watch that picked up and transmitted audio. Harry and Dial could carry on conversations with each other, although at times this placed Dial into the embarrassing situation of talking to himself. Harry also had at his disposal a huge computer database. With this he could help Dial identify people he had met, provide information on their backgrounds and provide Dial the information that he required so that Dial could go undercover as a member of a profession which he knew very little about.

In 1994 FOX television scored big time by nabbing the NFL football rights away from CBS. In an effort to hold on to the predominately male viewers after the football games were over. Fox decided to try a high-tech action adventure series. Fortune Hunter was that series, it was a cross between James Bond movies and the 1970s TV series SEARCH. It turned out to be a big ratings disappointment and it was taken off the air in five weeks. Fortune Hunter was replaced by a variety of specials before the timeslot was given over to reruns of the first season episodes of THE X FILES. The final episode for the series "Countdown" was not aired during the show's original run.

Although they made 13 episodes for this series, only the first 5 episode was included in the original run before the show was cancelled.

Filled with international intrigue and espionage, as well as style, romance and humor, Fortune Hunter is a one-hour high-tech spy adventure series that follows the exploits of Carlton Dial played by Mark Frankel. Dial is an ex-government agent whose high-risk assignments take him to exotic locales and into extreme danger, all in the name of recovering some of the world's most sought-after items, classified information, complex weapons systems, and the occasional endangered species, which have fallen into the wrong hands for a handsome fee.

Now working as a master agent for the Intercept Corporation, a high-tech global recovery organization based in San Francisco, Dial and his partner, the affable Harry Flask (John Robert Hoffman) execute incredible complex plans to retrieve these valuable items, depending on split-second timing and an astounding array of sophisticated electronic gadgetry.

Suave, charming and self-assured, Dial uses his quick wit and sense of humor to get him out of many precarious situations. A man's man who is irresistible to women, Dial underneath his wink and smile performs his high-risk assignments with deadly seriousness. Determined to keep his perfect success record intact, he depends upon split-second timing and an astounding array of sophisticated electronic gadgetry not to mention his partner, Harry. Dial wears a special contact lens with a built-in camera and an electronic earpiece, so Harry can see and hear everything that Dial does. This also allows Harry to speak with Dial, relaying information to the agent immediately, from the safety of the home office.

As Dial travels the globe, Harry shares dangerous missions with Dial while linked to him by computer. He is in charge of the technological end, seeing and hearing everything Dial sees and hears, and providing the information not readily available to the average person. But much is left to Harry's imagination as the details of Dial's private life remain well, private.

The humor in their pairing is that each man believes that he is the one in charge. Dial is the agent with "the perfect recovery record," the one who is always in danger, while Flack, the technological wizard, sees himself as "the brains," and lives vicariously through his partner, which often can get Dial into trouble.

Best know to American television audiences for his portrayal of Simon Bolt on the NBC series Sisters, Mark Frankel was thrilled to be starring in his first primetime network series and was looking to make his mark felt on American audiences. "I want to put into the series a great level of unpredictability so that you never know what Dial's going to say or do next." According to Frankel, Carlton Dial has "a really great sense of humor, even in the most dangerous and difficult situations a sort of high-energy, sweaty, dangerous feel to it, as opposed to that super-smooth, cool, calm, James Bond feel."

In the US, Fortune Hunter aired on Fox from 4 Sep 1994 to 2 Oct 1994. Of the 13 episodes produced, only five were presented to the North American audience. The show has aired in its entirety throughout the rest of the world.

Glou Man Chou, ruler of the empire Lexos, desires to conquer planet Earth. However, the Eiffel Tower generates a barrier around the planet that keeps him from sending his armies en masse. Glou Man Chou sends his warriors and monsters to Earth in order to destroy the tower and enable a full scale invasion, but they are opposed by the France Five.

Jushi Sentai France Five (Jūshi Sentai Furansu Faibu?, translated as Musketeers Squadron France Five) (later known as Shin Kenjushi France Five (Shin Kenjūshi Furansu Faibu?, translated as New Sword Musketeers France Five)), is a French series produced by Buki X-1 Productions in 2000s. It is an homage to Toei's ever-popular Super Sentai Series, which was extremely popular in France in the 1980s. There have been four half-hour episodes of France Five made, with a fifth (supposedly the conclusion) underway.

This series is said to be a nod to another Sentai pastiche, Aikoku Sentai Dai-Nippon (Patriot Squadron Great Japan) (1982) by Daicon Films (now Gainax).

Interestingly, the series has become somewhat popular in Japan as well, with singer Akira Kushida singing an original theme for Episode 4. Prior to that point, the themes were French remixes of older sentai theme songs.

FRANKENSTEIN : THE TRUE STORY

Dr. Frankenstein decides to create a monster from body parts of dead humans. Frankenstein is blackmailed by Dr. Polidori into creating a mate for it.

The first SF mini-series used a highly prestigious scriptwriter and lined up a series of cameo performances by the likes of James Mason, John Gielgud and Agnes Moorehead, but its attempts to fill the available time with melodramatic embellishments to the plot led it sadly astray and it ended up was a weak combination of the overfamiliar and the unnecessary.

A film version of this two part mini-series was also produced and released in 1973. Writers Isherwood and Bacardy, clearly the prime movers in the endeavour, seek to redefine and articulate an aspect of Shelly's novel that is missing from so many of the films derived from it, the relationship between Frankenstein (here Whitting) and the creature (here Sarrazin), which is further intensified by the facial similarities of the two actors. Thus Sarrazin becomes not the 'other' - he is born not as a mangled mass of humanity, but as a beautiful innocent - parallels the emotional collapse of his master who, disgusted with his creation, rejects it.

It is this, rather than the suggested parallels between the characters of the novel and those present while Mary Shelly was writing it (Byron, Shelly and Dr. Polidori) which is made in the prologue, that is the driving force of the serial. Thus, despite his rejection of the monster, Frankenstein finds himself tied to his creation. He is blackmailed by Mason's Dr. Polidori into creating a mate for it (Seymour) and finally he finds the monster on board the ship when he flees, Whereupon, after the monster has killed his wife (Paget), he finally accepts his responsibilities and amongst the Arctic wastes brings down an avalanche that buries them both. The serial was produced by Hunt Stromberg Jnr., cinematographer was Arthur Ibbetson, the special effects were created by Roy Whybrow.

Green lighted by Universal TV as Dr. Frankenstein this production was the dream child of American TV producer Hunt Stromberg Jnr. His ambition was to make a definitive version, which was faithful to the original novel. Stromberg recruited one of his favourite authors, Christopher Isherwood, to pen the script with the American scribe Don Bachardy on hand to oversee the scripts development. Isherwood was also instrumental in convincing Stromberg and Universal that ideal locations could only be found in the UK, despite the novels setting of Switzerland. Stromberg also selected Jack Smight as the director having seen his previous films The Illustrated Man and No Way To Treat A Lady.

With the production based at Pinewood Studios locations were found nearby at a Kensington hospital and around Denham and Bray. British union rules stated that a majority of the production crew had to come from Britain and so Stromberg set about recruiting the cream of British technicians. Cinemaphotography was handled by Arthur Ibbetson who had worked on Anne of Green Gables, Where Eagles Dare and The Railway Children. Roy Ashton, a veteran of many Hammer Films created the make up for the production, whilst special effects were handled by the Casino Royale veteran Roy Whybrow. Production designer Wilfred Shingleton had designed the camouflage used by the Allied invasion fleet in 1944 as well as working on such high calibre films as The Innocents, The African Queen and Roman Polanski's version of Macbeth. Production manager Brian Burgess had previously worked on the Gerry Anderson productions Thunderbirds, Captain Scarlet and the 1969 film Doppelganger. Burgess had recently finished work on Alfred Hitchcock's 1972 film Frenzy. Film editor Richard Marden also had distinguished credits with work on such classic productions as Bedazzled, Anne Of A Thousand Days, Sunday Bloody Sunday and Sleuth.

Casting wise Stromberg also went for respected thespians to compliment his technical staff. The pivotal role of Doctor Frankenstein was given to Leonard Whiting as Stromberg admired his performance in Franco Zeffereilli's Romeo and Juliet. Michael Sarrazin played the creature itself on the strength of his performance in They Shoot Horses Don't They? Stromberg had wanted James Mason for the role of Doctor Polidori from the start of production, but the actor had recently tried to get away from typecasting in villainous roles. However, on reading the script Mason readily agreed to undertake the role. David McCallum was assigned the role of

The descendents of Frankenstein attempt to carry on his dream in this satirical series of fantastic adventures.

The series was produced by Kurt J. Mrkwicka, the original music was by Guido De Angelis and Maurizio De Angelis, the costume design was by Claudia Stich.

This is an international co-production between Austria, the then Czechoslovakia, the then West-Germany, and France.

The character of White lady was inspired by mass murderer countess Alzbeta Bathory who tortured literally hundreds of maidens to death. According to legend, she was doomed to walk in her castle at nights forever as a white lady. In this series, White lady's name is Alzbeta and in one scene she is luring young girl into underground.

Series was known under its working title "Vnuk Frankensteinovej tety" (Grandson of Frankenstein's Aunt). Since Max is not relative to Frankenstein's aunt, the title was shortened to "Frankensteinova teta" (Frankenstein's Aunt). Finally, the series was aired in Slovakia under the title "Teta" (Aunt).

Premier date was the earliest data I could find for this series, which was the West German date, I suspect that the series was shown in France and the Netherlands in 1990, and former Czechoslovakia in 1987.

FRANKENSTIEN (2004)

"A classic tale of undying love. "

Another adaption of Mary Shelley's novel about a scientist who brings life to a creature fashioned from corpses and various body parts.

Someone once told me Dracula is the most filmed story of all time. I'm not sure whether they were only counting films actually named "Dracula" or including films inspired by it. But something tells me Frankenstein is a very close second. When I asked to review the title, I thought this was the USA Network version of the story, which featured Parker Posey. Imagine my surprise when I opened the envelope to find Donald Sutherland, William Hurt, and "Paul Atreides" staring back at me. And worse Hallmark Entertainment was credited as the production company, so right away I knew I was in for the greeting card version of the story. [Ed. note: Hey, they also produced Farscape, Brett!] Maybe it will be brief. No such luck there the box read two hundred and four minutes. Let's say it was the first time I was terrified to sit down and watch Frankenstein, because this was Hallmark's Frankenstein (2004).

This is certainly not going to be anywhere close to the James Whale 1930s version of Frankenstein. First off Luke Goss as The Creature? Luke is a pop star in Britain, and may only be familiar to you as "that first super vamp" in the opening sequence of Blade 2. He is also famous for his forays into musical theatre, and once starred in an on stage adaptation of Plan 9 From Outer Space. He's pretty handsome. Not rugged Mel Gibson Mad Max handsome, but pretty as in Rick Springfield General Hospital handsome (or any member of Duran Duran). And Dr. Frankenstein is portrayed by the star of both of the SciFi Channel's Dune miniseries. He's kinda pretty too. Also featuring Donald Sutherland (Ordinary People, and that '70s remake of Invasion of the Body Snatchers) and William Hurt (Kiss of the Spider Woman). This screams "new take on an old story."

The film was shot in 2003 on location in Bratislava, Slovakia. It has some breathtakingly beautiful countrysides in it, and a real Eastern European village flair. But can someone tell me how Hallmark always gets their movies to look like they were shot in the '70s? There's always this incredible soft gauziness to their camera work it makes me wonder if they have some special patented filter that immediately lets you know what channel the movie should be shown on. The director, Kevin Connor, is a veteran of over forty television productions and Motel Hell, while the teleplay was written by Mark Kruger, who's biggest title has been Candyman: Farewell to the Flesh. At least they both have some horror films under their belts.

This particular adaptation is not centered on the horror story; it combines Mary Shelley's novel with some film conventions to make it a love story a Gothic love story of epic proportions, to be exact. It opens as Victor Frankenstein and The Creature are chasing each other in dogsleds across the Arctic tundra. The good doctor goes down, and is rescued by Donald Sutherland, the captain of an ice ship. Frankenstein begins to tell him his story. Poor Sutherland must have had painful butt sores afterwards, because his story apparently takes three hours. We see Victor's entire life, from childhood to his studies at University to unleash the secrets of life and electricity. We also get to see the life of The Creature, which is a pretty sad and lonely tale throughout. You see, this time The Creature is a sympathetic hero, who looks disturbingly attractive for a reanimated corpse. He has perfect teeth, killer eyebrows, some fabulous cheek bones, and a body that suggests the doctor was getting corpses from 24 Hour Fitness. And yet people still throw stones at him, and chase him from their homes and villages. Okay He could be a Chippendale dancer, and people are afraid of him? Sure. He also reads Milton's Paradise Lost, and talks extremely well. There are scenes where he debates philosophy (which is, in fact, pretty close to the source novel).

I know the love story is supposed to be between Victor and Elizabeth, but honestly this version has me thinking it's a West Hollywood gay fable. Take for instance the creation scene. It's done in Victor's bedroom; he has electrical conduits hooked up to his dead hottie in a bathtub. Victor runs around in a nightshirt, boxers, and jaunty black leather boots. The Creature is lounging in a bath covered only with some gauze strategically placed over his face and privates. He comes to life, and they both swoon and faint. The Creature wakes him by clasping his face in his hands, in a very sweet motion that made me wonder if they were about to lock lips. They both end up screaming and running into the night (closet cases?); Victor forgets to get dressed. The Creature puts on a suit and stumbles out into the brave new world. The whole time the monster is loose he looks like Cher or Marilyn Manson with a lot less make-up (not too hard to do, come to think of it). Anytime he does anything remotely bad he cries. Yes streams of salty tears issue from The Creature. And he basically stalks Victor, as if to say "If you won't love me then nobody is gonna love you!" It's three hours of watching two men torture each other over an unconsummated love affair.

Maybe The Rocky Horror Picture Show wasn't as much of a spoof as I originally thought. This version has little in the way of gore or horror, so it could be considered family-friendly. Trouble is, the kids may pick up on the more homoerotic elements, and then you'd have lots of explaining to do. Gothic horror is filled with sex anyway. I always thought the real crime of Frankenstein in the novel was that he skipped women in the reproductive process. He made women obsolete, and created his own life without any consummation. So maybe these filmmakers are on to something!

The film is slowly paced, but not unbearably so. It's very pretty in every aspect. Even when people die it ends with them looking as if they're ready to do an Abercrombie and Fitch photo shoot here, death becomes our characters. What can I say? It's no longer a tale of horror as much as it is a fashionable jog through Eastern Europe. Still, there are many sequences that harken back to Shelley's original vision. But why do they feel the need to flesh it out so much and add the accepted Hollywood mythos into the story? I have yet to see a true adaptation of the written story, where voodoo and science bring the monster to life. The acting is fine throughout, and we even get some fun turns from Sutherland and Hurt. They are never central to the story, but they add flavor where needed. If you have someone special in your life who detests horror movies, this is the version to show them.

The DVD is presented in full screen, and the transfer is fine except for grain in some of the darker scenes (of which there are few). There is a very brief featurette, mostly talking with the leads about their approaches to the characters and the story. They seem to think they are making a more compassionate story rather than the typical Frankenstein. It made me think of James Whale, who did succeed in both scaring us and making us sympathize with Boris Karloff's creature. And did it in well under two hours! Here we just want to give The Creature a big hug and have him read some Milton to us. I wanted to hire the Creature as a personal trainer and have him cut my hair. The doctor comes off as the monster here. He keeps rejecting the poor guy, when all he wants is someone to call "Daddy." If you like your monsters full of philosophy and extremely dateable this is your Frankenstein.

Guilty, guilty, guilty! Guilty pleasure, too. The prettiest Frankenstein ever!

Since I was a kid, I am fascinated for the romantic and dramatic tale of Frankenstein, and I have probably seen all the adaptations released in Brazil. This television version was a nice surprise for me: although unnecessary, I liked very much since it is not a simple remake. The locations are wonderful, and the film is very well produced. I liked also the dramatic performance of the unknown Luke Goss in the role of the needy creature; his character clearly expresses the need to be loved and to love. Donald Sutherland is great as usual, and Alec Newman does not disappoint in the role of the scientist Viktor Frankenstein. The DVD released in Brazil has 154 minutes running time, and when I see in IMDb that in USA the DVD has 204 min and in UK, 268 min, I dare to say that the edition in Brazil was perfect, with a fluent continuity. I really do not know which parts were cut, but certainly they were not important.

FREAKYLINKS

Freakylinks premiered on FOX in fall 2000. This sci-fi drama utilizes the power of the Internet to recount tales of the unexpected. From his home base deep in central Florida, webmaster Derek Barnes was content running FreakyLinks.com, an underground web site devoted to debunking paranormal mysteries. Until the day when images of his long-deceased twin brother Adam - showing him still alive - showed up in his e-mail. Now following the trail to uncover this seemingly impossible occurrence, Derek, together with his brother's ex-fiancée Chloe, finds himself immersed in a subculture of the strange and unusual. He learns that sometimes the impossible is, indeed, possible. In a television first, the series will exist simultaneously on television and on the Internet, allowing series viewers to delve further into the show's mythology via the web site, www.FreakyLinks.com

Freakylinks premiered on FOX this past Friday night, October 6th, and if originality is what you're looking for on tv this year - this is the show for you. It's from the creators of the Blair Witch Project and if you didn't like Blair Witch you've got nothing to worry about because Freakylinks is nothing like it, mainly because this series has a plotline. The only resemblance to Blair Witch is the hand-held camera that we, the viewers, often get to watch the action through. For me this only adds to the originality and eeriness of the series.

The premise of the show is based upon the Freakylinks website that documents paranormal activity. The show is a nicely blended mix of the weirdness of Poltergeist, the subject matter of the first few seasons of The X-Files, along with the best elements of Millennium and many new twists of its own.

The series revolves around Derek Barnes, played by Ethan Embry (most recently from the film Can't Hardly Wait), who, after his brother died, took over the Freakylinks website and all the paranormal investigation that goes along with it. The first episode explored the mystery and supernatural nature of his brother's death.

The second episode "Subject: Three Thirteen" was very up-with-the-times due to the renewed popularity of The Exorcist and the new Winona Ryder film Lost Souls. Derek and his crew are contacted by a worried husband whose wife, Vicki, is eight months pregnant and seemingly possessed. This becomes a race against time for the Freakylinks group because Vicki has been exhibiting all kinds of strange behavior, from pouring gasoline all over herself to playing flawless piano pieces (she never had any interest in music before), to emitting possessed screams and choking on and spitting out oil as if it were vomit.

All of this occurs right around 3:13 a.m. each night. Eventually, the group is led to a missing girl whose name is spelled out in a toy set of baby's blocks in Vicki's future baby's bedroom. Derek and his crew determine that the missing girl is trying to make contact through Vicki. All the clues lead them to a sewage pit used as an oil runoff near an abandoned business.

Derek finds the dead body of the girl inside the pit. A few twists come next, and I won't ruin them in case you want to catch this episode in reruns, but in essence, the least expected good-guy turns bad and winds up being the real killer of the young girl. The group uncovers the truth through Vicki's possession.

The effect of using the hand-held digital camera views really adds a welcomed and suspenseful flare to the mix. This effect creates a 'claustrophobic' feeling because the viewers are only able to see what Jason (Karim Prince - the group's cameraman) allows us to see. The viewer is constantly aware there is more going on outside the camera's view, which adds to the suspense by not knowing what is going to pop up next.

FOX has been using the tagline "Witness something freaky from the creators of the Blair Witch, it's a website with a life all its own," as a tagline and it's very appropriate because the web site for the show at <http://www.freakylinks.com> really does have a life of its own.

On the site you can: look into Derek's diary dating back to 1998 featuring soundbites and written journal entries, post and reply to messages about paranormal activity, look up terminology used in the show in the "Freak-o-pedia", email Derek and a lot of other freaky-stuff. FOX has gone all-out with this show by creating something behind the mutilations.

FREEDOM

Four rebels band together to fight against totalitarian rule in the United States of the near-future. In this episode: The unit must rescue the kidnapped family of a former U.S. general.

This is without a doubt, one of the finest shows on television today. It's not the best, but one of the very best. What you have here in Freedom is a well cast, well written, and well balanced show. The characters are not the typical formulaic ones. Londo is the clever, one liner kind of guy but he can back it up. Usually these characters are over the top, but in this show is plays perfectly. Decker is the soft spoken, but tough as nails leader, wanting revenge for the death of his wife, and his son who was taken from him. This also is a nice departure, as he is a very complex person who you have to watch in an episode to understand what I mean. As it is hard to describe, it's something you need to see for yourself. Becca, is the strong, fast, and agile female, whom while she doesn't talk much, she sure makes for a well rounded character. She has her comedic moments, and serious ones, and she is so graceful on the screen, not to mention beautiful, she makes for probably the breakout character in the show. Then there is James, otherwise known as "J." He is the loyal, but not afraid to tell the truth, no nonsense kind of guy. Who uses his pent up anger to fight. All these characters have their own sense of humor to them, that really fleshes out how real they are. The actors who play these characters, have been given a role that fits them to a "t." That really showcases their talents. You can click on their names to see their other works, but these are very capable actors, who I think have been given the show of a lifetime. They have a great chemistry with each other, the play off each other so well, it makes the show more believable.

The show blends very well a mix of everything. From the camera angles in the slo-mo action scenes, to the wicked scoring by Eddie Jobson. The show is very smooth visually. Yet it is also smooth mentally, the stories thus far for the episodes have been extremely solid. They have proven to be very tight, intricate and neatly tied together. The second episode had many sub-plots that proved to make for one hell of an episode, that really showed off how good the writing is. The show does not insult the audience at all. It's very reminiscent of First Wave, in that Freedom more than respects its audience. It rewards us for watching and doesn't hit us over the head with action. There is really excellent dialogue in the show, and the writers do not give away much through the episode. You think one thing will happen, when they do something else. There is a real balance to this show.

The fights themselves are well done, and turn out very natural and just have the right flow to them. The stunts that get the slo-mo speed really show off what the show can do for action and eye candy. It's Matrix-like, but it is not the Matrix. The stunts here are grounded in reality, and do not go beyond that. That adds credibility in my book. It's refreshing to see a clever show with so much heart come up on UPN. In the end this show is about one thing, standing up and fighting for what you believe in. There's no greater message in this world to convey, and with everything else this show has in itself. It truly is nice to see UPN supporting high quality television in the show known as Freedom.

Two years prior to the events in Freedom a series of major catastrophes had thrown the United States of America into chaos. First, wide scale war in the Middle East. Then the US stock market collapsed, thrusting the country into a period of violence and disarray. Air Force One was shot down, killing the President, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff placed the country under martial law.

The four main characters, Owen Decker (Holt McCallany), James "Jay" Barrett (Darius McCrary), Londo Pearl (Bodhi Elfman), and Becca Shaw (Scarlett Chorvat) were all members of various branches of the military who were imprisoned after refusing to go along with a military coup.

For Decker, however, imprisonment was the least of his worries. His wife had been killed by Colonel Devon (James Morrison) when the military had come to arrest him. The four spent over fifteen months enduring the hardships of prison life; the food, the beatings, the forced fights, and a particularly nasty form of punishment known as "the rat cage" for disobeying orders.

Freedom premiered on Friday, October 27th, 2000 at 8:00PM on UPN. The series was aired as part of UPN's Friday night two-hour action/adventure block, made up of Freedom and Level 9, which followed Freedom at 9:00PM. The series was produced by Joel Silver, the man responsible for 1999's blockbuster The Matrix. UPN hoped to tap into the young male demographic with plenty of martial arts.

Initial response to the series had been hampered by the fact that the pilot was unavailable during the usual September review period, which precipitated the late premiere date for the series. Overall, the series was mostly panned for its outrageous fight scenes and implausible premise. Still, it delivered what it promised, non stop action sequences filled with kickboxing, flips and plenty of explosions.

The premiere episode drew roughly 3.6 million viewers which was almost thirty percent higher than the Friday Night Movie was averaging during the 1999-2000 season but ironically a bit lower than the one-off reality special that the network had plugged into its schedule the week before. However, ratings tumbled quickly and the series was averaging only 2.6 million viewers by early December and was regularly ranked last in its timeslot and second-to-last in the weekly ratings.

"Still after a year and a half I still feel sick that freedom was canceled, You know what I would like to do go to the upn HQ and kick Dean Valentine in the ass(ceo of upn) and fire his entire programming dept. because it's painfully obvious that they have no idea what they are doing they still can't keep any good show's on."

In the pilot episode, after each of the characters is confronted and arrested by members of the Regime, they eventually escape from prison with the help of the Resistance, a nation-wide network of freedom fighters trying to bring democracy and order back to the country.

Thus, each episode saw the four battling their way through some manner of important mission for the Resistance. Colonel Devon was keen on hunting down Decker and the group had almost weekly run-ins with the Regime. They also had to contend with racketeers taking advantage of the lawlessness rampant throughout the country.

The second episode, for example, saw the team attempt to steal prison codes from the Regime, only to be stuck dragging a young woman (played by the late Kellie Waymire) along with them as they fled Colonel Devon and his goons. In another, featuring a guest spot by Verne Troyer, the team attempted to buy a few Stinger missiles. Things got complicated when the missiles were stolen.

Preview For "Assassins" When the Federal Reserve Chairman wants to defect and join the Resistance, Decker & Co. are sent in. But the Chairman's daughter is convinced the Resistance is made up of terrorists. With $10 billion on the line, the team has to work fast to safeguard the Chairman and his family.

The next episode involved an important meeting between several leaders of Resistance cells. After their plane crashes, stranding the team and the resistance leaders, a cave-in catches the group off-guard. As if that wasn't enough, one of the leaders was a traitor.

Scarlett Chorvat's character of Becca Shaw got a moment to shine in an episode titled "Siege," in which her estranged brother was captured by the Regime. The team has been ordered to blow up the floating central command of a deadly Regime killer. Decker, Jay and Londo are captured and it is up to Becca and her brother to save the day.

The final episode, broadcast January 5th, 2001, involved a small town and a deadly toxin that the Regime wanted. After Londo is infected and Becca is captured, Jay and Decker have to join forces with local teenagers to find an antidote. Disappointed with the low ratings UPN cancelled Freedom after only seven episodes had aired, replacing it with a comedy series entitled Gary & Mike.

"It was a great show and I can't stand when shows such as this one are overlooked because of an enormous amount of interest in the watered-down shows in which compete against them. :o("

LuvBash* A total of twelve episodes of Freedom were produced. Level 9 was kept on for an additional two episodes before also getting the boot. In perhaps a somewhat amusing twist for the few fans of Freedom angered at the show's cancellation, the series tied for 151st for the season with an average rating of 1.6 while Gary & Mike, the series UPN replaced Freedom with, was 156th. Level 9 ranked 158th.

In January of 2001, when the series was pulled from UPN's schedule (technically placed on hiatus, not outright cancelled), there were rumors that the remaining five episodes would be burned off during the summer repeat season. As of February 2006, however, those last five episodes have never been broadcast in the United States. Four episodes of Level 9 also remain unaired, out of a total of thirteen produced.

Only a few months after UPN stopped airing the series in the United States, the Warner Channel in Brazil began broadcasting episodes of Freedom on Tuesdays at 9:00PM. All seven episodes were aired. And they were shown again. And then again. Following the airing of the last episode for the third time a new, different episode was shown. Throughout April of 2001 several of the unaired episodes were seen in Brazil, perhaps for the first time anywhere.

Still From "Return" In May of 2001 the actual "final" episode aired, the 12th episode of the 12 episodes originally ordered by UPN. Entitled "Ransom" the episode actually brought the series to a close, wrapping things up and seeing the characters go their separate ways. The series continued airing in Brazil.

Episode summaries for the five unaired episodes were provided by a fan of the series from Brazil who was kind enough to write them up as well as an anonymous source who worked on Freedom, who wished the entire series could have aired. A big thank you to Rosana from Brazil and the anonymous source for these summaries:

"Thieves"

In this episode Decker found his son and he almost gets [to] rescue him. [T]hey get in the Regime Operational Complex Building to rob a list [containing] the collaborators' of the Regime names, when Devon get[s] in the building to capture them.

"Return"

A Resistance agent in a Regime-run women's prison. The team must infiltrate and evacuate before a sadistic doctor manages to crack their target. A character from "Alpha Dogs" returns.

"Live Wire"

A meeting of the top former politicians and the top military brass set the stage for a living bomb scare. A fake "Military Threat" allows the Regime to clear out their people, but the team has to fight top security in order to 'save the senators'. Watch for Dedication

"Mind Game"

A mind control lab in a Regime prison. The team must rescue a Resistance agent, but Decker is drugged and caught in an elaborate ruse. The team must find and assist him before he gives away vital information.

"Ransom"

With Devon and Ten Zulu closing in, the team matches wits with a gang leader from Jin's past. The prize? Nothing less than the Regime's operating system. Listen to the closing lines of the series here.

"SBT, the 2nd bigger brazilian TV station is reprising Freedom, ALL episodes, including the one that not have being shown in USA :) To be truth, it is being reprised here since 2002, but only now they are caring about to advertise it :))"

Fernando After premiering in Brazil in early 2001 the series then went on to air in Greece in July, the Netherlands and Canada (on GlobalTV at 2:00 in the morning) in August, and in Israel in September. Freedom kept going. In April of 2002 the series was still airing in Brazil, the same twelve episodes running over and over, this time on another station.

In January of 2003 the series began airing in Malaysia and in Australia (Channel Nine) on May 23rd, 2003. Freedom also aired in Poland, although exactly when it aired is unknown. In July of 2003 it was still being shown in Brazil, on Saturdays. This is the last known airing of Freedom anywhere in the world; over two years after UPN canned the series, it was still being broadcast.

In addition to the five unaired episodes that were shown in other countries, there was one other episode that international viewers were shown. The original, unaired pilot episode for Freedom, one that starred Vincent Spano and Lance Henrikson. Midway through 2000 UPN began airing short promotional spots for Freedom. These promo spots, some were only six seconds in length, contained scenes from the original pilot episode.

Early UPN Promo For viewers in the United States, these promos contain the only footage available from the original pilot. As with many television shows, Freedom's first episode was reworked, rewritten and refilmed before hitting the airwaves. There were cast changes in addition to script changes. The overall feel of the pilot was changed.

"freedom just ended in south africa tonight and it ended with the original episode of freedoms pilot which was brilliant but not the same without holt.

Anyway ciao"

The character of Owen Decker (played by Holt McCallany), was absent from the original pilot. Instead, a similar character by the name of Colonel Cally Beach was portrayed by actor Vincent Spano. Also missing was Georg Stanford Brown and his character of General Walker Young. Lance Henrikson played a Mister Young, who fulfilled the same role as General Walker Young, more or less.

According to Hans Tobeason, the creator of Freedom UPN executives were not happy with the name Cally Beach and they did not believe that Vincent Spano could pull in the coveted young demographic. So the role was recast. As for Lance Henrikson, he was simply too expensive and his role was recast as well.

Freedom was created by Hans Tobeason, who also executive produced and wrote for the series. Mr. Tobeason has been writing for television since the early 1990s and has worked on seaQuest DSV, Now & Again, The Adventures of Brisco County, Jr., and more recently he has written episodes of Star Trek: Enterprise and Birds Of Prey.

As creator and executive producer of Freedom, Mr. Tobeason was the man to go to with question about the original pilot episode. In an e-mail interview conducted in April of 2001 Mr. Tobeason kindly agreed to answer a few questions about the original pilot:

Why was it decided that Holt McCallany would play the lead, Owen Decker, instead of Vincent Spano as Cally Beach?

Hans: This was a case of the classic network request - "We LOVE the show, but don't think that Vince plays young enough for our audience." Then they decided that they didn't like the name "Cally Beach". Then they decided they didn't really like the whole damn script. So we recast, and I rewrote.

Lance Henrikson was originally playing a Mister Young, but Georg Stanford Brown ended up portraying General Young. Why the switch?

Hans: When I rewrote the script, the role changed. I loved Lance, but he was too expensive for us on an episodic budget. So - we got Georg, who was fantastic, by the way. He had two scenes - the announcement scene, and the lakeside scene. Both scenes were much longer in script, but in the episode we had to keep cutting them down per network request.

I have a copy of a preview for Freedom the has Beach talking, and then Devon. It appears from the preview that at first, the team is working w/Devon? Is this correct?

Hans: In the original pilot, Beach and the three others are already an elite team. Devon is their commanding officer. The team mutinies, get thrown in the Hole, escape, etc. In "Alpha Dogs", they meet in the Hole for the first time.

What was the original pilot going to be about? Was it much different than Alpha Dogs?

Hans: The original was the same concept, but the mission once they escaped the Hole was different. See above answer as well. I actually like the original better - it was cooler, and had more attitude. But maybe I'm just being nostalgic.

Last question, do you happen to know the names of the actress who played Beach's wife, and the actor who played his son?

Hans: Meagan Beach was played, in the original pilot, by Lureen Music. She's a Canadian actress. We decided to change because we thought we needed someone with a little more experience - it was my intention to use Meagan as a recurring character in the series. Also, for the original pilot, we needed to cast someone who was not uncomfortable with partial nudity. That limited our choices. I did think, however, that Lureen did a great job. I cannot remember the name of the kid - I'm assuming you mean the baby in the original pilot.

Thanks a lot for your response. I am sure other fans will enjoy reading about the original pilot. Thanks again.

Hans: It is my pleasure. It has been very nice to have so many people take such an interest in the show. I am sorry that we couldn't keep it on the air. Hans.

Although technically unaired in the United States, the original pilot has been shown internationally. It was shown in The Netherlands on September 23rd, 2001, on Channel V8. Some viewers were understandably confused when the original pilot episode aired without any explanation. The original pilot was also broadcast in Poland, Malaysia, and South Africa.

1 - 1 ALPHA DOGS

In the near future, war has broken out in the Middle East, Air Force One has been shot down and the U.S. President is assumed to be dead. As a result, riots are rampant and there are major food and power shortages. The Joint Chiefs of Staff declare martial law and the military takes over the government. Several members of the military refuse to obey orders to take part in the takeover. Among them are Captain Owen Decker who is the commander of an elite Marine Corps unit called "10 Zulu." During his arrest, his wife is shot by his commanding officer, Colonel Devon, and his son is taken to parts unknown. Three other special ops personnel are also arrested. All four end up in William Jefferson Clinton Federal Prison. They end up spending 15 months in prison. The four find and befriend each other in prison and eventually are broken out by the "Resistance" - a group dedicated to bringing down the current military regime in power and restoring the Constitution. After being broken out, the four team members are asked to save the family of the former Joint Chief of Staff who realized his mistake in allowing the military to take over and now wants out. The team rescues the man's wife and daughters from the compound which is also the base for Decker's former commander - the one who shot his wife and took his son. During the ensuing fight, Decker finds out that his son is alive and Colonel Devon knows where he is. After completing the mission, the team decide to stick together and fight for the resistance. They are aided by a mysterious woman, Jin, who acts as their contact and gives them their assignments.

1 - 2 THE CHASE

The team is ordered to break into an Internet switching center to steal computer codes which will be used to break several key members of the resistance out of prison. Decker and Londo break in while Becca and Jay are in charge of transportation. Decker and Londo fight their way in and download the codes but when they escape, Jay and Becca are nowhere to be found - they've been stopped by two cops because Jay threw a candy bar wrapper out the van window. Desperate to escape, Londo and Decker carjack an SVU and its occupant - Maggie Ford, a young nurse at a nearby clinic. Unbeknownst to them, a security camera took their picture and sent it straight to the Pentagon where Colonel Devon sees it and scrambles 10 Zulu - Decker's old unit. Maggie is unimpressed with the resistance (and Londo in particular) and doesn't believe in what they are doing. While on their way to a rendezvous with Jin to deliver the codes, the team are chased by the police because James was speeding. During the chase, Londo is shot by one of the cops with a shotgun while trying to protect Maggie. The four escape and stop at a small town diner to have dinner. While there, the sheriff demands to see their papers and Decker cites it as an example to Maggie about just how little freedom Americans do have. Aggravated, Maggie spies a cell phone on the diner counter and pockets it. While in the restroom, she calls her home phone number knowing that it is bugged and hoping the military will find her. Back at the Pentagon, the call is traced to the diner and Col

Devon heads out with 10 Zulu to the diner. When they arrive, the team is nowhere in sight and the waitress at the diner tells him that she doesn't know where they went. In actuality, the team are hiding in the air vents above the ceiling and behind the counter - the waitress and the rest of the patrons in the diner are protecting them. Devon heads out and the waitress tells Decker and the team that while they can't actively join in the fight, they can do what they can, when they can. One of the diners, however, is not so gracious and copies down the license plate number of the team's van as they leave. The Pentagon uses a spy satellite to find the van and 10 Zulu tracks the team down to an abandoned bus graveyard. Londo is able to take out four members of 10 Zulu by blowing up a trailer but the team are unarmed and outnumbered. They split up and Decker and Maggie are captured by Col Devon trying to escape. Maggie is hauled off by a soldier while Col Devon and Decker have it out. Decker escapes from Devon. James and Becca are pinned down by fire but Maggie uses a board to hit the soldier on the head. He turns to fire on her but Londo rescues her and they and the rest of the team escape. The team finally meets up with Jin who recovers the codes and takes Maggie with her since Maggie is now wanted.

FREEWHEELERS

Children's adventure series. A group of teenagers get involved in stopping various international criminals (as you do!).

Producer for the series was Chris McMaster, Roger Delgado, more famous for his role as the Master in DOCTOR WHO was a semi-regular to the series, playing the president of a fictional country called Spartika.

The Freewheelers, that certainly brings back memories! I have not seen the show since it was canceled nearly 30 years ago so I might be disappointed if I was to see it again. This show was consistent with the times as Enid Blyton and "boy's own" adventure story books were popular in those days. Today most kid's shows are about drugs, teenage pregnancies, problems with dopey or abusive parents and whose making out with who (for the British reader" who fancies who")

I can't remember the theme song for the show although I do remember Holtz's haunting classical piece "Mars, the bringer of war" which was often played either during a tense moment or else when an episode was coming to a climax. I also remember the evil Von Gelb who lived on what can best be described as a World war II E-boat, (the mounted gun turret was a dead give-away) which looking back must have given the harbor master cause for concern. Nobody who remembers the Freewheelers can forget the infamous rouges Ryan and Burke, who had the limp wrist-ed 'karate-chop' on the back of the neck down to a fine art. Even as an eight year old I was often surprised at how these two clowns were able to get the better of people, because by today's standard these two looked as hard as Laurel and Hardy.

During it's run the team changed over the years, (presumably the rotation was due to the fact that that some of the freewheelers eventually passed their A-levels and went to University, although how they had time to study is any bodies guess, wish I could have devoted so little time) which I think added to it's interest. Never the less despite some flaws the freewheelers 5-year run reflected how popular this show was for the 8-14 year olds (and perhaps older) during the late 60's and early 70's and I looked forward to watching it during the children's hour in the early evening.

One the most fondly remembered children's adventure series of its generation, Freewheelers was an adrenalin-charged 30 minute actioneer from Southern Television that featured all the gadgets of a decent Bond movie minus the sex and sadism.

The Freewheelers were a group of teenage (usually about 18 or 19 years old) agents working under the umbrella of MI5 and who got their orders from Colonel Buchan (Ronald Leigh-Hunt). The original line-up consisted of Chris Kelly (Gregory Phillips), Bill Cowan (Tom Owen) and Terry Driver (Mary Maude) and told the tale of a student who stumbled across a mystery at a railway station, teamed up with two similarly young bystanders and formed a mystery-cracking team.

The regular villain of the piece was a disgruntled Nazi called Von Gelb (Geoffrey Toone) who was trying to avenge Germany's defeat in the war. Von Gelb lived on a motor launch which would have been beyond the budget of most children's series. However, Southern Television owned an outside broadcasting/news gathering boat called The Southerner (the only British TV company to possess one), which conveniently doubled as the villain's craft and had numerous storylines devised around its employ.

The Von Gelb character was dropped when the series was sold to West Germany but the format remained the same with the current baddie bent on world domination via the kidnapping of a famous scientist who had just invented a new mind control drug, killer laser beam, etc...but the plotlines were usually secondary to the action which took the cast and crew to Spain, France, Holland and Sweden for location work. In all probability series producer Chris McMaster was able to gain backing from the various countries as he filmed almost travelogue style as recorded in the following quote from the ITV Guide to Independent Television 1974:

"The schedule was tight. In three crowded weeks it was planned to film at a colourful gypsy festival on the shores of the Mediterranean; on the desolate marshy wastes of the Camargue; at a chateau whose history dates back to the thirteenth century; in the shadows of the awesome 'Pont d'arc', a majestic natural bridge of rock more than 150 feet high and 200 feet wide, spanning the Ardèche."

Publicity stunts were also cleverly utilised, in the case of the French jaunt it appears that a French television service got wind of the filming and turned up under the misapprehension that a new James Bond movie was in the making. In the end the eight man French crew left but three of its team stayed on several days with the British location unit.

The cast of Freewheelers changed over its eight season run as the producer injected a little more sex appeal by casting Adrian Wright (as Mike Hobbs) to set female pulses racing with his pin-up good looks from series four, and former Doctor Who companion Wendy Padbury joining the cast (as Sue Craig) from series five. But there was never any suggestion that any of the characters ever enjoyed anything but a purely platonic relationship, being too busy racing around and swapping punches with the baddies.

A lot of Freewheelers was junked during the late seventies/early eighties purge of the archives, however, Mike Wormersley, the original film editor on the series privately saved many episodes and the entire first series was recovered in 2000 followed by a special screening of one complete adventure by the British Film Institute.

In its day Freewheelers was a refreshing change to the standard kids adventure series, being packed with fast cars, speedboats, punch-ups and pin-up characters -it wouldn't be out of place on today's television.

FRIGHTENERS

A series which looks at tales centred around the supernatural.

Though the series was aimed at young teenagers, the producer claimed that the plots and production values should appeal to all ages. The series opens with a story called The Promise, an episode written by the series' producer Charles Buchanan. Buchanan used to work as a primary school headteacher before leaving teaching to set up Myrddin Productions, the company behind Frighteners. Three of Buchanan's former pupils have roles in The Promise, all making their television debuts.

In an atmosphere of increased concern about what children are watching on television, surely tales of witchcraft and dark spirits are to be approached with caution? "They have got morals to them. They are not horror stories," Buchanan counters. "Potentially dark situations are resolved by the positive actions of the young people involved." Later episodes tell tales of poltergeists and black magic, and feature guest stars such as Hetty Wainthropp Investigates's Derek Benfield and The Biz's Nathan Constance and Hannah Lawrence. A one off taster for Frighteners was broadcast on Hallowe'en of 1996.

FTL NEWSFEED

FTL is a news media bringing news from the 22nd Century.

The first show ever shown on the SciFi Channel, FTL Newsfeeds were 30 second snippets of fictitious news info that was supposed to have come from the year 2142. This future timeline was fraught with stories of genetic engineering issues, technology trends, space exploration, future entertainment, right to privacy issues and geopolitical intrigue. The series was created by F.Paul Wilson and Matthew Costello and was filmed in New York. Costello's daughter Nora Costello appeared in one episode as Keva Handley, a child delinquent arrested for genetically mutating her little brother into a puff-rock lizard. The series ended in a cliffhanger in late 1996.

The World of 2142

The World of 2142 is markedly different from our own. Europe has united into the EC or European Community which had given it enormous economic and political sway. The United States had merged with Canada to form the NAU or North American Union, still very bold and ambitious though not as economically powerful. Japan, the Pacific Rim and all other East Asian nations excluding Australia combined into the NACPS or New Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere a new isolationist combine centered on improving itself from within, and not to be outdone the Holy Islamic Federation controls the Middle East and African regions.

The economy is controlled by a global banking entity called Cenbank, short for Central Bank and was based in Geneva Switzerland and all transfers were electronic and highly monitored by the bank's AI and President Barton Poole. The "FTL Newsfeed" came from this future world's "Commlink" system which acted as an interactive global information network that merges the internet, television programming of all sorts and virtual reality entertainment. There was even a special voting message shown during the 1992 Presidential Elections that had all "Commlink" functions suspended until the following day as if to coincide with the elections of 2142.

Life on Earth is often interesting with Virtual Reality simulations so real that addiction is very common. Holography allows users to modify the appearance of their dwellings or selves into more appealing facades. And violent "future-sports" enable face paced thrills with life and death consequences that keep the crowds coming back for more. Cloning has brought the extinct back to life and enabled mankind to create a subclass of humans that not only fill the need for cheap labor and exotic entertainment, but have now become a social cause for clone rights groups. In addition to Earthbound life there are The O'Neills -- a network of space stations and microwave generators that orbit the earth and Moon bases, representing the major economic combines. Lastly the great, if economically devastating experiment of terraforming Mars.

COMMLINK

Is the information hub for Earth, The Moon bases, Mars and the O'Neills. Based in a solar powered space platform bound to Earth's orbit, Commlink operates 24hrs a day with all the information, entertainment and communication needs required by citizens in the 22nd century. The news also known as "FTL Newsfeed" is delivered by a "virtual news anchor" (a disembodied photorealistic human male head that has been processed with visual effects to accentuate the mood of the messages it conveys). Whether this news anchor is a true virtual construct that is controlled by an Artificial Intelligence or if this is a real human that is visually augmented is not revealed. However, due to the fact that virtual reality and holograms play a big part of everyday life in 2142 the news anchor could indeed be a computer controlled construct.

WORLD COMBINES

The 22nd century globe has undergone a geopolitical change in comparison to today. The major nations have all undergone economic changes and unions allowing them greater financial stability and an increase in political cachet. They are as follows... (Taken from FTL Guide to the 22nd Century)

North American Economic Union (NAU)

Leader: President Madeleine Clarke

Capital: Chicago

Flag: the red & white stripes of USA with a white maple leaf alone on the blue corner field.

The United States and Canada fused to form the North America Economic Union. This Union has failed to compete successfully with either the European Community or the Hispanic Commonwealth. In a bold effort, the NAU committed itself to the terraforming of Mars, an on-going project that drained, and continues to drain, billions of credits and resources from the Union.

If "Habitat Mars" succeeds, it will provide the NAU with a world to populate, mine, and exploit. But hidden from the citizens of the Union are the many setbacks and the true cost.

The North America Economic Union uses the democratic system of elections to fill the post of President. The only change is the removal of the archaic Electoral College. There are still senators, congressmen and, in functioning cities, mayors.

European Community (EC)

Leader: Georges Favreau

Capital: Brussels

Flag: crossed gold swords in a circle of white stars centered on a field of Swiss blue.

The politically and economically unified European Community now stretches from Ireland to Russia.

Winner of the 21st Century's economic wars, the powerful EC glories in a revived medievalism, reflected in the culture, the sports, the architecture, and in some cases, their attitude toward the other Combines.

The politically and economically unified EC uses a parliamentary system similar to that of the old UK. The former independent countries of the EC have elected ministers and various parties which reflect concern over local trade issues, the size and power of the Hispanic Combine, and the need for a greater presence in space.

New Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere (NACPS)

Leader: Prince Sato Uchida

Capital: Singapore

Flag: the five gold stars of the present PRC flag centered on the red circle of the Japanese flag, on a white field surrounded by the I-Ching symbols from the present South Korean flag

Japan, in an effort to remain competitive with the EC, established the New Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere (which includes all the nations of the Pacific Rim and East Asia, save Australia). This resurrection of a Japanese hegemony in the Pacific quickly prompted other blocs to form combines.

Despite the size of the New Asian Co-Prosperity Sphere (NACPS), it has failed to compete against the EC. In reaction, the NACPS has turned inward, resorting to a new Closed Door policy like that faced by Admiral Peary in the 19th Century.

The NACPS is led by Japan, which has fully revived the old Shinto religion compete with ancestor worship and the rule of the royal family. Prince Uchida, therefore, functions as sole head of the vast empire, advised by representatives from the various countries.

Holy Islamic Federation (HIF)

Leader: Mullah Mohammed Zaganada

Capital: Cairo (HQ'd in a huge golden pyramid).

Flag: a crescent and three stars (borrowed from the current Egyptian flag) centered on the stripes of the current Ghana flag.

The Mid-eastern Islamic nations formed The Holy Islamic Federation (HIF) and, using oil as leverage, tried to become a major power. But the passing of the internal combustion engine (see POWER SOURCES) undercut their attempt.

The geographic region of the HIF includes all of Africa under HIF's very loose control. An increase in rain to the arid regions due to climactic changes and regional weather modification has led to a greening of the Sahara and a burgeoning agriculture in this region. HIF now supplies common and exotic fruits -- including genetically altered fruit -- to the world's wealthy.

The Holy Islamic Federation is a strict, fundamentalist theocracy. The HIF trades freely with the other combines, but regards them as infidels. Zaganada lets his combine vacillate between cautious acceptance and a nearly war-like paranoia. The other combines give the HIF a wide berth.

Hispanic Commonwealth (HC)

Leader: General Antonio Rodriguez

Capital: Bogota (in buildings modeled on the Mayan pyramids)

Flag: a sun face (borrowed from the current flags of either Uruguay or Argentina) centered on a field of green from the Brazil flag.

The Hispanic Commonwealth was built on the strength, money, and power of the Medellin Cartel which unified the Central and South American republics into a potent economic unit. But as drug use became decriminalized around the globe, the center of power shifted from Medellin. In what many consider an over-reaction, the HC is now the only combine with penalties for drug abuse.

One of the major tasks the HC has set for itself is the reforestation of the Amazon basin.

The Hispanic Commonwealth is a dictatorship, headed by General Rodriguez. Despite this fact, Rodriguez is loved and admired by the many members of the HC for the prosperity they currently enjoy. Such loyalty and financial success will embolden him to attempt to place a surcharge on all HC goods and services -- even a 'tax' for the air produced by the great jungles. Rodriguez's attempt at global extortion will fail.

Fortress Israel

Needless to say, Israel was not invited into the HIF and it became increasingly isolated from the rest of the economic combines. After a number of skirmishes with its neighbors, Israel was referred to as 'Fortress Israel' -- small, determined, armed to the teeth with the latest laser-based Missile Defense and armed Floater Stations guarding its borders. It is an extremely dangerous place to live.

Israel's government remains as it is today, with the parliamentary structure altered by the tremendous power reserved by the head of the military. There is a possibility that a dramatic gesture by the Israeli premier towards the HIF could lead to peace ...

India

The crowded, starving sub-continent of India also remains unaligned. No combine wants India to be part of it, and so it is isolated, helped sporadically by the Combines and idealists touched by the magnitude of its human misery.

CENBANK

Director: Barton Poole

Home office: Geneva (CenBank's HQ floats over Lake Geneva)

Each of the five major economic combines of the 22nd Century has its own currency. Years ago they got together and set up CenBank to act as a clearinghouse for all economic transactions between the powers and as arbiter of economic disputes. CenBank sets all currency exchange rates.

Over the years, CenBank (also known as CB) has spread its tentacles and tried to insinuate them into the internal finances of each of the combines, bidding to take responsibility for the money supply, interest rates, credit records, etc. Through this gradual, insidious process, CB has accrued varying degrees of influence within each combine. But it wants more. It wants to be the sixth economic combine -- and the most powerful. The tail yearns to wag the dog.

No one says so openly, but all the world leaders are wary of CenBank and are keeping a close watch on it. Only the Privacy Party has declared itself anti-CenBank. (see POLITICAL PARTIES) Here's why:

One of the ongoing projects of the CB is to completely centralize individual credit within each of the combines. It's been moderately successful in the NACPS and the HC, but has met with stiff resistance in the

EC and NAU.

To attain this goal, it introduced the Credit Chip. Here's how it works: The Credit Chip is a micro-processor implanted in the flesh of your left 5th digit. This is electronically linked to your CenBank credit account. Your employer makes deposits directly to your account in CenBank; when you purchase something, you insert your pinky into a slot and the price of the purchase is withdrawn immediately from your account and transferred to the seller's.

The Credit Chip has caught on, but it has serious consequences in regard to privacy since CB then has a record of every purchase you've made: every book you buy, every virtual reality program you rent, every place you go, every meal you eat out, etc., etc. You might as well have someone vid-recording your every move. It is feared that the CB sells information from its individual data cache back to participating governments and their intelligence agencies. Naturally, wherever this system is in place, a thriving underground economy based on barter and hard currency results.

In 2142, at CenBank's instigation, Identity Chips (actually, the Credit Chip taken to its extreme) have become mandatory in the NAU.

CenBank's programs do not go unopposed. Aboveground there's the Privacy Party (see POLITICAL PARTIES), but there's also an The radical privatists want CenBank dismantled and do not hesitate to resort to violent means -- sabotage and even terrorism -- to make their point and draw attention to the potential abuses of CenBank's growing data cache.

But there's something else going on at CenBank. Its board of directors does not seem to be completely in control. Decisions are made, plans are executed without their authorization. Some think there may be an artificial intelligence (AI) program nestled in the heart of the CB's huge mother boards. The actions of the CB will bear close scrutiny ...

POPULATION CONTROL

The Population of 2142 is in the area of 15 billion. Technologically advanced combines have instituted rigid population control measures. Reproduction is limited to self-replacement, i.e., one child per person. This has been named..The One Life/One Birth Law. Theoretically this will stabilize the population, but actually it reduces it through early death of the child or premature death of an adult before he or she has reproduced. This guarantees a gradual decline in the population. But it also requires mandatory sterilization immediately after the permitted off-spring is born. A citizen who goes beyond the One Life/One Birth limit will be forcibly sterilized and risks having all assets seized in order to support the extra child.

Of course there is opposition to this. They dissenters are the Papist wing of the Catholic Church, various surviving Hasidic sects, and secular members of the Birthright movement.

The One Life/One Birth Law was probably the most controversial in history.

FOOD

In the world of 2142 the global population totals fifteen billion, arable land is scarce and there have been many shortages and a couple of severe famines. The HC and HIF have become the breadbaskets of the world, but they cannot supply nearly enough.

One of the most practical solutions has been TFP -- textured fungal protein -- grown in huge underground vats (no light is needed) by the Yamagata method. TFP is a nutritionally balanced source of protein and complex carbohydrates, enriched with essential amino acids, and can be shaped, textured, colored, and flavored into reasonable facsimiles of tomatoes, steaks, potatoes, linguine, broccoli, etc. (The meats are truer than the vegetables.) But most people agree it's just not the same thing.

People get by on TFP but never pass up an opportunity to grow their own veggies. That's why every rooftop is a garden, and outside every window with a sunny exposure hangs a windowbox sprouting vegetables. During the growing seasons the southern flanks of most dwellings are festooned with window gardens. Like the hanging gardens of Babylon.

And what you don't eat you barter in the credit-free underground economy.

DRUGS

Since most anti-drug laws were abolished a century ago (except in the HC which still restricts their use), recreational drug use is now fairly common. Opiate use surged briefly after legalization, then dropped off precipitously. As the price dropped, so did production. No one was pushing it due to the low profit margin. Besides, new designer drugs with a much higher mark-up were evolving all the time. No one shoots up any

FUTURE COP

Future Cop could be billed as a series version of the comedy series HOLMES AND YOYO. Both series featured a prototype android policeman of the future being teamed up with a regular cop. John Haven was the android policeman who was assigned to work with a pair of old line cops, Jon Cleaver and Bill Bundy.

Haven was supposed to be the perfect cop of the future (although there were still a few bugs to be worked out in his programming) and has abilities that human cops did not. Cleaver knew that Haven was an android, as did his creator Dr. Tingley; however Bundy had not been let in on the secret - he had been told Haven was a rookie that needed breaking in. This situation created all sorts of problems for Cleaver, who has to come up with quick explanations when Haven managed to do something out of the ordinary.

Future Cop first appeared as a made for TV movie in 1976 on ABC. The movie did well enough in the ratings that six one hour episodes were ordered for the next year. These episodes were irregularly scheduled (a two part episode was made into a TV movie) and did not do very well in the ratings. However, somebody at NBC evidently like the idea to revive the entire concept the following year as a made for TV movie, to serve as a pilot to bring the series to NBC. The movie was entitled Cops and Robins, and like the series that preceded it was not a ratings winner.

It is rather unusual that an attempt was made to revive the series. Not only was the programme a failure in the ratings, it was also the subject of a plagiarism lawsuit brought against Paramount, the series production studio. Harlan Ellison and Ben Bova, both well known authors of Science Fiction, had written a short story entitled Brillo which Ellison had reworked into a script which had been submitted to Paramount. Soon after rejecting Brillo, Future Cop began production at Paramount. Bova and Ellison sued claiming copyright infringement and eventually won a large settlement in court.

The future of law enforcement, contrary to what other sources are claiming, really began in 1976. To fully understand the development of Future Cop as a television series, one has to start with two well-known and award-winning science fiction novelists, Harlan Ellison and Ben Bova. Trying to develop a short story for Analog magazine in the late 1960s (during the reign of its celebrated editor John Campbell), Ellison and Bova collaborated on a tale of futuristic law enforcement titled Brillo. It's the story of how police officer Mike Polchik got assigned to a robot named Brillo and was instructed, for one night, to take the non-humanoid metal robot on a trial by fire through the streets of upper Manhattan. Polchik had the street smarts, but Brillo had the textbook interpretation of the law. And therein lay the conflict.

Brillo was published in Analog in 1970 (and is still available in Ben Bova's paperback short story collection, Future Crime, from Tor Books). Soon thereafter, the ABC television network and Paramount Television expressed interest in developing the story for television and commissioned an on-spec teleplay from the two authors. However, the corporates requested some changes: make the robot human-looking (an android), and make the place of the story in present-day Los Angeles. No way, said Ellison and Bova, who wanted to preserve the ideas and characters already laid out in their tale.

Ben Bova picks up the story: "They dropped the show. They said they weren't going to do it. And then we heard about a year later that a show called Future Cop was coming out starring Ernest Borgnine, whom we had suggested as the lead for the Brillo teleplay, dealing with a pair of policemen, one human and one machine. The only difference we could discern in seeing the show, was that instead of a robot that looks like a machine, they had decided to use an actor and have him pretend to be a robot. This was a point of argument between Paramount and ourselves as we were developing Brillo. We wanted to be faithful to the original story and wanted the machine to look like a machine. Sort of like R2-D2, although this was before Star Wars. We wanted it to be a robot that looked like an animated fireplug. And ABC and Paramount said, 'It doesn't cost too much to get an actor and just have him play it as if he had arthritis, you know, very stiffly, and pretend he's a machine.' We argued about that. I always thought that was the major reason why they dropped the show."

Bova was first made aware of Future Cop's existence when he received "some 17 calls from people around the country who saw it, and felt it looked so much like the story Brillo that they felt it was probably something that Harlan and I had done, and yet they didn't see our names in the credits." That was the problem. "It was our script. I saw a videotape of what ABC had aired, and Harlan did too, of course. I realized they had used the script we had written virtually word for word. There were only minor changes. It was the most blatant case of plagiarism I have ever seen," remembers an amazed Bova. So, Ellison and Bova took the only course clear to them: They sued Paramount and ABC for stealing their ideas and failing to acknowledge their work. Paramount and ABC had just taken the Brillo script and made the changes they wanted-an android cop and a modern-day Los Angeles setting-without acknowledging or consulting the two authors.

"It took four years to get to court," Bova continues, "and their defense was, essentially, 'Yes, we stole it, so what? Everybody steals everything in this business.' And then they said Brillo was essentially stolen from Isaac Asimov's The Caves of Steel [also about a detective and a robot/android partner, Elijah Baley and R. Daneel Olivaw, set in the far future in an underground city]. Well, we had depositions from Isaac and everybody else in the science fiction field, pointing out the major differences between Brillo and anything else that had been done before. So, their case fell apart very quickly. They thought they could get away with it because up until that time, no writer had successfully sued a major Hollywood studio for plagiarism. Thousands of such suits have been pursued in Hollywood for many years, and the studios always won. In this case, they were so incredibly guilty that I just told Harlan and our lawyer, 'Just get this case in front of a jury. Let them see the videotape of Future Cop, let them read our script for Brillo, and then they'll find the defendants guilty.' Which is exactly what happened."

Four years after the premiere of Future Cop on TV, after a five-week trial, culminating in a court decision on April 25, 1980, Ellison and Bova were awarded $337,000 in damages in the copyright infringement of Brillo. Harlan Ellison said in a news brief from Starlog #37, in August 1980, "We won. And we didn't just win with some piddling amount where they could say, 'Well, you know, the jury was in doubt.' It's a big, big judgment and it's rocking the entire town."

"We were very relieved it was over," sighs Bova. "It had been a big drain, especially on Harlan, since he carried most of the financial and emotional burden, being out there on the West Coast dealing with our lawyer, Henry Holmes. And of course, ABC and Paramount simply played a delaying game for as long as they could, hoping that sooner or later we would run out of money or patience. But they picked the wrong customer in Harlan—he would have sold his house to get them." Asked if he'd seen any of the other seven hours of the Future Cop series, Bova was surprised, as he was not aware the other episodes existed. If there have been any changes in Hollywood, specifically towards writers, as a result of this suit, Bova isn't aware of it. "I'm not close to Hollywood," says Bova. "But from everything I hear from people who are there, writers are still not held in the highest esteem. There's even a joke about the stupid starlet who's so dumb that she went to bed with the writer. Writers are at the bottom of the totem pole. So, for the starlet to go to bed with a writer would do her career no good at all."

Of their Brillo teleplay, Bova reveals that "Harlan did most of the writing. We worked on it together. He's the expert in screenwriting. We had developed the short story together, and Harlan did most of the work in turning it into a television form. I have several friends in the industry, but it's such a different art form, aimed at such a different audience from the kind of things I write, that I even doubt I would ever try to write a screenplay. There are several novels of mine that Hollywood has asked about to produce as films, but I've never really closed the deals on any of them."

In 1992, ABC aired a television series titled Mann and Machine, starring David Andrews and Yancy Butler, which bore a great resemblance to the human detective/robot partner theme except that this time, the robot was female.

"Not every show that has a human cop and a robot partner is a ripoff of Brillo," cautions Bova. "What we were trying to do with the story that we wrote, was to contrast what people say they want from the law with what they really want. Everybody says they want absolutely impartial and utterly certain enforcement of the law. If somebody is parked overtime, they want that car to get a ticket. But if it's their car, then they want the law to bend. So people want strong law enforcement for everyone except themselves. And that's what Brillo was all about. The human cop understood the system and could bend when it was necessary. But the robot only knew the law and infractions thereof. That was the point of Brillo. And that's something that television is not deep enough to understand or even attempt to do."

"[This was] social commentary. Using science fiction to make a social point. Most science fiction is a very good vehicle for commenting on society by changing the society we live in and exaggerating the change to show a particular aspect of society that we all take for granted."

"Take a policeman who is absolutely honest and cannot bend no matter what the situation can do nothing except make strict enforcement of the law—and then you see that's not really what you want at all! You want compassion, understanding, you want a wink and a nod and a look the other way while I'm doing something that I shouldn't be. But if somebody else is doing something wrong, you want that sucker in jail!"

If there's anyone who's happy that Future Cop came to be a series, it's Michael Shannon. He was tapped to play Haven, Ernest Borgnine's robot partner on the beat. Shannon had been in Los Angeles for only a month prior to being cast. Future Cop was his first time in front of the cameras, and it was his goal to provide some solid characterization to this robot cop opposite the veteran actor Borgnine. "It happened very quickly," remembers Shannon. "I read for the director and producer, read for the network, tested on film, and started the very next day. It was all very fast, as most things are on television."

Filmed in February and March of 1976, the pilot aired on May 1. Shannon recalls, "[It was] one of the most difficult things I ever did. It was a very narrow scope emotionally to play with. The comedy came from the character's confusion in trying to understand human beings. The irony was that the android was in some ways a better example of humanity. It required a lot of technical skill, concentration, and a relentless exploration of ways to make the character interesting and versatile." And he had to do all that within a grueling schedule. "Locations were difficult, but the days were very long. [Often we'd work] 16-hour days.

Of his relationship with Ernest Borgnine and John Amos on the set of the show, Shannon says, "I recall it as a real whirlwind. Borgnine was very committed to the show, and he certainly was involved in the final casting decision. I tested with him as did several others. Ernie was totally professional, loved the crew, full of beans, and a lot of fun. He created a good atmosphere on the set. Amos was friendly, but I didn't have many scenes with him."

A staple of the triad relationship between these cops was that Cleaver's former partner, Bundy, did not know that Haven was a robot. Thus Bundy was ever amazed by Haven's knowledge and abilities, and compatriot Cleaver always had to cover for the robot. Yet Bundy never really got suspicious of Haven.

"This is what's called dramatic license," says Shannon wryly. "If Bundy had been in on the gimmick, it would have detracted somewhat from the relationship that was developing between Haven and Cleaver." Not until the final two hours of Future Cop, in the 1978 TV movie Cops and Robin, was Bundy clued in on Haven's secret and then only because he was promoted to sergeant and became Cleaver's boss. Comedy was often the object of the robot's behavior. Writers would use Haven as a mirror to humanity. For example, in "Fighting O'Haven," as a boxing contender, Haven could not understand the meaning of the phrase "Take a dive!"

"This was for the sake of comedy," says Shannon. "It gave Cleaver a chance to be worried, do a double take, have to explain the facts of life, etc. In a way, it gave Cleaver an opportunity to parent the android, educate him to some extent, and consequently provided an opportunity for the relationship to develop."

As the show began to develop, was there ever confusion over whether Future Cop was a science fiction series or a police drama? "The show started to develop more and more towards being a science fiction show," muses Shannon. "Originally, it leaned more towards a cop show with a science fiction element. However, as it developed and as the writers began to discover they had virtual carte blanche with this android, it must have been tempting to push the science fiction elements. Of course, this left Cleaver as more of a straight man to the robot, which was a problem."

Shannon's strongest memory of his experience was "enjoying the challenge of the show. It was an interesting exercise from an acting point of view. Like a child, I had to make discoveries all the time. It seemed to me this was the most interesting aspect of the character. And of course, Borgnine was my mentor. Ernie enjoyed that. It allowed him to show a fatherly side of himself as well as be the tough cop. Later on, they opened up the Haven character, allowing him more skills, and this seemed to be the direction in which the series was headed. Certainly, the writers were pushing for that. Borgnine felt, however, the relationship would take a backseat and was concerned." Other memories include working with Joan Collins on "The Kansas City Kid," an episode that took place at a racetrack. "Joan was very sleek and a lot of fun. Great costumes, atmosphere, drinks I couldn't drink as the android, good stuff." Shannon also remembers, "getting punched by my stuntman" in "The Fighting O'Haven." "I got a black eye. There was no time to rehearse. I was put into the ring with my opponent (a stuntman) and he simply called out right or left, depending on which punch he was going to throw, and I was supposed to dodge one way or the other. This worked for a while, but then as the pace picked up, he caught me with a punch and I had a real shiner." The stuntmen had their own problems; Shannon recalls his stuntman getting a concussion doing a fall into an inflated mattress from 50 feet.

Of the short-lived series Mann and Machine (1992) that featured a female robot, Shannon confesses, "I haven't seen it. It's difficult to comment. It must satisfy every male fantasy! A beautiful robot who needs to be taught the facts of life. It should run and run..." Sorry, Michael. Shannon also admits that he wasn't very aware of the litigation surrounding Future Cop. "I heard about it," he says, "but only vaguely, and I have no idea if it affected the longevity of the show. Personally, I'm glad they got their [money]. I write as well and am certainly aware these things go on. Sometimes the problem can be subliminal. A writer may not even remember where he got the idea."

Of John Haven's ultimate fate in the series' universe, Shannon speculates that "Haven could have been continuously updated and so could have continued to express new technology, newer insights, especially with genetic engineering moving closer and closer to creating life itself. "The silicon chip has enabled science to reduce the mechanics. In terms of the show, however, a world full of robots did seem to be on the cards. What I thought was interesting about the concept is that it forced human beings to examine their beliefs and attitudes, particularly in a social way. The robot raised some intriguing questions so you had a kind of reversal of roles. The robot student became the teacher." And exactly this theme is expressed in the Brillo short story.

In summary, Michael Shannon looks back at Future Cop as a good introduction to Los Angeles and to series work. "The role was a bit confining, but they had started to open it up. I did the gambler with a Damon

FUTURECAST

A series of three factually based techno-thrillers, all of which explore the concept of interactive television and, set in 2012, question the consequences of today's scientific and technological advances.

This three episode series was a collection of stories put together by Channel Four, one of which (The King of Chaos) had previously been shown as individual one hour episodes which was part of the Equinox science series produced by Channel Four. The whole point of these stories was to produce discussion and debate in the future of television. Whilst some good points are made the public just saw it as poor series, with some bad acting. Each episode had it's own cast with only the people behind the camera remaining the same. The producers for the series were Bryn Higgins and Hal Vogel.

GALACTICA 1980

The premise was straightforward. Having fled from the robot Cylon race that destroyed their homeworlds at the start of the original series, the Battlestar fleet reaches Earth after a 30-year odyssey with the Cylons still dogging their trail. Joy at finding the home of their long-lost 13th tribe turns to dismay when they realise Earth is not sufficiently advanced to help them repel the Cylon hordes. Determined not to expose the planet to the robot warriors, the Galacticans decide to try to speed up Earth's technology. A sub-plot involved a group of Galactican children on Earth, with an air force colonel trying his darnedest to prove they were aliens, and there was a brief flurry of Cylon conflict before the series fizzled out.

Lorne Greene recreated his role as Adama, avuncular commander of the Galactica, and there were a couple of new space heroes in Kent McCord as the untempestuous Troy (Adama's grown-up grandson), and Barry Van Dyke as his impulsive pal Dillon. Also hanging around was TV reporter Jamie Hamilton (Robyn Douglass) who became the only Earthling to board the Galactica. Villainy was taken care of by Richard Lynch and then Jeremy (Sherlock Holmes) Brett as the renegade Xavier. Masterminding the new campaign was a mysterious boy wonder, Dr Zee, a 14-year-old genius whose origins were belatedly revealed in the last episode.

In America, ABC had wanted Galactica 1980 produced quickly to fill a gap in the early evening schedules, so the shows were tailored to a 'family audience'. Violence was toned down and morality/educational angles played up. But the critics were cruel and the audience unreceptive. Battlestar fans deserted the ship which sank in the ratings. Even a late entry by Dirk Benedict, to re-create his Battlestar role of Starbuck, failed to save the show which was cancelled after just ten episodes.

The pilot, Galactica Discovers Earth, a three-part made-for-TV film sequel to the TV series Battlestar Galactica, was successful enough to convince ABC-TV to commission a new series. Rushed into production, aimed at an early-evening time slot where special rules applied about what children can watch, and under-rehearsed, it flopped badly and was soon jettisoned. In the pilot, Galactica finds Earth too undeveloped to fight off the Cylons and attempts are made via TIME TRAVEL to improve the situation. The remaining episodes are all set on Earth and feature Cylon attacks. The pilot, dir Sidney Hayers, with sections of 2 further episodes, was theatrically released as Conquest of the Earth (1980). Generally the series was shown on TV abroad as if part of Battlestar Galactica.

Hastily produced sequel to Battlestar Galactica, this series was voted third worst science fiction show of all time by American critics. First shown over here in 1984 on ITV where it steered a wayward course around the regional companies - many of whom were clearly without the proper assembly instructions as the series was rarely billed under its correct title - it usually went out as further episodes of Battlestar Galactica. It got a slightly more coherent nation-wide run in 1988 when BBC2 played it back to back with the original Battlestar series.

The UK premier dates for Galactica 1980 was 1st September 1984 - 20th October 1984 which was in the Grampian region (ITV), they showed a total of seven episodes. The executive producer for the show was Glen A. Larson, the theme was created by Stu Philips and Glen Larson. Director of photography was Frank P. Beascoeche, the miniatures and special photography was created by Universal Hartland, the supervisors were David M. Garber and Wayne Smith.

In 1980, the men and women of Battlestar Galactica finally landed on Earth. But the mission aborted when the saga landed a 7:00 Sunday night time slot. "It changed the nature of what the show was intended to be," says star Kent McCord. Galactica 1980's time slot actually dictated the content of this TV show. "There was an FCC [ruling] where the 7:00 time slot was given back to the networks if the programming were public affairs, news-related or children's programming," explains McCord. "So, by dictate from the FCC, any program going in there had to meet one of those three criteria. And if you're programmed in that slot, and you're trying to do an action-adventure show, what follows is that action-adventure show had better be a children's show."

Because of this, Glen Larson was faced with the dilemma of how to do an action-adventure science fiction show that fit within the boundaries of children's programming. Jeff Freilich, a Galactica 1980 producer who apprenticed in science fiction with The Incredible Hulk, explains how Larson accomplished this feat. "There had to be at least one educational message every act. That means four times an hour," says Freilich. In "The Super Scouts," "when the kids go off with Kent and Barry, they go to the RCA building in New York, and one of the Galactica kids takes apart and puts back together a television camera. Glen decided that's going to be educational, but it's also a wonderful character moment for a futuristic child, raised from another planet, to demonstrate to people how a television camera works. That was Glen's idea of how to be educational without being preachy.

"We had to come up with a premise that could be exploited from an educational standpoint, which is why we did one about toxic waste in waters, why we did one about migrant farm workers. There were several shows that had messages, which for television is very difficult to get away with, because generally [series] television shows things that people won't see on the news, and they want to escape a little bit of the reality of the world. We were really forced to deal with it as much as we could. Because we had to mix the intention of the show, I think we got a little bit lost on how the show was supposed to run." Why ABC decided to slot Galactica 1980 in this position on Sunday night escapes McCord. "I guess ABC felt it would meet one of those areas "

he muses. "It would be counter-programming to 60 Minutes or whatever it was on NBC at the time."

"They just hammered us," says Larson of ABC's time-slot decision. "That's where they wanted us. That was the whole point of putting us on the air, so they could fill it as a 7:00 show. They were more powerful then than they are now. They said it virtually has to be this way. By getting on the air, we figured we could steer people in the right direction. We would do it their way until we could eventually move on and into what we wanted."

The first three hours of the show featured Troy and Dillon acclimating to Earth, and dealing with a renegade council member who traveled back in time to World War II. The villain, Xavier, planned to upgrade Earth's technology to help it meet any Cylon attacks that might come to be during the present. It was Larson's initial intention to do a Galactica time-travel show before it became mired in the FCC's programming straitjacket. Scripts were written that dealt with Cleopatra and Helen of Troy.

"We did some of those," admits Larson. "I'm not sure if that was a good idea or not. In retrospect, maybe we shouldn't have toyed with it too much to begin with. We should have stayed right where we were instead of going back and doing [time travel stories]. I have mixed emotions. It may have been a mistake.

"Essentially what Glen Larson and I talked about when we sat down together, when he was coming back with Galactica, was 'I want to try to do something akin to The Day the Earth Stood Still,'" recalls McCord.

"Something along the lines that these two beings from outer space with all this great knowledge ... were coming as peacemakers and trying to bring peace to Earth. But then, all of a sudden we got set with the 7:00 time slot and we got strapped down with a bunch of kids, doing baseball shows as Scouts. We kind of lost the direction, I thought. And also, the fact it was programmed so quickly, I don't think Glen wanted to delay the premiere of the show. We had done the pilot in December [of 1979] and had worked for three or four weeks on the pilot. We started work on it, and then all of a sudden they wanted a show right away! I know that Glen had asked that we be delayed for a September [1980] premiere so we could prepare scripts and not be put under the gun.

"I felt that ... had the show gone on in the time slot that everybody thought was going to be, an 8:00 or 9:00, we could have developed the show the way Glen originally envisioned it—a Day the Earth Stood Still type of series, where these two characters with vast knowledge from the stars would come to Earth and bring peace. ... The pilot we did went into all the things we could have done with the show. With the characters meeting scientists and all that area. That was very interesting, and I thought it played very good. And then we got off on a tangent and got into a 7:00 time slot and the kid thing and all of that. When you ask how would I have taken the show, I would have done exactly what Glen tried to do. Go get a copy of The Day the Earth Stood Still, put it on your VCR and watch it. It is an absolutely wonderful film."

McCord is philosophical about the show's low order of ten episodes, and he explains the modern realities of Hollywood filmmaking and network rationale, giving audiences less and less of a show they watch.

"That's life. It's a different world here. In the old days ... you'd get an order for 13, a back 13 and the following season you'd get an order of 26. That's the old days. In the new days, you get an order for four or five or six and a producer hopes lightning strikes. If it doesn't, hell, I've seen shows pulled off the air—gone forever—after a couple of episodes. Galactica 1980 was opposite 60 Minutes. I think we came in second in the time slot, but I don't know if it was enough to counter the high cost of doing the show." Although Larson's original intention in doing Galactica 1980 was to create a show that would be more economical than Battlestar, that quickly disintegrated when the network declared they wanted a product immediately for speedy airing.

"The purpose of finding Earth," says McCord, "was supposed to have been so we could bring down the costs.

[But what happened was] in trying to get scripts ready and shooting, sometimes we had three first units shooting at the same time, in different episodes. I don't know if the show was economically feasible or viable to continue without being an all-out hit. Battlestar Galactica was the most expensive hour here at the time. This happens when you go into production and you don't have enough lead time. Mistakes are made and things become costly. So Glen was writing to try to get the show for September 1980 instead of that January or February that we debuted, which was very, very short lead time." "What made it expensive was they gave that show just a few weeks to get started to get it on the air," agrees Larson. "I'll tell you a true story. I was dubbing the show on the lot on a Sunday afternoon. You don't dub on Saturday and Sunday, that's how expensive it was. I saw a guy walking around in one of the Galactica warrior uniforms. (I have one in my closet, by the way.) I saw this guy walk by and I was furious! I was so mad because the [Universal Studios Battlestar Galactica] tour was using so many of our props and they weren't paying for them, and I thought we were getting victimized. I was ready to call it.

'This is exactly what I'm talking about. They're taking our money and they're spending it on the tour, and I'm not getting it on the screen.' I made a phone call. A very impatient voice on the other end of the phone said, 'That's not the tour.' I said, 'What are you talking about?' 'You better check your schedules. I know you're on the dubbing stages but we're shooting today.' We were actually shooting the show on weekends in order to get it on the air. That's how ridiculous it got. There were guys driving out that gate every weekend in campers ... and they were buying their overtime. The show was costing a fortune because the network rushed it. How fast can you get on the air? I was terrible that way. They ring the fire bell and I answer it, figuring I could do almost anything.

"There was a super-rush because it took eight or nine days to make [each episode] ... and we couldn't make airdates unless we shot around the clock. One of the things that hurt the show was that I wouldn't allow them to just throw it together.... I insisted that we make it look good and try to hold the quality. To do that we had to shoot a lot of overtime, a lot of weekends. The cost ran up there so ... that cost our pickups [extra footage to increase coverage for editors]. We virtually couldn't afford to keep shooting them. The network was probably willing to keep it going, but it was costing them so much money."

So hectic was the filming schedule, it made for a memorable moment for the two lead stars of the show. "This probably points up the chaos that we had to deal with. [It] was the day we were shooting the scene on the Universal 747 stage ", recounts McCord. The episode was "The Night Cylons Landed," and "we had probably 30 or 40 or 50 extras plus a crew. About noon, on this day with all this very difficult stuff, one of the associate producers came down and handed Barry and me eight pages of dialogue and said, At 4:00, you have to go to stage 25 and you have to shoot these eight pages. And no matter where you are here, you have to be over there to do this because we need this stuff to finish cutting a show that's being done.' So at 4:00 Barry and I had to go over to a different stage and leave all these extras and the whole crew ... on this 747 soundstage and shoot eight pages of dialogue in a Viper. That dialogue had no reference to anything. It was Galactican language written for us.

It's not easy stuff to learn. We had eight pages, and we didn't have time to learn it because we were shooting another show in another stage! That pointed out a couple of things. We had that unit shooting on a 747 stage and we had another unit shooting with us on stage 25, and I even think there was another unit out shooting with the kids or something," laughs McCord. "That was the way that show was done-to make airdates. It's very unusual."

Kent McCord, surprisingly, was originally slated to appear in Battlestar Galactica as one of the lead characters. "Glen wanted me in it, the studio wanted me in it. But it was a person on the network who had some conflict of interest," says McCord. "I've known Glen now for over 30 years, and when he called me and said, 'I got this great concept and I want you to meet with me,' I went over and met him. We had lunch together, and we drove out to the special effects studio where they were doing all the miniatures, and they had shot some tests of some things, and we went to a screening and looked at them. Yeah. I was very excited by that project. I thought it was going to be terrific! I think the original was plagued by airdates and a difficult time. It was a very, very difficult show to do. One of the most expensive hours that was being shot for television at that time! It was tough for everybody who worked on that show. Yeah. I was looking forward to having done that show. Unfortunately, I didn't get the opportunity to do it."

As to the change in premise from the earlier show to Galactica 1980, McCord says, "I think that if you're going to follow a show that has had some success, with some following, I think you have to keep your lineage alive. Glen chose to do a time some 25 or 30 years later of which I was supposed to be the grown Boxey. So there was a whole other generation. Lorne Greene was the tie between the old show and the new show. That kept the fans they had accumulated from the original show interested." Working with Lorne Greene was an opportunity for McCord to see a television veteran at work. "He was a very nice man. Very professional and very dedicated. Lorne had a very limited time. He would come in and do his scenes. Everything was set up for him. I enjoyed working with him. He was an interesting man." And of McCord's co-star, Barry Van Dyke?

"Barry is a wonderful, wonderful man. I had a great time with him and we had a lot of fun together. I still see Barry from time to time."

Oddly, at the end of every episode of Galactica 1980 was a paragraph on Project Blue Book that said, "The United States Air Force stopped investigating UFOs in 1969. After 22 years they found no evidence of extra-terrestrial visits and no threat to national security." "The network put that for 7:00 kids. That's standards and practices," says Larson. McCord doesn't recall this paragraph at the end of the show; however, he notes, "I would imagine that if you're going to deal with outer space and things like that, that little paragraph at the end of the show, about Project Blue Book, is a nudge for people to think about what's out there in outer space."

McCord and co-stars Barry Van Dyke and Robyn Douglass appeared in only nine of the ten episodes shot for the series. Number ten was "The Return of Starbuck," with guest star Dirk Benedict returning as the sly, wisecracking warrior. In this episode, kid genius Dr. Zee recounts a dream to Commander Adama. In the dream, Boomer and Starbuck are on a mission, and Starbuck's Viper is hit during a Cylon attack, forcing him to crash-land on a rocky, deserted planet. The only other presence to keep him company is a deactivated Cylon robot, which Starbuck rebuilds. With his newfound Cylon robot friend, "Cy," Starbuck faces up to the reality that he could probably spend the rest of his life on this ruddy rock-especially since a woman about to give birth has appeared. But a homing beacon from Cy's ship brings more Centurions, and in order to save Starbuck's life, Cy sacrifices himself against his compatriots.

The director of that episode, Ronald Satlof, recalls, "I didn't care about the final fate of Starbuck. I liked it because of the anthropomorphization of the machine, the robot that Starbuck fixes who turns into a friend and sacrifices himself for Starbuck. I thought there was a lot of human interest in a theme like that. I thought that was a wonderful theme from science fiction because it is a mirror to ourselves. This was an irrationally programmed robot who ultimately became rational and saw the folly of its ways. People need each other, even if one of the people is a robot."

When asked why this episode was such a departure from the regular series, Satlof responds flatly: "They were trying to save the show. They were shooting two other episodes with Kent McCord, and it was written as a way of putting an entirely different unit [to work while the regular shooting company of the series [was filming elsewhere]. Getting Dr. Zee and Adama in for one little scene to tell the story-that's about all that unified the two shooting companies."

Satlof recalls filming at Red Rock Canyon, "a horrible location." When they were scouting the location, it was nice and warm, and they thought it would be a perfect place to do the story. "But when we got there to shoot, there was a hailstorm and [the temperature] was in the 30s," he says. "The actress Judith Chapman had a little thing to wear, it was see-through, and she was out there with her knees shaking, trying to act. It was unbelievable. We'd wrap blankets around her. We'd roll the camera, snap the camera slate, and she'd [get] ready to go, pull off the blanket and step forth [to] the cameras and say her lines and try to act before the shakes started. It was just horrible. It's what we do for television."

Of Benedict's performance in the episode, Satlof says, "He had a kind of lovely egotism tempered by a flare of humanism ... so I thought he was terrific. I liked him a Jot." At the end of the story, it's hinted that we've seen the very last of Starbuck, but with the appearance of the team of Centurions, who ultimately will destroy Cy, Larson also hints that there's a Cylon vessel elsewhere on the planet in perfect working order for Starbuck to use. "That's right. If the series had survived and Starbuck certainly had a chance to survive he'd rejoin the series," notes Satlof. "He'd somehow get to that Cylon ship and somehow get back to the star fleet. "I'm not absolutely sure about this, but I really suspect that Glen ... left a door open ... to have him somehow get back into it in a new age, a new Galactic mission and all the rest of it, without having to age because you can explain it away with time differences in space."

Potential for resurrection aside, with this episode Glen Larson was also able to close the series with a measure of personal satisfaction. Larson cites the episode as probably his all-time favorite Galactica segment, next to the premiere episode and the two-hour films like War of the Gods and The Living Legend.

"We were virtually going back to the original premise," he says. "That was really the series brought to a whole different level, even though it didn't need a lot of pyrotechnics." Viewers liked this show so much that Larson got a request to do the show in London as a play. "We were approached on the subject and they never got around to doing it," he sighs. "It was a big hit in England. If you think about it, it was very much a play."

McCord recently bumped into a videotape of Galactica 1980. Curious to relive some of his work on the show, he rented it, only to find a badly edited film culled from three different episodes. "It's terrible! It's awful! I couldn't even watch it. It was just the worst. I remember they came to me and asked, 'Can you do some voiceovers?' It was probably one of the most dreadful things I've ever seen in my life. They should have just released The Night the Cylons Landed, a two-parter episode. That was just a mish-mash. It didn't cut together. It didn't make sense."

Like others involved with the show, Jeff Freilich says the Galactica 1980 failed, "not because the show was doing so badly, but because it was in a time slot that was a death time slot [with] CBS's 60 Minutes. At the time NBC and ABC deluded themselves into believing they could make inroads into the 60 Minutes audience with adults on one channel and under-25's on another. "The other prerequisite [of the time slot] was there couldn't be more than ten incidents of violence in an episode, and that meant if ten Cylons got shot out of the sky, that was all we could do. You couldn't have anything else, which included hitting somebody on the head with a stick, or punching somebody in the mouth or a car into a wall."

The competing show on NBC, The Wonderful World of Disney, got away with more violence because it fell under the category of previously released theatrical motion pictures. Censors did not have to cut those films—but they kept their scissors sharpened for Galactica 1980. "I remember one very particular night," says Freilich, "when Frank Lupo and I were sitting there on a Sunday and we got phone calls from ABC standards and practices, Susan Fetterman. She declared, 'You cannot air this show tonight!' She had just looked at it that day and we could not understand why. She had counted 11 Cylons being shot out of the sky, and she would not allow the show on the air with 11 incidents of violence. We had to go back to my office that afternoon with her, Peter Roth (a vice president of ABC at the time; now executive vice-president of Fox Broadcasting), and we had to sit there and watch the show and count, yes, 11 of them."

"Our argument was these were not people, they were robots, Cylons were animatrons and it wasn't hurting anybody. She put on such a stink, and we reminded her that it would probably cost upwards of $50,000 to cut one of the shots, recut and redub the film and be ready for satellite that night. We got away with it that time, but these are things you never have to deal with anywhere else."

One night while writing the episode "Spaceball," Freilich received a very unusual phone call from Texas. "Every show that I've ever worked on has its own group of really obsessive fans. Regardless of the show you work on, there is a group of people who watch the show religiously and know the show better than you do, even if you are the creator of that show. They will read things into your shows that you as the creator or writer would never think about. They see people on your show as being in the real world, whereas you know they're fantasy. I got this call from a man who is very upset because he's been watching the show and he swears that's not how Galacticans talk, because he's met them. Because they've actually landed in his yard and he put them up for a few days in his barn. They don't talk like that. He's calling to tell me that in the future there are several expressions Galacticans use that we don't use on the show, that we oughta use if we're going to be accurate about them. I couldn't believe I was hearing this. I took him seriously because I didn't want to make fun of him. But I could not believe that somebody truly believed what he was telling me. And yet, this was a middle-aged man, he must have been at least in his late forties if not early fifties. He was a devotee of the show."

Taking him seriously could have been a good idea. Freilich accepted the man's advice and incorporated the expressions into the show. Sadly, Freilich can't recall the specifics of what he added. Working with Glen Larson was an enriching experience for Freilich. "Glen always had his finger on the pulse of the American television audience," he says, "and he was very good at creating shows that critics might pan, but the audiences tuned into in droves. He never paid much attention to anybody but the audience. What Glen taught me more than anybody else, was to exploit whatever your own ideas were and don't pay attention to networks and studios. Your own success or failure should be measured by your ideas without having them polluted or changed [by other people]."

"He was really very much of an individualist. He had, more than any other producer I've ever worked for, a high respect and reverence for the writer. Glen started as a writer, a pure writer, and that's all he was. He wasn't a producer, and he built an incredible reputation as one of the faster writers in television. Speed in television is really important because things are done so quickly. I learned to go with your instinct when you are writing; to close yourself off from phone calls, make sure to have other people to handle the nuts and bolts of making a television show, to lock yourself behind a door. Glen would disappear to his home in Hawaii or Malibu and not answer the phone until he was finished with what he was doing. He also had an amazing ability to make incredibly expensive television shows despite the protestations of the networks and studios and then take those television shows, and in the case of Galactica, which is a prime example, make it into a theatrical film, release it overseas, and make back any deficit he might have incurred by making a TV show. It was very, very rare to do that. "Glen was one of the first people to market toys and games and cards and all sort of ancillary things that could come from a television show."

"I had heard a tremendous amount of negative things about Glen Larson before [working with him]. In retrospect, most of the stuff I heard about that was not positive came from jealous people.... My experience with him was a very pleasant one, and it paid off particularly well about a year and a half ago. I was in Paris on vacation from Spain, where I was doing an episode of Dark Justice, a show I created. Glen called me in Paris to tell me that CBS had just shown him the pilot I had written and directed for Dark Justice because he was interested in writing a late night show, and how he thought it was really wonderful and how proud he was and stuff. I said, 'In a lot of ways you taught me all I know.' He took no credit for that at all, kind of laughed it off. Truthfully, the other person that he really helped was Frank Lupo, who created the A Team." (Lupo also worked on Greatest American Hero and invented, with John Ashley, Something Is Out There.)

If the show had continued further, Larson says, "We would have just expanded on our basic premise but refined our storytelling. There are an infinite number of stories you could tell in outer space. It had a lot more scale and potential than, I think, Star Trek did in many ways.... We had better hardware to work with and a lot less limiting. We could have done a great deal, but we needed more time."

The last word on Galactica 1980 comes from Glen Larson, musing on a revival of the adventures of the Battlestar Galactica. "There was a point where Universal was talking about doing it the same way as Star Trek that we might have done it as a prime access sold to stations [i.e., syndication]. But with the sale of Universal to Japan, and some of the other things, I don't know if the people [who are there now] have the imagination to do that. Right now it's a little less likely, but nothing's impossible. With the success of Star Trek and its spin-off, it's possible that this will come up again." And would Larson be interested in doing it? "Yeah, I would, because I really think having been there once, I have a better idea of what we could do. But who knows?" he shrugs. "We'll have to see."

CAST NOTES

Barry Van Dyke (Dillon): Born 1951, the son of comedian Dick Van Dyke. In the late 1980s he starred with his father in a short-lived sitcom called Van Dyke and Company. He also joined his father in a pair of TV movies, first Diagnosis of Murder (1992) and then The House on Sycamore Street (1993), which successfully spun off into a series titled Diagnosis: Murder beginning in late 1993.

Kent McCord (Troy): Born 1942. McCord was Officer Jim Reed on Adam-12 (1968-75). He also appeared in Airplane II (1982) as the co-pilot with Peter Graves and played a cop in Predator 2 (1990). He also guested on seaQuest (1994). Lorne Greene (Adama): see Battlestar Galactica.

Patrick Stuart (Dr. Zee): Born 1966. A child actor in Galactica 1980, he made a successful move to All My Children as rapist Will Cortlandt. Stuart is the son of Chad Stuart, of the singing duo Chad and Jeremy. He continues to act on the stage in New York.

Robyn Douglass (Jaime): Born in 1953 in Japan. Douglass has also starred in a TV movie with Marc Singer, Her Life as a Man (1984) and with Steve Martin in The Lonely Guy (1984).

GALIDOR: DEFENDERS OF THE OUTER DIMENSION

On his birthday, Nick Bluetooth receives some kind of map that takes him and his best friend, Allegra Zane, to a ship (which is shaped like an egg). A robot named Jens on the ship thinks they two teens have come to save the Outer Dimension from an evil overlord. With the help of a power known as "glitching", which helps him to change his arms and legs into things he finds along his travels, Nick plans to find the pieces of the Key to Galidor to rescue the Outer Dimension.

Galidor: Defenders of the Outer Dimension or simply Galidor is show that ran on Fox Kids in 2002 with a total of 26 half-hour episodes. The series was created by Thomas W. Lynch, the creator of The Secret World of Alex Mack and The Journey of Allen Strange.

The premise for Galidor, 2 kids & their alien companions & their adventures in another dimension had wonderful possibilities. Sadly this series did not fulfill its promise. After seeing that mature writing could be applied to Saturday morning "kid" shows such as Captain Power & his Soldiers of the Future & Hypernauts, this show stepped back to the days of unsophisticated & silly Sat a.m. shows. The allies that the kids met looked like they just walked over from Sesame St. I love cute muppets but not on this show. You can integrate terrific looking puppets or actors in full body suits into a sf series. Farscape has magnificently proved that. The lead actors were fine, tho' the villain was done in a melodramatic, over-the-top, clichéd manner. The cg fx were very well done, & they had some good looking sets. The show came off as blending of sf & fantasy elements. This rarely is ever a good mix. Various old plot lines are unimaginatively brought into play, and Nick's mission is has a been-there, done-that feel.

Characters

Nick Bluetooth: A boy of 15 years in age. He has a special power called "glinching" (verb: glinch) which enables him to transform his body's matter into different kinds of matter; usually, he turns his limbs into limbs of other species or specialized machines. A brash and foolish hero, he will usually act first and think later, usually getting himself into more trouble than necessary. At times can be self-centered and obnoxious, is certain he is the leader and knows what's best. Despite his failings, he has a pure heart and desires feverishly to do the right thing despite any odds. Nicholas spends a good deal of the first season not realizing that he is descended from the Stranger (Sam Bluetooth) and Queen Riana.

Allegra Zane: 14 year old alleged computer genius (though only once do we see her use a computer). Nicholas's only friend, a karate expert. She is dragged into the Outer Dimension against her will and desires only to go home, until an encounter in Dreejal-Vin in episode 6 ("Belonging") with tunnel-dwellers makes her realize what is at stake. She is Nicholas's calm voice, where he is brash and foolish, she is calm and sedated.

Jens: The Chief Scientist of the Royal Court of Galidor. Originally a Wexar, a plant-like creature, his body was burned by Gorm, and he downloaded his mind into a robot body in order to complete his mission and recover "The Warrior," not realizing at first that it is Nick. Jens was also not fond of Allegra when the series began, whining that she is a complainer and "not supposed to be here." Usually acts nervous and panicky, and speaks with an odd high-pitched voice. Halfway through the show his "claw hands" are replaced with more articulate gloves.

Euripides: Scholar of the Royal Court of Galidor. He is an Amphibib (a large anthropomorphic frog). He is from the Realm of Arbo and the last of his kind. Philosopher and Nicholas's spiritual advisor. He carries a staff and has psychic powers which include telekinesis and limited heat generation.

Nepol: A Siktari warrior from the frozen realm of Elta Siktari, originally a tall Siktari warrior and leader of Galidor's army, was compacted by Gorm into a small Siktari. Visually impaired, needs glasses. He wields a luka (an icy-looking spear), runs extremely fast and can project freezing blasts.

Lind: A mysterious character who shows up in a few episodes at the end. She is a native Galidorian who can dissolve into a purple gel. Like Nick, she is certain she knows what's best and clashes with Nick and company at every opportunity. She and Nicholas begin to connect after rescuing Euripides from Earth.

Sam Bluetooth (AKA The Stranger): he is adventure and scientist, he met Queen Rhiana (Nicholas's mother), presumably 16 years back (? , left for Galidor in mid-1985)). Sam Bluetooth constructed the Egg (most likely in the Outer Dimension, having used his house to go there in the first place). In the beginning of the series he is seen falling into a chasm, but at the end of the series he is shown as Gorm's captive.

Queen Riana: The Queen of Galidor. Appears in the series mostly as a mental hologram that only Nicholas can see, offering cryptic advice and warnings.

Gorm: The show's main villain. Once the chief advisor of the Royal Court of Galidor, Gorm has become a menace throughout the Outer Dimension. He conquered many realms, wiped out some species (like the Amphibibs), and made a virus in the Maps. As such he is known as the Conqueror of a Thousand Worlds. He has Sam Bluetooth in his clutches and plans to conquer Galidor. He has the ability to glinch at a much weaker level than Nick (he stole a small part of Nick's power when Nick was a baby) but amplifies it to a great degree through a device on his chest. Among Gorm's other skills are his immense strength and his extremely cunning intellect.

Tager: One of Gorm's main minions, Tager is the master of Mind Control and interrogated Allegra in the second season.

Bala: A bounty hunter working for Gorm, he attacks with an energy bolt that turns into a claw upon impact.

Caliphonic: Leader of the Aquarts, Caliphonic is a minion of Gorm.

The Egg

The Egg (or more appropriately, the Trans-Dimensional Module, TDN) is a blue egg-shaped vehicle that stands on four legs and is capable of flight. On the outside, it is barely bigger than a trailer, but on the inside comprises several stories, many of which are unexplored. The four seen in the run of the show were

The Pilot House, essentially the cockpit. Contains pilot and copilot controls. The front windscreen has a blast screen that can be closed.

The Main Level contains a circular table in the center with a port for the map to plug in. The map doubles as the Egg's navigational computer, and is incapable of functioning without it (in Episode 7 "A Crack In The Map", Nepal attempts to fly the egg without the map with erratic results).

The Reactor Room, which houses the powerhouse of the egg.

The Garbage Chute, a long compactor room that decimates garbage and fires it off into the Viniculum. Not a place one wants to fall into accidentally.

Nicholas and Allegra both mention lockers, meaning that there is a locker room somewhere on the Egg. The Sandwich Simulator, which apparently does not work very well, is presumably on this level as well.

Outer Dimension Realms

Here are the known realms in the Outer Dimension:

Arbo - Formerly a forest realm until Gorm set large sectors of it ablaze. There are some forest havens in this realm (inhabited by dangerous creatures), but the inhospitable desert dominates (the Aquarts reside in the caverns underneath). This is also the home-realm of the Arbonians.

Dreejal-Vin - A crowded city realm and home-realm to the Vinics. A Gorm-created computer virus destroyed their maps and cut them off from the rest of the Outer Dimension.

Elta-Siktar - A frozen realm roaming with Eltaans, Siktaris, and Shimels (transportational pack creatures which are only referred to in passing by Nepal).

Kek - Formerly a prison realm and now Gorm's stronghold. His powers of illusion are strongest there, which means he is in total control of the environment and those in it.

Wex - The home-realm of the Wexers. Not seen in the series.

Galidor - Capital Realm in the Outer Dimension. Seen only briefly in one episode, resembling a city of sculptures found in a fishbowl or snowglobe (appropriate for a realm that spent the entirety of the series in containment).

Key Props

The Map: A circular gray device with two large grips on the sides with finger-shaped grooves and an old TV-set-shaped monitor in the middle that is capable of presenting a three-dimensional globe (acting as the equator) or a radar-like short range tracker. The map is also capable of floating by itself and is capable of plugging into the center console and acting as the guidance system for the egg, as well as showing data for both Earth as well as the Outer Dimension.

The Communicator Watch: self-explanatory. Nicholas wears the watch with the face on the inside of his wrist, a character trait provided by actor Ewald.

The Journal: The stranger's journal, which was hidden in the Monument of Knowledge on Dreejal-Vin. It contains schematics, diagrams, and diary entries of the Stranger's journey through the Outer Dimension. Nick continues writing in the journal when he receives it. While the book appears to be a regular leather and paper book, it is in fact made out of hyperglinch energy (like the Keyfrags) meaning it can be reconstituted if destroyed, and may also mean it has an inexhaustible supply of paper (not confirmed).

The Pack: A three-strapped backpack that Nicholas finds in Arbo. Originally belonged to the Stranger, and was found full of notes, pens, and other "junk."

Keyfrags: Parts of the key to Galidor, shards of metal that can be combined into the shape of an egg. They are usually found in a plastic container with fingerprint identifiers to keep them safe. The key is capable of putting itself together (presumably some sort of magnetism) to make sure that it is put together properly.

Notes

The show was completely filmed digitally, reducing the time required in compositing the computer-generated imagery. The series was also shot in 16x9/1.85:1 but was never released in that format (previews for the show, however, were presented in the "letterbox" format).

The actor who plays Nicholas (Matthew Ewald) is on a wire rig in almost every single episode. He cracked a rib performing a wire stunt in Episode 11, but did not tell anyone because he wanted to continue doing stunt work.

Allegra Zane leaves her backpack and camera behind in the sewer in the first episode. Additionally, the hooded sweatshirts the characters wear never reappear in later episodes.

In the same vein, Nicholas and Allegra have hoodies in the first episode, bring them with them into the Outer Dimension, but never wear them again. Even when they are in the frozen realm of Elka Siktar.

The legs on the Egg are the same as Jens'. The ones on the toys are interchangeable, but Jens' fit loosely in the Egg and the Egg's legs don't fit on Jens.

The Egg's wings on the toys are the same as those of Deluxe Nicolas, but with different joints. Jens originally had claw hands, but switched to gloves so he could hold props and tools.

Nicholas was originally named Christian, and is referred to such in Tom Lynch's original story. The name was changed at the last minute, and is rumoured to have been accidentally included in a few pages of the pilot script.

Nicholas's last name, Bluetooth, is not named after the computer part. Bluetooth is Danish royalty. The technology was just taking off when the show premiered.

There is an article on the wall in Sam Bluetooth's lab that mentions a part of his house disappearing. The article originally appeared on the Galidor web page before the series began as a teaser.

CGI seat belts were designed for the Egg's chairs, but were never used in the series.

Allegra glinches in Episode 21 "The Great Glinch Switch," and it appears as a red flash rather than blue. The show had an extensive product tie-in with Lego (which helped fund the series. Despite high ratings and fan enthusiasm from the United States and outside (the show is broadcast in Europe on the SciFi Channel), disputes over funding and copyright ownership prevented a planned third season from being produced.

Because of armour, wire rigging, and most likely the required absence of noticeable brand clothing, the human costumes were all made custom for the actors.

References to other media

In Episode 1, "Identity," Nick has a book called "Chariots of the Gods" on his bedside table. The book is about aliens visiting Earth and is a big influence on the film Stargate.

Additionally in Episode 1 "Identity," Nicholas suggests Earth may have had or been in contact with advanced civilizations in the past, similar to Dr Daniel Jackson in Stargate. While the comments were never followed-up in the run of the series, it is conceivable that Earth may have had contact with the Outer Dimension but have been cut off somehow, and that the Stranger merely re-opened this link. This suspicion is also hinted at by Galidorian devices being in a warehouse on Earth in a later episode.

The character Gorm wears body armor to protect his own battered and destroyed form, similar to Darth Vader or Doctor Doom. It is not explained how he came to have this armor, but the little skin we see is green and scaly, implying he is some sort of lizard.

Queen Riana appears as a mental hologram that only Nicholas can see, similar to the holographic character of Al in Quantum Leap.

In Episode 7 "A Crack in the Map," a judge who had sentenced Nicholas to community service tells him "what we have here is a failure to communicate," a line directly taken from Cool Hand Luke.

In Episode 13 "It's Like Déjà Vu All Over Again," Nicholas comments on a powerful energy signal being like "his boombox cranked up to 11." This is a clear reference to Spinal Tap with the amplifier that can be turned up to 11.

In the same episode, Allegra arrives with sandwiches that are "Simulated ham and simulated cheese, or simulated peanut butter and simulated jelly. I think." This mirrors a scene in The Odd Couple, where Walter Matthau offers "Brown sandwiches or green sandwiches. It's either really new cheese or really old meat."

In Episode 26 "The Gates of Galidor Part 2," Nicholas jumps into Gorm's body and destroys him from within, almost completely mirroring the death of Agent Smith from The Matrix.

Much like the long running series "Doctor Who," - "The Egg", while appearing to be smaller in scale from an outside perspective is grander in scale once having step foot within. Which would lend considerable reference of Nicholas Bluetooth being closely resembled to the legendary time traveling adventure know only as : "The Doctor," whom travels within a time traveling device, stuck within a shape of an old 1950s London Police Call Box, known as the "TARDIS," a device which is considerably smaller in appearance then it truly is. Ironically, the TARDIS was designed to be a chameleon but got "stuck," and tends to land in obvious locations, while the Egg is incapable of changing shape but is programmed to hide where it will not be spotted (in one episode, as a homecoming float, which works as a disguise for about twenty minutes before special agents find it and seize Euripides from inside).

Both the Egg and Tardis are implied to be living creatures, in the case of the Egg, possessing artificial intelligence and a few sets of arms that are capable of grabbing things (and people) and removing them. Additionally, both shows revolve around characters who use their brains and intelligence rather than brute strength to defeat their enemies.

The series ended with a cliffhanger, which implied that, somehow, Gorm survived his destruction at the hands of Nick, and had his father captive. With this in mind, it is possible that more new episodes were planned; to this day, none have surfaced.

GALLOPING GALAXIES!

Set in the 25th century, it followed the interplanetary merchant ship Voyager as it boldly went through asteroid belts, time warps and black holes, supposedly under the control of SID (Space Investigation Detector) a bossy computer. Manning the spaceship was a crew of three - Captain Pettifer, Second Officer Morton and Communications Officer Webster (replaced in Season Two by Mr Elliott), who were joined by an assortment of odd aliens and by Miss Mabel Appleby who arrived by accident after a time-warp wobble. They were pursued by a notorious space pirate and his disintegrating robots.

Wacky space comedy from the team behind Rentaghost, Bob Block and Jeremy Swan. The producer for the show was Jeremy Swan and the various designers for the show were Alan Spalding, Nick Somerville (Season One), John Ashbridge and Jonathan Taylor (Season Two), whilst the music was created by Jonathan Cohen. The series first aired on BBC1.

GANBARONAKA: LITTLE SUPERMAN GANBARONAKA: CHIISANA SUPERMAN GANBARONAKA: LITTLE SUPERMAN

A 32 episode follow-up of MACH BARON in which Mitsuru Tendo (Ando) is an ordinary 11 year old boy who can turn into the superhero GanBaron. While his parents are away in America, he lives, in the style of BATMAN, in a huge mansion with a butler called Musshi (Kurobe) and a supercomputer called Goemon, which is programmed to encourage him in his efforts and be a friend when he is depressed, His nemesis is Dr. Waruwaru (Amamoto), a childless friend of Mitsuru's grandfather to whom Mitsuru was rashly promised in a moment of weakness, and who has returned to wreck his revenge.

Starting off like a replay of ASTRO BOY, Ganbaron only shows its true nature as a sequel to MACH BARON and RED BARON with the arrival partway through the series of the giant robot Divaron. Idol groups such as the Four Leaves and The Lilies also made appearances, but the series will be best remembered for establishing many of the robot combat formula that would inform the later Super Sentai series - see GORANGER.

The series was produced by Kazuhiko Watanabe, Akio Takahashi, Minoru Uchima and Kiyoshi Suzuki. GanBaron was preceded by RED BARON and MACHBARON.

GARO: THE FANGED WOLF

AKA: GARO

AKA: GARO KIBA OKAMI

AKA: GOLDEN KNIGHT: FANGED WOLF

For centuries, the Makai Knights have protected mankind from the Evil Beast Horror (Maju Horror). The latest member of the Makai bloodline is Koga Saejima, a mysterious young man who lives in an ancient castle and battles the evil with his holy sword, the Garo Blade. By tearing into the fabric of space, Saejima is able to become the ultimate incarnation of the Makai, the Golden Knight Garo (Ogon Kishi Garo). The transformation will only last for 99.9 seconds, and as the time limit draws near the Garo armor will begin to change.

"Where there is light, shadows lurk and fear reigns... yet by the blade of Knights, mankind was given hope..." - Ward Sexton

GARO focuses on the life of Makai Knight Saejima Kouga, who protects humanity against dark demonic manifestations called "Horrors." In his quest to purge them, he encounters a young girl named Kaoru whom he saved from a Horror, but was stained with its demonic blood. As a rule, those that been stained by the blood of a Horror shall be cut down, or else they will die painfully in approximately 100 days. Kouga had planned to use her as bait at the beginning, but when they lived together, he started to have mercy upon her and afterwards, he tries to find a way to purify her before her remaining time expires. Thus, the series focuses on Kouga's developing relationship with Kaoru and his stand in protecting humanity after the wishes of his father, who was his predecessor with the title of GARO.

Ougon Kishi GARO (Ougon Kishi GARO?), translated as Golden Knight Fanged Wolf is a Japanese tokusatsu television series. It was broadcast on TV Tokyo from October 7, 2005 to March 31, 2006, lasting 25 episodes (with one additional "Overview" special, summarizing the events of episodes 1 through 13, aired before episode 14). Produced by Bandai, the series is considered by some to be a turning point in tokusatsu entertainment, as it was marketed towards adults and older teenagers, as opposed to younger children. The show contains graphic violence, nudity, and mature themes. It was marketed as a "Hyper Midnight Action Drama."

Horrors

The darkness inside human beings feed and helps create demonic creatures called "Horrors." Horrors come in many forms; however, they usually come in a black-winged skeleton humanoid form that can fly and feed upon humans. Each Horror has unique tastes, feeding on specific negative emotions and then taking over the human host. The Horror can cooperate with its host or can completely take over the human being to feed upon its emotions. The Horrors' main diet, though, is humans. Horrors can manifest spiritual energy into physical objects such as chains or become objects like a watch to ingest a human. Each Horror tends to prepare the human or play with its food first before eating. Though they tend to look alike, their forms appear differently when bursting out of the possessed human. The Horrors also gain new abilities in their new form. However, once they use up the energies of their host they return to their basic form. Occasionally when a Horror is defeated the host is returned to the original human state, but dies shortly thereafter.

Makai Knights

Also known as Magic Knights, Makai Knights carry a piece of sentient gothic jewelry that is able to help train and advise its wearer and to detect Horrors. They also help empower certain techniques when in their mystical armor or help dispel hypnosis from horror influences. Makai Knights each have their own set of armor and abilities that are unique to themselves. This armor is passed down generations, or from master to apprentice. No Makai Knight can stay in the armored form for more than 99.9 seconds. If this time limit is surpassed, the armor starts to burn its wearer. This is because the armor is made of Soul Metal, something that only trained people can use at all, such as Makai Knights or Makai Priests. Too much contact with Soul Metal, even for trained wearers, can be fatal, as Soul Metal burns away normal human flesh on contact and is tougher than any other metal due to its magical properties. Their weapons are also made of Soul Metal.

Makai Knights must be able to control their emotions and their yin and yang. If there is an overwhelming amount of yin, demonic powers start to take over the Knight, giving him tremendous power, but eating his body away in return if the process is not stopped in time. They can summon mystical armored horses, possess lighters that emit spiritual flames to help detect Horrors, and can use said flames to encompass their bodies, along with weapons to increase damage potential.

Makai Priests

Their role is to create anti-Horror devices, spells, and weapons to support the Makai Knights. Makai Priests possess a vast knowledge of spells and purification techniques. Like Chinese Tao Masters, they have seals for spells, a brush to write a seal, are trained in martial arts, and have prefabricated devices used to defend or attack. A Makai Priest is fully capable of handling Horrors, but their role is to only aid the Knights and keep equipment maintained for a Makai Knight. The priests provide a sentient Madou Jewelry (like Zaruba and Silva) to advise and detect Horrors for the Knights.

Watchdogs

They are the middle-persons behind the works of the war between Makai and Horror. It is they who usually detect Horrors and inform the Makai Knight of their missions. The Makai Knights are usually informed by a letter called "Orders Document" that's mailed to them. Watchdogs have no real control over Makai Knights, but they have been involved in directing the actions of the Makai for centuries. They help purify the Knights' weapons, refuel their Madou Fire Lighters, and send the spirits of the defeated Horrors (in the form of small daggers) back to their realm. Whenever they collect up to a dozen blades they will send the blades back into the demon realm. The story suggests there are many groups of watchdogs existing and directing the Makai's will, and the ones addressed to GARO are three cherubim-like girls who, though having the appearance of young teenagers, are technically centuries old.

Characters

Saejima Kouga/GARO the Golden Knight

Saejima Kouga (aka Golden Fang GARO) is the Golden Makai Knight of the East. Kouga is a young man who apparently thinks in nothing else than destroying Horrors. His father was the one that started his training at an early age and he still trains on a daily basis to sharpen his skills. Since childhood Kouga thought highly of Saejima Taiga (his father) and respected him above everything else. Because of Saejima's constant hunts he didn't allow Kouga to associate with anyone besides Jabi, Amon, and Gonza.

One night young Kouga got out of bed after hearing Gonza's concern for Taiga. He followed Taiga into the forest and witnessed a fierce battle between his father and Taiga's fallen student. Kouga came out of hiding and his student tried to kill him, but Taiga took the blow and was impaled by his own disciple's hand. Taiga gave the mark of death on Barago before he dropped the Sword of GARO "GAROKEN" while attempting to protect Kouga in his final fight. Zaruba helped Taiga convey his final thoughts to Kouga to take the title of GARO and to be brave. Kouga and Gonza at first tried every means to lift the sword out of the ground from brute strength to crane, but it would remain stuck in the forest until Kouga mastered the ability to wield Soul Metal. It took almost a decade for Kouga to be strong enough to lift the sword out of the ground and assume his place as the Golden Knight.

Kouga is not a social person and always keeps his feelings to himself, but possesses a noble and kind heart behind his emotionless façade. He spared Kaoru's life because she reminded him of his mother, but never told her about her situation. When asked by the Watchdogs and Zaruba of his intentions about Kaoru, he just said he only let her live to use her as a bait for the Horrors.

As GARO the Golden Knight his armor helps protect him from damaging blows, but his armor isn't unbreakable. If a Horror is strong enough they can damage and injure Kouga. Should the armor be exposed to a very powerful blow the armor will retract before the 99.9 seconds time limit. The Sword of GARO is a powerful weapon that can cut down almost anything, only a rare few Horrors are strong enough to resist its force. Kouga is able to use a technique called "Blazing Armament." This is when he uses the Madou Fire from his MADOUBI lighter to encompass his sword and his armor to increase his damage potential. In the series he's able to use Blazing Armament without the use of the Madou Fire Lighter. When riding Gouten his combat strength is increased and his sword is able to transform into GARO-ZAN-BA "Wolf Slashing Horse." Because his armor is composed of Soul Metal, the armor reacts to his will along with Madou Fire.

Kouga fought all this time believing in his cause to destroy Horrors in the name of Taiga and the GARO legacy, but it was discovered his father's killer was a Makai Knight. It made Kouga question his reasons and actions for slaying Horrors. His resolve wasn't weakened, but was instead focused directly at Taiga's fallen student Barago.

While in a losing fight with Kodama, Kouga lost his way and used darkness to empower his armor. Because Soul Metal reacts to the wielder, Kouga's body was being consumed by his own armor. His armor deformed into a "LOST SOUL" form. A giant golden werewolf-like berserker, killing Kodama in the process (impaled and ripped to shreds). While in darkness his armor surpassed the 99.9 seconds limit and Zaruba asked for ZERO's help in taking down the GARO armor. After ZERO managed to get through Kouga's mind he struck Kouga's armor in the belly and it hit the triangle armor piece (weak spot) and Kouga's armor was lifted, saving Kouga's body and soul.

In his quest to save Kaoru they found each other in the underworld realm and he went on to battle with Meshia. Meshia was a strong opponent and Kouga was losing the fight because Meshia kept unleashing Horrors on him. At one point a large group of Horrors tackled and restrained Kouga, but at this point Kaoru's painting came to life giving Kouga wings becoming TSUBASABITO GARO. Kouga in reality couldn't have beaten Meshia, but Meshia was overconfident in her power and didn't react fast enough when Kouga struck his sword into Meshia's brain. After she fell, KIBA reappeared and tried to bring Kouga down with him. When that failed, KIBA returned to the human realm and fought GARO for the last time. KIBA was also arrogant and lost to GARO. After the final battle Kouga was reassigned to the northern district and had an emotional farewell with Kaoru. Kouga finally saw the final product of Kaoru's art in her father's book and Kouga was brought to tears. Kouga was last seen in the northern district and Zaruba had just detected a Horror behind him, he reacted and the "Chapter of the Dark Knight" ends there.

Zaruba

He's a Madou Ring for Kouga's duties as a Makai Knight. Zaruba originally belonged to Saejima Taiga. After Taiga was killed, Kouga has since worn his father's ring. Zaruba himself was created by the Makai Priest Amon who creates the anti-Horror equipment to aid and support a Makai Knight.

The full strength of Zaruba is unknown, however, throughout the series he's able to help dispel confusion, breathes Madou Fire (in the Forest of Glen), detect Horrors, and create parts of himself into a ring to help locate and detect Horrors, and see through illusions. His aid is not limited to Makai Knights -- Kaoru once used Zaruba to guide her through the Glen Forest back to the human world.

During GARO's final fight against KIBA, Kouga could not summon his armor due to a magic seal placed by KIBA. Zaruba told Kouga to throw him into the dimensional rip in an attempt to bring his armor. After a long exaggerated battle with KIBA, Kouga tried to summon GARO again and this time Kouga's armor was brought out by cherubs to help him gear up. Zaruba used all of his energy to bring it to Kouga, and after his victory, he was too weak and disintegrated. Before parting ways, Rei gave Kouga a re-forged Zaruba as a token of appreciation from the East Watchdog, but he did not have any of his previous memories and didn't like his name. Zaruba and Kouga were assigned to the northern district where in the final episode he warned Kouga of a Horror behind him.

Mitsuki Kaoru

She is a young aspiring artist who's always having trouble making money. Kouga spared her life after she was splashed with a Horror's blood and secretly tries to find a way to cure her. Because of her Horror scent, she attracts Horrors constantly, however, she doesn't know she's being pursued half the time because Kouga does his best to quietly deal with the Horrors that try to approach to her. She eventually was evicted from her house and temporarily freeloaded on Asami's place. After Kaoru's bad cooking gave Asami food poisoning, she then moved into Kouga's home. She literally took Kouga's words of staying close as an excuse to move in. Kouga wanted her to at least earn her keep, but her cooking was so horrible that Gonza threw up.

Kaoru has feelings for Kouga as well, but was devastated when she found out Kouga used her as Horror bait, even though Kouga actually never did it (except for one occasion). Kaoru always seem to manage to involve herself with a Horror all on her own, and that's why Kouga always says she's an unlucky woman. For her protection, Kouga placed a special ring created by Zaruba in one of her fingers, allowing him to always locate Kaoru's position when necessary and be alerted if a Horror is close to her.

Later it is revealed that Kaoru's father and she have been involved with Horrors and GARO since her childhood. Her father was a famous artist who created a child picture book in which the hero is a golden knight that reflects his experience when he was saved by Saejima Taiga, and Kaoru herself was one of the six girls chosen by Barago as candidates to use as a medium to summon "Meshia the Ultimate Horror."

During Meshia's ascension (using Kaoru as entry point) Kaoru temporarily reunited with her family and Kaoru's father suggested Kaoru paint. After she finished her painting, her work somehow came to life and helped Kouga retransform into GARO, but he had golden wings. After Meshia was destroyed, KIBA tried to drag Kouga down with him, but Kaoru appeared and help grab Kouga back in the human realm. After all major battles were over, Kaoru decided to head off to Italy to study art and had an emotional farewell with Kouga. She gave Kouga a copy of her dad's book with a completed picture at the end which touched Kouga in a personal way, and he cried briefly.

Gonza

He's the butler of the Saejima household and his relationship with Kouga is best described as Bruce Wayne and Alfred. Gonza does all butler related activities and also advises Kouga on certain matters when Kouga doesn't understand. He helped raise and assist Kouga with his training since childhood. Though he has been exposed to the Makai world for over twenty years (between Taiga and Kouga), Gonza is a regular person without any form of Makai training other than the training to become a good butler.

Suzumura Rei/ZERO the Silver Fang

Once known as Ginga Suzumura Rei, aka ZERO is the Silver Makai Knight of the West. He was an orphan and the knight that wielded the Silver Fang armor at that time took pity on him and raised Rei as his son. His father (the house butler) was actually an old dying Makai Knight who never had kids so Rei was trained by him to inherit his title and start his own lineage, continuing the tradition of guardianship. Though trained as a Makai Knight, Rei didn't have the tenacity or murderous intent to be a true warrior. One fateful night his lover Shizuka and his father were killed by a warrior who suspiciously resembled GARO. Since then he renamed himself as ZERO and has a vengeful spirit to get back the Makai Knight that took his loved ones away.

During ZERO's quest for revenge he violated a host of protocols expected of a Makai Knight. He left his western territory post and barged into Kouga's eastern post. Because ZERO wasn't sure if Kouga was the same GARO that had taken his family, he remained constantly uncooperative and even started fights with him to vent out his anger. ZERO wields a pair of short swords called the GINROUKEN which can merge into a single piece weapon for stronger hits and use as a projectile weapon. ZERO's Madou Horse Ginga is similar to GARO's Gouten, but ZERO's horse has a blade attached to his head. Later in the series, the Watchdogs of the West try to frame Kouga for his family's death; ZERO would later discover the true killer was KIBA and ally himself with GARO. As the truths of matters unfold he became a caring friend for Kouga because their object of vengeance is KIBA/Barago.

Rei and Kouga later visited another Watchdog where they reported and were ordered to assassinate Barago and GARUMA. Because of ZERO's tall list of violations he wasn't allowed to participate in Kouga's mission, but Kouga argued on his behalf, needing his power. Rei's suspension was relinquished and he joined Kouga in dealing with Barago and GARUMA. During Kouga's dark transformation it was ZERO who helped Kouga snap out of his darkness.

GARUMA tried to stop the duo from reaching KIBA and Kaoru, but Rei decided to stay behind to deal with her, allowing Kouga to press forward. She assumed Shizuka's form and tried to trick him. He soon saw through her illusion because Shizuka addressed Rei as Ginga. After a very difficult fight ZERO almost died, but survived a mortal blow because Silva took the hit. After a losing fight against GARUMA, he took the opportunity of her overconfident victory and killed her.

Silva

She is the Madou Necklace of ZERO. She belonged to the former Silver Fang (Rei's father) and serves the current one. She takes the form of a Madou necklace of a woman wearing a mask. It was Silva that identified the killer of ZERO's family was related to another Makai Knight. It's unclear of Silva's true potential since ZERO never once used his blades or techniques with Silva as Kouga does with Zaruba. For now she's merely an advisor and Horror detector.

Watchdogs of the East - KEIRU, BERU, and ROUSU/GARUMA

The three ancient priestesses are in the form of three little girls in white angelic clothing named. Their thoughts are so unified that they complete each other's sentences in conversations. Centuries ago they were chosen to be the link between Makai and the human world. In a conversation between Jabi and Kouga it's revealed one of them used to be a human being, but her body decayed and has taken the form of one of the little girls. It's never revealed as to who was the former human that influences the rest of the two. The priestesses are oldest from the left and youngest to the right. The priestesses' names starting from left to right are KEIRU, BERU, and ROUSU (sounds out KERBEROS, the hound of Hades). At first they performed their expected duties for Kouga, but later associated with Barago for the common goal of unleashing Meshia. During the early part of their partnership, the three misused Horror and Madou materials to try to kill those that interfere with their plans. In the process Amon and Jabi were murdered. They blamed Shizuka's death on Kouga, motivating ZERO to kill GARO. Purified Horror blades were used to feed Barago instead of force repatriation.

Later Barago brought a female human body to serve as a host for the Watchdogs' spirit. The Watchdogs revealed their true forms as three old women. The three merged into the host body as one entity (GARUMA), allowing them to leave their place in order to help Barago with his plan. Although GARUMA was apparently helping BARAGO to obtain immortality, she was really just using him to bring Meshia into this world.

According to the Watchdogs, Kodama is their son, although it is not explained whether they created him, or just considered him as one. She displayed pride over Kodama's growth as a fighter and expected him to be stronger. When Kouga became a berserker and killed him, GARUMA showed concern over his demise, and hatred when she was fighting ZERO.

GARUMA is able to summon her own Makai armor. She fights using an arc and her fighting techniques (including invoking blue magic orbs) are similar to Kodama, but much stronger. She tried to stop Kouga from interfering with Meshia's plans, but was stalled by ZERO. GARUMA overwhelmed ZERO and got overconfident of the situation and was defeated (impaled) to her own surprise.

Barago/KIBA the Black Fang

Barago was once a talented Makai disciple of Saejima Taiga. Barago lost his loved ones to the Horrors and relied heavily on the powers of the Makai for revenge. His desperation for power grew and KIBA (living Makai Armor) heard his need. Barago was lured into a forgotten lair filled with forbidden techniques. KIBA revealed his voice in a Madou Book. Inside the book was filled with forbidden techniques that can strengthen a Makai Knight. Barago desired power so much that he agreed to give up his body and soul for vengeance. Upon saying those words dark powers emitted out of the book and transformed him. The forbidden Madou Book taught Barago how to surpass the 99.9 seconds time limit and a method of absorbing Horrors to gain their attributes. As Barago absorbed more Horrors his armor continued to deform into what it is now.

At one point Barago's armor deformed into a giant creature. Currently the KIBA armor is organically pure black with a cape in a humanoid form. Barago wields a sword similar to Saejima Taiga and a Madou Axe named AN-GA (Darkness Fang). AN-GA was given to Barago by the Watchdogs. Barago wishes to be the strongest and every time he absorbs a Horror his power amplifies. His ultimate goal is to absorb enough Horrors to fulfill immortality. This was based on a legend/myth of KIBA the Ultimate Makai Knight. Legend says if a Makai warrior absorbs more than 1,000 Horrors, he will achieve ultimate power. The truth behind this ultimate power is immortality (as told by Jabi). In a dramatic grand display of power, Barago single-handedly absorbed a giant Horror (composed of 12 Horrors).

Barago uses a potion to change his face, disguising himself as Ryuuzaki Karune, who is also Kaoru's psychologist. The Watchdogs address Barago as KIBA, yet those that seen him always address him as Barago. Barago transforms into KIBA without a Soul Metal weapon, but instead a Madou necklace, blowing on it to activate it. He swings his necklace and becomes the Dark Knight. Because of his amplified strength over the years of absorbing Horrors he's stronger and faster than the Makai Knights.

Barago's intentions were revealed after analyzing the situation carefully amongst ZERO, Kouga, Kaoru, and Gonza. They realized that it was Barago that selected six girls as candidates to open a gateway to unleash Meshia the Ultimate Horror. They also came to the conclusion that it was Barago that implanted yin (dark energy) into objects to attract Horrors so he could personally absorb them. The Watchdogs allied themselves with Barago to help bring forth Meshia.

Over a decade ago he selected six girls as living gateways to help summon Meshia and Kaoru is one of them. Barago foolishly believed that Meshia would be his source of great power, but when Kaoru was possessed by her, he discovered he was just being used as a means to bring her to this world. Meshia "ate" Barago with little resistance, but his body returned to the living world after Meshia was defeated by Kouga, fully possessed by KIBA.

Yamatatana Tsubasa/DAN the White Night

Yamatatana Tsubasa (aka White Night DAN) is the White Makai Knight of the North. He has a spear as his weapon and a Madou Bracelet named Goruba. He appears on GARO special show "Demon Beast of the White Night".

Video Game(s)

A video game based on the series was produced by Bandai for the PlayStation 2, under the name Ougon Kishi GARO. There were two versions released, a 'normal' version with the game disk, instructions, and standard pamphlets, and a more expensive 'Limited Edition' version which came with a green 'Fire' recolor of the metal Zaruba ring from the "Equip and Prop Vol. 1" GARO toy.

Notes

In the finale, it hinted to a possible continuation stating "To be continued", Chapter of The Black Wolf (KIBA).

Yasue Sato, who played the role of Jabi the Makai Priest, portrayed Nagi on Ultraman Nexus.

Rei Fujita (ZERO/Ginga) was in Kamen Rider 555 as Lucky Clover member Kitazaki/Dragon Orphenoch, the wearer of the Delta gear from episodes 28 to 32.

Murai Katsuyuki, who played Smart Brain President Kyoji Murakami on Kamen Rider 555 played Kaoru's father.

Mika Hijii was in Kamen Rider Blade as Miyuki Yoshinga/Orchid Undead.

Interesting to note that Fujita, Katsuyuki, and Hijii all portrayed villains in Kamen Rider, but in GARO, they are all good guys.

A special 90-minute GARO sequel will be aired in two parts on December 15 and 22, 2006. This sequel is entitled "Demon Beast of the White Night" and will feature the third Makai Knight named Byakuya Kishi Dan (White Night Knight Dan), along with classic characters like Kouga, Rei, Kaoru, and Taiga.

Rei Fujita has a band called DUSTZ

Hiroki Konishi "Saejima Kouga", Mika Hijii "Mitsuki Kaoru", and Rei Fujita "Rei Suzumura" are working on an anime by Keita Amemiya called G-9.

Kyomoto Masaki, who played Barago/Kiba, guest starred as Taki Ryusuke in episode 16 of the 1987 Kamen Rider Black.

Hironobu Kageyama, the voice of Zaruba, is a famed anime theme singer who has done the themes for series such as Dragon Ball Z, Choujin Sentai Jetman, and others. He also co-performs the theme of GARO, "Savior in the Dark", with other members of JAM Project.

GARTH MARENNGHI'S DARKPLACE

Garth Marenghi's Darkplace is the brainchild of celebrated horror writer and self-styled "fabulist" Garth Marenghi, author of such genre classics as Afterbirth (a mutated placenta attacks Bristol) and Crab! ("One of the three best horror books about crabs I've ever read" - Hard Gore Magazine). Back in the 1980s, he branched out into television production, writing and starring in a series so radical, so scary and so downright crazy that when the bosses of Channel 4 saw what they had on their hands, they ran away screaming, like little girls. Only now, twenty years on and amid the worst programming drought in television history, have the station finally allowed the show on the air. Intercut with new interviews with Marenghi himself and his co-stars Dean Learner and Todd Rivers, Garth Marenghi's Darkplace is perhaps the most disturbing vision of hospital life ever broadcast.

Ok, so for those of you who haven't spotted it yet (and to be honest you might want to get your doctor to check if you are special needs child if that's the case), it is of course a spoof. But, oh what a spoof.

At a time when to some people new television comedy comes in the shameful shape of dross like "Mad About Alice" or "My Family", Garth Marenghi's Darkplace is utterly refreshing.

The series is set in a hospital in pre-apocalyptic Romford in the 1980's, where Dr. Rick Dagless (Played by the fictional Garth Marenghi) battles against various supernatural phenomena. If you wanted to understate the style of this spoof horror you might describe it as "tongue-in-cheek" comedy, but that would be as oversimplistic as describing Fawlty Towers as "Man-in-hotel" comedy. (There's some form of clever, observant analogy in there, so please feel free to rework it yourselves to make it work. This may suit those of you who are good at those sliding-tile puzzles.)

But there's far more to the format of this show than simple spoof-horror. The fictional show is encased in an entire fictional production story. During the show at various intervals the programme cuts away to straight-faced interviews with Garth Merenghi and the cast who discuss what the audience are currently seeing, creating more priceless hilarity. The tone of this is very comparable with the cut-away interviews with the fictional staff that feature throughout 'The Office'. This is not the only similarity that this show has with Ricky Gervais' work. The more observant amongst you will recognise Garth Merenghi as the actor who played the Nascar-racing IT Technician in The Office. (Although admittedly if you ARE keeping such carefully indexed and detailed recollection of 'bit parts' in The Office it's possible you might need a few more hobbies.) In addition to this, Stephen Merchant also pops up to play small parts.

The series not only pokes subtle fun at the horror genre, but also takes the embarrassingly bad features of early '80s television shows for all they're worth. Dialogue that is deliberately written to achieve a level of ultimate 'cheesyness' is delivered with all the poor timing, poor acting and bad audio dubbing/synching you could wish for. Special effects go beyond simply looking cheap and models looking unrealistic, they become an essential element of this wonderfully unique comedy in their own right.

Characters

The cast of Darkplace, from left to right: Todd Rivers/Dr. Lucien Sanchez, Dean Learner/Thornton Reed, Garth Marenghi/Dr. Rick Dagless and Madeleine Wool/Dr. Liz Asher. Matthew Holness as Garth Marenghi, who plays Dr. Rick Dagless, MD. Dag is a Vietnam and Falklands veteran and former warlock. He also keeps a Magnum revolver on him at all times.

Richard Ayoade as Dean Learner, Garth's publisher, who (utterly incompetently) plays Thornton Reed, a camp hospital administrator who bears a trademark shotgun and answers to Hospital boss "Won Ton". He also has a habit of upstaging Garth.

Matt Berry as the actor Todd Rivers, who plays Dr. Lucien Sanchez, improbably handsome with the disconcerting habit of losing lip-synch, with coiffured hair, and a voice an octave lower than it should be. He

1 - 1 ONCE UPON A BEGINNING

New doctor Liz Asher arrives at Darkplace Hospital, where a mysterious cat portends disaster. Can Dr Rick Dagless M.D. act in time to prevent all sorts of unspeakable evilness leaking out from the standard-sized hellmouth under Darkplace Hospital itself? It's not going to be much of a series if he does.

1 - 2 HELL HATH FURY

At Darkplace Hospital, lunch is delayed and objects begin flying about the place and generally moving quite a bit more than they would usually do. At first suspicion falls on the hospital's temporary clerical assistant, but Dr Rick Dagless M.D. is determined to find out the truth, even if it kills him - which it doesn't.

1 - 4 THE APES OF WRATH

A mysterious illness spreads like a particularly virulent disease through the wards of Darkplace, causing doctors and patients to revert to a primal state. It's up to Dr Rick Dagless, M.D. to stop it before he too turns into a chimpanzee or an orang-utan or something like that.

GAVAN

AKA: UCHU KEIJI GABAN

AKA: SPACE COP GABAN

AKA: SPACE SHERIFF GAVAN

AKA: UCHUU KEIJI GYABAN

The evil Maky Space Crime Organization destroys a space colony and establishes a base on Earth but is pursued by Gavan (Oba), a half alien cosmic law enforcer determined to save the planet as it is the birthplace of his mother. Gavan's high powered armor put him on equal terms with the monsters he must battle, who included mutated Earth animals, a sea monster that preys on Japanese shipping, and a Maku agent using an antique alien helmet which turns the wearer invisible.

The Maku forces are prepared to try anything, including the kidnapping of pacifists to ensure that belligerent factions seize control of the government (compare to PHANTOM AGENTS), starting up schools designed to turn innocent children into future footsoldiers (compare to CHALLENGE FROM THE FUTURE), and manipulating the media to imply that Gavan is kidnapping children instead of saving them.

Star Oba formerly appeared as a comedy sidekick in Super Sentai shows such as BATTLEFEVER J and DENZIMAN but got to be the dashing lead in Gavan, which was to become the first of the loosely linked "Metal Series." Where GORANGER and its successors in the rival Super Sentai series featured teams of superheros in super-cool vehicles, the Metal Series preferred to encase its actors in armored battle suits. The series continued with SHALIBAN (who as first introduced toward the end of the series as Gavan's Earth-bound replacement when the Space Sheriff was promoted to Captain), SHIDER, JUSPIAN, SPEILBAN and METALDAR (combined and adapted for the US as V.R. TROOPERS). JIRAYA, JIVAN, WINSPECTOR, SOLBRAIN, EXIDRAFT, JAN PERSON, BLUESWAT, and the two Bee-fighter serials (which were combined and adapted for U.S. as Beetleborgs).

Gavan was also adapted into Manga form by Minou Nonaka. Supposedly based, as usual, on "an idea by Saburo Yade", the series contained some innovative and paranoid plot twists. Maku's cunning knows no bounds - the empire is prepared to offer sportsmen miracle drugs if they do their bidding (an idea used again in the later Black Jack) and kidnap the family of a scrupulous scientist in order to force him to work on an illegal virus. Meanwhile Gavan searches incessantly for his long-lost Father, who eventually appears in the 43rd episode, played by golden age superhero Shinichi "Sonny" Chiba. Theme : Akira Kushida - "Uchu Keiji Gaban" (Space Detective Gavan).

The Galactic Union Police, based on Bird Star, dispatches Space Sheriffs to planets throughout the universe. (Cf. the Guardians of Oa and the Green Lanterns of the DC Universe.) Many years ago, Voicer was Earth's Space Sheriff. He married an Earth woman, Ichijouji Tamiko, and had a son, Gavan. Voicer, intending to make Gavan a Space Sheriff, took him to Bird. Soon after, Tamiko died of illness.

(Seems pretty heartless to me to leave the wife behind...) Thereafter, Voicer was betrayed by his fellow Space Sheriff Hunter Killer (that's his name, 'Hantaa Kiraa') and captured by the space crime organisation Makuu. (Had Voicer known English, he'd have known better than to hang out with someone named 'Hunter Killer.') Gavan grew up on Bird, training to be the Space Sheriff that his now-lost father had intended him to be. Sent to Earth as its Space Sheriff, Gavan took the name Ichijouji Retsu. Accompanied by his assistant, Mimi, he fought Makuu while searching for his father. In the end, he did reunite with his father, whom Makuu killed by torture, and defeat Makuu. Rewarded with the position of Captain of the Galactic Patrol (not the whole Galactic Union Police), Gavan returned to Bird. Iga Den took his place as Earth's Space Sheriff--Sharivan.

Characters and mecha

The Galactic Union Patrol (only those members appearing in Gavan are listed; see sections 2 and 3 for later additions):

Commander Com
Commander of the GUP.

Mareen
Com's secretary; later Gavan's second partner.

Mimi
Com's daughter who fell for Gavan and became his first partner; later returned to Bird.

Alan
Space Sheriff of Beeze. Guest in episodes 31 and 32.

Voicer
Earth's Space Sheriff in the past. Gavan's father. Held the key to the superweapon called the 'Hoshino Super Cannon.' Died during torture by Makuu.

(All of the above had no Combat Suits.)

Gavan/Ichijouji Retsu
Earth's (then-current) Space Sheriff. Half-human, half-Bird. His two goals: defeat Makuu and find his father Voicer.
His arsenal (setting the pattern for future Metal Heroes):

Combat Suit
A silver suit of armor (actually a wet suit with plating varying in metallicity and detail depending on the type of shot and scene--stunt, close-up, etc.) When Gavan shouts, 'Jouchaku!' (literally, 'steam-wear'; a technical term used to refer to plating something with metal) particles of Granium rain from the Dolgiran, fusing around his body to form the Combat Suit in 0.05 seconds. Weapons include the Laser Z Beam fired from the Combat Suit's right index and middle fingers (the name is a remnant of Gavan's original proposed title, 'Uchuu Keiji Z') and the Laser Blade sword, with which he performs the Gavan Dynamic technique.

Cyberian
Gavan's red motorcycle with vestigial seatless sidecar. Capable of flight and entry into Makuu Space. (Like all true outer space vehicles in the Toei universe, it has 'Suzuki' proudly written on its fuel tank.)

Gavion
Gavan's tank, which splits into an extremely unaerodynamic flying platform and a base with treads.

Scooper
Gavan's double-drilled minitank, stored in Gavion's bottom half.

Dollgiran
Gavan's flying fortress, capable of space flight and Makuu Space entry. Consists of the Giran, a silver flying saucer 220 meters in diameter, and the Doll, a blue spacecraft that transforms into the gigantic mechanical dragon, the Electronic Star Beast Doll. Gavan pilots the fire-breathing Electronic Star Beast by standing on its head. (Actually, a way-out-of-scale, highly unconvincing figure of Gavan stood on Doll's nose and at the Gavion.)

The Space Crime Organization Makuu (lit. 'Demon Space')
Manipulates evildoings throughout the universe. Makuu's goal is nothing short of universal domination. It takes over planets and uses its inhabitants as weapons in the form of 'BEM Monsters,' 'Doublemen,' etc. (Cf. Gozma in Changeman or Zone in Fiveman.) For this reason, it is also known as the 'Beast Star Empire.' Its headquarters is the Makuu Castle, located in the dimension of Makuu Space (lit. 'Demon Space Space!').

Don Horror (yes, 'Don' as in 'Mafia don')
Head of Makuu.

GAZERAKA: BISHOJO SHINSEIKI GAZERAKA: BEAUTIFUL GIRL NEW CENTURY GAZER

Schoolgirl Moe Mikasa (Fukiishi) is troubled by mysterious dreams. She heads off for a day out with her friends Hitomo (Sudo), Ayako (Kimura) and Yuji (Hashi), ostensibly for a picnic but really to see whether a recent "meteorite" in Shirin Park was really a UFO. However, the park has been sealed off, and after they see a luminous object in the sky, the group is pursued by armed individuals. Moe escapes with the help of Yuji and her journalist uncle Akira (Nishimura), only to discover that her parents have been murdered by serial killer Ko (Uno).

Pursued by a mysterious woman called Rio (Mano), Moe goes on the run. She discovers that she was really adopted and that as a child she was abducted by aliens and injected with the Ekidona virus. Developed by Kirigami (Horiguchi), the chief of the Vector Life Science Lab, and his lover Aso (Nagasogabe), Ekidona hybridizes human and alien DNA. Those on whom the virus only exerts a partial effect are transformed into android mutants like Ko and Rio. However as the original vector for the virus, Moe has the chance to become a living goddess and Kirigami wants to control her. Ko tried to save Moe from the hand of Kirigami. Meanwhile, Aso approaches Rio to create more powerful mutants and to steal a march on Kirigami.

Heavily influenced by THE X-FILES (1993), first screened on TV Asahi in 1995, Gazer adds monster combat in the long tradition of Tsuburaya shows - compare to similar late-night serials such as Bunny Knights and Masekd Angel Rosetta. Though it was broadcast after midnight and hence technically on Sunday morning, some sources still list it was a Saturday night show. Music by Takashi Nakagawa and Takuya Nishimura.

GEMINI FACTOR, THE

Two twin brothers separated when being born. Two rings forming the Yin and Yang. Two telepathic minds. A ancient clock-tower. A mystery for keep awake.

The Gemini Factor was a children's TV drama series made by Thames Television in 1987 (though some sources attribute it to Central TV). Over the course of six half-hour episodes it tells the story of two apparently unconnected fourteen-year-olds; the aggressive, antisocial Lee (portrayed by Charlie Creed-Miles), and the shy, well-behaved Leah (portrayed by Louisa Haigh who, possibly envious of Charlie's hyphen, now goes by the name of Louisa Millwood-Haigh).

The CGI opening title sequence was an obvious steal of M.C.Escher's Rind and Bond of Union.

Lee and Leah are both fourteen years old, and share the same birthday. They were both found abandoned as babies - separately - and with each of them had been left a ring depicting half a yin-yang symbol. As soon as they come within a few miles of one another they start experiencing visions of one another's experiences. The revelation that they were in fact twins came as little of a surprise, especially after the CITV presenter's introductory announcement that the series was about "a brother and sister with telepathic powers".

The series was occasionally reminiscent of parts of Thames' earlier telepathic-boy-meets-girl drama, Chocky's Children, but was rather darker in style and content. Its no-holds-barred portrayal of such horrors as theft, a little boy nearly falling off the roof of a tall building, big scary dogs, and - perhaps most disturbing of all - a school PE lesson, led to a small number of complaints from frightened parents.

The series was nominated for a BAFTA for Best Children's Drama (or something), but lost out to Grange Hill. However to the best of my knowledge The Gemini Factor was never repeated in the UK, although it was aired in other countries, among them Australia. It currently resides with Pearson Television.

The series was written by Paula Milne, produced by Sheila Kinany, directed by Renny Rye, edited by Richard Halladey, and executively produced by Alan Horrox.

In November 1987, a paperback novelisation was published by Thames Magnet, written by Thea Bennett (ISBN 0-423-02300-4). This book has of course been out-of-print ever since.

GEMINI MAN

Ben Murphy (alias wisecracking outlaw Kid Curry from Alias Smith & Jones) starred as Sam Casey, an investigator for a government organisation called Intersect. During an underwater salvage operation he is caught in a radiation explosion that alters his body's molecular structure. Casey can now disappear at will - a knack exploited by his no-nonsense boss Leonard Driscoll who turns him into his new secret agent, assigned to such tasks as guarding an Olympic swimmer, driving a truck-load of chemicals and fighting a mad scientist's computerised robot.

But there is a catch. Casey can stay invisible for a total of just 15 minutes each day. If he miscalculates and allows his brief moments out of sight to add up to more than that in any 24hour period, he will vanish for good

Originally billed here in Britain as THE INVISIBLE MAN Becomes The Gemini Man, this 1976 pilot and subsequent one-season series were an attempt to turn an invisible flop into a visible success. This series was produced by Harve Bennett who was also responsible for THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN and THE BIONIC WOMAN. The film Riding With Death was a combination of two episodes from the show, The Smithereens and Buffallo Bill Rides Again. Alan J. Levi who directed the pilot episode had also worked on many other SF shows in the mid 1980s, including KNIGHT RIDER and AIRWOLF. The series first aired in the UK between 12th October 1976 and 28th December 1976 on BBC1. The executive producer was Harve Bennett (TIME TRAX), producer was Leslie Stevens (THE OUTER LIMITS). After the first five episodes, the series was cancelled with episode 1.6, "Escape Hatch".

 Based on a Novel by H G Wells Produced in association with Harve Bennett Productions, and Universal an MCA company established in 1976.

Ben Murphy, best remembered as Kid Curry in Alias Smith and Jones, first dis-appeared as Sam Casey when The Gemini Man pilot movie, Code Name: Minus One, premiered on the US NBC network on 23rd September 1976. The Gemini Man was an attempt, by Harve Bennett, to 're-launch' his 1975 David McCullum series: The Invisible Man (cancelled after 12 episodes). The 'new' version largely avoided the problems of the earlier show, which had been criticized, among other things, for its hero being naked when invisible!

By enveloping Casey in a 'field of invisibility' which encompassed his clothes (and could be turned on and off this problem was solved. A time limit was established to how long he could remain invisible, this a device to increase tension - and viewer involvement. For the pilot, Richard Dysart played Sam's boss, Leonard Driscoll, but during the series William Sylvester filled that role while Dr Abigail 'Abby' Lawrence, computer expert and physicist, was played by Katherine Crawford. Just seven days after The Gemini Man debuted, she was in Captains and the Kings, another NBC series.

In a reverse of common practice today, the filmed 'blue screen' shots were composited on video, before transfer back to film by 'tele-recording', an ancient system utilized to preserve television images before video recorders. Today most pro-programmes are originated on 35mm film, before transfer to video for editing and post production, a cost saving, though controversial, technique. It has trapped programmes, like Star Trek: TNG, in a 4:3 ratio format when tv is moving to 16:9 (widescreen) format! The Gemini Man first arrived in Britain shortly after its US premiere, coming to BBC 1 on 12th October 1976. How-ever, against heavy competition in the US the series survived only 1 episodes.

The Gemini Man sprang to life from the wreckage of the previous season's The Invisible Man. When the latter proved a ratings dud in 1975, NBC was convinced that it was the treatment, not the concept, that failed. They quickly commissioned the same producers to try again. The Gemini Man's story editor, Steven de Souza, was surprised by the whole affair. "It was the first time I had seen a network cancel a show and then want it back immediately! On The Gemini Man, they took the unfilmed Invisible Man scripts and filmed them. As story editor, I knew the scripts were recycled. They had crossed out the names on the Invisible Man script and put the Gemini Man names in the margins."

"When The Invisible Man was not renewed, Universal ordered The Gemini Man in its place," says executive producer Harve Bennett. "It was the conversion of one format into another. Something similar had happened a few years earlier at Universal. A show named Toma had been converted into the series Baretta. It was a kind of common experiment at the time." Producer Robert O'Neill helped to reincarnate The Invisible Man. "Since The Invisible Man wasn't working, there was an attempt to save the show in a different form. Universal was anxious to save the premise. The head of TV at Universal, Frank Price, had a meeting with me and Leslie Stevens, and we were brainstorming ideas. We were desperate to come up with another format that would work. We came up with the idea of an agent who had limited invisibility. Leslie Stevens came up with the idea of putting a wristwatch on Sam Casey. This gave him 15 minutes worth of invisibility at a time." This technique gave Casey far more flexibility and vulnerability than Dr. Daniel Westin in The Invisible Man, who had to wear a human mask and clothes to hide his invisible form.

With NBC and Universal anxious to give the concept another go-around, casting was crucial. The network and studio wanted a more athletic lead. "Since The Gemini Man was a more conventional action-adventure show, we wanted a handsome, American action hero," says Harve Bennett. Ben Murphy was cast as the playboy agent, Sam Casey.

"Ben was a more physical kind of guy than David McCallum," notes Robert O'Neill. "It was felt he had the sex appeal required, and he was certainly capable. The network and studio liked him, and Murphy was interested in finding another series [Murphy had previously co-starred in Alias Smith and Jones]. We wanted to seduce the audience into thinking The Gemini Man was a whole new show."

Leslie Stevens, however, didn't see any future for the invisible men. "Universal assigned me to help Harve Bennett bail out a sinking ship, The Invisible Man," he recalls. "When it failed, the studio had felt David McCallum wasn't appealing enough to carry a series. They wanted the more dashing, brainless Ben Murphy. I came up with a new approach called The Gemini Man, which put the hero in a little more jeopardy. I came up with the wrist gizmo and other futile stop-gaps, but I knew from the outset that "invisibility" was a creaky franchise. I argued that the disappearing act hands the hero a cowardly solution to his problems. It was like a squid hiding under a cloud of ink. The original H.G. Wells classic was great, but from Topper on, invisibility sucks."

Harve Bennett felt that Murphy added a new dimension to the invisible theme. "Ben brings an energy level and a sense of humor David McCallum didn't have in the role," he told TV Guide during the series' run. "David's character was serious about the whole invisibility business. Ben realizes that it might be fun to use it to get into the girls' dormitory. Ben is the best action hero since Errol Flynn."

"I loved working with Ben. He was a real trooper," says Bennett today. "He enjoyed doing the show." Associate producer Richard Milton was less enthusiastic. "Ben Murphy was a contract player at Universal, and he was impossible. He certainly wasn't the actor McCallum was. The Gemini Man was a more action-oriented show, but it didn't go anywhere either."

"There was one problem common to The Gemini Man and The Invisible Man," notes Bennett. "You're asking the audience to love somebody who isn't there most of the time. There is only so much you can do with audio. The joke wears a little thin when a bad guy walks into a room and suddenly, whap, he reacts to an invisible blow. He falls down, and you laugh. But you don't laugh every week. It became very difficult to find inventive ways of using invisibility. The other problem was that being an invisible man has a certain prurient quality. On The Gemini Man, we had Kim Basinger in a train in an upper berth. Ben Murphy, invisible, is trying to escape the police, and he ends up in the berth with her. It's a funny scene, but you can't play it for more than, 'Oops! Pardon me. I'm outa here!' At least, not on TV " The Gemini Man was mainly a crime series with a unique gimmick. "The espionage plots were easier to write," says Robert O'Neill. "The only time we moved into science fiction was with one I wrote, "Minotaur," about a robot. We weren't sure what kind of stories would be successful."

Steven de Souza believes a dull episode was used to kick off the series' premiere. "There were two episodes that had a lot of adult themes," he says. "They were more sophisticated, more intriguing and had some romance and production values. But the episodes couldn't be edited in time to make the airdate. What went on was an episode with a much more familiar storyline. "That happens a lot with science fiction shows. They're given very little love by studio executives. Science fiction shows are generally regarded as juvenile. The attitude is, 'Well, it's just for kids.' You get executives who have a certain scorn or who are indifferent to the material. Because it's science fiction they don't think the story has to make any sense."

De Souza recalls one Gemini Man episode that enraged not only TV critics but viewers as well. "It was a very chaotic situation between the transition of The Invisible Man and The Gemini Man," he says. "The Gemini Man didn't have any scripts. One of the studio execs said, 'Wait a minute. Remember we did a show last season on The Bionic Woman, where the bad guys did plastic surgery on someone and made them identical to Jaime Sommers? Let's do that for The Gemini Man.' So they took The Bionic Woman script, over the misgivings of its writer (James Parriott), and used on it The Gemini Man. They just changed the names. Well, around this time, Lindsay Wagner was involved in a car accident. The Bionic Woman went into reruns for awhile, and they just happened to run her "identical twin" episode. This was on a Tuesday night. The next night, The Gemini Man aired his "identical twin" episode ["Sam Casey, Sam Casey"]. Well, the same audience watches both shows. You would not believe the amount of letters that came into NBC and Universal. 'Do you think we're idiots out here? Just because we watch science fiction, do you think we're morons? We won't watch The Gemini Man again because you're ripping off The Bionic Woman.' Newspaper columnists wrote about how creatively bankrupt Hollywood minds are."

"I was on the staff of The Bionic Woman, and I was asked to redo a version of my "twin" script for The Gemini Man," James Parriott says, in a tone that suggests he'd rather have gotten his teeth pulled. "Well, after it aired, I was lambasted by the press. A reporter caught me and said, 'It's the same story as The Bionic Woman!' I said, 'I did what they told me to do!'" The Gemini Man also faced the old story of budgetary constraints. "We just didn't have the budget to do the effects the way we wanted," says Robert O'Neill. "Today, with computer-generated opticals, we could have done a much better job."

"We had a lot of special effects," recalls Richard Milton. "We had tons of blue screen, tons of second unit stuff, we floated things around on thin wire and nylon. It was very complicated and time consuming. It really screwed up the production schedule. But the effects on TV looked pretty good." The Gemini Man vanished after two months on the air. It was up to Harve Bennett to break the news to his star. "I had the task of going down to the stage and telling Ben it was over. I found him dozing off in a chair-actors in TV series work horrendous hours. I said, 'Ben?' He looked at me and I said, 'Ben, I gotta give it to you straight. We weren't picked up.' He said, 'Oh, that's okay. Now I can do what I've always wanted to do. I'm gonna become a senior tennis champion of the world.' Well, I'm a tennis player, and I had played with Ben. He was better than I was, but he wasn't ... well, you know. And Ben continued, 'My age is right. I just turned 36, and if I work real hard, I can go knock their socks off.'" Bennett tried to explain to the actor that he would have formidable competition, but Murphy was determined. "I finally said, 'Well, follow your dream, Ben.' And he did become a superb tennis player. But after five years, he went back to acting!"

CAST NOTES

Ben Murphy (Sam): Born 1941. Murphy's first big break was as Kid Curry on TV's Alias Smith and Jones (1971-73). He continues to appear in guest shots in TV series such as Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman (1993).

Katherine Crawford (Abby): Born 1944. The daughter of TV writer Roy Huggins and wife of Universal TV executive Frank Price, Katherine Crawford distinguished herself with several strong performances in the 1960s and 1970s. She is currently retired from acting.

William Sylvester (Driscoll): Born 1922. This character actor had a major role in 2001: A Space Odyssey (1968).

GEORGIAN HOUSE,THE

Two students, Dan and Abbie, take a holiday job at a museum which, 200 years earlier, was the home of the wealthy Leadbetter family. The pair are attracted by an African carving which suddenly emits a strange sound, and a voice commands them back in time to 1772. There Dan is transformed into a kitchen boy and Abbie becomes a member of the Leadbetter household.

The reason for their trip back in time? Ngo, a negro slave boy with strange powers, who is threatened with an enforced return to the misery of the sugar plantations, has manipulated a time tunnel that links the 18th and 20th centuries to bring Abbie and Dan back to help him return to Sierra Leone.

Seven-part 1975 drama from HTV that followed the adventures through time of two children in a beautiful Georgian house in Bristol. For one of the series stars, Spencer Banks, time travel was not a novel experience. He'd played Simon Randal in the much admired children's SF series TIMESLIP. The producer for the series was Leonard White, the executive producer was Patrick Dromgoole, the designer for the show was Ken Jones. The series was first seen on ITV.

GET SMART (1965)

The Smart in the title of Get Smart referred to agent Maxwell Smart, Agent 86. Unlike his name might suggest, Smart was not particularly bright. In fact he was something of an idiot and a bungler who was often unaware of the events transpiring around him. Smart was also the top agent of CONTROL, a top secret organisation which was forever at odds with KOAS, and evil organisation bent on world domination.

Smart's status as controls top agent was in part due to his incredibly good looking and also the resourcefulness of his partner Agent 99, a beautiful woman whose real name was never revealed in the series. She did however use the name Susan Hilton while working undercover. The only other normal person who worked at CONTROL was the Chief, Max and 99s superior who always seemed amazed that Smart could make it through his missions alive, let alone succeed in foiling KAOS's plans.

Smart had a variety of stock phrases that he would always seem to use such as: 'Sorry about that Chief' whenever he injured the chief; 'Would you believe. . .' while concocting an impossible explanation that had little chance of actually being believed: and 'That's the second biggest ___ I've ever seen' while trying to act unimpressed about something big.

To help Max and 99 in their missions they had a variety of gadgets, some a bit on the useless side and the aid of fellow agents, all of them bizarre. The best-remembered of the gadgets was the phone that had been installed in Smart's right shoe. In the days before cellular phones and PCS he would often stand out in a crowd when his shoe would ring at an inopportune moment. Other neat gadgets included: the dreaded cone of silence which Smart insisted be used when secret discussions were taking place. Designed to keep unwanted ears from hearing conversations the cones of silence worked so well that no one inside was able to hear what was going on.

Smart's fellow CONTROL agents included: Hymie the robot who never worked all that well and tended to take instructions far too literally: Larabee, perhaps the only person whom Smart was smarter than : Agent 13 an agent who would appear in the most unusual places such as inside mail boxes and cupboards: and Charlie Watkins, a master of disguise who always appeared as a beautiful woman - Charlie was a guy.

Villains who seemed to keep returning to get defeated by Max and 99 included Siegfried, KAOS' top agent, and his assistant Straker and The Claw, an oriental villain with an artificial hand who was often incorrectly referred to as the Claw!

With the huge success of the first several James Bond films in the mid 1960s, a plethora of spy dramas began appearing both in the theatres and on television. For the most part these were intended to be taken seriously by their audiences, that is up until Get Smart appeared. Get Smart was a highly successful parody of the spy genre created by Buck Henry and Mel Brooks, and it remains the most successful parody in television history to date.

This is due in part to the fact that in order to be successful a parody must parody something that is by its own right popular, however it is also due to the fact that as a comedy Get Smart stands up on its own. After 4 seasons of NBC, Get Smart began to lose its popularity. CBS bought the show and in an effort to boost the series' ratings several changes were made. In the previous season, while facing certain death Max told 99 that if they manage to escape he would marry her. They survived and he ended up marrying her.

To start things off in the 5th season 99 informed Max that she was pregnant. She soon gave birth to twins! Episodes shifted focus a bit to concentrate on the domestic problems that arose when one was a spy. Get Smart spawned three revivals, the first The Nude Bomb appeared in theatres in 1979. One of the first efforts at reviving an old TV series. The Nude Bomb failed due in part to the fact that only two members of the original cast appeared in the film. It has been renamed The Return of Maxwell Smart for television. Ten Years later Get Smart Again!, a made for TV movie was made that did feature most of the regular cast. In 1995 the series was revived with Max in charge of CONTROL and his son the number one bumbling agent.

In the UK, the early seasons were shown on BBC1 between 1966 and 1970, and the series had also resurfaced on satellite channel Bravo. The music for the show was composed and conducted by Irving Szathmany.

Spoofs don't come much funnier than this Emmy award-winning sixties series, which sent up the whole spy genre of its day. Created by comic writers Mel Brooks and Buck Henry, Get Smart starred Don Adams as Agent 86, Maxwell Smart, a willing but inept secret agent working for Washington-based U.S. intelligence agency C.O.N.T.R.O.L. which was headed by The Chief, Thaddeus. With the aid of his beautiful and brilliant partner, Agent 99, dog Fang, robot Hymie and fellow operative Agent 13, Max strove tirelessly to defeat the forces of K.A.O.S., an organisation led by evil mastermind Siegfried and his assistant Starker, who, not surprisingly, wanted to rule the world. Get Smart abounded with witty gags and one-liners and gave the world the catchphrase "Would you believe . . . ?" uttered by Max whenever his first excuse wasn't accepted.

But the series also featured a remarkable line in gadgetry, which more than warrants its inclusion in this collection. Radio transmitters turned up all over the place-Max had a phone in his shoe-and there was a sandwich phone, a short-wave table tennis bat, a coffee and doughnut transmitter and an ice-cream cone phone. Other oddities included a miniature torpedo hammer an electronic mosquito anti-personnel device, a remote-control doorknob a vase bazooka and bullet-proof pyjamas. And, of course, there was the Cone of Silence. When Max wanted to hold a private conversation with The Chief, two glass bell jars would descend over them, linked by a tube making their speech inaudible.

Get Smart ran for five seasons and 138 episodes (all but the very first were in color). Romance between Max and Agent 99 led to their marriage and the birth of twins a boy and a girl.

The eighties saw a brace of TV movie revivals, The Nude Bomb (aka The Return of Maxwell Smart) in 1980, and Get Smart Again! (1988), the latter reuniting most of the series' main cast, with the notable exception of Edward Platt (The Chief) who had died. Executive producer for the show was Leonard B. Stern, producers for the show were Arne Sultan, Mel Brooks and Jesse Oppenheimer. The music was composed and conducted by Irving Szathmany. The series first appeared in the UK in 1966 on BBC1.

GIANT ROBO

AKA: JOHNNY SOKKO AND HIT GIANT ROBOT

AKA: JIYAIANTO ROBO

Evil Emperor Guillotine (Sato), ruler of the Planet Gargoyle, crashes his flying saucer in the Pacific Ocean. The Earth authorities believe he is dead. Meanwhile, in another part of the Pacific, Japanese boy Daisaku/Johnny (Kaneko) is on a cruise liner. The ship is attacked by Dagora (US: Dracolon), one of many monsters who have come to Earth along with Guillotine. As the ship sinks, Daisaku escapes with his newfound writer friend Juro/Gerry (Ito) and the pair are washed up on a seemingly deserted island.

There they meet Doctor Over/Professor Guardian (Ando), a scientist who has been forced by Guillotine to build a super-powered robot. However, as his project near completion, the scientist has realized he cannot go through with the evil deed and he booby-traps his lair with an atomic bomb. The professor's lair is attacked by the Gargoyle Gang/Big Fire (agents of Guillotine), and the Doctor urges Daisaku and Juro to escape while he stays behind to fight them off. However, instead of being destroyed in the explosion, Giant Robo is activated by it.

The robot is designed to recognize the first voice it hears as its master - Daisaku speaks into the fob watch containing a radio transmitter and Giant Robo become his to command. Spider (Date), leader of the Guillotine's Gargoyle Gang, orders Dagora to attack Tokyo but Daisaku and Juro climb into Giant Robo's hand and command him to fly them there. When they arrive, Daisaku orders Giant Robo to fight Dagora, and the first of many monsters battles is won. In later episodes, Guillotine sends other monsters to threaten the safety of the world, including Globar the Devil-Ball (US: Nucleon), Satan Rose (US: Gargoyle Vine the Space Plant), Gangar (US: The Giant Claw), Dorogon (US: Dragon the Ninja Monster), Ikageras (US: Scanlon the Starfish Monster), and Draculan the Space Vampire (same in the US for once!).

A series of unexplained disasters at sea prompts an investigation by the premier Earth defense force UNICORN. Agent U3, Minami Jyuro is dispatched from UNICORN (Japan Division) to the location of the disasters. There he meets up with a boy traveling alone. His name is Kusama Daisaku. Suddenly, the ship that they are traveling on is violently attacked by a giant sea creature. Minami and Kusama Daisaku barely survive the attack and drift ashore onto a mysterious island.

The island turns out to be the secret headquarters for the sinister terrorist organization BF Dan (Big Fire Organization) who serves the invading alien conqueror Emperor Guillotine. Emperor Guillotine has commissioned the creation of the most powerful robot the world has ever seen. To his end he has captured famed scientist Dr. Garulcher to build the robot.

Minami and Kusama Daisaku escape their confines and attempt to flee the island. Meeting up with Dr. Garulcher, Kusama Daisaku is given a watch controller. Dr. Garulcher asks Kusama Daisaku to speak into the watch. This simple action forever binds 'Giant Robo' to Kusama Daisaku. Dr. Garulcher is killed by BF Dan for his betrayal.

Minami and Kusama Daisaku escape BF Headquarters with 'Giant Robo' and eventually return to UNICORN headquarters where Kusama Daisaku is recruited as an Agent and given the code number 'U-7'.

Together with Giant Robo, Kusama Daisaku battles Emperor Guillotine and his galactic minions for the safety of Japan and the World.

Thought one Toru Hirayama shared part credit for the series, its origins were chiefly the responsibility of "co-creator" Mitsuteru Yokoyama, the manga author whose other works included COMET-SAN, GIGANTOR and Water Margin, as well as numerous works later adapted into Anime, such as Babel II. Though equally as influential as Osamu Tezuka, Yokoyama seems to have lost out in the battle for the limelight - Tezuka was undoubtedly the better self publicist and had his own studio to push his products.

Published in Shonen Magazine in 1956, Yokoyama's original Giant Robo manga had a similar monster-of-the-week storyline, although the manga robot was originally created as part of a secret World War II project - possibly we can see Hirayama's influence here, carefully sanitizing the original with an eye to foreign sales. If that was the case, he got his wish - the series was broadcast in the US in 1969 as Johnny Sako and His Giant Robot and then in Australia during the 1970s. The US production was overseen by producer Salvatore Billiteri, who also produced the American version of Prince Planet, with a rewritten script credited to Reuben Guberman.

The voice of Johnny was provided in the American version by Prince Planet actor Billie Byers. Several episodes of the series were re-cut into a feature length edition, released in the US as Voyage Into Space (1970). Compare to other early dramas imported into the English speaking world, such as SPACE GIANTS and Phantom Agents. The story was also radically remade as a straight to video anime series in 1992. Music by Takeo Yamashita.

The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama, Shinichi Miyazaki and Yasujaru Ueda. The series is also known as Johnny Sokko and His Flying Robot in the US. The English version of the series was shown in 52 episodes.

Characters

Giant Robo

Giant Robo was to be Big Fire's vanguard of destruction. Dr. Garulcher built Giant Robo to be the most power robot in the world. Armed with an array of deadly weapons and possessing incredible strength and power, Giant Robo is indeed a force to be reckoned with. Giant Robo is powered by Nuclear Engines. Giant Robo can only be controlled via a wrist watch communicator worn by Kusama Daisaku. Since Kusama Daisaku was the first voice Giant Robo heard, he is the only person able to command Giant Robo

Statistics:

Height/Weight (Metric): 30 Meters/500 Tons

Top Flight Speed: Mach 17

Giant Robo Weaponry:

- Giant Robo Missiles - Giant Robo is able to fire missile warheads from his fingertips.
- MegaTon Punch - Giant Robo's Ultimate Special Attack.
- MegaTon Kick
- Eye Lasers
- Mouth Flamethrower
- Giant Robo's Armor - Can withstand beyond 3,000 degrees of electrical generated heat.

Unicorn

UNICORN is an International Police Organization dedicated to protecting the Earth. UNICORN has bases around the globe but have a major base in Japan. The Japan Division is lead by Commander Higashi. Agent U-3, Minami Jyorou is one of UNICORN's top agents. He is usually assigned to protect Kusama Daisaku on his missions with Giant Robo.

UNICORN agents are equipped with a wide variety of weapons. Most prominent are their Jet Packs which allow them to travel through the air.

Big Fire

Formed by the alien invader known as Emperor Guillotine, the BF Dan (Big Fire Organization) is a collection of terrorists who are determined to conquer the world in the name of Emperor Guillotine. Using Guillotine's super science, Big Fire is able to mutate and create gigantic monsters, awesome robots and deadly supernatural beings to attack and subdue the world. While the bulk of the Big Fire Organization is composed of human agents, Emperor Guillotine has also recruited various aliens and mutated humans to lead his armies against Giant Robo and UNICORN.

Trivia/Factoids Based on Yokoyama Mitsuteru's 'Shonen Sunday' Manga Series.

Prolific manga writer Yokoyama Mitsuteru is also the man behind such works as 'Kamen No Ninja Akakage', 'Tetsujin 28 Gou', 'God Mars', 'Babel II Sei' (Babel The Second) and 'Majoutsukai Sally' (Sally The Witch).

Kaneko Mitsunobu also played the title character 'Akuma Kun' in the 1966 Series.

Date Shouzaburo also appeared in the series 'Uchu Tetsujin Kiyoudyne'.

After appearing in some of Toei's 70's Sexploitation films like 'Jyoshu 701 Go Sasori' (Female Prisoner Scorpion), 'Bankoku Rock', and 'Zubekko Bancho', Katayama Yumiko gained lasting fame as super sexy detective Kataoka Yumiko, part of the all-girl PLAYGIRL Investigation Agency in the 'Avengers' inspired and massively popular 'Playgirl' (1969-1974) series.

Tokusatsu fans may remember Tanba Matasaburo better as the sneering Black Shogun in the original 'Kamen Rider Series'.

Character actor Murota Hideo has made a living playing shady and villainous characters in the various Toei films he's been associated with. He has appeared in such movies as 'Jyoshu 701 Go Sasori', 'Bankoku Rock', 'Onna Hissatsu Ken', 'Makai Tensei', 'Jeans Blues', 'GONIN', 'JINGI', 'Zero Ka No Onna ' Akai Tetcho'(Zero Woman - Red Handcuffs), 'Doberman Deka' and 'Wolf Guy'.

While Ando Mitsuo is best known as wacky Professor Gill in 'Kikaider', he also played other villainous Tokusatsu characters such as Kuro Jyushi Soutou (Black Cross President) in 'Himitsu Sentai Go-Rangers', Monster Kyojyu (Dr. Monster) in the Japanese TV Series 'Spiderman', Gaizelle Soutou (Leader Gaizelle) in 'Inazuman Flash' and Raider in 'Uchu Keiji Spielban'.

GIGANTORAKA: IRONMAN #28AKA: TETSUJIN 28-GO

Large robots are being used to commit crimes by the secret QX criminal organization. Orphan Shotaro (Naito) realizes that they are military machines created by his scientist father during World War II, long presumed destroyed by the allied bombing. In fact, the robots survived the war and have fallen into the wrong hands. Former researcher Professor Shikashima (Mikawa) helps Shotaro find Ironman #28, the last and strongest of the prototypes. They decided to use #28 to fight crime and restore the good name of Shotaro's father.

Based on the 1956 manga in Shonen Magazine, written by Water Margin's Mitsutero Yokoyama, Gigantor was later transformed into a more successful animated series, that ran for considerably longer than this single black-and-white season. As might be expected, the limits of live-action filming took their toll, most obviously in the titular robot, whose height was a mere two meters, hardly the "bigger than big" of the later anime version. Episodes of the series were released in the US in a feature-length edit under the title Brain 17.

GINGA SHONEN TAI

AKA: THE GALAXY BOY'S TEAM

AKA: SPACE PATROL

AKA: GINGA SHONENTAI

The power of the sun begins to wane, endangering the future of all life on Earth. The Space Patrol, accompanied by Professor Hanajima and Rop the token child, go in search of material to revive the sun - compare to Star Blazers.

Bridging the gap between SILICA and AERIAL CITY 008, this rare puppet show from Osamu Tezuka did not achieve quite the same success as his more famous ASTRO BOY. No doubt with most of Tezuka's staff busy on the anime version of Astro Boy, Space Patrol only used minimal animation, for special effects and credits, using the puppets as a swifter method of shooting character-based sequences.

Tezuka's puppet adventure was preceded on Japanese TV by Gerry Anderson shows such as SUPERCAR (NTV, 1961) and Four Feather Falls (TBS, 1963) - the latter show perhaps explaining why Space Patrol has an incongruous cowboy, Tex, along with Pedro, a child with an unfeasibly large sombrero. Theme: Tokyo Broadcasting Children's Choir - "Ginga Shonentai", music was by Isao Tomita, who also provided scores for a number of Tezuka's animated works.

The series was produced by Susumu Yasue and Mushi Pro. The first series of 43 episodes were shown between 7th April 1963 and 5th April 1964 and were all 15 minutes long, the second series of 49 episodes were shown between 9th April 1964 and the 1st April 1965, and each episode was 25 minutes long.

On the "Columbia" space shuttle mission STS-87 (1997-11-19 to 1997-12-05), mission specialist Takao Doi performed the first EVA by a Japanese (1997-11-26). Doi-san's favourite TV show as a boy was "Ginga Shonen Tai", and on flight day 4 (1997-11-22), he woke to the theme song.

GINGAMAN

AKA: SEIJUU SENTAI GINGAMAN

AKA: STAR-BEAST TASK FORCE MILKY WAY-MAN

AKA: STAR BEAST TASK FORCE

AKA: STAR-BEAST BATTLE-TEAM GALAXY MAN

3,000 years ago, the Baruban(Balban) space pirates invaded Earth. The Seijuu (Star Beasts) and the first Gingaman, warriors from the Ginga forest, fought them with the mystical power Earth, and finally sealed them on their ship at the bottom of the ocean. The Ginga people cloaked their forest in marked boundaries and have kept watch through 3,000 years, each generation providing a team of warriors to fight if the Balban should break free.

This is the 133rd generation, and Hyuuga, Gouki, Hayate, Hikaru and Saya are chosen as the warriors of SeiJuuKen (Star Beast Swords). When Elder Orghi holds the ceremony of the succession of Star Beast Swords, an earthquake breaks the seal of Balban (coincidence, I'm sure). Elder Orghi orders the warriors to get the Ginga Bracelets, hidden in Roaring Mountain (outside of the forest's boundaries).

However, the Balban attack them to prevent the birth of the new Gingaman. At last, Hyuga gets swallowed into the crack in the ground which Captain Zahab (he MUST be a play on Captain Ahab, which makes me wonder if there's going to be a great white whale...) of Balban created. Enraged, Ryouma awakens his dormant Earth power and awakens the Ginga Bracelets.

Gingaman's purpose: Together with the Seijuu they fight against the Balban space pirates who intend to find a new energy source and revive the Demon Beast Ditanix on whose 'corpse' they built their castle.

The red prince is Hyuuga. His is the power of fire. The green is Harate, his is the power of wind. The blue is Gouki, his power is water. Yellow is Hikaru, his is the power of lightning. The pink princess is Saya, and she has flower-power (sorry, I couldn't help it). Civilian clothing colour and style is reminiscent of Native American styles, though only faintly. They have power coins with the symbols of their guardian creatures.

Actress Kie Mizutani also appeared in numerous anime/manda tie-ins including Weather Women, Kekko Kamen and The Ladies' Phone Sex Club, and Juri Miyazawa appeared in Dangerous Angle X Death Hunter. Note also popular anime voice actor Wakamoto (Gunbuster) as the series narrator.

This creature, Bokku, is a nifty little fellow who doesn't seem to do much else than flitter about and carry messages to and fro, but I'm sure he'll have more to do later in the series.

This is the forest wizard Oogi who gives our heroes their blessings. He doesn't get to stick around too long, unfortunately. Hyuuga is Ryouma's older brother. And he WAS to have been Gingared. Except for this little factor of premature death trying to protect his brother. He may be back, though. As a ghost... an inspiration... or something else?

Daitanikusu" (play on "Titanic"?) is a creature/spaceship/god? that has been imprisoned beneath the seas of Earth for 3,000 years. Our heroes are intended to fight it, as they know it's coming back to the surface with its crew, a dastardly bunch. Let's introduce them, shall we? The four generals of the armies, first.

Iriesu. Costume has an Egyptian flavour. She carries a crystal ball. Hers is the Illless Army, first monster under her command is Medoumedou. It reminds me of seaweed. Sanbasshuof the Sanbasshu Army. Weird outfit, like a bunch of open zippers. Carries a pistol. His first monster is Korushizaa, scorpion-ish creature, piratical and a greaser! Battobasu of the Battobasu army. BIG fellow. Spikey. I think he's supposed to have a viking-theme going. Carries a big tomahawk-like axe. His first monster is Danguusu, and it looks like a walking tank. Massively armor-plated!

Budou, head of the Budou army. WEIRD looking fellow. Carries a samurai sword. The Japanese theme continues with his first monster, Komuhachi. You'll see, if I ever get hold of a scanner. The FACELESS minions are called Yaatotto. They carry big golden pirate swords. They are orangish, with green and red striped breeches. Their faces have upside down question marks pretending to be beards. It's kind of cool looking in a bizarre way.

There's Pukuratesu. A little, fat critter who can disguise himself as a barrel. I think he's their tinkerer. He has a wrinkled, caucasian face (plastic, kids) gold green and white hair. Looks English. Green glasses. The lady of the group, Shierinda. She has white hair. Her armor is largely silver. What little it covers of her. Her belly-button is an innie.

DRUMROLL Maestro! The leader. CAPTAIN ZAIHABU Just think "Hook", folks. He's massive. I have to wonder how the actor can possibly move in that outfit! Think "devil". His skin is hellish red, he has fangs, a patch over one eye... A hook at the end of his left arm, for the first Gingared cut it off, and so he has a strong ...er, dislike... for the present Gingared.

The plot is very original (well, better than your average 90s plot). I like the idea of the heroes being legends and descendants of great warriors. The Aasu part also helps with the originality of the plot, too. The heroes are alright. A bit boring at times, but they have their moments.

Like most late 80s and all 90s Sentai series, the villains are one-piece suited villains and that detracts from their character. You can't see how they feel or if they're planning something sneaky through facial expressions because their suits cover their faces. This is something that gives most of my ratings for the villains a minus or a whole asterisk taken off. Gingaman recovers nicely by its visuals. Everything is sweet about it (except for the costume designs for the heroes). The mechas, henshin sequence, Aasu affects, all of it. The action is very good. How the Gingamen fight is cool (they fight like the animals they represent). This is Gingaman's bright spot (not to say everything else sucks).

Now on to the music. The opening's not bad. Leans toward opera a bit, but not bad. It sets it up as a dramatic, serious series. The ending is another thing. It's too slow and very country (no offence to those who listen to country). Overall, Gingaman is a series any Sentai otaku would like.

 Seijuu Sentai Gingaman!!

Seiju Sentai Gingaman is the twenty-second sentai series. It aired from 1998-1999 and is what POWER RANGERS LOST GALAXY was developed from. The Gingaman team consists of 5 Rangers. A Red Ranger, a Green Ranger, a Blue Ranger, a Pink Ranger, and a Yellow Ranger. Unlike the previous 3 sentai teams, there is only one female Ranger (the Pink Ranger). Each Gingaman comes equipped with a sword and their own personal weapon.

GingaRed - The Red Ranger is the leader of the group. His totem animal (as well as Zord) is the lion. He draws his energy from fire.

GingaGreen - The Green Ranger is the brains of the group. His totem animal and Zord is the Dragon. The source of his energies is the wind.

GingaPink - The Pink Ranger is the sole female Ranger of the group. Her animal symbol and Zord is a Mountain Lion. The source of her energies is flowers.

GingaBlue - The Blue Ranger possesses the strength of the Gorilla which is also his Zord. His elemental power comes from water.

GingaYellow - The Yellow Ranger is fast and agile. His animal symbol as well as Zord is the Wolf. The Yellow Ranger's elemental symbol is thunder.

Nanes/Puns

Gingaman

Both Hyuuga and Ryouma's names are homeages to the anime Tenkuu Senki Shurato. In the anime, Ryouma has the elemental power of "fire".

Starbeasts

Gingaioh's name can be translated as "Silver Armor King".

Trivia

Like Dragon Caesar from Kyouryuu Sentai ZyuRanger before them, Daitanix, Daitanix II and Gillmadix are homage to the King of Monsters, Godzilla.

Gingaioh is the first primary robot since Change Robo in Dengeki Sentai Changeman that does not have a special cockpit for the combination.

Gingaman vs. Megaranger is the first crossover since JAKQ vs. Goranger to take place after both series had ended.

Originally, Gingaman was the name of a comedic monster team from Fiveman.

Originally, this plot was going to be used after the Zyuranger installment but Toei thought people would get confused with the Gingaman of Fiveman, so they went to their second choice, Gosei Sentai Dairanger.

Kei Mizutani audition the year before (Denji Sentai Megaranger) for the Shibolena role and then auditioned this season for Illies but was offered a sexier role.

Teruaki Ogawa, who played the role of Hyuuga, was an earlier sentai star as he plays NinjaRed/Sasuke of the 1994 sentai series Ninja Sentai Kakuranger.

GIRL ACROSS TIME

AKA: TOKI O KAKUERO SHOJO

Seventeen-year-old Kazuko Yoshiyama (Uchida) sniffs a lavender-scented potion at the high school laboratory and unknowingly gains a supernatural power. She kisses her classmate Kazuo (Hakamada) but he rejects her advances, claiming to have come from the 27th Century to experiment on 20th Century humans with homemade chemicals. He only arrived three weeks earlier but he was planted false memories in all of his acquaintances, so that they believe he had known them all their lives.

Kazuko is scandalised that her experience of first love and first kiss has been led astray by mind-altering drugs, but forgives him when she realizes it was Kazuo's love for her that made him "augment" her feelings. Kazuo reveals that he is developing a new chemical which should allow him to return to his own time. Before he leaves the 20th Century, he takes Kazuko back to an incident seven years in her own past, when she watched paralyzed as her younger sister Miyoko almost drowned. Through Kazuko hopes that reliving the incident will help her overcome her trauma, her ethereal time-travel body makes it impossible for her to intervene and she must endure the anguish a second time.

Returning to the present day, Kazuo erases Kazuko's memories of him and his abilities. However, later Miyoko talks to Kazuko about the incident and assures her that she would not have survived without her - it was Kazuko calling her name that snapped her out of her unconsciousness after she was pulled from the water.

Theme: Nokko - "Ningyo" (Mermaid).

A remake of Yasutaka Tsutsui's TIME TRAVELLER by screenwriter Kimizuka, who, if he could see his own future would see Bayside Shakedown looming in it not long afterward.

AKA: IZUMI

AKA: SHOJO COMMANDO IZUMI

AKA: YOUNG LADY COMMADO

Tokyo schoolgirl Izumi (Igarashi) hides her elite fighting skills and has trouble explaining where she got them from - in fact she is the "ultimate warrior" and target of numerous monsters of the week. Teaming up with local detective Eiji (Chii), she tried to defend her school and friends against the organization that turned her into a weapon. In the final episode, she finally gets to blow the chairman of the organisation away with a bazooka.

A camp bad-girl high school series in the tradition of SUKEBAN DEKA but with classroom differences settles with the aid of recoilless rifles and heavy artillery. Compare to the anime Project A-Ko. James Cameron's Terminator (1984) was a great influence on Japanese SF, not least for it's ability to integrate a futuristic plot with low-cost contemporary locations. Theme singer A-Jari appeared in a cameo role in the episode "Aim for the Concert." Theme: A-jari - "Just for Love".

SUKEBAN DEKA

GIRL FROM TOMORROW, THE (including TOMORROW'S END)

The series opens in the far future, a calm and contemplative place. Like any other 13-year-old, Alana devotes her time and energies to such consciousness-raising exercises as honing her kinetic powers with the aid of a handband device called the transducer. Life's pretty good. Showers work without water and clothes and can be cleaned in seconds.

Alana's mother is part of a time travel team researching the ecologically-ravaged 26th century. Alana sneaks into the lab to see her mother return from a trip into the past with a ruthless renegade called Silverthorn. He overpowers his captors and seizes Alana, escaping with her into the time machine which is catapulted back into the 20th century.

Waking up on a Sydney rubbish dump, Alana is alone, frightened and bewildered by the noise and the pollution. Luckily, she gets befriended by Jenny, a rebellious, purple haired teenager, her mum Irene and sci-fi obsessed kid brother Petey, who immediately suspects Alana is an alien. There's plenty of culture shock humour as Alana goes to Jenny's school and tries to adjust to 20th century customs, while facing against time to find Silverthorn and the time machine before it returns, automatically, to her own time.

In the last confrontation, Jenny is critically injured and Alana takes her back to the future to cure her, setting up a sequel series, Tomorrow's End. This sees Alana and Jenny going back to Silverthorn's time to try to stop him for causing a catastrophe which will destroy the future.

This show was shown on BBC 1 in 1991 and the second series in 1993. The show was one of the better SF shows to come from Australia and is just another good example of children's SF from the Australian Film Foundation. Executive producer was Ron Saunders, the producer was Noel Price, the music was created by Nicholas McCallum.

Character profiles

Katharine Cullen as Alana

Alana

Alana is a fourteen year old girl from the year 3000. Alana's parents live on Titan, Saturn's moon. They sent her to Earth to be educated. On Earth she has guardians who teach her the techniques of how to use the Transducer. Alana has three distinctive dots on the side of her face in the temple area. These dots signify that she is mature enough to use a Transducer.

John Howard as Silverthorn

Silverthorn

Silverthorn is a villain from the year 2500. Silverthorn's most noticeable traits are his deviousness, and violent tendencies. Contrary to these though, he can be very charming, but this is all a front so he can double-cross people. He kidnaps Alana and flees to 1990, where he hopes he can rule the world.

Melissa Marshall as Jenny

Jenny Kelly

Jenny is from 1990. She is a typical teenager going through her rebellious phase. She has dyed her hair purple and plays the drums, she has aspirations of joining a band. When she's not at school she helps out in her mum's deli. Jenny hates living in Sydney, but when Alana arrives things started getting interesting.

James Findlay as Petey

Petey Kelly

Petey is like any other ten year old boy from 1990. He is the brother of Jenny. He enjoys dressing up in his home-made superhero outfit, and calls himself "Captain Zero". Petey also has a great love of Science Fiction, which comes in handy when things get tough.

Helen O'Connor as Irene

Irene Kelly

Irene is Jenny and Petey's mother. She is the owner of the Kelly Deli. Like most mums, she is very protective of her children, so much so that she is more than willing to stand up to Silverthorn alone in order to protect them.

Andrew Clarke as James

James Rooney

James is the science teacher at Jenny's high school. Irene fell for him when she met him after enrolling Alana in Jenny's school. James helped all the others in their efforts to retrieve the Capsule so Alana could return home.

Technology in the year 2500

In the year 2500, technology is more advanced than in 1990. The most used item of technology is the laser pistol described below.

Laser Pistols

The most often used weapon in use in the year 2500 is the laser pistol. When the pistol is used the trigger is held allowing energy to build up within the object and once the trigger is released the energy within the object causes it to explode.

Technology in the year 3000

In the year 3000, all scientific experiments and technological advancements are carried out within the Science Dome. One area within the Science Dome is the Time Laboratory. This is where all time travel experiments are performed. Technology used in the laboratory includes the Time Capsule, and the temporal flux generators, as well as other diagnostic tools. Below follows a short list of significant technology used in the future.

The Time Capsule

The Time CapsuleThe Time Capsule is a time exploration vehicle. It was invented by a scientist named Bruno in the year 3000. The Capsule is exactly 1.7m (5½ft) in height and width. Its composition in the series is unknown, but as a real prop, it is basically a dark green steel frame model of a Rhombicuboctahedron plated with semidiagonal steel bars and plated with semitransparent plexiglas from the inside, except on the front side which is completely transparent. Inside is a command place for one passenger, although the vehicle can accept several people. It stands on a 20 cm tall black base. Its front sides are capable of opening like a two side door. The Capsule is equipped with the most advanced computer system available in the future. The history and knowledge from before The Great Disaster is held within its memory banks. The command panel is represented by a green prism in the center of the vehicle, which communicates with the upper control panel, situated below the topmost side. In the second season, a security device is added - a hexagonal plate palm scanner, right from the front side. The Capsule is equipped with survival mechanisms capable of synthesizing water and protein nutrients from the atmosphere.

Bruno invented the Time Capsule so that people in the year 3000 could investigate the causes of The Great Disaster, a terrible event that almost destroyed the entire Earth. The Capsule's computer also responds to verbal commands. When the Time Capsule is programmed with a set of temporal co-ordinates it draws energy from the temporal flux generators and begins to spin slowly at first and then gathering speed, which is followed by two sounds: a saw wave sound gradually increasing in frequency and a looping sequence (sound that exponentially grows in frequency and then falls low again) increasing in frequency, too. Soon when the part of the energy is transferred from the generators to the Capsule, a blue sparkled energy field then forms around the Capsule. Its sides begin to vibrate in light, followed by a slightly yellow glow in the center of the vehicle. When the energy is sufficient, the vehicle explodes out of its present time in a flash of light and rain of yellow sparks, and explodes into the time set by the co-ordinates, which is followed by the same sawtooth sound, only with decreasing frequency, hence giving the impression of a cooling process. Upon arrival, the Capsule is regularly covered with soot residue. The Time Capsule will only remain in the past for twenty-eight days unless specified differently.

Personal Computer Companion

P.J. Alana's Computer CompanionIn the year 3000 everybody owns a Computer Companion. It is a miniaturised computer that can be worn on the wrist. The computer is programmed with an artificial intelligence. These computers are capable of a variety of actions. Mostly they are used to tell the time, give advice to the wearer, and can also record and play holograms. The companions worn by children also teach manners to the wearer as they will not comply with commands if there is any insincerity in the voice, and only respond when asked politely. The advanced technology contained in the computer enables it to interface with other computers and any other electronic devices.

The Transducer

The TransducerThe Transducer is a tool that is used by everyone in the year 3000. Alana was only learning to use the Transducer when she was kidnapped by Silverthorn. The Transducer looks like a headband with a crystal in the centre of a black drop-like plate. The Transducer from the year 3000 has several colours of radiation. Blue is used when the carrier tries to levitate objects, pink for healing, purple for specific interactions with other force fields, and red radiation forms as a result of strong feelings (intentional or unintentional) which destroys matter. The first transducer uses white radiation. The Transducer was invented in the year 2500 by a woman named Maeve. She invented it to be tool of healing. After The Great Disaster occurred in the year 2500, the Transducer was mass produced and the people were taught how to use it. It was to be used as a tool to rebuild the planet. A replica of the original Transducer is held in the Science Dome in the year 3000. The Transducer functions by enhancing and magnifying the telepathic function of the pituitary gland, by doing this the user is able to levitate objects and heal wounds. If used in the wrong way the Transducer can be used as a weapon to destroy things, this is why the people of the year 3000 are taught from an early age to control their emotions.

The Time Gate (Tomorrow's End)

The Time GateThe Time Gate is another of Bruno's inventions. It is another time-travel device. It is an energy doorway which can be used to travel through time as easily as stepping through a door. Temporal co-ordinates are entered into the Time Gate via a numerical keypad. When the co-ordinates have been input into the Time Gate, beams of energy begin to flash within the confines of the Gate getting faster until a wormhole-like portal appears. The user can then step from one time to another by walking through the Gate.

Sentinel (Tomorrow's End)

Sentinel freezing SilverthornThe sentinel is a device from the year 3000. When programmed, it will follow a person who may wish to cause harm to others, and will prevent them from causing harm. If somebody feels threatened and calls for help the sentinel will activate and fire an energy beam and the person will freeze, thus preventing them from causing possible harm. Once activated it can only be deactivated

Trivia

The car that Silverthorn drives in year 1990 has license plate number NEW 666, suggesting that Silverthorn is some new sort of evil.

DVD releases

Both The Girl from Tomorrow and The Girl from Tomorrow Part II: Tomorrow's End are available on DVD, albeit in an edited "Telemovie" version (the whole series trimmed to movie length, halving the running time at least) and not in their original, episodic format.

A 4-disc set containing all 12 episodes of The Girl from Tomorrow was released on 18 September 2006 (Region 0) around Australia into various retail outlets via Shock Exports. The entire series of The Girl from Tomorrow Part II: Tomorrow's End is now available, it was released on 4 May 2007.

All DVDs released so far have been in PAL format, and Region 0 encoded.

The Girl From Tomorrow

Mark Shirrefs & John Thompson 1992

Tomorrow's End

Mark Shirrefs & John Thompson

1 - 1 FUTURE SHOCK

Alana is 14 years old and living in the year 3000. Her guardian, Tulista is the first person to time travel. Silverthorne wants power and since he doesn't have it in the current time he decides to go back. After a struggle both Alana and Silverthorne end up on a course back in time to 1990. In 1990, Jenny has a fairly rough life of her own just dealing with each day. The capsule lands and Alana escapes just before it goes into a ditch taking Silverthorne with it and she runs for her life.

1 - 2 A PRIMITIVE AND DANGEROUS TIME

Waking up in the new time zone Alana is confused and tries to return to the capsule only to be stopped by a security guard. Without realising what she is doing she picks up some fruit off a store's display without paying for it. The store owner goes after her but gets away. Alana meets and confides in Jenny about where she is from. Jenny doesn't fully believe her but goes along with the story and follows Alana to where the time capsule was last only to find a bulldozer on the very spot!

1 - 3 SANCTUARY

An officer takes Jenny home after Alana once again takes off. She tries to tell her mother about Alana, but she doesn't believe her about Alana being a time-traveller. Sneaking out later that night Jenny and Alana re-group and Jenny takes Alana home with her to safety. But it's not easy for Alana to take like a normal teenager.

1 - 4 SWEETNESS AND FRIGHT

Irene makes Alana enrol in school causing a new set of problems for both girls to deal with. After eating an éclair for the first time and then Jenny's she makes herself sick in science class. Meanwhile Petey has been into Alana's things and taken off with her transducer. While Jenny is busy telling Petey that Alana is a timetraveller, Alana is pulled into a car by Silverthorne

1 - 5 DON'T TELL MUM

Chasing the limo on her bike Jenny finally reaches Alana when the car stops and the two escape together from Silverthorne. Back home and things are no better as Mr Rooney (the science teacher) is asking questions about Alana. Later on the next day Alana and Jenny have good news. The capsule isn't buried. They know this because Alana earlier took a piece of paper from Silverthorn, so she can still home...

1 - 6 COMPUTER GAMES

Once again in Mr Rooney's class the girls draw a little attention as they hack into the police database with the help of PJ to find out who the car is registered to. They find out the information and discover that it is Silverthorne. The girls are almost caught as they snoop around but escape and go home. Home to where Mr Rooney is staying for tea.

1 - 7 STAKE-OUT

The girls stake-out Silverthorne but on the first day Jenny loses him. It's Petey who comes up with a new idea while they are putting junk into their shed. So the plan is set and this time when Silverthorne drives off, attached to the back of his car is a dripping can of paint. Through a series of events Alana finds the time capsule hidden in Silverthorne's house. She asks it to send her home, but she's stuck there for another 13 days.

1 - 8 NEWSPROBE

Petey manages to create a distraction allowing the girls to once again escape from Silverthorn. Back home, Jenny's mother Irene is getting set to go out with...you guessed it...Mr James Rooney. While the girls go about telling Irene about the capsule, James turns up and she decides to tell him the truth about Alana. James has the idea to do a news story on the show 'Newsprobe'. Annoyed at the interview Alana does Silverthorn breaks in and steals the transducer.

1 - 9 TRUTH AND LIES

The news story back fires when Alana goes to do a second interview and the transducer doesn't work. Now the welfare turns up to investigate having found no record of Alana, and they take custody of her. Silverthorn has no success with the transducer and sends one of his men to find Alana. He does and with a few fake certificates gets custody of Alana.

1 - 10 BETRAYED

Alana manages to heal Silverthorn's brain tumour and he promises to send her home. Only instead he creates a force field around the capsule so Alana can't get to it, making it impossible for her to get home. Meanwhile, James, Irene and Jenny set about trying to work out how they can rescue Alana and get her home safely.

1 - 11 CAPTAIN ZERO STRIKES AGAIN

Jenny keeps replaying the message Alana left for her on PJ. Both Irene and Jenny get James to take the day off teaching in order to help them find and rescue Alana. They manage to rescue her and get the time capsule.

But Silverthorn vows he'll get it back.

1 - 12 LAST STAND AT KELLY DELI

Finally Alana can go home. The capsule is in the garage and everyone is saying their goodbyes. And then Silverthorn turns up and Irene tries to stall him as best as possible. After a struggle and explosion Jenny is injured and Alana must take her and Silverthorn back to 3000 in order for her to be healed.

2 - 1 A TIME WITHOUT VEGEMITE

Jenny is in the year 3000 and has recovered from her injuries fully. Silverthorn meanwhile is claiming he doesn't remember a thing which happened. But things go wrong when Silverthorn gets Alana and Lorean's transducers. He of course, was faking amnesia all along.

2 - 2 THE END OF EVERYTHING

Silverthorn locks them all up and takes PJ off of Alana. Jenny meets a guy named Nick who is curious to know all about the 1990's, Silverthorn goes after them and Nick helps Jenny to get away. They finally get the capsule back and return Jenny home, only when Lorean and Alana return back to 3000 nothing is the same, something has gone terribly wrong. They then return back to Silverthorn's time. He after all must have something to do with all this.

2 - 3 THE OTHER ALANA

They arrive just before their other selves do and they hide the capsule after Lorean locks the hatch to her palm print. They follow Their other selves into Silverthorn's hide out and after they are captured, they brake their other selves free. Globecops come and find the Alana and Lorean, happy that they sent themselves free, they try to convince the Globecops that all the weapons in the hide out are Silverthorn's. They check for ID on their arms and rip PJ off Alana's arm and through it to the ground. They take them away to Globecorp for modification.

Lorean gets modded, but Alana escapes and goes back to Nicks. She tries to open the capsule but it won't open because it was locked to Lorean's palm print. Nick teams up with Alana and they go and look for Silverthorn. Silverthorn's weapons are all gone in his hide out but they find PJ and tries to get it to play back the holodisk he stole from the year 3000. After a brief argument, PJ plays it back. Silverthorn and his gang loot a Globecorp warehouse for parts for the TimeGate.

2 - 4 THE TIME GATE

Alana and Nick find Silverthorn in his hide out testing the new TimeGate. It works, so they decide to go to the area where Silverthorn's mansion was in 1990. Silverthorn goes back to 1990 and tells his mate Eddy that they are going in to the water business, shipping water from 1990 to 2500, because water is more precious than gold in 2500. When Silverthorn gets back to 2500, the Globecops are there waiting for him, he gets captured and they take him with the TimeGate back to Globecorp.

2 - 5 SUCKED INTO THE FUTURE

Silverthorn lies to the Manager of Earth Globecorp, Draco, that it's a water Synthesiser and he'll give Draco a 100 litres of water three times a week to keep him happy and quiet about it. Silverthorn is back in business and is using his hide out (which is a warehouse in 1990) to ship water to his time. Petey, Jenny's little brother, sees Silverthorn and follows him into the warehouse. He goes home and tries to tell everyone that Silverthorn's back. No one believes him, but Jenny follows him back to the warehouse anyway. They see Silverthorn there and hide in the swimming pool near the TimeGate. Jenny finds PJ on the side of the pool and puts it on her wrist. Has they start to transport water through the TimeGate via a big inlet pipe, Petey and Jenny get sucked through and end up in 2500. Jenny escapes from the water tank in 2500, but Petey is left in there.

Jenny meets up with Alana and Nick just before they are about to pull the building down on the TimeGate, but they don't because they need the TimeGate to get Jenny and Petey back home.

2 - 6 THE GRANDMOTHER OF INVENTION

When going back to Nicks place they see the Modded Lorean and they follow her to a waste disposal site. Alana dresses up as a Moddy and tries to free Lorean but instead she goes back to Globecorp with her to try and free both Lorean and Petey at the same time. Jenny cuts her leg on the fence and has to go to Nicks grandmother, Mauve, to get it treated. Alana finds Petey in the Globecorp building, but he has told Draco that he came from 1990 and came through Silverthorns TimeGate. Draco has gone off to make a new deal with Silverthorn. Jenny finds out that Nicks Grandmother was the one who invented the first transducer, and she helped make it work for her. They go back to Nick's and wait for Alana.

2 - 7 ESCAPE FROM GLOBECORP

Petey and Alana send a Drone to Nick's place and tell Jenny that they need her help to get out of Globecorp. Jenny gets the very first Transducer and races off to the Globecorp tunnel with Nick. Draco arrives back and discovers the plan that Alana and Petey are going to escape. Draco tricks Petey into coming with him for a moment and slightly Modds Pety and gives him a watch. He is to press the stud on it when they find the Time Capsule. Alana and Petey then escape to the tunnels under Globecorp and Jenny breaks them out with the transducer.

2 - 8 A CHASE THROUGH TIME

They go back to Mauve's place and Alana tries to bring Lorean out of the Moddy trance but is unsuccessful. They leave Lorean there and go to Silverthorns via the capsule. Petey presses the stud but stays at the capsule, pretending to hurt his ankle. The rest go to Silverthorn's and find that Draco has gone back to 1990 with Silverthorn already to steal some Nuclear warheads. Alana, Jenny and Nick get through the TimeGate without being seen and find Silverthorn tied up in a chair. He was double crossed by Draco. They accidentally set a bomb off and they use PJ to disarm it but it doesn't work and Alana finds the transducers and levitates the bomb out side the building just as it explodes. Silverthorn teams up with them so he can get Draco back. They leave in a van, going to an American war ship which has the Nukes onboard. They forget about PJ lying under the table where Alana dropped it. They are stopped by the cops, and they split up, Alana and Silverthorn go to get Draco at the warship, but are too late.

2 - 9 SHOWDOWN AT 'EDDIE'S POOLS'

Nick and Jenny go back to the warehouse and try to stop Draco there. They build a barricade around the TimeGate and Jenny finds PJ. The Barricade doesn't work and Jenny gets captured and Nick runs through the TimeGate just as it's closing. Silverthorn and Alana are stranded in 1990. Jenny is taken back to Globecorp but Nick escapes and uses Loreans palm print open the capsule . Petey is still there and the Globecops jump out, but Nick gets into the capsule and goes back to stop Draco again in 1990. But not before the capsule gets hit by three laser shots. The capsule arrives on a tip in 1990 and Nick runs off to stop Draco. He finally gets to the ware house again but he is to late, and finds Alana and Silverthorn standing there with their mouths open.

2 - 10 IN THE NIK OF TIME

Nick explains he took the capsule back to 1990. They go to pick it up at the tip, but the police have impounded it. They go to Jenny's house and tell Jenny's mum, Irene, what happened to Jenny and Pety and James Rooney, Irene's Boyfriend and Jenny's science teacher, uses his licence to get the capsule back off the police. They want to get inside the Globecorp building so they can stop Draco setting off the bombs. They find out that the Globecorp building does exist in 1990 and it's under the name 'Global and Interstellar Research', it is an earlier version of Globecorp.

2 - 11 THE GREST DISASTER BEGINS

They take the capsule up to the top floor, pretending to be film makers and Alana, Nick and Silverthorn (who now has a water pistol as weapon) take the capsule back to 2500, but he power cells are damaged from the laser fire and it's fast running out of power. They make it to 2500 and are found with the capsule and are captured again. Draco is happy that he now has the time capsule as well. Jenny uses PJ to shut the power down to the building and threatens Draco that he'll be arrested by the mythical 'Time Police'. But it doesn't work and she's captured as well.

Silverthorn threatens Draco with his water pistol and Draco thinks it's real, so asks Silverthorn to join him again and help him rule the world. Draco plans to destroy the 'Peace Platforms', satellites in space that let the people on the moon (All the Globecorp bigshots) control Globecorp, with the two nuclear weapons he stole from 1990. Alana realises that if the peace platforms are destroyed, it will kill the entire world because of the cellular disrupters in the Atmosphere. The first Rocket is sent up and hits target, the Northern Hemisphere Peace platform is destroyed. Draco then sends up the next one and then gets a transmission from the London office saying that everyone was dying and that they needed help. The transmission is then cut off. Draco realises what he's done and tries to stop the rocket but is unsuccessful.

Draco and Silverthorn decide to use the TimeGate to escape 2500 and they run off.

2 - 12 KINGS OF TH DINOSAURS

Alana doesn't know what to do, PJ can't interface with the Rockets navigation system from Earth. They decide to sent PJ up on a Drone (so they can talk to PJ while it's up there) into space using Alana and her Transducer. Alana gets tired very quickly and decides that she can't push PJ that far into space. Jenny suggests a mind link, this is where two transducers are linked together via the blue beam and thus, had the power together to create a strong levitation field.

They manage to mind link successfully and send PJ off into space at a fantastic speed.

They make contact with the Rocket and PJ interfaces with the onboard computer and just before it hits the peace platform, changes the navigation course. Alana and Jenny put their transducers back on to get PJ down but, it says it's frozen to the space ships surface and the Nuclear warhead has activated and it can't be shut down. The trigger has seven seconds until detonation, PJ's last words are "Explosive reaction beginning, I've pleased to have been of service to you Alana, Good bye." Alana, Jenny and Nick are sad about PJ but they still raced down to stop Silverthorn and Draco from going through the TimeGate. Draco sees Petey and thinks he is still a moddy (But the effects have of the slight modification have worn off already) and gets him to help set up the TimeGate. Silverthorn and Draco have a fight when Draco tries to leave Silverthorn behind but while they are fighting, Petey types in a different Time destination.

Alana, Nick and Jenny burst into the room, but Silverthorn and Draco Jump through the TimeGate. They arrive in a Jungle type place and both fall down a ledge into some water. They discover that it isn't 1992, which was the original destination. Petey, Alana Nick and Jenny walk through and tell them that it's 5,000,000 BC and that Petey changed the destination time when they weren't looking. They go back through and Draco and Silverthorn fight to try and get through but the TimeGate gets shut down and they are stranded together in 5,000,000 BC. Alana unmodds Lorean and Jenny and Petey go back through he TimeGate to 1990. After they've gone through it, Lorean melts the TimeGate with the Transducer. Nick and Mauve tell the Globecorp big shots on the moon what they've done and that the Northern Hemisphere is now uninhabitable. They acknowledge this and agree to use Globecorp to manufacture and teach people how to use the Transducer. Alana and Lorean say good bye and use the capsule to get back to the year 3000, the capsule has almost run out of power and they only just manage to get home to the year 3000, but the capsule is now fried and is no longer working. Alana agrees that there will never be Time Travel ever again.

GIRL FROM U.N.C.L.E.,THE

The Girls from U.N.C.L.E.s Pilot episode, The Moonglow Affair , was made during the second season of THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. and aired as an episode of THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. The Moonglow Affair had Mary Ann Mobley in the role of April Dancer, a pretty young U.N.C.L.E. agent and Norman Fell as her partner Mark Slate, an experience agent of the verge of retiring who would act as her mentor. When the series went into production both leads were recast. The role of April Dancer went to Stefanie Powers, Powers had been the first choice for the role in the Moonglow Affair but was unable to take it due to other commitments.

Noel Harrison became a much younger Mark Slate. Slate had been transformed from an agent on the verge of retiring into a younger agent who has just transferred to America from U.N.C.L.E.s London headquarters. Common to both series was Mr. Waverly, U.N.C.L.E.s commander and chief, who would hand out assignments to the agents in both series. Randy Kovacs became Waverly's teenage assistant, who at times would help out Mark and April in the field.

Noel Harrison is the son of Rex Harrison who played English agent Mark Slate. The Girl From U.N.C.L.E. was a spin-off series from the highly successful THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. Like THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. The Girl from U.N.C.L.E. was about a pair of agents, April Dancer and Mark Slate.

Originally it was planned to have crossovers occur between the two series on a somewhat regular basis. However, this turned out not to be the case. Robert Vaughn made one appearance on The Girl From U.N.C.L.E. as Napoleon Solo teaming up with April Dancer (The Mother Muffin Affair), while Noel Harrison teamed up with Illya Kuryakin in THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. episode The Galatea Affair.

The episodes of the Girl from U.N.C.L.E. tended to be a bit more camp, with villains and plots more similar to BATMAN than the first two seasons of THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. A similar tendency on THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. during its third season, which ran concurrently with The Girl From U.N.C.L.E.'s first, contributed to a decline in its ratings. THE MAN FROM U.N.C.L.E. was barely renewed for a fourth season while The Girl From U.N.C.L.E. received the axe.

For this spin-off from The Man from U.N.C.L.E., Stephanie Powers was recruited to play secret agent April Dancer. Noel Harrison played her British-born partner, Mark Slate. They had the same boss as the men from U.N.C.L.E., Alexander Waverly (Leo G. Carroll).

GIRL WITH SOMETHING EXTRA, THE

Sally Field played the title character (Sally Burton) in the sitcom The Girl With Something Extra. The something extra was the fact that she had very strong ESP and was able to read other people's minds. As the series opened Sally and John had just gotten married and Sally had decided that it was about time that John knew she has the ability to read minds.

This revelation somewhat upset their wedding night plans, John walked out on her. They later made up and decided to live as normal a life as was possible considering the fact that Sally has ESP.

Most storylines were typical sitcom plots complicated by Sally's ESP - making it hard for John to do things like keep her birthday present a secret. John had a job as an up-and-coming lawyer at the law firm of Metcalf and Owen, while Sally was a housewife with no outside job. Around to keep the newlyweds company were Sally's best friend Anne and John's brother Jerry, both of whom were single.

GO SEI SENTAI DAIRANGER

AKA: FIVE STAR TASK FORCE DAIRANGER

6050 years ago, the Daos civilisation flourished in China. The Gorma Tribe tried to take it over. Thus began the war between the Gorma and the Dai Tribe. The battle continued for decades, led by the Gorma Triumvirate. The Chi Transmitting Beasts appeared to oppose the Gorma, whose magical powers had increased to the point where they could turn themselves into monsters. Five Dai warriors' chi powers had increased to the point where they could control the Chi Transmitting Beasts.

These were the predecessors of the Dairangers of today. 6006 years ago, Kujaku falls into the trap of the Mirror make-up Master, and never emerges until 1993. Gara, though then a Dai at that point, hates Kujaku and joins Gorma. Six years later, Zhang Liao (Chou Ryou), one of the masters of the Chi Transmitting Beasts, defects to Gorma, causing the defeat of the proto-Dairanger team. The war ends with the disappearance of both the Dai and Gorma tribes. Super Chi Transmitting Beast Daimugen takes on the form of the human Kameo. Zhang Liao lives on, residing in Japan from 1969 to 1974. During this period, he fathers Ryou, who will become Dragon Ranger. In 1989, Kou's mother, a member of the Dai Tribe, takes Kou, son of Shadam, away from the Gorma and disappears.

But after marking Kou with the sign of the tiger, she is captured by the Gorma. In 1993, the Gorma Tribe, one of its two branches, revived to take over the world. To counter them, Master Kaku assembled a team of five youths with high levels of chi--the Dairangers, the warriors of the Dai Tribe! (Note that although they fight for the Dai Tribe, only Ryou and Lin are really of Dai heritage.) Dragon Star King (Ryuuseiou) is the first of the five Chi Transmitting Beasts to be revived. When the Dairangers obtain the Heavenly Treasure Lai Lai (Tianbaolailai /Tenhourairai) jewels, the other four CT Beasts awaken.

At this point, Zhang Liao, knowing Ryou is his son, saves him from Archbishop Liege. Wounded in the process, he sacrifices his chi in order to power the Tianbaolailai jewels for the combination of the five CT Beasts into Dairen'ou and dies. Soon thereafter, Lion Ranger defeats the Mirror Make-Up Master and releases Kujaku from 6006 years of imprisonment. Kaku's (Jiaxu's) master, Guhon (Wufan), returns to China, leaving behind the White Tiger True Sword (Byakko Shinken/Baihu Zhenjian) in preparation for Kiba's return. Indeed, Kibaranger (Fangranger) does return. Kou, drawn to the WT True Sword by telepathy, draws it out from a rock. He becomes the sixth Kakuranger, despite interference by his evil twin brother Akomaru. Gorma XV finally appears to order Shadam around (if this is what's really happening...it isn't).

The Wontiger and the Kiba Daiou, the combination of 4 CT Beasts and Wontiger, debut. The Dairangers develop new chi techniques such as the Shooting Star Lightning Flash to counter ever stronger Gorma monsters. Matoba Jin, beaten by Ryou in a duel, returns as the Demon Boxer Jin, powered by Zydos' Black Crystal, for revenge. The team becomes increasingly powerful when Guhon (Wufan) completes the Super Chi Power Bazooka and Kameo remembers after 6000 years that he actually is Daimugen. Daimugen combines with the BT Beasts to form the Heavy Armor Chi Palace for the first time to defeat the Combined Four Deva Kings. However, on the very day Daimugen goes into action, Gorma XV revives Kou's twin Akomaru from the depths of hell. Jin returns to duel Ryou.

This time, he has mastered the Demon Way Wicked Fist Spider Dance style. Zydos and Sergeant Big Pipe try to defeat both of them, but Jin uses his own body as a shield to protect Ryou. Count Kaleidoscope goes after a weakened Kujaku, trying to lure her with fake 'Tears of the Holy Peacock' which would heal her, but the Rangers defend her. The gigantic Great God Dragon comes down from space to attack both the Rangers and Gorma in order to bring an end to the war. The Rangers cease to fight Gorma...for now. Zydos turns Jin into the Hunger Demon, but Jin's friendship with Ryou enables him to get the Hunger Demon out of him and revert to normal. Zydos then kills Jin.

Gara uses a wrathful spirit incarnation of herself to attack Kujaku. Kujaku finally finds the true 'Tears of the Holy Peacock', saves Gara, and rises to heaven as the Mahamayuri Vidyaraja (Kujaku Myouou). Kou is about to become a Gorma on his birthday, 24 December. As the date grows close, Kibaranger lashes out at his fellow Rangers, who do not want to fight him. Kou's twin Akomaru appears, riding his loyal monster, the blue armored, one-eyed insectoid Ikazuchi (Thunder) to challenge a Kibaranger-less Dairanger team. Finally the truth is revealed: Kou and Akomaru are the younger and older twin sons of Shadam himself!

Kou's mother returns, adding her jade ring to the WT True Sword, enabling it to find its lost master. Kou's mother prays to heaven, performing a baptism to purify Kou. It works, and Kou rejoins the Rangers. Unfortunately, Kaku (Jiaxu) leaves the Rangers to...rejoin Gorma!? Kaku wanted to bring an end to the war between the Rangers and Gorma. He dispatches Lieutenant Shiryuu to force the Rangers to break up. But the Rangers refuse, believing that war is the way to peace [!], even though Shadam promised Kaku that he would stop fighting in exchange for the dissolution of the Rangers. The Rangers defeat Shiryuu with Dairen'ou, forcing Kaku to take matters into his own hands.

The Rangers are no match for their own master, now garbed in red armor. Kaku strips them of their Aurachangers and Heavenly Treasure Lailai jewels. Kaku also takes on Shadam. The winner of the fight will become the new emperor Gorma XVI. If Kaku wins, he will insure that Gorma will be at peace. But having the sources of his power (the Towers of Wicked Power and Chi Power, staffs planted by Shiryuu which transmit energy) destroyed by Zydos and Gara, he is defeated by Shadam's sword and dies in the arms of the Rangers. Zydos grows to giant size and turns into an earthen figure--a fitting fate for such scum, but why? Meanwhile, General Field Plentiful spots Shadam doing something funny to Gorma XV.

Shadam kills him. What is Shadam hiding? Shadam ultimately becomes Gorma XVI when he steals of the Great Earthshaking Jewel from Gorma XV. It turns out that Gara and Gorma XV had died 6000 years ago and had been revived by Shadam's magic as mud figures. (I suppose Zydos too had also died long ago.) The Rangers pursue Gorma XVI into the Gorma Palace, where they struggle against the power of the Great Earthshaking Jewel. But merging the light of their Heavenly Treasure Lailai jewels, they stands up to Gorma XVI.

The Great God Dragon returns to wreck the Gorma Palace. Ryou and Shadam duel in human form. Shadam loses and reverts to an earthen figure...was his life also magically prolonged? The war ends. Or does it? Fifty years later, Gorma returns again, and a new Dairanger team debuts to replace the elderly original team. The new team, the grandchildren of the old, fight against a repainted Baron String aboard the Dairen'ou. The story goes on, but Bandai needs to sell more toys, so the series must end here.

(This ending reflects Asian cyclical as opposed to Western linear views, IMO. Nothing really ends. Everything that was, will be again.)

Inspired in equal parts by Superman II (1980) and the early-1990s Gulf War, the dairanger enemies are a trio of leather-clad Goma super-warriors, named Saddam (Nishi), Kara (Amemarsuri) and Zaidos (Tamura). In fact, Saddam is the true enemy - all other adversaries have been created by him from mud, including his monster-of-the-week and the cannon fodder Kotpotro minions. The show also included flashbacks sequence to prehistoric China, featuring the ancestors of modern day rangers.

By the time Dairanger was released in Japan, it's predecessor Zyuranger had already made the leap to the US market in the heavily rewritten form of THE MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS. Plans were already afoot to continue Power Rangers using footage from this newer show but instead of wiping the slate clean and beginning anew, the US producers elected to continue their storyline and simply find excuses for the changes in lineup and vehicles. The new footage coupled with standard TV series attrition, caused some changes in the cast of the American Power Rangers show.

NB - Inspired as usual "by an idea from Saburo Yade" and featuring music from Koji Kawamura. Dairanger was followed in the Japanese Super Sentai chronology by KAKURANGER.

Fifteenth anniversary Super Sentai. A tie with Jetman, if not the best 1990s sentai so far. Too bad both shows' good storylines were marred by silly monster designs. As with the Zyurangers parts of this show were also used in THE MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS.

Except for Ryou, Lin, and Kou, the Dairangers are all ordinary humans who transform (tenshin; literally 'turn-body') using Aurachangers that spark their chi powers and generate their Dairensuits of Daimetal and Daifibers that increase their abilities from eight to ten times.

Ryuurenjaa / Dragon Ranger of the Heaven Fire Star (Ryou)

Son of Zhang Liao (Chou Ryou), who had been one of the five Dai tribe warrior pilots of the Chi Transmitting Beasts 6000 years ago, and a human woman. Was not aware of this until recently. Has a younger sister Youko.

Wanted to be the best gyoza cook in Japan. Worked in Yokohama's Chinatown. Captured by Baron String, he was saved by Master Kaku and recruited into the Dairangers.

Chi Transmitting Beast: Dragon Star King > Chi Transmitting Warrior, armed with the Flying Dragon Staff and the Great Wind Wheel staff-spinning technique.

Length (dragon): 82 m Height (humanoid): 34.5 m Weight: 102 t

Weapons/techniques: Red Dragon Fist, Red Dragon Double Dragon Swords, Heaven Fire Star Lightning Flames Destruction, Shooting Star Lightning Flash.

Dairenrod: halberd

Chi Transmitting Beast: Star Kirin

Length: 24.5 m Weight: 52 t

Weapons/techniques: the drunken fist style-like Kirin Fist, Kirin Nine Section Staff, Heaven Time Star Time Reversal, Rod Arrow

Dairenrod: conical spear

Houourenjaa / Phoenix Ranger of the Heaven Wind Star (Lin)

Kaku's niece. Came to Japan as an exchange student from China. Hates living with Kou. Once fell in love with Takamura Shouichirou, a.k.a. the Media Magician.

Chi Transmitting Beast: Star Phoenix

Length: 24 m Weight: 35 t

Weapons/techniques: Phoenix Fist, Spear Phoenix, Heaven Straight Line Whirlwind

Dairenrod: multi-blade spear

Kibarenjaa / Fang Ranger of the Howling New Star (Kou)

Son of Shadam and a woman of the Dai tribe. Twin brother of Akomaru. The only one who could pull out the sword of Guhon (Yufan), the White Tiger True Sword. New to fighting, he is not particularly strong. Uses the Kibachanger created by Guhon (Yufan) to change to adult size as Kibaranger.

Chi Transmitting Beast: Won Tiger, armed with Fireballs and the Golden Sword. The Chi Transmitting Treasure Pearls behind Kibaranger in the Won Tiger's cockpit represent the seven powers of Moon, Fire, Water, Wood, Metal, Earth, and Sun. (Compare the seven days of the Japanese week or the Sailor Soldiers.)

Length: 48 m Height (humanoid): 46.5 m Weight: 150 t

Weapons/techniques: White Tiger True Sword, Howling New Star Chaos Echo, Fang Punch, White Tiger Bolt of Lightning

Master Kaku (Daoshi Jiaxu)

Originally a member of Gorma, he formed the Dairangers to oppose Gorma in the present day. But when the Great God Dragon appeared, he returned to Gorma, hoping he could defeat Shadam, reign as Gorma XVI, cease Gorma's invasion of Earth, and bring about true peace. But he lost against Shadam and died. In the VR Troopers miniseries "Quest for Power", there is a scene where Tyler Steele is being watched over by an unnamed Grimlord minion wearing Kaku's red body armor.

Kujaku ('Peacock')

Incarnation of the Mahamayuri Vidyaraja, a Buddhist 'deity.' Sucked into the Mirror Make-Up Master's mirror 6006 years ago and released in the present when the Dairangers defeated the Make-Up Master. Wanted revenge on Gara for her imprisonment until she encountered Daigo and had a change of heart. Died and became the Mahamayuri Vidyaraja.

The five main Rangers are armed with Starcutters/Starswords/ Daibusters, which can be combined in the Chi Power Bomber. Later, Guhon (Yufan) creates the Super Chi Power Bazooka.

The five Dairangers ride motorcycles called Kiber Machines ('Kiber'--a pun on 'kiba' [fang] and perhaps 'cyber'): Red Kiber 1, Green Kiber 2, Blue Kiber 3, Yellow Kiber 4, Pink Kiber 5.

The four Chi Transmitting Beasts other than the Dragon Star King form the Heaven Chi Palace (Tenkuu Kiden), a mount for the Chi Transmitting Warrior.

Height: 31 m Weight: 186 t

The five Chi Transmitting Beasts combine into the Great Union King (Dairen'ou), armed with the Chi Bomber-like Chi Kung Shot, the Dai Javelin, and the Great King Sword with the Gale Rage Waves technique.

Height: 54 m Weight: 288 t

Won Tiger combines with the Lion, Pegasus, and Kirin to form the Fang Great King (Kiba Daiou), armed with the Great Chi Power Punch and the Flying Sword Splinters and Dust attack (this latter with the aid of the Star Phoenix). Height: 63 m Weight: 336 t

Daimugen (Great Infinity), normally disguised as Kameo, who speaks with a Nagoya accent, is actually a Super Chi Transmitting Beast resembling a giant tortoise. Combines with the other mecha to form the Heavy Armor Chi Palace (Juukou Kiden).

Length (Daimugen turtle): 110 m
Height (Daimugen humanoid): 95 m
Weight (Daimugen): 1500 t

Height (HAC Palace): 62.5 m
Weight (HAC Palace): 1788 t

The Gorma Tribe (the other branch of the Daos civilisation)

Gorma XV (Gooma Juugo-sei)

The Emperor of Gorma. Actually nothing more than a puppet ruler revived from the dead by Shadam.

The Gorma Triumvirate (Gooma Sankanbu)

Lt. Colonel Shadam (Shadamu Taisa)

Monocled, he is the real ruler of Gorma. Later Gorma XVI.

Lt. Colonel Gara (Gara Chuusa)

Originally a Dai Tribe member. After being wounded in an accident, she thought Kujaku was being cold to her and sold her soul to Gorma.

Major Zydos (Zaidosu Shousa)

The strongman of the trio.

Iron Mask Arm Zhang Liao (Tetsumenpi Chou Ryou)

Ryou's father. Was a warrior of the Dai Tribe but joined the Gorma in order to acquire more power. Meeting Ryou, he regained his ability to love.

Demon Boxer Jin (Makenshi Jin; Matoba Jin)

Ryou's rival. Sold his soul to Gorma to become stronger. Later becomes the monster Garouki (Hungry Wolf Demon).

Akomaru

Son of Shadam. Wanted to rule Gorma himself. Twin brother of Kou (Kibaranger).

General Fields of Plenty (Tenpou Shougun)

Gorma officer who raised Akomaru.

Ikazuchi

Akomaru's loyal servant from hell.

Lieutenant Zilong (Shiryuu Chuui)

Gorma allied with Kaku (Jiaxu). Along with Kaku, one of the few pro-peace Gorma.

Cotpotros (Kottopotoro)

Gorma grunts in black tights with lipped but otherwise blank black and white faces.

Great God Dragon

Not Gorma at all; but a mysterious, all-powerful neutral force treated in MMPR as 'evil'.

Gosei Sentai Dairanger is the seventeenth sentai series and is what MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS (season two) was developed from. It aired from 1993-1994. The Opening Theme is kinda okay; it's just not my kind of song. The Gosei Sentai Dairanger movie is not a good thing to watch before going to bed or while you're sick, the main villain (a monster who persecutes youngsters by turning them into cards) will freak you out. Big time! Anyway, the Dairangers are trying to return all of the kids, especially a young girl's brother. It's pretty good.

Trivia

Tomihisa Naruse (the second actor to portray Kameo's human form) was Raita Oishi / Yellow Owl, one of the main heroes in Choujin Sentai Jetman.

Mikoko Miki who played as Commander Aya from Choujin Sentai Jetman also appears as the Mystery Mother of Kou and Akomaru.

Yutaka Hirose who played as Ryou's rival, Jin, also played Emperor Toranza in Choujin Sentai Jetman, Dr. Kemp in Choujuu Sentai Liveman, and Ley Wanda in Choushinsei Flashman. He also appeared as a guest in Kamen Rider Black's episode 4.

Keisuke Tsuchiya's twin brother, Daisuke, played his photographic duplicate in episode 25. This was taken advantage of again when they appeared in Juukou B-Fighter and Ninja Sentai Kakuranger.

Ryosuke Kaizu who played as Takeru/Red Mask in Hikari Sentai Maskman appeared as the Media Sorcerer Monster. He also appeared in Chikyuu Sentai Fiveman as a scientist who falls for Five Pink.

The actor Munemaru Kouda who played as Dr. Man in Choudenshi Bioman is also the Gorma XV Emperor. His role is also the first puppet emperor of sentai, one that does not make it to the finale and was only manipulated by his fellow minion.

Keiichi Wada would return years later in Kyuukyuu Sentai GoGo-V The Movie, to play the reckless Demon Hunter Sieg. In addition, appeared in Episode Special: 13 Riders as the first Kamen Rider Ryuki.

In early press releases, you can see that Keiichi Wada was originally to play Kazu while Keisuke Tsuchiya had been cast as Ryou. Upon seeing Wada's amazing martial arts talents, the producers decided it would have been a wiser choice to have Wada playing the lead role.

IronMask Zhang Liao's story has striking parallels to Darth Vader from the Star Wars series. Mahou Sentai Magiranger would repeat this again with Isamu Ozu/Wolzard.

Several props and costumes from this series would be used in later incarnations of the American Power Rangers franchise:

The Aura Changer was repainted and used as the morpher for the Magna Defender in Lost Galaxy.

The costume for Gorma Emperor XV would be used for Master Org's costume in Wild Force.

There were also plans for the costumes of the core Dairanger team to be used in Lost Galaxy as an "Ancient Rangers" team, but this plan had to be dropped due to recasting of a major character.

GO! GODMAN

The premises of Go! Godman is extremely straight forward: a monster, or monsters depending on the episode, show up to terrorize humanity until someone cries forth with Godman's name, calling for the hero, who hails from the planet Firegod, to arrive on the scene and destroy the fiend to save the day.

Toho's early 1970's offering, Go! Godman was introduced to Japanese audiences as part of the Good Morning! Children's Show. The show aired six days a week, while Go! Godman's 26 episodes were each broken down into five minute segments, totaling 156 in all, for the program.

The show was simplistic, made to function when broken up into 5 minute segments, and the budget was marginal. However, due to the limited financing, many familiar faces from previous Toho science fiction films were featured to reduce expenses. Among them were Gaira and Sanda from The War of the Gargantuas (1966), Gorosaurus from King Kong Escapes (1967), Gabara from All Monsters Attack (1969), the Bat People from Latitude Zero (1969) and Kamoebas from Space Amoeba (1970). To make matters confusing, these creatures had no relation to their big screen counterparts, despite having the same name and looking nearly identical (the large exception is Sanda and Gaira, which both featured modified masks).

Go! Godman ran from October 5th, 1972 to April 10th, 1973, with a new episode featured each weekday and on Saturday. Following its initial run, reruns of the show ran until September 28th, 1973 when the show was pulled from the program and replaced with Go! Greenman, which utilized many of the same monsters and locations, yet holds no continuity with Godman.

GOARANGER

AKA: HYAKUJU SENTAI GOARANGER

AKA: ONE HUNDRED BEASTS BATTLE TEAM GOARANGER

AKA: HYAKUJU SENTAI GAORENJAA

At the beginning of the 21st Century, the Earth is threatened by the Org devil clan. Power Animals, who live in an ethereal aerial island, choose five young human warriors to defend the planet. Former veterinarian So (Kaneko) is now Gao Red, King of Beasts, the incarnation of the lion, who fights with Lion Fang punches. Former pilot cadet Gaku (Horie) is Gao Yellow, King of Birds, an eagle incarnate who can control the winds.

Tenacious hunter Kai (Shibaki) is Gao Blue, King of Water, a shark incarnate who specializes in underwater combat. Former Sumo wrestler Sotaro (Sakai) is Gao Black, King of the Prairie, a bison incarnate and subject to fits of berserk rage. Sae (Takeuchi) is Gao White, Queen of the Forests, a tiger incarnate and a martial arts specialist. The team is later joined by Osamu (Tamayama) as Gao Silver, a warrior who fought against the Org a thousand years ago, who is now a wolf incarnate and 1062 years old.

Goaranger came after TIMERANGER and before HURRICANGER and was, as usual, credited to the imagination of one "Saburo Yade."

Produced by Kenji Ota, Koichi Yada, Jun Higasa, Takahiro Yokozuka.

GAORANGER is the 2001 entry in Toei Television's long-running series of live-action "sentai" (super battle team) programs featuring five young superheroes in color-coded costumes who fight monsters, aliens and demons in modern Japan. These Japanese series have consistently supplied the action and effects footage for Fox Kids' long-running "Power Rangers" franchise on American television, which began with MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS in 1993. In February 2002, POWER RANGERS WILD FORCE premiered on Fox Kids (newly purchased by the ABC Family Channel) and drew its action and effects footage from GAORANGER.

The five young heroes of GAORANGER have all been plucked from different walks of life until the fifth and last to be chosen, a young man who can communicate with animals, becomes GaoLion, the Red Ranger. The five Gaorangers are guided by the lovely Tetomu, high priestess of the Power Animals, who resides on a turtle shaped island in the sky. She has summoned the Gaorangers to save the earth from a renewed assault by monsters called Orgs, who, like so many sentai monsters, are often machines or ordinary objects transformed into rubber-suited monsters who grow giant-size upon command by Org villainess Tsuetsue. (Exotic female villains in sentai series frequently turn up in the U.S. Power Rangers counterparts with Asian-American lookalike actresses hired to portray the character in new footage. Tsuetsue appears in WILD FORCE but is called Toxica, with new footage featuring actress Sin Wong flawlessly intercut with the Japanese footage.)

As is customary in sentai programs, the GaoRangers use pocket devices to transform themselves into full costume, armed with weapons unique to each. Each of the Rangers has a different Power Animal. In addition to Red (lion), there are Black (bison), Blue (shark), Yellow (eagle) and White (tiger). All five Rangers have giant mechanized fighting creatures (called "zords" in the U.S. version) modeled on their animals. In the course of the series, more Power Animals emerge (about 23 total) to help the Gaorangers while a sixth Ranger (Silver) joins the action in episode 24.

GAORANGER is about par for the course as sentai series go. It is less earthy and has a more ethereal, new-age tone than the two previous sentai series, GO GO FIVE and TIME RANGER, no-nonsense entries which were adapted in the U.S. as POWER RANGERS LIGHTSPEED RESCUE and POWER RANGERS TIME FORCE, respectively. The five Gaorangers are younger than the last two casts and engage in more youthful behavior when out of costume. We see them frequently interacting with citizens of various Japanese locales. (The series boasts a lot of colorful location shooting.) In episode 6, they get involved with a lavish wedding being staged at a swanky hotel because the young woman coordinating the wedding has made a deal with the Orgs to stay young and beautiful by turning over her bride clients who are drained by the Orgs of their life force and beauty. To carry out this mission, Gao Black, who has a crush on the wedding planner, goes in drag as the bride. In episode 8, Gao Red develops amnesia, forgetting all about the Gaorangers, and returns to his hometown and his old dog, a golden retriever, whom he'd left abruptly when recruited by Tetomu. Interestingly, as of this writing, neither of these episodes has yet been adapted for WILD FORCE, which has shown a curious tendency to isolate its Ranger heroes from the larger society (unlike, say, MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS, in which the Rangers were high school students and active members of the Angel Grove community).

The trend in recent "Power Rangers" series, beginning with LIGHTSPEED RESCUE, has been to hew more closely to the storylines of the Japanese originals than previous PR series. WILD FORCE continues this trend, with most of its episodes, so far, acting as almost scene-for-scene remakes of the original GAORANGER episodes (with the exception, of course, of the skipped episodes). All this means that the last three U.S. "Power Rangers" series have been a lot more serious than the original MMPR (and most of its follow-ups) and manage to maintain the distinctly Japanese tone and style of the sentai tradition. This has been a welcome development to many stateside fans of Japanese live-action sci-fi fantasy adventure programs. (One of the big complaints among sentai fans about MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS was its complete disregard for the imaginative storylines of ZYURANGERS, the sentai series which fed the first two seasons of MMPR.)

Names/Puns

Gaorangers

All the Gaorangers' names have reference to their animals:

Kakeru Shishi (GaoRed): Shishi means lion.

Gaku Washio (GaoYellow): Washi means eagle.

Samezu Kai (GaoBlue): Same means shark, and Kai means ocean.

Soutarou Ushigome (GaoBlack): Ushi means either cow or bull.

Sae Taiga (GaoWhite): Taiga is the kana rendition of tiger. It also means "Big Fang".

Shirogane/Tsukumaro Ōgami (GaoSilver): Shirogane means silver. Tsuku means moon, while Maro is related to dark forces. Ō means great, while gami means god. Ōgami is also a play in ōkami, which means wolf.

Orgs

All the Highness Dukes' names have reference to Ogres and Demons:

Shuten is named after Shuten Doji, a Oni referred as a "Japanese Vampire".

Ura was named after the principal villain who led the Oni defeated by Momotarō

The Monster Rasetsu was named after was a demon in Japanese myth.

Rakushaasa was named after Rakshasa.

"Tsuetsue" & "Yabaiba"'s names were puns on "Wand" & "Sword" respectively

Loki's name is based on the Norse God, though his wolf-like face harkens to Loki's son, Fenir.

Trivia

Rei Saito (Tsuetsue) and Takemi (Tetomu) playing acting in Sailor Moon Musicals (Seramyu) as Meioh Setsuna/Sailor Pluto (Rei) and Sailor Galaxia (Takemi). Also Miyu Otani, who guest in episode 6, played Minako Aino/Sailor Venus, Mao Mita, who guest in episode 8, played Hotaru Tomoe/Sailor Saturn, Kasumi Takabatake, who guest in episode 34, played Chibiusa/Sailor Chibi Moon and Nanami Ikeuchi, who guest in episode 40, played Hook in the same musicals.

Is the first series where the heroes refer to each other by their colors rather than their personal names, the second series is Gougou Sentai Boukenger Gaoranger didn't have a traditional teamup with their predecessors, Mirai Sentai Timeranger. Instead, the focus was on the anniversary special Gaoranger vs. Super Sentai.

In the final scenes, all the suit actors, apart from GaoSilver's, appeared alongside the Gaoranger they played. The suit actor for Yabaiba was also in the scene with GaoYellow's suit actor.

In the Rangers Strike trading card game released by Carddass, GaoBear and GaoPolar can be seen being healed by Rescue Fighter on the Rescue Fighter card, and GaoGiraffe can be seen on the card for the Go Go Crane, and both can be seen carrying a steel I-beam.

Sayuri Uchida, who played Ako in Choujin Sentai Jetman, had a guest appearance in episode six.

GODZILLA ISLAND

The show is set in the year 2097, with most of the Earth's monsters being allocated to a island out in the Pacific Ocean. The lead villains are the Xilian, represented by two actresses with their leader being seen as a fiery floating head.

Launching after the closure of the Heisei series, Godzilla Island was, at heart, a product tie-in. The show did boast an impressive array of kaiju; however, and this is where the show's notoriety comes from, the kaiju were almost entirely "brought to life" by Bandai toys. Some exceptions include Mothra Leo, Dogora, Godzilla's son, and Rodan's pre-Fire Rodan form (the latter used a modified Trendmasters Rodan figure).

Godzilla Island, in general, returned the franchise back to its late 1960's through mid-1970's roots. Godzilla was no longer a monster of solidarity, and would fight alongside kaiju like Rodan. The show also saw the return of one of Toho's most famous mechs: the Gotengo, which was created through CGI.

Godzilla Island's roster of kaiju included: Godzilla, Mothra, King Ghidorah, Rodan/Fire Rodan, Mechagodzilla, Anguirus, Mothra Leo, Gigan, Hedorah, Battra, SpaceGodzilla, Destoroyah, Baragon, King Caesar, Moguera, Mecha-King Ghidorah, Megalon, Gorosaurus, Kamacuras, Dogora, and Godzilla's son. The show also introduced numerous variations on the pre-existing kaiju, including a medic Jet Jaguar, SpaceGodzilla's "second form", a black Mechagodzilla ('74), Shadow Godzilla, a red Jet Jaguar, and a bluish-pink Hedorah.

Godzilla Island, in its entirety, ran for almost a year, playing a new episode every weekday. Each individual show played in a 5 minute time slot, so it would take a full week's worth of episodes to account for a running time close to a normal TV show episode.

Music for the program was comprised from Akira Ifukube's themes and songs from The Edge.

GOODNIGHT SWEETHEART

Goodnight Sweetheart is a comedy / drama about an unhappily 'married man who finds an escape from his life in the past. Gary Sparrow is a mild-mannered television repair man whose marriage to Yvonne is on shaky ground, the two are constantly arguing and he never seems to be able to live up to her expectations. One day while searching for a customer's home. Gary wanders down an alley on London's East End and finds himself in what appears to be a 1940's theme park. He soon realises that he is not in a theme park but has somehow actually been transported back into the past. He also discovers that the alley works in both directions and that he can travel back and forth between the present and 1940 simply by traversing the alley. No explanation is ever given or suggested as to why the alley acts as a time machine, it however only works for Gary. When he tries to take his best friend Ron back into the past with him Gary goes back into the past while Ron remains in the present.

In the past Gary finds himself fitting in much better than he does in the present He meets Phoebe, who works in the Royal Oak pub owned by her father He begins to fall in love with her despite the fact that he knows it is wrong. Phoebe is also married, although her husband is a soldier who has been missing in action and is presumed dead. Gary passes himself off as working as government intelligence agent. with his knowledge of the war from the future he is able to accurately predict when bombings will occur and other events in the war. Also through contacts with his American friends at work he is able to explain having a supply of food items which were being rationed during the war. In the fictitious life he has created for himself in the past Gary also claims to have been a songwriter who worked in America he claims credit for numerous songs he performs which in fact were pop hits during the 1960's, 1970's and 1990's!

Gary's trips into the past do not help his life at home Yvonne is upset with his sudden obsession with WW II. He also ends up losing his job, his best friend Ron covers by telling Yvonne Gary is now working for him at his print shop, however the fake job brings in no money. Gary comes to realise that pop culture items, such as records, from the 1940's are highly sought after and expensive collector items in the present and soon finds himself in the record importing business. a move which eventually leads to his opening up a store specialising in WW II era memorabilia. While a career in the past as an entertainer begins to take off he is reluctant to pursue it knowing his songs are 'stolen'.

Gary realises that what he is doing is morally wrong yet seems to lack the ability to decide between the two women in his life. Although Yvonne is not always the perfect wife, she really does love Gary. Whenever Gary thinks he has made up his mind one way or another something happens that forces him to reconsider.

A second series followed in Spring 1995, and a third in Winter/Spring 1996. There series has become a hit with a total of five seasons so far being made. Goodnight Sweetheart is one of the best series currently on television and has become quite popular. A fourth series of the programme still appears to be in the works, despite the fact that both the series' female leads have announced that they will not be reprising their roles! NOTE: All of the episode titles are song titles, most of them from the 1940s. The series was shown on BBC1. The sixth series began in April 1999 and was shown on a Sunday night on BBC1. The producer for the sixth series was Nic Philips.

Gary Sparrow - a down on his luck TV repair man from the 1990s - walks down an East End alley, and finds himself transported back to the 1940s. He becomes romantically involved with barmaid Phoebe, but has to keep his secret from his bossy 1990s

Ignoring Yvonne's advice, Gary goes for a promotion interview but does not wear a suit. His friend, Ron, hearing Gary's call to a radio phone-in program, is intrigued to know if he really did travel back in time. After another argument with Yvonne, Gary does buy a suit, though not quite what she had in mind. He returns to Duckett's Passage to see if he can go back to 1940, and what he found there.

GOOSEBUMPS (inc.ULTIMATE GOOSEBUMPS)

Although Goosebumps had no regular characters or host, each episode of Goosebumps had several unifying themes which tie the series together. Each episode has a protagonist who is about 12 years old. He or she is faced with some type of danger of a supernatural variety, which they are unable to convince anyone else to take seriously.

Goosebumps was a Canadian children's series which consisted of adaptations from the series of horror books by the same name. The books are all written by prolific American author R.L. Stine who had written over 37 books in the immensely popular series since the serie's debut in 1992. R.L. Stine even guest starred in one episode of the show "A Night in Terror Town".

Goosebumps is an anthology series, shot in and around Toronto, based on a series of successful kids' books and produced for FOX and YTV by Toronto-based Protocol Entertainment, in association with Scholastic Productions. The show was shot for four seasons (1995-1999) and continues to air regularly in Canada and various other markets.

Goosebumps - adapted from its namesake monthly kids/ novels - rose to the top of the crop in one season, and its primetime premiere beat every demographic in its Friday night 8:30 slot except the over 55 group. In Canada, where episodes of the popular scary show continue to run on children's specialty channel YTV, the premier increased the network's reach by 22%, racking up the highest numbers in YTV history.

For those who don't have 8 - 12-year-olds scrambling for the next issue of Goosebumps (they have reportedly sold over 60 million copies in the U.S.), the books consist of outlandish tales, ranging from a spook story about summer camp from hell (where the snakes bite and the counselors don't care) to the take of a scuzzy sponge beneath the kitchen sink that is in fact a pulsating, morphing monster.

Night at Terror Tower, the first special of Goosebumps second season in 1996, was, according to producer Steve Levitan, one of the shows most ambitious episodes.

Set in the Tower of London in both the present day and in the late seventeenth century, Levitan had one of three options in selecting his location: go to London, build the Tower in studio or use Casa Loma, Toronto's only castle. The castle was the most practical and affordable alternative, says Levitan.

A faux creation in the style of Edwardian European architecture, the castle was built by local mogul Sir Henry Pellatt in 1914 at a cost of $3.5 million. He went bankrupt seeing his dream home realized and the City of Toronto took over the property. Many productions have shot at Casa Loma over the years, but it is rare that the location is used as the primary set for an entire production.

Levitan and his 80-person crew shot day and night at the castle for two weeks and used every inch of the property, with the central hall standing in for the Tower and the nearby stables dressed to emulate a medieval village. The rental was worth it: little was needed beyond cosmetic dressing, says Levitan.

The time-travel story, about an American family on its way to London, follows the adventures of two children who are whisked back 300 years while on a tour of the Tower of London. The kids discover they were once bluebloods whose lives were threatened by an evil minister who wanted to chop off their heads. A benevolent sorcerer managed to save them from their fate by catapulting them into the future. Now returned to the past, the children have to find their escape all over again.

At the top of Levitan's list of priorities is to ensure high production values, something he attributes in part to creating the overwhelming success of the series and of the one-hour premiere. With Night at Terror Tower, although he is working within a fixed budget of about $14 million for the entire season, Levitan says it's no-holds-barred.

Levitan did not worry that he was setting a dangerous precedent with this show. "We're trying to show enormously high production values on a children's show and we're managing to do it with the resources we've got. We have one rule on this show: there isn't anything we can't do.

A great challenge for any anthology series is casting and Levitan cast very widely across the country. Although he was worried at the outset of season one that finding enough kids would be next to impossible, he was much more optimistic for season two and onwards. "It turns out there are a lot of new kids we haven't yet seen. Also, some of the ones we have cast have matured by a year, their skills are better. The (talent) pool has a surprising depth.

"One other thing was crucial to the show's success," he adds, "and it was a big worry before we started: the special effects."

Digital effects, headed by Gary Mueller, involve anything from a simple color tint to a fairly elaborate Flame morph, and Levitan says it's key to respect the medium and keep them to a minimum. Otherwise, "it's very hard in television to give it enough time and because you're working with the small screen you just can't compete with True Lies or a Star Trek movie."

Mueller started out working in post on the Friday the 13th series approximately 15 years ago. The first episode of Goosebumps he had to wrangle with in FX was The Haunted Mask, which threaded the image of a flying mask chasing a young girl through the episode.

In search of depth and reality, the method chosen was to shoot on the permanent blue screen setup at the Goosebumps studios. "Blue screen has greater depth and more of a realistic feel. When we brought it into post and removed all the backgrounds we inserted the appropriate images and keyed in what we could. What didn't key in we painted out using the Flame system," explains Mueller.

Mueller was working with Ron Stefanick of Toronto-based Quantum Leap, who handled physical effects on Goosebumps, on a scene where a boy is running frantically down a dark corridor while surrounded by bats. While Stefanick was putting together some motorized bats that will be pinned to a young actor's sweater, Mueller was creating, via animation, the swarm of bats. "It was a very ambitious script," he said of Night at Terror Tower. "It was wonderful to work on."

The creative team on Goosebumps included co-producer Patrick Doyle, executive producer Deborah Forte of Scholastic, co-executive producers Bill Siegler and Martha Atwater, art director Ian Brock, locations manager Sherry Wolfson and DOP Brian Hebb. The Director was Bill Fruet and writers included Canadians Chuck Laser, Rick Drew, Bruce Edwards and Sean Kelly with Los Angeles-based executive story editors Dan Angel and Billy Brown.

6-grader Kolya Gerasimov discovers a time machine in a basement of an old house in Moscow and gets transferred into the 21st century. There he is allowed to look around. Accidentally, Kolya witnesses two space pirates who arrive from Saturn and later try to steal a device called a "Mielophone" (which can read thoughts) from Alisa Seleznyova - a girl that performs experiments with this device and animals.

Kolya manages to save the device from the pirates and brings it back to the 20th century. But both pirates and Alisa get there too. Alisa knows where Kolya studies but doesn't know what he looks like. Pirates saw Kolya, but don't know anything about him.

You will notice from the regular cast list that two names Alexei Fomkin and Natalya Guseva have also known as names, this is because the two actresses who played the parts got married, and in Russia this results in their first name being altered. The series original title was "çİÓÖÑ ÉÚ ÂÖÏÝÄÇİ"

AKA: THUNDEROUS TAKS FORCE ADVENTURE RANGER

The Search Guard Successor (S.G.S. often pronounced as "SARGESS" or "SAAJESU" by the characters) Museum organization collects hidden treasures that have suddenly begun to disappear all over the world. Treasures such as relics from early civilizations, sunken ships, unexplored regions, and fossils of animals long gone. Relics called "Precious" have been found, which have a great and dangerous power. The S.G.S. discovered these Precious and organized a secret team to defend them from those who wish to use the relics' powers.

Gougou Sentai Boukenger (translates to: "Rumbling Squadron Boukenger"; a combination of the words "Bouken" - Japanese for "Adventure" - and "Ranger" , "Boukenjaa" (As Boukenger would be spelled if simply transliterated from the katakana title) is also a play on the term "Boukensha" , the Japanese word for "Adventurer") is the Toei's 30th Super Sentai series. The theme is treasure hunting and adventures. The series premiered on February 19th, 2006 at 7:30 AM on TV-Asahi. Footage from Boukenger will be eventually used in the next series of Power Rangers, Power Rangers: Drive Force.

Search Guard Successor

Boukengers

Satoru Akashi / BoukenRed: Leader. Burning Adventurer. Once an enthusiastic treasure-hunter, the tragic deaths of his partners Kyouko and Masaki in a blaze trap made him retire, only to be hired by the S.G.S. With a calm exterior, Satoru actually hides hot blood inside, as evidenced when he simply catapulted Masumi and Natsuki into the GouGou Dump's bucket and carried them and an entire tub of dirt and gravel at full throttle out of the Gordom temple before dumping the entire load upon coming to a full stop. He says "Attack!" and simultaneously snaps his finger at the end of each order he gives to the others. He refers to the other Boukengers by their respective colors, something that Masumi has a thing against. He became filled with self-doubt in Task 4 after GouGou Machines 1~5 were buried under ice in a deep crevasse, the resulting suffering of his teammates sparked his memories of Kyouko and Masaki. It took his mighty willpower for him to control the overload-prone GouGou Drill and prevent history from repeating itself.

Masumi Inou / BoukenBlack: Fast Adventurer. On the reverse side of society, he was able to adopt the title of a treasure hunter from his techniques of searching ruins and excavation, but he's not as good as Satoru. Rookie member of the Boukenger team. He acts as a brotherly figure towards Natsuki (whom he first met when she had her leg trapped under a heavy rock), but has a thing against being referred to by color by Satoru, whom he wants to refer to everyone by name, instead. In Task 1, after taking the Heart of Gordom, he briefly returns his Accellular to Satoru, who in turn threatened him to drop him into red-hot magma for it if he did not accept it again. Souta considers him to be a thief.

Souta Mogami / BoukenBlue: Aerial Adventurer. A former secret investigator. Being called a "spy", and he is the information expert of the team. He is also a specialist in personal computers and digital technology. He is a little cocky, as evidenced in Task 1 when he nearly ended up on the terminated list for touching a fake Heart of Gordom, something that Natsuki foresaw, and later, when he hurt his hand punching a Karth in the chest with full force (and discovered the healing factor that the Karths possess). He considers Masumi to be a thief.

Natsuki Mamiya / BoukenYellow: Strong Adventurer. She met Masumi long ago, when her leg was trapped under a rock. But, for some reason, her memory has been lost. Rookie member of the Boukenger team. She is a bit of an 'air head' and a ditz. In fact, she freaks out when they first form DaiBouken. She often refers to herself in the third person. Apparently, she can see into the immediate future (her visions are in greyscale), as evidenced in Task 1 when she foresaw Souta being obliterated by a fake Heart of Gordom. Later, in Task 2, after a brief confrontation with a Jaryuu (which was interrupted by Souta and Sakura), Sakura scolds her in fact, Mamiya's feelings are hurt so badly that she briefly doubts her worthiness to the team and returns her Accellular to Masumi. It took the others to cheer her up and rejoin.

Sakura Nishihori/BoukenPink: Deep Adventurer. Being the sub-instructional person on the team, she was a former Self-Defense Force official, and she was raised as an elite of combat. She is also good at handling machines, shooting, and military arts. She is a little selfish and pushy, as she pushes Masumi's hand of the steering wheel of the GouGou Marine and shoves Natsuki's head out of the way while they are approaching the Gordom Shrine. She refers to Satoru as "Chief".

Other SGS Members

Mister Voice: In charge of the Boukengers. Heard only by voice. He appears to the Boukengers, (via a 3-piece computer screen in the SGS base) as a computer-generated white (though he does turn red when infuriated and has a spikier crown), cone-shaped, moustached face with two stick-like arms. Mr. Voice reveals missions to the Boukenger team, while the team can also contact him for support (a trait reminiscent of Charlie in Charlie's Angels). His true age and identity are unknown. Mr. Voice is probably a reference to the 30th anniversary, as he is voiced by the narrator of all the previous anniversary Sentai series' (GoRanger, TurboRanger, and OhRanger).

Morio Makino: In charge of the mechanical side of things for the Boukenger. Adjacent to the mecha hangar is his "Makino Workshop," where equipment and weapons are held and developed.

Arsenal

Accellular: The Boukenger's changing device is a cell-phone like item that is held in a special Accellular Holder and doubles as a blacklight and scanning device, which can be used for things such as identifying how hazardous an object is. In Task 1, Masumi briefly returned his to Satoru, who in turn threatened to drop him into orange-hot magma for it. Each Accellular is held Number keys 0-9 correspond to a certain GouGou Vehicle. As demonstrated in Task 4 (Masumi placed a pair of round-lens glasses on a sleeping Satoru for the demonstration), they are also camera-phones.

GO!: Launches chosen Gougou Vehicle(s) (Launch Shift)

Combine: Combines chosen Gougou Vehicles into Dai Bouken. Gougou Dump, Formula, and Gyro must be present in order for the combination to take effect. (Combination Shift)

Sun: Transform into Boukenger form. The henshin call is "Boukenger...START UP!" (Apparently, the Boukengers do not need to utter the entire call, as Satoru simply yells "START UP!" while he is falling into orange-hot magma).

Transmission: Call

Light: Blacklight

Gougou Turbine: Enter

Survi-Busters: Standard firearm weapon, which can be changed into sword weapons known as Survi-Blades. They also have Scope Shots, which can fire grappling hooks, magnets, emergency flares, a small parachute, and metallic BoukenChips and serve as telescopes. The Scope Shot can combine with the Survi-Buster to form the Survi-Buster Sniper Mode, one finisher with this weapon is the Climax Shoot, first used on Tsukumogami Jougami.

GouGou Arms

Bouken Bo: BoukenRed's tool (resembles a truck's leaf spring), can also transform into the Bouken Javelin and can initiate the finisher "Red Zone Crash", rushing slash attack with the Bouken Javelin. He also has a finisher called "Twin Sword Slash" when the Survi-Blade and Bouken Javelin are used together.

Radial Hammer: BoukenBlack's tool (resembles a driveshaft and axle); His attack is called "Drift Crash", where he tosses his hammer like a boomerang.

Blow Knuckle: BoukenBlue's tool (resembles a jet turbine; in Task 1, Souta hurt his hand while punching a Karth with full force, so he has chosen to use this weapon more often); "Hover Attack", an attacker when he punches the ground and launches himself into the air, then blast enemies with a strong wind gust.

Bucket Scoopers: BoukenYellow's tools (resemble bulldozer buckets); "Scooper Punch", her attack increases her punches greatly to the point she can break cliff walls.

Hydro Shooter: BoukenPink's tool (resembles GouGou Marine); Her attack is called "Aqua Shoot."

Accel Tector Special armor worn by BoukenRed. The Tector is a small, blue, saucer-shaped dome with the Boukenger "Compass" on the front. By placing an ovular Precious article into the back of the Tector (first done with the "Salamander Scale"), a special body armor activates on BoukenRed's chest. Used along with the Dual Crasher.

Dual Crasher: Install the Accel Tector.

Mixer Head: Immobilizes target by encising it in "Hyper Concrete".

Drill Head: Penetrates immobilized target with drill (Boukenger Crash).

GouGou Machines

DaiBouken/Gougou Trailer: The combination of the five mainstream Gougou Machines. Natsuki did freak out a bit during the first combination sequence during the fight with the Gordom God. DaiBouken is armed with the Gou Scooper, a shovel, and the Gou Picker, a pickaxe, that combine to form the GouGou Sword. Its finishing move is called "Adventure Drive." A series of pistons on each leg allows DaiBouken to deliver a blow of any kind with greater force when activated. Its name is Japanese for "Great Adventure".

No. 1, Gougou Dump: Piloted by Bouken Red, its bucket splits into a pair of manipulator arms.

No. 2, Gougou Formula: Piloted by Bouken Black, its front bumper hides a missile launcher.

No. 3, Gougou Gyro: Piloted by Bouken Blue, its cables are strong enough to enable the GouGou Gyro to lift the GouGou Marine Diver and it is actually two vehicles combined - the part that forms DaiBouken's helmet is an exploration vehicle called Met Lander.

No. 4 Gougou Dozer: Piloted by Bouken Yellow's vehicle, its bucket is resilient enough to throw a Kyoshin off of its feet.

No. 5 Gougou Marine (Diver): Piloted by Bouken Pink, it has a manipulator claw on each side. (NOTE: On the show, the vehicle is referred to as simply the "Gougou Marine", yet the toy labels the sub as the "Gougou Marine Diver")

Gougou Gattai Machines: Additional vehicles which can replace DaiBouken's standard arms. Two or more of these Machines can combine with DaiBouken to create DaiBouken Buster Mode (1~3 and 6~10), Super DaiBouken (1~9), or Ultimate DaiBouken (1~10). Rumour has it that Gougou Machines 6-0 can combine into another mecha (making it the second mecha).

No. 6: Gougou Drill - It has three spiral drills in its cone. All three rotate in the same direction as the cone. It has been piloted by Satoru, but for some reason, the Bouken Drivers (portable, collapsable steering controls which can be used the cabin of any of the ten GouGou Machines) keep overloading when they are placed in this GouGou Vehicle's cabin, and therefore, extreme willpower is required for this mecha to be effective.

GouGou Drill replaces GouGou Dozer to make DaiBouken Drill, which gains a finishing move known as "Maximum Penetration". Uses "Rising Penetration" when joined to DaiBouken in conjunction with GouGou Shovel (this combination is known as Daibouken Drill and Shovel).

No. 7: Gougou Shovel - The shovel unit of this GouGou Machine is retractable. Sakura was the first to pilot it. When not combined, it has an attack known as the Shovel Swing. When attached to DaiBouken in place of GouGou Marine, the shovel can be used in the "Shovel Defense" maneuver, and Daibouken Shovel can use the finisher move "Shovel Knuckle". Uses "Rising Penetration" when joined to DaiBouken in conjunction with GouGou Drill (this combination is known as Daibouken Drill and Shovel).

No. 8: Gougou Mixer - The mixer section opens up in thirds to reveal a cannon. Like any concrete mixer truck, this Gougou Machine must first be filled with water (collected during launch as it drives through a waterfall) and mineral aggregates (fed by Daibouken with GouScooper). Used "Wall Shoot" to cover a burning warehouse in a layer of concrete when attached to DaiBouken in place of Gougou Marine (known as DaiBouken Mixer).

No. 9: Gougou Crane - it can launch missiles from the crane boom. The missiles are the grappling hooks.

No. 10: Gougou Jet - This one is evidently still under construction, as the other nine Gougou Machines are ready to be launched, while the Gougou Jet is behind closed doors. The cockpit of this mecha will double as an exploration vehicle and the mecha itself will be able to carry other Gougou Machines into action. The afterburners double as cannons.

The 3rd Robot, according to recent rumors, will be called BoukenHunter. It may be released at the end of July for 6,500 yen. The robot may follow up the release of the rest of the rival 6th ranger toys that may come out in June. To counter DaiBouken and its arsenal, the BoukenHunter's motif is that of military machinery. Component Machines:

GouGou Vehicle I- GouGouTank

Tank that forms the right arm of BoukenHunter.

GouGou Vehicle II- GouGouFighter

Fighter Jet that forms the left arm of BoukenHunter.

GouGou Vehicle III- GouGouShip

Battleship that forms the head, body and legs of BoukenHunter.

It is also rumoured that the BoukenHunter can combine with GouGou vehicles 6-0 to create BoukenHunter Hack-On (Drill, Shovel, Mixer, Crane, Jet). The GouGouTank and GouGouFighter can combine to DaiBouken to create DaiBouken Another Arm (Tank, Fighter). There might be an Ultimate and Super version of BoukenHunter, possible even a 13-mecha combination. How true this is unconfirmed at this point in time.

Negative Syndicate

Not much is known about the Syndicate other than it consists of various organizations and all their respective leaders, foot soldiers, and monsters.

Gordom Civilization

A mysterious civilization that once ruled the sea with the "Heart of Gordom" (a Precious relic). They were sealed at the bottom of the ocean for 40,000 years by those who feared their power. However, it was due to Masumi & Natsuki that the seal was broken and the Gordom were released.

High Priest Gajah (Daishinkan Gaja): The leader of the Gordom. He was originally a stone corpse in a death-like sleep, until the seal was shattered. Apparently his left hand is still stone, and it can summon Karths from rocks. He wields a broad sword that can shoot out lightning. He and Ryouwon are apparently rivals. He caught Souta, Natsumi and Sakura spying on the ceremony of the Gordom God's resurrection and sent the Karths after them. He briefly rode on the Gordom God's shoulder until he was forced off by blows from GouGou Formula's missiles after GouGou Dozer's bucket failed to do the trick. He witnessed the Gordom God's destruction and was consumed by Doldo when it popped out from the sea. He was held captive by the Jaryuu. When the Boukenengers interfered Gajah and Ryouwon joined forces. Gajah betrayed Ryouwon when the "Brain of Gordom" was found, but he fled when Ryouwon defeated him, only to see Ryouwon fall to his "death" at Satoru's hands. He eventually met up with Dark Shadow, only to have Jougami demonstrate his power by destroying several Karths.

Combatant Karths (Sentouin Karths): These ash-colored stone beings are the footsoldiers for the Gordom Civilization. They wield torches that can change into sickles. They are summoned from stone. They have a noticeable healing factor, as Souta found out the hard way when he broke his hand punching one in the chest with full force. Fortunately, this healing factor cannot save them from the Boukenengers' weaponry.

Giant God Gordom (Kyoshin Gordom) (1): The true form of the Gordom shrine once the Heart of Gordom was put in place, a colossal humanoid machine. It was destroyed by DaiBouken's Adventure Drive attack. The Heart of Gordom (clearly visible on the Gordom God's chest unit) was later confiscated and placed into a containment box, and is currently in the custody of SGS.

Jaryuu Clan

They are a race of reptilian-humanoids, the result of genetic manipulation of Dinosaur DNA. They are bent on reverting the earth to the age of dinosaurs and ruling the world with the power that "Precious" provides. Their name translates into "Evil Dragon".

Creator King Ryouwon (Souzouou Ryouwon): The Chieftain and creator of the Jaryuu. He wields two swords. He and Gajah are apparently rivals. After Doldo ate Gajah, Ryouwon held Gajah captive. When the Boukenengers intervened in Ryouwon's search for the "Brain of Gordom", he and Gajah joined forces. When they found the Brain, Gajah betrayed Ryouwon by sealing him in stone, but Ryouwon freed himself and defeated Gajah. When he was about to claim his prize, BoukenRed intervened and defeated him in battle and Ryouwon fell off the cliff. He did not survive the fall (which Gajah witnessed). Fortunately for him, he has a healing factor like the Karths and Magiranger's Vancuria (Ryouwon is demi-godlike(?) regenerative) and came back to fight Satoru in Task 4. This time, he survived battling Satoru, but did not reappear until Task 7.

Dragonoid Soldier Jaryuu (Ryoujinhei Jaryuu): The dragon-like warriors created by Ryouwon. They wield swords and can summon hundreds of lizards from their bodies. They are fewer in number when compared to the Karths, but lessincible. They are also capable of speech. Three piloted Doldo before its destruction and all perished in the holocaust.

Great Evil Dragon Doldo (Daijaryuu Doldo) (1-2): A cybernetic genetically altered dinosaur that swallowed Gajah after the Gordom God was destroyed. It was created by Ryouwon, piloted by several Jaryuu. When Doldo was defeated by DaiBouken's Adventure Drive, Ryouwon activated a bomb on Doldo to blow up DaiBouken and kill the Boukenengers, but the team kicked Doldo away before he blew up.

Wicked Evil Dragon Dryken (7): Ryouwon sent this first Wicked Evil Dragon to find the Scale of the Salamander, but ultimately fell victim to its power when Satoru used it to activate the Accel Tector for the first time and used the Dual Crusher Mixer Head to encase Dryken in concrete and used the Drill Head to drill him into oblivion. Dryken also heated up the inside of a factory to incredible temperature, but DaiBouken Mixer contained the explosion in concrete.

DarkShadow

An stealth assassin-group descended from ninjas, experts in espionage that work to obtain the Precious for the highest bidder.

Moonlight of Illusion (Maboroshi no Gekkou): Owl-like leader of Dark Shadow. He has the ability to create and enlarge Tsukumogami with talismans.

Blade of Darkness (Yami no Yaiba): Robot-like warrior who uses two ninja swords.

Silence of the Wind (Kaze no Shizuka): Kunoichi who fights with numerous weapons from a pair of kunai, to a sword, to a naginata. Her name means "Peaceful Wind". She often refers to herself in third person, like Natsuki.

Tsukumogami : The Dark Shadow's monsters created by Gekkou from something old and something new with the use of talismans.

Jougami (3): Created from an antique lock and laser discs to support Shizuka in retrieving the Three Swords of National Leadership. He wielded a sword made from a combination of two of the Swords. He was defeated by the Boukengers' Climax Shoot, tried but failed to squash an auctioneer who had deceived him and Shizuka with a fake (which had the auctioneer's mug shot on it), lost the advantage after Daibouken used the GouGou Sword powered by the third sword (the auctioneer wore it around his waist and threw it as hard as he could into Daibouken's hand) to split his own sword, and was ultimately terminated by Daibouken's Adventure Drive, all in the Boukengers' first nighttime battle.

Takumigami(5): Created from an old arquebus and a new mill to find the Pearl of the Empire (which fell into the hands of a young boy for a time) and received a power-up from it until it was debilitated by the GouGou Shovel's Shovel Swing and terminated by DaiBouken Shovel's Shovel Knuckle.

Precious

This is the dangerous treasure that the Boukengers and the Negative Syndicate are warring over. Each of its relics has a different "Hazard Level" according to the Accellular scans. Any of its relics that end up in the Boukengers' hands is placed into a box that materializes from a card-like device into an appropriately-sized platform - this is the base of the box. Once the relic in question is placed onto the platform, the walls and lid can materialize. In both stages, the Boukengers must wait until a small light at the center turns from red to green.

Note: the first number in the parentheses is the episode number, the second is the Hazard Level reading.

Heart of Gordom (1; 86): Gajah used this to revive the Gordom God by dipping it in water which made the Heart turn red. While the Boukengers were in the shrine where they found it (they first had to cross a trap bridge across magma), it multiplied into about thirty copies when Souta touched it. The copies would explode when touched (fortunately, Natsuki foresaw Souta's destruction and saved him). Gajah took the real one when they found it, but the Boukengers took it into SGS custody after defeating the Gordom God.

Brain of Gordom (2; 130): Gajah and Ryyuwon fought for the rights to claim this relic and had to join forces when the Boukengers interfered with Ryyuwon's search for it. Upon seizing the Brain, Gajah betrayed Ryyuwon by sealing him in stone, but he broke out and defeated him. Soon afterwards, BoukenRed knocked him off a cliff. It is currently in the Boukengers' hands.

Three Swords of National Leadership(3; 120 each): Sought by DarkShadow. Two of the swords were combined into one sword that was wielded by Jougami. The last sword was in the possession of an auctioneer, but because of Souta (who, in ranger form, saved his life with the Blow Knuckle during a free fall; the auctioneer discovered Souta's identity in the process), he gave it to the Boukengers (which gave DaiBouken a power surge) he even deceived Shizuka with a fake bamboo roll (which had his picture on it; he wore the real one around his abdomen) as well as the other two swords, which he picked up shortly before Jougami was terminated. The auctioneer learned the true meaning of "adventure" during the episode.

Madness Weather (4; unknown): A Jaryuu search team found this treasure underwater in a lake. When they activated it, the weather in Japan, and later the world, went crazy in fact, GouGou Machines 1~5 were buried in ice and snow and fell into a deep crevasse. Unfortunately for the Jaryuu, the machine that they used to turn the treasure on shorted out because the treasure was simply too much for the machine to handle. The Madness Weather later evolved into a humanoid monster form, which gave the Boukengers a hard time, but it was ultimately terminated by DaiBouken Drill's Maximum Penetration Attack, despite the GouGou Drill's power overload problems.

Pearl of the Empire (5; in investigation): It was sought by Dark Shadow, who sent Takumigami to retrieve it. For a time, it fell in the hands of a young boy who befriended Sakura shortly after, but Takumigami received a power-up after taking it from them and became Takumigami Biopanzar, Sakura used the Gougou Shovel's Shovel Swing attack to make Takumigami lose this extra power, and the Pearl fell into the hands of the S.G.S. shortly after the Boukengers obliterated Takumigami.

Neck (6; at numerical value of 20 or less unstably change, presently 0): It was protected in the Mogari of the keeper and released a fog that had a curse. Mogari gave Daibouken a hard time as the Gougou Sword could not scratch its armour. The Boukengers turned the tables around, however, when they form Daibouken Drill and Shovel for the first time, and finished Mogari off with the Rising Penetration attack.

Mogari (6): a stone samurai-like monster that protected the Neck. He released the cursed fog, but was eventually defeated by the new formed Daibouken Drill and Shovel with the Rising Penetration attack.

The Scale of the Salamander (7; 220): It was sought by the Jaryuu clan, Ryuuwon sent Dryken to find it, but Dryken was terminated when Satoru used the scale to power the Accel Tector and use Dual Crusher Mode for the first time.

Vril (8; 130)

It's the first time since Denji Sentai Megaranger that the core member colour scheme is Red, Black, Blue, Yellow and Pink.

The mecha use the same combination tactics used in Hyakujuu Sentai Gaoranger and Bakuryuu Sentai Abaranger.

This is the first series to have separate factions of villains since Seijuu Sentai Gingaman.

The first Super Sentai Series featured in widescreen 16:9 format and in HDTV.

The SGS abbreviation has a hidden Japanese word sagasu, which means "to search."

On an interesting side note, the three groups in the Negative Syndicate are colored red (Jaryuu), white (Gordom), and blue (Dark Shadow).

This is the first Sentai series since Chikyuu Sentai Fiveman and arguably Kyoryuu Sentai Zyuranger where the team was assembled and had their equipment and costumes prior to the start of the first episode.

This is the fourth Sentai to not announce the full team name in the theme song. The others were Denshi Sentai Denjiman, Chouriki Sentai Ohranger and Mirai Sentai Time Ranger.

This series is the first since GoGo-V to not feature a tense relationship between the leader and the second in command. It is also the first since Ohranger where the leader is treated as a higher authority by the other team members.

Starting with episode 4, this series will be playing a mini featurette for each of the previous sentai teams.

There will be a short blurb about all the sentai teams from Goranger to Magiranger.

In the Goranger featurette, Natsuki eats a bowl of curry rice, Kiranger Daita Ooiwa's favorite dish.

In the JAKQ featurette, all of the Boukengers except for Sakura play a trump card game in which the Joker, which Satoru draws, is a bad card.

For Battle Fever J, the Boukengers wave the national flags of their respective Battle Fever counterparts (Natsuki, however, waves the Russian flag since the Soviet Union, which Battle Cossack represented, no longer exists).

For Denjiman, Souta eats some anpan, Denjiblue's favorite snack.

For Sunvulcan, Akashi holds up a plush Eagle (Representing VulEagle (Red)), Souta holds up a Shark hand-puppet (Representing VulShark (Blue)), and Natsuki holds up a plush Jaguar (representing VulPanther (Yellow)), they then begin to briefly play with the plush toys around Masumi.

Boukenger's "Accel Tector" marks the first use of the word "Tector" as an armor name in Super Sentai in 8 years. The last time that the "Tector" title was used was in the Video Movie "Denji Sentai Megaranger VS Carranger" with the Megarangers receiving Mega Tector armor.

GRAND STAR

AKA: Compagnie des glaces, La

AKA: Ice Corp (working title)

Set in an apocalyptic future 100 years after a cataclysmic nuclear explosion on the Moon sends the Earth into a new Ice Age, the show revolves around the interactions between a small community of Earth survivors and the returning descendants of colonists who escaped Earth in advance of the disaster.

Grand Star tells of Cal's quest. He wants to know why it is so cold, and return the Sun to the Earth. To succeed, Cal must overcome the terrifying caste of Pointsmen. They control the trains, as they control their heat and their energy source. They forbid any search into the past.

Their leader Palidor rules with an iron fist. Lies, corruption, destruction anything to keep our hero from discovering the truth about the world of ice.

Fortunately Cal's father Liam is the most influential glaciologist of Grand Star. He moves in some of the highest circles of the Rail Company. But how long will his connections help cover Cal's constant incursions?

Cal shares his adventures with Suki and Kurt. They are, like Cal in search of the truth. Suki, more out of defiance than need: she is a train orphan who has always had to overcome adversity. Kurt, on the other hand, is of a much wealthier class, he seeks friendship and adventure. He won't be let down.

Cal doesn't hesitate to defy the rail law. He has the Ice Fox, a surprising little engine, which unlike any other train can run on any combustible. It therefore doesn't depend on the Pointsmen energy monopoly and escapes their surveillance.

Finally to scramble the screen and switch open rail points Cal uses his telekinetic powers. He possesses this strange ability from birth, but has yet to discover its full potential. The more he learns of his background, the better he musters his powers.

Character Details

CAL (Tyler Johnston)

An 18 year old lad with light hair and sullen eyes.

He is the son of Liam Ragg, the famed glaciologist who travels from one worksite to the next.

Cal never knew his mother. She died in an accident when he was just a baby. So Liam has raised him alone, with inevitable slips but with constant affection. He has taken advantage of their travels to teach him the ice and the realities of the world around them.

Thus, Cal has always lived on the Pacific, a magnificent locomotive dating back to the 1960's. Cal has learned everything about the trains; he knows the railroad instruction manual by heart, and can maneuver the Pacific often more deftly than his father.

Cal loves to speed across the vast frozen expanses. He has the Ice Fox, a small self-propelled engine, which is easily disconnected from the third power and communications rail. Such practice is against the law! But Liam looks away as long as Cal keeps it away from the station.

Cal is ill at ease in the better circles of the Rail Society. He has little regard for his father's friends who live on luxury liners while most people lie in ill-heated wagons.

Tar, Kurt's mother, is the perfect example of her class. The powerful owner of a sub-glacier mine, she spends her time wasting Calories (the official company currency) and eating horrendously expensive oranges. Cal hates her. The fact that she is always trying to seduce his father doesn't make things any easier.

Cal also dislikes the Pointsmen, their condescending manner exasperates him. They act and feel as if they are vested with an almost god-like power. And when they abuse it, it throws Cal into a violent rage.

Cal has developed a strong free-spirited character. He vaguely resents his father's over-protectiveness. The truths that surround his existence are no longer sufficient. He has a sudden urge to shake the world.

SUKI (Tammy Hui)

A 19 year old, dark haired, pert and pretty girl.

Suki is an urchin, member of a cabaret troop which criss-crosses the Rail on a Night-Club Train.

Suki has a tough side and knows the ins and outs of the Rail Society like the back of her hand; she can get hold of any piece of contraband you could ask for, given some time and a bit of cash. It's on just such an occasion that she meets Cal and Kurt in the first episode.

Suki is obviously rather contemptuous of the two young men from the upper crust of Rail Society. But she quickly grasps that Cal is different. His wistful dreams will lead her to a future she could never dare hope for. So she swaps her services for a ride in their adventures.

Suki quickly becomes Cal's most useful ally. She is unbelievably quiet and nimble, and can get in and out of the tightest corners. She can face the worst situations with an almost breathtaking coolness. She is an impressive partner in their adventures.

But Suki's messing about in all circles has not attracted only admirers. A hidden menace threatens her. She quickly must seek refuge in Cal and Liam's train. She quickly fits in as the third member of the Pacific crew.

KURT (Kyle Labine)

A stolid young man who enjoys life.

Kurt is everything Suki is not. While Suki comes from the dregs of Rail Society, Kurt is the epitome of its elite. He lives in a sumptuously overheated wagon, never lacks for anything and eats oranges!

Kurt is a conformist and a shade yellow. He faces extreme situations with disarming naïveté and almost chronic awkwardness, as Cal and Suki quickly find out, sometimes at their own expense, but almost always with a good laugh. What else can you do with v?

But he knows how to use that innocence; behind his baby faced charm is a first class swindler. No one can better wheedle the best kept secrets from his mother or start the craziest rumors in the Rail's high society. All with a straight face that never fails to impress Cal and Suki.

Kurt's admiration of Cal is boundless. He sees in Cal the romantic adventurer he would have liked to be. If he can't be one himself, at least by following Cal, he will live in the adventures. No mistake there!

LIAM RAGG (Peter Hudson)

Cal's father, a glaciologist.

A first class glaciologist, he has successfully taken part in some of the most important Rail Company worksites. His reputation precedes him. He is also one of the few people to own his own locomotive the Pacific, and can travel the lines in comparative freedom.

A keen mind, a weather beaten face from working in polar winds, Liam circulates in the better circles with an affable charm. Pointsmen seek his opinion. Not everyone has discovered under the ice the ruins of ancient Rome!

But Liam's aloofness isn't accidental. He knows what his freedom costs. There is no doubt he would rather glide over the frozen expanses than through the realms of power. He has always done his best to raise Cal far from the excesses of Rail Society.

Liam's love for his son knows no bounds. He alone has educated him. He continues to teach him all he knows with a solid moral sense.

The death of Cal's mother remains a forbidden topic. Either from pain or excessive sensitivity, Liam only too infrequently touches on the subject. This lack of a maternal past is quite painfully to Cal; he resents his father's silence. But Liam won't give: he refuses to live in the past. Only Cal's future matters.

But now, Cal threatens the delicate balance Liam has built around him. The father will obviously do all he can to protect his son. It will cost him. He often must skirt problems and soften sharp edges, at the risk of seeming weak which only heightens Cal's resentful rebellion.

But what Liam won't say is that this excessive caution and protectiveness hide a secret he has sworn never to tell.

PALIDOR (Joe Sheridan)

As cold, sharp and unbending as ice.

Palidor is the leader of the fearful caste of Pointsmen. The most obscure person in Grand Star.

He knows everything. Thanks in part to his network of Pointsmen, who cover the rails and manage all rail movement; thanks also to sophisticated technology allowing him, to know the positions of any and all convoys on the tracks.

Palidor loves to wield his power. He knows his strength. It is also the Pointsmen's great fault. They believe themselves the Masters of the World. They have after all saved humanity, didn't they? They were the ones who have created the civilization of the Rail.

No matter, the Pointsmen have made history, their history. They watch and control all sub-glacial excavation and will not tolerate any contradiction of their version of the past.

DAMIEN (James Gerard)

A Pointsmen officer.

He is the concrete evidence of the Pointsmen's omnipresence in the Ice world. He is never alone; Palidor chose him to closely watch Cal. He becomes the symbol of Cal's enemy.

When Cal and his friends want to enter Grand Star Station, he is there. When they discover a relic, he is the first on the scene. SUKI is not even surprised to see his weasel face in the audience of the trapeze act.

Damien, like all Pointsmen, is haughty and doesn't even try to hide his sense of superiority. And as an officer he even adds an extra touch: his supercilious manner in view of his task makes him pepper his speech with malapropisms.

Damien is blindly devoted to Palidor; his actions are implacably logiCal -and predictable. He will find himself attracted to Suki, regardless of his rank.

ZEL (Patrick Albenque)

A man of the cold.

Zel never appears but is instrumental to Cal's quest. Their friendship will be hard to hold, as Zel belongs to one of the People of the Cold.

There exists a people in this world of ice who have adapted to the cold and can move unprotected at very low temperatures. Their ways are simple, their origins uncertain. The Pointsmen use them as cheap docile labor to break the ice that settles on the rails. They are considered primitive, good only for scavenging the Rail Society's rubbish.

Cal is shocked by the humiliation and deep-seated racism against these people. He constantly endeavors to prove their cultural identity and yet, at his lowest moments, Cal finds in Zel and his people the strength and courage to press on in his quest. And like Cal, Zel possesses strange telekinetic powers.

Peoples of the Ice World

L-EKTRIK CORPORATION

L-Ektrik Corporation is the name of the immense Rail Monopoly that controls the World of Ice. It is in fact divided into a myriad of subsidiaries, some quite powerful, others much more frail. They function much in the same way our companies function today. But their power never goes beyond the economic sphere, as they must submit to the ruthless Rail Law.

The Pointsmen always keep their subscribers moving, and thus permanently ill at ease. All other means of transportation other than the Rail Company train is totally illegal, even sacrilegious.

The Rail Company is strongly segregated: the financial elite lives in luxurious well-heated liners while the rest, the subscribers, workmen and miners eek out a meager existence.

THE POINTSMEN

Smartly dressed in their black and red uniforms, the Pointsmen are the Corporation guards. They police and manage the rail traffic, but more important, they are the unwavering guardians of the Rail Law.

Theirs is a powerful caste, arrogant and proud of their prerogatives. And they take advantage of it. They believe themselves sent forth on a divine mission, impose their moral code and shroud the world in a Dark Age.

Nobody dares to challenge their power. It is their technology that brought forth the Rail Society from the darkness. They founded it, or so they say. As they never directly intervene in the various concessions' economic policy, people rarely quarrel with their rule.

They also control all sub-glacial policy. No relic from the past can circulate within the company without their direct authorization. It comes as no surprise that a very lucrative black market in relics has sprung up.

Damien is their immediate authority, whereas Palidor is the leader of the Corporation.

PEOPLE OF THE COLD

This peaceful race lives on the rims of the stations. They can withstand extreme cold without protection but consequently cannot stand heat. They have their own customs and beliefs. The Ice is their 'mother'. It has always existed.

The people of Grand Star consider them primitive. Their contempt for the People of the Cold is boundless. They are only good for living off railway refuse and performing menial tasks, when they can be trusted. They can vanish overnight. Their total independence is probably what most exasperates the people of Grand Star, and why they despise them so.

It is easy to guess why the People of the Cold aren't welcome in the Rail World. Would they want to be? Nobody has ever thought to ask. But to avoid this ever happening the Law of the Rail forbids the mixing of races.

But where they come from is a vital key in the mystery.

THE PEOPLE OF GRAND STAR (A.K.A. THE SUBSCRIBERS)

They are the descendants of the 2% of the world population which survived the beginning of the ice age. For the most part they are simple workmen, civil servants or technicians living in the trains and stations comprising the Corporation

They give CAL a hand whenever they can. Most of them also dream of a better life. But they live in fear: the Pointsmen can at any moment cut off their power or move them where they please.

Years of ignorance and propaganda have annihilated their will to resist.

THE SUN RENEWERS

Humans who yearn for the memory of the sun, dissidents of the Rail dictatorship, they are considered dangerous heretics and terrorists. They frighten everyone and are ruthlessly hunted down. Their goal is to bring the sun back to the world without considering the awful consequences.

Some are highly gifted scientists, with lasers and ultrasound canons; they manage to flocculate the dust particles surrounding the Earth. They thus create a breach in the atmosphere which allows the sun to appear for a few seconds. MA KER, their leader, has gone blind contemplating the coveted bright star.

GREATEST AMERICAN HERO, THE

As with most Cannell shows. The Greatest American Hero is very character driven, with continual conflicts occurring between the series' three leads: Ralph, Bill and Ralph's girlfriend (later wife) attorney Pam Davidson. Bill is a very gung-ho conservative type, he will speak his mind even when he knows it will get him into trouble. He sees the super suit as a means to get all the bad guys and make the world a safer place to live. Bill is also deathly afraid of the little green guys and dreads the occasions when they return to Earth. Ralph is a liberal teacher of remedial high school students- whom often get involved in the stories. Ralph does not like using the suit and feels silly when he is spotted in public wearing it. He thus lets Bill take all the credit and glory in their joint efforts.

The bad guys thus get branded as crazy when they start talking about the flying guy who helped capture them. Ralph is much more liberal than Bill and would prefer to do deeds in which he helps individual people as opposed to scenarios that make the world safe from the commies. Pam is a liberated professional woman, she had been Ralph's divorce attorney. She at first does not believe Ralph when he tells her about the supersuit, however after seeing it, she does. She becomes a valuable member of the team often getting called in by Bill to do the 'women's work' such as getting coffee- tasks she does not enjoy.

Ralph Hinkley had his last name changed briefly during the first season, to either Mr. H or Ralph Hanley. This occurred after John Hinckley's failed attempt at assassinating President Reagan, causing somebody somewhere to fear that some viewer might think that the Greatest American Hero had tried to kill the President! It was soon returned to Hinkley.

The series ran from 1981-1983 in America where, for some first season episodes , Ralph's surname was changed to Hanley to avoid confusion with the Hinkley who tried to assassinate Reagan. A pilot was made in 1986 for a sequel series, The Greatest American Heroine, in which the aliens decide to give Ralph's suit to someone else and get Ralph to find his replacement - Holly Hathaway, a day school worker dedicated to making the world a better place, the series was never made.

Another attempt was made at producing a sequel which did air called ONCE A HERO. Actress June Lockhart was famous for playing Maurine Robinson in the SF space show LOST IN SPACE. Faye Grant would later go on to star in the highly successful SF mini-series V. This show had a wacky logic all its own, and was a good-natured spoof of the action superhero genre, which had been tried before about 15 years earlier in "Mr. Terrific" and in "CAPTAIN NICE."

The Greatest American Hero was a success during its first season and a half on the air. (It arrived as a mid-season replacement.) For the third season the series was moved to a new time slot, did not premiere for several weeks into the season and then was pre-empted several times. For some reason the ratings dropped a bit from the previous season and ABC yanked the series off the air with four episodes left unaired. These four episodes have since been released into syndication.

An attempt was made to revive the series in 1986, under the title of The Greatest American Heroine. Robert Culp who really enjoyed his role was to be the sole cast member to return to the new series. William Katt and Connie Selleca reprised their roles for the pilot in which the aliens return and take the suit away from Ralph after he goes public and lets all the publicity go to his head. Ralph is given the opportunity to pick his successor and Bill's new partner, He picks Holly Hathaway. a female school teacher from his school, and Bill reluctantly accepts a 'skirt' as his new partner. Holly was to be an even more liberal character than Ralph and had a very precocious seven-year-old foster daughter. The pilot for The Greatest American Heroine was produced, however it was never picked up as a series or broadcast as an original programme during the summer rerun season. It has however been placed into syndication with the rest of The Greatest American Hero episodes.

The executive producers for the show were Stephen J. Cannell, Juanita Bartlett and Jo Swerkling, Jr. The theme music was composed by Mike Post and Stephen Geyer and the song was sung by Joey Scarbury. The story editor was Patrick Hasburgh, the photography was by Andrew Jackson, the art director was Mary Weaver Dodson, and the special effects were by Magicam. The series has aired in the UK on Sky cable and some ITV regions.

The Greatest American Hero was a bold departure for producer Stephen J Cannell, who had previously produced a string of subversive detective series (The Rockford Files, Richie Brockelman, City of Angels, Stone, The Duke) and just left the security of Universal to start his own production company. Thanks to Star Wars and Close Encounters of the Third Kind, Hollywood had decided that Science Fiction themes were in vogue again, Superman and Flash Gordon were back on the big screen, and where the big screen goes, the small screen is sure to follow.

Captain Marvel, Isis, Spider-Man, Wonder Woman, and the Hulk had all turned up on TV, and several similar Fantasy shows made their debut in the early '80s, including THE POWERS OF MATTHEW STARR (about an alien prince on Earth), VOYAGERS (a flawed but entertaining reworking of THE TIME TUNNEL), and this slick super-hero spoof, the show that lasted the longest. Like BATMAN, CAPTAIN NICE, and MR TERRIFIC before it, The Greatest American Hero was a send-up of the comics, exploiting what the Fries organisation with their short-lived and half-baked Spider-Man series had discovered to their cost - what looks great on the printed page, when drawn dynamically by talented and stylised comics artists, is revealed for the unlikely silliness it is when presented in live action. Cannell's way of dealing with this obstacle was to exploit it. Of course real people looked silly in super-suits - real life isn't drawn by Jack Kirby or Gil Kane.

In terms of plots, Greatest American Hero was more substantial than its stablemates, matching the cynicism and satire of Cannell's Rockford Files, Richie Brockelman (a junior wannabe Mike Hammer) and Tenspeed and Brownshoe with the lighter comic book antics that would make Cannell the king of action adventure shows in the early '80s. Greatest American Hero was a training ground for the plots, themes, obsessions, and writers and directors that would become honed and embellished in later seasons on shows such as The A-Team, Riptide, Rousters, Hardcastle and McCormick, and many more interchangeable light adventure series; Cannell's advantage over colleague Glen Larson was that he didn't take his subject matter seriously.

Greatest American Hero was a modest mid-season hit in 1981 when it premiered, ran for a full season in the 1981-82 season, and was finally killed off by Dallas early in its third season. All in all, 43 episodes were produced and as the third of a three show deal the new-born Cannell company had secured with ABC, saved the producer from ruin after the first two tanked. Cannell had no money, but the cheesy look of the series - filmed in real homes and LA streets rather than expensive studio sets - actually added to its authenticity.

The show also got lucky in the casting department. William Katt was the son of Western star Bill Williams, TV's Kit Carson in the '50s, and actress Barbara Hale, best known for her role on the long-running Perry Mason series - she turned up later in the series as Ralph's mother, while his girlfriend's mother was portrayed by June Lockhart. Katt has managed to rack up a fair number of credits without ever hitting the big time, but fantasy buffs will know him best from Disney's dino-movie Baby and as Sissy Spacek's prom date in Carrie. Co-starring as the uptight Bill Maxwell was TV legend Robert Culp, another actor whose film credits are many but minor, but whose TV career is studded with jewels, including the brilliant spy series I Spy sandwiched between three superb Outer Limits and three classic Columbo episodes.

Katt was well-cast, neither macho nor nerdy, and pro Culp spotted instantly what Cannell was doing and became the show's greatest asset. Sellecca was the perfect combination of smart and sexy. Playing two of Ralph's students were future straight-to-video leading man Michael Pare (Philadelphia Experiment) and Faye Grant (of V fame), while the guest star was Richard Herd, who also appeared in the original V mini-series (as the alien leader John), the seaQuest pilot, and one of the very best QUANTUM LEAP episodes (Future Boy). Minor roles were played by child actor Robby Kiger, who went on to co-star in detective comedy Crazy Like a Fox and Jeff Mackay of Magnum, Tales of the Gold Monkey, AIRWOLF and QUANTUM LEAP appearances as a cop. The opening scene of the Greatest American Hero pilot - the silence of a serene desert suddenly broken by the mayhem of technology, sans any background music - was recreated for the AIRWOLF pilot a couple of years later, the debut of AIRWOLF replacing stunt man Bob Minor's dune buggy. Both owed a small debt to the opening scene of a MAN FROM UNCLE feature, The Karate Killers.

One of the great myths of UFOlogy is that saucer sighting descriptions don't correspond with movies or magazines that may have directly or indirectly influenced those claiming an alien experience. Actually they often do, just as films and TV are influenced by their predecessors. The famous pre-Spielberg 'flying hubcap' saucers of the '50s and '60s were replaced in the early '80s by post-Spielberg 'light-show' spacecraft of the Close Encounters variety, and lo and behold, the saucer-spotting public were soon seeing strange lights rather than metal discs. The saucer sequence in Greatest American Hero is clearly influenced by the then-recent Spielberg movie. Two rock songs performed California rock style by Joey Scarbury adorn the soundtrack, David Bowie's Space Oddity and Elton John's Rocket Man, although Scarbury actually had a hit with the show's pleasantly simple theme tune.

We never found out who won the custody case, although the character of Kevin was dropped from the series a few episodes in as an unnecessary obstacle to smooth storytelling. In Don't Mess Around With Jim we meet a previous recipient of the suit who abused its powers and in the third season opener Divorce, Venusian Style Ralph finally boards the saucer and meets the aliens (sadly, cheap plastic puppets!), and he and Pam get married shortly before the series ends.

Stephen J. Cannell is quite probably the most unlikely person for a network to approach about a fantasy superhero show. He is well known for creating, producing and writing some of television's most enduring crime drama shows such as The Rockford Files, Baretta, 21 Jump Street, and most recently, The Commish and Cobra. When ABC asked for a superhero show from Cannell's company, it took him awhile to develop the premise. "He didn't want to just come up with a show about a guy with superhuman strength or with X-ray eyes," says co-executive producer Jo Swerling, Jr. "That was too straight-it had been done before. And he thought, 'How can I make a superhero who's a little different?' That led to the development of a character who had super powers but didn't like to use them. And then he came up with the specific details of the aliens who selected him to be there to save the world.

They were always referred to as 'the little green guys.' And they gave him this suit with magic powers and an instruction book on how to use it, and he loses the instruction book. So now he has the suit and doesn't quite know how to use it, and he crashes into walls and so on. That was a way of putting humor into the concept, and making it distinctive from Superman." Director Bruce Kessler, who directed many segments of the show (other credits include Alias Smith and Jones, B.J. and the Bear, Barnaby Jones, Baretta, and I Dream of Jeannie), describes the show as "a fun concept. It appealed to me-a guy with a suit who had lost the instructions. Yeah I thought it was terrific."

According to Swerling, it's amazing that Greatest American Hero lasted for three seasons. "Traditionally," he says, "fantasies have a rough time in one-hour formats. But many fantasies have been very successful in half hour sitcoms. Bewitched, Ghost and Mrs. Muir, I Dream of Jeannie. With an hour show, it's an uphill battle to get it to succeed. Greatest American Hero, which is a fantasy, stayed on the air for three years, which is a credit to everybody involved.... Quantum Leap is one of the few fantasies that has stayed on for as long as it has, but it never had very good ratings."

When Ralph Hinkley receives his super suit, he realizes he can fly (although very badly; he has a nasty habit of slamming into brick walls or landing into bushes). He's able to lift cars with his super strength and can deflect bullets (though cowering and covering his face with his arms for protection), and can run at speeds that would make the Six Million Dollar Man blush. Later, with a burst of concentration, he is able to make himself invisible, an ability that spooks FBI agent Maxwell. The super suit also gives Ralph an ability to see events telepathically and to locate someone while holding an object belonging to that person.

This "holograph" connects Ralph to the owner or whoever was last in contact with the object. For instance, when it is believed that Bill Maxwell has died, Ralph and Pam learn he is still alive when Ralph accidentally puts on Bill's fishing cap. And much later, when he recovers the instruction book from the "green guys," Ralph even learns to shrink himself. But any time Ralph launches himself into the world with his suit, he has to let FBI agent Maxwell take the credit and disappear (often literally) before anyone can see him. Keeping a secret identity is a problem common to all superheroes, a problem writers frequently exploit for comedy. Both Kessler and Swerling describe the show as an action-adventure type with a thread of wry, character and situation-based humor running through it.

Swerling concedes that, in "broad strokes," Hero was a formula show. "Stories had to contain an amount of action, the flying and so on, and action elements and a line of attitude humor running through it. I don't recall anyone sitting down and saying, 'We've had a bunch of these kinds of stories, now we should look for something issues-oriented.' Or very serious drama or Three Stooges comedy. The effort to create stories was focused on being true to the show. We wanted to do stories that were interesting from one [to] another. So you weren't doing the same story every week."

William Katt, who played the idealistic, energetic high school teacher, was introduced to the show via Stephen Cannell, who had seen him in the feature First Love with Susan Dey. Katt bought the show's concept on the strength of Cannell's enthusiasm-but for one element of his role, Katt could never muster any enthusiasm of his own. According to Swerling, William Katt hated "the magic red jammies" (as character Bill Maxwell dubbed them) so much that he refused to do publicity wearing the suit. "He hated the suit and wore it with some reluctance," recalls Swerling. "He didn't hold up production, or say, 'I won't wear it,' he knew it was part of the show.

"TV Guide wanted to do a cover of the show, and a TV Guide cover is important to any series. It's not just something they do for every show. The editors decide that they want to give you a cover. "At the time, the title song had been a top 40 hit, and TV Guide wanted to set up a photo session with him, and Bill said, 'That's fine-but I won't wear the suit: They said, 'But that's what we want.' Bill signed on to do the character in the show, but he felt he had associated with a comic strip character. But he didn't want to be associated with the character in any other way. That included publicity. He would wear it during filming, but it still embarrassed him. But he wouldn't wear it on a talk show or publicity session, and TV Guide wasn't interested in that. So, we lost a TV Guide cover as a result of that." Katt could not be swayed, even by prodding from his boss, Stephen Cannell. When he did talk to TV Guide in 1982, he talked about the suit. "I know it's part of the job," he said, "but to this day, after a year and a half of the show, I still don't like it. Every time I have to put it on, I'm uncomfortable."

"Ultimately," says Swerling, "we got the TV Guide cover and they had an artist draw him. So, that made sense and that's what they ended up doing. I always felt the best anecdote about the show was that the star was embarrassed by the wardrobe. He wanted to forget about the suit every chance he got." Notwithstanding this impasse, Swerling and Kessler remember Katt as excellent in his work on the show. They also concur in their high praise of Katt's co-stars, Robert Culp and Connie Sellecca. Robert Culp played FBI agent Bill Maxwell in a very straight-arrow, dogmatic style. "I don't know how much he was enjoying himself because I didn't get that close to him personally," comments Swerling. "My observation is, he was a very dedicated professional who worked very hard to do his role. I think he very much liked the role. There was no embarrassment, of course. He didn't have to wear funny wardrobe. He really got into that character, and his particular style of acting worked extremely well in the character of Maxwell. He was delightful to watch. He always came in prepared."

Kessler agrees with Swerling, "Bob was a true professional. I don't think he came in looking at it as a 'fun day.' He looked at it as being a professional actor doing the best job he could. Not that he disliked the part, but work is work. Bob was not the kind of guy who had a lot of fun on the set and socializing and goofing around he came in to do the job and did it very, very well."

Swerling goes on to say that "Bob was multitalented. Bob was not difficult, but he was not as malleable for me as Bill [Katt] was, to work with. I could do more with Billy than I could with Bob. Bob was not a difficult actor to work with, but we never developed a real close relationship. We were just people working together and did what we had to do. He had a very definite ideas about the character, and because he also writes and directs, he would have ideas on how things should be done. So he wasn't just a guy who would come in and say, 'Where do you want me to stand? What do you want me to do?' As Bruce said, he wouldn't fool around [on] the set." So involved was Culp with the show and his role that he told Associated Press he'd worked out Bill Maxwell's character all the way back to his childhood.

Culp had a longstanding declaration that he was not interested in doing another series after burning out on I, Spy. But a friend cajoled him into reading the pilot's script. Thirty pages into it, he picked up the phone and called Cannell for a meeting. (Years earlier, buddy Robert "Baretta" Blake had told him that he should never miss a chance to work with Cannell.) To avoid creating a show that was dependent on just two lead characters who often disagreed vehemently about values and priorities in life, Cannell invented Pam Davidson. Played by Connie Sellecca (fresh from the 1980 series Beyond Westworld), Pam helped the duo on their cases and eventually married Ralph Hinkley. Swerling and Kessler remember Sellecca fondly.

"Connie was great to work with. Bill and Bob had certain aspects of their personalities that made them a little difficult," says Swerling. "With Bob I would say that it would be his very strong, rigid opinions on how things should be done. With Bill, it was a tendency to be moody. His attitude about the suit was a separate issue. Bill could be the most delightful, charming guy around. Other days, he was kind of down, and that would have its contagiousness. It's not fun to be around somebody down in the dumps, it kind of brings you down too, and that was an effect Bill would have on the crew from time to time. Connie, on the other hand, was the consummate professional and nice person. I always felt she was kind of the glue that kept it together. Her demeanor was so friendly to everybody. It certainly helped the morale of the set at times when the morale might have been affected by other stresses and strains, which might have had to do with the actors, or bad weather, or whatever pressures there are. Everyone loved her, and I would work with her anytime, anyplace, and anywhere."

After listening to Swerling's comments, director Kessler succinctly agrees: "Connie was everything Jo said. She was a stabilizing force on the set." However, filming Greatest American Hero with Sellecca at one point took some creative filmmaking. Just prior to the start of the show Sellecca became pregnant by then-husband Gil Gerard, so directors had to discreetly film around her increasingly apparent condition. In fact, scenes degenerated to shots of Pam carrying objects that hid her body and finally to phone conversations between Pam and Ralph.

Early in production, Sellecca asked if Pam could try out the supersuit but producers balked. "I would have loved to do that. I think it would have been hilarious, but they didn't have my sense of humor, I guess," Sellecca told TV Guide in 1984. One of the problems on Greatest American Hero was that while Ralph, Bill and Pam dashed off to their adventures saving the world, it became obvious that the high school kids from Ralph's special education class were shoved into the background, their appearances eventually dwindling. Asked if including the kids in the various plots of the stories became difficult, Swerling reports that "it was cumbersome to involve all the school kids. They were around during the year I worked on the show-I remember they kind of faded out. They were not as important to the stories." But Swerling also says, "I don't remember any conscious effort to put them into the episodes. I never heard anything like, 'The audience misses the kids.' The stories were the stories as the writers wrote them."

Comparing Greatest American Hero to the many shows he has directed over the years, Kessler says the series "was always a challenge in making it new and keeping it alive, like in any series. Part of directing is figuring out how to figure out how to do it, and so forth. The actual directing is very satisfying, but you have no time-you're on a dead run all of the time. That's the nature of the business." As an example of the kinds of problems he had to deal with, Kessler remembers he was directing an episode called "The Hand Painted Thai," a script that he loved very much, when a message arrived from the network. "Before we shot it, the network decided they wanted to take out the biggest joke in it, which was every time Billy said a certain word, it put Bob to sleep. The word was 'scenario.' They'd be in the middle of a crisis and Billy would say, 'Well, if we follow this scenario,' and Bob would go to sleep."

This joke related to a scene earlier in the plot in which Maxwell, despite his skepticism, was placed under a trance in a visit to a hypnotist. "Word came down just before we shot it to take that joke out of the show," says Kessler. "I remember saying, 'What? They want to take that out?' and Jo talked to someone to take care of it. They did. Because if you took that joke out of the show, you wouldn't have an episode." The episode was filmed with the joke intact.

Like Ralph himself, the show couldn't seem to fly straight and true. It slammed right into a lawsuit even before it aired. Warner Brothers and D.C. Comics, the owners of Superman, had sued Universal because they felt Hinkley was too close to Superman. Warners and D.C. Comics said that Greatest American Hero was copyright infringement, unfair competition, and misappropriation of Superman. An injunction preventing the air of the pilot was requested-and denied. A federal judge later viewed the Superman movie and the pilot and found that there was no "substantial similarity between the two characters." He thought Superman was "a broad shouldered, bigmuscled, calm and confident square" while Hinkley was a "model American young man of the 70's and the 80's. Trim, hungry looking, nonmacho, concerned with family and the every day problems of life but [has gained powers] which he accepts with reluctance and internal confusion." The judge granted ABC's request for dismissal of the suit.

During the show's run, a man named John Hinckley took a shot at fame by attempting an assassination of President Reagan. Although the would-be assassin's name was spelled differently, the producers of Greatest American Hero decided to change Ralph's name immediately. Ralph Hinkley suddenly became Ralph Hanley, sometimes just "Mr. H" to the school kids. Later, when the change was deemed inconsequential, the name went back to Hinkley.

After 41 episodes and three seasons, Greatest American Hero was canceled by ABC even before five episodes "in the can" got aired. Later, these last five were included in syndication, along with one more item that rose from the ashes. The Greatest American Heroine, guest-starring Mary Ellen Stuart, was intended to be a 30-minute presentation film to the network as a spin-off of the show. In this film, Ralph Hinkley's secret identity is blown wide open and the world learns who their mysterious flying benefactor is. Bill Maxwell, however, hides in the shadows and remains the silent partner. The green guys frown on Ralph's sudden celebrity and decree that the suit be transferred to someone else. After a search, Ralph chooses a girl named Holly Hathaway to carry on his deeds in the suit. When the news is delivered to Bill Maxwell, he responds with amazement: "A skirt! You gave the suit to a skirt!" Offended, Pam Davidson replies, "It's a girl, Bill!"

Of Greatest American Heroine, Swerling says, "It wasn't the final episode per se. The series had been off the air quite a while. Greatest American Heroine was ... an effort to sell a new show. Somebody came up with the Greatest American Heroine. [Mary Ellen Stuart, who played the replacement character] would be the secondary character. The network financed it, looked at it and went, 'Ugh!' They passed. It did go into syndication as part of the package because we expanded it to an hour by taking footage from other [episodes]. We didn't shoot any new footage for Greatest American Heroine aside from the original 30-minute presentation."

CAST NOTES

William Katt (Ralph Hinkley/Hanley:) Born 1955. Son of actor Bill Williams and actress Barbara Hale, Katt played gung-ho investigator Paul Drake, Jr., in several of the Perry Mason movies in the 1980s, performing with his mother. Later, he acted again for Stephen J. Cannell, in the short-lived series Top of the Hill.

GROWING RICH

Carmen, Anne and Laura are 17 and taking their 'A' levels. They dream of escaping from Dullsville to become rich and famous. Then a local entrepreneur and his devilish driver make Carmen an offer she can't refuse. The Driver wants Carmen for Sir Bernard and has promised that if she agrees, her friends will share her good fortune. After three years however the driver dooms Carmen to work in a chicken factory and then vanished. Annie has escaped to the other side of the world and Laura is now a mother of two. So much for rich and famous. But then the Drivers comes hunting for Carmen once more.

Annie is finding her New Zealand paradise flawed and Laura's family are getting her down. Carmen is on the up and up since she promised the driver that she would dine alone with Sir Bernard, even though she loves someone else. Carmen soon brakes her promise to the driver, and the driver expects her to pay. It falls to Laura to find a way to defeat the driver's devilish schemes. The driver soon wins however, Carmen is to be a sacrificial virgin, given to Sir Bernard. In return the driver's side of the bargain is to see that Annie recovers and Laura keeps her family together. But they have all reckoned without the power of housewives and the magic of love.

This six part drama was created by Fay Weldon who was also responsible for writing THE CLONING OF JOANNA MAY. The producer for the series was Roger Gregory. Fay Weldon described the series as, "a fantasy of love and revenge". The stories devil versus love context was missed by the audience, who didn't really care, and the series passed away quietly without anybody noticing, Weldon's other more SF series THE CLONING OF JOANNA MAY did better.

CLONING OF JOANNA MAY, THE GUARDIANS, THE

The Guardians was a political thriller set in England of the not too distant future. The future had not turned out to be better than the present. After a general strike, a period of out of control inflation and massive unemployment the old government failed. The old government was replaced by a committee of experts who managed to restore peace order and economic stability. The price of this new order however was a steep one: no more personal freedom. The new order had come about due to the Guardians, a ruthless paramilitary police force which ended up being in control of the government instead of controlled by the government. The people did not like this loss of freedom and soon began to rebel in an attempt to usurp the Guardians. The freedom fighters took on the name of their leader- Quarmby.

The central characters in The Guardians were: Sir Timothy Hobson, the Prime Minister who found that he had a title but little real power to go with it. His son Christopher and his wife Clare Tom Weston was a Guardian officer who found himself being used as a pawn in the power struggle. Dr. Benedict, a psychiatrist who found himself thrust into the role of being one of the leaders of the Quarmby movement. Norman who was Hobson's right hand man. Hobson soon learned that Norman had an agenda of his own and was not to be trusted.

Television has frequently embraced the 'what if?' strand of science fiction to offer ideas about the kind of society the future might hold. The Guardians was such a series. The Guardians was welcomed by most critics as entertaining and thought-provoking, raising questions about the nature of democracy and suggesting, in the end, the idea that self governments better than 'strong' government. The series was fully networked by ITV in 1971, except in Northern Ireland where Ulster Television deemed it 'not appropriate at this time'. They showed The Comedians instead . . . The series was produced by Andrew Brown and the theme was created by Wilfred Josephs. The designers for the series were Colin Pigott, John Emery, Bryan Bagge, Andrew Drummond and Frank Nerini.

A product of the new pessimism of the early 1970s, and reflecting that decade's key concerns - mass unemployment, spiralling inflation, chronic industrial unrest - The Guardians (ITV, 1971) is now largely forgotten, perhaps because relatively few viewers had the patience to see this lengthy, talky drama to its conclusion. For all its faults, however, the series is fascinating for its insights into the political ferment of its times, and for what now appears an unusual and bold attempt to present a drama of moral philosophy for a mainstream television audience.

Although it calls to mind Orwell's 1984, the series is far from the straightforward warning it first appears. Carefully avoiding black and white moralising, The Guardians creates a complex ethical universe in which oppressors and resistance alike are plagued by conscience and self-doubt, and the use of force is never without disturbing consequences, however apparently just the cause.

The figurehead of this repressive Britain is Prime Minister Sir Timothy Hobson (Cyril Luckham). Real power, however, is exercised by the Guardians, the gestapo-style force presided over by the shadowy General and his ruthless representative, Norman (Derek Smith). Hobson's dictatorship is a paternalistic fascism, based on the premise that 'democracy is a form of group suicide'. The calculation behind its mask of benevolence is exemplified by the use of cannabis to keep prison inmates in a state of happy passivity, and by its 'humane' method of capital punishment, in which the condemned are unknowingly sedated then executed by lethal injection, while a bogus ritual - including an actor as hangman - is presented to satisfy public bloodlust.

Opposing this apparatus is an array of competing factions, chief among them the Communists and a non-ideological, deliberately fragmented structure whose members adopt the name Quarmby. Unlikely revolutionaries - one stated objective is to restore the monarchy - Quarmby's strategy is a classical terrorist one: to drive the state to greater and greater repression, forcing it to reveal 'the nature of the beast'. But its members must face the risk that by adopting violence they become a mirror image of their enemy.

Ambitious in scope, if not in budget, The Guardians was marred by uneven performances and a shortage of real action. It was, nevertheless, a serious, thorough and highly intelligent examination of both totalitarianism and the ethics of violent resistance to totalitarianism, which convincingly showed how an apparently gentle man might almost unwittingly become a dictator.

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS

Gulliver returns home after going missing for a long time, but people think he has gone mad when he starts talking about little people and giants. Gulliver must strive to prove his sanity and rescue his wife Mary and son Tom from the fiendish Dr. Bates. But Mary and Tom are in conflict over his strange stories.

This two part series was produced by Duncan Kenworth and was shown on Channel Four. It's massive cast read like a who's who of famous actors from Omar Sharif to Sir John Gielguld, this was a lavish and expensive affair for both Channel Four and their American backers. The series was shown over the Easter bank holiday in 1996 at a 6pm time slot. This stories was based on Jonathan Swifts satirical tale of the same name.

GUYFERD

AKA: SEVEN STAR FIGHTING GOD

AKA: SEVEN STAR FIGHTING GOD GUYFERD

AKA: SHICHI SEI TOU SHIN GUYFERD

While searching for his missing brother, KAZAMA Gou, a young Karate expert, is abducted by a secret organisation, Crown. Crown is working on "Ultimate Trooper" project which, with its Guyborgs(cyborgs with empowered body components) and Mutians(human with mutation caused by extraterrestrial lifeform), aims to conquer the world. Gou escapes right before his Guyborg surgery goes into his brain, and he surprises Crown as his body transforms into Guyferd-- the ultimate combatant who has the power of both Guyborg and Mutian.

After the mysterious disappearance of his older brother Makoto, Kazama Gou returns to Japan from his travels, determined to find him. Kazama Gou is a master of the 'Ken Oh Ryu' (Supreme Fist Strike) style of martial arts and had been on a personal journey of Spiritual and Physical training. Gou soon discovers that Makoto had been abducted by the Criminal Global Syndicate 'Crown'. 'Crown' hopes to create the 'ultimate fighter' and has kidnapped some of the world's strongest and most skilled martial arts masters to use in their experimentations.

Agents of 'Crown' capture Gou and take him to their headquarters. There he meets the beautiful yet cruel Shion Kei, who proceeds to inject him with a mutant organism called the 'Farra Parasite'. This organism begins to transform him into one of their monstrous creations. Gou collapses from the experience and later is awoken by 'Crown's' Supreme Leader - Vicross.

Vicross tells Gou that Makoto was also injected with the 'Farra Parasite' and transformed into a 'Metal-Ferd', however he had somehow escaped the base weeks earlier.

Gou later meets with Crown Scientist - Jyoishi Takeo who wants to rebel against the organization. Together they attempt to escape Crown's base but are confronted by Vicross' 'Mutiant' super soldier, Jacks. At first Gou is unable to stand up to the superior Jacks but is able to draw on his own personal strength and spirit to unleash more power transforming him further into 'Guyferd'.

Using his new 'Guyferd' form and incorporating his own martial arts skills, he defeats Jacks and vows to fight not to prove himself but rather to protect all those he loves. Together with Makoto's friends Rei and Ryu Kujyo, who are also looking for Makoto, they battle the forces of 'Crown' who want Guyferd to serve their goals.

While Toei's TV titles are attempting to breaking the tradition, "Guyferd" has proved the good side of simple, old-fashioned story by well-planned plot and character development. Featured are also more physical actions than any others, as the content requires no supporting weapons or mecha, and the supporting cast are the professional martial artists. The series has concluded successfully.

Characters

Who is Guyferd

When Kazama Gou was kidnapped by agents of the 'Crown' organization, he was infected with the 'Ferra Parasite' which gave him incredible and monstrous powers. In addition, Gou also had most of his organic tissue muscle replaced with artificial (cyborg) parts. He is considered along with Death-Ferd one of the most powerful of 'Crown's' super fighters (classified as 'Metal-Ferds').

Kazama Gou was a master in the 'Ken Oh Ryu' (Supreme Fist Strike) fighting style which drew upon and utilized the five elemental 'energies' (Fire, Water, Earth, Nature and Metal) as well as the two ethereal elemental energies (air & star/cosmic) in order to draw strength.

These energies can be used to perform a host of 'waza' (skills) that Gou as Guyferd can use to fight opponents.

These seven skills were called collectively as the 'Oki Shichi Sei Ha' (Seven Supreme Spiritual Attacks). These skills included:

'Fukaranbu' (Air Flower Dance) - Utilizing the energy of Nature, Guyferd would use this air kick attack to hit an opponent with repeated blows.

'Retka Geki' (Blazing Hit) - Utilizing the energy of Fire, Guyferd would hit an opponent with rapid fist thrusts and then finish with a smashing blow with his right fist.

'Jirai Shin' (Ground Thunder Shock) - Utilizing the energy of Earth, Guyferd would use super speed to deliver this crushing pile driver attack.

'Bakurai Ha' (Exploding Thunder Attack) - Utilizing the energy of Metal, Guyferd would ride the air currents to deliver this flying air kick against his opponents.

'Sai Geki Shu' (Smashing Attack Kick) - Utilizing the energy of Water, Guyferd would use this flying kick to deliver a devastating blow to his opponents.

'Geki Ryu Shu' (Thrusting Dragon Attack) - Utilizing the energy of Air, Guyferd would deliver this destructive 'cross' hand chop attack against his enemies.

'Kyoku Sei Ken' (Ultimate Star Fist) - Utilizing Cosmic/Star energy, Guyferd can deliver this, his most destructive attack. Would save this as his finishing blow.

Guyferd's main rival was the mysterious dark figure called 'Death-Ferd'. Death-Ferd is in actuality Kazama Gou's kidnapped brother Makoto who was also infused with the 'Ferra Parasite' which transformed him into the ultimate fighting machine.

Makoto was also a master of the 'Ken Oh Ryu' style of fighting and in fact was the only one who was trained in and knew its truest form.

As Death-Ferd, Makoto could also perform and use the 'Oki Shichi Sei Ha' (Seven Supreme Spiritual Attacks) and also had a number of other special attacks unique to himself.

Who Are The 'Crown':

Masquerading as a legitimate scientific research corporation, 'Crown' is in reality a global crime syndicate dedicated to ruling the world through the use of genetically mutated superhuman fighters. 'Crown's' perverted technology includes the following:

'Guy-Borgs' - Kidnapping various skilled martial artists from around the world, 'Crown' used their advanced technology to 'remold' these fighters into their own personal super soldiers. 'Guy-Borgs' had super strength and incredible resilience due in part to the artificial and genetically enhanced muscle structure that 'Crown' used to replace their normal human tissue.

'The Farra Parasite' - Discovered by Crown scientist/archeologist, Zodiac in South America, this green slime-like substance had miraculous and unearthly biological properties. The Farra substance was a parasitic organism that would feed off of the energies supplied by its host and would in return infuse its host with extraordinary powers.

'Mutants' - Infused with the 'Farra Parasite', these humans would transform into inhuman fighters with monstrous abilities. The transformations were irreversible.

'Crown' is headed by the mysterious crime lord Vicross. Vicross was a brilliant criminal mastermind. A gifted martial artist in his own right, he was a master of the 'Byakko' style of fighting (Tiger Style).

Other notable members included:

Shion Kei 'Crown's' Mutiant Leader. As beautiful as she is sadistic. A brilliant strategist and scientist, she was Vicross' second-in-command. Was later transformed into a half 'Guy-Borg', Metal-Shion.

Metal Master - 'Crown' agent who usurped control of the organization from Vicross. Was later transformed into the monstrous Minos, whose 'Blues Attack' can crush armored tanks.

Zodiac - 'Crown's' chief scientist. Discovered the 'Ferra Parasite' in South America. In the later half of the series, Zodiac and 'Crown' unearths the Ancient Scientific Citadel called 'Gaea Net' and attempts to use its ancient technology to cause cataclysmic disasters around the world thus heralding the mass infestation of the entire world with the 'Ferra Parasite'

Trivia

Was probably heavily influenced by two cult manga/anime creations:

'Hokuto No Ken' (Fist of the North Star; Shonen Jump; 1983) - Bronson and Hara Tetsuo's landmark manga detailing the adventures of a lone martial artist's journey to save his fiancée from the clutches of a vicious tyrant. Set amidst the devastated post-apocalyptic landscape of 199X, the main protagonist was a master of a unique form of martial arts which would utilize immense amounts of 'Toki' (Life Force Energy) and redirect it to cause physical damage against opponents, often in very destructive and explosive ways.

'Kyoshoku Soko Guyver' (Bio-Booster Guyver; Shonen Captain; 1985) - Takaya Yoshiki's visually stunning and inventive 'Kamen Rider' tribute which told the story of high school student Fukamachi Sho's unfortunate encounter with the mysterious and highly influential organization 'Cronos' and their alien 'Bio-Booster' technology, which transformed him into the organic (slightly insectoid) fighting machine, code-named 'Guyver' Guyver and Guyferd besides looking very much alike and having very similar sounding names also share similarities in their origin stories. The Chronos organization is also very similar to the Crown group in that both have far reaching political and social ties across the globe while hiding their true motives and aspirations.

Fighting game innovator CAPCOM's first and only foray into the realm of Tokusatsu TV.

Don't underestimate petite actress Asuka Shimizu for she is a formidable martial artist who is a black belt in the Kempo-Karate style of 'Ho Ryu In Shin Ken'. She also starred in the 'Another Heaven' (Asahi TV; 2000). Tokusatsu fans may also recognize Asuka as Shidou Mika/Sazer Mithras in the popular series 'Cho Seishin Gransazer' (TV Tokyo/Toho; 2004).

Takeda Masako portrayed another equally sinister villainess, Beast Master Luna in the Tokusatsu series 'Dennou Keisatsu Cyber Cop' (Nihon TV; 1988).

Suit Actor 'Shaboratenmei' also portrayed the villainous Hudora in 'Ultraman Tiga: Final Odyssey' (Shochiku/Tsuburaya; 2000).

HALFWAY ACROSS THE GALAXY AND TURN LEFT

The series tells the tale of an alien family from the planet Zyrگون, who are forced to flee their home. They take refuge on Earth. In order to get to Earth from Zyrگون one must journey halfway across the galaxy and turn left (which is where the book and the series get their title!). On Earth they settle in Bellwood, Australia where they have trouble fitting in and keeping their extra terrestrial origin secret.

After arriving on Earth, the family adopts new names. Their new surname being Jackson, no surname was ever given for them on Zyrگون. The family consists of Mother and Father who become Renee and Mortimer and their three children: X / Charlotte, their 13-year-old daughter. Dovia / Estrella, their 16-year-old daughter and Quark / George their 11-year old-son.

Unlike families on Earth which are run by the parents, the Jackson family is organised by X, who trained to become the family organiser. This turns out to be a good thing since both parents are irresponsible fools. X decides that the family should flee Zyrگون after her father is caught having tampered with the computers, which cause him to win the lottery repeatedly. After fleeing the planet X and her family become the targets of the Chief, the head of the Zyrگون security forces. The Chief does not like having been made a fool of by X and her father and has made it his priority to bring them both back to justice.

Upon arriving on Earth X decides that they must fit in as well as possible. The family makes up the story of having come from Peru. Mother and Father are forced to seek gainful employment and the kids enrol themselves in school. This despite the fact that they are all far better educated than their teachers in many areas X makes friends with her neighbours Jenny Roland and her brother Colin, both of whom learn of the family's secret.

While on Earth the family has to deal with fitting in which they eventually manage to do in a fashion. Their visitors from back home. Aunt Hecla and family friend Lox, however have a much harder time adapting and their actions must be covered up by the rest of the family. They also live in fear of being tracked down by the Chief and brought home to justice, a threat they believe they have overcome in the 12th episode.

Any series that can come up with a title like that has to have something going for it, and this comedy adventure from Australia proved a summer hit with young fans in 1994. Based on a novel by children's writer Robert Klein, the series explored several role reversals. The youngest daughter, X, is the leader and organiser, the children expect abidance for their parents, dad does the cooking and mum is the bread winner. The series was a German/Australian co-production.

The first 12 episodes of the series more or less adapt the novel Halfway Across the Galaxy and Turn Left, in a serialised format with each episode leading into the next. However the novel starts off with the family already on Earth and does not feature the chief. Most of the remaining 16 episodes are more episodic, until the final few featuring a return trip to Zyrگون and the final defeat of the chief. The executive producer for the show was Terry Ohlsson and produced by Jan Marnell.

The story was made into a television series in 1991-1992. It was very popular in Australia and Europe and there are many fansites. The production company behind the series, Crawford Productions, are accessing their catalogue, and although there are no concrete plans as of now, they have stated that they hope the series can be released on DVD within the next year or so. Several episodes have been released on VHS in the UK, and can often be found for sale on eBay.

The TV-show had 28 episodes, split into 2 story arcs. The first story arc stayed close to the novel, the second arc had new stories written, some of which would end up incorporated into the sequel novel, Turn Right for Zyrگون.

The entire series was filmed in Melbourne, Australia. Zyrگون, and the family home interior were shot on the Crawford Productions sound-stage. The town of Bellwood was shot in Williamstown. The family home exterior is located in Surrey Hills. The props for the space raft and other sets were kept in the Crawford Productions lot for a couple of years following production, however, they were eventually dismantled and destroyed.

1 - 1 DON'T FORGET TO TURN LEFT

Zyrgon is a cold, ice-bound planet halfway across the galaxy. That's where X is a Family Organizer. She's only eleven - but she's in charge of her family of five. FATHER is a lovable rogue, devoted to gambling. MOTHER'S a dizzily talented Wear Designer. DOVIS is X's older sister, about seventeen, and stunningly beautiful. QWRK is eight, and a genius.

X is such a good organizer, she wins the coveted Pearlrock Logotype. She returns home - to disaster. FATHER has been discovered cheating in the government lottery - after winning it twenty-seven times in a row. The fearsome Law Enforcer-in-CHIEF comes to arrest him. X promises to see justice is done. But X loves her father too much to let him go into detention.

Determined to keep the Family together, she decides on exile. X gets directions from LOX, a gorgeous but empty-headed space shuttle pilot she adores from afar. They travel halfway across the galaxy - and turn left.

Towards Earth - and Bellwood. That's where JENNY ROLAND lives. X is meticulously organized. JENNY loves mess. X keeps a tight hold on her emotions. JENNY lets hers hang out. Especially since the recent turmoil in her family, which resulted in her dad leaving - and her mum being left with JENNY, her cynical brother COLIN, and her two bratty kid brothers. In space, X instructs her family to do nothing that might give them away in exile.

1 - 2 EXILES ON RENMARK STREET

In a paddock on Earth, X shepherds her family off the spacecraft. Then utilizing her special powers, she creates an airpocket - and hides the raft inside. Having seen a strange light, JENNY arrives at full tilt. She finds an odd looking family - but no sign of the light. X insists they saw nothing. She leads her family away towards Bellwood, and leaves JENNY wondering. The Family are amazed by their first impressions - but X is more concerned with keeping their identity secret in this strange land.

Their first job is to find a house. They secure one through XAVIER YOSHIDA, a real estate agent.

X - against her better judgement - leaves FATHER to buy food, while she and QWRK go to purchase furnishings and home appliances. When they get home, the furniture's already arrived. And the delivery men are staring at the way MOTHER'S filled the house to the ceiling with flowers, while DOVIS has cloned into a cat. X is furious but worse is to come as FATHER returns home in a shiny, red specially modified GTS Monaro. Bought with money obtained by kinetics from currency-producing machines all over town!

X takes the keys - from now on FATHER must ask permission to use the car - and orders him to burn the currency he obtained from the Automatic Teller facilities. They're in a strange new place, with no one to turn to. If they're going to survive, they have to live perfectly ordinary lives. Nothing less we do.

Meanwhile, the CHIEF has cloned into a Professor to try and discover the Family's whereabouts from Aunt Hecla. After an afternoon of Hecla's singing and rocktails without gaining any information, the CHIEF loses his temper and clones back into himself, threatening retribution.

1 - 3 NEXT ITEM ON THE SCHEDULE - SCHOOL

While at her ranch on the Second Moon, Aunt Hecla is being threatened by the Chief to reveal the family whereabouts...

On Earth, X insists they choose new names for their stay on Earth. Henceforth, FATHER will be known as Mortimer, MOTHER as Renee, DOVIS as Astrella, and QWRK as George. X has to choose a new name for herself. She gets it from the recipe Father's cooking. Apple ... Charlotte.

Sending MOTHER to look for a job - for she's always been the Family breadwinner - X has FATHER drive her and the others in search of a school. If they're going to live perfectly normal lives, that's their next priority. But it's going to be hard - especially arriving in a superpowered car at the same school JENNY attends, and with two of the pupils, MICHELLE and DALLAS already dubbing the family "weirdos" - on first appearances.

MISS BREWSTER, the principal, is intrigued by the Family - and happy for them to attend her school, but is left flabbergasted, when she is kissed by FATHER, mimicking a local custom he has witnessed.

For the first time in her life, X finds her authority as an organizer ignored. For the first time she begins to realize things are different on Earth. Children here don't run families. Or worry about them. They leave all that to their parents. X struggles to come to terms with Earthly practice. But as X clings to the past, she doesn't realize how well the rest of the Family are adapting. They're not out to hide their powers - but capitalize on them.

AUNT HECLA escapes the CHIEF and heads for Earth to help her favourite niece, X. ZEPPY, her favourite zeppolope accompanies her.

But the CHIEF is determined to catch them. JADY has cloned into a pretty Kiosk Attendant to meet X's friend, LOX. She also nearly locks onto DOVIS'S kinetic beam bringing material to Earth for Mother to impress Andrea, owner of Bellwood's leading boutique. The family's elusiveness is making the chief angry, they better watch out.

1 - 4 FIRST DAY AT SCHOOL

MOTHER plans to wow the entire fashion world with garments of Zyrgonese pearlock. FATHER'S had all his gambling instincts reawakened - and discovers the TAB. But X is too busy to notice. It's her first day at school. As they set off, X gives the others strict instructions. It may be difficult but they must act normal.

QWRK'S introduced to his prep grade - and set the humiliating task of telling the time. DOVIS is introduced to a senior class - and instantly wins their hearts with her beauty. X joins MISS HARROW'S maths class - and immediately runs into trouble. She gets on the wrong side of MICHELLE, the class bully, and her best friend, DALLAS. She gets all her algebraic calculations right, but uses the wrong - that is, Zyrgonese - method. And when MISS HARROW asks about where she's from, X parrots out the Family cover story about coming from Peru, like a walking encyclopedia! MISS HARROW becomes suspicious. MICHELLE and DALLAS think she's a know-all. But JENNY'S in the class, too. She's attracted to X. Already thinking they could be friends.

Like X, QWRK'S had an exhausting day, singing inane songs about bananas. But DOVIS takes immediately to school-life on Earth. She's constantly surrounded by adoring admirers, who want to sit with her, talk with her - anything! DOVIS adds to X's anxiety by performing a Zyrgonese dance for her new friends, accompanied by music she has made to play through the school's P.A. system.

Meanwhile, Hecla has reached Yorp's Fuelstop on her way to Earth to help X.

While back at Zyrgon, Jady in the guise of a Shuttle Kiosk attendant is gaining Lox's confidence in order to help Chief in his quest to get X.

1 - 5 HOMESICKNESS

When X, QWRK and DOVIS return home from their first day at school, they find MOTHER and FATHER missing. At first they fear that they have been captured by the Chief. But when Mother comes home, X finds what they've been doing. FATHER, gambling. MOTHER showing off her talents - with exotic Zyrgonese fabrics. Both in defiance of X's strict orders.

It's too much for X. The pressures of their exile and her responsibilities as Organizer take their toll. Her family's never heard X so emotional.

X shuts them out - and turns to the one who's always been there. The one she adores. She beams LOX, back on Zyrgon.

X ticks her family off. FATHER will stay at home and tend to the kitchen. MOTHER will lead an ordinary working life. And DOVIS, QWRK and she will go to school as usual - and be perfectly normal! It's not that easy. Not even for X. The more she tries to be perfectly normal, the more DALLAS and MICHELLE thinks she's a weirdo. QWRK doesn't help, when he's asked for a list of ten words starting with "A" - and comes up with "autochthonism" and "antonomasia". DOVIS is busy delighting in her new-found friends to worry - so it's left, as always, to X to brood.

MISS BREWSTER insists on seeing MOTHER and FATHER because of Qwrk's precocious intellect. X commands the Family to learn a cover story, but, despite her despair at their inattention, it is she who almost gives the game away.

And finally, to make the worst mistake of all - and invite DALLAS and MICHELLE back to the house - to prove they're quite normal. JENNY comes with them. Like DALLAS and MICHELLE, she's sensed there's something different about X. But where the others feel threatened, Jenny's on X's side. If X is hiding something, JENNY is willing to help her.

But it is not only X and her classmates making for the Jackson home - HECLA too is on her way!

1 - 6 A DAY AT THE BEACH

X arrives home accompanied by MICHELLE, DALLAS and JENNY, unprepared for what awaits her. Mother's been homesick. And despite X's strict instructions, she's beamed even more contraband items from Zyrgon. The kitchen has a glass flower ornament, while in the lounge stands Father's monstrous Klickscore Trophy, that whizzes and ticks, with all kinds of readouts. X desperately tries to explain away all of this to the others. She nearly succeeds, propelling them out of the house - but the final shock awaits.

HECLA is on the doorstep. She bullied their whereabouts out of Lox and came halfway across the galaxy to be with the Family. She grabs hold of MICHELLE. Inspects her closely. Great thundering zelpths! What funny looking children! MICHELLE and DALLAS - and JENNY run for their lives. And X knows, hers will never be the same...

Despite X's resistance, HECLA moves in, with ZEPPY, her pet zeppolope. When X learns that her aunt has left her spacecraft in public view in the park, she goes to hide it. But finds it's been mistaken for playground equipment by a gang of young boys. She chases two of them, who think the rudder's a bat. She catches them outside their house - which is also where Jenny and Colin live. ANDREW and SHANE are their younger brothers. On being confronted by COLIN, X pretends the bat's nothing special. His brothers are welcome to it. But her sudden arrival only confirms JENNY'S earlier thoughts. There's something about X that's mysterious. Special. JENNY wants to know more...

When JENNY invites X's family to go on a picnic to the beach, X discovers some of the pleasures enjoyed by children on Earth.

While MOTHER resents HECLA'S influence on the family, X worries she will betray them as alien - as she nearly does when XAVIER YOSHIDA, the real estate agent, arrives with the lease. The solution is Hecla to go back to Zyrgon. With MOTHER'S assistance, X beams LOX to arrange some kind of transport for Hecla's return - only to hear the shattering news that he's betrothed. To Jady - the gorgeous girl who runs the Space Shuttle Kiosk.

1 - 7 A VISITOR FROM ANOTHER PLANET

HECLA believes that X is taking her organizing duties far too seriously. She should relax and enjoy her new planet, but X feels she must involve herself in everything. For example, diverting MISS BREWSTER'S attention from QWRK'S intelligence. He's always been hopeless at music. Over QWRK'S protests, X decides he'll learn the violin. X is determined to keep their cover intact - but strangely, increasingly, it's not the others who create the danger, but X herself. When MICHELLE and DALLAS tease her with taunts about her weird family, X loses her cool. Her thought-power switches to retribution mode - making DALLAS and MICHELLE believe their hair has changed, which has them creating a disturbance in class.

X is called to the Principal's office. She fears the worst that her secret has been discovered. To her surprise, MISS BREWSTER shows X - QWRK playing a difficult violin concerto at his first lesson!

MISS BREWSTER and MR. HOHENHAUS have found a prodigy. X hasn't time to take her anger out on QWRK - she's wanted for the Inter-house Swimming Team Selections trials. To everyone's amazement, X beats MICHELLE in the trial - and is applauded for the first time in her life.

It's a strange feeling - but not its strange as visiting Jenny's house. All X's instincts as an Organizer recoil at the sight of the chaotic, messy Roland house. But her biggest trial is Jenny's room. For JENNY wants X to be her best friend. X feels weak all over. She's not prepared for this sort of closeness. All her doubts and fears climax in a gigantic sneeze. MRS. ROLAND decides it's the flu, and hurries her home.

The Family finds it hard to believe that X could be ill. She wouldn't allow herself to get sick. They look on in consternation - X tells them they'll have to get along without her while she goes to bed to recover from this Earthly ailment. HECLA repeats her advice. You're making yourself ill with your constant anxiety.

Meanwhile, the Chief is getting closer, having just left Yorp's fuelstop and he vows he is going to get X.

1 - 8 X IS NOT HERSELF

X tries to maintain control of her family - but it's difficult, when your head throbs, and you're struck in bed with the flu. X does her best. She teases - for rebellions in the air. The Family are loving -the new please-yourself lifestyles. And HECLA is saying how free she feels on Earth. Irresponsibility. Lack of self-control. She'll be a bad influence on FATHER.

Without X's restraining influence, DOVIS gets into trouble at school when she releases all the rabbits from the biology laboratory. QWRK continues to impress MR. HOHENHAUS.

All these problems pale into insignificance however when JENNY comes to visit X and tells her she's seen somebody from Peru. Her description fits the Chief exactly. X asks JENNY to do her a huge favour. She wants JENNY to let herself be seen by the CHIEF wearing her Pearlrock Logotype and then tell him that X and her Family have left. But the CHIEF does not believe JENNY and follows her to the Jackson home.

Her suspicions stirred by seeing Jenny wearing X's pearlrock logotype, HECLA returns home. She guesses that X's jumpiness cannot be explained by even a bad case of flu and realizes the truth. X decides the only thing she can do to protect her family is to give herself up to the CHIEF.

The CHIEF is delighted to have X do just this and gloatingly takes her back to Zyrgon in his pursuit raft. However, it is not X he has captured but HECLA simulated into X.

1 - 9 THE JACKSON MUTINY

9: "THE JACKSON MUTINY"

While the Chief is enjoying his triumphant welcome back in Zyrgon, having delivered the criminal X to the Authoritarians, on Earth X is waking from her exhausted sleep caused by a severe viral attack. Only MOTHER is in, the rest of the family are out and about, enjoying themselves.

X finds MOTHER over the moon, having been offered a half-share in the design boutique where she works. X realizes with a shock that things have run out of control during her illness.

X lays down the law to her family, but they fight back. FATHER wants to open a restaurant, QWRK is determined to be the best violinist on Earth, DOVIS is stepping out with DAVID CARRUTHERS. X retires to her room to regroup.

COLIN goes to the Jackson house to return the runaway ZEPPY and is bewitched by the vision of the girl he knows as Charlotte bathed in luminescent thoughtbeams as she communicates with LOX.

X has intercepted LOX'S thoughtbeam to Mother and discovers he believes her to be in the Chief's Detention Centre. X now realizes why HECLA is missing - her aunt has simulated into her and gave herself up as X to the Chief. X is appalled. HECLA, her greatest rival in organizing, has put her eternally in her debt.

X instructs her family they must leave for Zyrgon, otherwise HECLA will be punished in her stead.

1 - 10 THE TURNING POINT

LOX is caught trying to steal X's records and is thrown into a cell with X, that is, HECLA simulated as X. LOX is aware that it can't really be X because he has spoken to her on Earth by thoughtbeam. The CHIEF discovers X is HECLA and decides to throw both LOX and HECLA into the boiling lava.

Meanwhile on Earth, X resumes control. She orders DOVIS and QWRK to school for one last day. When it's over they will come straight home, clean up and board the raft. There will be no argument. MOTHER may have a brief, final day, at work. They will pick up FATHER later from his foolish restaurant. Sadly, obediently, the Family do as they are told. They must return to save HECLA. X sets off to school, meeting JENNY on the way. Full of forgiveness - and an invitation to go iceskating - and the surprising news that COLIN wants to come too.

X tells JENNY she can't go - she won't be here tomorrow. JENNY is devastated at the news. More than anything, X realizes she wants to be Jenny's best friend. But it's too late, and too much divides them. There's no turning back. She doesn't explain. JENNY can't understand. Her hurt and anger spills over. X lines up for the fifty metres Inter-House Swimming Carnival. As the race starts, she hears Hecla urging her on, willing her to win. She wins, beating MICHELLE and gets overwhelming applause, and a fine medal. It's the high point of her stay on Earth. X struggles with her emotions - and insists it changes. nothing. They're still leaving.

The Family sadly farewell their house. The situation is too poignant for words. They leave, to walk to the restaurant, and FATHER. On the way, they're met by COLIN and JENNY. COLIN'S finally conquered his cynicism - and told JENNY about the beam. JENNY has guessed the truth - and come to plead with X to stay. X admits the truth. She wishes she could get out of it, and just be herself. But she can't. X and JENNY will be friends always - but half a galaxy away.

1 - 11 HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS

JADY tricks HECLA and LOX by allowing them to escape to the Family apartment where the CHIEF is waiting to push them to their death down the inclinor shaft into the boiling lava but they are saved by YORP who leads the growing movement of dissidents on Zyrgon.

At his restaurant, FATHER'S engrossed in cooking. He insists they can't leave till he's served a meal. X hurries everyone through their delicious meal. They dine sadly, miserably, to the mournful music of QWRK'S violin.

Back at Jenny's, she and COLIN are miserable too. They know the truth now. Losing a friend hurts - no matter where she's from. MRS. ROLAND tries to comfort JENNY. To her surprise, she finds her daughter stronger and wiser when it comes to losing someone.

Meanwhile FATHER enters with a cake for X. Fifty candles, one for each metre X swam. X is touched by her family's love but before she can blow out the candles they flicker and die. It's LOX trying to get through on a thoughtbeam. He tells them that he and Hecla have been saved from the lava, then drops his bombshell: the CHIEF told him that X never won the Scholarship fair and square - but cheated. X is flabbergasted. So is the rest of the family - all except FATHER. He admits he was the one who changed X's marks. He couldn't bear to see her fail.

The CHIEF arrives on Earth. He's traced the rudder from Hecla's spacecraft to Jenny's room. He takes Jenny to help him find the whereabouts of the Family's raft.

X struggles to cope with the knowledge of her twin failure. She's no good as an organizer - because she was never meant to be one. She feels stupid and miserable - but to FATHER'S credit, he knows he's the guilty one. He convinces X at last, they can stay. And slowly, X sees he's right. The burden is lifted. They can go to the paddock, not to leave - but to load the spacecraft with everything that came from Zyrgon and send the raft off into space to avoid detection - and stay.

The Family hurries off to the paddock - only to be met by the CHIEF. He takes FATHER prisoner. X trades her freedom for JENNY. With his prisoners aboard, the CHIEF exults - but finds he is pursued by the Family, COLIN and JENNY in Jenny's dad's old boat. An awesome chase conducted at molecular level results in the raft being brought down. X and FATHER are saved - but the CHIEF is gone.

1 - 12 X - THE UNKNOWN FACTOR

The Family, together with JENNY and COLIN return the boat to Jenny's house.

MOTHER reminds everyone they're still in danger. The CHIEF could strike back at any time. He could clone into any one to do so. But the main thing is they're staying. X is determined about that. She learnt the lesson her family taught her. If you're different, there's no point in hiding it in trying to be normal. The only thing to be is yourself. They'll stop running - but they'll stick together. And when the CHIEF comes - as he will - they'll fight.

So X and JENNY, DOVIS and QWRK head off for school. COLIN'S sorry he has his own school to go to - he's grown fond of X in the last few days. MOTHER goes to work, alert and vigilant and FATHER returns to his restaurant. As we start to suspect the CHIEF has cloned into someone entirely unexpected - MICHELLE - whose family has just moved next door to the Jackson's.

MICHELLE [Chief] invites X down to the pool, for a grudge match, to settle once and for all who's the best. X accepts, deciding it's time to put Michelle in her place. As they head for the pool, DALLAS wants to come too. MICHELLE lingers and argues - and shuts the squealing DALLAS into a locker. On her release, JENNY realizes what's happened. She rushes to the pool, warning DOVIS and QWRK.

Locked in the sporting complex, X fights for her existence as her earthly nemesis clones back to her galactic one. X's nightmare starts to happen in reality. The Chief is determined that X will go back to Zyrgon... as a Roobot!

When JENNY, DOVIS and QWRK break into the sporting complex, a solitary ROOBOT hops around. And X lies exhausted, but victorious.

At the paddock, the Family concentrate - and send the raft to the dark side of the Second Moon. But before they head for home to get back to normal, X takes COLIN and JENNY fishing in the boat, flying over Bellwood ostentatiously, recklessly. And MICHELLE sees them...

1 - 13 FUN IS DANGEROUS

The exhilaration of her victory over the Chief leads to a new recklessness in X. She resigns her position as Family Organizer and informs her parents and siblings that from now on her life is dedicated to fun. But no sooner does X decide to devote her life to good times, than things start getting confusingly serious.

When Michelle is caught peering in the Jacksons' window, X, Jenny and Colin take the Roobot (the Chief) to the Rolands' house and hide him in their shed. Colin gives her some patronising tips about tactics and she wins an annual race between the boys and the girls defeating her smug adviser in the process. X doesn't understand why Colin is miffed, so Jenny gives her a crash course in the subtleties of the male ego.

Things go from confusing to worse when Miss Harrow takes X to a Sports Clinic for a series of fitness and aptitude tests. X allows a blood sample to be taken before she and Jenny realize - too late - that her blood will prove conclusively she's an alien. After Miss Harrows media class discusses the many grisly fates that could befall aliens visiting Earth, X decides urgent action is required. She coerces Father into breaking into the Sports Clinic and replacing her blood with that of a human. Colin donates his blood for the purpose - greater love hath no budding chauvinist. The minor crime is accomplished without incident. Colin apologizes to X for his reaction to her win, and the two run into the darkness together, hand in hand. It's a night filled with relief and budding romance.

1 - 14 QWRK LANDS ON HIS FEET

After wistfully watching other boys playing games of football and skateboarding with their friends, QWRK asks DOVIS'S advice on making friends. QWRK follows his sister's recommendations by learning to skateboard in his own way so he can be mates with the skateboarders. He develops a formula which optimizes their zenith potential.

QWRK'S new pastime horrifies MR. HOHENHAUS and alarms MISS BLOOM sufficiently for her to call MOTHER and FATHER into her office for a serious chat. It appears QWRK has adopted the skateboarders' lingo and has accused his teacher, MISS PAYNE, of having a "filthy mind".

Following MISS BLOOM'S advice, MOTHER and FATHER take a firm stand with George, trying their best to behave like Earthly parents. Keeping X right out of the situation, MOTHER and FATHER forbid QWRK from associating with the hooligans, threatening a surprise punishment if he disobeys.

When QWRK falls off the skateboard, he thinks it is his punishment. He then decides to comply with his parents ruling, after one more meeting with the skateboarders, where his formula wins him a fan in skateboarder, BINDY LIPTRAP, and acceptance with the skateboarding gang.

1 - 15 HEARING A DIFFERENT DRUMMER

When Lox thoughtbeams from Yorp's office, needing somewhere to hide, X reluctantly agrees to allow him to stay with them on Earth. Their intergalactic communication causes havoc with the electric appliances in the Froggatt household, which only adds to the anger Froggatt already feels towards his neighbours.

The Roobot breaks loose from the Rolands' shed, nearly destroying their house, Father and Colin finally trap it in a net with Father given the task of destroying it.

David Carruthers takes Davis to visit a famous ballet teacher, Emilia Flint. The woman is quite entranced with her dancing, but knows this young girl has a secret. The wise teacher instructs her to find herself first before seeking tuition - only then will she be a great performer. This advice makes Dovia question the concepts of honesty and truth in her relationship with David but it does not stop her discovering the joys of young love with the infatuated young man, but becomes upset when he tries to kiss her. As kissing is unknown on Zyrgon, Jenny counsels on its benefits.

The arrival of the silver clad spaceman, Lox, who immediately charms Jenny adds to X's anxiety... and Froggatt's suspicions.

If they only knew... that Father has been unable to destroy the Roobot and has hidden it in his wardrobe.

1 - 16 THE ROOT OF ALL EVIL

The Jackson family are short of money. When this fact becomes known to their next door neighbours, together with the strange appearance of Lox, Froggatt, with the help of Michelle and Dallas, decides to do some investigating.

A strange parcel from Zyrgon finds Qwrk. Inside it is a money tree. Just what he needs when he is feeling the lack of cash. The plant soon brings fruit and Qwrk orders up big.

Unbeknownst to the rest of the family, Father has not destroyed the Roobot but is keeping him in his wardrobe. On his surveillance visit to the Jackson's, Froggatt hears the noise of the trapped Roobot. He concludes that what with the delivery of expensive packages, the Jackson's are responsible for a recent Bellwood robbery and have the courier imprisoned in the wardrobe.

Complicated by David trying to get Dovia to forgive him for his kiss and Michelle finding the money tree, Qwrk's money making venture comes to a sticky end when the money tree dies and Froggatt calls the police.

1 - 17 STRANGE ENCOUNTERS

A visit from Michelle's disreputable Cousin Mick results in X and Qwrk being held hostage at the supposedly haunted Clayton House to produce a money tree like Michelle discovered in Qwrk's bedroom.

Lox, accompanied by Colin and Jenny, go to the rescue. While Colin and Jenny lead Mick and his equally crooked accomplice, Ace, on a merry chase around the old house, Lox is untying X and Qwrk. Unbeknownst to the rest of the household, Father enters the scene with the Roobot and thoroughly scares the crooks into locking themselves into the library.

Using his powers, Qwrk makes the painting in the library come alive much to the terror of the rooms occupants, who quickly flee the premises, promising to lead a strictly legal existence.

X's only problem now is to destroy the bud from the money tree in Michelle's possession. With the help of her family, she makes the note explode leaving the Froggatts stunned and shell-shocked.

And Father... he safely makes it back home, after locking the Roobot in his restaurant storeroom, without any of the family knowing about his presence at Clayton Hall or the Roobot still existing.

1 - 18 UNDERSTANDING THE MATERIAL WORLD

Mother is very excited. she has been asked to exhibit her latest creations for three buyers from a Parisian couture house. Due to an unfortunate accident caused by Lox, the garments are destroyed.

At the last moment, X allows Mother and Dovia to kinetize some Zyrgonese material down to make replacements. But the models refuse to wear the garments, because the material is so odd.

Finally Lox and Dovia model the creations to mad acclaim from the Parisians.

Unbeknownst to anybody, Qwrk has entered an astro-physics competition and wins it. X insists that Father go to the symposium to deliver the winning theory as an eight year old genius debating advanced physics would certainly give the game away.

Fathers efforts prove disastrous in front of the television audience and it is only Qwrk's quick thinking that saves the day.

After the triumph of the fashion show, everybody is appalled to learn that Mother has accepted the offer to become a designer - in Paris.

1 - 19 WELCOME TO THE HUMAN RACE

X, Father, Qwrk and Dovis are shocked and saddened by the news that Mother will soon be departing for Paris. Their feelings of loss and regret affect them differently. As they try to absorb and understand these unwelcome emotions, we feel they are finally aware of what Earthly love can mean. Being as shallow as a puddle, Lox is plagued with no such problems. His biggest worry is whether to become a cowboy or a model. He settles on the former, and with a bright new shirt - courtesy of Mother.

Father's sadness about Mother's impending departure leads to carelessness. The Roobot, locked in the restaurant storeroom gains strength from the sugary stores to transform itself back into the Chief. The Chief resumes his search for Father and X, terrifying Shane and Andrew Roland in the process. Shane and Andrew raise the alarm, and when the Chief arrives at the Jackson House, they're waiting for him.

Meanwhile, next door, Clive Froggatt, with Michelle's assistance, has set up surveillance on his strange neighbours. Disgusted, Mrs. Froggatt orders her daughter to sit down to dinner and respect their privacy. This proves rather difficult, especially since every electrical appliance in the Froggatt house goes suddenly haywire, and the Jacksons' house is reverberating with pulsating lights and loud thumps.

A titanic struggle is underway between the Jacksons and the Chief. With Lox's help, they finally overpower him and shove him into the Klickscore trophy. Then they kinetize him into space, and the Klickscore trophy disappears to hurtle through the galactic waste. Only then do the Jackson's realize that the chief has crackle-beamed Mother. They kneel over her lifeless body miserably. Then Father mentions the word "Paris" and she awakes. She's all right! But alas, she's still leaving.

When Miss Bloom warns the school against a potentially dangerous man fitting the Chief's description, Michelle informs Miss Harrow that such a man was at the Jackson's wild party the previous evening. When confronted, X advises that he has definitely left the country and is now a long way away. Little does her teacher know how far.

1 - 20 WE'RE THEM NOW

20: "WE'RE THEM NOW"

Mother's imminent departure casts a gloomy shadow over the Jackson family. Father is particularly miserable, and his sad spaniel eyes stir strange feelings in Mother - feelings like guilt and apprehension. They're entirely new to her, and she's not sure she likes them. Not one little bit.

Qwrk and Dovis both want stardom. They audition as a dancing/violin playing duo for a sleazy promoter called Mickie More at his less than reputable establishment, 'The Frantic Funk Jump Club'. Mickie is impressed, but stresses that they need to be louder and more outrageous. Qwrk develops an audio pick-up for his violin that raises the decibel level a thousandfold; and Dovis works up an outrageous look that would not appear out of place at a punks' convention. Clive and Michelle Froggatt witness their outrageous look in conjunction with cowboy Lox lassoing a chair in the Jacksons' yard. They're more convinced than ever that the Jacksons are lunatics.

Like the rest of her family, X is trying to come to terms with Earth's love and the attentive feelings it stirs inside. Earth has made them more free to be what they truly are and want to be: Dovis, a dancer, Mother, a Parisian fashion designer - and Lox, a fighter for truth and justice in the Western way - but not here - on Zyrgon.

Colin finds out about Qwrk and Dovis's dealings with Mickie More, and he accompanies them to their call-back audition. Luckily for them. Because when going over the contract later, Colin discovers Mickie More will take eighty per cent of their earnings. Colin rips up the contract, thereby ending their shot at stardom. Qwrk is grateful. Dovis is furious.

The dreadful day arrives. The farewells start in a restrained Zyrgonian fashion, and end in an Earthly tangle of tears and embraces. Mother hurriedly climbs into Lox's spacecraft, watching her tearful family as she is sped away by Lox - both following their star. Au revoir.

1 - 21 ILLEGAL ALIENS

Lox's spaceship departure has stirred up interest in aliens and U.F.O's, with Michelle doing her best to link such phenomena to the Jackson Family.

Anxious to get rid of his strange neighbours, Froggatt tips off the Immigration Department of his suspicions about the Family. An inspector calls on the Jacksons and is appalled that they have no I.D. or passports. X snatches a date out of the air, declaring it to be the day of their arrival from Peru. The inspector leaves to run this information through the main computer.

Knowing there will be no record of their entry into the country, it is left to Qwrk to save the day by hacking into the immigration computer to implant some fictitious information... but it is a race against time.

Meanwhile, Michelle and Dallas photograph DAVIS walking on a pond to rescue a kitten and report the strange incident to Miss Bloom. With the help of Colin and Jenny, X kinetizes a log just below the ponds surface to prove to Miss Bloom that nothing miraculous occurred.

Qwrk's hacking is successful - and the inspector turns his attention to Froggatt to explain some irregularities concerning his great grandfather's immigration.

1 - 22 GROWING UP QUICK

Jenny is feeling depressed about herself, convinced she is a dag and wishing she was older - so people wouldn't treat her like a child. Then she sees a spectacular dress which she believes would make her look more sophisticated. Unfortunately her mother hasn't the money to spare, but suggests she gets a part-time job.

Jenny begs X to age-simulate her so she will be old enough to get a job at Amusement Arcade. Reluctantly X simulates her friend into a DAVIS clone.

It is Dallas Hohenhaus's brother, Carl, who hires her. Immediately taking a shine to the attractive DAVIS [Jenny], he asks her out. This leads to disaster when David's friends see them together. Soon a puzzled DAVIS is being berated by an upset David who announces he is now her ex-boyfriend.

This is further complicated by Michelle and Dallas witnessing Carl kissing DAVIS as Jenny has become. The next day David confronts Carl about it at the Amusement Arcade. Way out of her depth, DAVIS [Jenny] runs away and it is left to DAVIS to clear up the mess she has made.

A very pleased Jenny is changed back by X. She is now happy to be eleven, even if she is a dag. After all, what she is inside is what's important.

1 - 23 THE WRITING'S ON THE WALL

X's life is changing. Mother's gone to Paris and the family are fitting into Earth's way of life: becoming more independent and not needing X's organizing.

These changes become very evident to X when she is wrongly blamed for the graffiti on the school buildings and stealing from Gino's milk bar. It seems the real culprits, Michelle and Dallas, are right: no one's going to believe she didn't do it. Not even her family.

X's powers even fail when she tries to thoughtbeam Lox for comfort. But little does she know, her thoughtbeam has collided in space with the Klickscore Trophy which has the Chief locked within, diverting its course.

Frustrated and depressed by her family's treatment, X runs away. She hides from the world in a storm drain, frequented by Qwrk for the purpose of "hanging out".

X's hiding place becomes dark and scary with rats and strange noises. She bumps her head and when Colin finds her, she believes he is the Chief chasing her. While her family and friends ponder what to do, X lies in bed delirious with her strange nightmares.

Mother arrives home unexpectedly and immediately sets X straight by explaining how bad things could have been for the family if it wasn't for her organization.

X rallies and recovers, happy her family is together again, and ready to accept Earth as her home.

1 - 24 THE PAST IS CREEPING BACK

X's unwittingly diverted the course of the Klickscore Trophy with a failed thoughtbeam to crash on Yorp's Fuel-stop. The chief emerges from the ruins of the Trophy, free to exact his revenge on X. He is pounced upon by Rusty - a ruthless salesmen.

JADY arrives with a plan to capture X. Believing X has eluded them because her mind has grown strong and independent away from Zyrgon, she has come equipped with a device of the Technical Wizard, "The Mind Drill" to destroy X's mind.

Waves from the Mind Drill bounce-back causing X sensory distortion in the form of visions from the past Confused and frightened by her dreams, X, accompanied by Colin, returns home not able to complete her journey to school. Dovis comes home to look after her and is relieved when Mother unexpectedly returns. To the surprise of her daughters, Mother swiftly moves to take X to the doctor.

When Mother rings home, Dovis realizes that she had been deceived by a clone and rushes to catch X... But is only in time to see her being dragged by Jady and the Chief into a spacecraft which immediately takes off.

1 - 25 CRESCENDO

Manacled, X is escorted by a triumphant Chief and Jady back to Zyrgon where she is put into a cell to be made an example of before being thrown in the lava for the crime of treason. Lox's efforts to try and release her result in his capture and imprisonment.

Back on Earth, a rescue operation is being mounted. The spacecraft is brought from an air-pocket and repaired by Qwrk whereupon Dovis, Jenny and Colin set out in it for Zyrgon.

The intrepid three arrive for refuelling at Yorp's, the friend of dissidents. Though believing they're up against impossible odds, Yorp joins them in their mission to free X.

With Yorp and Dovis's assistance, Colin and Jenny manage to gain entry into the Law Enforcers Headquarters where X is being held. But their luck fails them and they come face-to-face with their deadly enemy, the Chief.

1 - 26 DARK NIGHT, STAR BRIGHT

With X imprisoned on Zyrgon and Dovis, Colin and Jenny on their way to try and save her, Father, Mother and Qwrk are alone with their thoughts... and desolation.

In this saddened state, they have to contend on their own with queries about X and Dovis's whereabouts from Miss Bloom and David.

But their minds are full with images of the missing members of their family and what could have been.

Qwrk has his music to express his feelings, while Father and Mother have only their memories.

Meanwhile, in the Froggatt household, a visit from Miss Bloom has provoked thoughts about the ideal society.

1 - 27 TRIAL BY LAVA

X is brought to trial on Zyrgon, watched by Father, Mother and Qwrk on their modified microwave in their home on Earth. Just as the verdict is to be announced the scream goes blank, caused by Froggatt's electronic jammer device. Hearing no word from X or Dovis, Father, Mother and Qwrk fear the worst and decide to go somewhere with no memories.

Meanwhile, back on Zyrgon, Dovis and Yorp watch the proceedings, helpless as X is pronounced guilty, with only one possible sentence - the lava. Hecla, in disguise, makes herself known to Dovis and Yorp, advising them to trust in the people, but looking around at those assembled in the community centre the prospects look grim.

Before passing sentence, Principa's curiosity has been aroused by a number of Earthly practices described in the transcript. X's explanations to her questions seem to be swaying the head of state to the prisoner's side, much to the chagrin of the Chief.

Finally, unable to endure this dilly-dallying any longer, the chief takes matters into his own hands by sentencing the prisoner himself and dragging her to the lava.

The people of Zyrgon is in uproar as they surge forward, led by Hecla, Yorp and Dovis, storming the Law

Enforcers headquarters. Colin, Jenny and Lox are released from their bonds and join Dovic, Yorp and Hecla as the Chief is about to throw X into the lava. Just as he is about to let her fall, he stumbles. Colin tries to save X. But it is too late and both X and the Chief tumble down the inclinator shaft to the lava.

1 - 28 WE LIVE ON THE BEST ONE

JENNY, COLIN, DOVIS and HECLA are appalled - as is everybody else who witnessed it - that X has plummeted into the lava along with the CHIEF.

On Earth, MOTHER, FATHER and QWRK are similarly appalled although all they know is X has been found guilty. FROGGATT is particularly delighted at his jammer.

But the CHIEF and X have not perished - they are snagged on a ledge just above the lava and it is here they have a long, levelling talk. The CHIEF suffers some sort of breakdown when he is confronted with the truth that love has touched his life - JADY loves him.

X and the CHIEF reach a tacit armistice and find their way out of the depths together.

The people in the Community Centre are amazed at the return from the dead of X and the CHIEF. They welcome her but want to toss him back in the lava.

X prevails on them to let him go... and the people acclaim her as their new ruler. JENNY and COLIN cannot believe their ears - X will stay to be the new Principa.

MOTHER and FATHER decide to leave Bellwood forever since it contains too many reminders of X.

A downcast COLIN, JENNY and DOVIS are about to set off from Zyrgon when X runs up to them, having spoken to HECLA and changed her mind.

They arrive outside the Jackson house to be confronted by every sign that MOTHER, FATHER and QWRK have gone... but they have caught them just in time.

The Family's cup of joy finally runneth over when FATHER wins the lottery. They decide to stay on the Blue Planet forever.

HANA NO ASUKA GUMIAKA: RADIANT AKUSA CLASS

This television series was based on the popular girl's manga. It was brought to the small screen after the huge success of Sukeban Deka. Hana no Asuka Gumi was set in junior high school though, and therefore featured younger actresses. This is where Megumi Odaka (Asuka) got her start before she went on to star in the new series of Gojira movies. Her co-stars were Hikari Ishida (Harumi) and Natsuki Ozawa (Miko). The enemy was portrayed quite skillfully by Risa Honda. Hmm... cute, yet evil... but aren't they all?

The show owed a lot to Sukeban Deka, so much that Haruko Sagara guest starred as Asuka Gumi's former throwing teacher. The series wasn't always serious, a funny scene had the girls threatening the enemy with chocolate bars pretending they were dynamite sticks! ("I know this will work - I saw it done in the movies!")

An interesting sub plot in the series was that the main enemies were elementals - Fire, Wind, Water and Earth. All under the command of Risa.

Like Sukeban Deka, each girl had a signature weapon. Megumi threw a gold coin, and Natsuki swung her purse around.

The opening theme song "Get a Chance" was provided by idol duo Babe.

Not to be confused with the Anime version from 1985.

HA'NEPHILIM

AKA: THE OUTSIDERS

The story tells about Zuri Barlev, who moved with his father, who was fired from the ministry of education, to a city in the north part of Israel called the NRV (Nuclear Research Village). The technology at the NRV, is much more sophisticated than everyday technology. The village was started during Moshe Dayan's years. It all started when Moshe Dayan and Noah's father found a portal in the Negev, and began researching it. Before Noah's Father's death, he gave a special "key" to his son, Noah, and told him to grab onto it, because it is the world's only surviving artifact from the earth's first years.

NRV residents have different colored tags. Blue represents low, green represents pretty high, for certain employees, and red represents the highest level, only given to administrators and researchers. Zuri afterwards discovers that some NRV residents had a relative, who died two months before they moved in. Afterwards, he and his friends discover it was Noah who killed their relatives, in order to bring them to the NRV. Some time later, Zuri arrives to the minus 5 (-5) floor, which he there finds the portal. He enters it, and discovers the spaceship. The spaceship contains a dangerous combination of various gases, which cause people to go insane, and lose control of their actions. But, somehow, the air combination does not have any effect on Zuri, for some reason.

Later on, he discovers that the owners of that spaceship, who were aliens, used to throw their criminals into that planet using the portal. The planet actually served them as some sort of, "jail" for the criminals. However, the special alignment and ingredients of the atmosphere, caused the criminals to obtain "super-powers". Because of that reason, it is why the locals called them, "Ha'Nephilim", or, in simple English, "The Outsiders". Several days later, Zuri discovers he is one of them, when the computer's hologram, a female "human" (Yamit Sol (linked to Hebrew article)), shows him a video recording of the past spaceship commander. Some time later, he enters the spaceship with Noah, which disables the force field, set by the previous commander, to stop other "unique people" from using their abilities. Noah succeeds, and suddenly a lot of people, discover their abilities. Ranging from, freezing, controlling people and putting them to sleep through dreams, super-speed, super-strength, super-stretch, which its effect is rendered horribly, duplicating, starting fires by mere thoughts, and more. Due to that reason, a person named Assaf, which discovers his abilities as super-strength and shield creation, teams up with Noah, to find the other outsiders, and take control of the spaceship, as it can control the entire planet it's facing.

Ha'Nephilim (The Outsiders) is a television programme currently being broadcasted on Yes Israeli written by Ruby Doanias and Chen Kliman. It is named after the biblical Nephilim, who are referred to in the show.

Before the show was premiered on Yes Israeli, it was advertised online using teasers, that requested the public's help in finding a missing teenager, Zuri Barlev. Visitors who clicked the banner, arrived to a website stating Zuri is missing, and that assistance of the public is requested. In addition, a blog and a website were opened by an account with the same name, to add more features to the promotion. The comments about the promotion were mostly negative, stating this way of promotion is highly unwanted due to its danger of confusing the public.

Character histories

The show's main characters.

The show's main character, Zuri Barlev. Zuria (Zuri) Barlev (Alon Levi) -- A teenager in the 12th grade whose mother was killed 2 months before he moved into the NRV with his father. A descendant of "The Outsiders", who are aliens. After the force field around our planet was removed, Zuri discovered his telekinesis and super-speed abilities.

Adi Katz (Lital Roznevig) -- Born in the NRV, and a friend and neighbor of Zuri. An adventuress and a sometimes nagging teenager. Shlomi's sister, and Shouki's child.

Lia Bentov (Hila Eran) -- A beautiful grade A student. She moved to the NRV by age 10, after her father died.
 Maor Al Mekayem (Jason Danino Holt) -- Born in the NRV, likes to break rules and gets in trouble nearly every day. His nickname is "Gever Gever" ("A Real Man").

Yuval Azmon (Daniel Maroz) -- A computers and technology geek, moved to the NRV by age 13, and has a crush on Adi. A pretty strange kid, who laughs in all the wrong moments.

Shlomi Katz (Dan Shapira) -- Adi's brother and the NRV's head of security.

Noah Litani (Dvir Benadec) -- The NRV's vice manager, arrived to the NRV during his childhood. The son of Yefet Litani, who was Moshe Dayan's research assistant.

Assaf Hen (Yaniv Polishak) -- Vice head of security in the NRV, a good friend of Shlomi, and addicted to a tuna & avocado sandwich. After the force field around our planet was removed, Assaf discovered his abilities, which are super-strength and the ability to create a force field.

Avi Barlev (Sami Hori) -- Zuri's father, a history teacher who lost his job, and received a job at the NRV.

Shouki Katz (Jil Ben-David) -- An old scientist in the NRV, and Shlomi and Adi's father. Tried to receive the job of vice managing the NRV instead of Noah. 1 year later, when Noah was arrested for several murders, Shouki was assigned as the NRV's vice manager.

The Computer's Hologram (Yamit Sol) -- A holographic appearance of the spaceship's computer.

Guest Characters

All guest characters have been beaten. Some even have been extinct.

Karen (Yael Goldman) -- A journalist from Tel-Aviv who arrives to the NRV to write an article about it. After the Force field around our planet was removed, Karen discovered her ability to control people through their dreams, and forcing them into sleep, possibly eternal sleep.

Shaoul the Torcher (Yaron Levi Savag) -- A person with the ability to start fire and burn objects and people by simply thinking about it. He joins Noah and Assaf afterwards to take control of the spaceship.

Shmoueli (Lior Calfon) -- A person with the ability to turn invisible. Used his ability to cause unbelievable sports games results, pay his debts.

Yoel & Moshe Cahana ("The Magicians") (Erez Shafir) -- Two people who look alike, and can read thoughts. They communicate by reading each other's thoughts, which enables them to communicate hundreds of miles away. They fail when trying to take control of the spaceship, when Zuri and his friends place one of them inside a virtual reality scanner, and simulate the takeover process, which allowed them to fool them both, thus trapping and defeating them.

Amit Bachar (Tom Shverzer) -- Has the ability of freezing anything. He joins the "good guys", but later on turns out to be a "bad guy".

'Benny' (Real name not written in original article) -- Has the ability of super-stretching, causing him invulnerable to any attack. Tries to take over the spaceship, but fails when Amit and Zuri freeze him, and then "crush him", which, technically kills him.

'Abigail' (Sharon Haziz) -- Has the ability to communicate with machines, and use them as bombs and weapons. She can also plant electrical devices in any human's body, including machines who are believed to be too big to plant in a human's arm. She also has the ability to "restart a day" by bending time and space.

'Y'israel' (Aviad Bentov) -- Has the ability to "age" people, and use their own biological clock time for himself, thus making him young forever.

'Rami The Shape Shifter' -- Has the ability to morph to any person, once he obtains his DNA by touching him. Can also use an Outsider's power if using his DNA. Joins Noah and Assaf.

'The Prisoner' (Name not yet known -- only minor details are currently known) -- Has the ability of persuasion, making people do whatever he wants them to do. This is completely proven on episode 35, Battle, when he forces the other prisoners to do chaos, and one to kill another.

Anat The Waitress (Efrat Cohen) -- Has the ability to see the future. Uses that ability to steal jewelery, money, and other valuable items.

Ozri (Real name not written in original article) -- Has the ability to change his state of matter to energy, allowing him to use electricity as a way of transportation.

Shpigelman (Galit Giat) -- After hearing about her brother, Ozri, and his escape, she tries to find out more about the NRV.

HARD TIME ON PLANET EARTH

A super warrior finds himself banished to Earth because he was rebelling against the government. His sentence will be determined by 'control', small flying computer - which looks like a disembodied floating eye - which keeps track of his efforts to help humanity and files regular reports to the folks back home. When Jesse, as the warrior is known, has totted up enough brownie points, he will be allowed to return to his own world.

‘The penalty for rebellion against the council is termination, but because of your heroic services as a warrior, you are exiled to the primitive planet Earth, in human form, until you learn to restrain your hostility . . .

Disney-backed comedy adventure series about a super-warrior from a distant solar system who rebels against his government and finds himself banished to Earth. So, while trying to adjust to the ways of California man, and hold down a job, Jesse manages to save a few lives, foil a few crooks and help the oppressed. It clearly wasn't enough, however, and Jesse's Hard Time ended after just 13 episodes with no parole in sight. The series was shown on CBS in the US and on ITV in the UK. The executive producers for the show were Jim & John Thomas, Richard Chapman and E. Jack Kaplan. The series premiered in the UK on the 19 August 1990.

One of the best ways to use science fiction is to create a character totally unfamiliar with our world, then watch him grow and be educated as he interacts with us in our everyday lives. In the process, we can learn about ourselves as well as be entertained. Hard Time on Planet Earth presented such a character in Jesse, an intergalactic warrior from the planet Andarius who had long ago abandoned the confines of a physical body.

The show was created when CBS asked brothers Jim and John Thomas for a series in the mold of The Incredible Hulk. In reply the Thomases suggested a more "alien" idea. Fresh from their work on Predator (1987), they conjured up an alien who arrives on Earth against his will and is constantly frustrated in everyday life.

"It was a chance to live out of our own alteregos. The frustrations we feel with day-to-day life sometimes lead us to want to wreak havoc on our surroundings and our fellow human beings, so we gave our alien superhuman strength and a backstory that made him an exiled warrior. He could convincingly say, 'I've had enough and I'm not gonna take it anymore!'" says Jim Thomas.

The hidden backstory of this character is that Jesse had triumphed in a cosmic battlefield of unimaginable scale and returned home a hero. But his victory was short. His services were no longer needed. Trouble followed him, and promises were not kept. The ruling classes grew intolerant of him. Rather than terminate Jesse and make a martyr of him, the rulers banish him to the backwater planet called Earth. Parole for Jesse comes in the form of good deeds on Earth; if he did enough of these, he will be freed.

Acting as warden while Jesse does his time on Earth is a cybernetic, slightly misprogrammed, pestering motor-mouth of a sidekick named Control, who supervises his stay. "The idea of Control," John says, "came about because we realized Jesse needed an alter-ego, another aspect of his own personality with whom he could develop an uneasy partnership."

Control's backstory is this: Flawed programming gave him a mind of his own at times, with a tendency to become too involved in assignments rather than standing by as an unbiased observer. When Jesse was exiled, Control was tapped as the perfect agent. Of course, Control advises Jesse badly, creating many predicaments and confounding his learning and adjustment. Control has a nasty habit of wandering off on his own and enjoying the sights on Earth. Bright things, computers and neon signs fascinate Control, and sometimes he might be off studying chimneys or a ventilation shaft.

Jesse was played by Martin Kove, a familiar face from the long-running Cagney and Lacey as well as other TV series. Jim Thomas says, "Every other actor who read for the part was overly dramatic with it. Marty made us laugh, and we knew he could handle the humor in the material, the tongue-in-cheek scenes we wrote depicting a frustrated alien in a human body trying to make sense of it all. And thanks to Marty, as we developed the show, we realized we could explore more of the innocence and the comedy in the characterization and less of the warrior. Instead of playing anger and toughness all the time, we focused on the alien's complete naivete in the face of the complexities of modern life as we know it."

Martin Kove admits that when he was first approached with the idea of the show, he was not so hot for the script, although he liked the concept. "I met with the producers and everyone," he says. "I liked them and felt very comfortable with them. They were very excited about the script. I loved Jim and John Thomas—they were terrific and the people at Disney." No agreements were made at first, and as the months passed, Kove moved on to other projects. One day; he asked his agent if anyone had been cast for the show. When he learned that the role was still open, and that the Thomas brothers wanted to see him again, Kove became excited. "Ultimately, we made a deal and scheduled me around a movie of the week I had to do. All these schedules were moved around so that Disney and the network could use my services to shoot the pilot."

The character appealed to Kove, who wanted an opportunity to stretch himself as an actor, since he had become so well known for Cagney and Lacey and various action films. "I'm always playing wise guys and heavies in movies," Kove says ruefully. "What was interesting [about Jesse] was he's vulnerable and quite sensitive to some of the situations around him. It's a stranger in a strange land. His vulnerability [comes about] ... because he's so naive." Kove believes the charm of the character Jesse was that he received everything at face value. Of course, humans are sometimes very confusing, even deadly under certain circumstances. Kove points out that Jesse "takes things at face value because that's the way they function at his planet."

Viewing humans through alien eyes has long been a favorite theme in science fiction, with the help of such classic characters as Mr. Spock, Starman, the Phoenix, Gene Roddenberry's Questor from The Questor Tapes, and of course, our old pal Mork from Ork. Kove wanted a similar theme to come through in Hard Time on Planet Earth. "That's what we wanted to do. I find a lot of our shows didn't touch upon that. Some of our shows did a great deal about that," says Kove. He points to an episode called "Battle of the Sexes" in which Sandahl Bergman plays a female terminator from his planet, sent to kill him—but not before both of them fall in love.

Hard Time on Planet Earth demanded a great deal from Kove, since he was the only regular character from week to week other than Danny Mann's off-screen voice as Control. "Sometimes you're up against handling too much," says Kove. "I learned a lesson there where you can't do everything. Often, you would do a scene for the day, and then there's second unit stuff for the previous show, and then a director comes up and wants to talk to you about a show coming up in the future. So there's three shows you're chatting about. It's very hard to function. It's not impossible—you really need to be prepared. If I had to do it again, I [would] focus my energy in certain areas [only]."

Although Kove enjoyed the work and what the show had to offer, he says very candidly that he felt it needed a harder edge and a stronger gearing for an adult audience. "I had everybody screen the Highlander movie before we started shooting," he says. The character is loosely based on the Highlander." Kove says he had worked with the Highlander's creator, Gregory Widen, on a Tales of the Crypt episode, and they had entered into a discussion on why Jesse couldn't have been "more with an edge, like Christopher Lambert played. In television you can't do that. You have to work with the format as the series changes ... [from] conception of the pilot to the regular episodes. What I think happened was, people weren't sure about the viability [of the character]. I think it changed."

Kove believes that Jesse came off as an 11-year-old whereas Kove envisioned him as 18-wiser and less childlike. "I read the original treatment for this show and it was much harder edged than what you saw. It got soft and more of an 8:00 show," he says. To ensure proper character development as the show progressed, Kove kept a notebook in which he wrote down all the different things that Jesse learned. "I kept a bible, a diary. In the first episode, he learned about money. The second episode is about love. He learned about a kiss and about love. I kept a diary for every episode so when it came up in the next episode, he knew what it was. You have to remember we're dealing with a character that's like a newfound baby who knew nothing about our customs and had to play everything by ear. He would learn by television, by talking to other people."

Kove feels very strongly that had the show continued further, Jesse's character growth would have continued. "The audience deserves it," he emphasizes. "Audiences are so sophisticated now. They fly in with their remote control, and you have to ... [engage] their imagination. If you contribute enough, they'll stay with the show, but if you don't, they won't. Their emotional involvement will dissipate in a 48-minute episode."

With no regular sets for the show, the company filmed in and around Southern California, creating unique hardships (and rewards) for Kove. For "Battle of the Sexes," Kove says his love and dedication for the show came through when a scene had to be filmed very late night at a planetarium. "We had to stop at 12 a.m. I was off the clock because I needed 12 hours to turn around again," explains Kove. "At 2 a.m. my double was going to shoot a huge chase scene with Sandahl Bergman. I didn't want them using my double. I wanted me so we could get close to the camera. I said, 'Don't use the double! Use me!' Technically you're not paid for that

Arriving on Earth in human form, Jesse gets his first impressions of proper behavior from watching TV, with the result that he becomes the subject of a wild police chase. Control, his robotic parole officer, suggests that they flee to the large city of Los Angeles.

HARSH REALM

After seeing the horrors of war in Sarajevo, Lt. Thomas Hobbes is finally ready to settle down with his fiancé Sophie. But the military has one more assignment for Hobbes: test out the newest in military combat training - a top secret computer simulation known as Harsh Realm. Inside Harsh Realm, Hobbes immediately finds himself fighting for his life, forming an uneasy alliance with a virtual character, Mike Pinocchio. But as he pursues his mission - beating the highest scoring player, Omar Santiago - Hobbes begins to realize that Harsh Realm is more than just a game. And what's worse: he's trapped inside this world, which is without rules and without mercy.

Harsh Realm is a science fiction television series about humans trapped inside a virtual reality simulation. It was developed by Chris Carter, best known for his series The X-Files, and began airing on the FOX Network on October 8, 1999. The series fared poorly in the ratings and was removed from the schedule after just three of its nine episodes had aired. The remaining six episodes premiered on Fox's channel FX Networks. Repeats of the series will begin airing Fall 2007 on CBC Country Canada.

The term "harsh realm" originates from the "grunge speak" hoax of 1992, in which it meant 'bummer'.

The show was loosely based on a comic book by James D. Hudnall and Andrew Paquette. When the creators noticed the credits read "Created by Chris Carter", they sued Fox to get properly credited. The credits were changed to read "Inspired by the Harsh Realm comic book series, Created by James D. Hudnall and Andrew Paquette, Published by Harris Publications, Inc."

The series was filmed in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada.

A box set with the 9 completed episodes, including those unaired on network television in the USA, was released on region 1 DVD on August 24, 2004. The box features two commentary tracks on the pilot episode by the show's creator and director as well as other minor special features.

Characters

Tom Hobbes (Scott Bairstow)

Lieutenant Thomas F. Hobbes was close to his discharge from the Army when he was called to do one last mission and sent into the virtual reality simulation known as Harsh Realm. He left behind in New Jersey his fiancée Sophie Green. They had planned to move to California. He was decorated for saving the life of his friend Waters when they served together in Sarajevo in 1994. In the realm, Hobbes was reunited with the virtual character of his dog Dexter. He also came upon the dying virtual copy of his mother, Katherine, at the same time she was dying of cancer in the real world. He grew up in Columbus, Ohio. He is named for 17th century English philosopher Thomas Hobbes. His gun is an Walther P99. Hobbes originally had a Heckler & Koch P7 pistol in the Pilot episode before moving onto the SIG Sauer P226 pistol and onto the Walther P99. Mike Pinocchio (D.B. Sweeney)

Specialist-4 Mike Pinocchio served in Operation Desert Storm. After that, he served in Yugoslavia, where he was severely injured by a land mine. The loss of his leg and eye prompted him to volunteer to go into Harsh Realm (in which Pinocchio has neither injury). In the Realm, he worked for Santiago before presumably faking his own death and going to live outside the fence. He drives a modified 1970s era Chevrolet Chevelle. His gun is an Heckler & Koch MP5K PDW. Florence (Rachel Hayward)

Florence is mute and a VC ("virtual character"). She has the ability to heal injuries that occur within the game (not pre-existing conditions coded into the game). She was a member of a group known as the Sisters, all of whom were mute healers. But she left the religious group and took up arms. Her gun is a Colt Commando. Omar Santiago (Terry O'Quinn)

In the real world, Santiago is a Sergeant Major in the US Army and was the most-decorated combat veteran to serve in Southeast Asia. He retired, but apparently that retirement took him to Harsh Realm, where he holds the rank of General in the Republican Guard and is working from his Santiago City headquarters to take over the United States, with a United States of Santiago. Pinocchio claims that Santiago is able to go in and out of the game. The US government in the real world wants him dead. His plans are said to involve destroying the real world so that Harsh Realm is all that remains.

Mel Waters (Max Martini)

Although they were best friends in the real world, Waters and Hobbes are at odds in Harsh Realm. First Hobbes finds that Waters married Sophie's virtual character. Waters also works for Santiago as well as holding the rank of Major in the Republican Guard (Waters' real world military rank was Sergeant).
Inga Fossa

She works with the military in Fort Dix, New Jersey. She can come and go as she pleases between Harsh Realm and the real world, where she approached Sophie Green with information. She has a past connection to Pinocchio. Her motives in Harsh Realm are unclear, having also worked with Santiago, Waters, and aiding Tom Hobbes. "Inga Fossa" translates to "in the trench" in Latin.
Sophie Green (Samantha Mathis)

Sophie is Hobbes' pregnant fiancée, left behind in the real world. She has two sisters and a brother named Sam. The "virtual character" version of Sophie within Harsh Realm briefly becomes Hobbes' ally until she is gunned down by Waters.

Harsh Realm (TV Series) vs. Harsh Realm (Comic Book)

In the comic book (on which the television series is based), a detective named Dexter living in a dystopian city is sent into a High Fantasy world complete with elves, goblins, and werewolves. This world (and many others) are run by a corporation which sells entry into these worlds as an escape from the city. Dexter is sent into Harsh Realm with a mission to track down the missing son of two parents and in a parallel to the television series, this individual also seeks to take over Harsh Realm (albeit with fantastic powers rather than military power).

Similarities:

Harsh Realm is a computer created realm

The main character is sent into Harsh Realm to track down an individual

This individual has accumulated undue power and seeks to take over all of Harsh Realm

Differences:

Harsh Realm in the television show is a post-apocalyptic wasteland. Harsh Realm in the comic book is a High Fantasy world

The television show added a X-Files-esque conspiracy, the details of which were never revealed

The television show added Cyberpunk-inspired touches to its world mechanics

Neither version shares characters or plot-points in common

The television series plays homage to the comic book by naming Tom Hobbes' dog, Dexter.

Harsh Realm World Mechanics

Harsh Realm was built to depict our world after an act of nuclear terrorism. As depicted, Harsh Realm was eerily accurate and functioned first and foremost as a realistic world.

Unlike Tron and similar to The Matrix, elements of the simulation were never designed to reflect the underlying computers. Nonetheless, computer elements show up in the simulation as glitches allowing the characters to perform seemingly miraculous acts such as teleportation, healing, and seeing the future. Glitches are explained as back-doors built in by programmers, excess storage never populated, or corrupted program code.

Harsh Realm also accidentally features other tactical training war games, such as simulations of famous old battles ("Kein Ausgang") which were present in earlier builds of the virtual world

Virtual characters or VC, every person in Harsh Realm aside from soldiers sent into the game are electronic approximations of people created from compiled data. This term is used by soldiers sent by the military into the game to denote characters in Harsh Realm who are electronic constructs living in the virtual reality simulation. A virtual character has no knowledge that they are electronic constructs or that Harsh Realm is not the real world. VC will Digitize when they die in Harsh Realm.

As in The Matrix, when a person's mind is in Harsh Realm it is so convinced that what it sees is reality that it does become exactly that, reality. The humans mind is so convinced that what is happening is real that if, for example, you are in a car crash in Harsh Realm and you are killed, your mind is fed this information so convincingly that it believes you are indeed dead -- you die in "real life" because your heart just stops beating. The players' "real" bodies are housed in a "Restricted Area" of a US Army Supply Depot in New Jersey.

Trivia

The chair Hobbes sits in to enter Harsh Realm has "siege" and "perilous" on its armrests. See Siege Perilous. The theme music contains samples of speeches given by Benito Mussolini. The crossed swords logo of Santiago's army is an ancient symbol for conflict. Series creator Chris Carter also created The X-Files and Millennium. The show's pilot episode included uncredited cameos by Gillian Anderson of The X-Files as the narrator of the Harsh Realm training video and Lance Henriksen of Millennium as the general who recruits Hobbes for the game.

The real question regarding Chris Carter was whether or not he was a one hit wonder. Would he forever be they guy who did THE X FILES? Sure, MILLENNIUM ran for three seasons, but that was due largely to Fox TV's desire to placate Carter and keep the creator of one of their signature shows happy. Some have compared the premise to the summer blockbuster hit The Matrix. Carter claims that he didn't know about the coincidences between Harsh Realm and The Matrix until he saw the film. Harsh Realm directly replaced MILLENNIUM in its time slot.

Chris Carter says, "This is a different way to tell stories, using a parallel world that provides allegorical opportunities. I'm trying to make this a big TV show. " The major advantage it has, apart from the very strong cast, is the variety of stories and settings which can be told. Originally it seemed likely to be one of the most violent shows ever seen on television, but the Columbine, USA shooting appear to have led to a toning down. An obstacle to success has been the media's inclination to compare it with SF film The Matrix.

Only three episode of this series were shown on FOX when it was originaly made, however a futher two episodes were made but not broadcast during the series' original run. Chris Carter was very annoyed when his new series was cancelled

Thomas Hobbes is named for the philosopher Thomas Hobbes, who believed in predestination and that people are inherently selfish and power-hungry. The chair Hobbes sits in to enter Harsh Realm has "siege" and "perilous" on its armrests. This is a reference to the legend of King Arthur, and a similar chair that would turn anybody but the bravest person in England into ash if they sat in it.

that leads them directly Santiago's barracks.

Hobbes manages to break into the chamber where the portal is and with reluctant help from Inga Fossa, they enter. Fossa tells Hobbes that unless he kills Santiago now in Harsh Realm there would not be a world for Hobbes to return to as Santiago plans to destroy it. Hobbes decides to stay in Harsh Realm as Fossa gives him the letter Sophie wrote him. She also gives him the key to the cell where Pinnocchio and Florence are being kept.

In the real world, Sophie has been waiting for Inga Fossa to return. Fossa is surprised but lies to Sophie that she couldn't get the letter to Hobbes.

1 - 4 KEIN AUSGANG

Whilst driving through the countryside in search of a soldier who may hold the key to defeating Santiago, Hobbes and Pinocchio unexpectedly travel through a tear in Harsh Realm and enter what seems to be an alternate dimension. They immediately come under fire from World War II soldiers and eventually learn that they are trapped in an earlier, and thought deleted, version of the Harsh Realm simulation. One of the American soldiers asks for help from Hobbes and Pinocchio as he has been trapped in this version of the game and has been playing it over and over again for years. As Hobbes is captured by the Nazis and Pinocchio fights for the allies, they soon come to realize that if they do not find a way out of this game, they could be doomed to repeated it over and over like the American soldier.

HELPING HENRY

Unusual series that uses the device of showing the world through alien eyes to inform and entertain pre-school children. Henry, though is not your everyday run of the mill space traveller - he come to check out Earth disguised as a dining room chair, guided by a young friend Stephen, he makes hopelessly confused reports back to his superiors on the distant planet of Holgon, Cosmics 1 and 2 - a clear case of upholstering the truth.

Fortunately for Henry his superiors are not exactly rocket scientists. When they appear towards the end of each episode to get filled in on what Henry has learned, they usually have a harder time understanding Henry's report than Henry did when he gleaned the information from Stephen. Cosmic One and Two also get perturbed that Henry's hopelessly reports are all on humans (or two legs as he calls them) and never about the furniture's culture. Tricia is Stephens little sister who is also aware that Henry can talk, but instead of helping Henry she prefers to terrorise him. Besides, Tricia, Henry also has to worry about the family cat who has decided Henry is a scratching post: and Stephen's overweight Aunt Winnie who likes to sit on him.

Richard Vernon who played Cosmic 1 also starred as Slartibartfast in the British SF series THE HITCHHIKERS GUIDE TO THE GALAXY. The 13 15 minute episodes, shown on Channel Four, covered aspects of Earth life such as pets and animals, shopping, transport, cloths and household appliances - 'just because the fridge is cold doesn't mean it's not well'. Deadpan comedian Jeremy Hardy co-wrote the shows and supplied the voice of Henry.

Henry was a well made puppet complete with eyes, mouth and moving armrests created by Jim Hennequin and Peter Fluck, with Roman Stefanski handling the actual puppeteering. The deadpan humour and the catchy theme tune has allowed the show to develop a small cult following among adults in America, where it has yet to be broadcast. The producer for the show was Madeleine French, the puppeteer was Roman Stefanski.

HERCULES: THE LEGENDARY JOURNEYS

Based on the hero of Greek mythology Hercules : The Legendary Journeys is an action adventure series with a fair amount of humour thrown in for good measure. Hercules was the illegitimate son of Zues, the king of the Gods, his mother was a beautiful human woman. Hercules thus had far greater strength than any mortal man, although he lacked the powers of the Gods themselves.

In the first episode of the series Hercules' stepmother, Zues' wife Hera, kills Hercules' wife and their children. Hera never really did like Hercules since he was living proof of the fact that her husband had cheated on her. Hercules attempts to cope for the loss by wandering around ancient Greece helping people who are plagued by monsters or feeling the warth of Hera or one of the of other Greek Gods.

Joining Hercules on his travels are Iolaus and Salmonious, Iolaus is Hercule' best friend who had aspirations of becoming a great hero like Hercules but never does. Iolaus' failure at becoming a hero is not from a lack of effort on his part. Hercules is also occasionally joined in his travels by Salmonious, a cowardly travelling peddler who makes no pretensions of being a hero.

The character of Xena :Warrior Princess first appeared in Hercules and was soon given her own show (SEE XENA : WARRIOR PRINCESS). Bruce Campbell is also known for starring in THE ADVENTURES OF BRISCO COUNTY JNR, he also played Autolycus in XENA : WARRIOR PRINCESS. Before becoming a TV series Hercules was a set of TV movies which came under the banner of the Action Pack with several other action shows. It eventually made it as a TV series and spawned a sequel.

One of the characters introduced in Hercules the Legendary Journeys proved popular enough that she was given her own series in the fall of 1995. Xena was a warrior princess who when first introduced was a villain. During the course of her three appearances on Hercules the Legendary Journeys, she reformed and changed her ways. Lucy Lawless, the actress who portrays Xena, was featured in several earlier episodes of Hercules as different characters.

The creatures that Hercules battled against are all created by computers. The computer generated sequences featuring such creatures as the Cyclops, Hydras and Centaurs are blended with the live action footage giving the series a look much like the stop motion animation films of Ray Harryhausen, but at a fraction of the cost. Hercules the Legendary Journeys is filmed in New Zealand, giving it a background which has not been seen many times before.

Hercules the Legendary Journeys first appeared at part of Action Pack. Action Pack was a syndicated series consisting of made for TV two hour long action adventure movies. This is the same banner under which TEKWAR was also premiered. Both Hercules the Legendary Journeys and TEKWAR were a series of movies which were broadcast on an irregular basis. Other features in Action Pack included, Smokey and the Bandit, based on the series of movies and Knight Rider 2010 which took the name, but nothing else, from the old series. Hercules the Legendary Journeys proved popular enough to become a regular syndicated weekly series in January 1995.

After the success of the Action Pack series of films, the series was picked up for 13 episodes and then 24 more episodes and continued to go from strength to strength. As an interesting sidenote, Sorbo almost got Dean Cain's role as Superman in LOIS AND CLARK (aka THE NEW ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN). It is interesting to wonder what both series would have been like if the two actors had actually landed each other's roles! The series is set on location in and around Auckland, New Zealand.

The executive producers for the show were Rob Tapert and Sam Raimi, co-executive producer was John Schulian, supervising producer was Robert Bielak, the producer was Eric Gruendemann, co-producer was David Eick, associate producer was Liz Friedman, co-ordinating producer was Bernadette Joyce, line producer was Chloe Smith and the finally the music was done by Joseph LoDuca.

Michael Hurst was actually born in Lancashire in Britain, but moved to New Zealand with his family when he was 7. He started acting and directing in high school when he was 14 and went on to train at Christ-church's Court Theatre. Then in 1979, at the age of 21, he moved to Auckland and joined Theatre Corporate where he stayed for seven years. Much more theatre work followed, and he played leading roles in the films Constance, Death Warmed Up, and Dangerous Orphans, as well as making appearances in several New Zealand television series. More recently, he has starred in the films Footstep Man and Desperate Remedies.

He co-wrote and directed the short film I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry and has guested on TV's RAY BRADBURY Theatre and TYPHON'S PEOPLE. Most of his work has been in the theatre however, where he is best known for his Shakespearian roles and his directing. In addition, he is a singer, a dancer, a stunt and fight choreographer, and a fencing champion. He is married to New Zealand actress Jennifer Ward-Lealand and lives in Grey Lynn, Auckland. At end of the fifth season Hercules's star Kevin Sorbo wanted to leave the series to pursue other career interests, hence a sixth season was made, but one with only eight episodes in total. In fact Kevin Sorbo went on to produce new shows with Gene Roddenberry's wife Majel Roddenberry. Meanwhile the producers of Hercules came up with two new concepts for shows to directly replace Hercules, one was called CLEOPATRA 2525, a science fiction series set in 2525 and Jack of all Trades on non-science fiction show, both were half-hour shows. XENA: WARRIOR PRINCESS, outlasted Hercules, by going to a sixth season and producing more episodes.

Before getting the part of Hercules, Kevin Sorbo auditioned for the part of Fox Mulder on THE X FILES, and even the part that eventually went to David Caruso in NYPD blue. America's TV Guide voted Hercules and Xena one of their top five television fantasy couples. In one episode, Hercules battles a thirty foot snake. In its closing credits, a disclaimer reads, "No subterranean serpents were harmed during the making of this motion picture," proving that even Greek gods have a sense of humour. One of the three trainers who helps Sorbo prepare for all his on-screen action sequences is fighting master Douglas Wong, whose work includes Dragon: The Bruce Lee Story.

Season Six: And so the series which started the trend for syndicated action/adventure shows will breathe its last in mid november 1999. The sixth season runs for only eight episodes as Kevin Sorbo decided enough was enough and is moving into the realm of Gene Roddenberry. The run will find our hero and Iolous getting involved in a family feud in Egypt, a tale based on the myth of Antegone, a Vlad the impaler Halloween episode and in the final story, directed by regular guest star Bruce Campbell, they face the titans who are out to destroy the world.

YOUNG HERCULES

1 - 1 THE WRONG PATH

After Hercules and his friend Iolaus stopped a band of hoodlums from robbing an innkeeper, Hercules went home to his family. The horror that followed was over almost before it started. A huge ball of fire burst through his bedroom window and consumed his wife, Deianeira. In the next instant the fireball took Hercules' three young children. His step mother, Hera, was to blame. Consumed by hatred, Hercules set out on a path of destruction. But the beautiful slave girl Aegina helped Hercules overcome his grief and set him back on an honorable path.

1 - 2 EYE OF THE BEHOLDER

An entire village was terrorized by a giant Cyclops, prompting a visit from Hercules. It was true that the Cyclops had tossed a traveling toga salesman into a tree and diverted the village's water supply to irrigate Hera's sacred vineyard. But Hercules learned that there were two sides to every conflict. It turned out the villagers had persecuted the cyclops for years. Hercules defeated the Cyclops in battle but spared its life, and the two became allies. Together, they repelled Hera's bloodthirsty henchman, and the Cyclops made peace with the villagers.

1 - 3 THE ROAD TO CALYDON

A group of refugees in search of a safe haven came upon the ghost town of Parthus, where the groups leader, Broteas, stole a golden chalice from Hera's temple. The theft brought down the wrath of Hera, and only Hercules could protect the refugees. The seer traveling with him explained that the cursed chalice had been a gift from Zeus to a young maiden of Parthus. Hercules saved the refugees from a violent rock storm, evil bounty hunters and a giant pterodactyl. He flung the chalice toward the horizon and saw the group safely to Calydon.

1 - 4 THE FESTIVAL OF DIONYSUS

A power struggle threatened to send the peaceful kingdom of Meliad into war. Fearing the worst Queen Camilla summoned Hercules to the annual Festival of Dionysus. If Dionysus, the god of wine, did not find King Iphicles worthy to rule another year, ten lovely virgins would become drunk and slaughter the King in a terrible frenzy. Iphicles was a good king, but he was still in danger. Pentheus, the king's elder son, plotted with Ares, the god of war, to overthrow his father. Hercules battled a deadly eel and then overcame Pentheus, saving the king.

1 - 5 ARES

Ares thrived on conflict and bloodshed. Hercules did not share Ares' passion for killing, and when Ares tried to assemble an army of teenage boy-soldiers to do his bidding, Hercules knew he had to stop him. With help from the powerful blacksmith Atalanta and the young widow Janista, Hercules freed Janista's son Titus and his friend Ximenos from Ares' spell. Then he confronted a representation of Ares in his cave, and after a fierce battle, Hercules beheaded his bloodthirsty foe. Titus learned that the way of the true warrior is not to kill, but to destroy forces of evil.

HERO TURTLES : THE NEXT MUTATION

AKA: NINJA TURTLES : THE NEXT MUTATION

Four ordinary turtles are struck by a dangerous chemical ooze which mutates them into wise cracking, ninja fighting mutants, who are still turtles, but with a surfer attitude. They receive guidance from their master Splinter, who is a rat, and together they fight evil from their secret underground base underneath New York City.

Saban International continues their flirtations with the SF kids market with this live action version of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, which continues the long tradition of the turtles, from comic, animated show and films to this. This show proves however that the Saban International products are deteriorating badly, and is destined to be a very forgettable show. The series was first shown in the UK on Fox Kids. Unlike many other shows of this types which were a combination of actors and actor in suits, this show voted to go mostly for actors or stuntmen in suits with actors portraying the voices, together with some laughable guest star actors, this show makes the power rangers look expensive.

Ninja Turtles: The Next Mutation (NT:TNM) was a short -lived live-action television series produced by Saban, which ran on the Fox Kids network from 1999-2000. The series was based loosely from Mirage Studios' Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles it followed the events in the movies.

The series introduced many new elements to the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles saga, including new central antagonists, an army of humanoid dragons known as "The Rank" led by the vicious Dragonlord.

The series was touted (in some of the promotional material) as a continuation of the first cartoon series, but by the period of time it aired it turned apparent that this was not the case. Instead, the series apparently followed the continuity of the live-action films. The turtles lived in the same abandoned train station featured in the second and third films, and Splinter's ear is slashed as it was in the original film. However, most fans tend to regard the films and the series as 2 separate entities, citing differing styles, The Shredder being alive and the absence of April O'Neil and Casey Jones.

Most of the Turtles' core fanbase were unimpressed with the series, criticizing the show's slapstick fighting, camp humour and poor costuming and sets. The series is not considered to be part of the larger TMNT canon.

Venus de Milo

The show's most famous contribution to the Turtles mythos was a fifth mutant turtle, a female named Venus de Milo who was skilled in the mystical arts of the shinobi. Venus was portrayed by Nicole Parker and voiced by Lalainia Lindbergh. The inclusion of Venus proved controversial among fans and many considered the existence of the character to be distasteful.

At the time it was said that Fox created the Venus character and forced Kevin Eastman and Peter Laird to include her in the series. While both were opposed to the idea of a female Turtle, they complied with Fox's demand. However, it has also been rumoured that Venus was initially created by Kevin Eastman (who didn't want this fact to be meant for public knowledge, as it violated a longstanding unofficial right which mandated "no female Turtles"). Whether this is true or not, Eastman seems to have a somewhat positive opinion of the character. Peter Laird, however, openly admits his disdain for her and has removed her profile from the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles official website.

Cancellation

The show was cancelled in the summer of 1998. Fans of the series have theorized that this was because Saban and Fox were unwilling to pay further licensing fees to Mirage Studios. Shortly after the live-action series was cancelled, there were plans for an animated version of the series, but this never materialized.

Trivia

The bounty hunter Bonesteel was portrayed by well-known anime and cartoon voice actor Scott McNeil. This was the first time his face was revealed in a live-action show.

A film, action figure line, and comic book series based upon TMNT:TNM were proposed; however, only the toy line was created and is considered a rare find due to its low release to retailers. The film and comic book series were never made due to the lackluster reaction to the show by fans

1 - 1 EAST MEETS WEST (1-5)

The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles are still fighting their sworn enemy, Shredder. However, Dragon Lord, a new villain from the Realm of Dreams captures Splinter while he is meditating. The Shinobi master Chung I sends his pupil to help the Turtles reclaim their master.

1 - 2 STAFF OF BU-KI

Dragon Lord steals the Staff of Buki and seeks out Venus to destroy her. Venus, meanwhile, is disrupting the Turtles when training. Dragon Lord lures Venus away and prepares to destroy her but the Turtles defeat the Dragon Lord and save her.

1 - 3 SILVER AND GOLD

The Turtles come across a gangster ape, Silver, who is plotting to steal a gold repository.

1 - 4 MEET DR. QUEASE

Donatello has dragged Michaelangelo to a scientific convention so that Don can hear the mutant-related theories of the eccentric Dr. Quease (Donny thinks the Doc is brilliant, Mikey thinks that he's a quack). Quease, ever on the edge of scientific discovery, wears a direct neural (brain) implant that jacks him directly into the internet, as well as giving him the ability to jack into any computerized machine. Suddenly, a group of the Dragon Lord's Rank warriors burst into the lecture hall and abduct Dr. Quease, escaping before the TMNT have a chance to react. The Dragon Lord has captured Dr. Quease in order to combine the doctor's scientific expertise with DL's vast occult knowledge. The Dragon Lord attempts to entice Dr. Quease to work for him by giving him a lab full of state-of-the-art equipment. Amongst the apparatus in this lab is a stolen classified device called the Heliumcooled Cyber 600, the most powerful dissection machine ever built, and something that Quease had only dreamed of working with. Donatello, meanwhile, tries to convince the other Turtles to mount a rescue attempt of the Doc, but the others think that it's too dangerous to risk a break-in into the Dragon Lord's HQ. And so, under cover of the night, Donatello sets out to rescue Dr. Quease... alone... After successfully sneaking into Dragon-central and freeing Quease, Don gets captured by the Dragon Lord's forces due to the "good" Doctor's suddenly agreeing to side with the Dragons. Now, with the capture of Donatello, the obviously mad scientist has a perfect mutant specimen... to dissect! Fortunately for Donny, the other Turtles come to his rescue. While Leo, Raph and Venus battle the Rank Dragons in a whirling wonderment of Ninja and Shinobi-style martial arts mayhem, Mikey successfully frees Don by splicing Quease's neural brain jack directly into one of Mike's hand-held video games, which sets the quack scientist fighting against the Dragons like a remote control toy! Vanishing into the sewers, Don admits to his fellow Turtles that he was wrong about Quease... the Doc wasn't a brilliant scientist but a mad one! Donny admits that he was blinded by his love of science.

1 - 5 ALL IN THE FAMILY

While jogging through the city's sewers, the five Turtles find an animal cage holding a live endangered baby hawksbill sea turtle. The TMNT discover the man responsible for capturing the little terrapin -- Simon Bonesteel -- just as the poacher is about to sell the baby turtle to a dealer in illegal wildlife trade. After a brief introductory skirmish with Bonesteel and his overcoat's seemingly endless arsenal of weaponry, the Turtles manage to escape with the young hawksbill. Bonesteel, however, is far from beaten and vows to take up the hunt--- the hunt for Ninja Turtles! The TMNT are barely a few sewer blocks away when Bonesteel attacks anew. The fight is fast and furious as Bonesteel proves to be as much a physically powerful street brawler as he is adept at using bull whips, crossbows and steel net snares. Seeing that they appear to be evenly matched, the TMNT and Bonesteel agree to a truce of sorts. Each side going their respective ways; the Turtles with the baby turtle and Bonesteel with his dignity. It isn't until several sewer blocks later that the TMNT realize that Bonesteel had tricked them, somehow making off with the infant hawksbill! After careful consideration, and a quick education about the perils of illegal trade in endangered turtles and the legal (though no less deadly) turtle pet industry, the five Turtles decide to hunt the hunter. And hunt Bonesteel they do, poaching the poacher and saving the baby sea turtle, while seeing the commonality that they share with the Earth's endangered species. Bonesteel, of course, again vows to return and take up the hunt again --- the greatest of all hunts, the hunt for the world's only five mutant turtles!

1 - 6 TRUSTING DR. QUEASE

When Dragon Lord and Dr. Quease have an argument, Quease contacts Donatello because, in his mind, they are the two most brilliant creators on the planet and he thinks they should work together. Don is naturally suspicious, but can't resist the opportunity to collaborate with the great, though deranged, scientist.

1 - 7 WINDFALL

One night, Silver brakes into the apartment of a poor old man who just so happens to be in possession of a winning lottery ticket. Obsessed with money Silver threatens the man to give him the ticket, but the old man bravely throws it out the window where it disappears down the storm water drain. On his way back to the lair, Michelangelo accidentally steps on the ticket and arrives home finding it stuck to his foot. Naturally Michelangelo plans to collect the winning, but the other turtles quickly become aware of what he has and quickly dream up of a million and one things to spend the cash on. Little do our green heroes know is that Silver is onto them and plans to get back his stolen ticket.

1 - 8 TURTLE'S NIGHT OUT

After a late-night encounter with Bonesteel, Mikey comes up with a novel idea, an all-night rave for animal rights where everybody has to come dressed as their favorite beast. But the Turtles, who are lounging about in the human world, are no where to be found when a gang of no-good villains crash the party.

1 - 9 MUTANT REFLECTIONS

The Turtles have a hard time sorting out who's who when their evil counterparts start popping up everywhere - and they look like just like our heroes!

1 - 10 TRUCE OR CONSEQUENCES

Mikey's ego is further inflated when Wick and the Rank start their own radio fan club. The dragons say they are tired of Dragon Lord's oppressive regime, and want to help the Turtles send him back into the mirror. Are they serious or is it just another trick?

1 - 11 SEWER CRASH

As Don is scanning the Web for information, someone breaks into his computer and sends him a coded message - one that reprograms Don's brain! Now the Turtles' techno-savvy teammate has been turned into a cyperpunk super thief!

1 - 12 GOING APE

Raphael is enjoying one of his favorite past times (harassing crazed poacher Simon Bonesteel), when a platoon of Rank warriors decide to join the game. Still, evading one Bonehead and six dragons in an old Victorian house is no problem for Raph - until an escaped Gorilla shows up!

1 - 13 ENEMY OF MY ENEMY

Splinter is returning to the lair when he spots a man being beaten up by a gang of kids. After he saves the man, he realizes that the man is the Shredder! Splinter takes him back to the lair to try and help him. Dragon Lord finds out that the Shredder has a magic relic called the Golden Shuriken and he sends out the Rank to find him. The Shredder awakens and agrees to help the Turtles in their "way of the green" (like picking up garbage, racking leaves), but just for that night. They go into the sewers to pick up garbage but the Rank and Wick arrive to capture the Shredder. Shredder runs away, leaving the Turtles to take on the Rank. Splinter follows him back up to the street and asks him about the Golden Shuriken that belonged to his Master Yoshi. Shredder denies owning it and leaves, but he actually does have the Golden Shuriken. Splinter explains to the Turtles that the Gold Shuriken is a very powerful relic and it is very important to him that he has it back. Dragon Lord tracks Shredder to a laundry mat and tries to take the Shuriken from him. Donatello also tracks the Shuriken to the laundry mat and they arrive just as Dragon Lord had the Shuriken in his hands. They hit it out of Dragon Lord's hands and a battle takes place. Afterwards Splinter holds the Shuriken for a brief moment before the Shredder takes it back from him and escapes.

1 - 14 KING WICK

When an alchemy accident gives the evil Wick telekinetic powers, he not only uses it over the Dragon Lord, but he puts the Ninja Turtles to the test, too!

1 - 15 THE GOOD DRAGON

When Venus' life is saved by one of the Dragon Lord's Rank warriors, the Turtles are forced to re-examine their views on the dragons. Now the "good" dragon is trying to escape the Dragonian Spirit Seeker that is stalking him. Venus wants to help him but Raph still thinks the only good dragon is a dead dragon.

1 - 16 THE GUEST

When Splinter's chess opponent is thrown out of his apartment, he moves in with the Turtles for a few days. It's bad enough that the reptilian roommates have to conceal their identities from the old blind man, but it's even harder putting up with the old fellow's idiosyncrasies!

1 - 17 LIKE BROTHERS

The continuing conflict between Raphael and Leonardo comes to a head, again. This time, however, Mike and Don get dragged into it. As the argument rages on, the Turtles reflect on past conflicts, and Raph decides to move out for good.

1 - 18 UNCHAIN MY HEART (1-4)

While the Turtles are busy evading Bonesteel, and old enemy of Chung I's arrives in New York to destroy Chung I's former student -- the Shinobi Shaman Mei Peih Chi -- also known as Venus!

1 - 19 WHO NEEDS HER

Venus accidentally traps someone by a forcefield, the Turtles begin to question her value to the team, recounting her numerous mistakes in the past. They decide that they'd be better off without her, but when they do, the Turtles discover the Rank has kidnapped Venus.

HEROES

The epic drama Heroes chronicles the lives of ordinary people who discover they possess extraordinary abilities. As a total eclipse casts its shadow across the globe, viewers follow a genetics professor in India whose father's disappearance leads him to uncover a secret theory -- there are people with super powers living among us. A young dreamer tries to convince his politician brother that he can fly.

A high school cheerleader learns that she is totally indestructible. A Las Vegas stripper, struggling to make ends meet to support her young son, uncovers that her mirror image has a secret. A prison inmate mysteriously finds himself waking up outside of his cell. A gifted artist, whose drug addiction is destroying his life and the relationship with his girlfriend, can paint the future. A down-on-his-luck beat cop can hear people's thoughts, including the secrets of a captured terrorist. In Japan, a young man develops a way to stop time through sheer will power. Their ultimate destiny is nothing less than saving the world.

Heroes is an American drama television series, created by Tim Kring, which premiered on NBC on September 25, 2006. The series tells the story of several people who "thought they were like everyone else... until they woke with incredible abilities" such as telepathy, time travel and flight. These people soon realize they have a role in preventing a catastrophe and saving mankind.

The series loosely follows the writing style of American comics by doing short, multi-episode story arcs that build upon a larger, more encompassing arc. Even with small story arcs that move the story forward, Kring said he mapped out where he intends the show to go for the next five seasons.

When the series premiered in the United States, it was the night's most-watched program among adults 18-49, attracting 14.3 million viewers overall and receiving the highest rating for any NBC drama premiere in five years.

The show features an ensemble cast of twelve main characters. Although NBC's cast page lists only ten characters, Leonard Roberts, who first appeared in the series' fifth episode, was an additional member of the original full-time cast. Later, Jack Coleman was upgraded from a recurring role to become the twelfth full-time castmember as of the eleventh episode. [

Claire Bennet (Hayden Panettiere), a cheerleader who lives in Odessa, Texas, with the ability of spontaneous regeneration.

Mr. Bennet (Jack Coleman) is Claire's adoptive father who works for an unnamed organization dealing with the abduction of people with superhuman abilities.

Simone Deveaux (Tawny Cypress), an art dealer who sells paintings created by her ex-boyfriend, Isaac, in her gallery.

D.L. Hawkins (Leonard Roberts), a man who recently escaped from prison, with the power to alter his physical tangibility and phase through solid objects, both inanimate and organic.

Isaac Mendez (Santiago Cabrera), an artist living in New York who can paint random future events during precognitive trances. He also writes and draws a comic book, 9th Wonders!.

Hiro Nakamura (Masi Oka), a programmer from Tokyo with the ability to manipulate the space-time continuum.

Matt Parkman (Greg Grunberg), a Los Angeles police officer with the ability to hear other people's thoughts.

Nathan Petrelli (Adrian Pasdar), a New York congressional candidate with the ability to fly.

Peter Petrelli (Milo Ventimiglia), a former hospice nurse and Nathan's younger brother. He has the ability to temporarily mimic the powers of others when in close proximity. He also experiences clairvoyant dreams.

Micah Sanders (Noah Gray-Cabey), the son of D.L. And Niki. He is a child prodigy and has an unspecified power that, so far, has only been used to temporarily repair an out-of-order pay phone.

Niki Sanders (Ali Larter), the wife of D.L. And mother to Micah. A former internet stripper from Las Vegas, she has an alternate personality that identifies itself as Niki's dead sister, Jessica. When Jessica has taken control, she exhibits superhuman strength.

Mohinder Suresh (Sendhil Ramamurthy), a genetics professor from India who travels to New York to investigate the death of his father, Chandra. Through his investigations, he comes into contact with people his father listed as possessing superhuman abilities.

The show also features a large number of guest and recurring characters.

Production notes

When the writing team works on an episode, each writer takes a character and writes the individual scenes surrounding that character. These stories are then combined and given to the episode writer, allowing every writer to contribute to every episode.

A special 72-minute version of the pilot was first screened to a large audience at the 2006 Comic Con in San Diego.

The series is filmed in Los Angeles and Santa Clarita, California.

In keeping with the comic book thematic elements used in the show, professional comic book artist Tim Sale was brought in to provide the artwork used as the work of Isaac Mendez. Mendez's work in the 9th Wonders! Comic book on the show is also the work of Sale. Additionally, the font used throughout the show in the various captions and credits is reminiscent of traditional hand-rendered comic book lettering. The font was created by Sale and is based on his handwriting style.

Symbolism

The helix

Activating Evolution Several elements appear repeatedly throughout the series: the helix, the scar, the eclipse, the virus, the cockroach, and Chandra Suresh's book, Activating Evolution.

The "helix," as it is referred to by the writers, is a symbol that first appears in the episode "Don't Look Back". Writer and co-producer Aron Coleite has stated that it literally means "God sending great ability." The symbol frequently appears as a pattern formed by mundane objects, but it also recurs on certain plot-significant items and on several characters.

A mark consisting of two black parallel lines has been shown close to the neck of multiple super-powered characters. The mark is the scar left by the two-pronged needle of a pneumatic injection device, which, as revealed in a biography of Hana Gitelman in the Heroes 360 experience, injects a radioisotope to allow tracking.

A virus is revealed at the end of the first season that targets individuals with special abilities. It is named the Shanti virus, after Dr. Chandra Suresh's daughter, the first one known to have fallen ill as a result of the virus. The Company has hired Mohinder Suresh to find a cure, though currently the antibodies in his blood are the only cure. Starting with episode 7, the virus becomes the central plot element to the second season. After Peter and Caitlin are taken into the future (2008), they find that 93% of the world's population has been wiped out by the mysterious virus.

A solar eclipse has been a recurring image in the series itself, and is also used as the series' logo. A terrestrial eclipse (an eclipse in which the Earth covers the Sun, as viewed from observation pointing away from the Earth) is used in the series' title sequence.

Cockroaches have appeared and have been mentioned several times in the series, particularly in relation to the villain Sylar. Tim Kring has stated in an interview that the cockroach represents survival.

Activating Evolution is a book written by Chandra Suresh. It describes Suresh's discoveries and predictions about the emergence of humans evolved with special abilities. It has been read by or given to many of the characters with abilities and is considered a source of information regarding their conditions.

Music

Music from the first season is composed by Wendy Melvoin and Lisa Coleman, with vocals provided by Shenkar. The second season brought the addition of Manon Dave to the music team.

The Rogue Wave song "Eyes" from the Just Friends soundtrack is featured in the Season 1 episodes "Genesis" and "Collision".

In France, the theme music of Heroes is composed by Victoria Petrosillo. Her song, Le Héros d'un autre, is used by television network TF1 to replace the show's original incidental music. The network created a new opening credit sequence in order to play Petrosillo's theme song.

Emerson lawsuit

On October 2, 2006, Emerson Electric Company, an appliance market competitor of NBC's owner General Electric, filed suit in federal court against NBC. The suit was in regard to a scene that appeared in "Genesis", the first episode of season one, when Claire Bennet reached into an active garbage disposal unit labeled "In-Sink-Erator" to retrieve a ring and severely mangled her hand. Emerson claimed the scene "casts the disposer in an unsavory light, irreparably tarnishing the product" by suggesting serious injuries would result "in the event consumers were to accidentally insert their hand into one."

Emerson had asked for a ruling barring future broadcasts of the pilot, which was previously available on NBC's website and had already aired on NBC Universal-owned cable networks USA Network and The Sci Fi Channel. It also sought to block NBC from using any Emerson trademarks in the future.

On February 23, 2007, the case against NBC was dropped. NBC Universal and Emerson Electric reached an agreement to settle the lawsuit outside of court.

The episode in question was briefly unavailable in the iTunes Store, but an edited version was soon made available for download. A non-edited version of the episode was shown in the BBC Two premiere on July 25, 2007. The DVD and HD DVD releases contain an edited version where the "In-Sink-Erator" label has been removed from the scene.

Critical acclaim

After completing half of its first season, Heroes had already collected an assortment of honors and accolades.

On December 10, 2006, the American Film Institute named Heroes one of the ten "best television programs of the year."

Three days later on December 13, the Writers Guild of America nominated the program for "best new series" of 2007.

The next day (December 14), the Hollywood Foreign Press Association nominated the program for a Golden Globe Award for "best television drama", and nominated Masi Oka (Hiro Nakamura) for Best Supporting Actor on a TV Series.

Heroes won the award for Favorite New TV Drama at the 2007 People's Choice Awards.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People nominated Heroes on January 9, 2007 for an Image Award in the "Outstanding Drama Series" category.

On February 21, 2007, it was announced that Heroes was nominated for five Saturn Awards. The nominations included "Best Network Television Series", "Best Supporting Actor in a Television Series" for both Greg Grunberg and Masi Oka, and "Best Supporting Actress in a Television Series" for Hayden Panettiere and Ali Larter.[47] The series won the award for "Best Network Television Series"; as well, Masi Oka and Hayden Panettiere won the awards they were nominated for.

On July 19, 2007, the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences announced their nominations for the 2007 Primetime Emmy awards. Heroes was nominated in eight categories, including Outstanding Drama Series. The first episode, "Genesis", earned six nominations: Outstanding Directing (David Semel), Outstanding Art Direction for a Single-Camera Series, Outstanding Single-Camera Picture Editing for a Drama Series, Outstanding Sound Mixing for a Comedy or Drama Series, and Outstanding Stunt Coordination. The episode "Five Years Gone" also received a nomination for Outstanding Visual Effects for a Series. Masi Oka was nominated for Outstanding Supporting Actor in a Drama Series. On September 16, 2007, the 59th Primetime Emmy Awards were held and Heroes failed to win a single Emmy award despite the eight nominations.

On July 21, 2007, the Television Critics Association awarded Heroes with the prestigious Outstanding Program of the Year title during their 23rd Annual TCA Awards ceremony.

The cast of Heroes was named in the 2006 Time Magazine's Person of the Year issue under "People Who Mattered".

Response to criticism

In an interview with Entertainment Weekly, Heroes creator Tim Kring commented on criticism of season two, and the series' 15% decline in the ratings. Kring said that he felt he had made mistakes with the direction of season two. He had thought that the audience was looking for a "build-up of characters and the discovery of their powers", similar to that of season one, when viewers were instead looking for "adrenaline."

Kring also outlined what he felt were problems with plot development, stating that the second season "took too long to get to the big-picture story", explaining that Peter's vision of the viral armageddon should have occurred in the first episode instead of the seventh. He feels that it would have been better to introduce new characters within the context of the main storyline, as with Elle, rather than in unattached arcs such as that of Maya and Alejandro. Kring also admitted that he should have resolved the "Hiro in Japan" storyline much more quickly, and that the romantic stories aren't working well. With regards to Claire and West, and Hiro and Yaeko, he said "I've seen more convincing romances on TV. In retrospect, I don't think romance is a natural fit for us.

Comparisons to other works

The show's creators have answered criticism over similarities between elements of the show and the X-Men in their live blog, saying "I think there is a shorthand to compare it to X-Men when you have not yet seen the show. However, my guess is that that comparison will go away once you have seen what we are doing."

In March 2007, two New York artists, Clifton Mallery and his wife Amnau Karam Eele, filed a lawsuit against NBC claiming the creators of the show had plagiarized a plot-line about an artist who can paint the future in a short story, a painting series and a short film that they exhibited in 2004 and 2005. In the lawsuit the artists claim that the character Isaac Mendez is "strikingly similar" to one they created.

Other media

Television

Heroes Unmasked is a series on BBC that goes behind-the-scenes of the production of Heroes. Many details of Heroes are revealed, including set design, props, special effects and costuming, as well as blue and green screen animation.

In November 2007 the BBC made 4 short '2 Dimensional' films where actors from the series look through a '2' shaped hole into a room which reflects the character they play in Heroes.

U.S. Network G4 began airing Heroes episodes on November 3, 2007, along with an American version of Heroes Unmasked entitled The Post Show. The series, which will air following Heroes, includes interviews, live viewer commentary, interactive polls, behind-the-scenes footage and other Heroes. Content. U.S. Television network MOJO HD also began airing Heroes episodes in High Definition in October 2007.

Heroes Evolutions is a digital extension of the series released on January 19, 2007 which explores the Heroes universe and provides clues to the show's mythology. It was entitled Heroes 360 Experience throughout the first season and rebranded for the second season.

Complete episodes of Heroes are available online, along with downloads through the "NBC Direct" service. NBC's site also hosts episode commentaries, featuring producers and cast and crew members. Episodes are also available on iTunes, although this arrangement will cease in December 2007 as NBC and Apple Inc. Were unable to come to a renewal deal.[65].

Heroes writers Joe Pokaski and Aron Coleite hold a weekly "Question and Answer" column hosted by comicbookresources.com entitled Behind the Eclipse [66]. Every week, since October 23rd, 2006, Joe Pokaski and Aron Coleite have answered questions regarding the previous weeks episodes, before the airing of the Monday night episode. Questions are submitted by fans and CBR editors. Currently, the column is on hold until the end of the writers' strike.

Show producer and director Greg Beeman also host a weekly blog on his blogspot where he discusses how the episode is shot and gives spoilers for the upcoming episode. This is usually posted on Mondays, prior to the airing of Heroes on NBC. The Beeman Blog began on August 4th, 2006.

Heroes Interactive is an interactive website which began operation on January 29, 2007, during the airing of "The Fix". Hosted at NBC.com, it offers behind the scenes information, polls, trivia, and quizzes, as well as recent posts by Hana Gitelman. The features air once a week, and are designed to be viewed concurrently with that week's episode.

HIGHLANDER

The series follows the fortunes of one immortal, Duncan MacLeod of the clan MacLeod, known to his friends as Mac and to other immortals as the Highlander. Immortal can only be killed by being beheaded. They remain hidden among everyday mortals, but when confronted by another immortal, must do battle, with the winner beheading the loser to receive the Quickening, a transfer of power energy and knowledge from one immortal to another. This will continue until only one is left alive (or the ratings slide, whichever comes soonest).

Duncan has tried to turn his back on this tradition and live his life unnoticed among mortals. But other immortals keep seeking him out and putting his warrior skills to yet another ultimate test. He also has to contend with the prying media and suspicious authorities.

In the first season MacLeod runs an antique shop and lives with his girlfriend, sculptress Tessa Noel, the series regular was Richie Ryan, a young kid from the wrong side of the tracks, befriended by MacLeod after breaking into his shop.

Early in season 2, Tessa is killed in a random act of violence and her death inspires MacLeod to become more involved with mortal affairs and strive to improve the sorry state of the world. Richie 'Killed' in the same shocking incident that claimed Tessa's life, becomes immortal himself and briefly goes off on his own. MacLeod meanwhile sells his shop and moves into a loft above a martial arts studio run by black belted, black Italian Charlie De Salvo.

Another new recurring character was Joe Dawson, a member of an age old organisation known as the Watchers. Introduced at the end of the season one, The Watchers have observed and chronicled the Immortals through many generations. Joe is an admirer of MacLeod and, after an initial confrontation, the two become allies. Joe and MacLeod also have to confront the renegade Watchers who believe the only good immortal is a dead one and periodically comes after MacLeod's head.

Season three introduced a powerful new nemesis for MacLeod, Kalas (played by British actor David Robb), an immortal former monk with the voice of an angel, whose swordsmanship and power forces Mac to flee to France. In a season-ending clash atop the Eiffel Tower, the fight a climactic duel to the death. Mac also loved and lost a trauma surgeon, Anne Lindsey, before finally admitting his love for Amanda, the immortal cat-burgler introduced in the first season and brought back as a recurring character.

Season Four brought things full circle, with Duncan returning to the land of his birth (albeit briefly). It also introduced some interesting new Immortals (Kanis, the master of hounds; Mikey, the giant idiot) brought back some friends (Andrew Cord, Kenny, the child Immortal) and villains (Kanwulf the Destroyer who killed Duncan's father; Mark Roszca, who killed Tessa and Richie in the second season). Unfortunately, though, Big Things are happening behind the scenes, as Watchers are being murdered. The problem comes to the forefront in everyone's mind when Joe Dawson is put on trial by the Watchers for revealing their existence to Duncan MacLeod and a price is put on Duncan's head.

Season Five brings more tangles to the web that is Duncan's life: Methos persuades Richie to give up his sword, and Kronos, one of the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, turns out to be real . . . and an Immortal. Then people Duncan has killed over the years begin showing up alive and seemingly well. Is it the coming Millennium? An archaeologist warns Duncan that demons are awakening and that Duncan has been chosen to fight the coming evil-but he is tricked into killing Richie Ryan.

Lisa Howard is also a regular cast member of EARTH: FINAL CONFLICT. The series has certainly attracted its share of big name guests, including the Who's Roger Daltrey, in a recurring role as MacLeod's old compatriot, Hugh Fitzcain, singer Sheena Easton and Adrian Paul's own wife Meilani, known throughout the US as a star of a Diet Pepsi ad. English actor Peter Wingfield also stars in the longest running radio play in the world The Archers. At the end of the sixth season Adrian Paul wanted to leave the show, resulting in only 13 episodes being made, and the search for a new immortal to replace him.

Adrian Paul also starred in the 1980s invasion show WAR OF THE WORLDS. Highlander the TV series is based upon a series of Highlander theatrical films, the third of which has been released since the television series debut. Both the film and TV series are about immortals, people who can only die by having their heads chopped off. The first film started out as a college film project by Gregory Widen. It introduces us to immortal Connor MacLeod who is born in 1518. In 1536 he is killed in battle but he recovers.

Because of this he is banished from his village. Since he has obviously made a pact with the devil. Several years later he meets Rameriz who informs him that they are both immortal and involved in the Gathering. In the Gathering all the immortals will be drawn to a city in a far away land where they will chop off each other's heads until only one is left alive. This last immortal will receive the prize. Years later in 1985 Connor ends up in New York City where he wins the prize after chopping off the head of an immortal named Kurgan.

Despite only moderate success at the box office in America, Highlander proved to be a world-wide success. A second film Highlander 2: The Quickening was made. This was an extremely bad film, with numerous subplots. Set in the future it features Connor and Rameriz (who returns from the dead) battling a group of terrorists intent on destroying a shield which has replaced the Earth's depleted ozone layer. It also reveals that the immortals are all alien prisoners sent to Earth to live forever as punishment. The second Highlander movie made little sense. It is one of those really bad films that one watches just to see how bad it is. The third and to date last Highlander film wisely ignores the events of the second movie, although it appears to be set in a different reality than the TV series is. Like the third film, the Highlander TV series ignores the events of the second film. The TV series appears to be set before the events of the first film. Since there are other immortals alive and they know that Connor is not the last one, however in one episode a reference is made to Connor having killed Kurgan, which would indicate the series is set after the first movie! The central character in the series is Duncan MacLeod, an immortal who is a clansman of Connor's (who appears in the first episode).

Like Connor, Duncan was also born in 15th century Scotland. When the series starts Duncan is an antiques dealer who is living with his mortal girlfriend Tessa Wyatt. He ends up befriending Richie Ryan, a street wise youth whom he catches breaking into his home. Richie later turns out to be an immortal, something Duncan appears to have recognised in him. Immortals have several differences from normal humans and have a number of rules which they all live by. They can only be killed by having their head chopped off. When this happens their quickening is released in a huge pyrotechnic display. If another immortal is around he gets the dying immortals quickening, which is apparently all of his knowledge. If an immortal is 'killed' in a manner which would kill a normal person he dies but soon recovers. The length of time it takes for him to recover depends on the severity of his cause of death. An immortal does not age and remains at the age he or she was at time of their first death.

Immortals have a sixth sense which allows them to sense when they are another immortal. Immortals are sterile and unable to have any children, even before they learn they are immortals. Immortals also have a rule which all, including even the most evil, they must obey: prohibiting the fighting of each other on Holy Ground. The population as a whole is also unaware of the existence of immortals.

Most episodes have Duncan facing off against another immortal and ending with him taking head in a sword fight. All of the episodes also feature flashback segments in which Duncan recalls from his past which bear a striking similarity to a situation which he currently finds himself in. During the course of the series many changes occur in Duncan's life. Tessa and Richie are killed by a street punk, it is at this point that Richie realises he is immortal when he recovers from death. Duncan learns of a group of mortals known as the Watchers. The Watchers as a group have identifying and keeping track of immortals for centuries, although they do not get themselves involved. Duncan befriends Joe Dawson, one of the Watchers. Duncan meets Joe and learns about the Watchers, rogue Watcher goes on a rampage and begins a crusade to behead immortals.

Duncan also befriends DeSalvo after buying a gym owned by Charlie, whom he lets stay on to manage the place. Duncan also has a new girlfriend, Dr. Anne Lindsay. The pair eventually split up yet remain friends. There are also quite a few immortals whom Duncan is on good terms with and meets up with sporadic intervals. His on again off again girlfriend Amanda is an immortal thief who is always comes to Duncan when she needs his help. Methos is the world's oldest living immortal, who has built myth surrounding his very existence. Methos has taken on the job of as the Watcher assigned to Methos if he is indeed real. Each season a number of episodes are made in France. In France the Highlander movie was the top grossing film of all time. Due to the film's huge popularity in France, the series has French co-production with about a third of episodes being made there.

This results in having jaunt across the Atlantic mid way through each season only to find some compelling reason to return to North America at the start of the next season. The 1994 TV season also saw the start of Highlander: the Animated Series on the USA network. The series does not include any of the characters from either the films or the TV series, not even set in the present. Set in the 27th century. Highlander: the Animated Series centres' Quentin MacLeod the last immortal. Quentin is battling a tyrant named Kortan who rules an apocalypse Earth.

Adrian Paul who stars as MacLeod, studied Kung-Fu and Kung-Fu swordwork for five years - ideal qualifications for his role as the darkly brooding Immortal, and the regular duels are Impressively stages in some spectacular locations, notable the roof of the Paris opera house. Christopher Lambert turned up as the mentor of Duncan MacLeod in the series' opening episode.

The series has certainly attracted its fair share of big-name guests, including The Who's Roger Daltrey, in a recurring role as MacLeod's old compatriot, Hugh Fitzcairn, singer Sheena Easton and Adrian Paul's own wife Meilani, known throughout the US as the star of a Diet Pepsi ad.

At the end of the sixth season the star of the show actor Adrain Paul wanted to move on from the show, he agreed to star in the fourth Highlander film, but refused to take part in more than 13 episodes of for the sixth season. It was decided to try to continue the franchise without him by introducing a brand new female immortal, throughout the sixth season several different actresses were introduced in the show, as possible replacement for MacLeod, in the end however the fans favourite Amanda D'Arie was chosen played by Elizabeth Gracen, who took the lead in the spin-off series HIGHLANDER : THE RAVEN, which is also produced and created by the same people who created Highlander.

The series executive producers were Bill Panzer, Peter Davis, Marla Ginsburg and Christian Charret, supervising producers were David Adbramowitz and Kevin Droney, the theme tune for the show was "Princes of the Universe" performed by Queen, and taken from the original Highlander film. The UK premiere for the show was on the 3rd April 1994. The co-executive producer was Steven Maier, Sheryl Hardy and Guy Collins. The producers for the series Barry Rosen and Gary Goodman. The music was created by Roger Bellon.

HIGHLANDER - THE RAVEN

Amanda an immortal thief steals some expensive jewels only to find that the fence which she attempts to sell them too is robbed and killed, and she is suspected of the murder. Investigating the murder is cop Lt. Nick Wolfe, who suspects that Amanda is involved in the killing, until he realises that Amanda has never killed anybody in any of her robberies and would not be as careless as to leave the murder weapon in her apartment. She is helped by Lucy her friend who attempts to protect her from the police, as the evidence of her being a murder suspect increases.

Amanda, suspected that she is being framed by the police goes on the run, whilst attempting to find the real murderer, who soon strikes again. Nick comes to realise that one of five police officers must be the suspect, but after suspecting his partner he finds out that it is another cop who was at the scene who was doing all the robberies. Amanda also finds this out from an Immortal friend who was "Killed" by the robber who recognises the robbers voice. Amanda follows the cop only to save the life of Nick who has just found out about it.

In the final showdown, at a deserted ware house, Nick's partner is killed and so is Amanda, but whilst grieving the lose of his partner, Amanda recovers in front of Nick, it is then that he suspects that she cannot die. At the funeral for his partner, Nick realises that the police want to cover up the indiscretion of the corrupt cop, and keep it out of the papers, this is too much for Nick who promptly resigns from the police force.

This show is the spin-off show to Highlander, which was cancelled due to Adrian Paul, who played Immortal Duncan Macloed wanting to leave. The character of Amanda was also taken from the original HIGHLANDER TV series. The HIGHLANDER spin-off has been shot in Paris and Toronto with promises of sword fights and flashbacks, gunfights and chases, Mortal and Immortal dilemmas. Part of the appeal should be the 'will they, won't they' angle as everyone except them realises how attracted they are to each other. The series was first shown in the UK on the sci-fi Channel in November 1998, in the midst of a vast amount of advertising in the British science fiction press. This was only a few months after it's US debut in September of 1998.

The shows producers thought long and hard before finally coming round to the idea that the perfect person to carry the sword of immortality forwards was non other than series semi-regular, the gorgeous buy mischievous Amanda. Strange it took them so long really when all indications from their extensive market research which, incidentally, incorporated 'taster episodes', questionnaires and consultations with fan clubs and Internet users, pointed to the fact that one of the most popular characters was undoubtedly Duncon MacLeod's sometime lover as portrayed by former Miss America, Elizabeth Gracen.

This season, the highly anticipated Highlander "spin-off" series lends the legacy to a lighter, more romantically adventuresome mentality where the division of mortal and immortal is more clearly defined and more interactive - at least in Amanda's circle. Gone are the days of immortal introspection and brooding over the necessity of immortal isolation; rather Raven leads us into a world where immortal and mortal interaction is an everyday thing, much like the original movie proclaimed, where, for one mortal in particular, knowledge is a matter of life and death - weekly! And this time Highlander has added a gender bender Raven is a series built on its own merits which happens to revolve within the Highlander world. Leading the show is the immortal Amanda, who is going through a twelve century mid-life crisis, played by the equally endearing actress, Elizabeth Gracen. And in a departure from Highlander's format, Raven co-stars the personable Paul Johansson who plays ex-cop Nick Wolfe.

Surprisingly, even while shooting Highlander's two-part series finale (To Be or Not to Be) in Paris, and through the mists of rumour and suggestion, Miss Gracen had no idea she was up for the part. "It was quite a surprise... there were a lot of rumours about a new show, a spin-off, possibly with a woman, and I didn't even think about it. I've always had a lot of different irons in the fire and was just very thrilled and surprised that they were going to develop Amanda.

It May Have Taken a while but as Ginsburg points out, now is a time for growth: growth of the legacy, growth of the characters, and even broadening the horizon of episodic expectations. "There's real fun about being able to do a spin-off, particularly when you're dealing with characters that have a precedent existence. In the real world, theory has it that we grow, and often in series you're relegated to: this is who the character is and viewers want to come to that every week. The really fun thing to both the franchise of Highlander's and having Elizabeth's character is that we were able to say, 'You know there are some things we want to keep. We want to keep that she's a thief.' I think the notion of a likeable thief, a loveable scoundrel is a really fun arena. "On the other hand that doesn't mean that someone can't grow. And that's where Nick, her co-lead, comes in, because he provides her with her moral code. He asks her questions and makes her look at the consequences on mortal lives of her mortal behaviour."

Indeed, Highlander's looks and feels different for the first time in over six years, "by virtue of the fact that it's a woman, by virtue of the fact that the person in her life is a mortal man." Ginsburg promises that "we've kept what we loved about Highlander's, but we've given ourselves the freedom to create a few new rules and go in a few new directions. We still have really bad guys, Quickenings, sword fights and all of that good stuff, but we also have a really dynamic, interpersonal relationship which MacLeod had in the first season with Tessa. But Mac-was sort of a dark, brooding, contemplative character and Amanda is a bright, life-loving, less introspective character. The mortal Nick is the one who makes her look."

Nick is in many ways the polar opposite of Amanda, which only adds to the series' central spark - the hostile-affectionate romancing. While she is a thief and light hearted, Nick is, even after leaving the police, a law enforcer who takes everything to heart. "I think he has to face a lot of his demons," Paul Johansson surmises. "He's got a lot of hostility and he has to find some way to let it go. You know, people die young, people get shot, do the wrong thing, you know, nobody told Nick this stuff; he learned it the hard way. He's also very alone." It is this sense of loneliness both characters come to recognise in their lives, and perhaps in each other. Amanda is finally discovering that she cannot simply walk through humanity and leave it untouched by her passing when Nick realises he; can't walk through life ' unscathed. "Amanda really is the light for him," Johansson surmises.

It is this new exploration of immortal relationships that adds a much overdue and greatly appreciated edge to the series' root mythology - a part of the Highlander's universe which had become noticeably missing from the first season, says Ginsburg. "Don't forget we are traversing two universes now. With Mac, it was just the immortal world, but with Amanda, she willingly, gladly and openly interfaces with mortals - somewhat irresponsibly at times. Nick is a cop - you may take him out of the force but he's a cop. Paul lohansson brings a very warm personal quality performance. He's a wonderful, likeable guy. He's a man's man and a woman's man. He's not so gorgeous that he's pretty, and he's not too pretty to hang out with the guys and have a beer.

"All this grounds you in a reality that the original Highlander didn't have. Adrian was like a reluctant hero. She is not even interested in being a hero - Nick is, and he is her morality and demands her character grow. She falls for him because he doesn't just fall for her. He questions and challenges her." He emphasis on a romantic intrigue promises to keep viewers both enthralled and entertained, something that was present when Highlander first started, but soon ended with the death of Mac's girlfriend, Tessa. As Ginsburg says, "Amanda enjoys more of the up side. Mac was really tortured by the fact that everyone he loved died. Amanda has never really loved anyone before Nick, and that relationship will evolve very slowly. So far, they haven't done the deed, and I don't know if they will this season. It's an uneasy romance and it's really interesting."

Through all her growing pains, Gracen sees Amanda's sojourn through the ages as a necessary toughening exercise. "I think the thing that makes her so appealing to me as an actor is her humour. She's jaded to what we politely call eccentric. If you consider, this person has lived that long and seen the atrocities of man against man - sometimes, myself, as a human being making my way through the world, I think if I didn't t have humour I'd be lost. So, she is able to look at things in a different, wry way. That probably helps her survive as well."

And it's not just Amanda's sense of humour that helps this actress along; but rather, along with the physical joy of the show's sword fights and subterfuge, Amanda and Elizabeth revel in the flashback scenes! "It's a blast. When you get all dressed up in a costume and play a 1790's sword fighter and having these long red ringlets, I feel like a swashbuckler, wielding my sword, lifting my skirt and jumping over barrels of hay. It's so much fun! But also it's quite difficult and challenging, trying to figure out how this person can defend herself and still be corseted up in hoop skirts." Gracen has said before that she really enjoys the Twenties, and Amanda really seems to shine with that flare herself. So if Nick were immortal, what historic period does Paul Johansson think would best suit him? "Some people would say the Stone Age," the actor laughs. "Nick might have been a knight, but he's a warrior of some type."

Confined to the twentieth century, lohansson finds that life living with an immortal is anything but a laugh. "Elizabeth came from Highlander and has a lot of reference to pull from. For me, I didn't even want to know what the Highlander rules were for engagement, for life, For anything. Personally, I wouldn't want to be an immortal as a character. I think the fact that our fires can be snuffed as human beings makes everything far more important to us, so my stakes are really high. If I get hit by a bullet, this is real damage. I might not make it to the next episode. I have a lot to play in these scenes - while she can walk through bullets." Don't feel too sorry for Johansson, because walking through enemy fire, or jumping off tall buildings, is all part of the game. "I don't like the safety blanket, so - whatever they want to throw at us. I want them to take as many chances as they can, and it looks like they are. We're getting into some fun things right now!"

In fact, it is the exotic blend of fun and romance, and the show's ability to marry this with a real sense of dangerous, life-threatening adventure that Raven successfully plays to. The show has already been likened to another past favourite, Highlander. "Particularly like Moonlighting, there is an element of that for sure, which is part of the fun," Johansson agrees. "We don't get into the high-tech, the Femme Nikita area; we go to a different area - we try to keep it, I think, a little dirtier, a little rougher, but also slick."

Given that, like every series' opener, the first episode of Highlander: The Raven has much to do in the way of giving background information as well as providing an intriguing scenario for future development, "Reborn" fares quite well. Then again, it has a noble ancestry in the form of surprise TV hit Highlander. The basic premise is stock-in-trade - one partner is sort of on the wrong side of the Law, the other most definitely fights by the Rules. What isn't standard is that the bad guy is a girl who looks like an angel, and the good guy is an angel whose looks suggest he could be a bit of a devil given the right encouragement out of working hours. There's a lot of scene-setting to do, but much of it is pretty obvious; Amanda (Elizabeth Gracen), the cat burglar who manages to stay one step (or in this instance bath) ahead of the law, the detectives who are closer to each other than their own families, and the over-worked, underpaid precinct where things aren't as straight as they could be. Oh, and male detective Nick Wolfe (Paul Johansson) has a serious case of lust for the mischievous thief.

What's good about all this apparent old ground is that nothing is quite what it seems at first. Amanda turns out to have a tad more experience than most criminals, with her sword-wielding acumen and Immortality being the only obvious links between the original Highlander series and the new. Nick Wolfe looks more like a studious professor than a run-of-the-mill enforcer and his feisty, hard-assed partner is tall, slim and female rather than the usual wee fat bloke. Much good it does her, though. By the end of the episode, she's kicked the bucket, murdered by one of her own while trying to save the "bitch" she's been desperate to collar for months. "Reborn" sets the scene for what promises to be one of the more light-hearted of the sci-fi adventure shows prepped to hit our TV screens this Autumn.

The comedic aspect is a welcome new development. Most of the humour is decidedly tongue-in-cheek, but the first show in particular is littered with some great throwaway lines. At one point, a near naked babe on rollerblades skims past a big biker type who yells, "Yeah, mama, meals on wheels," and during an earlier "raid," Wolfe tells Amanda to "assume the position," to which she tartly replies: "I usually get offered dinner first." Much has already been made about the nature of the relationship between the two main characters and there's no doubting the sexual chemistry simmering away beneath those cool exteriors. She's deliberately provocative and he's all up for being provoked. But it remains to be seen whether or not we get more than just a tantalising glimpse of potential passion as the show develops.

While "Reborn" tries a touch too hard to show how caring and politically balanced it can be, initial impressions are good. The characters are well defined without being over-cliched. The sparks between the leads certainly brightens the atmosphere, and the comedy is just quirky enough to inspire a following. For an adventure type series, it's bit low on drama and tension, sure, but this is only the first episode, so suspend your disbelief and go with the hokum. The fire between Wolfe and a Raven has only just burst into flame.

HIGHWAYMAN,THE

The Highwayman was a series in which the real star was a semi truck equipped with all sorts of hi-tech gadgets. Set in the American west of the not too distant future, a one in which society has somehow managed to begin decaying into something out of Mad Max. The Highwayman was a federal marshal and along with his Australian sidekick Jetto (played by Jacko best known as the ever ready batteryman) were assigned their various cases by Ms. Winthrop. D.C. Montana was their truck's mechanic whom would both equip it with new gadgets and keep the old ones properly functioning.

Jane Badler is more famous for playing Diana in V: THE SERIES, and Tim Russ is famous for playing Lt. Tuvok in STAR TREK: VOYAGER. The series pilot movie ran a year prior to the series itself, with Sam Jones (as the Highwayman) the only actor to make the transition to the weekly series. The series was first seen on NBC, the pilot was first shown in 1987, and the series proper began in 1988. Glen A. Larson was responsible for a high number of SF shows in the mid 1980s, see related shows for details.

Capitalizing on the popularity of the hardedged Road Warrior films with Mel Gibson, Glen Larson came up with this hour actioner about a law enforcer on the highways, complete with high-tech trailer rigs and a helicopter. It starred Sam Jones, Jane Badler, Tim Russ and Jacko as the heroic team. Audiences didn't catch on and after a twohour telefilm and nine episodes, the series was canceled.

The Highwayman is an action themed science fiction television series created and produced by Glen A. Larson that ran on the NBC Network in 1988. The two hour pilot episode aired in 1987. It was later re-run as a made-for-television movie entitled Terror on the Blacktop. The series, with some changes in cast, followed in 1988. Only Nine hour-long episodes were televised. The show crosses into themes between Knight Rider, M.A.S.K., X-Files and Mad Max.

Trivia

Sam J. Jones may be better known for his role of Flash Gordon in the 1980 film adaptation.

Jane Badler may be better known for her role as Diana in V.

Tim Russ may be better known for his role as Tuvok on Star Trek: Voyager. His character, D.C. Montana, is an obvious play on writer D.C. Fontana's name.

Mark "Jacko" Jackson, an Australian rules football player, may be better known for the "pre-bunny" Energizer battery commercials with the signature "Oi!".

Some of the futuristic dashboard design of Highway's truck is re-used from Larson's previous hi-tech hit Knight Rider.

HIKARI SENTAI MASKMAN

AKA: MASKMAN

AKA: KOSENTAI MASKMAN

AKA: SHINING BATTLE TEAM MASKMAN

AKA: HIKARI SENTAI MASUKUMAN

AKA: LIGHT TASK FORCE MASKMAN

When the subterranean Tube Empire attempts to seize control of the surface world, the five member Maskman team is assigned to defend the human race. They are led by former racing driver Takeru (Umezu) as Red Mask, a master of karate and the wielder of the Masky Blade. Ken (Kusakari) is Black Mask, a kung fu master from the distant mountain provinces and wielder of the Masky Rod. Akira (Hirota) is Blue Mask, master of Chinese Kempo (we're not sure how this is supposed to differ from Kung-fu in the eyes of a child audience!) who fights with the Masky Tonfa. Haruka (Nagata) is Yellow Mask who fights with the Masky Rotor, but also helps the team with the Ninja Skills that have been passed down through her family.

Momoko (Maeda) is Pink Mask who fights with Taiqui or with her Masky Ribbon. Red mask drives a racing car, while the other team members have their own motorcycle. They also have special vehicles such as the Masky Jet and Masky Tank, which combine to form the Great Five Robot. In later episodes, a bigrig combination was introduced (compare to the previous year's FLASHMAN) that transformed into the Land Galaxy Robot.

Their enemy underground is King Saber (voiced by Kato), whose faction was responsible for transforming the peaceful subterranean world into the belligerent Tube Empire. He fights them with his army of cannon fodder Angura Warriors, and also wakes monsters of the week from various caves in his domain. However, Saber also has enemies within - since supporters of the peace-loving Igamu faction still reside in his kingdom and would prefer it if he stopped fighting the surface people.

Hikari Sentai Maskman (Hikari Sentai Masukuman?), translated as Light Squadron Maskman, was the Toei production and the 11th entry of the Sentai Series. It aired on TV Asahi from February 28, 1987 to February 20, 1988, with a total of 51 episodes.

Kato previously voiced the evil emperor Bazoo in CHANGEMAN, while composer Goro Omi was yet another anime alumnus (see Grey: Digital Target). "Based on an idea by Saburo Yade"; the following year's Super Sentai show was LIVEMAN. Produced by Kyozo Utsunomiya, Yakeyuki Suzuki.

Another strong drama with surprisingly good character designs by Ichigo House and Ogiwara Naoki. (Izubuchi left after Flashman to work on the Gundam film Char's Counterattack.) Compare concept with Ohranger.

I like this series because of the team's ability to use their aura power against the Tube Empire. A lot of action, especially when Takeru (Red Mask) goes to save Princess Ial, who was entombed in ice by Emperor Zeba. After Takeru rescues her, we learn in episode 50 about Zeba's origin. He wasn't truly human, but a grown son of the original Lethal Dogler monster. The robots are cool, too, although I expected the main robo, Great Five to do battle against the now mutated Zeba/Lethal Dogler. Instead, we have the second robot, Galaxy Robo, to deal with the villain and save the world from eternal darkness....

Characters and mecha

Maskman

Red Mask (Takeru)

Formula 1 racer and karate expert. Weapons and/or attacks: Masky Blade, Laser Arrow.

Black Mask (Kenta)

Kung fu expert. Weapons and/or attacks: Masky Rod.

Blue Mask (Akira)

Chinese boxing and broadsword expert. Weapons and/or attacks: Masky Tonfas.

Yellow Mask (Haruka)

Ninja. Weapons and/or attacks: Mask Rotor yoyos, Shadow Split Bodies.

Pink Mask (Momoko)

Tai chi ch'uan expert. Weapons and/or attacks: Masky Ribbon.

Shared weapons: Laser Magnums with two modes: gun or sword.

Team attacks: Shot Bomber, Jet Cannon.

X1 Mask (Asuka Ryoo; 39 only)

Prototype Maskman in green. An early precursor to the sixth member concept exploited from Zyuranger onward.

Commander Sugata Sanjuurou (cf. Sugata Sanshirou)

Scientist and martial artist who founded the team.

Spin Cruiser

Red's modified Formula 1 car, now a buggy.

Mask Loaders

Motorcycles for Black through Pink.

Masky Fighter + Drill + Tank + Jet + Gyro > Great Five Weapons and/or attacks: Photon Lizer Sword (Final Aura Burst), Gyro Cutters, Great Gun.

Land Galaxy (trailer truck) > Galaxy Robo Weapons and/or attacks: Iron Fist Aura Galaxy, Galaxy Drill, Galaxy Anchor, Galaxy Bazooka.

Turbo Ranger (not the sentai)

Flying fortress carrying the five components of Great Five.

Underground Empire Tube

Once a peaceful empire, it was corrupted by the usurper Zehba, who now intends to rule the surface world as well.

Earth Emperor Zehba

Usurped the Tube throne. Hates all human beings, below or above the Earth, because he secretly isn't human at all. In reality is the child of the Lethal Dogler monster slain by the original Tube royal family.

Prince Igam

True heir to the throne. A woman raised as a man. Ends up a nun after realizing the error of his/her ways.

Princess Ial, alias Mio

Igam's twin. Falls for Takeru.

Commander Baraba

Buff swordsman of the Baluga Tribe.

Earth Imperial Ninja Oyobur

Red-skinned, pointy-eared ninja of the Buyon Tribe.

Earth Imperial Ninja Fuumin

Female ninja of the Fu Tribe who serves Prince Igam.

Anagmas

Elderly, overweight beast who knows all.

Thief Knight Kiros (27-49)

Equestrian who loves Ial. Armed with a knife and sickle. Special attack: Crescent Screw.

Okelampa

Insectoid that fires a monster enlarging beam.

Angler Soldiers

Black-skinned grunts with brown vines growing down from their heads.

Earth Empire Beasts

Underground creatures released from a freezing cave. Many are composed of Dogler beasts plus parasites.

Angramon Fighters

Fighter planes that untie into a centipede-like monster, the Angramon Snake.

Earth Imperial Castle

Tube headquarters which rose to the Earth's surface in the finale.

Trivia

Maskman was the first Super Sentai Series to have a robot composed of 5 parts (Fighter, Drill, Tank, Jet and Gyro) and a second bazooka.

There was a sixth member, the X1 Mask, although he appeared only in episode 39.

Maskman has an opening song which is translated in other languages.

In France this series was called Bioman 2.

This was the fourth and last Super Sentai series exhibited in Brazil.

Several names were changed in the Brazilian version. For example, Haruka became Sayaka and Momoko became Keiko.

In the Philippine (Tagalized) version, wherein the series has a large following, all of the original Japanese characters were renamed Filipino (Western) names. Takeru (Red Mask) became Michael Joe, Kenta (Black Mask) became Leonard, Akira (Blue Mask) became Adrian, Haruka (Yellow Mask) became Eloisa, Momoko (Pink Mask) became Mary Rose and Commander Sanjuurou Sugata became Director Samuel Sugata. They referred themselves as Laser Squadron Maskman instead of the original translation of the title.

Action director Junji Yamaoka, who had more or less been chief action director for every Sentai since Goranger, left five episodes into the series after reportedly being disappointed at the watering down of action scenes.

WR. Hirohisa Soda, Kunio Fujii, Toshiki Inoue.

HIMITSU SENTAI GORANGER

AKA: GORANGER

AKA: SECRET BATTLE-TEAM GORANGER

AKA: SECRET TASK FORCE FIVE RANGER

Earth is attacked by the Black Crucitix army of the alien Great Shogun (Ando) and only the secret Earth Guard League and their Goranger team can save the planet. Utilizing the latest scientific technology, the team is led by Takeshi the Red Ranger (Makoto), who fights with a whip and a gun. His second in command is the rakish Blue Ranger Akira (Miyauchi), who fights with a bow. Ota the Yellow Ranger (Hataeyama) is a curry-loving brawler who fights with "demon power" (a hand on the end of a stick!), thought not for long, since he quit the series, ostensibly to run the Eagle Kyushu base. He was replaced by a new Yellow Ranger Daigoro (Daruma), though the original actor returned before the series ended.

Love interest Peach Ranger Peggy (Komaki) is the team's explosives specialist (her bombs are shaped like hearts, of course), while the team's youngest member is bommering-weilding 17 year-old Green Ranger Kenji (Ito).

In the style of KAMEN RIDER (another show created by manga artist Shotaro Ishinomori), the team have a set of souped up motorcycles, though the Peach and Yellow Rangers are forced to ride in sidecars rather than having their own vehicles. The motorcycles are carried in a red and white helicopter gunship called the BariBrun, launching from it down a long ramp that extends from the front like a tongue.

Black Cross (the BAD guy) sent five of its Mask Monsters to destroy Eagle's Japanese bases. The survivors of the attacks were reorganised under Commander Edogawa in Tokyo to form the Secret Task Force Goranger, armed with Goranger Suits that gave them superhuman abilities. The Gorangers avenged their fallen comrades by defeating Black Cross' first five monsters and the others that followed.

The first of the Super Sentai series, GoRanger incorporated elements of the popular ULTRAMAN superhero show and the PHANTOM AGENTS spy series to create an all-new franchise. With an original concept by a manga author, the staff also poached several writers from the anime world, as well as composer Michiaki Watanabe, who created music for several early sentai shows.

The idea of a five person team, color coded for ease of identification, with action figure and merchandising tie-ins, would be repeated with only the superficial of alterations in many other series; like some of the longer running anime franchises it resembled, the Super Sentai series had a target audience that often genuinely was too young to remember the previous incarnations and would not question the incessant repetition. The next to be released was JAQK, but the Super Sentai series was still running into the 21st Century - now credited to "Saburo Yade" as creator, rather than Ishinomori. Though GoRanger was never released in English, its popularity set the tone for paradigm for its many successors, including the MIGHTY MORPHIN POWER RANGERS that were to dominate children's television in the mid-1990s.

Produced by Takashi Ogino, Toru Hirayama, Susumu Yoshikawa, Michi Fukazawa.

The longest of the sentai series. (Among non-sentai team shows in general, only SCIENCE NINJA TEAM GATCHAMAN, NINJA CORPS MOONLIGHT, and MIGHTY MORPHIN' POWER RANGERS have longer runs.)

Black Cross sent five of its Mask Monsters to destroy Eagle's Japanese bases:

Golden Mask: Eagle Kanto Base

Warrior Mask: Tohoku Base

Bronze Mask: Kyushu Base

Jade Mask: Hokkaido Base

Poison Gas Mask: Osaka Base

The survivors of the attacks were reorganized under Commander Edogawa in Tokyo to form the Secret Task Force Goranger, armed with Goranger Suits that gave them superhuman abilities. The Gorangers avenged their fallen comrades by defeating Black Cross' first five monsters and the others that followed.

Characters and mecha

EAGLE (Earth Guard League)

An international peacekeeping organization whose mission is to defend the world from the Black Cross Army. The Gorangers belong to the Japan Block (division) of EAGLE.

Red Ranger (Kaijou Tsuyoshi)

Leader of the Gorangers. Expert with guns and whips. Fought many battles to the death with Masked Generals as well as Masked Monsters and Zolders. A cool and calm tactician with a strong sense of responsibility. In many cases, he let himself be captured in order to infiltrate Black Cross bases. Originally a secret agent of the Kantou branch of the Japan Block of EAGLE. Lost his elder brother during the destruction of the Kantou branch. For that reason, strongly loathes evil. Fully trusts his teammates. Since he was once good at soccer, his kicking abilities are the best in the team. (Small wonder that he is the last to kick the ball in the Goranger Storm and Hurricane attacks.) Also good at disguise.

[The actor who played Kaijou Tsuyoshi, Makoto Naoya, also appears in Fireman and Special Investigation Frontline.]

Blue Ranger (Shinmei Akira)

Second in command of the Gorangers. Wields the Blue Cherry (later, the Ultra Blue Cherry) bow. Is unsurpassed at archery. A cool and capable decision maker, he has saved the team from many Black Cross traps. Skilled at piloting mecha such as the Variblune. Formerly a marksmanship instructor at the Tohoku branch of the Japan Block of EAGLE. □ [Played by the great Miyauchi Hiroshi, also in Keyhunter, G-Men '75, KAMEN RIDER V3, Zbat, JAKQ, the film The War in Space, WINSPECTOR, SOLBRAIN, and most recently, OHRANGER.]

Yellow Ranger (Ooiwa Daita [1-54, 68-84])

Strongest of the Gorangers. Originally 'armed' with the YTC radio; later acquired the Keysticker pole. Formerly an engineering researcher at the Kyushu branch of the Japan Block of EAGLE. Really likes curry rice. [The actor who played Ooiwa Daita, Hatakeyama Baku, passed away sometime before 1987.]

Yellow Ranger (Kumano Daigorou [55-67])

□ Replaced Ooiwa Daita, who became the commander of the Kyushu branch for a time. Dies when he is strucl in the stomach by Can Opener Mask's Can Opener Cutter.

Pink Ranger (Peggy Matsuyama)

Expert at explosives. Armed with earring bombs, Pink Mirrors, and Pink Cards. Formerly a chemical analyst at the Hokkaido branch of the Japan Block of EAGLE. Has a Swiss father and a Japanese mother. [The actress who played Peggy Matsuyama, Lisa Komaki, also played Miss America in costume in Battle Fever J.]

Green Ranger (Asuka Kenji)

□ 17. Youngest of the Gorangers. Armed with Greenmerang boomerangs. Originally from the Kansai branch of the Japan Block of EAGLE. [The actor who played Asuka Kenji, Itou Yukio, currently Shoudou Takeshi, also played the original Battle Cossack in BATTLE FEVER J.]

The five defeat Mask Monsters with the Goranger Storm soccer-ball kicking technique or the later Gorranger Hurricane football-kicking technique. The balls in many cases transform into whatever the particular Mask Monster is least fond of.

Commander Edogawa Kenpachi

The highest ranking person in EAGLE's Japan Block. The only person who can take direct command of the Goranger team. Also commands secret agents such as 007, et al. Normally poses as the manager of Snack Gon.

Agent 007 of Eagle (Katou Youko)

One of EAGLE's secret agents. Normally a waitress at Snack Gon. Other agents include 008 (Hayashi Tomoko) and 009 (Nakamura Haruko).

Katou Tarou (younger brother of 007)

Boy who hangs out at Snack Gon, asking Ooiwa questions.

Snack Gon

Small restaurant that serves as the secret entrance to Goranger headquarters. Destroyed in episode 44.

Red, Blue, and Green Machines (1-54)

Motorcycles driven by the Red, Blue, and Green Rangers. The Yellow and Pink Rangers ride in the sidecars of the Blue and Green Machines; the Red Machine has no sidecar. Armed with explosives and sent to the Navarone Fortress, which exploded, taking them (but not the Gorangers) with it.

Red, Blue, and Green Stars (55-84)

Replacements for the Red, Blue, and Green Machines.

Variblune (1-42)

Early flying fortress, propelled by helicopter blades under the craft. Blew up with Iron Man Mask Temujin aboard (but not the Gorangers, fortunately).

Varidreen (43-84)

Birdlike replacement for the Variblune.

Varitank (43-84)

Six-wheeled tank with claw arms that rolls out of the 'beak' of the Varidreen.

Variccune (passenger-carrying balloon; 69-84)

Black Cross Army

An army of cyborgs whose goals are world conquest and the extinction of the human race.

Black Cross Fuehrer

Mysterious leader of the organization who resembles a KKK member. Turns out to be the Black Cross Castle himself (!). [Originally played by Andou Mitsuo, who also did villainous roles in the original Giant Robo, Kikaider, and Spider-Man.]

(General) Sunring Mask (15-20)

First of the generals. From Africa.

General Iron Mask Temujin (21-42)

Second general. The 'Demon of the Mongols' from the Gobi desert. Died taking the Variblune with him.

General Firemountain Mask Magman (42-54)

Third general. From the Ekra (sp?) volcano of Iceland.

Great General Golden Mask (55-84)

Final general. From Africa, of course. Resembles a pharaoh. Brought back to life by the Black Cross Fuehrer himself. Has his own personal guards. Into magic and astrology. Turned himself into gold dust as a final gesture to tell the Fuehrer where the Goranger headquarters was.

WR. Shozo Uehara, Susumu Takahisa, Mitsuru Arai, Hirohisa Soda, Kimio Hirayama, Keisuke Fujikawa.

HITCHHIKER'S GUIDE TO THE GALAXY, THE

The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy is part satire, part fantasy, in which Arthur Dent, a typical, nonplussed Englishman still in his dressing gown, is swept up into galactic events of far-ranging magnitude, dealt with in a down-to-earth, prosaic manner which turns everyone and everything into a cosmic joke.

The basic plot - as if it really mattered - begins with Ford Prefect, a field researcher for the Guide (the standard reference for information on the universe), on Earth to update the entry on our world. With his human friend Arthur, he narrowly escapes the planet's destruction to make way for a hyperspace bypass.

They eventually find themselves aboard a stolen starship with two-headed con-man Zaphod Beeblebrox, his pilot girlfriend Trillian, and Marvin the Paranoid Android, a manic-depressive robot whose capacity for mental activity is as boundless as the infinite reaches of space, but THE HITCH-HIKER'S GUIDE TO THE GALAXY IS whose capacity for happiness could be fitted into a matchbox, without even taking the matches out first . . .

Other stars of the shows are the Vogons, fat, ugly, green aliens who write the worst poetry in the Universe; Slartibartfast, designer of the Fjords; the Dish of the Day, a talking dinner; and a pair of pan-dimensional beings disguised as white mice who are searching for the Ultimate Question to Life, the Universe and Everything. They already have the answer - 42.

This TV series was based on the books and radio plays of the same name, but slightly altered because of budget constraints on television, it remains one of the most memorable science fiction shows Britain has ever produced. The five books of the Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy were 1, The Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy, 2, The Restaurant and the End of the Universe, 3, Life, the Universe and Everything, 4, So Long, and Thanks for all the fish and 5, Mostly Harmless. 'The history of The Hitch-Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy is one of idealism, despair, struggle, passion, success, failure and enormously long lunch-breaks' (Hurling Frootmig, 17th acting editor).

The Hitch-Hiker's Guide began life in the cultural ghetto of a Radio 4 serial, and by expressing ideas above its station rose through the ranks of repeats, a book and a record until it finally materialised before our square eyes in 1981, when it was hailed as the first inter-galactic multimedia epic. Making a visual version of a cult radio show carried the huge risk that the result might not live up to listeners' preconceptions. But it did, and the series, created by Douglas Adams, is widely held to be the funniest science fiction TV show ever.

Neither did it squander the opportunities TV provided, stamping its own visual ID in the innovative use of computer graphics to accompany narrator Peter Jones's guide entries (a style adapted some seven or eight years later by The Daily Telegraph for its own TV ad campaign).

This tv serial began life in 1978 as a 6-episode radio series (officially numbered Fit the First through Sixth) followed the same year by a one-off Fit the Seventh, with 5 more episodes in 1980 (2 cowritten with its producer John Lloyd, who also received a production credit on the tv series). This had built up a massive (for radio) cult following; commercially released recordings of the radio broadcasts sold widely. Adams then turned his scripts into the bestselling novels The Hitch Hiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1979) and The Restaurant at the End of the Universe (1980), with two further volumes later. The tv version was largely based on the first 6 radio episodes, only slightly on the subsequent 6; many scenes from the radio series were not included in the books.

Adams had substantial tv experience, having been a script editor on DR WHO. The tv series was very funny indeed (although less liked by many aficionados than the original radio version) and was notable for the sophisticated graphics with which the eponymous talking Guidebook itself was animated. The series belongs to a very English school of comparatively deadpan (and somewhat cruel) absurd humour, based on the implicit premise that the Universe is arbitrary and unkind, especially to the English, and suffers from galloping ENTROPY. Although US tv seldom produces work of this sort, the programme was successful there also, although not to the same extent as in the UK. It is often replayed, and is available on video, slightly expanded, with average episodes of 40 rather than 35 mins. The producer for the series was Alan J.W. Bell, associate producer was John Lloyd, designers for the show were Andrew Howe-Davis (eps. 1-6) and Tom Yardley-Jones (eps. 4-6). The animated sequences were created by Rod Lord and the music was created by Paddy Kingsland at the BBC Radiophonic workshop.

On BBC Radio 4, The Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy became a cult since its debut in March 1978, boosted by numerous repeats, a Christmas episode, a best-selling Pan Books paperback, a double LP and a stage show. By Autumn 1979, creator Douglas Adams was hurriedly writing a second season while leaving as Doctor Who's script editor... and discovered the BBC now wanted a tv version. John Lloyd, Adams' co-writer on two first season shows, was to produce a pilot, and if this was successful, five more episodes would be made in Autumn 1980. Unfortunately, Lloyd was busy producing Not the Nine O'clock News, so he was 'promoted' to executive producer (credited as 'associate producer' with no input after the pilot) and Alan J W Bell was appointed producer in early 1980.

There was soon discord between writer and producer. Adams was fascinated by concepts and scripts; Bell was time and money conscious. Adams adapted the first radio episode as his tv pilot in December 1979, establishing that the narrator scenes, with Peter Jones as the voice of 'The Book', should be done using animation in the form of the Guide itself, bombarding the viewer with trivial data. A chance meeting between Bell and animator/Hikers fan Kevin Davies in January 1980 led to a deal with Davies' boss, Rod Lord of Pearce Studios, to provide animation for the pilot, with test material on the Babel Fish completed by March.

Simon Jones and Mark Wing-Davey reprised their radio roles of Arthur Dent and Zaphod Beeblebrox, although Bell felt that Geoffrey McGivern (who was possibly busy anyway) looked too 'normal' to play Ford Prefect. This part went to David Dixon, a young actor suggested to Bell by his secretary. As the second script was completed, filming began around April 1980 with the high-angle shot of London used for the Vogon spaceship's arrival filmed from the top of the NatWest Tower. The title sequence featured stuntman Alan Harris as an astronaut tumbling through a tunnel in the letter 'O'; Bell rejected an early version where the tunnel effect used was that of the Tom Baker Doctor Who titles.

With music and sound effects added by Paddy Kingsland of the Radiophonic Workshop and the Tim Souster version of Bernie Leadori's Journey of the Sorcerer taken from the double LP - Adams apparently discussed a new version with Mike Oldfield - the May/June pilot was to be tested on an audience of Hitch Hikers fans at the National Film Theatre on Saturday 5th July; at the same time, a laughter-track demanded by the BBC would be recorded. On Sunday 29th June, Peter Jones recorded a warm-up routine in Television Centre's weather presentation studio to introduce the pilot; Jones acted the role of a muddled actor with comments about the radio series, the costume budget, and the difficulties of finding a two-headed actor to play Zaphod.

Apart from typographical differences to the opening and closing credits, this pilot was effectively as broadcast. The laughter-track print was shown at an Edinburgh Film Festival (according to Bell) or a Glasgow convention (according to Adams); everyone loved the pilot, but hated the laughter-track. The BBC took a long time to decide to make the other episodes. Eventually the go-ahead was given on the basis that it could be made like any other sitcom for broadcast New Year 1981. Other key casting took place for Trillian and Marvin. Adams had disliked Susan Sheridan's radio Trillian and re-cast the part for the LPs. The only actress auditioned who understood Adams' humour was American Sandra Dickinson of St Bruno advert fame; she retained her high-pitched American accent for the role although this was not how Adams wrote the character. Marvin was played by two actors: David Learner (Marvin in Ken Campbell's recent stage version) operated the body while Stephen Moore (the radio Marvin) provided the voice.

During Summer 1980, Adams also worked on the second stage production of Hikers (an unsuccessful run from July to August), another LP, and his second novel (The Restaurant at the End of the Universe). The third and fourth tv scripts were developed in July; originally Episode Three had a very long pre-credit sequence of the crew of the Heart of Gold awaiting their arrival at Magrathea dawn which was in the Pan novel. Episode Four retained a long speech from a cheerleader before Deep Thought's revelation of the Ultimate Answer which was filmed and dropped, and another sequence from the Pan book of Zaphod, Ford and Trillian held in the Magrathean planet catalogue.

Scripts for Episodes Five and Six were compiled in early August. Episode Five retained Ford's radio description of how the uni-verse began, and more material between the late Hotblack Desiato and his bodyguard on how they are travelling 567,002,000,000 years back for the gig on Kakrafoon - Desiato communicates by rattling glasses and moving forks. There were major deviations from the radio scripts to remove Lloyd's input, replacing the Hagunon material with Disaster Area who featured on the new LP. The Amiglion Major Cow material had been deleted on radio and reworked for the stage show.

By the final episode's recording, the serial had begun the first of many transmissions on BBC2 the previous day; a special 1'17" trailer with Peter Jones narration had been run from Friday 2nd January. Two wrap parties were held: one the night production. concluded and another the following Monday at Adams' rather small flat for the second broadcast. The serial was generally well received with BAFTA Awards and a high-profile; Lord and Bell appeared on Pebble Mill at One on Friday 23rd January, Zaphod's second head featured on Tomorrow's World on Thursday 12th February and the series was reviewed on Did You See...? on Saturday 14th February.

Adams sincerely hoped to do a second television series - indeed when Mark Wing-Davey appeared on Ask Aspel on 2nd June to promote the BBC1 repeats, the cricket-pitch start of the new tv series was mentioned. With filming set for late Spring 1 981 , other commitments on Adams and the writer's desire that either Lloyd or Geoffrey Perkins (the show's radio producer) should replace Bell meant that a script never materialised. The Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy has been transmitted on BBC2 and BBC1 over the years - with a shortened Episode 2 entered for Montreux always repeated - as well as screenings on UK Gold, sales on videotape (including cut material from Episode 6), and moderate success on American PBS stations (re-edited into seven episodes). In 1993, BBC Video released The Making of the Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy using behind-the-scenes material from 1980 alongside new interviews and dramatic sequences with the original cast.

In 2005 a film version of the series was finally made, mainly with american money, but generally stayed true to form and followed the storyline of the TV series rather than the books and radio play.

DOCTOR WHO

1 - 1 "NO TITLE"

Episode One begins with a pre-credits sequence, the only one of the TV episodes to have one. A countdown to the end of the world is displayed through animation, and the narrator begins telling the story of the Guide and Arthur Dent's connection to it as the sun rises over the English countryside for the final time. Arthur wakes, discovers the threat to his house from a yellow bulldozer by looking out the window, and the camera pulls back to the credits. This episode closely follows the plot and dialogue of the first episode of the radio series, cutting the speech by Lady Cynthia Fitzmelton. It ends at a slightly earlier point than the radio episode, after Ford's line "he might want to read us some of his poetry first", and on a cliffhanger that Arthur and Ford are about to be discovered in a Vogon storeroom, but before the Vogon poetry is actually read.

1 - 2 "NO TITLE"

The episode opens with a recap of the story, with Ford and Arthur about to be captured. After being read

Vogon poetry, they are thrown out of an airlock and improbably rescued by the Starship Heart of Gold, which has been stolen by Ford's semi-cousin Zaphod Beeblebrox, accompanied by Trillian, a young woman who Arthur once met at a party. Ford and Arthur are escorted to the bridge by Marvin the Paranoid Android and meet Zaphod and Trillian. The episode ends after they are introduced, with no cliffhanger.

1 - 3 "NO TITLE"

The episode opens with a guide entry explaining the legendary planet of Magrathea, which manufactured planets millions of years ago, until the Galactic economy collapsed. Zaphod has been explaining to Ford that he has found the legendary planet of Magrathea, whilst Trillian tends to a pair of white mice. Zaphod orders the computer to land on the planet surface.

Before long, they receive a transmission from the Commercial Council of Magrathea, informing them that the planet is closed for business and asking them to leave. They ignore this and later receive another message, noting that nuclear missiles have been sent at the ship. Attempts to evade the missiles fail, and Arthur uses the ship's Infinite Improbability Drive, which ends up turning the missiles into a very surprised looking whale and a bowl of petunias. Trillian discovers that during the chaos, her mice escaped.

The five characters go onto the surface, where they find it desolate. Zaphod suggests they lived inside the surface. They split into two groups - Trillian, Zaphod and Ford explore a tunnel, whilst Arthur and Marvin remain on the surface. Trillian, Zaphod and Ford's thread ends on a cliff-hanger, with them seeing something alarming at the end of the corridor.

Meanwhile, Arthur and Marvin watch the sunset. Eventually, Slartibartfast arrives, and asks Arthur to come with him. He explains that the Magratheans were in hibernation for the last five million years. They get into his air-car, and descend deep into a tunnel.

A guide narrative intervenes, explaining that whilst humanity had always assumed that it was the most intelligent species on Earth, in fact the dolphins were more intelligent, and had left the planet some time before. However, both the dolphins and humans were less intelligent than the mice.

Meanwhile, Slartibartfast shows Arthur the vast tract of hyperspace that acts as the Magrathean's "factory floor", and that they have been brought out of hibernation for a special commission — "the Earth Mk 2, we're making a copy from our original blueprints". The Earth was originally made by Magrathea for mice; and it was destroyed five minutes too early. The episode ends here.

1 - 4 "NO TITLE"

Slartibartfast shows Arthur the archive tapes of Deep Thought being given the "Search for the Ultimate Answer" and of the result reported by the computer seven and a half million years later. After learning that the Earth was set up to search for the "Ultimate Question", Slartibartfast and Arthur join Ford, Trillian, Zaphod, and Trillian's mice, who had guided them to Magrathea.

The mice dismiss Slartibartfast, then express their desire to extract the "Ultimate Question" by first extracting Arthur's brain. While the mice attempt to strike a deal, the Galactic Police arrive, and Ford, Arthur, Trillian and Zaphod flee the dining hall, only to be cornered by the police in a large bay. After a misunderstanding, the police continue to fire on a computer bank behind which the four are hiding, which explodes, ending the episode on a cliffhanger.

1 - 5 "NO TITLE"

A visit to the Restaurant at the End of the Universe. The episode ends on the cliff-hanger of the black ship about to start a dive into the sun of Kakrafoon.

1 - 6 "NO TITLE"

The episode ends with Arthur and Ford being stuck on pre-historic Earth, lamenting the eventual destruction of it. The regular theme music follows the song "What a Wonderful World" by Louis Armstrong.

HOLMES AND YOYO

Holmes and Yoyo was a comedy series about two cops, one human, the other a robot. Alexander Holmes was not a bad cop, but due to the fact that his last several partners ended up in hospital no one wanted to become his partner. Dr. Babcock saw the fact that no one volunteered to become Holmes' partner as a perfect opportunity to test his latest creation, Yoyo.

Yoyo was a prototype of the cop of the future. As a robot in the shape of a man, Yoyo had total recall and was more or less bullet proof. Due to the fact that his team up with Holmes was in fact his field test, he did occasionally screw up in areas that human cops would not. This caused endless problems for Holmes who was one of the few that knew Yoyo was a robot. Officer Maxine Moon was one of the many not privy to the secret, had she known she would have probably stopped trying to seduce Yoyo.

From Leonard Stern, executive producer of GET SMART, it starred Walter Matthau lookalike Richard B. Shull. Shull and John Schuck best remembered as Rock Hudson's stooge in MacMillian and Wife.

The series was nowhere as big a hit as the producers hoped that it would be and it was yanked from the schedule halfway through the season. During the summer of 1977 the last two episodes aired under the banner title ABC Monday Comedy Special. This was a blanket title used by ABC to run off new episodes of failed comedy series and pilots that did not make it to the fall schedule. The series was first shown on BBC1 in the UK on the 25th September, 1977.

HOMEBOYS IN OUTER SPACE

Comedy and Science Fiction seldom mix well, as Homeboys demonstrates: Ty and Morris, childhood friends, grow up to own a spaceship together, doing odd jobs to support themselves. They hang out in a bar, visit planets, and have a spaceship named Hooty with a wise-cracking computer.

Think you've seen it all before on (non science fiction) comedies? Chances are you have. There are a few bright moments, however, when guest stars appear. James Doohan is particularly amusing in a parody of his 'Scotty' character from STAR TREK in several episodes, as Sherman Helmsley's appearance as 'George', a crazed dry cleaner.

Various producers for the show included Jeffrey Lampert, Lore Kimbrough, Sten Foster, Miguel Nunez and Ted Schachter. The consulting producer was Cary H. Miller, creative consultants were Stu Kreisman and Chris Cluess and the consulting producers were Mike Reiss and Al Jean, executive producer was Ehrich van Lowe and the music was created by Kevin Guillaume.

From account of the series name and episode titles which are good, as is the premise. Unfortunately the realisation leaves plenty to be desired in this spoof of STAR TREK that also has a ring of a very bad version of RED DWARF about it. James Doohan's guest appearances as a starship engineer are however a delight.

Homeboys in Outer Space was a blaxploitation UPN sitcom that aired from 1996 to 1997 before being cancelled following a flurry of protests from the NAACP and other civil-rights organizations.

STAR TREK

1 - 1 THERE'S NO SPACE LIKE HOME, OR, RETURN OF THE JED EYE

Ty and Morris are two wacky space cadets hustling jobs in the 23rd century, waiting for the contract that will pay off big. When famous and notorious bounty hunter Jed Eye, who seems to be old friends/enemies with Amma, approaches them with a lucrative contract to find buried treasure, they're in seventh heaven, but there's no such thing as easy money.

Once they're on the mission, Jed Eye hijacks the Hooty and strands Morris and Ty on a deserted asteroid. After they are picked up by a little old lady who lusts after Ty, our heroes hail a space taxi and track Jed Eye to the planet Remula, where he has gone to retrieve his buried treasure. Jed Eye, who has the ability to change his shape, makes himself look like Morris and manages to capture Ty. At the last minute, Morris shows up and turns the tables on Jed Eye. As Morris and Ty count their money, Amma shows up and claims the treasure—Jed Eye stole it from her years ago. Morris and Ty reluctantly hand over the treasure, and Amma pays them a small finder's fee, which is immediately snatched out of their hands by the space-taxi driver, who has been waiting all this time with the meter running.

1 - 2 THE PLEASURE PLANET PRINICPLE, OR, G MARKS THE SPOT

It's Morris's birthday and Ty has forgotten, yet again, to get him a birthday present. Ty's tickets for his vacation to the pleasure planet Fallopia arrive on the Hoopty, and Ty pretends that he bought the vacation for Morris. Morris and Ty arrive on Fallopia and find that it is a lush planet full of beautiful women. Morris is thrilled that Ty got him such a generous gift. Ty is incredibly frustrated that he is going to miss out on a weekend filled with pleasure. Back on the Jupiter Too, Vashti activates his new android, Android Lloyd Wellington III. When the android hears that Morris and Ty have gone to Fallopia, he explains to Vashti and Amma that the Fallopianians lure men to their planet, only to mate with them and then throw them into a volcano. Back on Fallopia, Morris is getting settled in his room and Ty is reluctant to leave. Morris finds out that Ty originally bought the vacation for himself, and he is furious with Ty. Ty apologizes and leaves Fallopia. Back on the Hoopty, Ty watches some Fallopian TV and sees that Morris is about to be thrown into the volcano. Ty disguises himself as a woman and sneaks back to the planet to rescue Morris. After Ty manages to get both himself and Morris captured by the Fallopianians, Amma shows up and rescues them.

HOMUNCULUS

Homunculus is an artificial life form created in a laboratory. Having discovered that he can't love a woman and doesn't have a soul, he takes his revenge on man.

This 6-part silent German serial, the most popular of the WWI period, tells of an artificial man created by a scientist (Kuhne) who wants to make a perfect creature of pure reason. But the result, Homunculus (the Danish actor Fonss), resents the fact that he is not a real human being (and has no soul); after being driven from country to country he becomes the dictator of a large, unnamed nation and plans to conquer the world, being finally destroyed by a convenient bolt of lightning. It contains seminal themes of the gothic variety, foreshadowing many sf/horror films: the archetypal mad scientist, the inherent evil of technology and scientific progress, superhuman androids, conquest of the world and a fiery, apocalyptic climax.

3 - 5 HONEY, IT'S GLOOM AND DOOM

Wayne is busy trying to perfect his Hypolyptical Organic Oxide Ray (a.k.a. the Hoo-Ray), a device based on mood-ring technology that will cause people to be happy, thus ending war and boosting global self-esteem. Wayne's new foreign assistant, Vlad Bolvahnicz, cautions that changing nature isn't necessarily a good thing. For example, because of accidental global warming, his once-frozen country is now covered with grass and butterflies, destroying their snowshoe and dog-sled economy. Wayne, however, is not convinced. While working late on the project, Vlad is visited by members of the Global League of Oppressed Madmen (GLOOM). Vlad is actually an anarchist too, and his job at Jentech is part of GLOOM's eco-terrorist plot to teach the industrialized, polluting Western hemisphere a lesson by destroying a key polluter city. GLOOM is thwarted, but Wayne realizes they were doing the wrong things for the right reasons -- science shouldn't try to change the way people think and feel - and he pulls the plug on the Hoo-Ray. People-power rules!

HUMAN TARGET

The Human Target was Christopher Chance, he was a man who would take the place of someone whose life was in danger until he could catch the person trying to do them in. Chance was a veteran of the Vietnam war who had been a member of special forces, operating from a base on board a high tech Blackwing jet. Chance and his team of operatives helped people whose lives were in danger for a fee of 10% of the person's annual income, assuming off course the person was not one of the bad guys.

Chance's team consisted of; Jeff Carlyle, the Blackwings pilot; Philo Marsden, a former movie special effects artist who created the machine which made the masks Chance used to impersonate the client, and Libby Page, communications and computer expert. To accomplish his impersonations, Chance would spend time with his client learning about their background, habits and studying their voice, a mask of the client would then be created which Chance would wear while undercover. While Chance was undercover, the person he was impersonating would remain aboard the Blackwing jet, so there would not be two of him wondering about, until the mission was complete.

Human Target was a series based on an obscure comic book hero from DC Comics. The Human Target was a hero who never high enough to have a comic bearing his name until the TV series came about. The series was made by the same people who produced THE FLASH TV series. Most of the episodes are standard crime plots typical of which is 'Mirror Image' in which Chance is hired to take the place of a psychiatrist who believes one of this patients is trying to kill him, however , a clairvoyant youth who is one of the man's patients suspects another.

HUNGER, THE

Anthology series which is concerned with the bizarre and weird.

This US show is one of the most interesting shows of the later 1990s with its high degree of sex and violence make's it almost unique for a genre show, the only other show to ever get this violent was LEXX and occasionally THE OUTER LIMITS (1990s). The stories themselves are quite interesting, in the fact that they are either light fantasy or science fiction. Many of them revolve around possession of the mind and body but always with a strange twist. An example of this would be in one episode where a woman was capable of sticking swords through her stomach without bleeding but by the use of a spell, she finds however that the spell wears off when she has strong emotions, in the end she dies from the sword impaling her. Strangely, despite the show being a US show many of the actors, actresses and locations seem to be set in the UK. Perhaps it's because no established studio in the US would fund them, note the show is made by a cable company. The Hunger was first seen in the UK on The Sci-Fi Channel in 1998.

HYPERDRIVE

A UK science fiction comedy which follows the crew of British spaceship HMS Camden Lock as they go about their day to day lives promoting Britain in the 22nd century. Commander Henderson is at the helm of the ship and an optimistic but deluded man who always thinks his orders are open to interpretation. His right hand man is First Officer York, a brilliant scientist and polymath but also a borderline sociopath who thinks he should be in command.

Not bad, not good just sort of.. there. That just about sums up this new British sci-fi comedy, which despite claims to the contrary comes across as a less funny version of RED DWARF. I'm sure I counted at least half a dozen jokes stolen from Grant & Naylor's classic creation in the first episode alone. Sadly, these are the best gags in the show.. not a promising start if you're seeking to avoid comparisons.

The story is that in the year 2151 a spaceship owned by the British government is crossing the Galaxy, trying to convince alien civilisations to relocate their businesses to the UK. But unfortunately, with a useless crew and competition from the likes of the USA and China, this is tougher than it looks.

Nick Frost plays Commander Henderson, the boss of the unit whose ego of course outstrips his talent, and Kevin Eldon as First Officer York, a brilliant scientist but a complete nutcase. With supporting actors the calibre of Miranda Hart and Stephen Evans, you'd expect something a bit special. But it didn't quite click into place, and you're left with a feeling of unfulfilled potential as soon as the ending credits start to roll.

Charectors (Season 1)

Name: Michael Henderson

Rank: Commander

Education: Dagenham Secondary Modern, New Portsmouth Cadet Camp

Preferred Monopoly token: the hat

Character assessment

Henderson rose through the ranks in exactly the way we say people can in the recruitment ads, yet endeavour to prevent in practice. Henderson shows initiative; always a dangerous sign.

Recommended action

Send to a dangerous quadrant of the galaxy, where perhaps some alien race may deal with 'the Henderson problem' for us.

Favourite Sportgame Team: The Epping Velociraptors

Name: York

Rank: First Officer

Education: Harrow, Peterhouse College Cambridge, and three years with the faceless monks of Quivutin.

Specialisms: Armed combat, unarmed combat, close combat, far-away combat, combat development and the history of combat

Character assessment

York is still the only trainee at Space Force Academy to ever kill someone in a role play workshop, after which he said he was 'just trying to make it realistic, wasn't that the idea, or are you disagreeing with me as well?' A cold hearted, brutal psychopath.

Recommended action

We need more like him.

Name: Chloe Teal

Rank: Diplomatic Officer

Experience before Space Force: Assistant craft tent steward at Princes Risborough gymkhana (two years running)

Favourite pen colour: Silvery green

Character assessment

Teal was expected to excel in her final exams at Space Force academy, yet spent the entire three hours working out the best way to arrange her coloured pens. We couldn't flunk her though because her Dad's an ambassador.

Recommended action

The Camden Lock has proved a suitable place for her talents.

Name: Jeffers

Rank: Technical Officer they said this system was unhackable well la la la la look at me

Qualifications: BSC in Programming Dynamics, MLA in Applied Information Theory where do they keep the porn on this thing?

Character assessment

Disobedient and insolent and very good in bed, Jeffers can drink two bottles of cider without needing a wee has been subject to several serious investigations, records of which have mysteriously disappeared from our central computer oh dear.

Recommended action

Investigate further. Good luck!

Name: Vine

Rank: Navigator

Number of shoes owned: Five

Perfect holiday: A few days at the Leeds crater, followed by a bracing trip round the travelators of the Lake District and a nice pint

Character assessment

Suffering panic attacks and delusions, Vine is a danger to himself and the rest of his crew. He lives in fear of most things, including fear itself and the fear of fear itself. Oddly, he's fine with spiders.

Recommended action

Medicate if becomes severe.

Favourite Sportgame Team: The Wrexham Grizzlies

Name: Enhanced Human Sandstrom

Rank: Pilot

Characteristics of the enhancement process: lightning fast reactions, ability to swiftly process vast amounts of data, slight deterioration of social skills.

Character assessment

Sandstrom is a prototype. It may be that there are problems with the enhancement process, but the project went four times over budget so it is vital that we don't draw any attention to them.

Recommended action

If pressed please say, "The enhanced human project is a triumph of British engineering, and the early models which rampaged through Manchester should not blind us to that fact."

The design for the Camden Lock was based loosely upon the BT Tower in London. The vessel is a 'Thames' class ship, and measures 376m long by 90m wide. Its registration is XH558 - the same serial number as the RAF's last flying Avro Vulcan bomber. The shuttlebay doors on the Camden are shown with the Union Jack embossed on them, which is part of the proudly British theme of the series.

HMS Camden Lock uses P-Rods(Plutonium fuel rods) for power, her speed is 170 Vs - any higher and the Reactors overheat. Her maximum chush depth is 197 Atmosheres

The Green Javelins use 'Wendover' class ships.

A ten minute pilot for the series was filmed in December 2003. The first title for the show was Lepus which was subsequently changed to Full Power shortly before filming began. The pilot featured Sanjeev Bhaskar as Space Commander Henderson and Mark Gatiss as First Officer York. Miranda Hart (Teal), Stephen Evans (Vine), and Dan Antopolski (Jeffers) also featured. Other actors included Fraser Ayres as Wade and Robert Webb and Neil Edmond as Aliens. Full Power was directed by Armando Iannucci and produced by John Rolph. The pilot was not intended for transmission.

Henderson and York play music together, and Henderson has acquired the alternate nickname "Lucky Jack," both apparent references to Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World.

Nick Frost's character shares his first name with the character, Mike Watt, whom Frost played in the surreal comedy, Spaced.

Nick Frost and Miranda Hart first performed together in 2004 on the Radio 4 panel game 'The 99p Challenge'. Equipment amongst the central rotating communication area of the Camden Lock bears the name CVC - Vorderman Communications, a nod to Carol Vorderman.

The laser guns wielded by the crew of the Camden Lock bear a striking resemblance to crutches. There is some debate amongst fans as to whether this is because they are dual purpose to save weight on ship and to aid injured soldiers, or if it is intentional so as to refer to low-budget sci-fi shows which would often use mundane objects as props for futuristic weapons.

Actor Geoffrey McGivern who plays the Supreme Ruler in 'Hello Queppu' and 'Artefact' also played Ford Prefect in the original BBC radio 4 series of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1978-80) by Douglas Adams.

Waen Shepherd (who plays Captain Helix) and Andy Riley (one of the writers) were both stage dancers for The Pod, a comedy techno act fronted by Julian Barratt of The Mighty Boosh and animator and video director Tim Hope.

The set of binoculars used by York when the crew first arrived on the planet in "Hello, Queppu" is clearly a set of Wild Planet "Spy Night Scope" binoculars

1 - 1 A GIFT FROM THE GLISH

The Camden Lock is on a mission to sell business space in the Peterborough Enterprise Zone.

Enter the Glish, a race of permanently-moist aliens who lick each other in greeting. Despite its buzzing café culture and farmers market, the Glish are hesitant about Peterborough and must do a lot of hand and face-licking before they sign.

When the deal falls through, Space Force demand that Commander Henderson and crew find another investor by the end of the week. Meanwhile, Vine shorts out the navigational system with a cup of coffee and the ship's systems are in disarray. And to make matters worse, there just might be an alien killing machine on board.

Wr Andy Riley, Kevin Cecil

Dir John Henderson

1 - 2 HELLO, QUEPPU

Henderson must make first contact with a strange, new world: Queppu. This is his chance to speak to the peoples of a planet - to make history.

Instead, Henderson, Teal and York are greeted with crossbow fire and accused of being rebels against the leader. When they are sentenced to a lingering death, the Princess Layvia begs her father for their release. So instead, they are invited to join in Set Feast #2.

Annoyed by the growing attraction between Henderson and Layvia, Teal drinks to the point of embarrassment, throwing them out of favour once more. It's down to Jeffers to rescue them. Jeffers, left in charge of the ship, has taken the opportunity to exercise some of the ship's more advanced technical capabilities - in a race.

1 - 3 WEEKEND OFF

It's Gary Neville Day and time for the crew of the Camden Lock to let their hair down and take a well-earned break.

Traditionally, the crew hold the Cadet's Ball and extend a courtesy invitation to the Commander. But in a more 'appropriate' tradition, the Commander holds a dinner with fine wine and Wotsits for the Officers. But this year attendance may be a bit thin... is someone deliberately reducing the numbers?

Meanwhile, Vine blows all his savings on an auction for an inhospitable planet. So he decides to use his weekend off to visit 'Vineworld' with Jeffers - whether he likes it or not.

1 - 5 CLARE

While scanning the galaxy for drug smugglers, the Camden Lock encounters the ship of the round-the-galaxy solo spacewoman, Clare Winchester. Concerned for her mental wellbeing, Henderson decides to put the mission on hold to do a little bonding.

He finds Clare a mass of neuroses and superstitions - she also appears to have a tortuous relationship with a 'Mr. Cup'. When his poster of an orangutan fails to improve her outlook, the two row. Desperate to cheer her up, Henderson doles out more and more flattery until she finally forgives him. However, when he goes to leave, Clare has other ideas.

York's newly instated self-defence drills are toughening the crew up, but will they be hard enough to rescue the commander?

1 - 6 ASSESSMENT

During a round of psychological tests, the Camden Lock is fired upon. Mistaking it for part of the evaluation, Henderson ignores the sounds of the destruction. But could it be his last mistake?

Furious with Henderson's continuing incompetence, the Space Marshal orders a 'Category J' inspection. Every inch, nut, bolt and shoelace of the ship will be triple-inspected for compliance. No one has ever passed a Category J - that's why it was invented. Henderson finally admits defeat and retreats to await his dismissal.

York, however, has other ideas. Can he whip the crew into shape in time? And will the creatures psychically contacting Vine really make him immortal?

Wr Kevin Cecil, Andy Riley

Dir John Henderson

2 - 1 GREEN JAVELINS

The Camden Lock is assigned to fly with the renowned spaceobatics team The Green Javelins, but Officer Teal's history with squadron leader Jeremy Mason may stop the assignment before it starts. Meanwhile, York tests an unusual scheme for increasing crew productivity.

2 - 2 ARTEFACT

When presented with a mysterious object Henderson can't help but try to return it to its rightful owners despite York's warnings that it's a classic hero trap. The three senior officers find themselves on a forest moon suddenly surrounded by the Queppu ready for revenge. After narrowly avoiding destruction last year they have acquired new technology and are ready to strike back by putting Henderson, York and Teal into a reality TV gladiatorial contest.

2 - 3 ADMIRAL'S DAUGHTER

The daughter of the Space Admiral has run away avoiding university and Henderson is ordered to get her back. Meanwhile both Vine and Jeffers have taken a shine to the young student and fight for her heart in the only way they know how - a duel. Arabella steals a shuttle craft and elopes with Jeffers leading them both into mortal danger.

2 - 4 HARVEST

York is sacked from Space Force after a short trial in the ship's Justice Room, and Teal is promoted in his place and left in charge of the ship. Unfortunately, the Red Shiny Robots of Vortis are about to attack and harvest the minds of the crew. Will York attempt a daring rescue or can Jeffers figure a way out of danger?

2 - 5 DREAMGATE

The crew discover the Dreamgate, one of the most dangerous devices in the Universe, which gives its owner the power to infiltrate other people's dreams without their knowledge. Henderson and York wander into Vine's dream of a pub in the mid 1990s, but when Vine wakes up they become trapped inside his head. Can the rest of the crew bring them back from 1995?

2 - 6 CONVOY

Entrusted with leading the convoy guarding Britain's new super-weapon, the Camden Lock's position is betrayed. There is a traitor aboard and all the officers are under suspicion. There is desperate race against time to find the mole before Earth is destroyed. Only Vine's new gadget offers any respite from the mounting tension.

HYPERNAUTS

Hypernauts centres around the adventures of three young cadets Sharkey, Ace and Max, from the Academy of Galactic Exploration. None of them are at the top of their class and all three are disciplinary problems. As the series begins they are being punished by being assigned a garbage mission to bring back an old spy satellite. An accident occurs and they find themselves accidentally catapulted to the very core of the galaxy where they befriend Kulai a member of the Pyran race. Kulai is on the run from a planet-devouring menace known as the Triiad. Working for the Triiad is Paiyin another Pyran who is considered a traitor to his race. Kulai joins the three cadets in fleeing from the Triiad. They eventually encounter the Star Ranger, a 50-year-old unmanned spaceship from Earth. The Star Ranger is larger than their small scoutship and it is run by Horten a curmudgeonly computer.

They learn that although with the additional resources of the Star Ranger that they now have the capability of returning home to do so would allow the Triiad to track them to Earth which may not be able to defeat the Triiad. The Hypernauts thus decide to stay in the galactic core and do some exploration. since that is what they were trained to do and battle the Triiad while hoping to find some means to return home without the Triiad following them. Kulai decides to stay with them and help them becoming something of a mentor, she at first did not realise that the cadets were immature youths. The group manages to pick up a pet, the gloose, which Kulai does not really consider a pet since her people consider the creature a source of food.

Hypernauts was a Saturday morning series produced by Foundation Imaging (the company responsible for the computer-generated effects on BABYLON 5). The series was created by Ron Thornton, head of the BABYLON 5 effects team and had both writers and directors from Babylon 5 lend their talents to the series. It was not surprising then that all of the visual effects on the series were computer-generated. Hypernauts was different from many Saturday morning series in that it did not play down to its young audience. It was more like an adult series which children could enjoy instead of a series which was aimed at kids. The series was first shown on ABC. Episodes 1.9 - 1.13 were not aired during the shows original run, since the show was cancelled.

Produced by John Copeland, Kevin G. Cremin, Douglas Netter (executive) , Ron Thornton (executive) , Original music by Christopher Franke, Cinematography by James Mathers, Film Editing by Kathie Burr, Production Design by Steve Berg, Art Direction - Jeffrey Luther, Costume Design by Dorothy Amos & Liz Beigle, Special Effects- Ron Thornton - visual effects , David Wainstain - visual effects.

Other crew- Sherry Hitch - senior composite animator , Shant Jordan- cgi animator/supervisor , Scott MacLachlan- property maker, Jill Markey - assistant art director, Christy Marx - executive story editor ,Steve Pugh- effects systems engineer & Ron Thornton- creator.

Hypernauts was a proof of concept show made by Foundation Imaging. To further prove that the computer-generated imagery and visual effects created in Babylon 5 were easily applied to other venues, the Hypernauts were born. ABC purchased thirteen episodes of the show from DIC Entertainment, eight of which ran on Saturday mornings, as a part of their ABC Kids lineup for a single season from 1995 to 1996 at 10:00 AM. ABC decided not to pick up the series for a second season, and did not air the five remaining episodes. The show was created and produced by Ron Thornton and Douglas Netter, its executive executive story editor was Christy Marx who also wrote four episodes. Marx had previously written for both Babylon 5 and Captain Power. Another series writer was Katherine Lawrence was nominated for a Writers Guild of America Award due to her script for Ice Bound.

Hypernauts characters

Ace

Russell 'Ace' Antonov (Glenn Herman) the team's 'ace' pilot joined Max and Sharkey on the discipline mission as a punishment for using the Academy of Galactic Exploration's sim trainer to play war games. Ace pilots the team's shuttle known as the "Flapjack" on excursions away from the Star Ranger, he's also the team's best mech pilot.

Gloose

A three legged alien pet kept on board the Star Ranger.

Horten

Horten (Lewis Arquette) is the Star Ranger's discrete AI. He is used to control and monitor the systems of the ship.

Max

Noriko 'Max' Matsuda (Heidi Lucas) the team medic, was sent on the disciplinary mission that stranded the three Hypernauts because of unauthorized calls to her sister. Legally separated from her family to join the Academy, Max joined the Academy in defiance of the wishes and beliefs of her people, the isolationist and xenophobic Caduceus Enclave.

Kulai

Kulai (Carrie Dobro) is the last Chalim (spiritual leader) from Pyrus. She joined the Hypernauts as a friend and mentor due to the help they provided in the conflict with Paiyin. The average Pyran lives about 300 years. Kulai is 342 and has an extended lifespan which is a part of the unique abilities with which she was born and which make her a Chalim, so she will probably live another 200 years. Pyrans share a common psychic bond, a sense of shared existence. The presence of a Chalim generates a critical element of the bond which keeps the race strong, healthy and able to procreate. Without a Chalim, the Pyran race would lack a crucial psychic catalyst. No matter where she is, Kulai can sense whether or not her people continue to exist, and they, to a lesser degree, can sense her existence.

Paiyin

Paiyin (Ron Campbell) was decreed a traitor after he betrayed his people to the Triiad, an facilitated the destruction of his own homeworld. He now serves the Triiad.

Sharkey

Ricardo 'Sharkey' Alvarez (Marc Brandon Daniel) the team's engineer and computer technician, was placed on the disciplinary mission after hacking into the Academy's mainframe. As a child, Sharkey was injured the accident that killed his parents. Unresolved trauma from this incident led to Sharkey's claustrophobia

Multimedia

Reunion, Hole in the Sky, New Alliances, and the Challenge parts one and two never aired in the United States, but were available on various media in Australia, Japan and Germany. In Japan Hypernauts was released as "Voyager" on VHS.

I WAS A SIXTH GRADE ALIEN!

AKA: MY BEST FRIEND IS AN ALIEN (AUSTRALIA)

I Was A Sixth Grade Alien! premiered on the Fox Family Channel on July 13, 1999. Beginning with episode 32, the series is only being aired in Canada on YTV. The series is based upon a collection of novels written by award-winning author Bruce Coville. It follows the sixth grade adventures of Pleskit, the first alien kid on Earth whose father, Meenom, is a diplomat with the League of Galactic Bodies. Pleskit just wants to fit in, despite his blue hair, purple face and electricity-conducting antenna.

So this show isn't perfect sue it. It does have its good moments though and some stories were funny, plus it gives you a chance to jump into their world and escape yours for a while. This show has good acting and characters i've seen plastered all over television and their kids. Are your next tom hanks and Gwenth platrow and your Mel gibson. Their your future actors and they have a talent and a skill. People can bad mouth the show but if you have an open mind then you'll see that its a pretty good show for young viewers.

He tries to impress her, but it all goes down the drain because Lindy thinks he's just plain weird! When Lindy and October are in the girls bathroom, Tim follows them, and overhears October ask Lindy what she really thinks of him. After Lindy states that she thinks Tim's a dork, he wants to stay invisible forever. And that could be possible if Pleskit, McNally, and Lindy aren't able to find him soon! In the end, it turns out Lindy really does like Tim, but unfortunately it's too late for him and Lindy to become anything.

2 - 18 HELP! I POOVERIZED MY MOTHER

Pleskit has invented a new invention called the Pooverizer 2000. It looks like an ordinary human pen, when really Pleskit uses it to zap his pet Veeblax's poop when he taking him for a walk so he doesn't have to clean it up. Pleskit asks Tim to walk his Veeblax one day after school, meaning he gets to use the Pooverizer 2000. As Tim is walking the Veeblax, he needs to stop and do his business right in front of the store Tim's mother is shopping in. When the Veeblax is done, he pulls Tim, causing the Pooverizer 2000's aim to go awry. It ends up pointing at the super market Tim's mom is shopping in causing her, and the store to be pooverized!

IJON TICHY: RAUMPILOT

Ijon Tichy is a space pilot, travelling the universe in a rocket that looks suspiciously like a French Press on the outside and like a (much bigger) flat on the inside ... well, apart from the stars racing past his windows. Actually the character itself is stolen from Stanislaw Lem, but I don't think he would've imagined his Space Pilot quite like that, running around unkempt and in undershirts, with a thick Eastern European accent and strange grammar.

I love cheap SciFi shows, because without expensive CGI the writers have to convince you with their stories and their characters. That's the reason I love the Old Who so much, that's why I still love Raumpatrouille.

Ijon Tichy is a fictional character who appears in several works of Stanislaw Lem, including The Futurological Congress, Peace on Earth, Observation on the Spot, The Star Diaries and Memoirs of a Space Traveller (more stories from The Star Diaries, issued in English translation as a separate volume).

On 2007-03-26, the German public television channel ZDF began broadcasting a 15-minute episode of Ijon Tichy: Raumpilot every Monday around 23:55 CET. The producers (Dennis Jacobsen, Randa Chahoup, and Oliver Jahn, also starring) rely on CGI and an unfettered imagination to bring Lem's fantastic universe to life on a rather modest budget. Irony, genre spoofs, and the creative use of everyday objects are key features of their dramedy series - Tichy travels e.g. In a "three-room rocket", which strongly resembles a French press on the outside, and a 1970's Berlin apartment on the inside. His TV adventures often deviate somewhat from those told in the Star Diaries, in part due to the tight 15-minute frame, and also to the general madcap approach taken.

And now - almost without me noticing - some German film students created another cracktastic piece of SciFi.

IMMORTAL, THE

The Immortal was one of the first shows to turn into a version The Fugitive with a science fiction premise Ben Richards, a race car driver was the man being chased. Ben wasn't being chased by the law, instead he was being chased by the flunkies of Arthur Maitland, a rich old man. It seems that Ben had a very unusual blood type that prevented him from growing old and made him immune to disease. In the pilot movie billionaire Jordan Braddock while near death received a transfusion of Ben's blood. This caused him to recover and regain the energy of his youth. However the effects were not permanent, he soon discovered that he would need constant transfusions of Ben's blood to remain young.

He had Ben imprisoned so that he would not meet an accidental death however Ben escaped and fled. By the time the series premiered Braddock was replaced by Maitland another rich old man. Braddock however had a reunion with Ben in one episode. Each week of the series Ben would enter someone's life and help solve their problems while remaining one step ahead of the pursuing Fletcher. A bounty hunter hired by Maitland to track down Ben so he could benefit from eternal youth. Ben's fiancée Sylvia was in the pilot and the first episode of the series. Another similarity to The Fugitive came to the fact that Ben was also looking for someone not a one armed man, but his brother who may have the same rare blood type and who Ben had been separated from as an infant.

Based on a 1969 TV movie which in turn was based on a novel by Dr. James Gunn, this was a realistic science fiction chase story. Maitland and Ben's fiancée Sylvia were only in a few episodes. The TV movie was directed by Joseph Sargent ("Colussus: The Forbin Project"). The Immortal was based on the novel The Immortals by James Gunn. After the pilot movie to the series had been broadcast. Gunn adapted the script to book form which appeared as The Immortal.

"You know that ABC is crazy!" giggled Judy Carne on Laugh-In. "They gave us a show called The Immortal. Thirteen weeks later, it died!" According to writer Robert Specht, The The Immortal grew anemic and died. "It was a Immortal could have been one of TV's biggest disaster," Specht laments. The 1962 novel on which the series was based on the novel, written by James E. Gunn, was a success. The 1969 TV movie called titled The Immortals. In it, a drifter sells his blood Immortal was also a hit. But as a weekly series, to a hospital to make some money to buy wine.

The doctors learn that his blood carries immunities to all diseases and that a transfusion brings temporary health and restored youth. The Immortals examined how this rejuvenating blood, later synthesized, could change society. Gunn, now a professor of English at the University of Kansas and still a science fiction novelist (his books include The Joy Makers and The Listeners), was approached by writer Robert Specht in 1966. Specht thought the novel would make a terrific movie and was interested in securing the rights. Because of the novel's complexities, Gunn felt a movie adaption would be nearly impossible.

In scripting the ABC Movie of the Week version, Specht took only the germ of the novel. He changed the book's drifter to a test car driver named Ben Richards. "I was fascinated by the way James Gunn's novel got into the hunger of older people for immortality," says Specht. "What would a man's life be like if he were the lone sparrow and there were ten cats waiting to devour him? He's got this blood that no one else has. People would go to any lengths to take advantage of that." Specht's script had Richards innocently donating a pint of blood that is used to save a dying tycoon named Braddock (played by Barry Sullivan). When Braddock is rejuvenated by the transfer, it's discovered that Richards has "special blood." The bad news is that Braddock, now lapsing back into old age, wants Richards imprisoned in his mansion so that he can continue getting transfusions. Ben escapes and begins a quest to find his missing brother, Jason, and to ponder what to do with his blood.

Ben Richards was played by Christopher George. "Chris was a very conscientious actor," says the film's producer, Lou Morheim. "I was familiar with his work on the Rat Patrol series. It was his aggressive energy that got him the role." The film was a success, and ABC and Paramount studios immediately signed up The Immortal as a series for 1970-71. "I was surprised by that decision," says Morheim. "The danger in making it a TV series was that it would regress into a one-joke idea."

Chris George continued his role as the immortal, but a new tycoon, Arthur Maitland (played by David Brian), replaced Braddock as the bloodthirsty old man. Each week, Ben had to stay ahead of Maitland's men. Although James Gunn's novel had given birth to the immortal, the novelist's influence on the TV film and series was minimal. The producers were too busy gearing the immortal up for his chase to delve too deeply into the moral and political consequences of Richards' blood. "In March of 1970, I met with Robert Specht," recalls Gunn. "I suggested we recruit science fiction writers such as Ted Sturgeon, Harlan Ellison and David Gerrold. In fact, Gerrold had written me a letter, asking to write for The Immortal." However, Paramount studios wanted a new regime for the series and brought in Anthony Wilson as executive producer and Dan Ullman as story editor. Specht and Gunn were reduced to making suggestions from afar. While Wilson in particular was interested in Gunn's analysis of the upcoming series, the edict handed down from the network was that The Immortal would not be a quote-unquote "science fiction show." It was to be, first and foremost, an action-adventure series (in fact, the first of several TV series in the budget-conscious 1970s to use science fiction as a sidecar gimmick to enliven ordinary crime or adventure plots). Ben's blood was going to ignite countless chases by car, bike and dune buggy. The series was not going to deal with how an immortal's blood could change a society's social and political structure.

When a writers' strike loomed in the spring of 1970, Anthony Wilson was forced to solicit scripts with haste. These scripts were rushed to him before the strike could immobilize the industry. "[Wilson] knew the scripts would be scratched out by harried writers trying to beat a deadline," recalls writer Stephen Kandel. "To his dismay, the strike was settled, and he and the studio were left with 17 scripts of dubious perfection." Writer Jack Turley illustrates an example: He was asked to dust off one of his old scripts for The Fugitive and turn it into an Immortal story. "When one of the guys at ABC read my script, he got his shorts in a knot," recalls Turley. "He called Tony Wilson and told him that I had plagiarized my own Fugitive script. Tony laughed and told the guy to forget it. All he wanted was a shootable script. The guy who blew the whistle crawled back into his hole, and we shot the thing."

The rushed, derivative nature of the scripts hurt the show early on. Two months before the series even aired, the network was stunned by the poor reception test audiences gave two of the completed episodes. While reaction to the TV film a year earlier had been excellent, reaction to the series product was dismal. Some ABC insiders knew they had a doomed show on their hands. At the same time, there were changes in The Immortal's creative staff. Producer Richard Caffey was out, Howie Horwitz was in. Associate producer William Hole, Jr., was out, Gregg Peters was in. Story editor Dan Ullman was out, Stephen Kandel was in.

"You can almost predict whether a show is going to be a dog or not," says Robert Specht. "I saw a sampling of the scripts, and it was clear that they were going to turn this immortal into a social worker every week. They also had him running every week. I told Tony Wilson, 'The pace is too frantic. It'll only make people nervous. The stories are all hyped up. People don't want that kind of nervous energy in their living room every week.'" Gunn's offer to be a consultant on the series fell on deaf ears. "I watched the series with white knuckles," he admits. "I was hoping they would get into stories that would deal with the problems of an immortal in a mortal world. Instead, they never got beyond the chase."

The TV movie was rerun a week before the series premiered. It clocked strong ratings. The series, however, debuted to poor ratings in its Thursday night time slot. Stephen Kandel was brought in to untangle the show's choppy direction. "Howie Horwitz and I had worked together on a schnitzel called The Reporter [in 1964]. We had been brought in at the last minute for major emergency surgery. We saw The Immortal as another victim of an accident. There wasn't much time for tender loving care."

Kandel describes the experience as "making love to an alien inside a rotating barrel filled with smoke and alternate strips of grease and sand paper. All first-season shows are frantic. This was more frantic than most. There was little time to write and to prepare. Most of all, there was a lack of time to evaluate. We found unexpected strengths in the premise but no time to re-do the earlier scripts to emphasize the newly discovered values. We literally wrote it on the run."

Ben Richards was also on the run every week, usually being pursued in a car chase. "The network had a religious faith in the efficacy of car chases," Kandel says. "They were an unfortunate function of the chase theme. There was a feeling that those viewers who were intellectually incapable of following a plot could follow a chase." The guy doing all of the chasing was Fletcher, played by English actor Don Knight. He categorizes his nasty character as "a man on a personal vendetta. It infuriated him that Richards kept out of his reach. Fletcher was obsessed with the hunt. I saw him as going to bed, waking up, taking a shower and going to the bathroom while thinking of nothing else but capturing Ben Richards." Little was learned about Fletcher during the series' run. Knight says, "I liked the idea he was mysterious. You began to wonder where he came from. Was he even human? Originally, the idea was that he would be an android." Fletcher grew to respect his quarry. In the episode "To The Gods Alone," when Fletcher and Richards are trapped in a snowbound lodge, Fletcher says, "You're the kind of man I wish I could be, Ben. I can't allow myself the luxury."

Knight preferred the series when the late Anthony Wilson was in charge. "Tony felt The Immortal was too slow, and he wanted to tighten it up and make it faster. If he had [retained control] of the series, I think it would have lasted longer." Knight wasn't impressed when Howie Horwitz took over as producer. "Howie and I didn't get along," he says. "We had one fight in particular. I was ready to walk off the show because he had changed some of Fletcher's lines. He wanted Fletcher to say how scared and frightened he was. I could never see Fletcher saying that. I told Howie he had a choice: Let me say the line as it was originally written, or he could hire another Fletcher. Everything came to a grinding halt for ten hours. We got it reconciled." Chris George also had his problems with some scripts. As the show's star, he had script approval and made his displeasure known to the producers. "Some of the scripts are rotten," he told TV Guide at the time. "In one show, they've got me playing an introspective character who practically sucks his thumb. In the next show, I'm a finger-snapping, gum chewing wise guy." "Chris had difficulty with the character at the beginning," admits Stephen Kandel, "but he got into it as time went on. Toward the end of the series he was a lot happier."

Director Leslie Martinson notes, "I had done Run for Your Life with Ben Gazzara. He played a man who had a year or two to live. That premise had great margins in which to work. Gazzara had a motivation to live life to its fullest. But Chris George's character seemed much more unrealistic. He's an immortal. Instead of helping mankind with his blood, he spends his time being chased by cars. Had he devoted his life to experimentation, he would have become a powerful force in advancing modern science and medicine. Ben Richards never seemed to have a purpose."

The Immortal was unique in being the first science fiction series that didn't show off science fiction hardware. Optical effects were never used to dramatize Ben's remarkable healing from vicious beatings or accidents. Occasionally, viewers got a hint of Ben's subtle powers. He was resistant to cold temperatures, he didn't get sick and he had a slightly stronger stamina than the average human. He was not, however, a superman. His strength was comparable to that of any mortal, and he was susceptible to the tranquilizer darts used by Fletcher's men. Aside from the chase, Ben's adventures mainly consisted of meeting everyday people who needed his help or were in a position to help him. The stories rarely focused on Ben's unique blood and never explored other science fiction themes.

A1 Francis was the director of photography for The Immortal. Francis, who had previously filmed Star Trek, is astonished when he learns of the writing headaches that occurred during production. "I didn't know about any of those problems," he says. "For me the series was a wonderful working experience. It was a tough show to do because we moved from location to location. Very little of the series was filmed on a soundstage. From the producer to the crafts service man, everyone was cooperative. We had one of the most effective crews in television and always brought the show under budget. Sam Strangis, head of the production department, couldn't get over the amount of work we'd get done in a day." According to Francis, episodes for The Immortal were shot in five days.

The clean, crisp photography, a trademark of the cinematographer, has stood well the test of time. "Every night after we finished filming, we had a meeting in Sam Strangis's office. Tony Wilson, Ted Leonard [executive production manager] and Howie Horwitz were there. We spent a half-hour discussing what we could do to keep the show's momentum up and talking out any problems." One important member of The Immortal team was stuntman Hal Needham, who doubled for Chris George. "Hal and I used to race motorcycles together," says Francis. "I suggested him to Howie. From 20 feet away, Hal and Chris looked identical. That's why Hal got the job. Chris George also did a lot of the action stuff that he didn't have to do. He was a hard-working guy. We never had to wait for Chris, and he was never temperamental. He was a regular guy. He was very generous and thoughtful. He was the kind of guy who would give you the shirt off his back. I admired him tremendously."

Francis recalls that the hard-working crew sometimes cooled off with fun and games. "On location, the minute you had a chance to rest, you would get splashed with water from someone. One day, Howie Horwitz came down to the set to check on things. Unlike Tony Wilson, who was an easygoing fellow Howie was intense and no-nonsense. He was always dressed in immaculate, fancy clothes. Well, Howie got doused with a bucket of water. I got a phone call from Sam Strangis shortly afterward. He wanted a meeting that night. I went to his office and found Howie Horwitz, Ted Leonard and some other guys looking at me. Sam said, 'I've got a complaint.' I was stunned. We never had complaints. Sam said, 'Howie says that there's too much horsing around going down on the set.' I said, 'He does? Is it because he got doused with a bucket of water today?'

Sam said, 'Howie says the playing around has got to stop.' I said, 'Look-we've done eight shows so far. Have we ever fallen behind schedule? Have we ever cost the company money for re-takes? Haven't we, in fact, saved money by bringing the shows under budget?' Sam admitted we had. 'Then what are you talking about?' I said. 'We're doing our work. If the boys are having a good time, it shows everyone is getting along.' So Sam finally said, 'Okay, but just make the guys slow down a bit.' The next morning, I called the guys together and said, 'I got called into the office last night. They're upset because we're having too much fun out here. We're going to have to cut it down.' I made my way back to the truck to get some stuff and the prop man was ahead of me. Just for fun, I goosed him. I turned around and there was Howie Horwitz staring at me. I said, 'Well, Howie, that's the way it goes. There's nothing you can do about it.'" Associate producer Gregg Peters recalls a time when an entire town rebelled against The Immortal's production team. "We filmed several episodes up at Lake Piru, California," he recalls. "It was a quaint, old-fashioned little town. One day I got a call from the production people.

'Gregg, you had better come down here. We can't shoot the episode.' The townspeople had gotten fed up with having a camera crew in their midst. They protested by yelling and turning up their music full blast. This totally disrupted filming. I went up there and gave the townspeople some money and beer. They quieted down. Actually, it was kind of funny. I think they 'held up' every production company from then on!" The fun and games came to an end with the show's cancellation. "There were rumors of it ending," recalls Francis, "but we thought, 'They can't cancel it. We're making it on schedule and saving Paramount money.'" "We were told we were going to be picked up for the remainder of the season," recalls Don Knight. "[Doug Cramer, executive in charge of Paramount's production gave us a big party. The cast and crew were there. It must have been 300 people. Then I looked around and I said to Chris George, 'That's odd. None of the producers have shown up.' Suddenly we were both handed a telegram. It said, 'Sorry. You've been canceled. Best regards, Doug.' We were fit to be tied. When The Immortal went into reruns, it became the highest rated show of the summer. Because of the tremendous ratings we were told that the network was considering bringing us back. Chris even went on the road and tried to get a letter campaign started to save the show."

"The network had considerable ambivalence about canceling the show," says Kandel, "and given some prodding from Paramount, they did consider a revival. There were also endless discussions about continuing the series for syndication."

In February 1971, James Gunn was invited by TV Guide to write an article about The Immortal's history. In that article, "An Author Watches His Brainchild Die," Gunn expressed his feelings that a good concept had been homogenized by the Hollywood industry to "look and sound and feel and smell like everything else." Gunn received over 125 letters from readers in response to the article. One asked Gunn, "You said that you wanted The Immortal to evolve as a series. Where could it have gone after the Movie of the Week?" Another expressed a preference for The Immortal's leanings toward drama rather than science fiction. "It seemed to deal more with relationships than with the possibilities of immortality, but that wasn't entirely bad." Opinion in the letters varied widely. One couple wrote, "The pilot film was excellent. We looked forward to the series but it was a disappointment. We watched it only because we liked Chris George." Meanwhile, another viewer totally disagreed with Gunn's assertion that the series didn't come up to standards. "I didn't stay up until 11 o'clock every week to watch a show with no variety. All that garbage about 'nobody knowing what to do with The Immortal' is just that garbage!"

"Most of the letters were thoughtful and understanding," notes Gunn. "It showed that a good science fiction series could get an audience." While Stephen Kandel was interested in placing more emphasis on the immortal's superblood, he says, "There was never any hint of jazzing up the series with science fiction melodrama. It was what it was. It would either survive or it wouldn't. It had begun to find its audience, but the network, driven by the normal network fear of science fiction, canceled it. We tried for human stories and as a distinct advantage, we were able to set them in a wide range of American vistas. In the best sense we were a road show. "I haven't thought of The Immortal in years," he says quietly. "It ignites some regrets. But series TV is not a business that encourages too much vain sentiment."

CAST NOTES

Christopher George (Ben Richards): Born 1929. Best known as Sam Troy on TV's Rat Patrol series (1966-68). George starred in several films in the 1970s including Grizzly (1976) and Day of the Animals (1977). He was married to actress Lynda Day. Christopher George died of a heart attack in 1983.

Don Knight (Fletcher): Born 1934. An English actor who moved to Los Angeles in 1965, Knight was a frequent guest star on Hawaii 5-0, usually as a bad guy. Knight is also a minister.

David Brian (Maitland): Born 1914. Brian, a leading man in the 1940s, made only two appearances in The Immortal, but his presence as the withering tycoon was always felt. He died in 1993.

1 - 1 THE IMMORTAL (90 MINS)

Billionaire Jordan Braddock is critically ill, a condition made worse after the crash of his private plane. He receives a transfusion of blood and miraculously recovers and grows younger. The cause of the recovery is traced to strange antibodies in the blood of the donor, Ben Richards, a test driver employee at one of Braddock's companies. Once it is learned that the effects of the transfusion are only temporary, Braddock devises a plan to imprison Ben for his own personal use. Ben has to leave everything, including his job and fiancée, behind to keep out of Braddock's clutches.

1 - 2 SYLVIA

Sylvia, Ben's one-time fiancée, is engaged to marry another man. She has taken the step not because she loves the man -- she is still helplessly in love with Ben -- but because she thinks her marriage will get Fletcher out of her life once and for all. Fletcher, positive that Ben will not be able to allow Sylvia to marry without seeing her one last time, stakes out the reception in hopes of catching Ben.

1 - 3 WHITE ELEPHANTS DON'T GROW ON TREES

A salvage dealer offers Ben a hiding place in the back of his disabled truck while Fletcher is in pursuit. After Fletcher leaves Ben helps the man repair the truck and deliver the salvage cargo -- World War I surplus gas canisters that are leaking and could explode at any moment. The salvage company, however, is owned by Arthur Maitland, and Fletcher is at the plant, waiting for Ben to arrive.

1 - 4 REFLECTIONS ON A LOST TOMORROW

Dr. Walter Koster has spent 20 years researching his theory about the connection between hemoglobin and the aging process. Ben sees him on TV and gets a job at the clinic where Dr. Koster and his daughter, also a doctor, work. Ben believes that if Dr. Koster is successful Arthur Maitland will no longer hunt him, so he confides in the doctor about his blood. Dr. Koster attempts to synthetically reproduce the unique qualities in Ben's blood but the experiment fails. Frustrated and tempted by Maitland's offer of a multimillion dollar grant, Koster turns Ben over to Maitland. Koster's daughter, who has become romantically interested in Ben, seeks to help Ben escape from Maitland's men, who have Ben in a straight jacket and guarded in a locked office while Maitland prepares for his coveted transfusion.

1 - 5 THE LEGACY

A teacher gives Ben a ride to escape from Maitland's hounds. Her star pupil is a Chicano boy who lives with his grandfather in an illegal mining camp. Ben and the teacher take the boy home to find his grandfather dying from typhoid fever. The mine foreman, who is only interested in money, refuses to send for medical help for those exposed to the disease. Maitland's men trace Ben to the camp and show up just as the boy begins to show symptoms of typhoid.

1 - 6 THE RAINBOW BUTCHER

A dishonest sheriff jails Ben on trumped-up traffic charges. In order to work off the $50 fine imposed on him, Ben will have to spend 25 days on a work detail building a lodge for the sheriff. A woman befriends Ben after he fixes her car (on the sheriff's orders), and she offers to help him escape if he will retrieve a file the sheriff has on her. Ben gets the file, but the woman backs out of her end of the deal after Ben witnesses an inmate's murder at the hands of the sheriff. When Ben refuses to leave the town forgetting what he saw, the sheriff decides to make Ben the next "accidental death" victim at the work site.

Wr Jack Turley

1 - 7 MAN ON A PUNCHED CARD

Two engaged computer technicians serve as Fletcher's newest weapon in hunting Ben. They have developed a program that can analyze information about Ben and predict his next move -- with alarming accuracy. To the man Ben is nothing but statistics to feed into his computer so he can earn $1000 a day from Maitland Industries for his services. His fiancée, however, leaves the project to help Ben escape from Fletcher. Her daughter is critically ill, so she offers to destroy the computer records on Ben and his brother in exchange for a transfusion to save her daughter's life. Fletcher searches her apartment and discovers this information. With the hospital surrounded, Ben has to trust the woman, the doctor whom Fletcher strong-armed for information, and the computer technician who feels his fiancée jilted him in order to escape from Fletcher and erase the database on Jason Richards.

1 - 8 WHITE HORSE, STEEL HORSE

Ben, one of a number of hired laborers on a farm, witnesses a sheriff accidentally shot by a couple of workers who are upset over withheld wages. The farm owner organizes an "Honor Posse" to hunt down the men. Ben runs, not because he had part in the shooting but because he got word that Fletcher is nearby. The posse captures Ben and the man who shot the sheriff. The farm owner, a friend of the sheriff, implicates Ben in the crime because Ben worked on the getaway motorcycles just before the incident. When the sheriff dies Ben is charged with the murder, which temporarily keeps him out of Fletcher's hands. Ben's options are to allow Fletcher to take him from the posse and into Maitland's custody, or to face the angry posse leader who is more than happy to kill to ensure the dead sheriff receives "justice".

1 - 9 THE QUEEN'S GAMBIT

A woman's car breaks down near Ben as he stands hitchhiking. He fixes her car, then uses it to escape when he spots the ubiquitous black car nearby. The woman whose car he repaired is friendly, offering Ben a place to stay and a job. Too friendly, in fact, but Ben only realizes that after he is shot with a tranquilizer and whisked away to a remote country. The woman, he discovers, works for his captor. The younger but equally ruthless billionaire holding Ben (who is thought dead thanks to a staged car accident that Fletcher witnesses) wants to tap the immortality in Ben's veins. Ben tries to bribe one of the guards, but the guard turns up dead. Ben has only two people to turn to in hope for escape: the hematologist who performed the blood transfusion, and the woman who led him into the trap initially, but she admits to Ben that she has lied to him from the beginning.

1 - 10 BY GIFT OF CHANCE

While hiding out in a Mexican border town Ben is shot in an alley altercation. Fletcher shows up in the alley moments after a fellow American gets Ben off the street. The two return to America as part of a group of illegal workers. They are put to work on a tomato farm run by a cruel foreman. Ben recovers quickly from his gunshot, but the foreman has already had a visit from Fletcher and he assures Ben that he will call Fletcher if Ben causes any trouble. The foreman stands to gain half the farm from the widowed owner if a good crop of tomatoes gets to market on time. He will stop at nothing to accomplish this, including endangering the workers by exposing them to an illegal pesticide.

1 - 11 DEAD MAN, DEAD MAN

Hitchhiking Ben had been viewing wallet photos of a driver's family when the driver runs off the road and crashes down an embankment into a fast-moving river. Ben, thrown free and only slightly injured, uses the wallet to assume the dead man's identity when he hears Fletcher is inquiring about the accident. This poses a problem: the man was a Philadelphia policeman who journeyed to the small California town to take a fugitive back to Pennsylvania. The prisoner has assumed an identity of his own, that of a physician, which is what he is facing charges for. Fletcher is unwilling to accept that Ben perished in the crash. He keeps vigil at the crash site and scours the town with photos of Ben. With the only road in and out of town closed for repairs, Ben has to avoid Fletcher and an angry resident who thinks nothing of resorting to violence to keep the doctor from being arrested. He also must hope that the prisoner will not reveal Ben's true identity and that the real policeman's body will not be recovered from the river before Ben can leave town.

1 - 12 PARADISE BAY

"Keep out -- this means YOU!" reads the sign on a chain blocking the coastal road to the town of Paradise Bay. Ben drives around the barricade because he has a lead on his brother, Jason. The sheriff gives Ben an unfriendly welcome. After prompting from the manager of the company that owns the property, the sheriff shows Ben a tombstone with Jason Richards' name on it and claims Jason died in a scuba diving accident. The town has been sold to a developer to be turned into a resort, and most of the town's 900 residents have left. The few that remain stand to make a lot of money from the resort project, and they don't appreciate a stranger like Ben asking questions about Jason's death. Ben is not satisfied with the answers -- more precisely, the lack of answers and downright lies -- that he gets when he mentions Jason's name. He is worked over and driven off the property, but he returns. Even though he discovers Jason is not his brother, Ben is determined to find out the truth about the man's death even if it means exposing environmental risks that could halt the resort project or implicating a resident in Jason's murder.

1 - 13 THE RETURN

The search for Jason leads Ben east to Ohio to look up the man who gave the two boys shelter when they ran away from the orphanage. Ben is set to leave town but he hears his friend's name on the radio news. The man has been arrested for an assault, a charge that could escalate to murder if the injured college student dies. Ben knows that his blood will save the young man's life. He suspects Dr. Pierce's phone is tapped, but he phones anyway to prove what he has said about his blood to the doctor treating the comatose man. Fletcher is indeed listening, and soon Ben is cornered in a phone booth. Ben has one request of Fletcher: he wants to warn his friend that the comatose student's father is en route with a gun. Fletcher's refuses, shooting Ben with a tranquilizer dart and whisking him away.

1 - 14 TO THE GODS ALONE

Fletcher has Ben. Trapped in a cabin during a snowstorm, Ben and his captor have nothing to do but talk. Ben is curious about Fletcher's desire to work for people like Maitland, which leads the two to recollect about Jordan Braddock, Fletcher's previous employer. Braddock's last encounter with Ben was in Florida, where a "friend" of Ben's notified Fletcher of Ben's whereabouts in exchange for money. Ben manages to escape in the limousine with the critically ill Braddock. Ben offers only to get Braddock to a doctor, a task that proves difficult because of the country locale with lack of phones.

1 - 15 SANCTUARY

Ben's latest escape from Fletcher takes him onto an Indian reservation. His transportation is not very reliable -- a dune buggy he almost finished repairing before fleeing in it. Three young Indians on horseback offer to help Ben -- for money. Ben falls down an embankment and is thought dead by the youths, but the tribal elder thinks otherwise and orders them to bring Ben back. Ben recovers and sets about trying to repair the dune buggy, having to improvise because there are no mechanic tools. Fletcher's men spot the dune buggy's tracks and move in. Firing tear gas into the compound, they grab Ben and head away from the reservation with the youths in pursuit on horseback.

IMMORTAL, THE (2000)

The Immortal (2000) premiered in syndication the week of October 2, 2000. In the early 17th century the exploring merchant ship Dauphine set sail from France to its final resting-place in the far off Japanese seas. A demonic storm left the proud ship in timbers and the crew of eighty-seven destroyed but for one child, Raphael Cain. Raphael was discovered by the enigmatic Yashiro who took him in before himself leaving for ten years, only to return to find Raphael's wife Mikiko murdered and child Kiyomi stolen by the evil demons Mallos and Vashista. Raphael forges his pain in the creation of an otherworldly sword and with a curse that will drag him through the centuries and into Immortality. Trained by Yashiro and accompanied by Goodwin, Raphael becomes The Immortal, battling evil in the name of all that is good.

1 - 1 DREAMS OF THE NIGHT (PART 1 OF 2)

In the premiere episode, parapsychologist Dr. Sara Beckman is attempting to use a demon-summoning device, which serves its purpose all too well. The mysterious Raphael Cain shows up and rescues her, only to be accidentally shot by Sara for his pains. Goodwin whisks Raphael off, but needs Sara's car and apartment to buy him time to heal. The demons, led by Mallos and his "assistant" Vashista, see Beckman's device as a threat and try to track her down. Raphael manages to drive them off, but when he has to stop to rescue Sara, Goodwin is captured by the demonic duo.

Dir David Straiton

1 - 2 DREAMS OF THE NIGHT (PART 2 OF 2)

In part 2, Mallos and Vashista torment Goodwin and use him as bait to draw in Raphael. The plan succeeds, but only after Mallos has sadistically ripped off Vashista's hand and sent her back to Hell himself. In their final battle, Mallos taunts Raphael with the fact that his daughter Kiyomi is still alive and out there...somewhere. He then manages to escape. Raphael and Sara recover Goodwin, and they decide to make Sara part of their team, bringing her scientific expertise on-board.

Dir David Straiton

1 - 3 NOT SO DEAD

A demon body-jumper is the Immortal's newest threat: immune to his sword, it jumps bodies with impunity, including the body of Sara's romantic interest: a detective investigating the series of bizarre murders it leaves behind. Ultimately the trio track it to a hospital where it plans to take over the body of a senator and spread chaos from such a high position. Raphael discovers that the demon is vulnerable to electricity, and weakens it long enough to use his sword to send it back to Hell.

Dir Gavin Wilding

1 - 4 HALF WAY

McQueen, an aging rock star, has a deprogramming center for demons on his farm. Raphael is skeptical about reforming evil, though Sara tries to see things from a scientific angle. Added to the mix is Randall, a deadly demon bounty hunter from hell whose agenda is to behead demons who have seen the light of goodness. In the end, it turns out to be a demon ruse designed to crush McQueen's hopes.

1 - 5 WICKED WICKED WEST

Deciding to take a break, the trio check into a "fantasy suite" type hotel, unaware that it is a haven for demon. Through the fantasy-decorated hotel rooms, guests are sent to an extra-dimensional region with the same motif, and used as a plaything for demons on "vacation". Sara and Goodwin take on the roles of a saloon girl and Billy the Kid, and Raphael must rescue them. He manages to break the enchantment over them, by wooing Sara and letting Goodwin-as-Billy shoot him down in a gunfight. He then goes after and defeats the head demon of the "resort," freeing the rest of the prisoners from the spell and returning them to reality.

Dir Gilbert M. Shilton

1 - 6 PRIME LOCATION

Goodwin is in love with a woman who is in cahoots with a demonic artist. They have occupied a loft that stands on a site of great magical power, and plan to use it to open the way to Hell. Filled with misgivings, Raphael and Sara have no choice but to let Goodwin find out for himself. It turns out that the demons need Goodwin as a sacrifice, but Rafe intervenes and sends them back to Hell through the portal they were ready to throw Goodwin into.

Dir Mark Jean

1 - 7 STUDIO D

A mysterious death of a couch potato leads Raphael and Goodwin to cable studio D, while Sara investigates the victim's homelife. The demons have developed a way to broadcast Hellish transmissions that first suck unsuspecting viewers in to compulsively watching, then drive them to suicide. Tormented with visions of her dead parents (who were killed by demons), Sara almost falls prey to the transmissions as well. Meanwhile, Goodwin dodges the advances of an amorous soap star/female demon, and Raphael must fight his way past a series of TV-studio demon traps. As usual, in the end Rafe defeats the head demon, sending him back to Hell and defeating their scheme-of-the-week.

Dir Ron Oliver

1 - 8 FLIGHT 666

Blaylock, a demon who can change forms and favors plagues, breaks into a government research lab and steals a virulent new germ-warfare disease. He escapes ahead of Raphael, who is taken into custody by the FBI. He manages to convince the agent to free him and then help him track down the supposed terrorist. Meanwhile, Goodwin and Sara have taken the plane that the disguised demon is supposed to be on. It goes down in the woods near a reservoir, and they quickly find out that everyone on the plane are demons! Raphael arrives and manages to stop the demon just before he can dump the vial in the reservoir. The demon takes his form, but is no match for the Immortal's sword skills.

1 - 9 BRIDE'S KISS

The theft of a jewel, the "Bride's Kiss", set the team on the trail of a demon who plans to use it to enthrall a millionaire/computer genius who has created a computer virus capable of destroying most computers. The trio manage to infiltrate the wedding reception and discover that the bridegroom, Maximillian, is a demon. Sara briefly falls victim to the mind-numbing powers of the ring, but Rafe and Goodwin manage to free her. Raphael sends Maximillian back to Hell and the world is saved.

Dir Scott Summersgill

1 - 10 THE HUNTED

Raphael is targeted by three demon assassins. He defeats the first one readily enough. The second, Oniko, is a female demon whom he briefly confronted early in his career. She tries to deceive him into trying to kill the third assassin, Randall (from the episode Half Way). However, it's a trap, and Raphael is attached to the generators at the local electrical plant. Meanwhile, Goodwin and Sara are looking for a permanent residence and run afoul of a demonic real estate agent who locks them up. They manage to escape and, overhearing the demons' plans for Raphael, get to the plant and free him. In the final battle Raphael sends Randall back to Hell.

Dir Bill Corcoran

1 - 11 FOREST FROM THE TREES

The trail of demons takes Raphael, Goodwin and Sara to the northwest forests. Three nature spirits, sisters, share a crystal among themselves. However, one has turned to the side of Hell, become a corporate logging executive and is using foresting to try to draw out her other two sisters and gain their power. Meanwhile, the other two sisters seek to make Sara their third, while a wood nymph tries to seduce Goodwin. Ultimately Raphael recovers the crystals and defeats the evil sister.

1 - 12 THE ASYLUM

Mallos returns with a deadly plan: having Raphael trapped in a mental institution, he does his demonic best to convince him he is not an immortal demon slayer, but "Ralph", an abusive drunken truck driver with impossible heroic delusions. The doctor in charge is unaware that he is serving the demons' cause. Goodwin and Sara (with the help of Lester - a homeless person telepathically tuned into the demon world) must save the Immortal from Mallos before his mind snaps.

1 - 13 LEARNING CURVE

When the team discovers a preppy boarding school is a source of demonic brainwashing, Goodwin and Sara go undercover to learn the truth and expose the demon agenda. Raphael finds himself bonding in the woods with a misunderstood teen on the run from the school. When Goodwin is co-opted into the demon student plans, Sara is nearly sacrificed before Raphael returns to save the day.

1 - 14 THE GOOD SQUIRE

While on the trail of the demon Ashur, Raphael is put into a mystic coma, appearing dead to Sara and Goodwin. Goodwin is now faced with the responsibility of taking on the role of Immortal Demonhunter. However, this is all a ploy on Ashur's part. He transforms a rat into a duplicate of Lester Dash (last seen in "The Asylum") and tries to lure Sara and Goodwin to him. Meanwhile, Ashur's assistant Ellie turns against him and awakens Rafe from his trance. Goodwin is on the verge of defeat, but Raphael steps in and sends Ashur back to Hell. Still, Goodwin knows that if Raphael one day falls, he can take his place.

Wr Deborah Peraya

Dir Scott Summersgill

1 - 15 WIRED

Rodan, yet another evil demon, has a scheme: he is tapping into the despair and misery of human souls and converting it into music that allows him to control humans. Sara, striking out on her own, is visiting Rodan's club and becomes romantically involved with him. Rafe and Goodwin find out about the plan. Goodwin is captured, and Rodan plans on using his 300+ years of experience to generate his most powerful music yet. Raphael is locked into a sound room and blasted with high-intensity music, but uses meditation to resist it (??). In the final showdown with Rodan, Rafe turns on disco music, which weakens the demon enough for Raphael to defeat him. The episode ends with Rafe triumphantly dancing to disco.

Dir Scott Summersgill

1 - 16 REPLAY

While on the trail of a demon, Raphael ends up inside a run-down, neighborhood bar. Unable to escape, he slowly discovers that he is locked in his own introspective voyage of emotional discovery until he is willing to admit to a few emotional realities. Goodwin and Sara are left on the outside to see if they came revive Raphael from this deadly trance.

1 - 17 SPY VS. SPA

While going through some old things of Sara's, she finds a photo of her grandmother from the 40's...posing with Raphael and Goodwin. In flashback, they tell the tale of how they met her. They were investigating a spa rumored to have mystical healing properties just after World War II. Not only is the spa a haven for various Russian and American spy factions, but it is also at the heart of a demon plan to use the waters of Hell to make those who attend the spa become demon-possessed. The two Immortals manage to save the day and pose with Sara's grandmother for a picture at the end.

Wr Martin Borycki

1 - 18 HAPPILY NEVER AFTER

The Immortal one, Sara and Goodwin are still in Europe when Sara is mysteriously kidnapped. The trail leads to a castle where a female demon has set up a "fantasy resort" for rich individuals. Demons take the role of fantasy characters like Hansel and Gretel, and then take over their rich guests and use them to spread evil. Goodwin and Raphael infiltrate the castle. While Goodwin is transformed into a frog, Raphael finds Sara trapped in the role of Snow White to the demon woman's wicked stepmother role. Raphael defeats the head demon and her minions, and the millionaires are freed.

Wr Ron Oliver

Dir Scott Summersgill

1 - 19 DEJA VU

The team travels halfway across the world to Eastern Europe when Raphael hears of a murder/kidnapping eerily similar to that of his wife and daughter's. Certain that Mallos is once again behind it, he's determined not to let history repeat itself and vows to reunite this father with his daughter. But they will have to overcome the hate and anger of a village torn apart by racial prejudice only to discover a few surprises along the way.

Wr Jim Henshaw, Stacey Kaser

Dir Harley Cokliss

1 - 20 RECKONING (PART 1 OF 2)

While travelling in Europe, Goodwin has dreams of a special girl. Raphael relates to Sara (in flashback) how they came to Europe once before on the trail of Mallos. He had kidnapped local Gypsy women, transformed pigs into men, and held the rest of the area in terror. A gypsy woman warns Raphael that he should not interfere, but he musters the Gypsy men and tries to lead them against Mallos. Meanwhile, Goodwin has become involved with a local gypsy girl, and chooses her and a normal life over Raphael. The Gypsy leader is captured, and ultimately Raphael surrenders himself to Mallos in return for the man's freedom.

1 - 22 KIYOMI

While strolling along on the beach, discussing their future, Rafe, Sara and Goodwin discover the teenaged Kiyomi lying on the sand. She has no memory of anything that happened to her since her disappearance 3 centuries ago. Meanwhile, Mallos and a resurrected Vashista are lurking nearby. Apparently Mallos' Millennia Plan require that he marry the Immortal's daughter. Vashista raised the girl in the Beyond, and still has motherly feelings toward her. She tries to come to an arrangement with Rafe: he kills Mallos and she gets Kiyomi. Kiyomi is eventually lured to the abandoned building where the wedding is to take place, and Rafe is captured. Sara and Goodwin sneak in, and Vashista ultimately turns over a wedding-gowned dummy to Mallos and frees Raphael. In a final battle, Rafe sends Mallos back to Hell and recovers his daughter. However, as the episode ends, Vashista shows up and warns that the arrangement is only temporary.

Watari, Goro joins the Youth Corp, an organization founded to battle the evil mutants of Shin Jin Rui (New Human Order). When Goro is tested he's revealed to be a powerful mutant himself. Channeling electricity through his body he becomes the "Champion of Justice", Inazuman (Lightningman).

Watari, Goro has to henshin into Sanagiman before he can become Inazuman.

"Gouriki Shourai" (Gain Herculean Strength)

Sanagiman's body absorbs every attack used against him, storing the kinetic energy to charge the henshin belt. When Sanagiman's belt is fully charged he can become Inazuman.

"Chouriki Shourai" (Gain Super Strength)

Inazuman is a moth. Watari, Goro is like the caterpillar stage, Sanagiman is the cocoon. In the early episodes Sanagiman explodes as Inazuman breaks out of his shell.

Watari, Goro and Inazuman both drive the flying car Raijingo.

Raijingo could fly and could fire missiles out of its mouth.

In episode 24 a new group appears which hates mutants but is not on the side of normal humans either, and Inazuman discovers that a new enemy threatens the peace of the world.

After the Shin Jin Rui is defeated Inazuman takes on the Despâ Gundan (Despar Army) in Inazuman Flash. Watari, Goro's friends from Inazuman do not appear in this series, instead he is working with a Interpol agent; Makoto, Arai; who has a personal grudge against Despar.

Despâ Gundan was actually introduced in the 3D movie Jumping Out, Inazuman on March 16, 1974. The movie which came out 10 days before Inazuman the TV series ended featured both the Shin Jin Rui and Despâ Gundan, and included events not seen in either TV series.

Inazuman means "lightning man" and in Inazuman Flash he gains the ability to strike his enemies with lightning bolts.

Although Toei seems to consider Inazuman and Inazuman Flash to be two separate series, each with their own opening and ending theme songs, I have a Japanese book which includes an episode guide that treats them as one 48 episode series. Which actually makes sense since Inazuman episodes 24 and 25 include Despar robots (Udespar appears as Nazo no Roboto Senshi [Robot Warrior of Puzzle]), Inazuman episode 25 ends with the Japanese for "to be continued" on the screen and the Inazuman Flash credits include scenes that are actually from Inazuman.

The series was produced by Tohru Hirayama, the original music was by Yuki Hide and Michiaki Watanabe and the stunts were performed by Ken Nakayashiki.

INCREDIBLE HULK, THE

The Incredible Hulk was introduced to British TV viewers in 1978, as the latest product off the conveyor belt of SF based heroes to emerge from America in the 1970s. We'd had The Six Million Dollar Man, The Bionic Woman and Man From Atlantis, now there was Dr David Banner, a sensitive, compassionate scientist whose search for a way to unleash man's secret source of strength had a bizarre result.

Banner's desire to find a way of tapping some kind of super-strength is triggered when he fails to rescue his wife from a blazing car. Experimenting with gamma rays, he accidentally receives an overdose, bringing about a Jekyll and Hyde personality he cannot control. Every time anger and frustration overpower his normally placid emotions, Banner is transformed into the Hulk a 7 ft tall, green-skinned man-beast with phenomenal strength. His shirt splits, his shoes vanish, but, as this was a family show, his trousers stay on.

After a couple of 90-minute pilot films, the series took on the familiar mantle of The Fugitive, a 'lumbering man' show with Banner/Hulk searching for the scientific answers and antidote to his plight. Each week he encountered various strangers who tried to help, hinder or understand him. The usual format was: Banner meets good guy/girl. They get in trouble. Banner gets cross and turns into the Hulk who stomps the bad guys. His anger subsides and he becomes mild mannered David Banner again. The regular 'villain' of the show was nosy, headline-hunting reporter Jack McGee who believes the Hulk is a killer and trails him round the country, desperate to expose Banner's secret.

We'd had THE SIX MILLION DOLLAR MAN, THE BIONIC WOMAN and THE MAN FROM ATLANTIS, now there was Dr. David Banner, a sensitive, compassionate scientist whose search for a way to unleash man's secret source of strength had a bizarre results.

The Hulk never spoke in the TV series, but almost uttered his first words in a British TV commercial - for TV Times. However, studio chiefs at Universal Studios in Hollywood were afraid that if the Hulk spoke it would ruin his image, so the green giant was gagged and the ad went out with subtitles. The line: "Gee, I never knew there was so much in it!" There was also a cartoon series made, totalling 13 episodes. From the Comics character created by Stan Lee (1962), Like Stan Lee's "Spider-Man", this story combined the superhero format with adolescent angst. The Incredible Hulk first appeared as a comic book character in a 1962 comic entitled The Incredible Hulk. The comic, created by writer Stan Lee and artist Jack Kirby was about a nuclear scientist who was transformed into a powerful, yet stupid creature after exposure to gamma radiation.

The scientist. Dr. Bruce Banner was exposed to gamma radiation when a gamma bomb he created was prematurely detonated by a spy. Banner survived the explosion, but whenever he became angry he finds himself transforming into the Hulk. The Hulk being a huge green creature with enormous strength. childlike intelligence and driven by raging fury. After his rage settled down. the Hulk transformed back into Banner. The Hulk was hunted by both the military and other super heroes.

Several changes were made to the comic book's concept when it was brought to TV in the late 1970's by producer Kenneth Johnson. These changes were made with the approval of the Hulk's creator Stan Lee. Dr. Bruce Banner found his name changed to Dr David Bruce Banner. In the TV series Dr. Banner was using gamma radiation in an attempt to unlock the hidden strength that all humans possess, and he is responsible for cases of people doing superhuman feats in time of stress. Banner discovered that his genetic make up lacked the ability to gain this temporary strength and as a result he was unable to : prevent his wife from dying in an accident. Banner exposed himself to gamma radiation- a procedure which had no apparent effect on him. However he soon discovered that as soon as he loses his temper he is, transformed into the Hulk.

Realising that he had no control over the creature and that the Hulk could end up killing somebody Banner attempted to reverse the process. His efforts came to a halt when a fire destroyed his laboratory . and killed his partner. The Hulk was seen at the scene of the fire by Jack McGee a reporter for a tabloid newspaper. The National Register. McGee blamed the fire and both David and his partner's death on the Hulk and sets out to find the creature. McGee became obsessed with finding the creature and bringing it to justice. Fortunately for David the National Register was not a well respected newspaper and few people believed McGee's claims of a giant green man.

The Hulk of the TV series was not as powerful as his comic book counterpart. He was smaller, only 7 feet tall and 330 pounds in weight. The Hulk was played by Lou Ferrigno a professional body builder and it would have been impossible to find anyone much bigger and closer to the Hulk's size in the comic book.

The comic Hulk had the ability to speak and was not harmed by bullets. The Hulk could speak and could be injured by bullets, however the wounds he received would quickly heal. Each episode would feature two appearances by the Hulk one at the end of the episode. David made no attempt to clear the Hulk of the murder charges and allowed the world to believe, that he was dead so that he could find a cure for his condition. He became a wanderer with the series becoming a lot like The Fugitive. David would find himself taking making new friends when he took odd jobs to support himself, or else find someone whom he thought could help him find the cure. He would find himself involved in some problem in his new friend's lives which the Hulk helped solve. By the end he would find himself on the road hitchhiking since the Hulk's appearance had drawn the attention of McGee.

The Incredible Hulk was not cancelled because of poor ratings but because Johnson decided he longer wanted to produce the series. The Hulk returned to TV in the late 1980's when many old TV series were being revived as made for TV movies. The rights to the comic character had reverted from Universal Studios to Marvel which had just been bought by New World Studios. Hoping to launch another success series based on a comic book, the first two Hulk revival movies featured appearances by other Marvel comic book characters. If the character was well received the movie could be used as a pilot for a series.

The first of the movies The Incredible Hulk Returns featured Thor, the Scandinavian God of Thunder. The second movie The Trial of the Incredible Hulk featured the Daredevil, who was in reality a blind attorney. Neither of these heroes proved popular enough to get their own TV series. The third and final Hulk revival film did not feature any other Marvel super heroes Entitled The Death Of Incredible Hulk this movie was the last appearance of the TV Hulk since the film's climax featured the Hulk falling out of an airplane to his death. Despite the fact that the Hulk appears dead at the end the film a fourth Hulk movie was being planned, but will never be made since the death of actor Bixby.

The series is based on the MARVEL COMICS character of the same name. Mild-mannered scientist Dr David Banner (Bixby) subjects himself to gamma radiation and turns temporarily into a violent, green, 7ft (2.15m) hulk (Ferrigno), a condition that repeats itself whenever he is under stress. The Hulk persona never speaks. Banner has many adventures while on the run, trailed by abrasive investigative reporter McGee (Colvin), who suspects the truth. Only a handful of episodes -- notably the 2-part "Prometheus", which involves a meteor freezing Banner/Hulk into an intermediate state -- have any SF components aside from the initial SUPERHERO premise. In this formulaic but popular series the Hulk is much more polite (and lacklustre) than his frenzied comic-book counterpart.

The 2 pilots and a further 2-episode story were syndicated in the USA and released as movies elsewhere: The Incredible Hulk (1977), Return of the Incredible Hulk (1977; a retitling of "Death in the Family") and Bride of the Incredible Hulk (1978; a retitling of "Married"). 2 made-for-tv movies, both dir Bill Bixby, are Trial of the Incredible Hulk (1979) and Death of the Incredible Hulk (1990).

Bill Bixby, familiar to TV fans as The Magician, starred as David Banner, and former Mr World and Mr Universe, Lou Ferrigno was the Hulk. Ferrigno, whose first major acting role was in Arnold Schwarzenegger's Pumping Iron film, was anxious not to portray the Hulk as a simple beast, but as a man striving to control the beast within him. Whatever the motivation, this TV Hulk bore little resemblance to the Marvel Comics original.

One in-joke, partly lost on younger fans, was the guest appearance of Ray 'Uncle Martin' Walston as an ageing magician (with Bixby as his assistant) in an episode called . . . My Favourite Magician.

Note: The Hulk never spoke in the TV series, but almost uttered his first words in a British TV commercial - for TV Times. However, studio chiefs at Universal in Hollywood were afraid that if the Hulk spoke it would ruin his image, so the green giant was gagged and the ad went out with subtitles. The line: 'Gee, I never knew there was so much in it!'

The executive producer was Kenneth Johnson, producers were Chuck Bowman, Jim Parriott, Nicholas Corea, James G. Hirsch, Bob Steinhauer, Karen Harris and Jil Sherman. The show premiered in the UK on the 26th May 1978 and as with most American series at the time, the U.K. running order deviated from the U.S. original - and differed in the length and composition of various runs around the ITV regions.

Prods included Nicholas Corea, James D. Parriott, Charles Bowman, Bob Sherman. Dirs included Johnson, Bowman, Kenneth Gilbert, Jeffrey Hayden, Reza Badiyi, Jack Colvin. Writers included Johnson, Parriott, Corea, Karen Harris and Jill Sherman, Richard Christian Matheson.

The various famous actors to have appeared in the show included Don Marshall, Nichelle Nichols (STAR TREK), Whit Bissel (THE TIME TUNNEL), Kim Cattrall (WILD PALMS, OP CENTRE, ROBIN COOKS' INVASION), Charles Napier (OUTLAWS), Fred Ward (INVASION EARTH), Diane Muldaur (STAR TREK, STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION), and for the TV movies in the 1990s there was John Rhys-Davies (SLIDERS, STAR TREK : VOYAGER), Andreas Katsulas (BABYLON 5), and Elizabeth Gracen (HIGHLANDER: THE RAVEN, HIGHLANDER).

In the comic books, the Incredible Hulk is a not-so-jolly, muscle-endowed green giant perpetually garbed in purple pants. Bounding up and down, covering miles at a time, he spouts fantastic dialogue such as, "Hulk smash!" or, "Puny humans! Hulk kill all!" Transforming such a campy, wildly comic premise into a believable, dramatic one-hour television show was a task that very few in Hollywood wanted to take on. But writer-director-producer Kenneth Johnson ingeniously found a way to do it, and the Incredible Hulk smashed his fists from the comic pages into our television screens in the winter of 1977.

Frank Price, the head of Universal Television at the time, had acquired the rights of several Marvel Comics characters for translation to television, and he thought of Kenneth Johnson as a potential producer-writer to take on the challenge. But Johnson's initial reaction was very negative: "I'm not interested in doing any more superhero, comic book-type shows." He was in the heat of working on The Bionic Woman at the time and didn't want to be typecast as someone doing superhero shows. "I was afraid that was all people would look after for me in the future, you know? I was really trying to duck it." Some of the other characters snapped up for an over-the-airwaves makeover were the Human Torch, Captain America, Thor, Doctor Strange and Daredevil. "I was literally standing at home trying to figure out how to say, 'No!' because I just didn't want to do any of them." But after a conversation with pal Steven Bochco (creator of Hill Street Blues), Johnson realized that if he did Incredible Hulk for Universal, he could get another pet project, a mini-series adaptation of Walter Scott's Ivanhoe, off the ground as a favor.

The concept that would turn the Incredible Hulk into a television character came from the unlikely inspiration of Les Miserables. "I was thinking of The Fugitive and Inspector Javert," says Johnson, "and I thought, 'Well, wait a minute, maybe there's a way to take a little bit of Victor Hugo, Robert Louis Stevenson, and this ludicrous premise called Incredible Hulk and meld a1J of these together,'" said Johnson. "So I went to Frank Price and said, 'I think I can make the Incredible Hulk work, but I want to do it this particular way, a sort of Fugitive manner, and ... make it totally different, classy and classical.'" The deal was struck. Johnson would later do Ivanhoe if he'd bring the Hulk to life. (Ivanhoe was produced by CBS in 1982, but it was not Johnson's script or project.)

He researched his subject, but Johnson confesses that the actual Hulk comic books didn't give him much to go on, "except the basic premise of a man exposed to gamma radiation, and that somehow altered his body chemistry. I just sort of took that as a red-liner and went from there. Over Easter weekend of 1977, I guess, I wrote ... the pilot for The Incredible Hulk." The possibilities of what he could do with the character became so intriguing that on Easter Sunday, in a white-hot fever over the course of a 12-hour period, Johnson wrote in longhand 43 pages of script.

"That's sort of a record, I've never gone faster than that. This was before computers. The more I got into it, the more I realized there was a delicious character here that I could give some psychological depth; raise it above the levels of its comic book origins. George Burns said, 'If you're going to tell a lie, put as much truth as you can in it.' So I did a tremendous amount of research into cellular structure, various kinds of metamorphoses and possible ways something like this could happen." In the end, the Hulk of the comics bore little resemblance to the Hulk of television. Several alterations were necessary—the television Hulk would not have Tarzan-speak and would not be as powerful as the comic book character (read: the television budget just wouldn't allow that!). Plus, there was an entire layer of emotional and physical consequences that had to be addressed, making the adventures of David Banner more dramatic and three-dimensional than in comics. Finally no super-villains. Grim reality, not camp, was the order on the plate.

The drama and dimensions came first in casting a respected comedy and dramatic actor, Bill Bixby, as Dr. David Banner. (Johnson never thought of anyone else—even though when his agent first showed him the script, Bixby reportedly moaned, "Oh pleeuuzz! I don't want to get involved in anything called The Incredible Hulk!") Further depth came through in the types of stories the writers and producers chose to tell, many of which tackled weighty social problems.

Nevertheless, nearly everyone required some time to warm up to the project. "I was so embarrassed that the title of my original script was 'The Hulk,' not 'The Incredible Hulk,'" laughs Johnson. "I couldn't deal with writing 'Incredible.' It's a comic book title, you know? It had been around for a couple of years, and they insisted on keeping the title. I did manage to change the name of the lead character. I couldn't deal with Bruce, so I changed it to David Banner. And eventually compromised and gave him the middle name of Bruce."

A little-known fact is that Lou Ferrigno was not the original choice to play the creature. Richard Kiel, best known for a pair of appearances as the character 'Jaws' in the James Bond films The Spy Who Loved Me and Moonraker, was the original choice. "I met Lou, but he had absolutely no acting experience," remembers Johnson. "I saw that it would be very difficult to make an actor out of him. Richard Kiel, on the other hand, was an actor and happened to be seven and a half feet tall. We shot a whole week, and then I think it was Frank Price's son who came in to a screening and said, 'It's a neat show but the guy doesn't look like the Hulk!' We had four weeks scheduled. I had shot a whole sequence at the lake. So, I had to go back to Lou, and he's not as big as Richard, he's a whole foot shorter. But I had a little movie magic and a lot of patience [to make the illusion believable]."

Asked why he originally chose Kiel, who, though tall, is not muscled, Johnson explains, "I wanted an actor. You have to understand I wasn't out to do a comic book. I was out to do something solid, like Frankenstein by Mary Shelley. I wanted somebody who could act, play the emotions I wanted the creature to have. I didn't want him to just crash through the wall, you know? I wasn't sure I could get that from Louie. But it turned out that Lou was quite good and a real natural, and once we got to working together and got comfortable with what he had to do and how to do it, it worked out fine."

The first Hulk telefilm, written and produced by Ken Johnson, made about $7 million when it was released in Europe as a theatrical, running for about two months. Nicholas Corea, supervising producer, screenwriter and sometime director for The Incredible Hulk, recalls his experiences on the show as "the best time of my life. Universal studios was at the height of its TV power-12 to 14 series on each year-and Reagan's tax laws weren't on the books. You could put a lot of time, energy and money into a production-even go over budget without any flack from the 'big boys' [at the studio]. All that ended about the time The Hulk ended. Suddenly it was about money and how much was spent that determined the quality of a show. Those four or five years were also an incredible learning time for me, brand new in the biz and learning something each new day. Working my rear off, and never realizing it. I was enjoying myself so much. There were no fat writer-producers in '78 to '82."

Moving up the ladder quickly from story editor to writer-producer, Corea was eventually tapped as supervising producer, which "scared the hell out of me" until Ken Johnson explained that "common sense was the only talent needed for the position. The technical aspects would come with time. He was right, of course. Common sense and, I would add, cinematic taste-an introverted history of living at movie houses and/or in front of a TV-is all one needs to produce."

To generate stories for the series, producers and writers would gather together and throw ideas back and forth. As Corea explains, the thrust for Banner's life in the world was to find stories that were more than just run-of-the-mill adventures. They wanted stories that would touch viewers' emotions. "We wanted a show that 'did numbers' and was successful, so we laid in a mess of action and special effects. But also-especially after the show was a hit-we wanted tales that had something universal in them (like all good stories) that would really strike a chord in the audience." That is to say, we all have the green monster inside of us trying to break out, and the show would provide a catharsis by manifesting that monster in a safe, nonviolent way. "This element was very important in all the shows, all the way through. What makes you angry? Figure that out, then write a show about it."

This approach inspired episodes dealing with such issues as child abuse, mental health, terminal illness, mental retardation, teenage alcoholism, drugs, teenage runaways, family estrangements, paraplegism, and yellow journalism. Occasionally, various government institutions got the stab, as when Banner got stuck in a phone booth and the Hulk had to smash his way out. "Another criteria was, if you show an episode in Botswana, Africa, will the viewer get it?" says Corea. "That's why, I believe, the show has a kind of natural universality." Says Andrew Schneider, story editor for Hulk's third season, "I tried to find stories that were emotionally powerful and socially relevant, that would put David Banner in crisis and conform to our 'two Hulk-outs per episode' format. It was difficult to keep from digressing into formula, but we tried very hard to make each episode fresh in its own way. I haven't seen any Hulk episodes recently but I'm satisfied with the show in that we were able to raise it above the level of a comic book. We tried to tell meaningful stories, and by and large, I think we were successful."

Corea agrees. "I think the show was more than its comic book origins. I know, for a fact, that it had a lot more meat on its bones than, say, Wonder Woman, being produced at Warner Brothers at the same time." For Johnson, his goal for the series was simply to create "a show that adults could watch. What happened to The Hulk was that kids would watch to see the big green man smash through the wall, but very quickly adults would watch and realize there's more going on here in terms of story. This was really a psychological drama about a man with a major problem he's trying to solve in a realistic way, and he was a very sympathetic character. In each of the episodes we wanted it to be about something. Writers would come in with an idea and start talking about plot. And I'd say, 'No, I don't want to hear about plot. I want to know what's it about.' They'd say, 'What do you mean?' I'd reply, 'Well, is it about anger?'

"The show comes in different forms. For some people David Banner/Hulk is anger, drugs, for some it's alcohol, and others yet it's obsession or vengeance. They get upset, and their Hulk comes out. People 'Hulk out.' We've developed a phrase in the English language, a 'Hulk-out,' the same way that 'bionics' did. We wanted each episode to somehow reflect that thematic material. And that's what sets The Hulk apart from other shows." Johnson also claims that David Banner's line, "Don't make me angry, you wouldn't like me when I'm angry!" became "a catch phrase not only in the series and in the industry but around the world."

The Incredible Hulk was one of the most expensive shows filming at the time, and near the end of its run, the studio asked those running the show to cut the Hulk's appearances to one per episode.

"This attempt to emasculate the show-in its third year, for God's sake-led to Kenny Johnson and myself saying, 'No!' and being let go," remembers Corea. "However, this state of affairs lasted only about 48 hours, and everything was brought back to normal by our star, Bill Bixby, making it clear that he needed our services to carry on.

Johnson adds his detailed recollection: "There's a guy named Peter Thompson who took over the production department at Universal. He called me one day and said, 'Kenny, the studio doesn't want to deficit finance any more. You gotta take $100,000 out of every episode. And that's the rule.' I said, 'No problem, Peter. Now, are you going to call them and say we can only afford one 'Hulk-out' instead of two?' 'No, no, no! It has to be the same show!' and I said, 'Let me explain something to you, Peter. I can do a show called Incredible Hulk for $7 or $700, $700,000 or $7 million. The only thing they have in common is the title! Now, if you want me to do the same show, it has to be the same money!' He said, 'Are you refusing to cut?' 'It can't be done, Peter!' so he said, 'You're suspended!' I said, 'Ok, Peter, let's call Nick.' So he called Nick and said, 'You're in charge!' Then Nick said, 'F--- you, Peter!' Peter Thompson went to the whole staff and managed to suspend everybody. All of a sudden, there's no staff anymore. This lasted for 24 hours, and then everything went on as normal afterwards, except that Peter Thompson was thrown out of his job about a month later!"

What was life like on the Hulk set? Corea offers this anecdote: When Lou Ferrigno first started the show, his hearing aids were not of the best quality and it was necessary to get someone to signal him at the start and end of a scene. "Usually, a trainee from the Directors' Guild or a second assistant director would lie on the ground below [the camera] frame line. [It was his job] when the director yelled 'Action!' to tap Lou on the leg once to start, and when the director yelled 'Cut!' to smack him twice so he'd stop wrecking the set. [I'm not sure precisely] how the code worked, but the actual event was a daily occurrence until Lou was able to invest in a much better quality hearing device that made this no longer necessary."

As for working with Kenneth Johnson, Corea says, "[He] took a basic comic book idea and turned it into a classic investigation into the soul of man ala Portrait of Dorian Grey and Jekyll and Hyde. Instead of a character who could make himself Hulk out, Kenny created a tortured individual who'd overdosed and was now cursed with a side of himself he could not control. David Banner thus became Everyman and not 'special man,' searching for an answer to a very universal and human dilemma. "Kenny's writing was always superior, and his directing was terrific. He taught me a hell of a lot, and I've always looked on him as mentor and guru. Our backgrounds-he was from the 'aristocracy' and me from 'ethnic roots'-always kept us from being best friends, but we were definitely good pals and co-workers from 12 to 18 hours a day."

Asked if he was satisfied with his work on this show of many years ago, Corea replies, almost insulted, "I pity the TV writer, producer [or] director who is ever 'satisfied' with the work accomplished. To me, that's death! Walking out of a screening room, winking at the men and women who work with you and chortling: 'Perfect! Terrific stuff!' God, it makes me gag to think about it. There were quite a few executive producers in those days who said just that-who believed they'd found the key to infallibility. Most of those jerks are looking for work right now. Sure, there were many, many things we didn't get to accomplish with the show, mainly because CBS canceled us without much warning. At the time I remember that our biggest problem with the cancelation was the fact they never gave us the chance to wrap up the show. To do a final, blockbuster, two-hour episode that put Bix in the wringer and saved him from the monster inside a kind of addiction story where David Banner had to finally turn himself inside out and explore the dark zones of his soul, etcetera. Also, we wanted a trial to be part of this two-hour-an inquisition of our hero that would cause him to Hulk out on the stand."

Over the course of the series, reporter Jack MacGee never really understood that the Hulk was David Banner. Only late in the second season, in the two-parter "Mystery Man," did he learn that the Hulk was a man who transformed into the creature and back. Would it have been a better idea, dramatically, for MacGee to know the Hulk's identity? Corea considers the question.

"My answer is that Kenny, Bill Bixby, [and] CBS thought it more exciting that MacGee didn't. [But] I agree with you. It was strictly a consensus that a MacGee who was in the dark, so to speak, would be a much better protagonist than a MacGee who understood Banner's plight. A MacGee who suddenly was no longer a threat and possibly even a partner or friend. Of course, if we'd been able to do that last wrap-up show, you can be certain MacGee would've had that shock." For the show's cancellation, Ken Johnson lays the blame on Harvey Shepherd, then head of the CBS television network. "Harvey felt there wasn't a season left in it," growls Johnson. "It was a particularly foolish choice because at the time we had been canceled we had seven episodes in the can that hadn't aired yet! I said, 'Harvey, buy five or six more episodes, and you'll have a whole half-season right there! Then you'll see! The show's got another year in it.' He decided in his infinite wisdom not to, and I razzed him a good deal about it since then."

As the series developed, producers and the studio went looking for another producer to bring some freshness to the show. They snagged Jeff Freilich. He came aboard The Incredible Hulk as a producer and writer during the third season to see what ideas he could contribute. "When I was producing the show, Bill Bixby's concern was that the Hulk was becoming too repetitive," says Freilich. "It was fairly predictable that if David Banner got confronted by, you know, violent or threatening people, he would turn into the Hulk. That was always based on anger. He was afraid the series wouldn't last much longer because it was the same note over and over again. And what I came up with was an idea that I thought would keep us going for a little bit. I [wrote] a story that ... involved Banner as a logger in Oregon, working near a river. He gets stung by a bee and turns into the Hulk. He stubs his toe and turns into the Hulk. David Banner is not only confused, but terrified that now it seems to be the slightest trauma that does it."

What we discover [in the course of the story] is that a B-29 plane bound from Los Angeles to Japan at the end of the war, carrying a nuclear device on it, went down and was underwater near where he is logging and has been underwater for 40 years. Because of added radiation, it was accelerating the Hulk-outs. It became, then, a key. Any scientist who discovers that a change in a phenomenon can be instigated by some outside substances—in this case, radiation—would immediately start to work on a cure or reverse of that. It gave Banner a new kind of quest."

The ideas were interesting, but we never saw this story on the air. "I got into a fight, basically, with the people on the show," sighs Freilich. "Part of it was because I was more involved with the star than some people wanted me to be." Freilich left the show and went down the block to Glen Larson, who was also at Universal, to produce Galactica 1980. Meanwhile, Freilich says, "Ken Johnson proceeded to basically borrow the idea and do the big two-parter which opened next season, which was David Banner at the transformation stage, where there is an overexposure [fourth season's premiere, Prometheus]. To me, it was the most obvious departure of the series. To accelerate the Hulk-outs, to make them so frightening and confusing that instead of traveling from city to city aimlessly, which is what Bixby's character did, that he should now kind of rechannel his energies to finding a cure for his problem, which was the original premise of the show."

The problem was, he was very rarely looking for the premise. It was basically The Fugitive." Freilich believes that the show enjoyed continued success because "it had heart to it, basically. The show always involved some everyday person. It was what makes any comic book work. The best Superman stories involve people who are in impossible situations that can only be rescued by a superhero from another planet. In the case of the Hulk, it was people up against very tough odds who are saved by a seemingly everyday man, who has this incredible power that torments him. So, he was a wonderful anti-hero. Bixby played it as a man tormented and obsessive, and at the same time, because he was a doctor, it was in his character to help people. He couldn't turn his back on helpless victims, knowing full well that in the process [of helping] he'd probably be subjected to this horrible transformation into this large, green, angry monster, which was something he didn't want to put himself through. [He] subjected himself to it as a sacrificial donation to other people's betterment. It is an interesting, compelling, human thing."

"The other reason the show is successful is there still is a dearth of quality children's programming. What I found fascinating about the Hulk ... and made me feel valuable as a writer, was that I got involved with a large number of child psychiatrists who all thought that The Hulk was an outstanding children's program. The reason why was that it demonstrated to children, when Bill Bixby turned into Lou Ferrigno ... that David Banner was acting out his anger, and that it was okay to become angry. Many children have a tremendous difficulty ... expressing anger appropriately. I was told by a therapist that a lot of children, in a very healthy way, would become the Hulk when they became angry. Parents were complaining that the Hulk provoked violence in their children. Not that they broke walls or stuff like that, but they'd growl and they'd throw pillows around. They would act out as if they were the Hulk. So I got concerned about that. I have two children of my own now. I'm a little sensitive to what they watch. At the time, I was particularly sensitive because I didn't want to be creating stories that would have really serious negative repercussions, particularly among children. So, I talked to a few people I knew."

I had gone to medical school at the University of Southern California and knew a lot of psychiatrists who would have been graduates with me, and they all did research. I started to get calls back from Children's Hospital in Los Angeles, a place in New York and a couple of other places, and they all said, 'When children act out anger, it's because they can't express it otherwise, and if they can't find a way to act out it will become repressed, and if it does become repressed, they will grow into violent adults.' It was a wonderful outlet for children. It was a way to validate and express anger when they might otherwise repress it or internalize it and cause problems in themselves or their future. To me, all of a sudden, gee, I'm working on a show that actually has some value!"

Freilich remembers feedback for The Incredible Hulk as "very positive. I think that Ken Johnson really tried to make each individual episode have some meaningful, accessible human story. Each of these stories could be told without the Hulk." For Freilich, The Incredible Hulk was a pivotal assignment because it was his first production. "I was hired as the producer of The Hulk for no particular reason," he says, "except for the fact that I was a very good writer and both Ken Johnson and Nick Corea wanted to branch out and try other shows, other things, and wanted me to become heir apparent to the show. The fact that Ken Johnson and I had a personality clash precluded me from taking that show over, which I'm glad I didn't do in retrospect. Nick Corea, whom I have a lot of admiration and respect for as a creative person, should really have been write something closer to his heart. Nick's a former police officer, and a marine in Vietnam. He's got a wonderful background for writing gritty politics. If he could have been born again, he'd like to be either Ernest Hemingway or Raymond Chandler. Nick was the best Hulk writer I think there was. He was also the best director of the ones who directed episodes."

Asked to describe Ken Johnson, the show's television creator, Freilich first emphasizes that Johnson "took the Hulk seriously. I mean, he took everything seriously and, in fact, wanted the show to be as reality-based as possible. Which, when you're doing a show about a man who, when he gets run over by a steam roller, has his eyes go white and comes out a green person, is very difficult to accept."

Freilich then supplies an extended anecdote that reveals Johnson's commitment to his craft and, in particular, to the Hulk. During the second season of the show, for an episode titled "Killer Instinct," Freilich, Johnson and episode director Ray Danton were all sitting in the editing room, viewing dailies. "There's a scene that takes place in the Los Angeles Coliseum during a football game where stock footage is used, but there is a young boy who is sitting in this 100,000-seat coliseum, way up high, watching, and he has a relationship to David Banner. He sees David Banner running across the field, and Banner runs right through a play, and [with] the combination of the two teams ramming over him, he winds up with 2300 pounds of bodies over him, and he becomes the Hulk.

"Instead of tearing apart Los Angeles Coliseum, Lou is supposed to look around and spot this boy sitting up in the coliseum, and a tear appears under his eye and drips down his cheek," said Freilich, relishing the tale. "This is a Hulk moment. Ken Johnson reached over to the controls on the console and paused the film and turned to Ray Danton and said, 'Ray, I don't understand this! This isn't real!' He says, 'How could the Hulk come out of the scrimmage, look up and spot this boy out of a hundred thousand people? This is crazy, nobody's going to believe this. Why did you do this?' There was a long pause, and Ray leaned over and said, 'Kenny why is he green?' Ok? It was like Ken bought this myth to the point where if everything else isn't real, then it would become a cartoon, is what he would think. We kept reminding him it was a cartoon and that nobody would ask how Superman or Batman can leap or fly out of the sky and arrive just in the right time to stop a mugger from roughing up a family. ... Nobody would ask that question because it goes with the mythology and fantasy involved. In this instance, why would anyone wonder how the Hulk could spot this boy? But Ken really thought it was very important and couldn't answer why he was green at all. It was a funny kind of situation, but it made all of us fall over because it made us think, jeez, what are we doing here? Were we making a comic book or a television show?"

The story is recounted to Johnson, who says, "Jeff is certainly correct in my dedication to keep the show as real as possible. The Hulk was green because I had it forced on me. In the original comics he was grey, then Stan Lee wanted a color. The printer said they could do a nice consistent green. Stan said okay. I wanted him red, the color of rage, anger, danger-and my favorite word, logic." Freilich believes that The Incredible Hulk was one of the best children's television shows ever made. "I think, for me, it opened up my career [just] because someone anointed me and said, 'Now you're a producer,'" recalls Freilich. "I didn't know what I was doing. It took me a few months to figure it out, and after that I was able to work quite well on Galactica 1980 and after that, creating my own shows and becoming executive producer and running things."

The Incredible Hulk's creator from the comics, Stan Lee, wasn't too far away during the show's production. He was labeled as creative consultant. Lee remembers that although Ken Johnson had changed the Hulk in a number of ways (with his approval), the result was "an intelligent job." "I felt the changes he wanted actually would make it a better television show," says Lee. "Apparently, we were right, because it was quite successful." Lee cited the first Hulk telefilm as a favorite of all the Huiks. "I felt it was so beautifully done. I thought it just proves how brilliant Ken Johnson was. It was an adult show that happened to have a monster in it. But you only saw the monster for about five minutes for each hour. A couple of minutes in the beginning and a few minutes at the end, and for the most part, the show was the story of this fellow, David Banner, and the things that happened to him and the romances he would get into, and personal problems. So it was a show that any intelligent adult could watch and could enjoy. I thought it was very well done."

As to whether he met with the production staff or contributed ideas to the show, Lee just says, "It was basically Ken Johnson's show. He made all the major decisions. Anything that changed the Hulk from the way we had him in the books, he would discuss with me and we would work it out. Mostly, I agreed with virtually everything he wanted to do."

In 1988, New World Television acquired the rights to several Marvel Comics characters and, in an effort to generate television series pilots, released a TV Movie titled The Incredible Hulk Returns, written and directed by Nicholas Corea. This film guest-starred actor Eric Kramer as the comic book character the Mighty Thor. Later, in 1989, New World also released another movie, The Trial of the Incredible Hulk, written by Gerald Dipego and directed by Bill Bixby. This time around, the guest super hero was Daredevil, essayed by soap opera veteran Rex Smith. When neither film was successful in launching a TV series for the new characters, Bixby (still at the helm as director) and company decided to go back to the roots of the series and complete the long journey of David Banner by killing him. The Death of the Incredible Hulk, released in 1990, did just that.

Stan Lee, asked his opinion of the three post-series Hulk TV movies, says, "The one with Thor, I thought, they meant well. They had the best of intentions, but ... maybe ... the only way they felt they could do it, because they felt Thor was such an unbelievable character, was to do it humorously. But it didn't seem to work. I don't know why. It was just a bad idea. They changed Thor tremendously from the way he is in the comic books. They split him into two characters; him and Donald Blake, so it was a different character, a different mood. I felt there was no reason to have changed it that much."

To explain why some of those changes were necessary, Nick Corea describes his work on that production: "I was given this assignment, I wanted to do it, but then when I saw I had to put in the Marvel Comic character, I looked through them all, and Thor was the one I felt that I could do something about-make it a little humorous, and have him be basically a big old Viking that comes back into our time now and bumps into events in our world. I like the idea of somebody out of time and out of place in our world that can show us and tell us about ourselves from a different perspective. We had very little money to do it, and even though I had brought him way down from the original Thor, I wasn't going to have him in Valhalla, talking to his father in the clouds. In the comic book he takes out his hammer and just flies with it. I basically brought it down to the places where we could film him for the amount of money we had. My memories were very good of everybody below the line, the crew and all the stunt people."

Regarding the second movie, The Trial of the Incredible Hulk with Daredevil, Stan Lee was more generous. "I thought that worked a little bit better. But again, I don't know why they changed Daredevil the way they did. He's always had a red costume, and they had him in a black costume. They made the mask a bit different, and I think what that did was alienate a lot of the comic book fans who watched the show. It would be like doing Superman in a green polka dot cape! It might not affect the story but it would get the fans a little upset. But I thought the acting was rather good, and it was well-written and it was a good show."

For the Trial of the Incredible Hulk (filmed in Vancouver), Lee wanted to participate in the filming, so Bixby invited him up from Los Angeles and inserted him into the film as the foreman in the court sequence. "I was in the jury box, and there was a scene where the Hulk lifts the jury box up and all the people are scared out of their trees," laughs Lee. "And I wasn't allowed to be in that scene because all the people had to be stuntmen. And I said, 'Well, there's nothing difficult about sitting in a scene and jumping out of it when the Hulk starts shifting it.' But they said, 'No, no, we can't take a chance. According to union rules, it has to be a stunt person.' When the Hulk started lifting the box, I was not there. And it was somebody else, and I thought, 'This is great! Here I am, and I've got my own stuntman!'"

Regarding the Death of the Incredible Hulk, the one that ended it all, Lee says, "I thought it was very well done. For some reason, the network said there was supposed to be another show following that in which he comes back to life, but they never produced it. I don't know why. But I thought the death was okay." David Banner dies when a plane is trying to take off and the Hulk hangs on to the doorway. Attempting to get rid of him, the pilot takes the plane through some air gymnastics and shakes the creature off, and he falls through the night sky, lands on the airport runway and dies.

"Again, it wasn't in keeping with the way the Hulk has been portrayed in the comics, because he could've survived that fall," explains Lee. "But from the point of view of the television show, it seemed if they wanted to kill him, it was as good a way as any. That was a clever story." Today, Stan Lee works at Marvel Productions, a company currently involved with an animated X-Men television series and with generating other projects to bring Marvel characters to film and television.

Rumors were rampant for a brief period that the Hulk would come back in a Revenge of the Incredible Hulk-type of story bringing the character back to life. Brigitte Nielsen, who would go on to action films such as Rocky IV and Cobra, tried out for a She-Hulk feature, but financing couldn't be found. Jill Sherman-Donner, a story editor for the original series, claims, however, that She-Hulk did get off the ground, although it was reeled back to earth after only five days. "We went to the Caribbean. I just don't think the casting made it for them," says Sherman-Donner. "I think when you take a woman it's a very sensitive thing. But it was an ABC-New World TV and it was a pretty good script. It could have worked, and I was very disappointed it didn't go. It would have been hugely expensive."

Sherman-Donner says it was a wonderful reunion for her and Bixby. "He's a wonderful man, very complicated, and I'm thrilled that I got to know and work with him. The Incredible Hulk (series) would never have happened if it hadn't been for Bill Bixby, and She-Hulk would never have been launched if he hadn't agreed to help launch it, if he was involved in that whole area."

CAST NOTES

Bill Bixby (Dr. David Banner): Born in San Francisco in 1934. Bixby started acting in television's Dobie Gillis and Lonely Are the Brave (1962). He's best known as the lead in several popular TV series: the fantasy sit-com My Favorite Martian (1963-66), The Courtship of Eddie's Father (1969-72) and The Magician (1973). After a short stint hosting The Wonderful World of Magic, he landed Rich Man, Poor Man Book 11, for which he received a directing Emmy nomination. The second and third Emmy nominations bestowed on Bixby as an actor were for The Courtship of Eddie's Father and a Streets of San Francisco segment. After The Incredible Hulk, Bixby starred with Mariette Hartley in Goodnight Beantown (1984).

TV-movie acting appearances include Congratulations! It's a Boy! (1971); The Couple Takes a Wife (1972); Shirts!Skins (1973); Invasion of Johnson County (1976); The Great Houdinis (1976); Fantasy Island (1977); Black Market Babies (1977); Agatha Christie's Murder Is Easy (1982); and Sin of Innocence (1986). Bixby's directing credits include the series Barbary Coast, Bert D'Angelo, Mannix, Kate McShane, Oregon Trail, The Magician, Spencer's Pilots, and Sledge Hammer!; the TV-movie Three on a Date (1978); and the series Murphy's Law (1988). And of course, The Trial of the Incredible Hulk (1989) and The Death of the Incredible Hulk (1990). Bixby was a director on the NBC sitcom Blossom when he died in November 1993 of cancer.

Lou Ferrigno (Hulk): Born 1952. His first exposure to film cameras came when Pumping Iron (1975) documented the Mr. Olympia bodybuilding competition, in which Ferrigno landed third place. In 1976 he played briefly with the Toronto Argos as a defensive tackle, but because he didn't have "the killer instinct," he quit. A leg injury sent him back to Los Angeles. Ferrigno was with the Weider Company promoting bodybuilding products when he was approached with the role of The Incredible Hulk. Life has never been the same.

When four seasons of Destroying Sets ended in 1982, he segued into another show called Trauma Center, playing an ambulance driver. Ferrigno moved to starring roles in Italian epics produced by Cannon Films: Hercules (1983), The Adventures of Hercules (1985), and Sinbad (1987). Then, he went on the road across the country in the classic comedy play Arsenic and Old Lace. His most recent lead roles as an actor were a comedy with George Segal and Sally Kellerman, All's Fair (1988), and Cage (1989) with Reb Brown. Ferrigno also completed a pilot with Sid Caesar called No Place Like Rome and made an appearance on the TV series Olof. Between films, Ferrigno likes to train people one-on-one in the gym, "to keep my sanity" he says. Lou Ferrigno is married to his wife, Carla. They have a daughter and a son. Ferrigno has returned to bodybuilding full-time.

Jack Colvin (Jack MacGee): This Kansas-born actor later became a director. He's performed roles in Amelia Earhart (1976), Benny and Barney: Las Vegas Undercover (1977), Exo-Man (1977), Footsteps (1972), Hurricane (1974), and The Spell (1974).

INFINITE WORLDS OF H.G. WELLS, THE

"He astonished people with his imagination. He shocked people with his genius. He'll mesmerize you with his story. "

When Professor Gibberne dies, he leaves behind a big trunk filled with enigmatic objects. Disguising herself as a journalist, Ellen McGillivray tries to shed some light on the Professor's past by paying a visit to one of his closest friends - the retired writer H.G. Wells.

I happened to watch this miniseries over the course of two nights on the Hallmark Channel and what a joy it was! The script was very well-done. All the supporting characters were nicely developed with very few light touches. The two main characters of H. G. Wells and his scientist wife were really charming. Their story of courting was told so effectively in parallel with the main storyline of various mysterious events. The period details were faultless and lively. I almost felt I was there with all of them! And the most important of all, the stories themselves (6 in total) gave me the kind of pleasure and fun mixed with curiosity that I used to feel two decades ago as a child, reading Jules Verne books and dreaming of those faraway exotic worlds and adventures. Thanks to everyone involved in this production.

The Infinite Worlds of H.G. Wells three-part miniseries kicks off the new Hallmark Channel (formerly Odyssey Network) in style by bringing Wells' short stories to television for the first time. The miniseries opens in 1946, as newspaper reporter Ellen McGillivray (Best) pays a visit to a cranky 80-year-old H.G. Wells (Ward) with hopes of finding out what led to his visionary storytelling.

Wells is ready to give her the boot, but there is something about the young woman and her desire to learn more about his past and the secrets he knows that stops him. Wells relents and begins his tale a half-century earlier at London's Imperial College of Science, when he met Jane Robbins (Carmichael), a lovely scientist and teacher who holds the same fascination for unexplained phenomenon that he does. Wells and Jane soon find themselves slipping into amazing adventures that cross the bounds of time, space and science itself.

Part One begins with "The New Accelerator." Odd happenings abound at the Imperial College as equipment and lab animals disappear and doors get blown off their hinges. Wells begins to investigate, and what he finds stretches the limits of even his imagination. In "Brownlow's Newspaper" a railroad worker has an electrical accident at work and suddenly finds himself reliving the past.

Part Two starts with the tale of a pawnshop owner who comes across a crystal rock with mysterious properties in "The Crystal Egg." In "The Remarkable Case of Davidson's Eyes," an accident during a scientific experiment causes a young man to suffer terrible delusions. But is he really mad?

In Part Three, "The Truth About Pyecraft," a brilliant mathematician wants to lose weight, but getting his wish just might cost him more than he could possibly imagine. Finally, in "The Stolen Bacillus," a flask that may hold a dangerous virus is missing and Wells gets on the case to hunt down the thief.

As the elderly Wells tells his stories, he discovers that Miss McGillivray has a secret of her own, and meeting her may affect him in a more profound way than he could ever have dreamed.

A miniseries worthy of much more

This exquisitely produced miniseries effortlessly weaves the tales of H.G. Wells together with an elderly Wells recalling "true" stories from his past. The script, direction and casting are all top-notch, and they bring to life both the late 1800s and the legendary Wells.

The Infinite Worlds of H.G. Wells works well as a miniseries, but could have also made a wonderful series, and it's too bad Hallmark didn't decide to take it in that direction. The tales are consistent, with especially superb storytelling in "The New Accelerator," "Brownlow's Newspaper" and "The Truth About Pyecraft." Only "The Remarkable Case of Davidson's Eyes" comes off as a little weak. That the creators of this mini could make these stories, some written over 100 years ago, seem so fresh and rich is amazing. It's also a testament to Wells that his ideas and characters still hold up.

While the producers and writers have done their job in taking Wells' stories and entwining them together with an old Wells' remembrance, none of this would have made any difference if it weren't for the strength of Tom Ward's portrayal as Wells, and the strong supporting cast. Carmichael as Jane is especially charming as Wells' ladylove and eventual wife. The chemistry between them is delightful and amusing.

There are only a few complaints to offer. In the otherwise excellent "Brownlow's Newspaper," thick accents initially make the story hard to follow. In "The Remarkable Case of Davidson's Eyes" there is plenty of humor, but few surprises. Finally, at the beginning of Part Three, the wrap-around story with the old Wells doesn't show up until midway through the episode, and it's a bit confusing.

Those are minor quibbles, considering that The Infinite Worlds of H.G. Wells is a wonderful miniseries that brings to life the wonder, mystery and danger of the unknown and gives us some insight into a man who is often referred to as the father of modern science fiction.

The Infinite Worlds of H.G. Wells is a terrific way for Hallmark to start off its new (or at least revamped) channel. It's about time television explored the writings of H.G. Wells, and how lucky for us that Hallmark was able to do it right. -- Kathie

INFRARED MUSIC

AKA: SEKIGAI ONGAKU

Schoolboy Norio (Monma) realizes that nobody else in his family can hear Strauss's Blue Danube waltz being played on the radio. He is contacted by his classmate Asako (Endo), who reveals that the music originates from the Mutant Scientific Research Institute (MSRI) - a secret organisation dedicated to the nurturing and protecting children with special powers. Such children can hear in infrared, allowing them to pick up sounds at a different frequency from normal people. A voice on the radio instructs those who can hear it to assemble at Tokyo Tower, from where they are bought to the MSRI.

Doctor Hijiri (Amamoto) gives each of them an "R6" box that enables them to communicate with each other before asking them to return in a week. Back home, Norio and his new found friends try to explain what has happened but lose consciousness every time they are about to mention the MSRI. Eventually, they learn that the Earth is scheduled for demolition and they have been selected by aliens as creatures worth saving. Norio must choose between life off-world as an alien or dying on Earth in the coming disaster.

With stylish scarlet backgrounds to amaze the growing number of viewers with colour television sets, Infrared Music was supposedly based on a novel by Hiroshi Sano, although its central premise seems suspiciously similar to the British series THE TOMMOROW PEOPLE (1973), which was itself broadcast on NHK the following year with the Japanese title (Chikyu Boeitai "Earth Defense Force").

I suppose it's an OK watch, it's about an alien who gets stranded on Earth, and needs a human body to inhabit to survive. It picks the body of a recently deceased man. Turns out the guy is a writer who was on his way to an apartment complex to live with the other two protagonists of the series, the two girls Mar and Nayra. Eventually, the girls find out who the man they live with really is (he has undergone a severe change of personality, which his publisher finds especially perplexing), and chaos ensues.

INTERGALACTIC KITCHEN

The show is about the Bird children (Robin, Snoo and Jay), their mother and Fleur, a rival from Snoo and Jay's school. They are about to go camping, when Mrs. Bird accidentally activates a force field, and are shot off into outer space. They attempt to try to get back to earth, when a family of four aliens arrive in the Kitchen. Then everything goes wrong, when Mrs. Bird accidentally climbs into the alien's spaceship, and Mr. and Mrs. Krryptx accidentally activate the engines, thus separating Mrs. Bird's children and Mr. and Mrs. Krryptx's children. This has, both the kids and the adults, on a series of mad adventures.

Intergalactic Kitchenshow was a CBBC television series,. based on a novel Intergalactic Kitchen by Frank Rogers. It ran for four months. The show had a distinct reality to it, with the normal themes (romance, adventures, etc. etc.).

INTERPRETARIS, THE

The Interpretaris was set over 500 years in the future, with the Earth at the centre of a peaceful federation of planets under the jurisdiction of the World Council. The title refers to a spacecraft, 'The Interpretaris', the flagship of the World Council fleet. The serial opens with an evil scientist, Parta Beno, who has been found guilty of imprisoning and reducing in size inhabitants of various planets. As punishment he is exiled to a remote asteroid, with the only amenities being a crude laboratory. All the specimens that Parta Beno collected were sent back to their home worlds by the World Council, except those that the Council had no knowledge of, let alone any idea about the planets from whence they came. The hand-picked crew of 'The Interpretaris' were given the mission of returning these aliens to their home planets.

The three-person multinational crew selected for the mission was headed by Commander Alan De Breck, a European played by Stanley Walsh. The pilot was David Charmichael, an Australian played by Kit Taylor (who appeared over ten years earlier as a young boy in The Adventures Of Long John Silver, the first television series made in Australia). The third crew member was female, Vera Balovna, a Russian played by Lorraine Bayly (who was perhaps best remembered for her role as Grace Sullivan in the late 70's / early 80's war-time serial The Sullivans). Issues of female equality were raised early on in the programme - Vera was hoping to be in charge of the mission!

The crew were assisted by a computeroid named Henry - a clumsy-looking robotic computer with artificial intelligence and almost human emotions, operated by Gordon Mutch. There was a second 'living' computer on board named Alys, a 'female' that looked like a mantelpiece clock, her voice being provided by Judi Farr (who later played Rita Stiller in My Name's McGooley - What's Yours? and Rita And Wally, and Thelma in Kingswood Country). Alys was one of Parta Beno's specimens awaiting return to her home world, but doubled as a spy under his orders. Parta Beno, played by Ben Gabriel, controlled Alys from his asteroid exile, and used her to try and sabotage the mission of 'The Interpretaris'.

The Interpretaris was produced by Artransa Park at their Sydney studios, in association with the ABC. It first went to air on the ABC in October 1966, with subsequent repeat screenings on the Seven Network. This unique arrangement was a result of the relationship between ATN-7 Sydney and Artransa Park, so that even though the programme was commissioned by the public broadcaster and utilised some ABC personnel, repeat rights were slated for the Seven Network from the outset.

Six half-hour episodes were made in black and white, almost entirely filmed within the confines of the Artransa Park studios. Scriptwriter for the serial was Barbara Vernon, who went on to create the very successful ABC soap opera Bellbird. Producer and Director was Kay Roberts.

The six episodes concerned the mission of returning the strange life forms to their strange planets, and contending with Parta Beno's attempts to thwart their mission and gain his freedom. During the course of events, Henry and Alys 'fall in love', which eventually results in Alys breaking free of Parta Beno's control, although at the expense of her own existence. Parta Beno is subsequently captured by 'The Interpretaris' crew and returned to exile in the final episode.

Even allowing for the fact that the programme was made for children, The Interpretaris is not a very sophisticated production. It looks cheap - limited cheap sets, cheap models and cheap effects, all indicative of a small budget. There are good performances from the cast, and the crew seem to be doing the best they can with what they have, but the overall effect is disappointing.

In spite of the deficiencies of The Interpretaris, it was decided to make a sequel the following year, Vega 4

INTERSTER

AKA: INTER-STAR

The main plot involved an undercover planetary defence agency operating from Cape Town under the guise of an interstellar shipping company. Real world political issues influenced the plot as the Earth is depicted as a galactic pariah by the Interplanetary League due to its cold war with the planet Krokon. The spaceships used in the show were called Impalas, named after the Atlas-Aermacchi AM 326-K and -B locally assembled South African Air Force aircraft.

Interster (Afrikaans, Inter-star) was a weekly science-fiction puppet television show made for children and shown in South Africa from the late 1970s. SABC children's programming was quite innovative during the late 1970s to early 1980s the impossibility of purchasing Thunderbirds forced the SABC to produce Interster, but also the technical challenge offered the opportunity to truly flex the SABC's creative muscles.

There was a pragmatic reason for calling the aircraft Impalas - the basis of the models were 1/48th scale plastic model kits of the AM326, so that they would appear as recognisable to South African youth. The Impala was the mount of the South African Air Force's demonstration team - The Silver Falcons - thus providing another thematic link with Anderson's Thunderbirds which had been named for the United States Air Force demonstration team.

Despite, and perhaps because of the lack of contact with international children's programming, Interster wound up being technically superior to every aspect of Gerry Anderson's supermarionation techniques, and in fact remains in some ways very far ahead of its time:

Puppets were internally wired, and moveable in a large range of motion.

Their electronics were able to perform with considerably better motion than any of the Thunderbirds puppets - they were in fact computer controlled, with servos programmed and under the control of an Apple II personal computer.

Models had a level of intricacy rivalling Star Wars' vessels, and in the case of the Impalas, actually exceeded that of the B-Wing, despite being 20 times smaller.

Pyrotechnics were also more impressive, with explosions requiring a special permit.

The longer story arc and individual plots were extremely sophisticated - to the point of actually rivalling the best of both Star Trek and Babylon 5. Interster could very easily have been prime time viewing, and perhaps if it had been its reputation would now have been legendary.

The stories are set in Cape Town, at the location of what is now the V&A Waterfront. Enemies were aliens from a distant space system and were often viewed as representing black protagonists by journalists overseas. The entire series was produced in Afrikaans.

Plot wise, Inter-ster was far removed from any of the Anderson's stories. There was no unified government as seen in either Captain Scarlet or Fireball XL5 - South Africa alone possessed interstellar flight, and alone was in contact with the first aliens to visit earth, who hailed from Alpha Centauri.

In the stories, the protagonists were concerned with the defense of South Africa - the rest of the world was more of an abstraction. Interaction with the Centauri's was the primary interaction with South Africa. A number of fascinating concepts were explored - relative to humans, the Centauris are only the size of dolls, and their ships and technology are scaled to match. Perhaps the greatest triumph of the puppeteers are not just the human puppets, but the Centauris - for they were as intricate, but barely 10cm high as compared with the 32cm human puppets for simultaneous shots.

The plot contained a lot of content which could interest adult viewers : the romantic tension between the hero and heroine, the scientific genius of the controller of the Silver Falcon's operations controller, and the humorous quirks and jokes - in particular, in the first run in the 1980s, characters complained about the price of a meal, which raised laughs at the time for the implication that a R 35 for a good meal was ludicrous inflation (in 1979, R 1.00 = US$ 2.00), and yet by the time of the second run of the program in 1998, R35 for a good meal in a restaurant was cheap indeed given the Rand's freefall after the change in government - the little joke retained its poignancy despite changing circumstances, rendering Interster timeless.

The same team that produced Interster had cut their teeth in the late 1970s with Liewe Heksie, with the same sophisticated puppetry making its first appearance in the adventures of a well-meaning but absent-minded little witch. The internal-wiring puppeteers made their final work a set of musical crickets that played music for a children's program featuring two more puppets, Sarel Seemonster, a friendly sea monster which could blow steam from his nostrils, and Karel Kraai, a crow which was fully functional to the point of being able to remove his hat, for the children's TV program 'Wielie Wielie Walie', named for the first line of a traditional Afrikaans children's verse version of 'Ring a Ring a Rosie'.

INTO THE LABYRINTH

Into the Labyrinth was a British children's series about a wizard and his young recruits battling the evil witch Belor. During the first two series the wizard was Rothgo, whom was aided by three children- Phil and siblings Helen and Terry. The trio had found Rothgo trapped inside a cave and after releasing him agree to help find the nidus, the source of all his powers. The nidus had been stolen by Belor whom had taken it back in time with her.

Each week the children and Rothgo found themselves at some point in history attempting to recover the nidus from Belor whom had taken on the guise of some famous historical person. By the end of the first series the nidus was back in Rothgo's hands and all appeared well, however at the start of the second series we learn that it was not Belor through the use of an even more powerful magical object known as the albedo was able to shatter the nidus into seven pieces and scatters them through time. Rothgo, again with the aid of Phil, Terry and Helen journeyed into the past to recover the pieces with Belor appearing each week to stop them.

Into the Labyrinth's final series saw a change in lead roles, Rothgo was gone, replaced by Lazlo, a wizard whom was a bit on the incompetent side. He recruited Phil to help him recover the scarabeaus a magical icon stolen by Belor that prevented him from being devoured by green slime. Belor had taken the scarabeaus and fled into Delta Time, a place where fictional characters can become real.

Series One

A sudden thunderstorm drives Terry and his sister, Helen, to seek shelter in a cave. There they meet another boy, Phil, and are led by mysterious voices to discover Rothgo, a magician from another age, trapped in the rock. After releasing him, the teenagers become involved in the search for the stolen Nidus. The quest spans thousands of years and they encounter Rothgo and Belor in the pagan times of the druids; in medieval England; old Baghdad; the fields of the Civil War; revolutionary France; and finally in ancient Greece.

Series Two

Once again the powers of goodness and light are challenged by Belor. This time she holds the Albedo, an energy source strong enough to neutralise the Nidus and so destroy Rothgo. In a cata-strophic collision between the Albedo and the Nidus, Rothgo's power source is split into five fragments, each pursuing its own course through time and space. Rothgo recalls Phil, Terry and Helen to help retrieve them and sends them to the Wagnerian world of the Nibelung; the dangerous days of the Gunpowder Plot; the Alamo; ancient India (where Belor appears as the goddess Kali); Victorian Lon-don; and the Great Siege of Malta. The final confrontation comes at the burial of tutankhamen.

Series Three

The unreliable magician Lazlo draws Phil into Delta Time where history is turned upside down. There they must seek and find the Scarabeus missing from the magician's ornate bracelet-or be devoured by a creeping green slime. They encounter Long John Silver; Dr. Jekyll and Mrs. Hyde (guess who's Mrs. Hyde); Incas and Conquistadores; treachery during the Great Fire of London; the Phantom of the Opera; Kubla Khan; and King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table. Their footsteps along the dangerous Delta timetrack are dogged by Belor and her odious "familiar" Bram. In the final battle with Belor, in the shape of Morgan Le Fay, Lazlo-as Merlin-recaptures the Scarabeus and fastens it to his bracelet. He and Phil are released from Delta Time (and the creeping green slime) and Phil returns to his own time possessing his own magical power source.

HTV carried the flag of television fantasy for ITV during the late 1970s - and it raised the standard again in the 1980s. Into The Labyrinth was devised by Bob Baker and Peter Graham Scott and utilised the scriptwriting talents of such writers as John Lucarotti, Christopher Priest, Robert Holmes, and Baker himself. The first 7 episodes of Into the Labyrinth were run as one of four stories under the banner title of The Third Eye, on the Nickelodeon cable TV network during the mid 1980's. NOTE: Some actors appear as guest stars in more than one episode- however they play different characters each time.

Into the Labyrinth was devised by Bob Baker and Peter Graham Scott and utilised the scriptwriting talents of such writers as John Lucarotti, Christopher Preist, Robert Holmes and Baker himself. The executive producer for the series was Patrick Dromgoole, the designer was John Reid and the music was composed by Sidney Sagar.

INTRUDERS, THE

A UFO is being picked up on radar screen in a Colorado tracking centre. Simultaneously, in Nebraska farm wife, Mary Wilkes finds herself in her night-gown on a deserted highway at night, some 40-odd miles from her home, while in Los Angeles, another woman, Lesley Hann, is troubled by bright lights and strange figures invading her home. Both suffer traumatic flash backs and come under the care of psychiatrist Dr. Neil Chase who uses hypnosis to help them unravel their experiences. What he unravels, however is a mystery deeper than anything he expected, with more of the evidence pointing to their stories of alien abduction being true.

Four-hour mini-series that actually anticipated the vogue for alien abductee stories by a couple of years. Intruders is based on real life case histories and accounts drawn from more than 400 people and was co-written by award winning STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION and SLIDERS creator Tracy Torme. Rosalind Chao is famous for starring in both STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION and STAR TREK: DEEP SPACE NINE. As is so often the case, the build-up is far better than the outcome, but the aliens have an eerie Outer Limits quality. They were created by Oscar-winning make-up artist Robert Short, working from abductees' sketches and descriptions. He designed 15 alien suits and 10 mechanical puppets, including three for the half-human, half-alien creatures also featured.

INVADERS, THE (1967)

'How does a nightmare begin? For David Vincent, architect, returning home from a business trip, it began a few minutes past four on a lost Tuesday morning, looking for a short cut he never found. It began with a welcoming sign that gave hope of black coffee. It began with a closed, deserted diner, and a man too long without sleep to continue his journey. In the weeks to come, David Vincent would go back to how it all began many times.'

(Opening narration on Beachhead)

David Vincent, a respected architect, gets lost one night in the countryside, he spots a UFO. He quickly warns both the sheriff and his business partner about his sighting, but when he returns to the sighting location the UFO is gone and his story is scoffed up. He might have dismissed the incident himself had a mysterious fire not erupted in his hotel room. He learns that the hotel manager is an alien and that they have come and they have come from a dying world, and hope to take over ours. They are doing this by assuming human form and infiltrating places of influence in society. Although they have adopted human form, there are several ways of telling the aliens from humans: they smile with their fingers, they have no heartbeat, they will emit a faint glow shortly before the power they need to retain human form runs out, and when they are killed they disappear in a puff of red smoke. David quits his job as an architect, and spends all his time trying to defeat the invasion. He does this three ways: by trying to convince people that the threat is a real one, attempting to obtain some physical evidence that will support his wild stories, and by uncovering and thwarting alien plots. The aliens are aware of David's efforts and are pleased that most people consider him a nut case. They do not kill him because it might give more credence to his story.

A Quinn Martin production many critics dubbed The Invaders as just another 'Running Man' show like Martin's other famous series, The Fugitive. There were undoubtedly similarities - both men crossed and re-crossed the country in pursuit of their quarry - but there was one vital difference. Richard Kimble got his man. David Vincent never did. No matter how many aliens he killed he couldn't get them all.

The Invaders was pure paranoia and its hero, David Vincent, the TV embodiment of the graffiti cliché: "Just because you're paranoid, doesn't mean they're not out to get you." The premise was simple, alien beings from a dying planet have landed on Earth. Their ultimate goal is to take over the world.

With their ability to assume human form, they have already begun to infiltrate all the strata of human society - government, police and media. Eventually, they will control the planet. One man, architect David Vincent, has seen them land, knows that they are here. Somehow he must convince a sceptical world that he is not crazy, that they really are out to get us. In the 1950s, filmmakers had exploited McCarthyist America's fears of communists with allegorical tales of insidious alien take-over, such as Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956). But in 1967, The Invaders had no political implications.

Its intention was simply to scare. Vincent responds to any call, any sighting, repeating his story to anyone who will listen. And sometimes people do, but they invariably turn out to be other invaders, until Vincent no longer knows who he can trust. The aliens themselves were amorphous beings who needed recharging every 10-12 days in special regeneration chambers to retain their disguises, otherwise they reverted to their natal form and died. But Vincent couldn't even show the authorities a dead alien - when they were killed they disintegrated, leaving behind nothing but ashes and a scorched outline. Towards the end of the second season, Vincent's solo crusade did turn into a team effort, with the addition of a group called The Believers, led by businessman Edgar Scoville, who provided cash aid and connections.

But by that time, the repetitive format of the series had begun to pall with American audiences and it ended after just 43 episodes - a short run by contemporary US standards. Some 27 years after the original series went off the air in America, someone finally got around to making a sequel. The four-hour mini-series in November 1995, brought back Roy Thinnes, for a brief reprise as David Vincent, but it was Quantum Leap's Scott Bakula who became the main alien chaser, as ex-con Nolan Wood.

Roy Thinnes stars as a man who has witnessed a landing by ALIENS in a UFO but is unable to get anyone to believe him. The aliens, from a doomed planet, are trying to take over Earth by infiltration: able to take on human form, they can be distinguished only by the odd angle of their little fingers; when dead their bodies evaporate leaving only a pile of ashes, so lasting proof of their existence is almost impossible to establish. The rigid formula - in each episode the hero discovers and foils a new alien plot, but remains unable to convince the authorities - meant that there was little variation, and the series was cancelled after the second season. Larry Cohen, whose idea the series was, later became celebrated for his low-budget independent films, usually, as here, featuring an ordinary man facing horrible incursions on the one hand and an uncaring, unimaginative or conspiratorial establishment on the other. Perhaps TI came too late: it belonged, in spirit, to the PARANOID SF version of the Communist-spy scares of the 1950s, as in Robert A. HEINLEIN's The Puppet Masters (1951), the tv serial QUATERMASS II (1955) and the film INVASION OF THE BODY SNATCHERS (1956).

Two short series of books based on TI were published in the USA (3 books) and the UK (4 books). The 2 to appear in both series are The Invaders * (1967; vt The Meteor Men UK as by Anthony LeBaron) by Keith LAUMER, #1 in the USA and #2 in the UK; and The Halo Highway * (1967; vt Army of the Undead US) by Rafe BERNARD, #1 in the UK and #3 in the USA. Invaders #2 in the USA was Enemies from Beyond * (1967) by Laumer; #3 and #4 in the UK were The Night of the Trilobites * (1968) and The Autumn Accelerator * (1969), both by Peter LESLIE.

Two further ties to the series were hardbound juveniles, Alien Missile Threat * (1967) by Paul S. Newman, and Dam of Death * (1967) by Jack Pearl.

In 1995 The Invaders was revised as a four hour mini-series on FOX. The aliens in the new version were a bit different than they were in the 1960's, there always seem to be lots of flies around them. Their motives however are still the same. In the mini-series David Vincent made little more than an extended cameo appearance to offer some advice and pass the torch along to the new protagonist. The new protagonist was Nolan Wood, a pilot who has just been released from prison. Wood learns about the aliens and like Vincent is unable to convince anyone they are real He is especially concerned about his son whose new stepfather is an alien. He manages to convince a lady doctor that the aliens are real and a threat and sets out to stop their latest plan.

The executive producer for the series was Quinn Martin, the series was produced by Alan Armer and the haunting theme was created by Dominic Frontiere. The series first premiered in the UK on the 21st January 1967. The Invaders debuted in the UK at the same time as it started in America, running simultaneously, for a few weeks at least, in ITVs London region, though the first coherent run was on Granada Television. Overall, though, the show's run around the ITV regions was typically sporadic: it achieved a U.K. network run only when the rights were taken up by the BBC in 1984. The directors of photography were Meredith Nicholson ASC (1.1) and Andrew J. McIntyre (1.2-1.17). The invaders theme was created by Dominic Frontiere, the special photographic effects created by Darrell A. Anderson (eps. 1.4-1.17). In charge of production was Arthur Fellows and Adrian Samish. The series was filmed at the Samuel Goldwyn Studios.

A common complaint levelled against The Invaders concerns Roy Thinnes' performance in the lead role. Accused of being too wooden and inflexible in the part, one critic cruelly remarked that the emotionless invaders wound up being more interesting than the hero. Even series creator Larry Cohen said that, Thinnes wouldn't have been his choice for the role, and that he would have preferred someone who could display more vulnerability in the part. It's degree of stamina as week in, week out he seemed to be the only person standing between Earth and the inter-galactic invasion force, but this again was the inevitable weakness in the basic format of the programme that was only half-heartedly addressed by the introduction of the believers.

But although Thinnes lacked the depth shown by, say, David Janessen in The Fugitive, acting against him were real problems with the development of his character, especially in terms of his family background, emotional attachments and so on. Typically the opening narration to an episode would mention the sacrifices made by Vincent in order to fight the Invaders, but if we ever go to see any of them they turned out to be for short term plot purposes. Arguably the real problem was the lack of any emotional source for the lead character's obsessive quest. Whereas Richard Kimble pursued the one-armed man who had murdered his wife and Fox Mulder is haunted by the memory of his missing sister, the best motivation David Vincent ever got was. . . The death of his business partner.

And it's instructive for budding producers to compare and contrast the format of the Invaders with that of the X FILES. The differences are just as instructive as the similarities and point out clearly why one series barely lasted two seasons while the other went out for seven seasons - namely better actors, greater flexibility in the storylines and believable relationships between the vulnerable lead characters. Thinnes must surely wish Chris Carter had been born 20 years earlier.

The invaders were extremely treacherous because they could look like anyone—a bus driver, a paper-boy, a secretary or a little old lady. They could smile, they dressed well and they were polite. They were also here to rob Earth of its future. Their mission was one of desperation: With their planet dying, they needed a new world. Architect David Vincent knew they were here and devoted his life to exposing the invaders. He was tireless in his efforts to try to convince "a disbelieving world that the nightmare has already begun." The Invaders was first conceived by creator Larry Cohen as a half-hour, twice-weekly serial. (Peyton Place had worked for ABC in this format.) Ultimately, however, the network went with the more conventional one-hour format.

Originally the aliens, were supposed to get their orders from an eyeball that opened and closed in the palms of their hands. The network rejected the idea as too scary. The aliens ended up with a variety of other idiosyncrasies. They didn't have blood or heartbeats; some aliens had pointed little fingers; they didn't display emotion because they had none; and since their "human" disguises required periodic regeneration, they occasionally glowed before losing their earthly forms. Three episodes, "Genesis," "The Enemy" and "The Prophet," gave viewers a hint of what the aliens looked like in their native forms. When killed, the aliens glowed and vanished, which proved frustrating for David Vincent since the only evidence left was an outline of ash. The aliens were also experts at covering their tracks. Whenever Vincent found an alien outpost housed in an abandoned warehouse or town, the evidence was gone by the time the authorities got there. The aliens also had an impressive technology: They all carried glowing discs that, if applied to a human being's neck, caused instant death. Some aliens also carried disintegration guns that could melt cars like butter.

Although the special effects in the series were often excellent, the producers limited the visual tricks to add to the show's realism. "This is a strange series," admitted producer Alan Armer to the New York Times in 1967. "We combine science fiction with reality. People like to be scared out of their wits but they're no longer frightened by three-headed monsters. So we've made the invaders look like the folks next door. ... We're after fear, not brutality and violence."

Today Armer says, "It was an intriguing, workable concept that should have been better than it was. We began with an exciting pilot and it was marvelous. The pilot was originally 75 minutes long, and we had to cut it by 20 minutes. It had believability, color, genuine fear and enormous excitement. My William Morris agent called and declared it to be the finest pilot he had ever seen."

Armer was forced to cut it down. "We eliminated footage slowly, trying to preserve the pilot's strengths. But cutting those 20 minutes forced us to mutilate our baby. We ended up with all of the peaks and none of the valleys. We lost a lot of richness and reality. [It had] excitement, but not the texture that makes the excitement believable. Although we produced a dozen solid shows for The Invaders, we never captured the suspense and believability of the first, overlong pilot film."

The Invaders was a hit for ABC, and the series held its top 20 status for its first few months. Caught off guard by the show's popularity, executives at CBS and NBC tried to hide their dismay by plastering bumper stickers on their cars that read, "The Invaders Are Coming." The show also became a hip topic at Hollywood dinner parties. Even critic Rex Reed, who had groused over the show's violence, admitted, "This show threatens to over-throw the Batman craze."

The series was immediately renewed for a second year, but the producers realized that the tricky format was beginning to have a corrosive effect on its viewers. Audiences found David's struggle to expose the aliens frustrating. In the last episode of the first season, "The Condemned," the producers tried to remedy this by giving David a major triumph: exposing all of the important alien leaders on Earth. Associate producer Anthony Spinner recalls that they also tried to keep David Vincent alive week after week. "The question all of the writers used to ask was, 'Why don't the aliens just kill the son of a bitch?' Getting around that question was always a challenge. We came up with a nebulous theory that, 'Oh, if they kill Vincent, it'll bring too much attention.' Often, when a writer asked, 'Why don't the aliens kill him?' we'd say, 'Because, they don't!' That was not a great answer."

Spinner tried to deal with the question in one of his own scripts, "The Experiment." "Rather than kill him, I had the aliens try to brainwash him. This way he was valuable to them. But you couldn't do that every week. Actually, a lot of the episodes did work dramatically, but you put them all together, you go, 'Oh, yeah—more of the same.'" Spinner left the series at the end of its first year, cordially telling Quinn Martin that the highly rated series was doomed.

"The Invaders was an ambitious undertaking with little time or money," says art director George Chan, who was called in during the series' frenetic first year. "When I arrived, the production unit was in total disarray." Chan adds, "I was not prepared for this kind of operation. There was little time for research, and it took many weeks for me to become comfortable with The Invaders. The network was only thinking of rushing production and financial gains. Storylines and sets were of minor importance to them.

"There were also numerous artistic and creative differences that were never solved. I kept questioning why David Vincent, who had no means of income, always wore expensive clothing. Quinn Martin placated me by adding the Edgar Scoville character in the second year to show some financial responsibility."

Series production settled down as Chan and art director James Vance took turns working on every other episode. Even so, "It was, because of the special effects and gadgets, the most challenging work of my career up to that time," says Chan.

Some viewers were downright hostile to the show because aliens were being portrayed as evil. Armer tried to present the aliens as realistically as possible. "The aliens' motives were inconsistent," he admits.

"Occasionally, the aliens were shown with understandable motives. They were fleeing from a dying world and striving to take over ours. One script by David Rintels even portrayed them as the good guys and us as the bad guys ["The Peacemaker"]. We had to make the aliens both frightening and powerful since we were selling paranoia. But inevitably, the aliens degenerated into despicable, comic strip monsters. I suspect our problem lay not in the alien characterizations, but in our revealing too much of them. Things unseen are far scarier than the things we can examine. Suggest rather than show."

One hint of the aliens' nature was, according to Armer, in the closing moments of the pilot. "The final shot of Diane Baker [as an alien] implied that beneath the alien mask might lie the face of an emotional, dimensional being." The series propelled Armer and star Roy Thinnes into the real-life world of UFO buffs. Thinnes and his wife, actress Lynn Loring, claimed to have seen a UFO a week before The Invaders premiered. Thinnes played down the incident, saying, "I didn't want to look like a self-serving actor out for publicity." The actor was intrigued by the show's premise. "I liked the simple dramatic structure of one man's paranoia," he says. "I think we all share that kind of paranoia. Is the government telling us the truth? Does the government want to hear the truth? That thread carried through all of the shows. Larry Cohen had a good idea, and the series was masterfully produced by Quinn Martin. He hired a lot of good writers, like Alan Armer, Anthony Spinner and David Rintels."

The Quinn Martin production offices often received phone calls from people claiming to have seen aliens from other worlds. "I was astonished at the number of credible witnesses to UFO sightings," says Armer. "These were not little old ladies in tennis shoes. These were responsible, intelligent individuals whose stories were generally believable. At the time, I was invited to do an interview with a Colorado radio station. There had been a burned circle in a hayfield and a dead, skinned horse nearby. UFOs had been sighted in the area. Personally, I was skeptical, but there is evidence that can't be shrugged away."

Production manager Howard Alston's job was to keep The Invaders on budget and handle many aspects of production. "Our biggest challenge was to manufacture this alien culture, but everything we dreamed up—a gun, a costume, a spaceship—always looked like something we had seen before." One of the most eye-catching effects, the "flaming out" of dying aliens, was a painstaking process. "The immolation effect was a new technique at the time, and it drove the directors nuts," says Alston. "Setting up the incineration effects took valuable time out of their shooting schedules. It required an advisor from the Howard Anderson optical company to be on location and to ensure all of the elements were present to add in the optical effect later." Another time-consuming effect was the aliens' flying saucers. Although the saucer looked like a full-scale mock-up, the effect was a bit of technical trickery. "There was never a mockup," recalls actor and extra Randy Crawford. "The saucer only consisted of landing pads and a dropstairway. The middle and top half of the saucer were always superimposed."

Alston recalls that transporting the spaceship's lower half proved challenging. "Moving the spaceship around to desert locations was an involved and costly process. The location had to be scouted and the saucer had to be set up in advance. We tried to figure out ways to avoid having the saucer land on location!"

Crawford, who had served as a double for Roy Thinnes in his previous series, The Long Hot Summer (1965-66), was invited by Thinnes to work on The Invaders. "Roy was a warm and friendly person," says Crawford. "I was in almost every episode as either an alien or a double for Roy. I was also one of the aliens in the spaceship [in the main title sequence], and I'm the guy driving Roy Thinnes' car in the opening credits."

Crawford has scattered memories of the series. "In the pilot, the aliens were portrayed as having special powers in their eyes. Contact lenses were used on actor Skip Ward in his fight with Roy Thinnes. The contacts were never used again because they were too complicated to fit every actor. Although the series had regular sets at Goldwyn studios, we filmed a lot of episodes on location in Los Angeles, Santa Monica and the Mojave Desert. Dumping water on each other was a favorite pastime in the heat of the desert. We averaged a 12-hour day but we occasionally extended to 16. My fondest memory is going into stores and having kids recognize me as an alien. They would point their finger at me and go ZAP! They remembered me as the alien who didn't bleed ["The Ivy Curtain"]."

For Roy Thinnes, The Invaders was a big break early in his career. His 1963-65 stint on daytime's General Hospital led to his popular costarring role in NBC's The Long Hot Summer. On The Invaders, Thinnes projected David Vincent with a quiet, dignified strength. The character was obsessed with saving his disbelieving world from the invaders. Vincent knew it would take enormous determination and strength for one man to make a difference against such overwhelming odds. "Roy Thinnes was well cast," says director Robert Butler. "He was a concentrated and riveted guy. That made for a good, strong, heroic characterization."

"Roy Thinnes was a fine actor, but not the vulnerable, compassionate figure that, for instance, David Janssen was in The Fugitive," says Alan Armer. "Roy sometimes played the role with a sullen quality, as if resentful of the world. That was an attitude unlikely to win the hearts of viewers. To his credit, Roy accepted the protagonist's beliefs as his own. He attended UFO meetings and listened attentively to stories from witnesses."

"Roy may have been enthusiastic about the series, but he wasn't close to the production crew," recalls Howard Alston. "We had very little personal relationship with him even though he was on the set every day. In other Quinn Martin productions, the lead performers-Efrem Zimbalist, Jr., William Conrad, Karl Malden, David Janssen, Buddy Ebsen-were all wonderful team players. Roy was not." "Quinn Martin had a good sense of casting," says writer Robert Collins, "and Roy Thinnes was very good in the role. He had a subtle sense of humor. He was a terrific series lead."

As The Invaders headed into its second year, there were efforts to steer the show in a different direction. The series had faded from a top 20 hit to a top 40 contender. Research showed that the first season had done something no one had counted on: It had literally scared older viewers away. "The show was popular with audiences under the age of 21," says Armer. "It did fairly well with audiences between 21 and 35. It died with audiences over 50. Older audiences didn't have enough acceptance of science fiction."

In the series' first year, the aliens often hatched a sinister plot-of-the-week that bordered on the fantastic: carnivorous insects, alien moonbases, killer hurricanes and oxygen-depleting crystals. The second year grounded the alien threat in more realistic terms. Drama was often emphasized over science fiction. The aliens tried manipulating humanity through religion, racial strife and the threat of a nuclear war. In addition, the series used current political and social issues as background material. During the second year, stories touched upon the Vietnam War, drug abuse and the Cold War. In one episode, "The Trial," the sexual relationship between a human woman and her alien husband is revealed. Many episodes benefited from this mature approach. Other segments, robbed of their imaginative science fiction value, slipped into a dreary routine that made even the most dedicated fan restless.

"David Rintels [the associate producer for the second year] had a lot of input," recalls Robert Collins. "He's a very socially responsible person with great cares and concerns. He's one of the most socially and politically aware writers in town. You can credit Rintels for examining some of those issues on The Invaders." Rintels, an Emmy award-winning writer who wrote such TV films as Fear on Trial (1975) and Nashington: Behind Closed Doors (1977), recalls, "I had never written or even read science fiction before The Invaders. The series gave me a chance to work on something that related to contemporary themes. It was something television didn't do enough of at the time. Using the series format, I could write about things I cared about. "The Invaders script I was happiest with was called "The Peacemaker" [in which Vincent convinces a U.S. general that the invasion is taking place]. I wrote it as a deliberate allusion to our Vietnam involvement. The theme examined to what lengths the military should go in dealing with a threat, and indeed, whether there were any limitations."

For Robert Collins, The Invaders proved to be an important beachhead in his career. "I sold my first script to them," he says. "I was a film editor on the Tarzan series. We were working seven days a week, 16 hours a day for months to meet airdates. One morning at three a.m., I was sitting at the Moviola watching Tarzan swing from tree to tree, and I turned it off. I called a producer friend of mine and said, 'I'm really tired of watching this guy swing from tree to tree. I know I can write, certainly better than the people writing for Tarzan. How can I get into writing?'"

"He said, 'Pick your favorite TV show and write the best script you possibly can. Submit it to them on spec.' I chose The Invaders because I watched it every week. It had tension, mystery and it was intriguing and unpredictable. It was a terrific show. I had always been a fan of Twilight Zone and particularly The Outer Limits. The Invaders had that same kind of mystery and suspense, and a fair attention to character development. It had all of the qualities of a good television series."

Collins submitted his script to the series. "They didn't buy it because of the subject matter. At the time, Ronald Reagan was governor of California. In my script, he turned out to be one of the invaders. I didn't use his name, of course. It was about a state governor and while he's making his inaugural address, his little finger is sticking out. The producers liked my work, and I was invited by David Rintels to write a treatment for "The Ransom"

[in which Vincent holds an alien leader captive]. David said, 'I'm going to go to bat for you. If they're afraid of a first-time writer, I'll rewrite it for you.' So David really was my mentor, and we later became good friends."

Collins turned in "The Ransom," recalling, "Since this was my entry into television, I worked as hard as I could to make it the best script possible. After they accepted it, I quit my job at Tarzan. I became a full-time writer and never looked back." The writer feels the aliens on The Invaders were excellently conceived. "The fact that they looked just like us attracted me to the show. I never liked monsters. That's one of the reasons I didn't like Star Trek. The monsters were silly to me. But on The Invaders, the idea of a monster looking like everybody else was frightening. At that time, the aliens were a metaphor. Beings from other worlds would either save the world or destroy it. The threat of the Cold War was dramatically unsatisfying. As a people, we had become more sophisticated by the late 1960s. The Russians weren't enemies. You couldn't say they were terrible people who were gonna destroy us all. Aliens, on the other hand, were an acceptable enemy."

The Invaders went into its second season with mediocre ratings. To help elevate audiences' frustration with Vincent's lonely crusade, electronics expert Edgar Scoville (played by Kent Smith) was brought in as Vincent's ally. With Scoville's contacts and electronics empire, David made impressive gains against the invaders. In "Counterattack," David videotapes the incinerations of two aliens; "The Miracle" ends with Vincent driving off to Washington, D.C., with an alien crystal as proof; in "The Pursued," six members of Congress see an invader incinerate in a hallway. Yet the creative thorns in the side of the series weren't easily extracted. Edgar Scoville turned out to be a dull paternal figure for Vincent. Although well portrayed by Kent Smith, his underdeveloped character remained murky.

Vincent himself underwent changes. In the first year he was brash and independent, but also vulnerable as he criss-crossed the country in search of aliens. Toward the end of year two, Vincent was transformed into something of a space-age urban guerilla. His battles no longer took place in rural American towns. He spent most of his investigations in major cities, and with his suit and tie, he looked like a dour businessman. ABC moved the series from its struggling 8:30 p.m. Tuesday slot and put it in a Tuesday 10 p.m. slot in January. TV Guide was inundated with letters from younger fans protesting the late time slot. Shortly afterward, the series was canceled.

Despite the changes, Howard Alston feels The Invaders was not set for a long run. "The series generated a great deal of interest at first, but it lost its honesty when so many people, week after week, didn't believe David's invasion story. The ratings were marginal when it was canceled. I suppose it was destined to be a short-lived series based on one fact alone: The aliens had the ability to kill David every week, but they were too dumb to do so."

Alston felt the addition of the believers was a good idea, but notes, "The idea wasn't conceived in time. It could have prolonged the show, but the network didn't give it enough of a chance to develop." "There was always a sense of frustration at the end of many episodes," says David Rintels. "Roy Thinnes and company achieved at best a stalemate or a short-term victory against the bad guys. You knew the aliens were certain to be back in force next week. That may have been a factor in the show's cancellation. TV ordinarily ends with definitive resolutions and, almost invariably, happy endings. The format of The Invaders may not have allowed that."

"What could have been a quality series ended up, alas, getting a little silly," says Alan Armer. "The network panicked and badgered us to take some other directions when the audience didn't respond positively. Another factor was that Quinn Martin and his assistant, Adrian Samish, really didn't understand the concept. Quinn was totally honest about it. He stated from the beginning that this type of series wasn't his bag. He was far more comfortable in the police genre."

"The show simply didn't attract audiences over 35," continues Armer. "Older folk demanded, I guess, more traditional fare. We told ourselves that the series was ahead of its time. That may or may not be true." The Invaders went into syndication in 1969. Its 75-minute pilot was aired at the Museum of Modern Art that same year. There have also been flickers of a revival. In Quinn Martin's 1977 suspense series Tales of the Unexpected, The Invaders' pilot film was loosely remade as "The Nomads." David Birney played a man who tries to convince authorities that aliens have landed.

In 1980, Quinn Martin made the telefilm The Aliens Are Coming. It was an unsuccessful pilot starring Tom Mason and Melinda Fee. In 1985, in response to popular demand, episodes of The Invaders began airing in England. The same year, Roy Thinnes sold an Invaders project to ABC. "We had a commitment for a three-hour pilot and six one-hour episodes," says Thinnes, who would have produced the series. The deal fell through, but he's still interested in seeing a resolution to the series. Thinnes reprised his role in Fox TV's Invaders movie (1995), but it ended with the aliens still among us.

The actor didn't fully approve of the aliens' hostile nature in the original series. He remarked to Science Fantasy Film Classics magazine in the 1970s, "The producers abandoned any concept which depicted planetary integration in favor of an old SF formula depicting aliens as plunderers and conquerors." Today the actor says, "It wasn't so much that I disliked the aliens being hostile, [but] if human nature is so violent and our nature is to conquer, why should that also be the aliens' nature? Certainly if the aliens had the technology to reach our planet, they had the technology to conquer it."

The actor proposes that David Vincent could have been more of a mediator between his race and alien visitors. "That sort of storyline could have been sustained just as easily as the format we went with," says Thinnes. "One idea would be to do a satire on mankind. The aliens who arrive here are on a quest for benevolence. The humans' resistance to superior, benevolent beings would provide the real drama. For example, say the aliens brought a cure for cancer. Before the cure could be defined, the military complex would probably blast them out of the skies."

According to Thinnes, The Invaders is regarded as a cult show in France. "It's a huge smash there," he says. "They celebrated the show's twenty-fifth anniversary with screenings of the episodes in the oldest movie house in Paris." The actor found himself literally mobbed by the fans. "The turnout was as if the Beatles had arrived. It was incredible. The first time I went to Paris [1989], I was being driven from the airport in a limousine, and two reporters in the limo kept asking me all of these questions about the show. They wanted to know about the love story with Suzanne Pleshette [in the "Mutation" episode] and if I believed in extra-terrestrials. I said, 'Please-can we wait until we get to Paris? I'm trying to see the Eiffel Tower!' I go to Paris about twice a year as their guest, and I'm treated like royalty. It's as if The Invaders is happening all over again. It has an incredible following."

"Perhaps we should do a two-hour movie, Return of the Invaders," muses Howard Alston. "It would be kind of fun. The aliens finally killed David, and this could be about his son." "I would like to see the series revived," says Armer, who still receives mail from Invaders fans. "It's heartening to know that people still remember the series. Audiences weren't turned on by such a far-out concept then, but they might well watch such a series today."

CAST NOTES

Roy Thinnes (David Vincent): Born 1938. Thinnes played the co-pilot blown out of the 747 in Airport 1975. He also starred in several TV movies including The Norliss Tapes (1973). In 1990, he played Rev. Trask in the new Dark Shadows series. Two years later he joined the daytime series One Life to Live.

Kent Smith (Edgar Scoville): Born 1907. As a leading man during the 1940s, Smith starred in the cult film The Cat People (1942). By the 1960s, he was working consistently as a durable supporting actor. He died in 1985.

INVADERS,THE (1995)

Nolan Wood is released after serving a sedated sentence for the manslaughter of an ecologist in 1988. Travelling to the Mojave town of Barstow to see his estranged wife and son, he finds himself accepting a lift from a man who takes over his mind and has him kill Dr. Josh Webber - a medic who has identified a non-human blood type which he took from an accident victim who vanished in a blaze of light at his hospital. Wood's son Kyle, realises that there is something strange about his step-father, and Josh's girlfriend Dr. Ellen Garza finds herself caught in a nightmarish conspiracy. . .

This mini-series is based on the SF show of the 1960s called THE INVADERS. Roy Thinnes again plays David Vincent reprising his role from the 1960s SF series THE INVADERS. Another star of note is Scott Bakula who plays Nolan Woods who is perhaps more famous for his role in the SF series QUANTUM LEAP. Director of photography was Daniel Cahn, ACE, the music was created by Joseph Vitarelli. The executive producers were Robert A. Papazian, James G. Hirsch, James D. Parriott, Aaron Spelling and E. Duke Vincent.

Part of the problem with this mini-series is the uncomfortable admission that Bakula is miscast as sad sack Nolan Wood, an ordinary married guy with a son who inexplicably beat a man to death on the street seven years ago. After the Fox Networks had bought the rights to produce the mini series they did a deal with Aaron Spelling's production company to rewrite the script, mainly because Spelling owned the original Invaders and wanted more continuity within the project. Which is why Thinnes turns up in a series of brief scenes to make more of a connection with the original.

Although the plot is perhaps just a little too simple for its long running time, The Invaders manages to sustain itself by sophisticated direction and some truly disturbing imagery. In-your-face visual effects are wisely kept to a minimum though we do get to see the aliens in their natural form for the first time. On the whole though The Invaders is a highly enjoyable mini series that manages to update the rather dated format of the original show without contradicting it too obviously.

INVADERS,THE (1967)

INVASION

For centuries man has searched the skies for signs of intelligent life but to no avail.

What if the explanation lay in the fact that aliens were already here... already among us? And what if all of the natural disasters we have been experiencing of late were smokescreens designed to mask something far more ominous?

When yet another devastating hurricane threatens Florida, temporarily cutting off a small town at the edge of the Everglades, U.S. Park Ranger Russell Varon takes heroic measures to keep both the town's citizens and his family safe. In the middle of the violent storm, his young daughter is the only one to see small lights floating towards the water, seemingly unaffected by the vicious winds. At the time he thinks nothing of her claim, but begins to suspect that something may indeed be amiss when his missing ex-wife is found naked, with no memory of what happened during the storm.

As the tiny town struggles to recover while his nemesis, the Sheriff, quarantines the entire area, Varon begins to investigate the strange goings on, unwittingly beginning a fight for the survival of the human race.

With a feel very much like a mini-series but in a series mode, this series began with impressive production values. Very similar in premise to shows such as THE INVADERS from the 1960s, giving that kind of terror in the eyes of the public, when nobody really knows who are aliens and who are not. Whilst in THE INVADERS you could tell by the weird finger that each alien had, in Invasion, it's their strange smile.

Ratings troubles

According to Nielsen Ratings, the series premiere was able to attract 17 million viewers from another ABC show, Lost. After the 10th episode, the series lost a total of 7 million viewers over nine episodes with the November 30, 2005 episode garnering only 10 million. In order to get the viewers back in for the 2nd half of 2005-2006 TV season, the show was put on hiatus until January 11, 2006, and it was replaced with another show already scheduled for cancellation, Alias.

For the episodes shown on January 11th, 18th, and 25th the Nielsen Ratings only reached 9.7 million, 9 million and 9.3 million. It had lost nearly half of the first episode's audience and was way behind CBS's CSI: NY, which had 13.7 million, 15.5 million and 14.9 million for the same period.[1] [2] [3] The show was then put on hiatus for the second time, during which time it was replaced with The Evidence.

Some fans of Invasion have attributed poor handling on the part of ABC as one reason for the show's continued problems, citing two hiatuses and a three-week break all within one season periods in which no repeats were aired. Throughout the show's run, these incidents became a topic of speculation and concern among its fanbase.

Cancellation and Petition

The end of season one, which left the fate of Larkin and her unborn child inconclusive, furthered the amount of people who wanted a season two, despite the show's cancellation by ABC despite relatively good ratings for the show as a whole. Rumor had it that Invasion might move over to The CW in Fall 2006 upon its cancellation by ABC. Since The CW is co-owned by CBS and Invasion's production studio, Warner Bros. it was a strong possibility[4]. However in May 2006, the CW had not picked up Invasion for its 2006-2007 program lineup.

Immediately following the show's cancellation, avid fans of the series started a campaign to get the series to continue. It included an online petition (The motto of which is "Did you see the signatures?"), letter writing campaign, and the mailing of water bottles to ABC and other prospective networks. In close to four weeks, over 35,000 signatures were recorded on the online "Save Invasion" petition including the signature of Invasion cast member Nathan Baesel.

INVASION: EARTH

RAF pilot Chris Drake shoots down a strange spacecraft in the wilds of Scotland (ep2) When key personnel are suddenly abducted without a trace, Drake is convinced that the recovered UFO pilot holds the key to an alarming chain of events. (ep3) Terrell reveals the full horror of the alien plan for Earth's future. (ep 4) Reece is challenged to provide definitive proof of the alien threat and orders Drake and his team to capture a live invader.

The series producers were Jed Mercurio and Chrissy Skinnis. The director was Patrick Lau. NEW Science Fiction series from the BBC is news indeed, as in recent years the Corporation has apparently shied away from the genre with its only sure-fire success the comedy series RED DWARF, flying the flag on BBC 2. Invasion: Earth is most certainly not a comedy series and nor is it a return to the low-budget Doctor Who style of BBC Science Fiction as we knew it.

This is a six-part Science Fiction thriller with a budget big enough to compare favourably with the blockbuster effects laden epics that have been regularly pulling in cinema audiences over the last few years. Produced by BBC Scotland in association with the American sci-fi Channel, no expense has been spared in the telling of this epic struggle by a small band of men and women to save the Earth from conquest by aliens.

The defence of the Earth against invading extra-terrestrials is a classic Science Fiction theme that has formed the basis of many of the great genre movies and TV shows. Its roots originate in some of the earliest Science Fiction literature - most notably HG Wells' War of the Worlds and was most recently brought up to date in the hit movie Independence Day.

Invasion: Earth's writer and producer, Jed Mercurio, was keen to put his own spin on this apparently timeless theme. "I thought it would be best to do it in present day Britain and to think it through as if it had a military logic," he says. "I imagined it from the viewpoint of just what World War Three would be like if the enemy were extra-terrestrial."

As with any kind of war there is a noticeably strong military presence in Invasion: Earth and the story is very much told from the point of view of how the armed forces coped with a complete new kind of enemy. "I didn't want to make it all very gung ho and completely unbelievable," explains Mercurio, the premise of this that it could happen" who himself served with the RAF whilst an undergraduate. "The whole premise of this series is that it could happen. I wanted to write something that was about war and what effect that has on people within the military and the people. The scene where an alien escape pod was sunk in the water was filmed at Loch Ness. However, the monster did not make an appearance!

Production Designer Ron Stratford used sea creatures as his inspiration for the technology used by the alien Echoes. To add to the authenticity of the production, members of the Queen's Colour Squadron of the Royal Air Force played extras and provided technical advice and equipment. The legendary Bond stage at Pinewood was used as a giant hangar for a dramatic encounter between the humans and the aliens. The opening scene of episode one is an aerial shot of 1940s London during the blitz which was achieved by creating a computer generated image that consisted of over 30 elements.

Vincent Regan plays Flight Lieutenant Christopher Drake, an RAF fighter pilot who disobeys his orders and shoots down an alien vessel in the opening episode of the series. "Chris Drake takes a very interesting journey," says Regan. "At the beginning of the story he is very much from the reckless school of British aviation. He disobeys orders and in doing so gets grounded. He feels he was just retaliating when under attack which is the fundamental right of every pilot." Following his suspension from duty, Drake encounters the curious Dr Amanda Tucker, played by Maggie O'Neill, who is on the trail of the downed UFO.

"Amanda is where you weren't quite sure a scientist who is fascinated by extra-terrestrial life and messages from Outer Space," says O'Neill. "I think with Amanda brings, intense quality..." her job is a passion, a passion to find out what the truth is. It is her dream come true when they get the signal and she is following her dream." Fred Ward plays Major General David Reece of the United States Air Force who is assigned to NATO with responsibility for the protection of European air space from non-NATO incursions. As yet, NATO does not count any extra-terrestrials amongst its members so an alien spaceship over Scotland would seem very much to fall into Major Reece's jurisdiction.

However, in the early stages of the story, the military are by no means certain of the craft's alien origins. In an engaging twist on the narrow minded military boffins that one usually finds in Science Fiction, Reece proves to be far more open-minded than many of his subordinates and he is willing to listen to the extraordinary theories proposed by Drake and Dr Tucker.

"Reece is an American moralist but not in a bad way," reveals Ward. "He has to believe in something. He has that sense of morality and duty. He is ready to accept responsibility if he has made a mistake but I think he believes what he is doing is really necessary. I think he also understands the bureaucracy of the military." Invasion: Earth allows the viewer a glimpse at not one but two alien cultures which are as different from each other as they are from Earth's. Not surprisingly, the demands on the designers of costumes, sets and visual effects to represent the aliens, their technology and their environment were immense.

The real challenge was keeping everything as realistic and credible as possible without resorting to the clichés of previous genre productions. Costume designer Howard Burden was responsible for the suit worn by one of the alien species referred to as the Echoes by the human characters. "It was designed so that there was a membrane skin sitting on top of an infrastructure underneath," he explains. "We wanted it to look as interesting and intricate as possible without lots of lights, technical gizmos or trickery. This race of beings is so far in the future, they have surpassed things like that."

The second alien species, known as the nDs, are extra-dimensional in origin and were realised by means of computer generated images. Production Designer Rod Stratfold worked with Special Effects Supervisor Dennis Lowe to create the nD. "

The starting point was the shape," reveals Rod. "We wanted a sort of bison-like quality, a bull-like head, so that nothing would stand in its way. We looked at jelly fish, which are quite eerie, nasty things, and decided to have a transparent exterior where you weren't quite sure what the body shape was and fill it with a kind of moving, globular, intestinal quality which showed it has interior workings. Because the nDs are so powerful, they don't need to protect themselves with a skin. We felt it was quite eerie to have someone need a protective beetle or an insect. It is master of its own environment and also master of ours, it would appear."

Rod Stratfold and his team had to design and construct over 50 sets for Invasion: Earth. One of the largest was the strange organic like world of the nDs where Doctor Tucker is imprisoned and experimented upon. "The basis of that set was to think of something nebulous, something dark and mysterious," says Rod. "I wanted a kind of see-through membrane quality: We filmed the actors, who were suspended in mid-air, using a camera eight feet off the ground. It appears the actors are floating, caught up in some kind of membrane."

Clearly the BBC have gone all out to cash in on the current high level of interest in Science Fiction. Should Invasion: Earth bring in the ratings and be considered a success, maybe the BBC will no longer consider sci-fi a taboo subject for their drama output. Perhaps then we can look forward to more British Science Fiction in the not too distant future. The producers for the series were Jed Mercurio and Chrissy Skinns, the directors for the series were Patrick Lau and Richard Laxton. The series was shown at a 9.30pm slot on BBC1.

The BBC's big-budget SF epic had an unenviable job. If it was a winner, then further genre shows would be sure to follow. If it failed, then future shows of this magnitude would not be risked again. Sadly, the latter proved to be the case and Invasion: Earth proved to be a flop, with viewers dropping off like flies. A six-part co-production with the US SF Channel, this show exhibited none of the class that discerning viewers have come to expect from the BBC. Indeed, the series has the look and feel of any US genre show, thus negating any of the British input. The plot (and I use the word loosely) revolved around a trans-dimensional battle between two alien races, but this intriguing idea was drowned in a banal script. Perhaps the saddest aspect to the production is the thought that the BBC could have channelled the cash into a new DOCTOR WHO to celebrate its 35th Anniversary.

Once upon a time, the BBC was the home of serious adult Science Fiction drama. The QUATERMASS series in the 1950s scared a generation, Doctor Who was created in the Sixties for children, but soon found family appeal, while on BBC2 Out of the Unknown dramatised Science Fiction novels. DOOMWATCH came along in the Seventies with its environmental message, followed by Blake's 7's gritty Space Opera and self contained serials like The Tripods and The Hitch Hikers Guide to the Galaxy. But at the end of the Eighties Doctor Who was cancelled, signalling the end of an era. The Nineties are a virtual British SF wasteland, with Red Dwarf providing the occasional oasis. Now there are changes at the corporation with the arrival of Invasion: Earth, not only a major new six-part Science Fiction drama, but reportedly the biggest production ever mounted by the BBC.

The man behind the series is Jed Mercurio who shrugs off any suggestion that he might have achieved what was thought almost impossible only a few years ago. "I was pretty lucky because THE X FILES was doing so well world-wide," he explains. "There was a climate in British television that maybe we could make a Science Fiction show, and we're just seeing them all coming out now, THE UNINVITED, OKTOBER, Cruel Earth, a series in development with Granada]. This is just another example of people being willing to commission it. But of all the ideas, I think this is the one with more than one foot in the Science Fiction camp and the scale of it is much greater than those other shows."

Perhaps Jed succeeded where others failed because of his reputation. He is – although he would probably disagree with this statement - one of the rising stars of television. He was plucked from obscurity just a few years ago by a producer looking to make a gritty, realistic medical drama and the result was Cardiac Arrest. The first series debuted in 1994 when Jed was still working, as a hospital physician and had to hide his identity by writing under a pen name, John Macure. It received much critical acclaim for not only providing an insight into the pressurised world of junior doctors, but also for its strong drama and characterisation. He left the hospital in July of that year to work in TV and film full time and since then has been offered an amazing number of jobs of the sort most new writers only dream about.

Jed takes all of this in his stride and isn't convinced that his award-adorned mantel-piece had much to do with persuading the BBC to sink its money into Invasion: Earth. "I don't know," he says, thinking for a moment. "What helped was that, at that time, I was in a working relationship with the BBC on Cardiac Arrest, so I was speaking as someone within the set up and my idea was being modified to appeal to people I knew or people the executive producer knew. I wasn't someone from the outside who had written a script which they look at and go, 'this will never work'. So the political side of it is part of it and it's so much easier if you're on the inside. I don't think anyone thought that because I'd written Cardiac Arrest, I could write this. I think what they knew was that I was someone who could deliver a script and I'm just not going to go off in a drug haze in the middle of the drafting process."

The story goes that the head of drama at BBC Scotland, Andrea Calderwood, approached him because she wanted a British answer to The X-Files. It might have been easy to churn out an 'investigating weird phenomena' type idea, but Jed was thinking along more traditional Science Fiction lines right from the word go. "The very earliest idea I had was of the RAF shooting down a UFO. Then, after that, I thought how can I build in a scenario where there's a mystery to be solved about where the UFOs come from, why it's here and how can we do it so there's a way of solving that mystery that isn't hard to believe - like, all of a sudden the alien can speak English, or they're telepathic.

Also, given that we had to sustain six hours, how can I build in stages of the story that just builds and builds and builds? Then, once those goals had been set, it was a case of really trying different lots of storylines, trying lots of drafts. There was another production board, script editor, executive producer, director and everybody then has their input into the story lining process. Also, for a time, we had two Science Fiction writers on board, Alex Stewart [who also worked on BUGS] and Stephen Baxter [Hugo award-winning author of The Time Ships] who were around for, I think, about six months and they were part of the story-lining process, so it was a long slog." Most of the money is on screen, too. It's not like a film where half of the budget disappears into the pocket of a Hollywood movie star, there are impressive visuals right from the beginning.

The opening scenes set in the Second World War were composited of more than 30 different elements and they are followed shortly after by the spectacle of Drake shooting down a UFO in his tornado. This was one of the challenges for Jed. The action had to build through the six episodes, but he couldn't hold back on any special effects which might be important to hook viewers in Episode One. "All the way through there's special effects sequences. I knew that, given the subject matter, we had to start seeing things early on - although, we do it in a way that we maintain enough mystery - you have to see a few things before you can expect people to believe in it. I think it would be very obvious if we didn't have enough money or expertise to get the effects right, some of the audience would be annoyed about that."

A lot of attention has been given to the effects in Invasion: Earth, and not just because they helped bump up the budget, but, however 'special' they were, they could not be allowed to eclipse the people at the heart of the story. Some Science Fiction shows have been criticised for having rather wooden characters who are there more to serve the story than to be interesting in their own right. It was a criticism Jed wanted to avoid. "This is going to go out on prime time television as a mainstream drama, the characters have to work, there have to be relationships there and that's something that applies to every kind of drama. I wanted the special effects to be good, of course, but I also wanted it to function on the level of a human drama because I think that's the way to ensure it will be the kind of success we want it to be.

It's set in the present day and people have to believe in the scenario, the way the military respond and so on. So that on top of that you can place some extraordinary series of events and get them to take the journey." Part of that realism was getting the RAF involved right from the start. Jed was actually enlisted in the RAF while an under-graduate and did some flying training before resigning to become a hospital physician. It gave him some knowledge of the military, but he still felt he needed expert advice. "They read the script and passed comment on things that they didn't think were technically accurate, which were corrected. They were involved with the shooting, making sure the military people behaved in the way that they should and a lot of the extras in it were real RAF people," he says.

Since completing Invasion: Earth, Jed has been working on a string of other projects. He is currently writing a sitcom for ITV, The Grimleys, while also working on a new medical drama series for Channel 4. That's on top of the screenplay he is trying to get made into a film and a second screen-play he has been commissioned to write. "I like to do different things," he says. "As a viewer I don't watch one kind of pro-gramme, I like comedies and dramas and so on and I just want to write things that I would want to watch myself so sometimes I want to write things that are comedy, sometimes I want to write things that are action. I think the basic writing process is the same for all of them, which is getting your characters and getting your storylines."

Science Fiction has just been one of the genres he has dipped his toe into in recent years. It is always something he has wanted to do, having enjoyed SF films since a kid, and appreciates the scope that it gives him. "It's a genre in which you can explore topics you can't in the main-stream. You can tell stories on a grander scale. You can tell stories about the fate of Mankind, you can't do that in doctors and nurses or a cop show. It is something that is different, it is something that stands out from the mainstream of television, that's why it appeals to me." So, will he be returning to Science Fiction? Could we see a second series of Invasion: Earth? "I would hope so, yeah. If people really like the series than definitely we would like to make more. But it's something that would have to look as good again, the audience would expect that and therefore the commitment has to be there to make it on the same scale. If it comes to pass, then maybe the BBC truly has entered a new era.

Invasion: Earth is a peculiar hybrid. Born out of the US SF boom created by THE X FILES and the box office success of Independence Day, BBC Scotland (with co-funding by the sci-fi Channel) has managed to come up with a concept smacking of endless committee discussion, hopelessly derivative, yet somehow managing to provide a degree of satisfaction in the end product - believe me this was intended as a product. Unluckily for Auntie, initial ratings seem to indicate it is a product which hap pens to be two years out of date.

Despite failing in audience terms, it is not the total turkey some would have it, there being plenty to enjoy, much to malign and occasional unintentional moments of hilarity. The Last War opens promisingly enough with a lovely Ennio Morricone theme, as in the black and white of 1944 we see evidence of Earth's visitation by an alien race. Signs of the show's high budget are demonstrated both then and as the action switches to the present when Vincent Regan's Chris Drake shoots down a UFO over the North Sea. Drake becomes a focal point for the viewer, which is perhaps unfortunate as Regan's main acting ability lies in his hypnotically staring blue eyes. His contrived meeting with Maggie O'Neill's Dr Amanda Tucker in a deserted Scottish pub is an absolute hoot with dialogue to literally die for. As the story moves on and into The Fourth Dimension, further characters of varying dimensionality have been introduced such as the token American Fred Ward as Major General Reece (can we have our money now please Sci-Fi Channel?!) who, initially annoying, becomes relatively sympathetic by the end and Phyllis Logan's gruff tough disbelieving Helen Knox, whose accent is a joy. We discover the UFO contains the same army officer seen back in the 1944 opening sequence. Anton Lesser imbues Charles Terrell with such depth and a tour de force performance, it seems quite out of place amidst the general mediocrity to be found elsewhere. His backstory episode Only the Dead is quite superb as the BBC takes the plot in a cerebral direction. Cerebral is what BBC Science Fiction has always managed to do best. Unfortunately BBC producers of the 1990s fail to fully understand this.

As a result the best character in the show is killed off next episode in The Fall of Man. I could hardly credit it. Meanwhile Dr Tucker's health, if not her hairdo, has been deteriorating, she having previously been abducted, experimented upon and returned by the malevolent but handily named nDs (Jed Mercurio obviously named them while blowing his nose - with a packet Handy Ndiess nearby). The other aliens are named Echoes - no reason, they just are. Tucker is being suspiciously observed by Sara Kestelman's craggy faced medic Susan Preston - given the gobbledegook, a masterful turn.

By the end of the fifth instalment The Battle More Costly, the town of Kirkhaven has been subjected to a plague courtesy of a former Brookside nurse and a rather big grey bloody thing threatens to engulf the beautiful Scottish countryside. The resolution in The Shatter of Worlds is actually rather satisfying. Firstly Paul J Medford's computer whizz Nick Shay, whose hair looks more frightened than most of the cast, is disposed of. Then it's ta ta Helen Knox, who, having lost her Scully scepticism, must sacrifice herself. And then our two heroes fly into Mr Grey Blobby with interesting results while Reece's features take on ever more pained expressions. Credit should go to the directors and effects team, whose efforts sometimes make one forget how humourless and dreadful the script is. For me the final moments work, because, although a cop out, at least it is a genuine ending. As the credits rolled I thought, get a second series out of that then. Not that the BBC will want one - this effort will probably be the last major SF investment the corporation makes for many a year.

Once upon a time, the BBC was the home of adult Science Fiction drama. The QUATERMASS series in the 1950s scared a generation. DOCTOR WHO was created in the sixties for children. But soon found family appeal, while on BBC2 OUT OF THE UNKNOWN dramatised Science Fiction novels. DOOMWATCH came along in the seventies with its environmental message, followed by BLAKE'S 7's gritty Space Opera and self contained serials like THE TRIPODS and THE HITCH HIKERS GUIDE TO THE GALAXY. But at the end of the eighties DOCTOR WHO was cancelled, signalling the end of an era. The nineties became a wasteland for British SF, with RED DWARF being the only adult show to prosper. Invasion: Earth was the biggest production ever mounted by the BBC, which failed.

INVISIBLE DORI-CHANAKA: TOMEI DORI-CHAN

Midori (Kakizaki) and her brother Torao (S.Ando) are kidnapped by fairies. The fairy President King Ganvas (Fujimura) tells them that he is their real father but the children cannot forget the human world and ask to be sent back. Ganvas permits this, on the condition that the children help to "make people's dreams", and bestows upon them the power of invisibility to help his happen.

Based on a Manga by Shotaro Ishinomori, Invisible Dori-Chan was the first live-action magical girl series to be made after COMET-SAN and helped establish the traditions of the genre that continue to this day. Ishinomori also wrote the lyrics of theme tune "Tomei Dori-Chan" that was sung by Kumiko Osugi. Produced by Tanetake Ochiai, Susumu Yoshikawa.

Hanzo (Katori from SMAP) is a photo-journalist from Ogawawara, who comes to find work in the big city. Teaming up with report Hijima (Fukatsu) to work on crime investigation, he accidentally acquires a potion that allows him to become completely invisible. He uses his new found talent to solve crimes, in a comedy that takes a more serious tone toward the end of the series.

Thanks to the nature of Hanzo's invisibility, the actor playing him could usually expect to end up naked at least once each episode, reputedly leading Katori to have each of his buttocks insured for 100 million yen. We are not exactly sure how this would have helped but it added to the show's pre-broadcast hype. Theme : Southern All Stars - "Ai No Kotodama: Spirtual Message" (Spirit of Love: Spirtual Message).

INVISIBLE MAN (2000)

Darian Fawkes is a petty thief and conman who is bailed out of jail by his brother in return for undergoing an experiment that implants a "quicksilver" gland in his head that allows him to turn invisible. When his brother is killed, he ends up working for a top-secret government organization (disguised as the Department of Fish & Wildlife) in return for a counter-agent which keeps the gland from driving him insane.

This show was produced by the US sci-fi Channel. Produced by Matt Greenberg, Casting by Lisa Mionie & Eileen Stringer, Sound Department - Stephen Tibbo (production sound mixer), Other crew - Christopher Glass (storyboard artist).

"Turn invisible and kick the crap out of bad guys." Sign me up!

The invisible Man is a happy Sci Fi surprise, and one of the most intense new telecast projects I've seen in a while. From beginning to end it's full of bitter irony, desperate paranoia, dark humor and inner conflict, with a good sprinkling of brutal violence.

The plot involves small time thief, Darien Fawkes (Vincent Ventresca) who ends up facing life in prison while trying to go straight.

Darien is soon offered a pardon in exchange for his services as a government test subject in which a mysterious gland - dubbed 'Quick Silver' is implanted into the base of his skull, giving him the ability to become invisible at will. Even more intriguing, Darien can make objects invisible, an ability he later uses to leave some bad guys a nasty surprise - a whole room full of invisible grenades - Now That's Entertainment!

Unfortunately, all this fun has a serious downside. Prolonged exposure to the quicksilver effect breaks down Darien's cognitive abilities, ravaging his sanity and unleashing his dark impulses - degenerating effects, which would soon become fatal if not for the counter agent serum developed to reverse these effects.

Of course, much to Darien's dismay, the relief offered by the counter agent is only temporary, requiring an endless series of injections to maintain stability.

After some clever plot twisting and double crosses in which the lab is destroyed, and the bullets fly, Darien manages to escape and is taken in by the government intelligence agency that financed his transformation. Like any compassionate government organization would, they promptly blackmail him into service as a secret agent, (No work, no counteragent).

Darien is then paired up with his new partner, Agent Bob Hobbes, (Paul Ben-Victor) a cynical, burnt out field operative. There's a running gag related to bob's attitude concerning "New Guy" Darien having a higher security clearance than he does, that delivers some good chuckles.

I was slightly let down by the cookie cutter "Eye Candy with Brains" female character known as 'The Keeper'. While effectively acted by Shannon Kenny, the obligatory sexual tension subplot seems a little tired in this venue. In context it's a forgivable misstep - 'The Keeper' (Kenny) does carry a presence as the doc responsible for administering the counter-agent that keeps Darien's sanity in check, and Eddie Jones is a natural as the oily government "official", who hands down assignments and discipline with equal callousness.

Overall, the show creates a taut atmosphere of suspense and moral ambiguity, balanced with a good dose of cynical humor. The leads are well cast and the supporting actors bring a lot of fun on board - Agent bob almost steals every scene he's in.

Well paced, with convincing FX and pulse raising action, 'The Invisible Man' exceeds expectations and brings a fresh energetic twist to an old concept.

Darien Fawkes is a con-man and thief who is captured for a third time. Rather than face California's three-strike law, he volunteers for an experiment conducted by his brother Kevin. Kevin and another scientist, Arnaud, have created a synthetic gland that secretes "Quicksilver", a substance that can bend light. They place the gland in Darien's head. He soon realizes what has happened and is none too pleased. Darien is even less happy when they discover the gland secretes Quicksilver into the recipient's brain, and enough of it drives the person insane. Darien learns to control his abilities, and soon discovers that Arnaud is up to something. Arnaud claims Darien is insane when he accuses the scientists, but then Arnaud's mercenaries break in, steal the information on the gland, and kill everyone except Darien. Darien goes to his ex-girlfriend, a doctor who is furious at him because he didn't reveal his past. She refuses to believe he can turn invisible, and then Darien is taken away by men in trenchcoats. He meets two men, the "Official" and a bureaucrat named Eberts, who tell him that Arnaud is a terrorist who is trying to duplicate the gland, and he'll have to go to Mexico and Arnaud's base of operations to try and find the duplicate gland and the method from which his gland can be removed.

Wr Matt GreenbergDir Breck Eisner1 - 2 THE CATEVARI

A patient in a coma hidden away at a secret hospital recovers and escapes, killing the guards in the process with a poisonous touch. The Agency is called in to investigate, and Darien soon learns that the patient, a "Catevari" (named after a Latin story of a woman fed poison until her very touch was poisonous) was another experimental subject of the Agency, like himself. The Catevari goes after the Official, and Darien manages to save his life by quick use of the freezing properties of Quicksilver. Darien ultimately confronts Catevari, who confronts him with the fact that they both have been messed up by the Agency and should join forces. Fawkes reluctantly decides to stick with those who have helped him, and the Catevari is killed.

Dir Ian Emes1 - 3 RALPH

A young girl is a witness to an assassination by a sniper. Traumatized, she only speaks to her imaginary friend "Ralph." Darien, using his powers of invisibility, convinces the girl he is "Ralph" and tries to get her to talk about the murder. Eventually the hit man tries to kill the girl, and Darien manages to stop him. With his help, the girl starts to recover from her trauma, and leaves her "imaginary friend" behind.

Darien and Hobbes are assigned to help investigate an auditor's relative's suicide, and run into a man who can see the future and use it to his advantage.

Wr Peter Hume, Josh KochDir Boris Damast1 - 5 LIBERTY AND LARCENY

Darien is contacted by his former mentor and partner, Liz, who wants his help. She wants him to return to his thieving ways and help her steal some FBI files on a mobster who has hired her. Initially reluctant, Darien eventually grows aggravated with the Agency's treatment of him and links up with her. Covertly using his powers of invisibility, Darien manages to get hold of the files, only to realize that the mobster plans to use them to kill a government witness against him. Darien tries to thwart the mobster and keep Liz safe, and manages to do so. The two of them part on relatively friendly terms.

Unable to craft their own invisibility gland, the Chinese government sets out to steal the American one. Unfortunately, they have the idea that Bobby Hobbes is the invisible member of the team. Fawkes and Hobbes go into hiding, but Bobby gets nervous. After several chases, Hobbes apparently dies in a car crash. It's a set-up, but he turns up at his own funeral to look on from a distance, and is captured there by the Chinese. The Agency tracks him to the Chinese embassy, and Fawkes goes in to rescue him. It turns out the whole operation is a ploy to lure out the real American Invisible Man. Fawkes manages to escape with Bobby before they can drain the Quicksilver out of the gland, setting the place on fire.

1 - 14 BEHOLDER

A ghoulish hitman uses a laser to blind any witnesses to his killings. Fawkes and Hobbes trace him to a blind model who the killer is romantically involved in, but the assassin escapes, blinding Fawkes in the process. Since he was turning invisible when the laser hit him, the effects are temporary, and he can still see if he covers his eyes with the quicksilver formula. Unfortunately, that aggravates his growing insanity. The blind model helps him to deal with his blindness, and the two become romantically involved. Fawkes figures out that the assassin's most recent victim was merely a lure to get his real victim to the man's funeral. Fawkes, overwhelmed by Quicksilver Madness, throws the assassin to his death.

1 - 15 GHOST OF A CHANCE

Darien, the Keeper and Hobbes head south of the border to Santa Ruego to convince the Prime Minister to vote against installing the Biox chemical weapon system. How? By having Fawkes pretend to be a ghost and persuade the superstitious Minister to vote against the system's installation. Unfortunately, another "spirit" is haunting the Minister: "La Llarona," a ghost who can drown men with a kiss. She confronts Darien and it is revealed she is a member of a shadowy organization that bio-engineered her with the ability to breathe water and exhale it under pressure. In the battle over the Prime Minister's vote, Darien eventually manages to drive her off and get the vote, despite the mutual attraction the two "freaks" share.

1 - 16 FLOWERS FOR HOBBS

Hobbes and Darien are on the trail of a sperm thief. A college professor is using the sperm to isolate intelligence-causing genes, and put them into a retrovirus. Hobbes is accidentally infected and soon begins to become more and more intelligent. But the partners discover that the gene therapy is lethal. Bobby becomes smart enough to create a cure...but refuses to do so, preferring to die smart then live dumb. Darien infects himself, leaving Hobbes no choice but to come up with a cure to save his friend.

1 - 17 PER CHANCE TO DREAM

A series of bizarre killings involve murderers who have no connection to the victims. The Keeper becomes the next unwitting "murder," as she is part of a insomnia-research project. The project's scientists are using the device to program their subjects to become assassins. The Keeper's sanity is threatened if she can't complete her "assignment." Fawkes and Hobbes eventually manage to bring in the scientists, and come up with a means to break the Keeper of the programming (by faking the death of her "victim") before she goes mad.

1 - 18 FROZEN IN TIME

Kate Easton (The Value of Secrets) is on the run from Allianora. Easton is grabbed before Darien can get her to safety and put into cryogenic suspension by Allianora's (as yet unidentified) employers. The people Allianora work for are collecting scientists for future use under their control. The Agency manages to capture Allianora, but she proves impossible to crack. So Darien secretly cuts her a deal: he'll betray the Agency and help her escape if she'll betray her bosses and help him rescue Kate. Both of them end up double-crossing each other, and Darien ends up in a cryogenic tube when Allianora scrambles his tracking signal. He manages to escape using his invisibility and rescue Kate. However, when he returns with the Agency, the warehouse and the remaining scientists are gone.

1 - 19 DISEASED

Hobbes and Darien meet with one of Hobbes' contacts to set a trap for their arch-enemy, Arnaud. Arnaud manages to escape Darien with the aid of a smoke canister, which turns out to contain a biological weapon. Darien is soon displaying flu-like illness symptoms, and is excreting black, contaminated Quicksilver. The Official and the Keeper send him to a military hospital...which Arnaud has already infiltrated. He plans to remove the Quicksilver Gland from Darien's skull via surgery, but the illness complicates matters. He must kidnap the Keeper to cure Darien so he can gain an uninfected Gland. Darien manages to escape and, overwhelmed by madness, almost kills Arnaud. The Keeper manages to stop him but Arnaud escapes.

1 - 20 THE LESSER EVIL

Allianora (from "Ghost of a Chance"), the Woman in Black, contacts Darien and invites him to join the Organization (i.e., Chrysalis). He is understandably reluctant, but she shows him top secret Agency files that show they are planning to replace him with a more cooperative Gland recipient. He investigates and finds the information to be true, but also discovers that the plan was for him to be the replacement for his predecessor. Remaining loyal to the Agency, Darien attempts to infiltrate Chrysalis, and even takes up their offer to "kill" Allianora, suspecting the bullets are blanks. They are, but she is wary of him once he "proves" he is willing to kill her. Darien then tries to infiltrate Chrysalis' computer banks, but is caught. Before they can remove the gland, Allianora frees him, setting the HQ building on fire. She disappears once more.

1 - 21 MONEY FOR NOTHING PART 1

To bolster Agency funds, the Official comes up with a plan where he, the Keeper, and Hobbes will go to one of Arnaud's casinos and, using Darien's invisibility powers, break the bank. The first part of the plan goes well, but Darien decides to steal the remaining $7 million of the casino's money on his own. When confronted by the Official, Darien denies the theft. In response, the Official cuts off his supply of the counteragent. Arnaud contacts Darien and offers him the counteragent in return for the money.

Stalemated with the Official, and with quicksilver madness coming on, Darien is tempted, but Arnaud mysteriously disappears. Darien talks with Arnaud's imprisoned brother Huiclov, who refers him to a doctor that Arnaud was visiting. Darien goes to the hospital to the doctor, already red-eyed with madness. The Official has sanctioned an outsider to bring in Darien, taking an unhappy Hobbes off the case. Hobbes tracks Darien to the hospital on his own, and manages to find him with a pair of heat-sensing goggles. By now, Darien is now in complete full-stage quicksilver madness (his eyes turn quicksilver-colored). He offers Hobbes a share of the loot in returning for him becoming Darien's partner. At the end of part 1, Hobbes is left to consider the tempting offer.

1 - 22 MONEY FOR NOTHING PART 2

Presumably the audience voted yes to Hobbes' decision to join Fawkes. Darien, in end-stage Quicksilver Madness, is now obsessed with finding Arnaud. Hobbes sticks close by trying to keep him from killing random bystanders. They catch up to Arnaud, but Hobbes helps him escape when it appears that the maddened Darien will kill him. Darien abandons Hobbes, who is then approached by Arnaud. Arnaud has a malfunctioning Quicksilver gland of his own, and needs to use Darien's as a baseline to get his own fixed. In return, he'll give Hobbes Stage Five Counteragent to reverse Darien's advanced condition. Hobbes helps capture Darien, and a surgeon, Dr. Rendell, manages to adjust Arnaud's gland. Darien gets the Counteragent, but before it can take effect he tries to kill Arnaud. Arnaud escapes during the distraction when the counteragent kicks in. Later, Arnaud goes to visit Dr. Rendell when he realizes that the surgery did not go quite right, and he is permanently invisible.

1 - 23 IT'S A SMALL WORLD

Thanks to a leak in Chrysalis, Hobbes and Darien get the goods on a politician that Allianora is trying to bribe. Realizing they have a leak, Chrysalis takes unspecified measures to stop the leak. Allianora visits Darien and tries to force him to give up the name of their contact, but he refuses and the two end having making (invisible) love. The next morning Bobby and Darien meet with the contact, only to have him killed by a Chrysalis ambush. The Keeper soon realizes that Darien was bugged with nanobots during his...encounter with Allianora. They transmit everything he sees and hears. The Official fake-executes Darien while they put an insulated helmet on him to make Chrysalis think he's dead. They then investigate a pharmaceutical firm and discover Chrysalis plans to attach the nanobot bugging devices to students at an elite school. While Hobbes and the Keeper stop them, Darien tries to lure off the Chrysalis strike team to the school pool. Using a pair of goggles, he prevents them from seeing what he sees and tracking him. Connor, the Chrysalis henchman, tries to drown him but Allianora knocks the goon out and rescues Darien. Stark, her boss, shoots her and manages to escape. She dies in Darien's arms. Although the nanobot serum was destroyed, the Keeper extracts a sample from Allianora's body and uses it to cure a destitute Darien.

2 - 1 LEGENDS

The Agency is now under the auspices of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, losing their support from Fish & Game. Darien, Hobbes, and the Keeper are sent to investigate the brutal deaths of several Indians. They turn up large primate footprints which lead them to think that Bigfoot might be involved. Meanwhile, a mysterious woodsman with IR goggles is taking potshots at them, and they seemed to be stalked by an invisible predator. It turns out that Darien's gland was apparently based on the gland of a sasquatch. The creature thinks Darien is one of its kind, and wants him for mating purposes. The woodsman, a discredited cryptozoologist, is trying to kill the creature for revenge against another of its kind killing his family. The woodsman tries to use Darien as bait, and in the end blows himself and the creature up. The Official disavows any connection between Bigfoot and the gland-research project, but Darien knows better. Meanwhile, the creature in the woods is revealed to be still at large.

2 - 2 THE CAMP

The Agency is now controlled by the Department of Human Services. Quintuple-A rated agent Alex

Munro comes barging in, taking control of the place. She knows everything about everyone, but her own record is murky. Her first case is to have the Agency investigate the disappearance of babies from hospitals. Fertility clinics owned by the same corporation are the key factor. The team prevents an abduction and tracks the abductor to a summer camp where children are being raised from birth and brainwashed by the Chrysalis organization. A standoff between the Agency and the armed children ensue, but Darien breaks the stalemate by entering the compound and calling for Chrysalis leader Stark. Darien convinces Stark to release the children rather than have them get killed. The children turn themselves in, but Stark escapes as part of the deal. It turns out that Alex's baby was one of the abductees...and her child isn't among the residents of the camp.

2 - 3 THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EBERTS

Hobbes and Darien investigate a hacker trying to break into the Agency computer system. The hacker escapes, and Eberts manages to suggest being allowed to tag along with the team as a computer expert. He and Fawkes sneak into a internet cafe but are ambushed. Knocked out from behind, Eberts is taken back to the Agency and soon starts to act increasingly aggressive, going so far as to ignore the Official when inevitably told to "Shut up, Eberts!". Eventually Hobbes and Fawkes discover that Ebert has been replaced by their invisible nemesis Arnaud DeFehr. DeFehr gained cell samples of Eberts during his last physical, and used them to make up a lifelike skin mask. He needs Eberts' access to get into the Official's computer. After a bicycle & skateboard chase, DeFehr manages to elude Darien, leaving the Agency to wonder when DeFehr will show up again.

2 - 4 JOHNNY APOCALYPSE

Fawkes, Hobbes, and Alex are sent to bring in a kid, Adam Reese, for testing. After thwarting a Chrysalis attack, Alex explains that Adam has an Ebola-like retrovirus as part of a government experiment that will become active when he hits puberty. Darien manages to convince Adam to come in for the tests anyway. Unfortunately, the government simply plans to incinerate Adam. 2 - 5 GOING POSTAL

Hobbes, Fawkes, and Alex go undercover since the Agency is now under the Post Office. They are sent to investigate thefts from the dead-letter office. When Hobbes opens an envelope with a card that plays "Jingle Bells", he goes berserk and shoots up the place. All of the team undergo psychiatric evaluation, but the only consistent factor in all their stories is the card. When Eberts opens it, he goes berserk as well. It turns out the card has a touch-transmitted chemical in it that, in conjunction with the song, turns the victim into a berserker. The card was sent to the post office by some 60's anti-establishment type and was left over until someone found it. Fawkes manages to stop Eberts, and Hobbes is given a clean bill of health.

2 - 6 BROTHER'S KEEPER

After an operation goes bad and Fawkes goes into Quicksilver Madness, Darien realizes that there may be a way to find a cure. Despite the Official's orders not to, he has the Keeper inject him with some of his brother Kevin's DNA and channel his personality and memories as he did with Simon Cole (in "The Other Invisible Man"). The operation succeeds, but the DNA dates back to four months before Kevin and Arnaud DeFehr mutated the gland. Hobbes and "Kevin" track down Dr. Elizabeth Rindell, who put the second gland in DeFehr. DeFehr beats them up and manages to escape, but "Kevin" is later kidnapped. "Kevin" fakes a fit of madness, knowing that the Counteragent will bring Darien back. Arnaud escapes again, but they get hold of a laptop computer with files on the gland. However, when they bring "Kevin" back for the last time to decipher the files, he refuses, believing Darien is a better person for it. Darien, needless to say, is less than thrilled.

2 - 7 INSENSATE

Darien is approached by Tommy Walker, a man whose senses (except touch) have been rendered inoperative. Using a special chest-mounted sensor device, Walker can get around, and can even spot

Fawkes when he's invisible. He claims that he was another of Kevin Fawkes' experiments. Walker shows Darien some of the other experiments with sensory-deprivation performed by Kevin and his partner, Augustin Gaither. The other subjects went insane. However, a mysterious government organization, the Secret Weapons Research Branch, break in and claim everything is under their jurisdiction: even the Official is intimidated. They take Walker prisoner, but Darien believes Tommy can lead him to Gaither, who may know about Kevin's experiments and can find a way to remove the gland. Fawkes rescues Walker from the SWRB, only to discover that he is Augustin Gaither: he was driven insane by the same process when he used it on himself, and now believes he is "Tommy Walker". The SWRB blow up Hobbes' house where Walker is for safekeeping, but everyone manages to escape. 2 - 8 DEN OF THIEVES

Darien goes undercover as a thief to infiltrate the gang of the mysterious terrorist Javier and discover why they are stealing random parts. He and the leader of the gang, Dante, are captured and sent to prison, where Fawkes is left there to try and get the info from Dante. Pressured by two cronies from his previous stay, Darien promises to get them out by using his invisibility to steal the warden's nameplate. Dante, impressed, also goes along with him. 2 - 9 BAD CHI

During a mission Darien gets a back injury, and the Official refuses to pay for treatment. Seeking out an acupuncturist, Darien inadvertently reveals he can become invisible. On his next visit, the acupuncturist, Charlene, inserts needles that allow her to use electricity to put Fawkes in agony if he doesn't obey her. She needs a rare set of mystical needles to cure her mentor, and Darien to steal them. He succeeds, but the needles have "bad chi" because the original owner, a millionaire, stole them. The millionaire has to be killed to eliminate the bad chi, but Charlie can't do it without gaining bad chi. So she forces Darien to try. He turns himself in to the police but they try to arrest him based on his criminal record. Stark, Chrysalis' leader, takes Fawkes away and tries to convince him he works for the CIA. However, the amnesiac Darien is stolen away a third time by the invisible Arnaud DeFehn, who convinces Darien that he is his similarly-invisible brother Kevin, and that they have to rescue their third brother, Johnny. Johnny turns out to be Huiclov, DeFehn's brother, and the whole thing is a ploy to get Huiclov out of prison. 2 - 11 GERM THEORY

While getting his weekly Counteragent shot, Darien becomes infected with an experimental batch of Counteragent. The experimental stuff renders Darien randomly invisible...and it's contagious. First the Keeper becomes infected when she cuts herself while taking blood samples. She goes into Quicksilver madness, and attacks the Official. Both he and Hobbes becomes infected as well. Darien is also going into Quicksilver madness, since the arm with his tattoo is invisible. The Official locks down the facility under quarantine, but goes nuts as well, and escapes. Returning agent Alex Munro manages to capture him, and they discover that Hobbes is uninfected. The mayo on his sandwich was bad, and the bacteria counter-acted the experimental Counteragent. (still looking for her own son) gets word of the operation and goes in with them. They find Alex's child, only to discover she was an incubator: the child was actually the offspring of Chrysalis leader Stark and his wife. Darien follows Alex when she goes on maternity leave with her son, and thwarts a Chrysalis attempt to recover the baby. Then the child's biological mother Eleanor Stark shows up, and stops a plan to blow up Alex and child by a now nutso Stark. Eleanor helps out the Agency by getting info on Chrysalis (with a little invisible assistance from Darien). At the end, Alex gives up the child knowing it will be safe with Eleanor when she goes into the witness-protection program. Unfortunately, a few hours later they hear back that the agents guarding Eleanor and the baby are killed, and the mother and child have disappeared. Ordered not to investigate by the Official, Fawkes (naturally) investigates anyway, and discovers the mother was apparently killed in a particle accelerator "accident". The ghost, Lucille, has managed to hold herself together as a form of energy, but is only visible along the wavelengths that Darien can see when invisible. Darien discovers Lucille had discovered a means of creating cheap cold fusion, and her boss Dr. Henrick had her killed. INVISIBLE MAN, THE (1958)

AKA: H.G. WELLS' INVISIBLE MAN

It owes nothing to Wells but its name, being set in Fifties Britain with a hero, Peter Brady, who remains a 'good guy' throughout. While successfully testing his theory of optical density - a principle that every form of matter could be reduced to invisibility through total refraction - promising young scientist Brady turns unexpectedly invisible when an experiment misfires. Unable to reverse the process, Brady becomes stuck as The Invisible Man.

At first pursued and imprisoned by the men from the ministry, he proves his loyalty, allowing subsequent episodes to follow his adventures as he takes on an assortment of villains for both friends and country. Underlying the series, however, is Brady's search for an antidote, a way to restore his 6 ft 2 in frame to full visibility.

H.G. Wells's famous creation has inspired three television series and this underrated 1958-9 British version, more properly known as H.G. Wells' Invisible Man, was the first. Deborah Watling would like go on to star in the SF show DOCTOR WHO. Because so many people, including stuntman and technicians, made the invisible man what he wasn't, producer Ralph Smart decided not to name the actors who playing him and none were ever credited. But his voice was revealed as that of actor Tim Turner, while the man in the overcoat playing the headless body, was short built Johnny Scripps who 'saw' throughout a button in the coat.

The series' star was kept anonymous. The most viewers ever saw was a suit of clothes and a bandaged head. On the whole, Brady remained completely invisible - even down to his goosepimples! His presence, however, was conveyed through his actions and mannerisms. While sitting at a desk, for example, he would pick up a paper-knife, twirling it in unseen fingers or tapping it on the desk. He sipped wine and puffed cigarettes through invisible lips, drove cars and motorbikes and even enjoyed an invisible kiss with actress Zena Marshall.

All sorts of special effects contributed to the Invisible Man's presence, with many of the delicate tricks still hailed as some of the best effects seen on television. Jack Whitehead, who once pulled the strings for Muffin the Mule, used his skills to raise a glass, suspended on two fine wires to an invisible mouth, to jerk down the springs on a chair to simulate sitting, and to lift a hat from an invisible head. There were several ways, too, of making the Invisible Man appear to be driving a car. A stuntman lay flat on the floor with the nearside door slightly open so that he could see where he was going, steering with one hand at the bottom of the wheel and using the other hand to operate the foot pedals. Another way was to have the driver, 'built into' the upholstery.

A false seat was dropped over him with small holes cut out for him to see through. On one occasion, while filming in London's Lincoln's Inn Fields, two pedestrians attempted to wrest control of a 'riderless' motorcycle combination, unaware that a stuntman, concealed in the sidecar, was steering the bike. The second series also featured more 'subjective' camera work, so that viewers saw the world through the eyes of the Invisible Man.

Because so many people, including stuntmen and technicians, made The Invisible Man what he wasn't, producer Ralph Smart (Danger Man, William Tell) decided not to name the actors who played him and none was ever credited. But his voice was revealed as that of actor Tim Turner, while the man in the overcoat playing the headless body, was short-built Johnny Scripps who 'saw' through a button in the coat.

The female lead in the series was Lisa Daniely, as Brady's sister, Diane (Dee), and making her ITV debut was Deborah Watling, as his young niece Sally. The first series of 13 episodes was aired in London, Scotland and the South from September 1958, with the second series following in April 1959. Viewers elsewhere saw both series back to back from June 1959. In 1989, ITV bought the rights to one rerun of the whole series. It has also run and rerun during the Nineties on Satellite channel Bravo.

H.G. Well's novel, The Invisible Man, has been the inspiration for three TV series. The first was produced in England during the late 50's and was also known as H.G. Wells' The Invisible Man despite the fact that besides the name and the basic premise the series held little in common with the book.

The invisible effects consisting of doors opening on their own and items floating in mid air are well done, especially for the time. When Dr. Brady is seen he is wearing a large overcoat and gloves while his face is bandaged up. The actor who portrayed Dr. Brady was never revealed, however years after the show was cancelled it was revealed that Tim Turner gave the character his voice. DOCTOR WHO viewers may want to note that Dr. Brady's niece Sally was played by Deborah Watling who would later join the Tardis crew as Victoria. NOTE: Thirteen episodes of The Invisible Man were run on CBS in the fall of 1958, with more episodes getting run in the summer of 1960.

The series was produced by Ralph Smart, the music for season one was created by John Key and the production supervisor was Aida Young. The series debuted in the US on the 4th November 1958. The UK broadcast dates given on this database were for the London Region of ITV. An original pilot episode for the series remained unbroadcast, with an unknown title, and a slightly different cast, this story had different music and inferior special effects, but elements of the story emerged in "Secret Experiment", "Bank Raid" and "Picnic with Death".

This British series actually shared only the presence of an invisible man with H.G. Wells' novel. There was no Dr. Griffin, no insanity and no mad drive for power in the series. Rather, Dr. Peter Brady is a government researcher who accidentally makes him-self invisible while experimenting with optical density and light refraction at England's Cas-tle Hill Research Laboratories. Being invisible, however, makes him a dandy criminal investi-gator, and hence Brady is called upon to look into criminal activities and spy rings in the series' 26 episodes.

What is interesting about the series is that like the Lone Ranger, Brady remains a mystery throughout the series. He is never seen except as a bandaged figure, naturally, and his invisible presence is known only by his dis-tinctive voice and by special effects, most of which are merely theatrical contrivances (objects moved about by wires) rather than optical effects. Even in the premiere episode "Secret Experiment," in which Brady loses his visibility, the actor is either obscured by laboratory apparatus or shown only from the back (although there is one shot in which we see his eyes as he peers through a portal).

Adding to the mystery is that the titles credit him only as "The Invisible Man," and the actor behind the bandages and the actor dubbing the voice are never given credit. Tim Brooks and Earle Marsh, in the sixth edition of their The Complete Directory of Prime Time Network TV Shows (1995), identified the voice as belong-ing to actor Tim Turner and wrote that the man under the bandages was one Johnny Scripps, of whom nothing is known. But there must be more than one actor dubbing the voice; in early episodes, from "Secret Experi-ment" through at least "Play to Kill," the Invis-ible Man's voice is very different from the one heard in later episodes. Further complicating the issue, Alan Morton's The Complete Direc-tory to Science Fiction, Fantasy and Horror Television Series states that the voice of the Invisible Man in an hour pilot episode titled "Secrecy Experiment" belonged to actor Robert Beatty.

Essentially, the series is an espionage-crime thriller with Brady frequently dealing with agents from what the series describes as "countries from behind the Iron Curtain"; in "The Prize," for instance, Brady's nemesis is an East German commissar named Gunzi, played by Anton Differing, and in "Odds Against Death" Brady's nemesis is Johnny Caletta (Alan Tilvern), an American gangster whose henchman is dressed stereotypically in black shirt and white tie. However, a few pro-grams dealt with new and sophisticated sci-entific hardware, such as a new fuel dispenser in "Point of Destruction" and an anti-gravity device in "Flight into Darkness." The narrative of "The White Rabbit" follows a Nazi sympathiser's efforts at duplicating Brady's experiments in order to conquer the world. Such narratives make the series similar to pro-grams like Captain Midnight and World of Giants.

The broadcast history of H.G. Wells' Invisible Man is sketchy to the point of consternation. Lacking some official log from CBS or Official Films, broadcast dates appear to be nothing more than guesses on nearly everyone's part. Some sources identify the pro-gram as a syndicated series, but Hal Erickson's Syndicated Television: The First Forty Years 1947-1987 does not include the series; he men-tions it as a CBS offering. Like most sources, Alex McNeil's Total Television identifies H. G. Wells' Invisible Man as a CBS program, but McNeil notes that CBS broadcast only 13 of the 26 episodes. According to the television log of the New York Times, WCBS in New York broadcast 13 episodes of the series on Tuesday nights at eight o'clock, beginning November 4, 1958, with "Secret Experiment."

The premiere date of November 4 is reiterated by Brooks and Marsh, McNeil and Lance (among others); however, Alan Morton identifies the premiere date as September 14, 1958. Most sources agree that the remainder of the 26 episodes were broadcast over WCBS in the summer of 1960 on Thursday nights at seven o'clock. Morton adds a unique claim, saying that a pilot episode titled "Secrecy Experiment" was not broadcast by CBS but was part of the American syndication package, and that this hour pilot was later broken into two episodes, the recognised pilot proper titled ("Secret Experiment") and episode 11 ("Bank Raid"). We could find no corroboration for this claim. For reasons of simplicity, we elected to list the dates below as they were compiled from newspaper and To Guide listings for a West Coast CBS affiliate. The order of episodes may be not be in their proper sequence.

A tracking shot captures a table filled with all sorts of laboratory paraphernalia; the title "H.G. Wells" appears. As the camera comes to a stop at the end of the table, the title moves to the top of the screen. We now see a close shot of a bandaged human figure without eyes lighted in chiaroscuro effect; the full title H. G. Wells' Invisible Man now appears full screen, then vertically wipes down, leaving a clear shot of the figure before fading to black.

INVISIBLE MAN, THE (1975)

In the pilot TV film, Weston discovers how to make himself invisible and must then try to keep the secret from unscrupulous agents who want to use it as a means of achieving world power. He has a friend Nick Maggio (Henry Darrow) who makes a lookalike mask for him to wear so that he can appear in public (and we can get to see the star once in a while).

In the series, Weston and his visible wife Kate take on various assignments for the government such as testing out a security system (The Fine Art of Diplomacy), unmasking a fake spiritualist (Man of Influence), helping a scientist defector to return home (Barnard Wants Out), rescuing the kidnapped daughter of a vital mob trial witness (Sight Unseen) and secretly returning stolen money (Pin Money). Melinda Fee played Kate (some viewers were wryly concerned that she spent so much time with a naked - if invisible - man!), and their boss Carlson was played by Jackie Cooper in the pilot and Craig Stevens in the series.

The invisible man referred to in the title is Dr. Daniel Weston, a research scientist who has discovered a process which can render objects invisible. When he learned that the military was planning on conscripting his discovery, he decided to destroy his notes and destroy his equipment after proving the process worked by testing it on himself. Dan soon learned that his work was only half as successful as he thought since the process to return him to visible failed and he was stuck being an invisible man. He enlisted the aid of a friend to make him a very lifelike rubber mask and gloves that appeared as human hands. for Dr. Weston to wear and appear normal in public. In order to become invisible. Dan had to remove his mask, gloves and all his clothes.

Daniel and his wife Kate got jobs at the Klax Corporation a huge west coast think tank. There Dan was allowed to resume his experiments which would hopefully allow him to regain his visibility. In the meantime he took assorted missions in which his invisibility would prove handy for the Klax corporation, under the direction of Walter Carlson.

This 1975 American version of the Invisible Man was a short lived action-adventure series starring ex-UNCLE hero David McCallum as invisible scientist Dr. Daniel Weston. David McCallum is famous for being in many SF shows including THE MAN FROM UNCLE, SAPHIRE AND STEEL and FRANKENSTEIN: THE TRUE STORY. The 1975 American version of The Invisible Man was a short-lived action-adventure series starring ex-UNCLE hero David McCallum as invisible scientist Dr Daniel Weston. Despite its personable stars and some good special effects, The Invisible Man never caught on in America and ended after its first season run of just 13 episodes.

The Invisible Man was the first of the two short-lived attempts by NBC to produce a programme about an invisible man in the mid 1970's, the second being THE GEMINI MAN which premiered a year later. The producer for the series was Leslie Stevens, executive producer was Harve Bennett and the story editor was Seeleg Lester, the theme was composed by Richard Clements (pilot) and Henry Mancini (series). The pilot was 80 minutes and is mostly shown as a two part episode after the series was cancelled, therefore the total count of episodes is 14 assuming the pilot episode counts as two episodes. The series was shown in the UK between the 26th September and 22nd December 1975. The final episode 1.14 was not aired during the show original airing.

"The Invisible Man was really a one-joke show," laments producer Robert O'Neill. "The minute you've taken the wrappings off his head, you've seen the joke." The joke was met with sheer terror in 1933 when Claude Rains portrayed the invisible man in the Universal picture. Some theater patrons fainted as the sinister scientist unwrapped the bandages around his head to reveal ... nothing. Rains' invisible man sets out on a campaign of terror before his footprints in the snow give him away and he's shot down.

David McCallum's invisible man was a decent fellow who worked with his wife to find a cure for his condition. The Invisible Man series first appeared as a 90-minute TV film in the spring of 1975. The film received good ratings, and a weekly series was announced for the fall. "The series coincided with new technology, a combination of film and video," recalls creator Harve Bennett. "By today's standards it was very crude, but in 1975 it allowed us tremendous opportunities. It was a very noble experiment, and I'm very proud of the series."

So is Melinda Fee, who played the wife of the invisible man, Kate Westin. "I wish I had a nickel for every time I wished I could be invisible," laughs Fee. "It's the greatest theme of all time. Talking to an invisible David McCallum was delicious. I'd practice a lot at home, jerking my body to simulate his grabbing my arm. Or cocking my head, listening to him talk, with my eyes focused on his direction. It's a skill that had to be learned." Kate Westin often pitched in to help her husband corner the bad guys. "I was thrilled to land the role," Fee says. "Kate Westin came along just about the time Women's Lib was making headway. She represented what women were striving for: separate professions, equality, recognition of intelligence and education."

I loved Kate's brightness, intuition and humor. And I adored playing such a wide range of characters in disguises." Fee, however, was relieved that the series didn't follow the lead of the pilot movie. "The pilot was geared more to the lurking Feds scrambling to steal the formula of invisibility. It had the proverbial car chase, ending in a huge crash-and-burn sequence. The series centered on the relationship of Daniel and Kate. We traveled outside of that dreary lab, and I loved the personal scenes with David. It showed that scientists did have private lives."

The big challenge for the actress was the special effects. She was relating to a leading man who wasn't there. "Doing the effects today would be nothing. Back then, passing a syringe to an invisible David McCallum would take half a day's work. These effects would be checked right after shooting on a video recorder on the set. They had to be sure that the invisible man wasn't casting shadows or that shadows weren't falling on him. We'd often do a small piece of business over and over. It would take 75 takes at least. Forget acting! We were exhausted by the time the technical stuff was completed. It was frustrating, and the cost was astronomical."

Producer Robert O'Neill agrees. "Because of the mechanical and physical limitations, there were many disappointments. At first, it sounded like The Invisible Man was going to be a lot of fun. I thought we'd have a tremendous action show. We also had David McCallum, who had been popular on The Man from U.N.C.L.E., and he wanted to recapture some of that magic. Problem was, unless you have a really big budget, science fiction shows are hard to produce. Networks generally don't want to pay the added expense for the technical things necessary. Back then, we used the blue screen process, which was very complex and time-consuming. It became a tremendous problem for the cameramen, directors and crew, especially on such a tight budget."

Working with special effects was nothing new for O'Neill. He had previously produced the ESP series The Sixth Sense. "Steve Bochco had written the 90-minute Invisible Man film, and someone got the notion to make it into a series. By this time, Bochco and Harve Bennett were busy on other things. Universal came after me and Leslie Stevens. We were the firemen they brought in at the ninth inning. Science fiction wasn't my forte, but since I had done Sixth Sense, Universal felt I could handle all of the trick things on Invisible Man."

The other challenge O'Neill faced was the basic concept. "It was very frustrating because we were dealing with a very narrow parameter. Since David was supposed to be wearing a mask to hide his invisibility, we were faced with, 'How do you make a mask react with sorrow, pain, grief and joy?' It wasn't that David, as a performer, wasn't being responsive to the audience. It was that when the mask came off, the joke was over. The audience is used to looking at someone's face. How can you show emotions on the face of someone who is invisible? We also faced the problem of telling the audience where the invisible man was. We'd have him brushing up against furniture and bumping into potted plants. He ended up as the clumsiest guy in the world! We also found that invisibility made him invincible. Unless he was walking in the sand or snow, he was unbeatable. The very nature of the show deterred the action because he was really a superman. It was hard to work in jeopardy."

"The show never had a chance," claims story editor Seeleg Lester. "My objections were to the tenor of the plots, which approximated The Six Million Dollar Man. It was a shame because the invisibility theme could have been an intriguing element. Instead, it was a device used to capture a James Bond villain or an international terrorist. The original premise was subverted into ordinary melodrama with predictable plots. I asked for my release from the series before the year was over."

Melinda Fee, however, felt a special magic. "Sometimes we did get off the track with the hero vs. villains," she says, "and that did become predictable and boring. But the series had a lot of charm and wisdom." As the series progressed, the humor flourished. As a guest on The Mike Douglas Show two weeks before The Invisible Man premiered, David McCallum commented with a hint of bewilderment, "We started out doing a very serious show, but it's turned into something of a comedy." The capper to the comedy turned out to be an episode titled "Pin Money." Inept bank robbers with Frankenstein monster masks give the invisible man some grief. The episode's writer, James Parriott, chuckles when he recalls the show. "The Invisible Man was my baptism by fire," he says. "I was writing The Six Million Dollar Man for Harve Bennett when he was having trouble with the Invisible Man. They were three weeks away from production, and they were getting behind schedule. He asked me to pitch some script ideas, and I started writing. So we were writing them and shooting them fast and furious.

"'Pin Money' turned out very funny. Toward the end, we felt that humor was working better than the other thing. But the premise of an invisible man is funny in itself. Look at the Chevy Chase film [Memoirs of an Invisible Man). Rather than a spine-tingling drama, they made a comedy out of it. We realized that there was something very funny about invisible people."

The series was axed in January 1976 after 12 segments. Harve Bennett, who describes star David McCallum as "one of the nicest actors with whom I have ever worked," feels that perhaps the audiences weren't ready for McCallum as a lead. "I loved David McCallum's work even before he did The Man from U.N.C.I.E.," Bennett says warmly. "David was also very caring, very considerate of the people who worked around him, very literate and very appreciative of material. He had been an enormous success as a supporting actor on U.N.C.L.E. He was the Mr. Spock on that show to Robert Vaughn's straight character. He added great color to the show. But when we put him in the role of a leading man on Invisible Man, it's conceivable that two things happened: First, people didn't want to see David as the leading man. They wanted him to be the 'color' man. Secondly-and this is a peculiar thing-we went in the face of an old saw in our TV industry. That is, British actors don't make it on TV as the leads. That was at the time. We felt the success of the Beatles had negated that old wives' tale."

Associate producer Richard Milton contends that McCallum was a scapegoat. "David got the blame when the network decided he was too foreign. It was the usual crap. David was a fine, talented actor. The failure of The Invisible Man had nothing to do with him. The format of the show just didn't work. They never got the concept down."

"The ratings weren't very good, but that could have been the time slot," says James Parriott. "I respected David enormously, and I thought he was well cast." "David was a fine actor," says Robert O'Neill. "The format just didn't happen." Melinda Fee believes the series fell victim to several factors: "The competition on the other networks, preemptions and politics at the network," she says. "Ironically, right after we were canceled, the ratings jumped. We were catching on-and we were dead in the water." She has fond memories of acting with her co-star.

"David was an absolute joy to work with," she says. "He was inventive, smart and funny. Many times he'd be on the set working out a script or technical problem. It was if he really were Dr. Westin. He helped without stepping on anybody's toes. He was never late or demanding. The entire cast and crew loved him. David was also marvelous in the humorous scenes with that dry British wit." Less than a year later, The Invisible Man returned (with the same production team) as The Gemini Man, starring Ben Murphy as a secret agent who can become invisible. "I was in Europe promoting The Invisible Man at the time," Fee recalls. "I never saw Gemini Man, but from what I understand, it was a direct rip-off of our show."

The Invisible Man hasn't faded entirely from TV screens. The series is occasionally rerun on cable and has enjoyed success in Europe. "My real regret was that the show didn't survive longer," says Fee. "It was a wonderful experience. I'd give anything to do it again!"

CAST NOTES

David McCallum (Dan): Born 1933. This Scottish-born actor was popular as secret agent Illya Kuryakin on The Man from U.N.C.L.E. (1964-68). In the 1970s, he starred in the British series Sapphire and Steel.

Melinda Fee (Kate): This Los Angeles-born actress was busy in daytime TV in the 1970s (The Guiding Light) and in TV movies of the 1980s (The Aliens Are Coming).

Craig Stevens (Carlson): Born 1918. Stevens is best known as TV's Peter Gunn (1958-1961). "Craig Stevens was a true gentleman," says Melinda Fee. "He had a dry wit, and he'd make subtle cracks which were appreciated by all."

INVISIBLE MAN, THE (1984)

Dr. Griffin, a mad scientist turns his scientific brilliance to bad ends, for power and destruction. Embarking on a personnel regime of terror, he becomes a homicidal maniac, invisible morally as well as physically. A fugitive, a lonely and pathetic outcast, his acts lead ultimately to his own self-destruction.

Originally intended as a Sunday tea time serial, the Invisible Man was upgraded from the family classics slot to a weekday mid-evening one, where it became a solid success for the former DOCTOR WHO combo of producer Barry Letts and script editor Terrence Dicks. Frank Middlemass co-starred as Griffin's unwilling and untrustworthy helper, the tramp Thomas Marvel, and David Gwillim appeared as the invisible man's old colleague Dr. Samuel Kemp who is forced to shelter Griffin and listens, horrified and fascinated, to the story of how he discovered the secret of invisibility.

The third of television's Invisible Man series, was, in effect, the first - a stylish staged six part BBC adaptation of H.G. Wells's original 1897 novel. The series was dramatised by James Andrew Hall, who based the dramatisation on the original H.G. Wells novel. The director was Brian Lighthill and Terrence Dicks was the script editor, the visual effects designer was John Brace, video effects supervisor was Dave Jervis and the designer was Don Giles. The music was performed by Stephen Deutsch. The series was first shown on BBC1 and has never been repeated since. The producer was Barry Letts, the script editor was Terrence Dicks, visual effects designer was John Brace, visual effects supervisor Dave Jervis and designer Don Giles, the music was created by Stephen Deutsch.

The Invisible Man is a six-part television serial based on the science fiction/fantasy novella by H. G. Wells, screened by the BBC in the UK throughout September and October 1984. It was produced as part of the BBC 1 Classic Serial strand, which incorporated numerous television adaptations of classic novels screened in serial form on Sunday afternoons. Starring Pip Donaghy in the title role, the series follows the same plot as the original book, of a deranged scientist who discovers a formula by which to make himself invisible, but is driven to insanity by his inability to reverse the formula and is evoked to use his invisibility to terrorize those around him. Out of all the numerous film and TV versions of H. G. Wells' book, this remains to date the most faithful to the original text.

Although originally intended to be screened on Sunday afternoons like the BBC's other classic serials, it was instead shown in a Tuesday evening slot after the BBC's Head of Drama declared the serial was "too frightening for a Sunday afternoon... far too horrific". The public reception to the serial was less than enthusiastic, with viewing figures averaging 7.4 million with an overall appreciation index of only 49. Viewing figures declined steadily as the series progressed, with many complaining that the storyline's pacing was too slow, the episodes were too short, and that the novel was not well-suited to this form of serialization, many arguing that its faithfulness was its main weakness. A Television Audience Broadcasting Report from BARB data stated that "The series was often considered slow and boring... and unredeemed by the quality of the acting or the production". Pip Donaghy's performance, nevertheless, was described as "well-received". Despite not being particularly successful at home, the serial achieved surprising success abroad, particularly in the Soviet Union where it was reported to have attracted over 64 million viewers. The serial was never repeated by the BBC, and remained almost forgotten until a DVD release in 2005.

Although the plotline of the serial is extremely close to that of Wells' original text, there are several key differences:

The novel's storyline takes place over a period of several months, beginning in mid-winter and ending in early spring. The serial reduces the timespan to only one month, and the whole story takes place in mid-summer. According to the scriptwriter James Andrew Hall this was done to emphasize the unusual nature of the Invisible Man's initial appearance, appearing completely wrapped up in spite of the summer heat. The village of Iping is actually situated on the border between Sussex and Kent, which was also the case in Wells' novel, but in the serial the village is relocated to the border between Somerset and Devon.

Recovering from the gunshot wound, he tells Kemp the story of how after leaving university, he discovered the formula for making himself invisible, but wound up alone and stray on the streets of London, struggling to survive in the open while unseen by those around him. He has been trying ever since to reverse the experiment, but he has other plans which involve Kemp himself.

1 - 6 THE HUNTING OF THE INVISIBLE MAN

When Griffin reveals that he intends to begin a Reign of Terror and terrorize the vicinity with his invisibility, Kemp realizes that Griffin has been driven insane and summons the police. Feeling betrayed, Griffin announces that Kemp will be the first man killed in the Reign of Terror. The police, together with Kemp, concoct a plan to stop Griffin before it is too late.

INVISIBLE RAY, THE

This fast-moving chapterplay features Bracy as the mineralogist who discovers a substance which emits a powerful radiation dangerous to human beings. He seals samples in a lead casket, sends one key to a friend, Professor Stone, and hangs another round his little daughter's neck. Her father having disappeared, presumed dead, she grows up in an orphanage with the name Mystery (Clifford). Later, she meets the professor and falls in love with his son (Sherrill).

The two are relentlessly pursued by a gang called the Crime Creators who are after the lethal substance hoping to fashion it into a weapon to threaten the world. The couple is protected and aided by an enigmatic figure called Deaux (who turns out to be Mystery's father, alive and well, played by Bracy) and a clairvoyant (Uzzell) who turns out to be her mother. Their friend John Haldane (Davis) is revealed to be the villain.

As an independent production, reviewers didn't pay much attention to the serial when it was released and it doesn't appear to have enjoyed the success it deserved although it was at least as good as the majority of product that emerged from the main companies. Pollard remained a minor director, achieving some box-office success with The Leacher Pushers (1922), a boxing drama starring Reginald Denny. The serial was produced by Jesse J. Golburg.

IRON KING

AKA: AIAN KINGU

Shizuka Gentaro is a happy-go-lucky youth who just so happens to also be a member of Japan's Special Security Defense Force and is entrusted with the country's defense. Gentaro travels Japan searching for those who would try to threaten the Island. On his journey he meets the feeble and clumsy Kirishima Goro. Goro appears to just be a friendly fellow traveler but is secretly also a member of the Japanese Security Defense Force. He was sent to look after Gentaro during his journey. Goro also has another stunning secret. Fitted with a computer control mechanism in his body, he can alter his genetic structure to become the super cyborg giant "Iron King". Together Gentaro and Goro (as Iron King) battle against those that would threaten Japan's National security.

Iron King was Nobuhiro Sha's (Nobuhiro Group) second foray into creating a Tokusatsu/Sci-Fi drama, the first being Silver Kamen (Silver Mask; Nippon Gendai Kikaku, 1971). In fact Iron Mask's costume bears more than a passing resemblance to Silver Kamen.

Singer/Actor Ishibashi Shoji has starred in numerous movies including the live action adaptation of Ashita No Joe (Tomorrow's Joe; Nikkatsu, 1972) and the popular Tobidase! Seishun (Go For It! Youth; Teatoru Pro, 1973). Some of Ishibashi's singles include the songs Tetkyo O Wataru To Namida Ga Hajimaru (The Tears Start When I Cross The Train Tracks) and Yowake No Teishaba (Daylight Station).

Hamada Mitsuo was a regular in many of Nikkatsu Studio's Seishun (Youth) oriented movies during the 60's. Hamada has recently been seen in episodes of Ultraman Gaia (TBS/Tsuburaya, 1998).

Morikawa Chieko appeared as Midorikawa Ruriko in the first half of the Original Kamen Rider series (Toei, 1971).

Fans of the immensely popular Kikaider series (Toei, 1972) will easily recognize Izu Hajime as Dr. Komiyoji.

Hota Shigeru (AKA Hota Shizou) is another Kamen Rider alumnus who played General Monster in the Kamen Rider (Sky Rider) series (Toei, 1980)

The show Iron King is unique in that while the main character Gentaro is technically the main hero of the show, it is the sidekick Goro who is the real hero.

Goro shares some similarities to Superman's alter ego character of Clark Kent.

Charectors

Shizuka Gentaro

Twenty Three Year Old (23) Shizuka Gentaro is a member of Japan's Special Security Defense Force. He was formally a technician at the Japanese Science Institute. Not wanting to wait for trouble to happen, carefree and jovial Gentaro decides to travel Japan looking for any signs of trouble or danger. Dresses up as a cowboy complete with chaps. He is a master of several martial art styles and has even been given the alias Gen No Ji (The Bow's String). Can sometimes be very cold and calculating but is very happy-go-lucky most of the time.

His only weapon is his miraculous Iron Belt which is a multipurpose gadget that can be utilized in the following ways:

1 - Used as a binding weapon and whip. Magically elongating his Iron Belt Gentaro can use it to bind enemies, even those that are several hundred feet tall! It can also be used as a conventional whip weapon and can be snapped with blinding speed.

2 - The Iron Belt can also be stiffened into a handheld stick weapon and used like a sword.

3 - In stick mode the Iron Belt can fire explosive blasts from its hilt. These explosives blasts are strong enough to stun enemies several feet tall.

Goro/Iron King

Kirishima Goro is a member of Japan's Special Security Defense Force. He is a special operative of the Force charged to secretly keep an eye on Gentaro. While he is very skilled operative and fearless fighter, he plays the part of a bumbling, feeble and weak minded traveler, complete with mountain climbing gear.

When the need arises however, Goro can become the invincible super giant known as Iron King by yelling out the command Iron Shock and touching the metal pins in his hat (which is oddly enough called his Turning Hat). Iron King is several hundred feet tall and has a host of amazing powers including super strength, near invulnerability, deadly fighting prowess and spectacular acrobatic skills. His main weapons are his Kyurot Gun and Laser Gun which are able to devastate and blow apart his enemies.

Unfortunately, amid all these incredible powers Iron King has two major weaknesses:

1 - Since Goro expends so much Psychic/Mental energy when transforming into Iron King he is unable to keep that form for more than one minute (sometimes sources say three minutes), after which he is forced to revert back to his human form. The time limit is denoted by several of Iron King's jewel ornamentations after 30 seconds his breast jewel (Lamp Iron Star) starts to flash. After another 20 seconds his throat ornament (Lamp King Star) starts to flash. Finally, his helmet jewel, the Iron Top starts to flash the final 10 second countdown.

2 - Since the transfer into Iron King is so taxing on his human body, Goro must consume massive amounts of water after each transformation. If he does not hydrate after transformation then he is severely weakened to the point of unconsciousness.

Iron King was created through the experiments of kindly Prof. Tsushima. Goro was implanted with a computer system that is responsible for altering his genetic structure into the cyborg Iron King. Goro keeps his true identity a highly guarded secret and goes out of his way to fool Gentaro.

Iron King's allies include:

Prof. Tsushima - Prof. Tsushima is Gentaro's foster father and Goro's teacher. Prof. Tsushima was the one who created the technology that turned Goro into Iron King.

Fujimori Noriko ' Noriko is another agent of the Japanese Defense Force. She is quite a serious and capable agent. She carried the 'Seven Tool' weaponry used by Goro and Gentaro during their fight against the Insect Humanoids. Gentaro and Goro affectionately called her 'Tenko', which she disliked.

Takamura Yukiko Was one of the Shiranui Clan's 'Ten Shadows'. Was sent to secretly spy on Gentaro and Goro, yet she eventually fell in love with Gentaro and betrayed her 'brothers'. She died as a result of her betrayal. Dressed up as an Indian princess. Carried a white guitar.

Shiranui Ichizoku (The Shiranui Family/Clan) - Episodes 1-10

Descendants of Japan's aborigines. Two Thousand years ago, their family/clan had been exiled and banished by the Yamamoto Imperial Court. Swearing revenge against all Japan, the Shiranui have for generations, secretly plotted to take back control of the country. Using advanced science and mysticism, they created a cadre of nine super robots which they hoped would aid them in conquering Japan. Their leader is the eldest son of the Shiranui Clan, Shiranui Taro who also controls the most powerful of the robots, Gold Fire. His nine other siblings each control additional robots via a hand-held control device. The other brothers include:

Shu Ichiro who commands Vacuumira.

Shu Jiro who commands Jairogesu.

Shu Saburo who commands Double Satan.

Shu Yonro who commands Devil Tiger.

Shu Goro who commands Monster Zero.

Shu Rokuo who commands Black Knight.

Shu Shichiro who commands Bronze Demon.

Shu Hachiro who commands Monster Bird.

Shu Kyuro who commands Silver Rider.

The tenth sibling is Takamura Yukiko, the lone sister who did not command any mecha. They were also referred to as the Shiranui "Ten Shadows". All the siblings were masters of disguise and frequently assumed other identities when on missions.

The Shiranui Clan also made use of a band of Ninja followers who acted as their bodyguards and henchmen. These underlings wore futuristic ninja costumes with full armored face masks. They were known to carry an assortment of weaponry and were highly agile.

Maboroshi Heidan (The Phantom Corp) - Episodes 10-18

Descendants of Japan's aborigines. Two Thousand years ago, their family/clan had been exiled and banished by the Yamamoto Imperial Court. Swearing revenge against all Japan, the Shiranui have for generations, secretly plot to emulate "Darth Vader's" helmet mask [which it predates by a good five years].

The Maboroshi Heidan (or more formerly known as the Tokuritsu Maboroshi Yatou [Phantom Opposition Party]) is another cult faction that also sought to take control of Japan and initiate a revolution. Like the Shiranui Clan, they were also political exiles who were once banished from the country. Their figurehead leader was the megalomaniac known as Maboroshi Gekko (Phantom Moonlight). Agents of the Maboroshi Heidan were given names based on the ancient Japanese lunar calendar:

Maboroshi Mutsuki (Phantom January)
 Maboroshi Kisaragi (Phantom February)
 Maboroshi Yayohi (Phantom March)
 Maboroshi Utzuki (Phantom April)
 Maboroshi Satsuki (Phantom May)
 Maboroshi Minatzuki (Phantom June)
 Maboroshi Futzuki (Phantom July)
 Maboroshi Hatzuki (Phantom August)
 Maboroshi Nagatsuki (Phantom September)
 Maboroshi Kanatzuki (Phantom October)
 Maboroshi Shimotsuki (Phantom November)
 Maboroshi Shihasu (Phantom December)

They were collectively known as the "Maboroshi Jyunin Shu" (The Phantom Twelve Clan).

Similar to the Shiranui Clan, they also mastered the technology of cybernetics and created an army of robots, which they built to resemble monstrous creatures of legend. They would control these "Tetsu Douji" (Steel Brethren) with control devices shaped like human skulls.

Titania & The Insect Humanoids- Episodes 18-26

The "Titania" are ghostly invaders from outer space who are hell bent on conquering the world. While humanoid in form, they possess ghostly "smiling" translucent faces and are able to grow to giant form. They can effortlessly control humans through mind control and have even assumed the bodies of their victims. They are able to fly about like bats and can create huge gusts of wind through their flowing capes. When provoked or attacked, they can also assume monstrous insect forms. In these Insect Humanoid forms they possess a number of special powers and attacks

Original music by Shunsuke Kikuchi, Special Effects by Kiyoshi Suzuki (special effects supervisor), Koichi Takano (special effects supervisor).

IT'S ABOUT TIME

The programme's first format had a few similarities to Gilligan's Island. During the first format of It's About Time, Mac and Hector, a pair of American astronauts, pilot their small space capsule through some weird turbulence and find themselves returning to Earth in the time of the cavemen. They find themselves somewhat reluctantly accepted into a society of cavemen run by the Boss in a dictator-like fashion. The astronauts befriend a family of cave people consisting of Gronk and Shad along with their two children, teenage daughter Mlor and her little brother Breer. In a moronic fashion the two astronauts attempt to ready their space ship so they can return to the future while attempting to not anger the cave people by breaking one of their various taboos or confusing them with modern technology.

Unlike the castaways on Gilligan's Island, Hector and Mac did manage to fix their ship and use it to return home, to the 20th century where the revamped version of It's About Time was set. Mac and Hector find out too late that they are not the only people on the ship during its return flight. Gronk, Shad, Breer and Mlor have stowed away onboard the ship and find themselves in the 20th century where they get to experience first-hand all the marvels of 20th century technology they had only heard about from the astronauts. They move in with Mac and Hector. Mac and Hector take it upon themselves to not reveal the cave people's true nature to anyone and have their hands full coping with and covering for the cave people who are having more trouble adapting to 20th century life than the astronauts did adapting to prehistoric times. The new format was not any more successful than the first and It's About Time was canned after the completion of its first season.

This show appeared on CBS on Sundays from 7:30-8:00 p.m. Coming from the fertile mind of Sherwood Schwartz the man responsible for such television classics as Gilligan's Island and The Brady Bunch. It's About Time is often considered to be one of the worst TV series of all time. A reputation that is not totally undeserved. It's About Time only lasted one season yet it had two very different formats. The series was totally revamped about two thirds of the way through its brief run. The series ran through two very different formats, the first was for episode 1.1 to 1.18 and 1.26, and the second was for episodes 1.19 - 1.25.

One of numerous television programs mostly remembered for its theme song ("It's about time, it's about space..."), It's About Time was the brainchild of Sherwood Schwartz, the man behind Gilligan's Island. Schwartz served as executive producer of the series and, as he had with Gilligan's Island, co-wrote the catchy theme song.

Running for a single season of thirty episodes from 1966 to 1967 It's About Time told the story of two American astronauts thrown back in time to a prehistoric period filled with cavemen and, contrary to archeological evidence, dinosaurs. Frank Aletter played Mac, captain of the space capsule Scorpio, and Jack Mullany played Hector, a bumbling lieutenant.

Thankfully, the Scorpio had landed only a short walk from a tribe of somewhat friendly cave people who spoke broken English. Mac and Hector were befriended by a family of cave people, headed by Gronk (Joe E. Ross). Imogene Coca, best known for her work on Your Show of Shows played his wife, Shadd. Their two children, daughter Mlor and son Breer, were played by Robyn Grace and Pat Cardi, respectively (Grace was credited as Mary Graham Grace during the second half of the series).

Unfortunately, their space capsule was badly damaged and would require months to fix. Thus, Mac and Hector decided to make a home for themselves among the cave people. They tried to use their twentieth century knowledge to make life a little easier for themselves and the cave people.

For example, they fashioned a crude door for Gronk's cave, which allowed Gronk to become controller of day and night. The sun, according to Gronk, was a "great big ball of fire" that he could block out with the door.

Initially, episodes followed Mac and Hector as they got themselves in trouble with Boss (Cliff Norton), the leader of the cave people, who forced them to become members of the tribe by stealing a dinosaur tooth (and

JAKE 2.0

"The ultimate human upgrade"

Jake Foley is a computer technician for the NSA who secretly longs for a chance to work on the field. Circumstance puts him in a top secret laboratory, in the middle of a shootout between security guards and a saboteur. During the battle, a vial containing an experimental serum explodes, covering Jake with shrapnel. But it turns out that the serum is actually nanomites, microscopic submachines that heal his injuries and alter his body. Upon discovering his new mind-boggling powers, Jake begins to operate at an atomic level, possessing superhuman strength, lightning-fast speed, heightened hearing, magnified vision and the ability to communicate telepathically with computers. The NSA soon realizes Jake is an untested asset and forms a Special Ops team with him at its core. As Jake finally realizes his dream of being of being a field operative, he must also contend with the return of would-be girlfriend Sarah Heywood, who is involved in a Congressional investigation which threatens to expose his operation.

This rather average sci-fi show premiered in 2003, and never got the support it needed from television executives to be successful, the show was cancelled after only 16 episodes, with the last four not airing in the US. However the last 4 episodes have been seen in the UK.

Most superheros are real big on the big screen, like Blade, Spider-Man, DareDevil, and Neo from The Matrix. With the success of Smallville, and the not so successful Birds Of Prey on the smallscreen. I guess T.V. needs a new superhero. It starts out with Jake Foley(Christopher Gorham) a young twenty something repairman, who dreams of being a secret agent. One day gets exposed to some dangerous chemicals after a labortary accident. The chemicals give him amazing superpowers. Then he is asked to be a spy for the government. I hope this show will be around for a while. I hope it does not suffer like Birds Of Prey did. Christopher Gorham gives a good charmingly awkward performance as Jake. The show so far has great action and great effects. Keep it up.

JAMIE

Jamie discovers a magic carpet in a junk shop and learns its secret from the mysterious Mr. Zed who prompts him to make his journeys back into the past. Jamie would sit on his carpet which would rise then whirl round faster and faster, flipping back through time.

Mr. Zed remained an enigma. Nobody could say what age he was - sometimes he was young, sometimes he was incredibly old. But he was certainly 'not of this world'...

Jamie was a 13 year old who travelled through time on a magic carpet, meeting such notable historical characters as Guy Fawkes, Nelson, Samuel Pepys, Robert the Bruce and William the Conqueror. In the course of the 13 part series (which filled a corner of ITV's Sunday tea time schedules), Jamie tries to warn the gunpowder plotters of impending treacheries, joins Nelson's crew at the Battle of Trafalgar, meets his father as a young boy, travels to old Baghdad and 19th Century London, fights the great fire of London, learns the legend of Robert the Bruce and the spider, and finally, goes back to 1066. On some of his sorties he was joined by his best friend Tink.

The producer for the series was Antony Kearey, executive producer was Francis Coleman and the various directors included Antony Kearey, Geoffrey Nethercott, Bryan Izzard, John Reardon and David Coulter. The first run for the series was on LWT.

JAN PERSON

AKA: TOKUSO ROBO JAN PERSON

AKA: SPECIAL DETECTIVE ROBOT JAN PERSON

AKA: SPECIAL INVESTIGATOR ROBO

Jan Person (Komine) and his partner Gan Gibson (Torii) are robot cops, fighting to keep three separate crime syndicates in line. JP's arsenal of weaponry includes the Break Knuckle (a fist that flies off his arm) and a small cannon concealed in his kneecap, while GG's weapon of choice is a giant bazooka called the Spindle Cannon. In times of trouble they can hit their power-up buttons for extra energy, in an early morning kids kung fu show that nevertheless gained a small adult following, drawn to the strangely camp idea of a superhero in purple battle armor assisted by a motorcycling deputy dressed in a cowboy outfit.

JP began life as an attempt to buck contemporary trends in Japanese super-hero shows, starting with the substitution of the "-man" suffix of ULTRAMAN with the clumsy but well meaning "-person". The hero also seems to have been designed as a loner, only to have various sidekicks forced upon him by merchandising concerns. Compare to similar Robocop clones such as JIBAN and SHIDER and the following year's equally purple BLUE SWAT. Baed on an idea by "Saburo Yade," and with the music from Kei Wakakusa. Theme - "Hitori de Doko e Yuko" (Where Are You Going All Alone?).

Produced by Jun Kaji and Nagafumi Hori.

Unlike some other metal heroes that are either humans or robots with an alternate human appearance, Janperson is a scientifically created robot, and as far as i know, Janperson only has it's robot appearance. It seems that Special Investigator Robo Janperson was created as a remake of the older show "Robot Detective K". Both plot a robot detective engaged in a battle against an evil group, but as Robot Detective K is apparently older than the first Metal Hero show, and by many aspects doesn't actually fit in the genre anyway, i think that Janperson just caught up with the Metal Heroes trend as a way of brushing up the robot investigator concept. Interestingly enough, Janperson came a few years after Mobile Detective Jiban, which also features a robot detective; but there's apparently no connection between the latter and either Robot Detective K or Janperson.

Janperson usually appears with a smoked screen that cover most of his "face" (his robotic face, that is). Take the shield off, and you'll see a weird metallic face that is very distinctive to japanese robots, to me. Janperson, smoked screen version actually looks as a regular Metal Hero, but the humanoid face makes it closer to "Robot Detective K". The "naive" fell of that face, and the fact that it somehow resembles a greek statue bring me back to the "super robots" era, in the 70's and early 80's, when several of the colorful giant robots that were the trend then had this kind of static face imbedded in their robotic head.

I couldn't say for sure what's the idea behing that design, that captivates me, but i've always been interested in this japanese tradition to include a greek-stature-like face in fantasy high-tech SF robots. As a matter of fact, it's also interesting to notice that no real robot actual is given such a face; since most of the real robot projects are design with human interaction and social acceptance in mind, so this would emphasis the fact that the greek statue face refeers to a mythological fascination idea, something close to the golem myth. Nobody would ever want to have a golem at home, i guess; but picturing one in a SF show brings an interesting twist to the robot approach.

As every metal hero, Janperson comes with his share of hig-tech equipment including weaponry and vehicles. His car, named "Dark Jaycar" (there again, as Robot Detective K's car is named "Joker", one can think of a reference) contains a detachable helicopter called "Sky Jaycar". The Dark Jaycar and the Sky Jaycar have a maximum speed of respectively 700 km/h and 1800km/h. High tech that certainly is! As for the arsenal, the car is equiped with a cannon called Land Jaycar. Hand weapons include the laser gun Jande Thingy (firing rate of 95 shots per second), and a mini robot called All Zico can combine with the Jande Thingy Gun to form the powerful Thingy Cannon. More weapons and secret features are also built in Janperson's body (just like Robot Detective K, as a matter of fact!)

At some point of the series, Janperson has to face the robot Gungibson, created by the criminal group Super Guild in order to destroy Janperson. But after Janperson eventually save him, Gungibson changed side and turns into a justice fighter. Gungibson is equipped with a motorbike named "Go Slayer", the laser gun "Bronson" and the "GunVovler" revolver. "Ok baby!" is one of his recurrent quotes. I've also heard of a character named Billgoldy (in red in the middle of the picture, having quite a hard time meeting the 2 other guys), which is apparently on the evil side. I could not say more about this guy...

The enemies : Four enemy organisations appear in the show :

The enemies : Four enemy organisations appear in the show :

- the "Robot Sindyate Guild" (Led by the Cyborg Leader "Ben Fujinami")
- The Armada Of Robots Neo Guild (leader is Ben Fujinami's older brother "George Makabe")
- the SS-N (Super Sciense Network) organized by the diabolic "Reiko Ayanokouji"
- The Consuelon Tatewaki that is commanded by the president "Ryuzabouro Tatewaki"

Update! I've received additionnal informations on the show from Tsubasa, from Japan. He gave me a few correction to the information above, and he also gave me interesting information about the actors.

President Ryuzabouro Tatewaki is played by Syun Sugata. Shun Sugata appears in such films as "the Last Samurai", or Tarantino's "KILL BILL".

George Makabe is played Kazuoki Takahashi, who also played as "Syo Hayate/Change-Griffin" in the Super Sentai show "Lightning Team Changemen (Dengeki-sentai Changemen)"; and also played the "Hakkou Kita" character in the Metal Hero show "Supermachine Metalder (Choujinki Metalder)" under the actor's name Hiroshi Kawai.

Reiko Ayanokouji is acted by Atsuko Takahata, who is a famous and popular actress in Japan.

JAPAN SINKS

AKA: NIHON CHINBOTSU

Mini-sub pilot Toshio Onodera (Murano) leaves late for an onservation dive near the foot of Mount Fuji, thanks to the arrogant behavior of his client Dr. Tadokoro (Kobayashi). While the crew observe strange undersea fissures in the seabed of Izu, the area is struck by an Earthquake. Toshio's land based fiancee Etsuko (Mariko Mochizuki) is closer to the epicentre and dies under a pile of rubble.

While the depressed Toshio blames himself for her death (why!?), a second earthquake in the Himeji region causes consternation amount the scientists. Thought earthquakes are nothing unusual in Japan, Himeji has always been an earthquake free zone, while recent tremors have even caused an entire island to dispear benaeth the waves. After futher investigations in Toshio's submarine, Tadokoro predicts that the new seismic disturbances threaten o plunge all of Japan beneath the sea.

Few people believe him but Takokora convinces Toshio by taking his vessel below crush depth to observe more strange phenomena. Back in Tokyo, Toshio is introduced to wealthy beauty Reiko (Yumi) and appears to begin a new life and a new romance. But the professor's predicate - Japan is going to sink and the only issue now is how long the island has left. The Japanese, a race long accustomed to earthquakes, tidal waves and volcanoes, must come to terms with the fact that their sacred nation, supposedly created by the gods themselves, will shortly disappear.

Though some refuse to leave, others become invovled in a desperate effort to convince foreign nations to take in literally millions of refugees. Meanwhile the quakes and eruptions occur with increasing frequency, bringing a few new disaster each week.

Sakyo Komatus, creator of MY TIME TRAVEL JOURNEY WITH MARI and sometime scenarist on ARMY OF THE APES, established his reputation as a preeminent science fiction author with the publication of Japan Sinks novel in 1973. A seroes of coincidences ensured it received a massive media attention, commencing with an unexpected volcanic eruption in Japan on its day of publication and continuing with the economic catastrophe of the early 1970s "oil stocks" that threatened to bankrupt the nation.

The population of Japan was also jumpy about the "next big disaster", as 1973 was the 50th anniversary of the Great Tokyo earthquake (see 100 years). As history was to testify, however, the next big thing earthquake to hit Japan was still twenty years away. A movie soon followd from Toho in 1973, released in bowdlerized form in the U.S. as Tital Wave in 1975, and this increased exposure helped gain the novel several foreign language deals. A terrifying study of a nation's lost psyche to the Japanese and an entertaining does of schadenfreude for most other nations, Japan Sinks became a high-profile export in the age of disaster movies, once leading Brain Aldiss to describe Komatsu as the most widely read SF author in the world. Exploiting know-how from the earlier film version, this television remake nevertheless has an enormous budget for it's time - half a billion yen, of which 40% went to special effects and, we might cruelly suggest, about two bucks to haircuts. The story also released in a 1973 manga adaptation from the Takao Saito, creator of Golgo 13 and BAROM ONE.

JASON OF STAR COMMAND

Star Command was a section of the Space Academy where top secret work was done and Jason was one of the Star Command's best agents. In charge of Star Command was Commander Canarvin during the first season. Canarvin was replaced by the blue skinned Commander Stone in the second season. Other high ranking Star Command personnel were: Professor E. J Parsafoot, an eccentric inventor and Captain Nicole Davidoff a top computer expert.

Nicole left after the first season and was replaced by the super strong alien Samantha as the series' heroine. They were aided by a pair of robots: Wiki, one of Parsafoot's inventions, was a palm sized robot capable of doing almost anything and Peepo who had previously been on Space Academy. The villain throughout both seasons of the series was Dragos. Dragos was a one eyed megalomaniac who became obsessed with destroying Jason and Star Command. In the second season Dragos was aided by a group of confederate aliens, with descriptive names such as: Bug Face and Fish Face.

In America it originally didn't even merit its own slot and was seen as part of the animated series Tarzan and the Super Seven. Over here it limped through the children's schedules in just three ITV regions, Central (1982), Yorkshire and Tyne Tees. It also went out on S4C in the mid-Eighties, as Garan, Gwarchodwr Y Gofod - Garan, Guardian of the Galaxy.

Jason of Star Command was the most expensive Saturday morning TV series ever produced. It was the last of the live action Saturday morning adventure series that enjoyed a brief revival in the mid to late 1970's. The series was produced by Filmation, the studio where Space Academy had been produced the year before. The ties between the two series were much more than being made at the same studio. Jason of Star Command was set on the Space Academy. Thus sets, miniatures and props from SPACE ACADEMY could be used for Jason of Star Command. Production values were very high and it is very unlikely that a series this ambitious will ever be seen on Saturday morning again.

During its first season Jason of Star Command was buried as the only live action segment of the 90 minute series Tarzan and the Super 7, all of the other segments were animated cartoons. The first season consisted of what was essentially one long 15 chapter serial, although many of the chapters in the serial were somewhat episodic. The serial had Dragos make his first attempt at destroying Space Academy and then gain both minor victories and suffer setbacks at the hands of Jason and his friends before he was finally defeated, but not captured.

Jason of Star Command returned for a second season on its own no longer a part of the Tarzan and the Super 7 package. The episodes were also expanded in length from 20 minutes to a full half hour. In the second season Dragos returned and wreaked more havoc for Jason and his friends for twelve episodes consisting of 4 sets of three loosely connected adventures. Both seasons of Jason of Star Command were thankfully spared the heavy handed moralising and lessons that were present in almost every other 1970's Saturday morning series, including other Filmation shows like: Ark II and Space Academy.

Jason of Star Command's year on the air (1980-81) consisted entirely of reruns of earlier episodes. The first season episodes have been rerun in a compilation form, with two episodes being placed in a half hour time slot without the end credits and preview from the first episode in the pair and without the opening credits and recap of the second.

Notable mainly for the presence in some episodes of James 'Scotty' Doohan as Jason's commander, the series' general format was three part stories with cliff-hanger endings to each episode. The first UK premier for the series was on BBC Wales as part of Yr Awr Fawr (The Big Hour), a Sunday morning children's program. The series was run on CBS in the US.

JEKYLL

It's 2007 and there's a new Dr Jekyll, with an old problem - Mr Hyde. But they have a deal - a body share - and an impossible life is somehow lived.

What Hyde doesn't know: Jekyll is married. There's a wife and two children he'll do anything to protect from his dark side. With all the resources of modern technology, and the best surveillance hardware, he's determined to keep his dark side in line. He's done a deal with his own devil.

What neither of them knows: an ancient organisation, with limitless wealth and power, is monitoring their every move, and a plan over a century in the making is coming to fruition.

The return of Dr Jekyll is no accident.

Jekyll is a BBC television drama serial. The story draws parallels to Robert Louis Stevenson's novel The Strange Case of Dr Jekyll and Mr Hyde, but is not based on the novel, although the book features as a plot point. The story is updated to a modern setting with Jekyll using contemporary technology to try and keep Hyde dormant and protect his family from the darker side of his personality. Little is Jekyll aware that he is being monitored by a secret society and that he and Hyde are part of a terrifying centuries-old plot.

The six episode serial is being produced by the independent production company Hartswood Films, in association with Stagescreen Productions, for BBC One with some co-production funding from the BBC America cable television channel in the United States.[1] It is written by Steven Moffat. The directors are Douglas Mackinnon and Matt Lipsey.

Cast and characters

James Nesbitt as Tom Jackman - Dr Tom Jackman's life is in tatters. He's been playing host to an uninvited guest - a dangerous alter-ego. Desperate to protect his family from his dark side, Jackman has been forced to leave his old life behind and strike a diabolical deal with his own devil.

James Nesbitt as Mr Hyde - Savage and carnivorous, Hyde's everything that the repressed Jackman's not; a narcissistic newborn in a grown man's body. Despite inhabiting the same body, Hyde is much stronger and faster on his feet than Jackman, and he's getting stronger. He also has darker hair and a different hairline, and distinctive black eyes. He is also said to be taller than Jackman. Every time Jackman falls asleep or gets angry - Hyde threatens to take over. He won't be chained up forever.

Gina Bellman as Claire Jackman - Claire's idyllic existence with her two sons and doting husband, Tom, is shattered by an ancient family curse. She's oblivious to the fact that Tom can turn into a terrifying psychopath in the blink of an eye.

Denis Lawson as Peter Syme - Peter is Tom's closest friend and confidant. He's a scientist in genetics who isn't what he seems at all.

Michelle Ryan as Katherine Reimer - Katherine is Tom's enigmatic and dedicated assistant. A psychiatric nurse, Katherine is the only person other than Tom who knows about his secret double life. She has the task of helping him lead it: the servant of two masters but only one man.

Meera Syal as Miranda Callendar - Miranda is the private detective who stumbles not only on the truth about Tom and his alter ego, but on a conspiracy over a century old. She must convince Tom that there are more frightening things in this modern world than Mr Hyde.

Mark Gatiss will be appearing in the serial as Robert Louis Stevenson.

JULIA JEKYLL AND HARRIET HYDE

1 - 1 EPISODE ONE

Tom Jackman's life is in tatters. Recently, he's been playing host to an uninvited guest - a dangerous alter-ego. Desperate to protect his wife and children from his dark side, Tom's been forced to leave his old life behind and strike a deal with his own devil.

Tom's hired psychiatric nurse, Katherine Reimer, to oversee 'the change'.

Meanwhile, his wife, Claire, brandishes a large envelope full of photographs at him. She's hired a private detective to find out why he left his family and his job six months ago, with no explanation. Tom's secretly puzzled - there must be more photos. He clocks the name of the agency and then has to tear himself away - Hyde's coming, and Hyde must never meet Claire.

Later, Tom wakes up in a seedy flat with a prostitute, and no clue where he is.

Tom goes to visit the company he jacked in months ago and Peter Symes, his best friend. Tom tells him to advertise his research job as he's never coming back.

Despite a scheduled change due to happen, Tom realises he's a short distance from the detective agency and risks dropping in. Miranda Callender runs it and has suddenly come into a lot of money. But why was she paid off, by whom and why did she hold back some of the pictures?

The clock's striking seven - the night shift's begun. A mysterious man called Benjamin approaches Hyde, claiming to be his 'owner'.

The next day, Tom catches up with Miranda, determined to find out why's she been bribed and why people in black vans are following him. Suddenly another unscheduled change takes place. Unaware, Miranda mentions Tom's wife and kids to Hyde.

Pretending to be Tom's 'cousin Billy', Hyde befriends Claire and the kids.

The following day, Jackman's horrified to learn that his family's lives are at risk...

JEOPARDY

Jeopardy is about a group of eight kids from Scotland (Falkirk) and their teacher who go to Australia in search on Aliens, but things don't quite accordingly to plan. In Series One, the group go to Australia to look for aliens, where things get out off control. The kids find themselves alone, discovering that the park ranger and their teacher have suddenly disappeared. When they all finally get back together the kids and their teacher all vanish which leads us into Series Two in which they are finally rescued. However, David and Sarah are now missing, and Gerry is kept at a hospital. So the rest of the group go all around Australia to look for David and Sarah. When they find the missing duo, they all then find themselves back in Falkirk, Scotland, and invisible to everybody but themselves and David and Sarah, and that they have missed six weeks, so they go back to Australia to find out what happened to them. Once back in Australia they begin to vanish, one by one.

Jeopardy was a BAFTA award winning television series that ran for three series, from 2002 to 2004 on the BBC about a group of eight high-school students and their teacher who go from Falkirk, Scotland, to the Australian Outback to look for UFOs, where strange events occur. They are all given camcorders to record any sightings, and the series (much like the Blair Witch Project) makes extensive use of jerky, handheld photography supposedly from those cameras. It was acclaimed for being thoroughly gripping and said by some to be the best childrens program in many years. Each episode was 20 minutes long and ended on a cliffhanger, to be continued the next week.

Jeopardy started in 2001 on BBC 1, children's television. Right from the very first episode I was hooked its combination of suspense and thrilling drama reeled me in. In the first series we are introduced to a group of Scottish teenagers who with there schoolteacher go on a trip to search for alien activity in the Australian Outback. What they find is more than any one expected recording every move on their camcorders.

By the third and final series the group have gone from eight people to only six and are being threatened by an alien virus which is causing members of the team to disappear and find themselves mysteriously on a desert island. This is patrolled by the Australian authorities, who dont want anyone to find out what has been happening. On the strange and chilling experiences the group have they never actually met an "alien" but the music and outstanding acting make you believe there is something strange out to get them and it wont stop at nothing. The only thing you do see is the actions of the aliens. This is enough to get you SCARED!

The aliens have affected their lives in every way when they try and signal for help by writing S.O.S with stones in the ground they find the stones have been moved into a strange alien language. Every part of this children's drama makes you on the edge of your seat. Although a children's drama I think it could make a blockbuster film! The only criticism I have is that the series came only every two years which leaves you with a long wait. I could not imagine a person who could watch Jeopardy and not love it and not get sucked in for more.

Characters

Gerry Simmins (Steven Vidler) - (seasons 1-3) The middle aged teacher on the trip. He runs the UFO club, and has been a Ufologist ever since he saw a UFO fly past him back in Scotland.

David (Gordon McCorkell) - (seasons 1 and 3, with cameo appearances in 2) The 'boffin' on the trip, though he can get arrogant. He falls in love with Sarah.

Sarah (Kari Corbett) - (seasons 1 and 3, with cameo appearances in 2) The 'hippy chick' on the trip. She falls in love with David.

Harry Hastings (Craig Moncur) - (seasons 1 - 3) A bit of an unpopular person, he has epilepsy and is David's best friend. He falls in love with Lucy, and takes control of the group when it's in trouble.

Lucy Jefferson (Samantha Bowie) - (seasons 1 - 3) Sarah's best friend. She falls in love with Harry.

Leon (Stanley Smith) - (seasons 1 - 3) The 'joker' on the trip, he falls for Shona. He is the only black member of the group.

Shona (Shelley O'Neill) - (seasons 1 - 3) The quiet one on the trip, she came on the trip as an escape from her harsh traditional parents. She falls for Leon.

Simon (James Pearson) - (seasons 1 - 3) The arrogant one on the trip, he thinks that he's the best because he is the captain of the school football team. However he learns some valuable lessons from a mysterious Aborigine.

Chrissy (Charlie Wilson) - (seasons 1 - 3) She joined the trip as a 'bimbo', just so she could be with Simon, but as the season progressed, she became more kind and genuine, and fitted in with the rest of her classmates

Melissa (Tammy Macintosh) - (season 1) The park ranger who travels with the group in the outback.

Helen Stanich (Caroline Dunphy) - (season 2 and 3) The shady government agent who pursues the group.

The Twins - (season 2) Two little twin girls who have a mysterious link to the group and the aliens.

Ed - (season 2) The Twins' grandmother, who owns a ranch.

Professor Sharpe (season 3) Works for the Australian government in solving extraterrestrial diseases.

Series 1 (2002)

In Series One, the group go to the Australian outback to look for extraterrestrial activity. The 9 kids, their teacher, and a park ranger, Melissa, stay in little tents, with food rationing and having to set up monitoring equipment around the area. But then things begin to go out of control. One member, Leon, is bitten by a deadly snake, and the antivenom is missing. Melissa tracks off to the nearest road in order to find the truck and drive to find medicine, but something stops her getting there. The kids find themselves alone, their teacher's control being thwarted by rasher members of the group. Soon everything is spiralling out of control as people go missing, they see lights in the sky, radio signals fail, several people decide to set off alone, and others are driven into madness. No radio signals work either. When they all finally get back together the kids and their teacher manage to get a radio signal to rescue services who agree to rescue them from Paramundi ridge. They are all waiting on the ridge when they see the helicopter - but it isn't a helicopter; a bright flash occurs and they all disappear.

Series 2 (2003)

The second season starts with the group on Paramundi ridge. But they are picked up by several helicopters. They are taken to a military complex where they realise that their camcorder tapes have been altered and Gerry (the teacher) has been locked up in a mental home due to his ravings that they were abducted by aliens before being replaced and picked up by the military. The group also realise that David and Sarah are missing. They escape from the facility and are pursued by an agent called Stanich. They travel around Australia in an old hippy van searching for David and Sarah. Their search leads them from weird UFO buffs to Aboriginal prophecies and two bizarre little twins. At the end of the series, they return to Paramundi ridge where they link arms to bring the aliens down to return David and Sarah. However it fails and they find themselves back in Scotland

Series 3 (2004)

The group, minus Gerry, David and Sarah, find themselves in Falkirk, Scotland - their home. But they find themselves invisible, and only two people can see them - David and Sarah. David and Sarah were returned to Earth to witness the apparent suicide of the rest of the group. While David and Sarah stay in Scotland, the rest of the group return to Australia via a portal. Back in Scotland, they are continually pursued by Stanich, and they are visible again. They realise that they must try to contact the aliens so that everything can be returned to normal. But things go terribly wrong when they discover that all their portal travel has given them a condition called "red-eye". Under this condition, when an individual gets stressed, their iris turns red and they "split", in which they look as if they are two separate people for a couple of seconds and then promptly disappear. As more and more of them disappear, the remaining members must team up with Stanich and eventually their search leads them to a top secret base on Astrid Island. At this island, they find their friends who had disappeared - but they now have the mentality of 8 year olds, and the unusual symptom of appearing black on an infrared camera, unlike normal humans.

The final episode was to be voted in by viewers. There was a choice - happy ending, surprising ending, or spooky ending. The viewers voted for the spooky ending. In this, the aliens suddenly pop-up and reveal themselves to all be twins. They were the original race on Earth. They cannot reverse the red-eye disease but send Harry and Lucy back in time to stop the trip all together. Racing to their school, they manage to convince the group not to travel to Australia by showing them their videotapes from throughout the series; however, when the present-day Harry and Lucy enter the classroom, Lucy sees her past self and her eye turns red. The series then ends on this cliffhanger.

In 2002 the British Academy of Film and Television Arts (BAFTA) awarded the first season Best Children's Drama. The programme was also awarded the best new drama, and was recommended for all teenagers.

JEREMIAH

Jeremiah lives in a post-apocalyptic world following "The Big Death," a mysterious but devastating plague which claimed the lives of billions of people -- everyone above the age of puberty.

The world, for this generation of lost children, was shattered forever when they were forced to bury their parents. Life has become a bleak and seemingly soulless attempt to stay alive - to plunder, forage or barter for food and clothes and to seek out the sordid and fleeting pleasures that briefly distract them from their lives of terror and savage desperation.

Fifteen years have gone by since the world "ended" -- literally for one generation, symbolically for Jeremiah's generation. Jeremiah (Luke Perry), is twenty-seven, cynical, cautious and intense. He is one of the few left with a conscience and with a sense of debt to his dead parents and the brother whom he unwittingly let die in the chaotic aftermath of the epidemic. He is grimly determined to find the location of the "Valhalla Sector" which his father spoke about shortly before he died. He is also determined to help those less fortunate than he, as a vindication for his brother's death.

Jeremiah writes ritualistic, poignant notes to his dead father, keeping him apprised of his progress. On his way to a town where he has heard there is a good information network, he meets Kurdy (Malcolm-Jamal Warner), a loner who's accustomed to taking care of "number one" and who tries to steal Jeremiah's freshly-caught fish. Jeremiah takes pity on Kurdy and shares his meal, and although Kurdy disappears shortly afterward, the two are destined to hook up again.

As Jeremiah enters the town and approaches the free market, a scuffle breaks out. Armed bandits try to rob market vendors. There is gunfire from a building nearby, thugs are dispatched, and the true power of the town becomes apparent -- the self-styled leader Theo (Kim Hawthorne), a tough-as-nails woman who has trained a team of ferociously loyal jocks and nerds to keep order and to research technology. Jeremiah saves Theo's life from sniper fire and they have a meeting.

Later, in a bar, Jeremiah meets Simon (Daniel Gillies) and Matthew (Curtis Bechdolt), who witnessed his quick response to the sniper. Matthew speaks to Jeremiah about recruiting him for their "cause" and they agree to talk later. Jeremiah and Kurdy reconnect in the bar and resolve their differences.

Meanwhile, Theo's thugs have discovered a camouflaged Land Rover, belonging to Matthew and Simon. It's so unusual to have a vehicle, especially one with fuel, that Theo knows Matthew and Simon belong to some sort of organization. She has them captured and is prepared to torture them to find out the truth.

Theo discovers that Simon was speaking to Jeremiah in the bar, and has Jeremiah captured as well. Kurdy witnesses Jeremiah's abduction and, in a rare moment of unselfishness, follows and decides to help him escape. He creates a riot by spreading the rumor that Theo has been holding out on the town members by hoarding supplies. In the ensuing confusion Kurdy breaks into the school in Theo's compound and releases Simon and Jeremiah. Matthew has already been shot to death by Theo.

The three companions escape in the Land Rover, but Simon is fatally wounded in the process. As he is dying, he makes Jeremiah promise to return the Rover to "Thunder Mountain" and warn the leaders that the "Big Death" may be coming again.

Jeremiah and Kurdy find "Thunder Mountain," an underground government nuclear bomb shelter where 2000 people are living, unknown to the outside world. They are under the charismatic and idealistic leadership of Marcus Alexander (Peter Stebbings), who believes Jeremiah's story about Simon's and Matthew's death. Together they formulate and carry out a plan to foil a mass murder of minorities by "skinheads" twenty miles from the compound. An alliance is forged, and Jeremiah and Kurdy agree to continue to help find out more about whether the "Big Death" is in fact coming again, as well as ways to help make the world a better place.

Armed only with Simon's journal of networks/contacts and the Land Rover, Jeremiah and Kurdy head back to the outside world to help rebuild a new society on the ashes of the old.

Jeremiah the series is a Platinum Studios comic-book-to-film adaptation. The adaptation of Jeremiah is based on the award-winning European graphic novel series by Belgian author Hermann Huppen. Set in the future, the series focuses on Jeremiah (Luke Perry) who must navigate his way through a world populated by the survivors of a deadly epidemic that spared only those who had not yet reached puberty. Now those same survivors must find their way in a decadent civilization and attempt to create a new world order of hope.

Jeremiah, a loner by nature, is joined by the naïve yet colorful Kurdy (Malcolm-Jamal Warner) on a quest to find the mysterious "Valhalla Sector". Together they set out on a journey during which they discover rival social factions at war and young people who must make decisions without wisdom from those who lived before them.

J. Michael Straczynski's latest creation, Jeremiah, tells a post-apocalyptic story about hope.

J. Michael Straczynski's name has become synonymous with great sci-fi. Though he had worked as a story editor on such series as The Twilight Zone and The Real Ghostbusters, his work creating and writing the first-ever "novel for television," Babylon 5, garnered him widespread acclaim and a worldwide legion of fans. He followed up Babylon 5 with five Babylon 5 telefilms, the most recent of which, Babylon 5: The Legend of the Rangers - To Live and Die in Starlight, recently aired on the Sci Fi Channel. He has also become a popular figure in comic books, penning such books as Rising Stars, Midnight Nation and The Amazing Spider-man.

This interesting sci-fi show was pretty much ignored when it was first released, which is surprising considering some of the big names in sci-fi who are behind it. Not least of which is J Michael Strazynski creator of BABYLON 5 and CRUSADE, Peter De Luise, star of many sci-fi shows such as STARGATE SG1 and SEAQUEST DSV, and Sam Egan. As well as actor Luke Perry of Beverly Hill's 90210 fame.

LUKE PERRY - "Jeremiah"

Luke Perry made his Broadway debut as Brad Majors in "The Rocky Horror Picture Show." His most recent feature films include "Fogbound" and the spy thriller "The Enemy," opposite Roger Moore. His recent television credits include the miniseries "Johnson County War," the TBS thriller "The Triangle" and an eight-episode run as the Reverend Jeremiah Clouthier on the series "OZ."

During his years on "Beverly Hills 90210," Perry appeared in several independent films and major studio productions. These included Columbia's "Fifth Element," "RIOT" for SHOWTIME, "Normal Life" and "American Strays." He also co-starred with Chris Penn, Michael Madsen and Mary Stuart Masterson in "The Florentine."

Perry made his feature film debut in the starring role of real-life champion bull rider Lane Frost in "8 Seconds," which he also co-produced.

MALCOLM-JAMAL WARNER - "Kurdy"

After appearing as a regular on the highly successful sitcom "The Cosby Show," Malcom-Jamal Warner has broken away from the stereotype often associated with former child stars. He has not only achieved continued success in his acting career, but has also received accolades in several new creative ventures including playing bass for his band Miles Long, his Performance Poetry gigs and civic-minded advocacy appearances.

Warner starred on stage in the original play "Cryin' Shame," in "Freefall" at the Victory Garden Theatre in Chicago; in the off-Broadway play "Three Ways Home," at the Astor Place Theatre and in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the La Jolla Playhouse.

A seasoned director, Warner was the resident helmer on "Malcolm and Eddie" and has also directed episodes of "The Cosby Show," "The Fresh Prince of Bel Air," "All That" and "Sesame Street," as well as a host of music videos. His film short "This Old Man" received critical acclaim on the festival circuit. He also directed, produced and hosted the half-hour tribute to "The Cosby Show." Additional directing credits include the Saturday morning teen magazine "All Ax-S," featuring Jaleel White and Kriss Cross, Nickelodeon's "Keenan and Kel" and the AIDS awareness video "Timeout: The Truth about HIV, Aids and YOU." The video, which starred Magic Johnson and Arsenio Hall, earned Warner the NAACP Key of Life Image Award.

Always civic-minded, Warner has been involved in several programs that reach out to the community. He hosted the Emmy® Award-winning "Kids Killing Kids" and recently directed "Teen Files: Truth About Violence."

PETER STEBBINGS - "Markus Alexander"

Peter Stebbings has appeared in such television series as SHOWTIME's "THE OUTER LIMITS," "On Hostile Ground," "No Alibi," "Traders," "Drive, She Said," "Kung Fu," "Madison" and "The X-Files." He was nominated twice for a Gemini Award for Best Actor in a Continuing Leading Dramatic Role.

TRICIA HELFER - "Sarah"

Sarah is in her mid 20's, bright, personable and very attractive. Sarah is among those living inside Thunder Mountain, a colony set inside what used to be a military compound. Quite small when the "Big Death" hit, Sarah has lived most of her life inside Thunder Mountain. She currently assists leader David Quijana with "newcomer integration and orientation" - which is how she meets Jeremiah and Kurdy, who seek asylum here. Sarah shows Jeremiah around the elaborate compound and when the time comes for the visitors to make their exit, commemorates their departure by reading aloud Tennyson's "Ulysses."

KIM HAWTHORNE - "Theo"

Kim Hawthorne's television credits include a recurring role on the acclaimed SHOWTIME series "STARGATE SG-1," "Voyage of the Unicorn," "Dark Angel," "Andromeda," SHOWTIME's "THE OUTER LIMITS," SHOWTIME's "BEGGARS AND CHOOSERS," "Cosby," "Drop Squad," "In the Heat of the Night," and the popular daytime serials "All My Children" and "Another World." She has appeared in such feature films as "Along Came a Spider," "See Spot Run," and "3000 Miles to Graceland." Hawthorne also has extensive theater experience on and off Broadway, including "The Life," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Little Shop of Horrors."

ZAK SANTIAGO ALAM - "Sam"

Zak Santiago Alam's feature film credits include "Josie and the Pussycats," "Trixie," directed by Robert Altman, and "Turbulence 3: Heavy Metal," with Rutger Hauer. He has had recurring roles in the television series "Big Sound" and "The Crow."

ALEX ZAHARA - "Ezekial"

Alex Zahara's television credits include "Babylon 5: Legend of the Rangers," SHOWTIME's "STARGATE SG1," "The Stick Up," "Dark Angel," "Andromeda," "The Immortal" and "So Weird." His movies-of-the-week include "Cage The Dog" and "Quarantine." He also acted in the feature films "The 13th Warrior," and "K-10 The Final Solution."

BYRON LAWSON - "Lee"

Byron Lawson has appeared on television in SHOWTIME's "OFF SEASON," "First Target," "Beyond Belief," "First Wave," "New York Tempest," and "Highlander: The Blitz." His feature film credits include "Romeo Must Die" and "The Corrupter."

KANDYSE MCCLURE - "Elizabeth"

For the past two seasons Kandyse McClure has been seen as 'Kim' on NBC's "Just Deal." Previously, she was in 22 episodes of FOX Family's "Higher Ground." In 2000, she filmed the television films "Framed" and "Passion and Prejudice." Her feature film work includes "See Spot Run" and "Romeo Must Die."

DANIEL GILLIES - "Simon"

Daniel Gillies' television credits include the popular "Street Legal" and "Young Hercules." His feature films include "No One Can Hear You," "The Act of a Dying Man," and "A Soldier's Sweetheart."

RUSSELL MULCAHY - Director

Russell Mulcahy received widespread acclaim for directing the hit action films "Highlander" and "Highlander II." He subsequently directed the thriller "Ricochet" starring Denzel Washington and "The Shadow" starring Alec Baldwin. His additional directorial credits include episodes of "Tales From the Crypt" and SHOWTIME's "The Hunger," as well as the films "Tale of the Mummy" (which he also wrote), "Blue Ice," "Razorback" and "Resurrection."

In the late-70s, Mulcahy became involved in the newly emerging music video industry and directed "Video Killed the Radio Star." He went on to become one of the most accomplished music video directors of the '80s, working with such artists as Fleetwood Mac, Billy Joel, Elton John, Billy Idol, Rod Stewart, Culture Club, Duran Duran and The Motels.

J. MICHAEL STRACZYNSKI - Executive Producer/Writer/Creator

J. Michael Straczynski is considered one of the most prolific and highly-regarded writers currently working in the television industry. He served as executive producer and creator of "Babylon 5," which ran successfully for five years in syndication and "Crusade," which ran on the TNT Network in 1999. He also wrote and executive produced the pilot movie for a new "Babylon 5" sequel series titled "The Legend of the Rangers" slated to air on the SciFi Channel this month.

Straczynski recently adapted his popular comic "Rising Stars" into a feature screenplay for MGM and Atlas Entertainment, with the film tentatively set for production later this year. He also wrote and produced "Murder, She Wrote," a television movie for CBS; launched a second comics title for "Top Cow," and "Midnight Nation" then debuted his own radio drama series, "The City of Dreams," on the Sci-Fi Channel. Straczynski also took over as writer on "The Amazing Spider-Man" for Marvel Comics. For 2002, he has another series in development for the SciFi Channel entitled "Polaris."

In 1996 and 1998, he won the coveted Hugo award for Best Dramatic Presentation, the most important award in the science fiction genre and was twice awarded the Space Frontier Foundation's "Vision of the Future" Award. Straczynski is also the author of the nonfiction book, The Complete Book of Scriptwriting, which has become one of Writer's Digest Books best-selling titles.

SAM EGAN - Executive Producer/Writer

For five years, Sam Egan served as executive producer and writer on the SHOWTIME series "THE OUTER LIMITS." Among his notable episodes were the 100th episode titled "Tribunal," and the two-hour season finale of the show's 6th year "Final Appeal," which starred Charlton Heston, Robert Loggia, Amanda Plummer, Hal Holbrook, Cicely Tyson, Swoozie Kurtz, Michael Moriarty, Kelly McGillis and Walter Langham.

Prior to "THE OUTER LIMITS," Egan was co-executive producer of ABC's "Second Noah," and consulting producer on CBS' "Northern Exposure." He has been active in alternative media, most recently developing and writing "The Dream Detective," an animated flash-animation Internet series which premiered in 2001. He also co-created "The Santa Fe Mysteries," an interactive CD-ROM series.

Egan created "Snoops" and "Sweating Bullets." He also served as co-producer and co-writer of "Imagine - John Lennon," and co-writer of the cult comedy "Elvira, Mistress of the Dark."

Egan was producer/writer of "The Kid Who Loved Christmas" starring Della Reese, Vanessa Williams, and Sammy Davis, Jr. and was executive producer/ writer of CBS' "Learned Pigs and Fireproof Women" starring Steve Martin and Ricky Jay.

For his writing and producing, he received an Emmy® nomination and four Gemini nominations. One of the Gemini nominations was for Best Writing On a Television Drama for the "Tribunal" episode of SHOWTIME's "THE OUTER LIMITS."

Platinum Studios' Scott Mitchell Rosenberg talks about Hermann Huppen, J. Michael Straczynski and his journey with Jeremiah from comic book to Showtime.

In the early-nineties, Scott Mitchell Rosenberg developed the comic book Men in Black through his Malibu Comics label with creator Lowell Cunningham, knowing the shortly lived series was a natural for a feature film adaptation. Released by Columbia Pictures, Men in Black went on to become the highest-grossing comic-to-film adaptation of all time.

A lifelong comic book fan, Rosenberg had his eye on another book, acclaimed Belgian creator Hermann Huppen's Jeremiah, an award-winning graphic novel that bore virtually no resemblance to his earlier find, but one for which his plans were no less ambitious. Men in Black was originally pitched to me at Malibu by a first time comic writer who had never professionally written before. What I saw in it was something that would be cool to develop out as a comic but also screamed out movie and TV," says Rosenberg, who since 1997 has headed up a new company, Platinum Studios. Platinum focuses primarily on comic book to film adaptations. "Even though the story that we were going to tell in the comic wasn't exactly the story that should be told in the feature, I liked the world, along with J, K, Zed, cool gadgets and sun glasses!"

Though completely opposite from Men in Black in both tone and scope, Rosenberg saw tremendous potential in Jeremiah. Published annually in large format color books, the Huppen graphic novel has been translated into 26 languages and garnered a passionate worldwide following for its stark, visually stunning art and distinctive characters. "Jeremiah predated Mad Max," notes Rosenberg. "I first got introduced to Jeremiah a long time ago when I had Malibu Comics, at the same time we were publishing Men in Black. I liked the relationship between Jeremiah and Kurdy. They lived in this future world that wasn't futuristic in terms of sci fi; it was essentially now. Ervin Rustemagic, my friend and producing partner on the show, had been producing the comic since its inception in the '70s and managed the creator, Hermann Huppen. The problem that I had was that it was a European graphic album in full beautiful color in 26 languages, and that kind of format didn't work in the US comic world in the '90s. So I published it as a black and white independent and built up a cult audience here."

Determined to bridge the gap between the parallel worlds of comics and movies, Rosenberg founded Platinum studios; one of the first projects Rosenberg had in mind was Jeremiah. "Ervin and I talked about it and spoke to Hermann Huppen. Then started figuring out with my staff at Platinum how to position it for TV," he recalls. "Nothing is ever easy to set up and Jeremiah in particular is a challenge because on a regular basis he and Kurdy are going to new locales. So, it's not an inexpensive show to make, and their journey is really a significant portion of the show."

Jeremiah marks two important firsts: it's the first European comic book to be adapted as a live-action, U.S. TV series; it's also Rosenberg's first foray into episodic TV since the release of MIB.

Now produced by MGM Television Group and Platinum Studios and debuting March 3 on Showtime, Jeremiah stars Luke Perry as the title character, who must navigate his way through a world populated by the survivors of a deadly epidemic that spared only those who had not yet reached puberty. Now over a decade has passed since the "Big Death," and Jeremiah forms a reluctant partnership with the colorful yet cynical Kurdy, played by Malcolm Jamal Warner. Together they set out on a journey across a broken landscape, encountering warring, rival social factions and young people who must make decisions without the wisdom of those who lived before them.

To serve as showrunner and executive producer, Rosenberg approached J. Michael Straczynski, whose work on the sci-fi series Babylon 5 and in comics has earned him hero status in the science fiction community. Though both had made the rounds at comic book and sci fi conventions around the same periods, they had not met until Rosenberg approached him about the project. "I had always been a fan of Joe's from Babylon 5," says Rosenberg. "I had watched every episode of B5 and was definitely a fan of his. I literally started chasing him to get him involved in the project."

Straczynski, who has become as celebrated in comics (his current works include Top Cow's Delicate Creatures and Rising Stars, as well as Marvel's Amazing Spiderman) as he is in television, brings an "ability to shape a universe," says Rosenberg. "And Jeremiah is no less than a whole universe. Fifteen years earlier a catastrophe happened where every adult died, and only the children remained. You have to think what that means -- which technology gets wiped out and what little bits might remain in different places and what the logic is behind how someone with a generator could get an old computer to briefly work. Maybe there are some satellites flying in the sky, or maybe they all fall out of orbit. As Joe pointed out, if something breaks inside a calculator, nobody in this world would have the ability to fix it."

The response from Showtime and MGM Television was immediate. "They loved Joe's take on the story," says Rosenberg. "Joe then wrote a script for the pilot, which they also loved. We were going straight to series. Everyone was energized over it. Not just the creative folks, but also the marketing, advertising, publicity people, there's actually genuine passion."

With the series now in production in Vancouver, Rosenberg feels Luke Perry and Malcolm Jamal-Warner have become their characters. "Their relationship with each other is awesome, like it is in the comic," he says. Perry, who became familiar to worldwide audiences in Beverly Hills 90210, brings "a pensive quality" to the character of Jeremiah. "It's the world-weary look that Luke has that really embodies Jeremiah. When you look at him you know there's a lot going on, he's always thinking. We reference that in some of the shows. Things register with him; he doesn't instantly trust and you see that in his look. If he sees a wrong being committed, you see that in his look. You feel like he knows probably more than he lets on, but in some cases, Jeremiah lets down his guard to Kurdy and admits his knowledge base is limited. They were having a conversation on one show where Jeremiah is asking how he heard about these things that used to exist before the 'Big Death' called chop shops -where they'd chop up cars and they were worth more in individual parts than the whole car.

And that thought is alien to him. Kurdy explains how it works, but to Jeremiah it's unfathomable since a working vehicle is so incredibly valuable and rare in this new world. Jeremiah was 13 when it happened, so as smart as he is, and as world weary as he is, there is some stuff he just doesn't know. And that's the stuff that the whole world doesn't know."

Jamal-Warner, who rose to fame in series like The Cosby Show and Malcolm & Eddie, plays Kurdy as "kind of cynical and rapschallion," describes Rosenberg. "Really, he plays him 'real.' You think he's always out for himself. But the truth is that if no one's looking, he'll help someone. Oh, and sometimes even when someone is looking."

Rosenberg describes a scene in one episode in which Kurdy passes by someone laying on the street who needs help. Jeremiah, knowing full well that Kurdy's going to help, mimics Kurdy's "not my problem - not gonna help" attitude and starts to walk away. Kurdy then goes to help, but refuses even then to let Jeremiah know that he actually did help the person. "With Kurdy, you get a sense of reality," Rosenberg explains. "If things are screwed up, he'll colorfully describe it as such - and mean it. Kurdy's an awesome character on the show."

Besides the great cast, says Rosenberg, the show has a superb crew. "We're also lucky to have Sam Egan, who is executive producing and writing alongside Joe Straczynski. Not only is Sam an award-winning writer and producer who brings a lot to the show, he's incredibly nice and has great taste in restaurants!" Sam Egan was the executive producer of Showtime's The Outer Limits for five years, and has written and produced many other series. He's received an Emmy® nomination and four Gemini nominations for his television work, as well as a host of other awards, including the Edgar from the Mystery Writers of America, three Saturn Awards for Best Science Fiction Television Series, and two Golden Pen awards from P.E.N., the international writers' organization. He has also won the Scott Newman Foundation Award for Best Television Drama.

"Producer George Horie (The Omen TV series, In Cold Blood) and Production Designer/co-producer Steve Geaghan (the Highlander TV series and Babylon 5: Legend of the Rangers) are equally fantastic," adds Rosenberg. "We simply have a wonderful team."

Jeremiah is emblematic of the kinds of projects Rosenberg formed Platinum to develop. "My focus with Platinum is tapping into the comic/sci fi world and creators for everything that we do," he says. "I like getting into a creator's head, and not only seeing what ended up on the page, because that may just be a function of what works in the market that particular month. I want to know what was in their head that lead to the page, because in there are the answers to whether or not there's a movie or TV story there and we don't shy away from hard. Jeremiah was far from easy. Men in Black got turned down by every studio. That certainly wasn't easy. And when it comes from comic books and sci fi, there's a whole world in these printed pages -- that's what excites me.

"If a creator comes to me with unpublished material that I think works, we'll go ahead and produce the comic or graphic novel for them. We're just gearing up to do that on a regular basis."

Currently, Platinum has a number of projects in development at various studios based on books Rosenberg has nurtured in-house, including Mal Chance, a Hong Kong action/romantic comedy based on a Spanish comic book, which is currently in development at Miramax. "The comic was about a female assassin and we wanted the film to have more of a Rush Hour feel," Rosenberg describes. "We kept reading and noticed that there was a bible that described this two thousand year-old sect of Chinese female assassins, so we went to that bible verse to see how to create our present day character that could come from that same sect, and brought in a rookie FBI agent to team her up with. The movie grew around that."

Other Platinum projects include Nathan Never, a futuristic buddy/action film based on the popular Italian comic book, with DreamWorks SKG; and Ghosting, a new horror franchise set on a college campus, with Miramax/Dimension Films. Platinum Studios and Dimension Films will also produce, under their international local-language banner, Trace of Chalk, a tale of romance and intrigue based on the European graphic novel, and Teen Witch, a funny, sexy coming-of-age story. Other projects include the blockbuster science fiction epic Cowboys & Aliens, based on Rosenberg's upcoming original comic book series, and Dead of Night, a supernatural detective story based on the Italian series Dylan Dog, the world's best-selling horror comic.

The executive producers are Luke Perry, Joe Dante (Small Soldiers, Innerspace, The Howling, The Burbs, Twilight Zone: The Movie), Michael Finnell (Teaching Mrs. Tingle, Small Soldiers, Twilight Zone: The Movie, The Howling), Scott Mitchell Rosenberg (Men In Black) and Ervin Rustemagic (co-producer with Rosenberg of upcoming live-action features titled Nathan Never, Cowboys & Aliens, Mal Chance for Platinum Studios). Producing is George Horie. Russell Mulcahy (Highlander, Showtime's Queer As Folk) directs the two-hour premiere. Co-producing is Stephen Geaghan, Gregory Noveck and Stephanie Germain. The creative executives for Showtime are John Vasey and Randy Runkle. For MGM the creative executive is Craig Roessler.

JERICHO

The storyline revolves about the residents of Jericho, a small, rural Kansas town, in the aftermath of a series of nuclear attacks on most major cities in the contiguous United States. The series begins with a visible nuclear detonation of unknown origin over nearby Denver, Colorado, and a loss of power and modern communications, effectively isolating Jericho. Later, power is restored to Jericho by what is alluded to as the efforts of the U.S. government, but soon after, an Electromagnetic pulse (EMP) disables all electronics. Several themes addressed in the show regularly are the gathering of information, community identity, public order, limited resources, the value of family, and external and internal threats. The show features several mysteries involving the backgrounds of major characters, the perpetrators of the attack, and the extent of damage to the United States and its government.

The pivotal character is Jake Green, a 32-year-old prodigal son, who returns home to briefly visit his family before becoming stranded as a result of the catastrophe. After a tense reunion with his father, Mayor Johnston Green, Jake becomes a hero to Jericho by helping protect it and its residents. As Jake, along with his family and friends, work to help the town survive, they are completely unaware that one of their own residents, Robert Hawkins, knows much more about the attacks that took place than he is letting on.

Clips from the pilot episode became free to watch on Yahoo! TV several weeks before the episode actually aired on television.[10] CBS is still showing all of the Jericho episodes on their free Innertube website, as of 16 May 2007,[11], although they cannot be accessed from outside the U.S. CBS repeated the first three episodes on the Saturday nights following their original airings, as did Australia's Network Ten.
