

Class 932

Book B82

Library of Adelbert College

v. 1

of Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT

ANCIENT RECORDS

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF WILLIAM RAINY HARPER

---

First Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA
EDITED BY ROBERT FRANCIS HARPER

Second Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT
EDITED BY JAMES HENRY BREASTED

Third Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF PALESTINE, PHENICIA
AND SYRIA
EDITED BY WILLIAM RAINY HARPER

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PERSIAN CONQUEST, COLLECTED
EDITED AND TRANSLATED WITH COMMENTARY

BY

JAMES HENRY BREASTED, PH.D.

PROFESSOR OF EGYPTOLOGY AND ORIENTAL HISTORY
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

VOLUME I

THE FIRST TO THE SEVENTEENTH DYNASTIES

CHICAGO
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
1906

LONDON: LUZAC & CO.

LEIPZIG: OTTO HARRASSOWITZ

COPYRIGHT 1906, BY
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
Published February 1906

Composed and Printed By
The University of Chicago Press
Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.

THESE VOLUMES ARE DEDICATED TO

MARTIN A. RYERSON

NORMAN W. HARRIS

MARY H. WILMARTH

PREFACE

In no particular have modern historical studies made greater progress than in the reproduction and publication of documentary sources from which our knowledge of the most varied peoples and periods is drawn. In American history whole libraries of such sources have appeared or are promised. These are chiefly in English, although the other languages of Europe are of course often largely represented. The employment of such sources from the early epochs of the world's history involves either a knowledge of ancient languages on the part of the user, or a complete rendition of the documents into English. No attempt has ever been made to collect and present all the sources of Egyptian history in a modern language. A most laudable beginning in this direction, and one that has done great service, was the Records of the Past; but that series never attempted to be complete, and no amount of editing could make consistent with themselves the uncorrelated translations of the large number of contributors to that series.

The author is only too well aware of the difficulties involved in such a project. In mere bulk alone it has been a considerable enterprise, in view of the preliminary tasks made necessary by the state of the published texts. These I have indicated briefly in the chapter on the sources herein (Vol. I, §§ 27-32). Under these circumstances, the author's first obligation has been to go behind the publications to the original documents themselves, wherever necessary. The method pursued has also been indicated herein (Vol. I, §§ 33-37). The task has consumed years, and demanded protracted sojourn among the great collections of Europe. In this work a related enterprise has been of the greatest assistance. A mission to the museums of Europe to collect and copy their Egyptian monuments for a commission of the four Royal Academies of Germany (Berlin, Leipzig, Göttingen, and Munich), in order to make these documents available for an exhaustive Egyptian Dictionary endowed by the German Emperor, enabled the author to copy from the originals practically all the historical monuments of Egypt in Europe. The other sources of material, and particularly the papers of the Dictionary just mentioned, have enabled the author to base the translations in these volumes directly, or practically so, upon the originals themselves in almost all cases.

Unfortunately, the possession of these materials is but the beginning of the difficulties which beset such an enterprise. In the preface to the first edition of his English Dictionary, Noah Webster complains of the difficulties caused by the new meanings taken on by English words as they are modified by the new environment which envelops them in America. If such changes are involved in the voyage across the Atlantic, and the lapse of a few generations, how much wider and deeper is the gulf due to the total difference between the semitropical northern Nile valley of millenniums ago, and the English-speaking world of this twentieth century! The psychology of early man is something with which we have as yet scarcely begun to operate. His whole world and his whole manner of thinking are sharply differentiated from our own. His organization, socially, industrially, commercially, politically; his tools, his house, his conveniences, constantly involve institutions, adjustments, and appliances totally unknown to this modern age and this western world. In the translation of the New Testament for the tribes of Alaska, I am told, there has been great difficulty in the rendition of the term "Good Shepherd," for the reason that many of these people never saw a sheep and never heard of a shepherd. Similarly, how shall one rehabilitate this ancient world of the Nile-dweller, and put his documents into intelligible English, when the ideas to be rendered are often unknown to the average modern and western reader, and, needless to say, there are no corresponding terms in the English language?

Another constant source of difficulty has been the lack of those indispensable helps, the legion of concordances, glossaries, handbooks, and compilations for ready reference, which the worker in Greek or Hebrew has constantly at his hand. In spite of the colossal industry of Brugsch, we are still without a dictionary of Egyptian to which one can turn with any hope of finding other examples of a rare word. Hardly any Old Kingdom documents at all were employed by Brugsch in the compilation of his dictionary, and, grateful as we are for what he was able to furnish us, we must still await the great Berlin Dictionary before we shall possess an exhaustive compendium of the language. I was able to employ the alphabetically arranged materials of the Dictionary here and there, but the compilation was not sufficiently far advanced at the conclusion of my work to be of much service. Wherever I have drawn examples from it, they are carefully acknowledged in the footnotes. A good many distinctions in the meanings of words have become evident to me in the course of the work upon the documents. Wherever such have become clear late in the progress of the work, it was impossible to go through the translations and revise the entire manuscript for the sake of such words alone. I have tried to control these cases as far as possible in the proofs, but I am confident that some such changes have been overlooked as the accumulation of alterations demanded in the proofreading was quite beyond my powers of observation in so large a mass of materials. Thus, for example, the common word sr is usually translated "prince," and this is undoubtedly sometimes the meaning of the word; but it very frequently means "official," a fact which I did not observe until far along in the progress of the work.

Some danger of confusion also arises from the fact that titles indicative of rank or office suffer great change in meaning in the lapse of several thousand years. Thus the h<sup>3</sup>ty or "count" of the feudal and pre-feudal ages becomes a mere magistrate or town-mayor in the Empire, although in sporadic cases the word still retains its old meaning. The translation of titles has perhaps been the greatest source of difficulty in the entire course of the work. Many of the offices found cannot be determined with precision. We have as yet no history of titles—one of the most needed works in the entire range of Egyptian studies. Under these circumstances, it has been impossible always to define with precision the range and scope of a given office. Even when these were determinable, the corresponding term was often wanting in English, and could not be devised without the use of a whole phrase. In some cases awkward combinations have been necessary in the renderings of titles. Thus the compound "king's-son" was adopted because it is occasionally followed in the original by a pronoun referring to "king," which made the rendering "royal son" impossible. For this reason a series of such compounds has been employed: "king's-son," "king's-daughter," "king's-wife," "king's-mother," "king's-scribe," and the like. It is hoped to render all such matters clear in the index.

In general, the effort has been to render as literally as possible without wrenching English idiom. In this latter particular I probably have not always succeeded; but I have deliberately preferred this evil to a glib rendering which reads well and may be a long distance from the sense of the original. We have had so much of so-called "paraphrasing," which does not even remotely resemble the purport of the original, that I have felt justified in gratifying a righteous horror of such romancing, even at the cost of idiomatic English. The reader has a right to expect that the subjective fancies of the translator have been rigidly excluded, and a right to demand that he may put implicit dependence both upon the individual words and the general sense of the renderings. At the same time, the author would distinctly disclaim any desire to give to these translations the authority of monographs. The extent of the materials, and the amount of time expended in the collection, collation, and correction of the original texts before doing anything toward a formal version, have made it impossible to devote to the translation of each document as much time as one would deem necessary for the production of a monograph upon it. While the most conscientious attention has been given to the versions, and they have sometimes been revised three times (always once), yet it is undoubtedly the case that, in the course of rendering such a mass of materials, errors have crept in. Notice of any that may be observed by my fellow-workers in this field will be gratefully received, and utilized should a future edition of these volumes ever appear.

---

For the benefit of the general reader, it should be noted that a complete revolution in our knowledge of the Egyptian grammar has taken place in the last twenty-five years. The exhaustive study of syntax and of verbal forms which has been in progress for generations in the classic languages, or even in the Semitic group, has been going on for only a little over a quarter of a century in Egyptian. This is no reflection on the work of the first two generations of Egyptologists, for such work was impossible in their day. In this quarter-century, immense progress has been made and certain definite results have been attained. It cannot be said that these results have yet been applied to the understanding of the historical documents of Egypt as a whole. One of the main purposes of this work has been the attainment of this end. Indeed, its chief object may be indicated in this connection as: first, the attainment of copies which in correctness adequately reproduce the original document; and, second, an English version which shall embody our modern knowledge of the language. Every effort has been made to realize these two aims, and only in such degree as they may have been attained will these volumes form a contribution to knowledge.

In the selection of documents there has sometimes been difficulty in deciding what should and what should not be included by the term "historical document." All purely religious compositions, as well as all exclusively literary documents (belles-lettres), all science, like mathematics and medicine, and in most cases all business documents, have been excluded. In the Old Kingdom, however, the last have been included, in view of the limited materials surviving from that distant age. It is hoped that these other classes of documents will appear in further volumes of this series. In all cases, however, where the other classes of documents were of vital historical importance—that is, bore directly on events and conditions closely touching the career of the Egyptian state—they have been included here. These volumes, therefore, include the entire series of written documents from which we draw our knowledge of the career of the Nile valley peoples as a nation, until the beginning of permanent foreign domination at the advent of the Persians in 525 B. C.

---

Besides furnishing an English version of these documents, the scope of this work also includes the proper introduction of the reader to their intelligent study; hence the versions are accompanied by notes and introductions. These are threefold in character. Firstly, in a footnote appended to the title of each document, the reader will find a brief description of it, indicating whether it is of stone or papyrus, a stela, a relief, an obelisk, or whatever it may be, with statement of its size and material whenever the data were obtainable. The state of preservation is noted, and then all the publications in which the text of the monument has appeared. In a word, this footnote contains the lower criticism of the document. No attempt has been made to add to the bibliography the various treatments and discussions of the monument which have at various times appeared. The bulk of these essays are long since obsolete, and the time has certainly come when we can detach our usable bibliography from this incumbering inheritance, without at the same time failing to recognize with gratitude the great service which it once rendered to the science. Furthermore, it has seemed a duty to indicate to the reader in this footnote, the comparative value of the more important publications of the text. If an edition of the text has proved inaccurate and untrustworthy, it is but right that it should be known as such. In a purely objective and impersonal manner, therefore, such materials have been characterized in these introductory footnotes.

Secondly, each monument is supplied with a usually short introduction, setting forth the historical significance of the document, its character, and, where necessary, a résumé of its content. It therefore contains in brief compass the higher criticism of the document. Much of the historical background, and literary value of the more important documents will be found set forth more fully in the author's History of Egypt,<sup>a</sup> which is based upon the documentary sources in these volumes. As a further aid in gaining a comprehensive idea of the content, the version of each document itself has been divided into logical paragraphs, each with a subtitle. It is intended that by this plan a given passage of the document may be referred to by number, thus furnishing a very brief system of reference to all the monuments, by means of the volume number (Roman) followed by the paragraph number (Arabic).

Thirdly, the version of each monument is accompanied by running footnotes explaining obscure matters in the text as far as possible. It has been impossible to make these any fuller, although the author is quite aware that many details requiring explanation have been left without comment. It has been his especial endeavor to adduce in the footnotes, or at least call attention to, all related matter, whether in this series of translations or elsewhere among the monuments of Egypt. It has often been more convenient to introduce a very brief or fragmentary inscription of a few words in a footnote attached to a related passage in some larger document, than to give such flotsam and jetsam independent heads as separate documents. It is expected to render these all easily discoverable in the index. The maps necessary to an understanding of the geography of the monuments will also appear with the index.

I have attempted to solve the unwelcome problem of the transliteration of Egyptian words and names by giving the proper names where necessary in two forms: first, a vocalized form for the layman; and, second, a purely consonantal transliteration placed after it in parentheses. As the layman for whom the first is intended knows nothing of Egyptian orthography, it is not important that he shall be able to recognize in the forms the consonants of the original. This vocalized form should, however, as nearly as possible reproduce the consonants upon which it is based, without introducing elements unintelligible to the layman. Hence I have ignored <sup>3</sup> and <sup>c</sup>, y becomes i or γ, and w is indicated by u or w. The consonantal transliteration adopted is the most nearly satisfactory system yet evolved, viz., that of the Berlin school, with some slight modifications. It is as follows:

---

<sup>a</sup>A History of Egypt, large 8vo, 640 pp., 200 illustrations, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, 1905.

<sup>3</sup> = Semitic א	n = Semitic נ	š = Semitic ש
y = " י	r = " ר or ל	k = " ק
w = " ו	h = " ה	k = " כ
c = " ע	h = " ה, ח	g = " ג
b = " ב	h = " ה, ח, ע	t = " ת
p = " פ	h = " ה, ח, ע	t = " ט
f = our f	s = " s <sup>a</sup>	d = " ד
m = Semitic מ	s = " ש	q = " ז

In the so-called "syllabic orthography" employed by the Egyptians in writing foreign words, only the first consonant of each biconsonantal sign has any significance. The second has no phonetic value in such words.

This is not the place to discuss the closer equivalences of these consonants. It is probable the <sup>3</sup> (Eagle) diverges slightly from the pure aleph of the Semitic languages, while the initial y has frequently become an aleph. It has not seemed wise to burden a work of this character with such distinctions, and the y appearing in these volumes at the beginning of a word merely indicates that the initial consonant of the original word is "reed-leaf" without predicating anything as to whether its sound is ך or א.

---

<sup>a</sup>The nature of the difference between this and the following š is entirely obscure. From the Middle Kingdom on, they represent the same sound. Herein the distinction has been consistently indicated only in the Old Kingdom.

To the numerous colleagues in Europe who have been so ready with assistance whenever called upon, I would here publicly express the deepest obligation. For untrammelled access to their collections, and never-failing co-operation, my sincere acknowledgments are due to the authorities of the museums at Berlin, London (British Museum, University College, Petrie Collections), Paris (Louvre, Bibliothèque Nationale, Musée Guimet), Vienna (Hofmuseum), Leyden, Munich, Rome (Vatican, and Capitoline), Florence (Museo Archæologico), Bologna, Naples, Turin, Pisa, Geneva, Lyons, Liverpool, and some others. It is with the greatest pleasure that I recall the years of work in the Berlin Museum to which these volumes have called me. It would be impossible, were I to attempt it, to enumerate the daily kindnesses or tell of the constant co-operation which I have enjoyed there. For daily access to the materials of the academic Dictionary, already mentioned, I would express to Professor Erman, and the gentlemen of the Dictionary staff, my hearty thanks. For never-failing personal counsel and aid my thanks are also due to Erman, Schaefer, and Sethe; while Steindorff, Borchardt, Spiegelberg, Gardiner, Bissing, Weigall, Newberry, Petrie, and Legrain have placed valuable copies, collations, photographs, or reports at my disposal. The unremitting labors of Maspero and Wiedemann have given us indispensable bibliographies of the historical documents, and these have been of great service to me—a service for which I would express to them my sincere thanks. I did not, however, depend solely upon these works, but made an independent bibliography from the beginning—a plan which not infrequently turned up invaluable old sources not before employed.

To my friend, President William R. Harper, for his interest in this enterprise, and his unflinching support in arranging for my repeated absence in Europe for the prosecution of these studies, I owe a debt of gratitude. Likewise to the Board of Trustees of the University of Chicago, for the same privileges, it is an agreeable duty to express my appreciation here.

Finally my thanks are due the staff of the University of Chicago Press for unremitting attention to the difficult typographical work of these volumes—an attention to which the appearance of the work is of itself sufficient evidence. I should add that circumstances entirely beyond my control have obliged me to read the proofs of the volumes very rapidly, and it is probable that they contain more typographical errors due to this fact than I could wish. For great assistance in reading the proofs I am indebted to my brother-in-law Dr. R. S. Padan, and for like aid to my wife and her sister, Miss Imogen Hart.

JAMES HENRY BREASTED.

WILLIAMS BAY, WIS.,
September 22, 1905.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

VOLUME I

	§§
THE DOCUMENTARY SOURCES OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY . . . . .	1-37
CHRONOLOGY . . . . .	38-57
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE . . . . .	58-75
THE PALERMO STONE: THE FIRST TO THE FIFTH DYNASTIES . . . . .	76-167
I. Predynastic Kings . . . . .	90
II. First Dynasty . . . . .	91-116
III. Second Dynasty . . . . .	117-144
IV. Third Dynasty . . . . .	145-148
V. Fourth Dynasty . . . . .	149-152
VI. Fifth Dynasty . . . . .	153-167
THE THIRD DYNASTY . . . . .	168-175
Reign of Snefru . . . . .	168-175
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	168-169
Biography of Methen . . . . .	170-175
THE FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	176-212
Reign of Khufu . . . . .	176-187
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	176
Inventory Stela . . . . .	177-180
Examples of Dedication Inscriptions by Sons . . . . .	181-187
Reign of Khafre . . . . .	188-209
Stela of Mertityôtes . . . . .	188-189
Will of Prince Nekure, Son of King Khafre . . . . .	190-199
Testamentary Enactment of an Unknown Official, Establishing the Endowment of His Tomb by the Pyramid of Khafre . . . . .	200-209
Reign of Menkure . . . . .	210-212
Debhen's Inscription, Recounting King Menkure's Erec- tion of a Tomb for Him . . . . .	210-212
THE FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	213-281
Reign of Userkaf . . . . .	213-235

	§§
Testamentary Enactment of Nekonekh . . . . .	213-215
I. The Priesthood of Hathor . . . . .	216-219
II. The Mortuary Priesthood of Khenuka . . . . .	220-222
III. Nekonekh's Will . . . . .	223-225
IV. Nekonekh's Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	226-227
V. Nekonekh's Mortuary Statue . . . . .	228-230
Testamentary Enactment of Senuonekh, Regulating His Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	231-235
Reign of Sahure . . . . .	236-241
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	236
Tomb Stela of Nenekhsekhet . . . . .	237-240
Tomb Inscription of Persen . . . . .	241
Reign of Neferirkere . . . . .	242-249
Tomb Inscriptions of the Vizier, Chief Judge, and Chief Architect Weshptah . . . . .	242-249
Reign of Nuserre . . . . .	250-262
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	250
Tomb Inscriptions of Hotepiryaqhet . . . . .	251-253
Inscription of Ptahshepses . . . . .	254-262
Reign of Menkuhor . . . . .	263
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	263
Reign of Dedkere-Isesi . . . . .	264-281
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	264-267
Tomb Inscriptions of Senezemib, Chief Judge, Vizier, and Chief Architect . . . . .	268-277
Mortuary Inscription of Nezemib . . . . .	278-279
Tomb Inscription of the Nomarch Henku . . . . .	280-281
THE SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	282-390
Reign of Teti . . . . .	282-294
Inscriptions of Sabu, Also Called Ibebi . . . . .	282-286
Inscription of Sabu, Also Called Thety . . . . .	287-288
Inscription of an Unknown Builder . . . . .	289-290
Inscription of Uni . . . . .	291-294
I. Career under Teti (l. 1) . . . . .	292-294
II. Career under Pepi I (ll. 2-32) . . . . .	306-315
III. Career under Mernere (ll. 32-50) . . . . .	319-324
Reign of Pepi I . . . . .	295-315
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	295-301

	§§
I. The King's Inscriptions . . . . .	296
II. The Expedition's Inscription . . . . .	297-298
III. Chief Architect's Inscription . . . . .	299
IV. Inscription of the Treasurer of the God Ikhi . . . . .	300-301
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	302-303
Inscription in the Hatnub Quarry . . . . .	304-305
Inscription of Uni: II Career under Pepi I . . . . .	306-315
Reign of Mernere . . . . .	316-336
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	316-318
I. Northern Inscription . . . . .	317
II. Southern Inscription . . . . .	318
Inscription of Uni: III Career under Mernere . . . . .	319-324
Inscriptions of Harkhuf . . . . .	325-336
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued) . . . . .	350-354
Reign of Pepi II . . . . .	337-385
Conveyance of Land by Idu, Called Also Seneni . . . . .	337-338
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	339-343
Stela of the Two Queens, Enekhnes-Merire . . . . .	344-349
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued from § 336) . . . . .	350-354
Letter of Pepi II . . . . .	350-354
I. Dates and Introduction . . . . .	351
II. Acknowledgment of Harkhuf's Letter . . . . .	351
III. Harkhuf's Rewards . . . . .	352
IV. King's Instructions . . . . .	353-354
Inscriptions of Pepi-Nakht . . . . .	355-360
Inscriptions of Khui . . . . .	361
Inscriptions of Sebni . . . . .	362-374
Inscriptions of Ibi . . . . .	375-379
Inscription of Zau . . . . .	380-385
Reign of Ity . . . . .	386-387
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	386-387
Reign of Imhotep . . . . .	388-390
THE NINTH AND TENTH DYNASTIES . . . . .	391-414
Inscriptions of Siut . . . . .	391-414
I. Inscription of Tefibi . . . . .	393-397
II. Inscription of Kheti I . . . . .	398-404
III. Inscription of Kheti II . . . . .	405-414

	§§
THE ELEVENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	415-459
The Nomarch, Intef . . . . .	419-420
Mortuary Stela . . . . .	419-420
Reign of Horus-Wahenekh-Intef I . . . . .	421-423
Royal Tomb Stela . . . . .	421-423
Reign of Horus-Nakhtneb-Tepnefer-Intef II . . . . .	423A-423G
Stela of Thethi . . . . .	423A-423G
Reign of Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I . . . . .	423H
Temple Fragments from Gebelen . . . . .	423H
Reigns of Intef III and Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep II . . . . .	424-426
Relief near Assuan . . . . .	424-426
Reign of Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III . . . . .	427-433
Hammamat Inscription of Henu . . . . .	427-433
Reign of Nibtowere-Mentuhotep IV . . . . .	434-459
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	434-459
I. The First Wonder . . . . .	435-438
II. The Official Tablet . . . . .	439-443
III. The Commander's Tablet . . . . .	444-448
IV. The Second Wonder . . . . .	449-451
V. Completion of the Work . . . . .	452-456
Stela of Eti . . . . .	457-459
THE TWELFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	460-750
Chronology of Twelfth Dynasty . . . . .	460-462
Reign of Amenemhet I . . . . .	463-497
Inscription of Khnumhotep I . . . . .	463-465
Hammamat Inscription of Intef . . . . .	466-468
Inscription of Nessumontu . . . . .	469-471
Inscription of Korusko . . . . .	472-473
The Teaching of Amenemhet . . . . .	474-483
Dedication Inscription . . . . .	484-485
The Tale of Sinuhe . . . . .	486-497
Reign of Sesostri I . . . . .	498-593
The Building Inscription of the Temple of Heliopolis . . . . .	498-506
Inscription of Meri . . . . .	507-509
Wadi Halfa Inscription of Mentuhotep . . . . .	510-514
Inscription of Amenemhet (Ameni) . . . . .	515-523
Stela of Ikudidi . . . . .	524-528
Inscription of Intefyoker . . . . .	529

	§§
Inscriptions of Mentuhotep . . . . .	530-534
The Contracts of Hepzefi . . . . .	535-538
I. First Contract . . . . .	539-543
II. Second Contract . . . . .	544-548
III. Third Contract . . . . .	549-553
IV. Fourth Contract . . . . .	554-558
V. Fifth Contract . . . . .	559-567
VI. Sixth Contract . . . . .	568-571
VII. Seventh Contract . . . . .	572-575
VIII. Eighth Contract . . . . .	576-581
IX. Ninth Contract . . . . .	582-588
X. Tenth Contract . . . . .	589-593
Reign of Amenemhet II . . . . .	594-613
Inscription of Simontu . . . . .	594-598
Inscription of Sihathor . . . . .	599-605
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	606
Stela of Khentemseti . . . . .	607-613
Reign of Sesostri II . . . . .	614-639
Inscription of Hapu . . . . .	614-618
Inscription of Khnumhotep II . . . . .	619-639
Reign of Sesostri III . . . . .	640-748
The Conquest of Nubia . . . . .	640-672
I. The Canal Inscriptions . . . . .	642-649
I. First Inscription . . . . .	643-645
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	646-648
II. The Elephantine Inscription . . . . .	649-650
III. The First Semneh Stela . . . . .	651-652
IV. The Second Semneh Stela . . . . .	653-660
V. Inscription of Ikhnofret . . . . .	661-670
VI. Inscription of Sisetet . . . . .	671-673
See also . . . . .	676 ff. and 687
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	674-675
Stela of Sebek-Khu, called Zaa . . . . .	676-687
Inscriptions of Thuthotep . . . . .	688-706
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	707-712
Inscriptions of Sinai . . . . .	713-738
I. Wadi Maghara . . . . .	713-723
I. Inscriptions of Khenemsu . . . . .	714-716

	§§
II. Inscription of Harnakht . . . . .	717-718
III. Inscription of Sebekdidi . . . . .	719-720
IV. Inscription of Ameni . . . . .	721-723
II. Sarbût el-Khadem . . . . .	724-738
I. Inscription of Sebek-hir-hab . . . . .	725-727
II. Inscription of Ptahwer . . . . .	728-729
III. Inscription of Amenemhet . . . . .	730-732
IV. Inscription of Harurre . . . . .	733-738
Turra Inscription . . . . .	739-742
Inscription of Schetepibre . . . . .	743-748
Reign of Amenemhet IV . . . . .	749-750
Kummeh Inscription . . . . .	749
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	750
FROM THE THIRTEENTH DYNASTY TO THE HYKSOS . . . . .	751-787
Reign of Sekhemre-Khutowe . . . . .	751-752
Records of Nile-Levels . . . . .	751-752
Reign of Neferhotep . . . . .	753-772
Great Abydos Stela . . . . .	753-765
Boundary Stela . . . . .	766-772
Reign of Nubkheprure-Intef . . . . .	773-780
Coptos Decree . . . . .	773-780
Reign of Khenzer . . . . .	781-787
Inscriptions of Ameniseneb . . . . .	781-787

VOLUME II

	§§
THE EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-1043
Reign of Ahmose I . . . . .	1-37
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	1-3
I. Career under Ahmose I (ll. 1-24) . . . . .	4-16
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-39
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	17-25
I. Ahmose's Campaigns [Continued § 40] . . . . .	18-20
II. Ahmose's Rewards . . . . .	21-24
III. Ahmose's Summary . . . . .	25

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xxv

	§§
Quarry Inscription . . . . .	26-28
Karnak Stela . . . . .	29-32
Building Inscription . . . . .	33-37
Reign of Amenhotep I . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	38-39
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	40-42
Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	40-42
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	43-46
I. Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	44-46
II. Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	99-108
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Stela of Harmini . . . . .	47-48
Stela of Keres . . . . .	49-52
Reign of Thutmose I . . . . .	54-114
Coronation Decree . . . . .	54-60
Biographical Inscription of Thure . . . . .	61-66
Tombos Stela . . . . .	67-73
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	74-77
I. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	75
II. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	76
III. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	77
Inscription of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	78-82
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	83-85
Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	83-85
Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	86-89
Abydos Stela . . . . .	90-98
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	99-108
II. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 4-14) . . . . .	99-108
Stela of Yuf . . . . .	109-114
Reign of Thutmose II . . . . .	115-127
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	115-118
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
Assuan Inscription . . . . .	119-122
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	123-124
IV. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	123-124

	§§
Campaign in Syria . . . . .	125
The Ebony Shrine of Der el-Bahri . . . . .	126-127
Reign of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	128-390
Introduction . . . . .	128-130
Inscription of the Coronation; Buildings and Offerings	131-166
Semneh Temple Inscriptions . . . . .	167
I. Renewal of Sesostris III's List of Offerings . . . . .	168-172
II. Dedication to Dedun and Sesostris III . . . . .	173-176
Biography of Nebwawi . . . . .	177
I. The Statue Inscription . . . . .	178-183
II. Abydos Stela . . . . .	184-186
The Birth of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	187-191
I. The Council of the Gods . . . . .	192
II. Interviews Between Amon and Thoth . . . . .	193-194
III. Amon with Queen Ahmose . . . . .	195-198
IV. Interview Between Amon and Khnum . . . . .	199-201
V. Khnum Fashions the Child . . . . .	202-203
VI. Interview Between Thoth and Queen Ahmose . . . . .	204
VII. Queen Ahmose is Led to Confinement . . . . .	205
VIII. The Birth . . . . .	206-207
IX. Presentation of the Child to Amon . . . . .	208
X. Council of Amon and Hathor . . . . .	209
XI. The Nursing of the Child . . . . .	210
XII. Second Interview of Amon and Thoth . . . . .	211
XIII. The Final Scene . . . . .	212
Statue of Enebni . . . . .	213
Vase Inscription . . . . .	214
The Coronation of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	215
I. The Purification . . . . .	216
II. Amon presents the Child to All the Gods . . . . .	217-220
III. The Northern Journey . . . . .	221-225
IV. Coronation by Atum . . . . .	226-227
V. Reception of the Crowns and the Names . . . . .	228-230
VI. Proclamation as King before Amon . . . . .	231
VII. Coronation before the Court . . . . .	232-239
VIII. Second Purification . . . . .	240-241
IX. Concluding Ceremonies . . . . .	242
Southern Pylon Inscription at Karnak . . . . .	243-245

	§§
The Punt Reliefs . . . . .	246-295
I. Departure of the Fleet . . . . .	252-253
II. Reception in Punt . . . . .	254-258
III. The Traffic . . . . .	259-262
IV. Loading the Vessels . . . . .	263-265
V. The Return Voyage . . . . .	266
VI. Presentation of the Tribute to the Queen by the Chiefs of Punt, Irem and Nemyew . . . . .	267-269
VII. The Queen Offers the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	270-272
VIII. Weighing and Measuring the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	273-282
IX. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition before Amon . . . . .	283-288
X. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition to the Court . . . . .	289-295
Inscription of the Speos Artemidos . . . . .	296-303
The Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	304-307
I. Shaft Inscriptions; Middle Columns . . . . .	308-311
II. Shaft Inscriptions; Side Columns . . . . .	312-313
III. Base Inscription . . . . .	314-321
Reliefs of Transportation of Obelisks . . . . .	322
I. Transport . . . . .	323-329
II. Reception in Thebes . . . . .	330-335
III. Dedication of the Obelisks . . . . .	336
Rock Inscription in Wadi Maghara . . . . .	337
Building Inscription of Western Thebes . . . . .	338-339
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	340-343
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	344
Conclusion of Summary . . . . .	344
Inscriptions of Senmut . . . . .	345-368
I. Inscriptions on the Karnak Statue . . . . .	349-358
II. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	359-362
III. Inscriptions on the Berlin Statue . . . . .	363-368
Inscription of Thutiy . . . . .	369-378
Inscriptions of Puemre . . . . .	379
I. Statue of Inscription . . . . .	380-381
II. Tomb Inscriptions . . . . .	382-387
Inscriptions of Hapuseneb . . . . .	388-390

	§§
Reign of Thutmose III . . . . .	391-779
The Annals . . . . .	391-405
The Annals: Conspectus of Campaigns . . . . .	406
I. Introduction . . . . .	407
II. First Campaign (Year 23) . . . . .	408-443
Wadi Halfa Inscription . . . . .	411-437
Fragment on the Siege of Megiddo . . . . .	438-443
III. Second Campaign (Year 24) . . . . .	444-449
IV. Third Campaign (Year 25) . . . . .	450-452
V. Fourth Campaign . . . . .	453
VI. Fifth Campaign (Year 29) . . . . .	454-462
VII. Sixth Campaign (Year 30) . . . . .	463-467
VIII. Seventh Campaign (Year 31) . . . . .	468-475
IX. Eighth Campaign (Year 33) . . . . .	476-487
X. Ninth Campaign (Year 34) . . . . .	488-495
XI. Tenth Campaign (Year 35) . . . . .	496-503
XII. Eleventh Campaign (Year 36) . . . . .	504
XIII. Twelfth Campaign (Year 37) . . . . .	505
XIV. Thirteenth Campaign (Year 38) . . . . .	506-515
XV. Fourteenth Campaign (Year 39) . . . . .	516-519
XVI. Fifteenth Campaign . . . . .	520-523
XVII. Sixteenth Campaign . . . . .	524-527
XVIII. Seventeenth Campaign . . . . .	528-539
XIX. Conclusion . . . . .	540
Feasts and Offerings from the Conquests . . . . .	541-573
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	574-592
Fragments of Karnak Pylon VII . . . . .	593-598
Great Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	599-608
Building Inscription of the Karnak Ptah-Temple . . . . .	609-622
Obelisks . . . . .	623
I. Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	624-625
II. Lateran Obelisks . . . . .	626-628
III. Constantinople Obelisk . . . . .	629-631
IV. London Obelisk . . . . .	632-633
V. New York Obelisk . . . . .	634-636
Medinet Habu Building Inscriptions . . . . .	637-641
Heliopolis Building Inscriptions . . . . .	642-643
Nubian Wars . . . . .	644-654

	§§
I. Canal Inscription . . . . .	649-650
II. Inscriptions of Nehi, Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	651-652
III. Offerings from the South Countries . . . . .	653-654
Hymn of Victory . . . . .	655-662
Tomb of Rekhmire . . . . .	663-759
I. Appointment of Rekhmire as Vizier . . . . .	665-670
II. Duties of the Vizier . . . . .	671-711
III. The Sitting of the Vizier . . . . .	712-713
IV. Reception of Petitions . . . . .	714-715
V. Inspection of Taxes of Upper Egypt . . . . .	716
A. Above Thebes . . . . .	717-728
B. Below Thebes . . . . .	729-745
VI. Reception of Dues to the Amon-Temple . . . . .	746-751
VII. Inspection of Daily Offerings and of Monuments . . . . .	752
VIII. Inspection of Craftsmen . . . . .	753-755
IX. Inspection of Sculptors and Builders . . . . .	756-759
X. Reception of Foreign Tribute . . . . .	760-761
XI. Accession of Amenhotep II . . . . .	762
Stela of Intef the Herald . . . . .	763-771
Tomb of Menkheperreseneb . . . . .	772-776
Stela of Nibamon . . . . .	777-779
Reign of Amenhotep II . . . . .	780
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	780-798
I. Karnak Stela . . . . .	781-790
II. Amâda and Elephantine Stelæ . . . . .	791-798
III. Karnak Chapel . . . . .	798A
Turra Inscription . . . . .	799-800
Tomb of Amenken . . . . .	801-802
Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	803-806
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	807-809
Reign of Thutmose IV . . . . .	810-840
Sphinx Stela . . . . .	810-815
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	816-822
Konosso Inscription . . . . .	823-829
Lateran Obelisk . . . . .	830-838
Stela of Pe'aoke . . . . .	839-840
Reign of Amenhotep III . . . . .	841-931
Birth and Coronation . . . . .	841

	§§
Nubian War . . . . .	842-855
I. Stela at First Cataract . . . . .	843-844
II. Stela of Konosso . . . . .	845
III. Bubastis Inscription . . . . .	846-850
IV. Semneh Inscription . . . . .	851-855
Tablet of Victory . . . . .	856-859
The Commemorative Scarabs . . . . .	860-869
I. Marriage with Tiy . . . . .	861-862
II. Wild Cattle Hunt . . . . .	863-864
III. Ten Years Lion-Hunting . . . . .	865
IV. Marriage with Kirgipa . . . . .	866-867
V. Construction of a Pleasure Lake . . . . .	868-869
Jubilee Celebrations . . . . .	870-874
Quarry and Mine Inscriptions . . . . .	875-877
Building Inscription . . . . .	878-892
I. Introduction (ll. 1-2) . . . . .	882
II. Temple of the (Memnon) Colossi (ll. 2-10) . . . . .	883-885
III. Luxor Temple and Connected Buildings . . . . .	886-887
IV. Sacred Barge of Amon (ll. 16-20) . . . . .	888
V. Third Pylon of Karnak (ll. 20-23) . . . . .	889
VI. Temple of Soleb (ll. 23-26) . . . . .	890
VII. Hymn of Amon to the King (ll. 26-31) . . . . .	891-892
Building Inscriptions of the Soleb Temple . . . . .	893-898
Great Inscription of the Third Karnak Pylon . . . . .	899-903
Dedication Stela . . . . .	904-910
I. Speech of the King (ll. 1-13) . . . . .	905-908
II. Speech of Amon (ll. 14-20) . . . . .	909
III. Speech of the Divine Ennead (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	910
Inscriptions of Amenhotep, Son of Hapi . . . . .	911-927
I. Statue Inscription . . . . .	913-920
II. Mortuary Temple Edict . . . . .	921-927
Statue of Nebnefer . . . . .	928-931
Reign of Ikhnaton . . . . .	932-1018
Quarry Inscription at Silsileh . . . . .	932-935
Tomb of the Vizier Ramose . . . . .	936-948
The Tell El-Amarna Landmarks . . . . .	949-972
Assuan Tablet of the Architect Bek . . . . .	973-976
The Tell El-Amarna Tombs . . . . .	977-1018

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xxxi

	§§
Tomb of Merire II . . . . .	981
Tomb of Merire I . . . . .	982-988
Tomb of Eye . . . . .	989-996
Tomb of Mai . . . . .	997-1003
Tomb of Ahmose . . . . .	1004-1008
Tomb of Tutu . . . . .	1009-1013
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1014-1018
Reign of Tutenkhamon . . . . .	1019-1041
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1019-1041
I. Investiture of the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	1020-1026
II. Tribute of the North . . . . .	1027-1033
III. Tribute of the South . . . . .	1034-1041
Reign of Eye . . . . .	1042-1043

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Punt Reliefs . . . . .	105

VOLUME III

	§§
THE NINETEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-651
Reign of Harmhab . . . . .	1-73
Tomb of Harmhab . . . . .	1-21
I. Leyden Fragments . . . . .	2-9
I. Stela with Adoration Scene . . . . .	2-5
II. Reward of Gold . . . . .	6-9
II. Vienna Fragment . . . . .	10-12
III. Alexandria Fragments . . . . .	13
IV. British Museum Fragments . . . . .	14-19
I. Doorposts . . . . .	14-17
II. Stela with Three Hymns . . . . .	18-19
V. Cairo Fragments . . . . .	20-21
Coronation Inscription . . . . .	22-32
Graffiti in the Theban Necropolis . . . . .	32A-32C
The Wars of Harmhab. . . . .	33-44
I. In the North . . . . .	34-36
II. In the South . . . . .	37-44
Edict of Harmhab. . . . .	45-67

	§§
I. Introduction (ll. 1-10) . . . . .	49
II. Introduction: The King's Zeal for the Relief of the People (ll. 10-14) . . . . .	50
III. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Royal Breweries and Kitchens (ll. 14-17)	51
IV. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Wood Due the Pharaoh (ll. 17-18) . . . . .	52
V. Enactment Against Exacting Dues from a Poor Man Thus Robbed (ll. 18-20) . . . . .	53
VI. Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Harem or the Gods by the Soldiers (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	54
VII. Enactments Against Unlawful Appropriation of Slave Service (ll. 22-24) . . . . .	55
VIII. Enactment Against Stealing of Hides by the Soldiers (ll. 25-28) . . . . .	56-57
IX. Against Connivance of Dishonest Inspectors with Thievish Tax-Collectors, for a Share of the Booty (ll. 28-32) . . . . .	58
X. Enactment Against Stealing Vegetables Under Pretense of Collecting Taxes (ll. 32-35) . . . . .	59
XI. Enactments too Fragmentary for Analysis (ll. 35- 39) and Right Side (ll. 1, 2) . . . . .	60-62
XII. Narrative of the King's Reforms, Containing Also an Enactment Against Corrupt Judges (ll. 3-7) . . . . .	63-65
XIII. Narrative of the King's Monthly Audiences and Largesses (ll. 7-10) . . . . .	66
XIV. Laudation of the King, and Conclusion (Left Side) . . . . .	67
Tomb of Neferhotep . . . . .	68-73
Reign of Ramses I . . . . .	74-79
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	74-79
Reign of Seti I . . . . .	80-250
Karnak Reliefs . . . . .	80-156
Scene 1. March through Southern Palestine . . . . .	83-84
Scene 2. Battle with the Shasu . . . . .	85-86
Scene 3. Capture of Pekanán . . . . .	87-88
Scene 4. Capture of Yenoam . . . . .	89-90

	§§
Scene 5. Submission of the Chiefs of Lebanon . . . . .	91-94
Scenes 6 and 7. Binding and Carrying Away Prisoners . . . . .	95-97
Scene 8. Reception in Egypt . . . . .	98-103
Scene 9. Presentation of Shasu Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	104-108
Scene 10. Presentation of Syrian Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	109-112
Scene 11. Slaying Prisoners Before Amon . . . . .	113-119
Scene 12. First Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	120-122
Scene 13. Second Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	123-132
Scene 14. Return from Libyan War . . . . .	133-134
Scene 15. Presentation of Libyan Prisoners and Spoil to Amon . . . . .	135-139
Scene 16. Capture of Kadesh . . . . .	140-141
Scene 17. Battle with the Hittites . . . . .	142-144
Scene 18. Carrying off Hittite Prisoners . . . . .	145-148
Scene 19. Presentation of Hittite Spoil and Prisoners to Amon . . . . .	149-152
Scene 20. Slaying Prisoners before Amon . . . . .	153-156
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	157-161
Inscriptions of Redesiyeh . . . . .	162-198
I. First Inscription . . . . .	169-174
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	175-194
III. Third Inscription . . . . .	195-198
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	199-250
I. First Cataract Inscription . . . . .	201-204
1. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	201-202
2. Elephantine Stela . . . . .	203-204
II. Silsileh Quarry Stela . . . . .	205-208
III. Gebelên Quarry Inscription . . . . .	209-210
IV. Mortuary Temple at Thebes (Kurna) . . . . .	211-221
V. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	222-224
VI. Mortuary Temple at Abydos . . . . .	225-243
VII. Temple Model of Heliopolis . . . . .	244-246
VIII. Miscellaneous . . . . .	247-250
Reign of Ramses II . . . . .	251-568
Great Abydos Inscription . . . . .	251-281
Kubbân Stela . . . . .	282-293

	§§
The Asiatic War . . . . .	294-391
I. Beginning of the Hittite War . . . . .	296-351
I. First Campaign . . . . .	297
II. Second Campaign: The Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	298-351
a. Poem of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	305-315
b. Official Record of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	316-327
c. The Reliefs of the Battle of Kadesh. . . . .	328
I. The Council of War . . . . .	329-330
II. The Camp . . . . .	331-332
III. Ramses' Messengers . . . . .	333-334
IV. The Battle . . . . .	335-338
V. The Defense of the Camp . . . . .	339-340
VI. After the Battle . . . . .	341-347
VII. Presentation of Captives to Amon . . . . .	348-351
III. Palestinian Revolt . . . . .	352-362
I. Reconquest of Southern Palestine . . . . .	353-355
II. Reconquest of Northern Palestine . . . . .	356-362
IV. Campaign in Naharin . . . . .	363-391
I. Conquest of Naharin . . . . .	364-366
II. Treaty with the Hittites . . . . .	367-391
Relations of Egypt with the Hittites after the War . . . . .	392-491
I. The Blessing of Ptah . . . . .	394-414
II. Marriage Stela . . . . .	415-424
III. Message of the Chief of Kheta to the Chief of Kode . . . . .	425-426
IV. Coptos Stela . . . . .	427-428
V. Bentresh Stela . . . . .	429-447
Nubian Wars and References to Northern Wars . . . . .	448-491
I. Abu Simbel Temple . . . . .	449-457
II. Bet el-Walli Temple . . . . .	458-477
III. Assuan Stela . . . . .	478-479
IV. Luxor Temple . . . . .	480-484
V. Abydos Temple . . . . .	485-486
VI. Tanis Stelæ . . . . .	487-491
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	492-537
I. Great Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	495-499
II. Small Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	500-501
III. Temple of Serreh . . . . .	502

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xxxv

	§§
IV. Temple of Derr . . . . .	503
V. Temple of Sebûc'a . . . . .	504
VI. Temple of el Kab . . . . .	505
VII. Temple of Luxor . . . . .	506-508
VIII. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	509-513
IX. The Ramesseum . . . . .	514-515
X. Temple of Kurna . . . . .	516-522
XI. Seti I's Temple at Abydos and Great Abydos Inscription . . . . .	262-267
XII. Ramses II's Temple at Abydos . . . . .	524-529
XIII. Memphis Temples . . . . .	530-537
1. Great Abydos Inscription (l. 22) . . . . .	260
2. Blessing of Ptah (ll. 32, 35) . . . . .	412-413
XIV. City of Tanis (Blessing of Ptah (ll. 16-18) . . . . .	406
Stela of the Year 400 . . . . .	538-542
Royal Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	543-560
I. First Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	552
II. Bigeh Inscription . . . . .	553
III. Second Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	554
IV. Third Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	555
V. Fourth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	556
VI. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	557
VII. El Kab Inscription . . . . .	558
VIII. Fifth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	559
IX. Sixth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	560
Inscription of Beknekhonsu . . . . .	561-568
Reign of Merneptah . . . . .	569-638
The Invasion of Libyans and Mediterranean Peoples . . . . .	569-617
I. The Great Karnak Inscription . . . . .	572-592
II. The Cairo Column . . . . .	593-595
III. The Athribis Stela . . . . .	596-601
IV. The Hymn of Victory . . . . .	602-617
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Roy . . . . .	618-628
Daybook of a Frontier Official . . . . .	629-635
Letter of a Frontier Official . . . . .	636-638
Reign of Siptah . . . . .	639-650
Nubian Graffiti . . . . .	639-650

LIST OF FIGURES		PAGE
Fig. 1.	Plan of the Reliefs of Seti I, on the North Wall of the Great Hall of Karnak . . . . .	39
Fig. 2.	Seti I on the Route through Southern Palestine (Scene 1) . . . . .	44
Fig. 3.	Showing Two Superimposed Figures . . . . .	61
Fig. 4.	Inserted Figure of "First King's-Son" . . . . .	61
Fig. 5.	An Unknown Prince Following the Chariot of Seti I (Scene 14) . . . . .	66
Fig. 6.	Figure of an Unknown Prince Inserted in a Fragmentary Scene (§ 130) . . . . .	66
Fig. 7.	Map of the Orontes Valley in the Vicinity of Kadesh . . . . .	126
Fig. 8.	March to Kadesh: First Positions . . . . .	128
Fig. 9.	Battle of Kadesh: Second Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 10.	Battle of Kadesh: Third Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 11.	Battle of Kadesh: Fourth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 12.	Battle of Kadesh: Fifth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 13.	The Modern Mound of Kadesh . . . . .	152

VOLUME IV

		§§
THE TWENTIETH DYNASTY . . . . .		1-603
Reign of Ramses III . . . . .		1-456
Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		1-150
Building and Dedication Inscriptions . . . . .		1-20
Historical Inscriptions . . . . .		21-138
I. Treasury of Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		25-34
II. First Libyan War, Year 5 . . . . .		35-58
1. Great Inscription in the Second Court (Year 5) . . . . .		36-58
III. Northern War, Year 8 . . . . .		59-82
1. Great Inscription on the Second Pylon, Year 8 . . . . .		61-68
2. Relief Scenes Outside North Wall and in Second Court, Year 8 . . . . .		69-82
IV. Second Libyan War . . . . .		83-114

	§§
1. Great Inscription on the First Pylon (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	85-92
2. Poem on Second Libyan War . . . . .	93-99
3. Relief Scenes on First Pylon and Outside North Wall (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	100-114
4. Papyrus Harris . . . . .	405
V. The Syrian War . . . . .	115-135
VI. The Nubian War . . . . .	136-138
Medinet Habu Temple Calendar . . . . .	139-145
Act of Endowment of the Temples of Khnum . . . . .	146-150
Papyrus Harris . . . . .	151-412
Discussion of . . . . .	151-181
Content:
I. Introduction . . . . .	182-183
II. Theban Section . . . . .	184-246
III. Heliopolitan Section . . . . .	247-304
IV. Memphite Section . . . . .	305-351
V. General Section (Small Temples) . . . . .	352-382
VI. Summary . . . . .	383-396
VII. Historical Section . . . . .	397-412
Record of the Royal Jubilee . . . . .	413-415
Records of the Harem Conspiracy . . . . .	416-456
I. Appointment of the Court . . . . .	423-424
II. The Condemned of the First Prosecution . . . . .	425-443
III. The Condemned of the Second Prosecution . . . . .	444-445
IV. The Condemned of the Third Prosecution . . . . .	446-450
V. The Condemned of the Fourth Prosecution . . . . .	451-452
VI. The Acquitted . . . . .	453
VII. The Practicers of Magic . . . . .	454-456
Reign of Ramses IV . . . . .	457-472
Hammamat Stela . . . . .	457-468
I. The First Stela . . . . .	457-460
II. The Second Stela . . . . .	461-468
Abydos Stela . . . . .	469-471
Building Inscription of the Khonsu Temple . . . . .	472
Reign of Ramses V . . . . .	473
Tomb Dedication . . . . .	473
Reign of Ramses VI . . . . .	474-483

	§§
Tomb of Penno . . . . .	474-483
Reign of Ramses VII . . . . .	484-485
Stela of Hori . . . . .	484-485
Reign of Ramses IX . . . . .	486-556
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Amenhotep	486-498
I. Building Inscriptions . . . . .	488-491
II. Records of Rewards . . . . .	492-498
The Records of the Royal Tomb-Robberies . . . . .	499-556
I. Papyrus Abbott . . . . .	509-535
II. Papyrus Amherst . . . . .	536-541
III. Turin Fragment . . . . .	542-543
IV. Mayer Papyri . . . . .	544-556
Reign of Ramses XII . . . . .	557-603
The Report of Wenamon . . . . .	557-591
Records of the Restoration of the Royal Mummies . . . . .	592-594
Letter to the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	595-600
Building Inscriptions in the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	601-603
THE TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY . . . . .	604-692
The Twenty-First Dynasty . . . . .	604-607
Reign of Hrihor . . . . .	608-626
Inscriptions of the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	608-626
Reign of Nesubenedbed . . . . .	627-630
Gebelên Inscription . . . . .	627-630
Reign of the High Priest and King Paynozem I . . . . .	631-649
I. Paynozem I as High Priest . . . . .	631-635
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	631-635
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	636-642
II. Paynozem I as King . . . . .	643 ff.
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	643-647
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	648-649
High Priesthood of Menkheperre . . . . .	650-661
Stela of the Banishment . . . . .	650-658
Record of Restoration . . . . .	659
Karnak Graffito . . . . .	660
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	661
High Priesthood of Paynozem II . . . . .	662-687
Records on the Priestly Mummies . . . . .	662-663
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	664-667

	§§
Record of Paynozem II's Burial . . . . .	668
Stela of the "Great Chief of Me," Sheshonk . . . . .	669-687
High Priesthood of Pesibkhenno . . . . .	688-692
Records on Mummy-Wrappings . . . . .	688
Burial of Nesikhonsu . . . . .	689
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	690-692
THE TWENTY-SECOND DYNASTY . . . . .	693-792
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	693-698
Reign of Sheshonk I . . . . .	699-728
Records on Mummy-Bandages of Zeptahefonekh . . . . .	699-700
Building Inscription . . . . .	701-708
Great Karnak Relief . . . . .	709-722
Presentation of Tribute . . . . .	723-724
Karnak Stela . . . . .	724A
Dakhel Stela . . . . .	725-728
Reign of Osorkon I . . . . .	729-737
Record of Temple Gifts . . . . .	729-737
Reign of Takelot I . . . . .	738-740
Statue of the Nile-God Dedicated by the High Priest, Sheshonk . . . . .	738-740
Reign of Osorkon II . . . . .	742-751
Flood Inscription . . . . .	742-744
Statue Inscription . . . . .	745-747
Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	748-751
Reign of Takelot II . . . . .	752-755
Graffito of Harsiese . . . . .	752-754
Stela of Kerome . . . . .	755
Reign of Sheshonk III . . . . .	756-777
Annals of the High Priest of Amon, Osorkon . . . . .	756-770
I. East of Door . . . . .	760-761
II. West of Door . . . . .	762-770
First Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	771-774
Record of Installation . . . . .	775-777
Reign of Pemou . . . . .	778-781
Second Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	778-781
Reign of Sheshonk IV . . . . .	782-792
Stela of Weshtehet . . . . .	782-784

	§§
Serapeum Stela of Harpeson . . . . .	785-792
THE TWENTY-THIRD DYNASTY. . . . .	793-883
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	793-794
Reign of Osorkon III . . . . .	795
Will of Yewelot . . . . .	795
Reign of Piankhi . . . . .	796-883
The Piankhi Stela . . . . .	796-883
THE TWENTY-FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	884
Reign of Bocchoris . . . . .	884
Serapeum Stelæ . . . . .	884
THE TWENTY-FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	885-934
Records of the Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	885-888
Reign of Shabaka . . . . .	889
Building Inscription . . . . .	889
Reign of Taharka . . . . .	892-918
Tanis Stela . . . . .	892-896
Building Inscription in Large Cliff-Temple of Napata	897-900
Inscription of Mentemhet . . . . .	901-916
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	917-918
Reign of Tanutamon . . . . .	919-934
Stela of Tanutamon . . . . .	919-934
THE TWENTY-SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	935-1029
Reign of Psamtik I . . . . .	935-973
Adoption Stela of Nitocris . . . . .	935-958
Statue Inscription of the Chief Steward, Ibe . . . . .	958A-958M
First Serapeum Stela . . . . .	959-962
Second Serapeum Stela . . . . .	963-966
Statue Inscription of Hor . . . . .	967-973
Reign of Necho . . . . .	974-980
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	974-979
Building Inscription . . . . .	980
Reign of Psamtik II . . . . .	981-983
Statue Inscription of Neferibre-Nofer . . . . .	981-983
Reign of Apries . . . . .	984-995
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	984-988
Stela of the Divine Consort Enekhnesneferibre . . . . .	988A-988J
Inscription of Nesuhor . . . . .	989-995

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xli

---

	§§
Reign of Amasis (Ahmose II). . . . .	996-1029
Elephantine Stela . . . . .	996-1007
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	1008-1012
Statue Inscription of the General Ahmose . . . . .	1013-1014
Statue Inscription of Pefnefdineit . . . . .	1015-1025
Mortuary Stelæ of the Priest Psantik . . . . .	1026-1029

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Scenes and Inscriptions in Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .	5
INDEX . . . . .	521

EXPLANATION OF TYPOGRAPHICAL SIGNS AND SPECIAL CHARACTERS

1. The introductions to the documents are in twelve-point type, like these lines.

2. All of the translations are in ten-point type, like this line.

3. In the footnotes and introductions all quotations from the documents in the original words of the translation are in italics, inclosed in quotation marks. Italics are not employed in the text of the volumes for any other purpose except for titles.

4. The lines of the original document are indicated in the translation by superior numbers.

5. The loss of a word in the original is indicated by —, two words by — —, three words by — — —, four words by — — — —, five words by — — — — —, and more than five by —————. A word in the original is estimated at a “square” as known to Egyptologists, and the estimate can be but a very rough one.

6. When any of the dashes, like those of No. 5, are inclosed in half-brackets, the dashes so inclosed indicate not lost, but uncertain words. Thus [—] represents one uncertain word, [— —] two uncertain words, and [————] more than five uncertain words.

7. When a word or group of words are inclosed in half-brackets, the words so inclosed are uncertain in meaning; that is, the translation is not above question.

8. Roman numerals I, II, III, and IV, not preceded by the title of any book or journal, refer to these four volumes of Historical Documents. The Arabic numerals following such Romans refer to the numbered paragraphs of these volumes. All paragraph marks (§ and §§, without a Roman) refer to paragraphs of the same volume.

9. For signs used in transliteration, see Vol. I, p. xv.

THE DOCUMENTARY SOURCES OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY

THE DOCUMENTARY SOURCES OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY

1. The general course and the gradual development of Egyptian civilization are in some respects roughly traceable in its surviving material documents, in the products of the artist and the craftsman, which we are accustomed to assign to the domain of the archæologist. With these invaluable material documents the present volumes of course do not deal. They purpose to present only those written documents from which the career of the Nile valley peoples may be drawn at the present day. A rapid survey of the materials herein presented may enable the non-Egyptologist to gain some preliminary conception of their general character.

2. Comparatively speaking, but very little of the rich and productive civilization which flourished for at least five millenniums before Christ on the banks of the lower Nile, has survived in written documents for our enlightenment. Accident has preserved but here and there the merest scrap of the vast mass of written records which the incessant political, legal, administrative, religious, industrial, commercial, and literary activities filling the life of this ancient people, were constantly putting forth. We may make one exception: the religious literature, doubtless the least instructive, as a whole, of all their literary documents, has survived in an incalculable mass of temple inscriptions and papyri, which have never even been adequately published, much less exhaustively studied.

3. It is with those documents in which the national career as a whole can be traced that we have here to deal. From the pre-dynastic age onward the kings kept a series of annals, recording in each year the great deeds and achievements of the Pharaoh which he thought worthy of perpetuation. Of such annals only two fragments have survived: the Palermo Stone, part of a record extending from the earliest times down into the Fifth Dynasty; and the annals of Thutmose III's wars, of which a few extracts were excerpted by a priestly scribe and recorded on the walls of the Karnak temple. Had we the annals of the Pharaohs in complete form, we might perhaps write almost as full a history of Egypt as it is possible to do for the Middle Ages of European history. Without these, we are dependent upon a miscellaneous mass of documents of the most varied character and value, which chance and circumstance have preserved from destruction these thousands of years. In general, such documents show more literary character and picturesqueness than the Assyro-Babylonian records; but the latter dry and formal annals possess greater historical value, and exhibit a preciseness which induces them with a rare availability as sources. The Egyptian records which chance has preserved to us are, as a whole, so vague and indefinite in their references to peoples, localities, persons, and the character of events, that they are often tantalizing in what they do not tell us. Thus in records of whole campaigns of Thutmose III in Syria the hostile Syrian king is designated merely as "that foe" (lit. "fallen one"), and we are uncertain whether the king of Kadesh, of Mitanni, of Aleppo, or of some other realm is meant. The real excerpts from Thutmose III's Annals (II, 391 ff.), however, show that such records contained an elaboration of detail not less precise and historically available than the cuneiform annals. So much the more must we deplore their loss.

4. How hazardous was the life of such a document may be well illustrated by the great building inscription, upon a huge stone stela, erected by Sesostris I nearly two thousand years before Christ, in his new temple at Heliopolis. The great block itself has since perished utterly; but the practice-copy made by a scribe, who was whiling away an idle hour in the sunny temple court, has survived, and the fragile roll of leather (§§ 498 ff.) upon which he was thus exercising his pen, has transmitted to us what the massive stone could not preserve.

5. That we possess any documents at all from the Old Kingdom (2980-2400 B. C.) is chiefly due to the massive masonry tombs of that age, in which they were recorded. The exceptions are inscriptions on foreign soil, and a few scanty fragments of papyrus containing accounts and letters. The vast quantity of such papyrus documents which once existed is evidenced by the constant appearance of the scribe with his rolls, his pens, and his ink palette, in the tomb reliefs. Such hints from the numerous reliefs in the tombs of this age are the source of our knowledge of the material culture of the time. The chief inscriptions which accompany them consist almost exclusively of the name and many titles of the owner of the tomb. Now and again the legal enactment by which the tomb was endowed and maintained is recorded on the wall. Such wills and conveyances are, of course, invaluable cultural documents.

6. Gradually the nobles were inclined to add a few biographical details to the series of bare titles. The first of such scanty biographies appears at the end of the Third Dynasty (§§ 170 ff.), after which there is a growing fondness for recording at least the chief honors received by the deceased from the Pharaoh, especially the furnishing and equipment of his tomb at the king's expense. The daily intercourse of the deceased with the king, the privileges which he enjoyed in connection with the royal person, or now and then the copy of a letter from the king to his favorite—all these serve to make such biographies of inestimable value in completing our picture of the culture of the time. In the Sixth Dynasty these biographies become real narratives of the career of the departed noble, or at least of his most notable achievements in the service of the Pharaoh. The most important documents of this character are the biographies of Uni (§§ 291 ff.), and the nobles of Elephantine (§§ 325 ff., 355 ff., 362 ff.), one of whom has included therein a personal letter from the king (§§ 350 ff.).

7. As the aggressiveness of the Pharaohs increased, their foreign enterprises found record on the rocks in a number of distant regions (outside of Egypt proper), where they still exist. In the Peninsula of Sinai they appear in the First Dynasty (began 3400 B. C.); by the Fifth Dynasty (ended by 2580 B. C.) the officials who led such expeditions commenced to add their own records below the mere relief depicting the triumphant king, a scene to which heretofore only the name of the king was appended. From the Fourth Dynasty such memorials begin to appear in the alabaster quarries of Hatnub, behind Amarna; and from the reign of Isesi, in the Fifth Dynasty, they become more and more numerous in the quarries of Hammamat in the eastern desert, on the road from Coptos to the Red Sea. Practically all that we know, for example, of the power and deeds of the Eleventh Dynasty (2160–2000 B. C.) is drawn from records in these quarries.

8. They soon become so regular that their stoppage is almost certain evidence of an interruption in the orderly course of government in the Nile valley. Similar inscriptions on the rocks at the first cataract (§§ 316 ff.) begin in the time of Mernere, of the Sixth Dynasty (2625–2475 B. C.). The earliest inscription (§§ 472, 473) above the cataract in Nubia itself dates from the reign of Amenemhet I, the first king of the Twelfth Dynasty (2000-1788 B. C.). Under the Empire such records on foreign soil appear also in Syria and Palestine (III, 297). Quarry inscriptions within the borders of Egypt do not begin until the Middle Kingdom, when we find them in the limestone quarries of Ayan (Turra-Ma'sara) just south of Cairo (§§ 739, 740); at the sandstone quarries of Silsileh they first appear under the Empire.

9. From the Middle Kingdom (2160-1788 B. C.) on, the memorial stelæ at Abydos are exceedingly valuable.<sup>a</sup> Officials on various commissions, whose business carried them to the holy city, improved the opportunity to erect memorial stones craving the favor of Osiris, the great god of the dead, for themselves and their relatives. Now and again such an officer narrates the circumstances which called him to Abydos; thus Ikhernofret, the treasurer of Sesostri III, records on his stela (§§ 661-70) not only the occasion of his visit, but also a copy of the royal letter which contained the command dispatching him thither.

10. In this age the tomb biographies become extremely valuable, because of their tendency to fulness and family details—a tendency already visible in the Tenth Dynasty tombs at Siut (§§ 391 ff.). But unfortunately only the tombs of Middle Egypt, chiefly at Benihasan (§§ 619 ff.), are preserved. Royal monuments with inscribed records become more plentiful, especially in Nubia, where the boundary stelæ of Sesostri III (§§ 651-60) are especially noteworthy; and in the quarries of Hammamat and the mines of Sinai. Papyri of any kind in the Middle Kingdom are still none too plentiful. Literary papyri are well represented by several magnificent manuscripts. Of business and administrative documents, like letters, bills, accounts and tax lists, we have examples in the Kahun Papyri, of which the second find, now at Berlin, is still unpublished. But papyrus documents of strictly historical import, such as we can include here, are still rare in this age.

---

<sup>a</sup>The great Old Kingdom inscription of Uni at Abydos hardly belongs to the class of memorial stelæ here designated. The inscription of Zau (§§ 344-49), of the Sixth Dynasty, however, should probably be included in this class; but it is unique in its time.

11. Under the Empire (1580-1150 B. C.) the available documents both in quantity and quality for the first time approach the minimum which in European history would be regarded as adequate to a moderately full presentation of the career of the nation. Scores of important questions, however, still remain unanswered, in whatever direction we turn. Nevertheless, a rough framework of the governmental organization, the constitution of society, the most important achievements of the kings, and to a limited extent the spirit of the imperial age, may be discerned and sketched, in the main outlines, with clearness and fair precision, even though it is only here and there that the sources enable us to fill in the detail.

12. It is especially royal monuments which are more plentiful in the Empire, as compared with earlier times. The first and most important class of such documents is found in the temples—a source which in the earlier periods has totally perished. It was customary already at the beginning of the dynasties for the king to commemorate his victories in the temples. This custom led in the Empire to extensive and magnificent records on the temple walls, on a scale not before attempted. Such documents were less records than triumphal memorials, and as historical sources they are therefore very insufficient. They dealt with events with which all were familiar at the time of their erection, and hence specific references to the said events are rare, or, if present at all, are couched in such vague and general terms that little can be drawn from them at the present day.

13. They consist chiefly in extensive reliefs on the temple walls, depicting the victorious Pharaoh in battle, capturing prisoners, or presenting prisoners and spoil to Amon. They are accompanied by descriptive and explanatory inscriptions, which unfortunately consist, for the most part, in conventional phrases in laudation of the Pharaoh as a mighty ruler. As the temples of the Eighteenth Dynasty have to a large extent perished, the priceless records of that imperial family have perished with them. We have three great series of reliefs: one representing the birth of Queen Hatshepsut (II, 187 ff.), and a duplicate depicting the birth of Amenhotep III (II, 841 ff.), while the third pictures the voyage of Hatshepsut to the land of Punt (II, 246 ff.). More valuable are the extracts from the annals of Thutmose III on the walls of the Karnak temple (II, 391 ff.), already mentioned, and a similar record of his son Amenhotep II on a large stela at Karnak (II, 780 ff.). The temple records of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Dynasties are much more plentiful; but they are almost exclusively of the unprecise character above described. Besides the great record of Merneptah's Libyan war, (III, 569-617), which is a much better source, they are chiefly memorials of the wars of Seti I (III, 80-156), of his son, Ramses II (IV, 294-391, 448-91), and of Ramses III, of the Twentieth Dynasty (IV, 1-145).

14. Another class of temple records is the building inscriptions. Apart from their value as records of building enterprises, they contain valuable references to the history of the builder. In a number of cases the early career of the builder and the manner in which he came to the throne are prefixed as an introduction to the record of the building itself. This is observable as far back as the building inscription of Sesostris I, in the Twelfth Dynasty (§§ 498 ff.); in the Eighteenth Dynasty (1580-1350 B. C.) we gain invaluable hints of the early life of Thutmose III from his great building inscription in the Karnak temple (II, 131 ff.). Such building records not infrequently also contain priceless references to the wars and campaigns of the Pharaoh, whence he may have obtained the wealth for the edifice in question. Notable examples of this class are the stela of Thutmose III in the Ptah temple at Karnak (II, 609 ff.), and the great summary of the buildings of Amenhotep III left by him on a stela in his mortuary temple at Thebes (II, 878 ff.).

15. Records of restorations are not less valuable. The restoration record of Hatshepsut at Benihasan (II, 296 ff.) throws a significant sidelight on the reasons necessitating such restoration of the temples, after their neglect by the Hyksos; while the short remarks of Harmhab and Seti I, recording their restorations after the revolution of Ikhnaton, are invaluable indications of the widespread activity of the latter (II, 878). Again, we gain a hint of the anarchy following this revolution, from the record of Harmhab's restoration of the mummy of Thutmose IV, after its violation by tomb-robbers (III, 32 A ff.).

16. Stelæ dedicating the finished temple to the god were set up in the holy of holies, at the place where the king stood in the performance of the royal ritual. Some of these were of enormous size, that of Amenhotep III in his temple behind the Memnon colossi being no less than thirty feet high, and hewn of a single block (II, 904 ff.). The content of these dedication stelæ does not differ essentially from that of the building inscriptions; they likewise contain references to the wars of the kings erecting them. The most important of these now surviving are the two in duplicate erected by Amenhotep II at Amâda and Elephantine

(II, 791 ff.). The temple obelisks also occasionally bear inscriptions of historical importance, and among these the inscriptions of Hatshepsut (II, 304 ff.), of Thutmose III (II, 623 ff.), and of Thutmose IV (II, 830 ff.) furnish very useful data.

17. All these temple records, being for the glory of the Pharaoh, are couched in language very poetic and highly colored, although the poetic form is not always discernible. Among them, however, are found poems in praise of the sovereign, exhibiting strictly poetic structure, with rigid division into strophes. Some of these contain references and allusions which, in view of the scantiness of our materials, may be employed historically. Such hymns probably existed from the earliest days of the dynasties, but the earliest example preserved is dedicated to the praise of Sesostris III, of the Twelfth Dynasty.<sup>a</sup> In the Empire the most notable example celebrates the fame of Thutmose III (II, 655 ff.). It is the earliest of such poems possessing real historical importance.

18. Royal records not of this class of temple memorials are not numerous. Of actual state documents we possess very few. The viceroy of Kush recorded on stone the decree in which Thutmose I announced his coronation, and of this rescript we possess two copies (II, 54 ff.). At the opening of the Nineteenth Dynasty (1350-1205 B. C.) we have the royal decree instituting the administrative reforms of Harmhab; it is possibly in its original form (III, 45-67). Another great example of a state document is the famous treaty between Ramses II and the Hittite king Khetasar (III, 367-91). The remarkable report of the unfortunate envoy to Syria, Wenamon, may also be a few pages from the royal archives at Thebes (IV, 557 ff.). A few letters from the king personally (e. g., §§ 350 ff., 664, 665) and some legal records (IV, 499-557) complete the list of state documents. The remaining royal documents are of a miscellaneous character, like the unique memorial scarabs of Amenhotep III (II, 860 ff.), or the huge stelæ erected as landmarks by Ikhnaton for the purpose of demarking the limits of his new capital at Amarna (II, 949 ff.). Finally, the greatest of all royal documents is the enormous Papyrus Harris, recording the good deeds of Ramses III (1198-1167 B. C.) to gods and men, compiled for his tomb, as a title to consideration at the hands of the gods in the future life (IV, 151-412).

<sup>a</sup>Its historical references are too vague and general to warrant its insertion in this series.

19. The private monuments of the Empire are also more numerous than before and contribute greatly to our knowledge of it. The tombs of the Pharaoh's grandees have now become more personal monuments than ever before. These men, who were guiding Egypt on her imperial career, delighted to perpetuate in their tombs some record of the brilliant part which they were playing in these great events. The generals and administrative officials who under the Pharaoh governed the Empire, now sleep in rock-hewn tombs at Thebes, the chambers of which still bear magnificently painted scenes from their active and adventurous lives. Here we behold the reception of tribute from the remotest limits of the Empire, borne on the shoulders of Palestinians, Syrians, or northern islanders, the whole being accompanied by explanatory inscriptions. The various duties and activities of the greatest officials of the government are here depicted, and from these scenes and the appended inscriptions we can draw fuller data respecting the Empire and its organization than from any other source.

20. These tomb chapels, besides the Amarna Letters, are also the only surviving contemporary source for the civilization of Syria and Palestine in the second millennium before Christ. The most important of such tombs is that of Rekhmire, the vizier of Thutmose III (II, 663-762). The biographies of the generals preserved in these tomb chapels are not infrequently our only source for entire wars of the Pharaoh, of which we should not otherwise have known anything at all—not even that they took place. Besides these tomb inscriptions, the nobles also recorded their biographies, or at least some of their achievements, on the statues accorded them by the Pharaoh in the Karnak temple. Examples of such records are the statue of Senmut (II, 345 ff.), or that of Beknekhonsu (III, 561 ff.). After the Eighteenth Dynasty the Empire abounds in papyri: letters, bills, receipts, administrative and legal documents, memoranda, numerous literary compositions, scientific treatises like those on medicine, mathematics, or astronomy, religious documents, and innumerable ostraca, or potsherds and flakes of limestone bearing receipts, letters, memoranda, or literary fragments. These, for the most part, fall outside of the scope of the present volumes and will appear in later series of these Ancient Records.

21. Such are the main sources for the history of the Empire; there are, of course, numerous unimportant miscellaneous monuments which we have not mentioned; nor do we recall all the classes of documents already referred to in the older epochs, like the inscriptions abroad, which now become very plentiful. Indeed, the rocks of the first cataract under the Empire became a veritable visitors' register of the officials and functionaries who, passing on some commission in Nubia, left a record of the errand, or merely name and titles, engraved on the rocks above the reach of the inundation (e. g., II, 675 ff.). Inscriptions of the emperors are found in Nubia as far south as the island of Tombos, and mere cartouches with titles up to the fourth cataract.

22. With the decline of Thebes in the Decadence (1150-663 B. C.), and the transference of the seat of power to the North, the great mass of records of the royal houses was produced, and their monuments were erected, in the Delta, where almost the whole has perished forever, with the destruction of the exposed Delta cities, overwhelmed by invasion after invasion from abroad, and gradually engulfed by the rising soil as deposited from century to century by the inundation. The fortunes of the northern dynasties can therefore be traced only in the scanty monuments of Thebes, in which the Pharaohs no longer built largely, and at Memphis, where we have a series of dated stelæ recording Apis burials in the Serapeum. These are of great value from the Twenty-second to the Twenty-sixth Dynasty. At Thebes the records of the restoration of royal mummies extend from the last generation of the Twentieth into the Twenty-second Dynasty (IV, 592 ff., 636 ff., 661 ff., 664 ff., 688 ff., 690 ff., 699 f.); and a series of dated Nile levels on the quay at Karnak continues from the Twenty-second to the Twenty-sixth Dynasty (IV, 693 ff.). We have at Thebes also a few temple records from the priest-kings of the Twenty-first Dynasty (1090-945 B. C.), a series of decrees of Amon (IV, 614 ff., 650 ff., 669 ff.), and some not very important building records of the high priests of Amon, during the same period. The same is true in the Twenty-second Dynasty (945-755 B. C.), through the brief Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Dynasties (755-712 B. C.), and the Ethiopian period (Twenty-fifth Dynasty, 712-663 B. C.). At this point, fortunately, the scanty monuments of the Delta are supplemented by the historical stelæ erected by the Ethiopians at Gebel Barkal (Napata). Among these, the narrative of his conquest of Egypt by Piankhi is one of the most remarkable documents of ancient Egypt (IV, 796-883).

23. The paucity of documents, so painfully evident during the Decadence, is even worse under the Restoration (Twenty-sixth Dynasty, 663-525 B. C.). Besides the great adoption stela of Psamtik I at Thebes (IV, 935 ff.), a few Serapeum stelæ, important for the chronology, a small number of statue inscriptions of noblemen of the time, and some miscellaneous stelæ of little importance, we possess almost nothing from the Restoration. Unhappily, the papyri, which are so plentiful during the Nineteenth, Twentieth, and Twenty-first Dynasties, are few and unimportant throughout the remainder of the Decadence and the whole of the Restoration. Fortunately, Herodotus, and the Greek historians after him, enter at this point with invaluable accounts of the history and civilization of the Restoration epoch; but these foreign sources do not fall within the province of these volumes.

24. Besides these contemporary native sources, we possess also a series of later native versions of important events in the history of the nation. These documents are either merely folk-tales, of course differing strikingly in form from the more formal contemporary records; or they are products of the later priesthoods, which, in the form of a tale, give an account of some earlier event, which they so interpret or so distort as to bring reputation, or even material gain, to their sanctuaries. Of the folk-tales we have three of importance: Papyrus Westcar, relating the prodigies attending the birth of the first three Fifth Dynasty kings; Papyrus Sallier I, narrating the cause of the war with the Hyksos; and Papyrus Harris 500, in which is told the story of the capture of Joppa by one of Thutmose III's generals, named Thutiy. As tales these documents have no place in this series, although each is based on some actual historical incident, which may be obscurely discerned in the narrative. The priestly tales are likewise three in number: the Sehel inscription, recounting the gift of the Dodekaschoinos at the first cataract to Khnum by King Zoser of the Third Dynasty; the Sphinx Stela (II, 810 ff.), recording the accession of Thutmose IV to the kingship, because as prince he cleared the Sphinx of sand; and finally the Bentresh Stela, containing a tale in honor of one of the Theban Khonsus, by showing that he was carried to a distant Asiatic kingdom in order to heal its king's daughter, in the days of Ramses II (III, 429-47). The last two stories seemed of sufficient importance to be included here. It was with tales in common circulation like these that Herodotus' informants regaled him, and the narrative portions of Manetho's history were largely made up of just such stories, of which further examples from Ptolemaic times have survived in Demotic dress.

25. It will be seen that the great mass of the documents available are found in Upper Egypt, and but a scanty few in the Delta. This unfortunate fact makes all our knowledge one-sided, and the history of the Delta, the civilization of which must have risen at a very remote date, remains for the most part unknown to us. Our loss is here like that in Greek history, in which we know almost nothing of the great civilization in the powerful cities of Asia Minor, from which the culture of the early states in Greece drew so much.

26. The documents thus briefly surveyed have reached us, with very few exceptions, in a state of sad mutilation. This mutilation and gradual destruction are a ceaseless process, which, if not as rapid as formerly, nevertheless proceeds without cessation at the present day. In Egypt, the exposed monuments, like the great geographical list of Sheshonk I, are perishing with appalling rapidity, and many of them without ever having been properly copied or published. Even the portable stone monuments at present in the museums of Europe suffer more or less; and I have seen valuable stelæ so attacked by the moist air of northern Europe that whole layers might be blown from the inscribed surface by a whiff of the breath. Such an inscription is doomed to disappear in a few years. Papyri when mounted between hermetically sealed glass plates survive indefinitely.

27. These monuments, as employed in Egyptological science, are, for the most part, not accessible in the originals, but are consulted chiefly in publications. Such publications, to omit earlier and cruder attempts, began as far back as the colossal report issued in huge folios by the members of Napoleon I's expedition. Notable and useful as this great work was, its copies of the inscriptions are now quite unusable. To copy an inscription of any kind with accuracy is not easy. So close and fine an observer of material documents as Ruskin, could copy a short Latin inscription with surprising inaccuracy. In his incomparable Mornings in Florence<sup>a</sup> he reproduces the brief inscription on the marble slab covering the tomb which he so admired in the church of Santa Croce; and in his copy of these eight short lines, which I compared with the original, he misspells one word, and omits two entire words ("et magister") of the mediæval Latin.

28. This experience of the great art critic is not infrequently that of the schooled and careful paleographer as well. The best-known of the Politarch inscriptions appeared in eight different publications,<sup>b</sup> each of which diverges in some more or less important respect from all the rest, before a correct copy was obtained. The Greek and Latin inscriptions on the bronze crab from the base of the New York obelisk were long incorrectly read, and the mistake in the date led Mommsen to a false theory of the early Roman prefects of Egypt.<sup>a</sup> In working on a mutilated inscription, the best of copyists will now and again overlook traces which his successors may discover and utilize, while now and then he will "nap," and be guilty of some egregious blunder of omission or misreading in a clear and perfectly preserved passage. Under these circumstances, an inexperienced or careless copyist will commit the most incredible blunders, and every line of his copy will contain many such. In the early days of Egyptology, when a reading knowledge of hieroglyphic was still impossible, it required a copyist of exceptional ability to produce a copy which can be used at the present day.

<sup>a</sup>Third edition, 1889, 16.

<sup>b</sup>See Burton, American Journal of Theology, II, 600-604.

29. This difficulty was sorely felt by accurate and discerning scholars as far back as the days of Chabas, who in 1872 remarked, concerning the inscriptions of Ramses III: "Ces deux publications [Rosellini and Burton] sont très imparfaites; et les signes inexactement reproduits ajoutent à la difficulté causée par les lacunes."<sup>b</sup> The introduction of hieroglyphic type, while very useful in some respects, has also proved disastrous to accuracy, and the persistence of the old loose methods was bemoaned by Brugsch in the introduction to the last volume of his Thesaurus thirteen years ago. Brugsch already showed surprising appreciation of the necessity of modern methods in such work. He wrote:

The indispensable demands upon the publisher of known or unknown texts may be comprehended in a few words. In the first place, it is not a task to be undertaken by laymen and mere amateurs . . . but only by the schooled specialist, who is thoroughly familiar with the language and writing of the ancient Egyptians, and with the researches and results in all departments of Egyptological investigation. How largely such a conviction is still lacking is proved . . . by a number of publications by Egyptological tyros [Halbwisser] and laymen, who do not yet seem to have learned that Egyptology has ceased to be the pursuit of amateurs, and has become a very serious study, demanding a man's entire strength and entire time.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See II, 632, note.

<sup>b</sup>Études sur l'antiquité historique, 227 f.

30. Not long after this, Griffith called attention to the hurried, inaccurate, and insufficient methods still often observable, so that numerous publications could only be regarded as provisional.<sup>b</sup> Two years later he referred to such work in these words: "Too often almost every third sign in the printed texts has had to be corrected according to probabilities by the would-be reader."<sup>c</sup> This condition of things has gone so far that we have had publications issued at government expense, containing texts in vertical columns copied with the lines numbered backward, and even translated in this inverted order of the lines.<sup>d</sup> It is safe to say that such a condition of things cannot be found in any other branch of paleographical science.

31. This is not the place to discuss the proper methods to be observed in the publication of ancient documents, but there is no doubt that better methods are constantly gaining ground. From decade to decade the publication of inscriptions has steadily improved, but it is only within the last ten or fifteen years that Egyptian documents on stone have in some cases appeared in a form which satisfies the demands of modern paleographic accuracy. With the exception of

<sup>a</sup>Thesaurus, VI, vi.

<sup>b</sup>Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1893-94, 10, 11.

<sup>c</sup>Ibid., 1895-96, 21.

<sup>d</sup>In the old publications plenty of examples of such inversion exist, especially in Mariette's books; nor are instances lacking in which modern scholars have employed such texts without discovering the inversion.

such perfectly preserved rolls as the great Papyrus Harris, which was long ago accurately published, the same remark is in general true of the papyri also.

32. The result of all this is that many of the most important documents of ancient Egypt are at present accessible to the Egyptologist only in publications so incorrect that in many cases they are absolutely unusable. It will be evident, therefore, that he who wishes to know exactly what the original documents of ancient Egypt state cannot work exclusively in his library, but must go behind the publications and turn back to the originals themselves, in Egypt and the museums of Europe.

33. For the purposes of these volumes it was therefore absolutely indispensable in most cases to go back of the publications. The author, therefore, made and repeatedly revised his own copies of practically all the historical monuments in Europe, before the originals themselves. In the few cases where the original was not accessible, good squeezes and photographs supplied the deficiency, or professional colleagues furnished from the originals specially collated readings of doubtful passages. Of the monuments in Egypt the author copied a great many at all the more important sites, especially Thebes and Amarna, where he made a complete copy of all the historical inscriptions; and in the museum at Cairo (formerly Gizeh). Of monuments in Egypt not included in the author's copies, squeezes were in most cases found in the enormous collection made by Lepsius, and now in the Berlin Museum. Where none of these sources furnished the desired monument, the author had access to the extensive collations made for the Berlin Egyptian Dictionary; and where these failed, he was able, in all important cases, to secure large-scale photographs of the originals. The final remainder of monuments for which the author was dependent upon the publications alone is very small, and in most such cases the publication was one made on modern methods and almost as good as the original itself.

34. Nevertheless, it must not be supposed that the old publications, however inaccurate, can be ignored. Some monuments have perished entirely since publication, and almost all have lost more or less important portions of the text. In the case of all the longer and more important texts, often reproduced in the old folios, the author took the best copy as a basis and collated with it all the other publications, noting in parallel columns all the variant readings. By this laborious means, some readings were secured which have since disappeared from the original, and all that is now available, whether in publications or in the original, was thus incorporated in the final composite copy, from which the translation was made. In a few cases the author was spared this labor by the industry of a modern editor of the document, as in the publication of the Benihasan tombs or those of Siut; but ordinarily the modern editor has not given himself this trouble, as in the last publication of Der el-Bahri.

35. The dangers involved in such neglect are evident. Thus so careful a scholar as Chabas discussed the so-called "eclipse inscription" (IV, 756 ff.) of Takehot II, using only the publication of Lepsius; whereupon Goodwin<sup>a</sup> called his attention to the fact that the very conscientious plate of Lepsius had nevertheless introduced confusion into the text by the accidental misplacement of a piece of the paper squeeze from which his copy was made, thus inverting the proper order of two sections of the very obscure text. Had Chabas also employed Young's otherwise obsolete copy of the original, this embarrassing error would not have occurred.

<sup>a</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1868, 25 ff.

36. Chabas<sup>a</sup> himself convicted Lenormant of a similar error in discussing Ramses II's victory over the Hittites at Kadesh. Lenormant<sup>b</sup> employed only the Abusimbel version of the report of the battle, not noticing that the ancient Egyptian scribe had omitted an entire line of the document, as is shown by the Ramesseum version. This omitted line happens to be of vital importance to a proper understanding of the battle, and the failure to observe its omission is fatal to any discussion of the conflict. The same error, nevertheless, has since been repeated in at least one notable modern treatise on the same battle.<sup>c</sup> Further examples might be adduced in illustration of the danger incurred in making a study of any inscription as found in a single publication of the text.

37. The translations in the following volumes, we repeat, are therefore based upon all the available material for the reconstruction of each document, whether in the original or in old publications made at a time when the original was possibly in a better state of preservation. In no other way can all the available material be obtained, and scholars who would compare the renderings herein with the original documents themselves will in many cases be able to do so only by reconstructing the text in the same way.

---

<sup>a</sup>Revue archéologique, XV<sup>2</sup> (1858-59), 573 ff., 701 f.

<sup>b</sup>Correspondant, VII (February, 1858), second article.

<sup>c</sup>See my Battle of Kadesh, 4, 5.

CHRONOLOGY

CHRONOLOGY

38. The state of our modern chronology of early Egyptian history is so confused that a brief presentation of the system herein employed seemed indispensable, although space will not permit even partial discussion of the materials upon which it is based. The following presentation,<sup>a</sup> moreover, will attempt nothing more than an explanation of the elementary factors of the problem, as even these are unknown to some who have nevertheless arbitrarily rejected their invaluable data.

39. The Egyptians, as far back as the fifth millennium before Christ, had discovered approximately the length of the year. They, like all other peoples, had suffered from the vexatious fact that the lunar month is not an even divisor of the year. Instead of attempting to adjust this obstinate incommensurability by constant and complicated intercalations, they showed amazing appreciation of the practical demands which a calendar should satisfy, and boldly abandoned the lunar month as the basis of the calendar. Believing the year to be 365 days long, they divided it into twelve months of thirty days each, and an intercalated period of five days at the end of the year. The creation of this convenient and practical, though artificial, calendar was an achievement unparalleled in any other ancient civilization. It was as useful to men of science as to civil life in general, and for this reason it was in later times adopted by the Greek astronomers as the basis of all their computations.

---

<sup>a</sup>Since this brief discussion was written, the admirable essay of Meyer ("Aegyptische Chronologie," Abhandlungen der Königlichen Preussischen Akademie, 1904) has appeared, from which the author has frequently added valuable observations to the above presentation. The literature of the subject is large, but Meyer's invaluable treatise furnishes a compendium of the whole obscure and difficult field.

40. The Egyptian began his year at the advent of the inundation, and this event, by a happy accident, approximately coincided with the reappearance of Sirius (Sothis) at sunrise on the eastern horizon, after he had been for some length of time invisible. This occurred each year on July 19<sup>a</sup> (Julian). The interval between such heliacal risings of Sothis was thus fortunately approximately a solar year.<sup>b</sup> The feast of the Rising of Sothis on July 19 was therefore the New Year's feast of the Egyptians. The year was also arbitrarily divided into three seasons, each containing four months of thirty days each. These were: the season of verdure, or the inundation; the season of winter or sowing; and the season of summer or harvest. When this remarkably rational calendar was introduced, it of course coincided with the seasons as determined for the people by the sun and the inundation. But the Sothic year was almost exactly, and in 3231 B. C.<sup>c</sup> was exactly, a quarter of a day longer than the new calendar year of 365 days. Every four years, therefore, the calendar reached the end of the year and began the next year one day too soon, so that the rising of Sirius fell on the second day of the new year. As this process continued, and each calendar New Year's Day arrived earlier and earlier, it finally passed gradually around the whole year and again fell on the astronomical New Year's Day. This process consumed four times as many years as

---

<sup>a</sup>It took place on July 19 (Julian) as the normal date, in the latitude of Memphis, for many thousands of years B. C., until far down in the last thousand years B. C., when the Sothic year had sufficiently lengthened to shift the heliacal rising of Sothis to July 20. (See Meyer, op. cit., 1904, 17 ff.)

<sup>b</sup>Neither the solar nor the Sothic year is constant in length, and at present they are slowly diverging.

<sup>c</sup>Meyer, op. cit., 14.

there were days in the calendar year; that is, 1,460 years; or we may say: 1,461 calendar years = 1,460 Sothic (Julian) years.

Without knowing it, the Egyptian was thus dealing with three different years: <sup>a</sup>

1. His calendar year of 365 days, by which most of the business of civil life was transacted and all documents were dated.

2. The Sothic (or Julian) year of  $365\frac{1}{4}$  days, on the first of which the people celebrated the feast of the Rising of Sothis.

3. The solar (or Gregorian) year of a little less than  $365\frac{1}{4}$  days (which was therefore slowly diverging from the Sothic year).

41. The Egyptian, as we have intimated, never learned that the Sothic (Julian) and the solar years were not identical; the divergence<sup>b</sup> was so slow, and so slight, that it was entirely imperceptible to the masses, or possibly even to the learned, of the time. On the contrary, the difference between his calendar and the feast of the heliacal Rising of Sothis (that is, 1 and 2) must have been early observed. Nevertheless, the actual shift within an average lifetime was not so great as to occasion inconvenience. Thus each generation accepted the place of the calendar in the seasons as they found it, and without remark considered it as a matter of course that the beginning of the inundation, or the advent of summer heat, fell on about such and such a day of a certain month. Both these events had occurred at about that time since their earliest remembrance. A peasant of fifty or sixty—that is, at the end of an average life—hardly remarked that the seasons were now ten or twelve days later in the calendar than when he was a lad of ten. Unfortunately, references to the place of the seasons, or of astronomical events, in the calendar are rare; nevertheless, there are enough of such references to trace the gradual revolution of the calendar on the seasons.

---

<sup>a</sup>See Meyer, op. cit., 16.

<sup>b</sup>In 4231 B. C. the summer solstice fell on July 28 (Julian); but as it was always eighteen hours and forty minutes earlier than the Sothic rising each century, it had advanced thirty-one days, to June 27, by 231 B. C. In the thirty-first century (3001-3100) B. C. it coincided with the Sothic rising on July 19 (Julian). (See Meyer, op. cit., 14 f.)

42. In the Sixth Dynasty, Uni, a nobleman who had been sent to Assuan to procure granite from the quarries there, narrates that he succeeded in landing his cargo at the king's pyramid, although it was in the eleventh month, when, he adds (as everyone knew), there was no water for such transportation. The time of advancing low water, terminating heavy transportation of this sort, normally in the eighth to the ninth month of the calendar, thus fell two months later in Uni's time (§ 323).<sup>a</sup> In the Middle Kingdom a hitherto misunderstood inscription (§§ 735 ff.) narrates how an unfortunate official, dispatched to the mines of Sinai, arrived there in the third month of (calendar) winter, when he and his men suffered greatly from the summer heat! This shows a divergence of seven or eight months; as we should expect, in the centuries which have elapsed since the Old Kingdom the calendar had shifted several months. A letter<sup>b</sup> from a priest in the 120th year of the Twelfth Dynasty, notifying his subordinates that the feast of the Rising of Sothis would occur on the fifteenth of the eighth month,<sup>c</sup> shows us the exact amount of the shift at that time; for the feast thus fell exactly 225 days (seven months and fifteen days) after New Year's Day in the calendar.

<sup>a</sup>[Later: Practically the same interpretation of the inscription has now appeared in Meyer's essay (Aegyptische Chronologie).]

<sup>b</sup>Among papyri found at Kahun, now at Berlin (Borchardt, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 99 ff.).

<sup>c</sup>Temple entries from the same papyri, recording the offerings made at the Sothis feast, are dated the next day.

43. The divergence steadily increased, and in the early part of the Eighteenth Dynasty, in the ninth year of Amenhotep I, it was exactly 308 days.<sup>a</sup> A Sothic date somewhere between 47 and 101 years later, in the reign of Thutmose III, shows that it had then increased to 327 days (II, 410, note). It is, furthermore, roughly indicated by the dates of his campaigns in Syria (II, 409 ff.), which, as we know, always occurred from April to October. His son Amenhotep II's campaigns carry the divergence a little farther, and some 150 years later its continuance is shown by the dates of Ramses II's campaigns (III, 307). For nearly six centuries after this we have no indication of the place of the calendar,<sup>b</sup> but in the third year of Shabataka, about 700 B. C., the first day of high Nile is recorded at Thebes as occurring on the fifth of the ninth month of the calendar (IV, 887). The calendar had thus completed its revolution around the seasons, and had also shifted nearly 180 days in another revolution, since the reign of Thutmose III. The shift of the calendar can thus be traced for some 2,000 years, as determined by six different dates of astronomical or seasonal events, and a series of other significant occurrences, in terms of the calendar.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Calendar of Papyrus Ebers.

<sup>b</sup>The date of the high water in the reign of Osorkon II, in the Twenty-second Dynasty (IV, 742 ff.), will be of assistance when the correct date is known; but as given by Daressy (Recueil, 18, 181) it has certainly been incorrectly transliterated from the hieratic. The calendar of Ramses III (largely copied from an almost completely lost original of Ramses II), which places the Rising of Sothis on New Year's Day, is of course a normal calendar intended to avoid constant readjusting of its long list of dates from time to time. Such a calendar of feasts could be perpetually used without alteration, by merely allowing in each date for the then amount of the divergence.

<sup>c</sup>The conjecture (eo ipso very improbable) that the calendar was at irregular intervals readjusted to the astronomical year, is completely disproved by the procession exhibited by the above series.

44. These data are of significance and value in two respects. In the first place, they demonstrate the very early advance of the Egyptians in the discernment and calculation of astronomical and calendrical phenomena. For we know from the use of the Egyptian year by classic astronomers and mathematicians that the calendar coincided with the Sothic year, and that a new Sothic cycle began, some time in the period 140/41 to 143/44 A. D.<sup>a</sup> It must therefore also have coincided with the Sothic year 1,460 years earlier; that is, in 1320 B. C.; and still earlier, in 2780 B. C.<sup>b</sup> Now, it is impossible that this calendar was first introduced so late as the twenty-eighth century, in the midst of the highest culture of the Old Kingdom. Moreover, the five intercalary days at the end of the year, proving the use of the shifting year of 365 days, are mentioned in the pyramid texts, which are far older than the Old Kingdom.

45. The calendar, therefore, existed before the Old Kingdom; but if this be true, we must seek its invention at a time when its three seasons coincided roughly with those of nature, as they must have done at its introduction. This carries us 1,460 years back of their coincidence in the Old Kingdom; that is, the calendar was introduced in the middle of the forty-third century B. C. (4241 B. C.). This is the oldest fixed date in history. This fact demonstrates not only a remarkable degree of scientific knowledge in that remote age, but also stable political conditions, and a wide recognition of central authority, which could gradually introduce such an innovation. The date employed was that for the rising of Sothis in the latitude of Memphis or the southern Delta, and this fact is a significant indication of the high culture prevailing in the north at this time.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Censorinus, 21, 10, and Meyer, op. cit., 28.

<sup>b</sup>For convenience, ignoring the uncertainty of four years.

<sup>c</sup>See Meyer, op. cit., 38 ff.

46. In a second respect the calendar is of inestimable value to us in establishing the chronology of Egyptian history. Where the heliacal rising of Sothis is recorded in terms of the calendar, it is a matter of the simplest arithmetic<sup>a</sup> to determine, within a margin of four years, in what year B. C. the rising occurred. As we have seen, three such dates are preserved to us, two of which each give the year of the king's reign, and from these the entire Twelfth Dynasty, and the reign of Amenhotep I in the Eighteenth Dynasty, are established within four years in terms B. C. They show that the Twelfth Dynasty began in 2000 B. C., and the reign of Amenhotep I in 1557 B. C., thus determining the accession of the Eighteenth Dynasty as 1580 B. C.<sup>b</sup> The third Sothic rising, in the reign of Thutmose III, is not dated in a particular year of the reign, so that it furnishes only a rough approximation of the date of his reign, proving that the year 1470 B. C. fell within his reign. This approximation may be rendered precise by a computation based upon the feasts of the New Moon, which Thutmose III is recorded to have celebrated in his twenty-third and twenty-fourth years (II, 430). These new-moon dates<sup>c</sup> establish the date of Thutmose III's reign as May 3, 1501, to March 17, 1447 B. C.<sup>d</sup> The two other early dates are chiefly of

---

<sup>a</sup>Thus: The rising of Sothis at the beginning occurs on the first day of the calendar year. From a given calendar date of its rising the amount of the shift of the calendar can be computed in an instant. In the 120th year of the Twelfth Dynasty Sothis arose 225 days after New Year's Day. As the shift occurred at the rate of one day in four years, the 225 days' shift had taken place in 900 years since the calendar coincided with nature; that is, since 2780 B. C. The 120th year of the Twelfth Dynasty was thus 1880 B. C., and the dynasty began in 2000 B. C. (or between 2000 and 1996 B. C.).

<sup>b</sup>Meyer, op. cit., 46 ff.

<sup>c</sup>The phases of the moon occupy the same position in the calendar every nineteen years. The date of Thutmose III's reign being roughly determined by the Sothic rising, the new-moon dates can then be employed to place this reign more precisely. Without the Sothic date the new-moon dates would be of no use, as they merely present conditions recurring every nineteen years.

<sup>d</sup>Meyer, loc. cit.

significance in demonstrating the fact of the shift of the calendar in the Old and Middle Kingdoms, but are not precise enough to determine with exactness the date B. C.

47. Besides the above astronomical method, minimum dates as far back as the beginning of the Eighteenth Dynasty can be determined by dead reckoning back from a fixed starting-point. The result thus obtained, without reference to the astronomically determined dates, can then be compared with these, for the sake of testing both. The dates by dead reckoning are obtained by simply adding together the totals of reigns and dynasties, and with these reckoning back from the accession of the Persians in 525 B. C. In this process I have employed only the testimony of the contemporary monuments.<sup>a</sup>

48. Our first task is to determine the length of the dynasties preceding the invasion of the Persians; that is, the Eighteenth to the Twenty-sixth Dynasty. The method is first to seek the highest known date in each reign of a dynasty, and thus to determine the minimum length of the dynasty. In the use of royal dates given in years of the reign only, there is danger both of over- and of under-reckoning. Thus Ramses III reigned thirty-one years and forty days; but a date from his thirty-second year might lead one to think he had reigned thirty-two years, which is nearly a year in excess of the truth. As the newly crowned successor to the throne began to number his years from the death of his predecessor, it will be seen that the remainder of what would have been Ramses III's complete thirty-second year is included in the reign of his successor.<sup>b</sup> If counted in both reigns, it is therefore counted twice. It has therefore been thought necessary to deduct one year for every transfer of the crown.<sup>a</sup> This method, however, is extreme, as we shall show. In the first place, it applies only when the maximum date preserved is actually the respective king's last year. Again, it does not always apply even then. Thutmose III reigned fifty-four years lacking thirty-four days. The reign of his successor, therefore, included only the last thirty-four days of what would have been Thutmose III's complete fifty-fourth year. To deduct a year at this transfer of the crown is as extreme as to count the thirty-second year of Ramses III's reign. It is evident that the last year of a king's reign is as likely to be nearly complete as it is to be scarcely begun; hence the only fair method of reduction for double counting at the transfers of the crown is to count the number of transfers in an entire dynasty, and for each transfer to deduct a half-year; that is, a mean between the two extremes of deducting a whole year for each transfer, or of deducting nothing. In the course of a whole dynasty the errors both ways will probably compensate each other.<sup>b</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Wherever he can be controlled, Manetho is generally wrong in his figures, and any chronology based on his data is hopelessly astray.

<sup>b</sup>This is supposing that, as in the Eighteenth Dynasty, the years of a king began with the day of his accession, and not on the New Year's Day preceding his accession, as in the Middle Kingdom and the Twenty-sixth Dynasty.

49. In the following table I have made no deduction for transfer of the crown either to or from a king from whose reign we have no dates, but in all such reigns (marked x) such deduction has been included in the estimate of the reign. It is needless to add that in cases of coregency such deduction is unnecessary. In estimating the x, or unknown years in a given reign, the historical facts of the reign, if any, have been duly considered, though there has not always been space to note the said facts. That this is absolutely necessary will be evident. Thus Sheshonk I took out the stone from the Silsileh quarry for his Karnak building in his twenty-first year. The vast forecourt of the Karnak temple of Amon, or the enormous front pylon, was then built by him. Yet his highest date is that of the said quarry operations in the twenty-first year. It is clear, therefore, that he must have ruled several years more, and no fair chronological reckoning can disregard these years.

---

<sup>a</sup>Mahler, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 32, 104 f.; Lehmann, Zwei Hauptprobleme, 56.

<sup>b</sup>This method can apply with certainty only in the Eighteenth Dynasty, in which the king's year begins with his accession. I have supposed, however, that this system of numbering continued until the end of the Ethiopian period. In the Twelfth and Twenty-sixth Dynasties such allowance must be differently computed.

50. Observing the above precautions, we obtain as a minimum for the Empire and following dynasties, down to the accession of the Persians, the following figures:<sup>a</sup>

Eighteenth Dynasty . . . . .	230	years
Nineteenth Dynasty . . . . .	145	"
Interim . . . . .	5	"
Twentieth Dynasty . . . . .	110	"
Twenty-first Dynasty . . . . .	145	"
Twenty-second Dynasty . . . . .	200	"
Twenty-third Dynasty . . . . .	23	"
Twenty-fourth Dynasty . . . . .	6	"
Twenty-fifth Dynasty . . . . .	50	"
Twenty-sixth Dynasty . . . . .	138	"
Total . . . . .	1,052	"

As the accession of the Persians occurred in 525 B. C., the beginning of the Eighteenth Dynasty will have been 1,052 years earlier, or about 1577 B. C.<sup>b</sup>

51. Our second task is now to compare with this result the dates in the Eighteenth Dynasty obtained by astronomical means, which place the accession of Ahmose I within the four years from 1580 on.<sup>a</sup> It will be seen that the result of the astronomical calculation is remarkably corroborated by the dead reckoning with minimum dynastic totals. It should be noted, however, that the above date for the beginning of the Eighteenth Dynasty, based upon the Sothic date in the ninth year of Amenhotep I, is corroborated, not only by the above dead reckoning, but also by the Sothic and new-moon dates in the reign of Thutmose III, a calculation from which places this king's reign at just the right remove from that of Amenhotep I, as determined by the Sothic date (see § 46).

<sup>a</sup>A detailed table by reigns will be found §§ 58-75; and for the Twenty-first, Twenty-second, and Twenty-sixth Dynasties still further details will be found in IV, 604-7, 693-98, 959, 974, 984, 1026, 1027.

<sup>b</sup>This result of a dead reckoning from minimum dates cannot be brought down any later. Mr. Cecil Torr's attempt (Memphis and Mycenæ) to establish a much later date for the beginning of the Eighteenth Dynasty by the same process was extreme in method, and rested upon incomplete material.

52. The existing contemporary monuments do not suffice to determine by dead reckoning the length of the obscure period which preceded the Eighteenth Dynasty, including the Hyksos. It should be noted, however, that these monuments do not indicate a long<sup>b</sup> period. They are few and scanty. There is nothing to show that the long list of kings which the Turin Papyrus places in this period were not partially contemporaneous. The same document gives no indication in its enumeration of the kings of the Twelfth Dynasty that they were partially contemporary; and it is only in the sum-total of the dynasty that parallel years are deducted. The same was evidently done for this long series of kings between the Twelfth and Eighteenth Dynasties. Two hundred years is ample for the whole period, including the Hyksos.<sup>c</sup> The Sothic date from the Twelfth

---

<sup>a</sup>There is no choice between these limits; but as a round number is convenient, I have taken 1580, which brings the end of the Eighteenth Dynasty to 1350 B. C.

<sup>b</sup>The figures given in Manetho's scanty notes are not worthy of the slightest credence.

<sup>c</sup>Under the Moslems 77 viceroys held the throne of Egypt in 118 years, from 750 to 868 A. D. In Europe some 80 Roman emperors after Commodus ruled in a period of 90 years (193-283 A. D.; see Meyer, op. cit.). The 118 kings enumerated in this confused age by the Turin Papyrus may have ruled no more than 150 years; 100 years is ample for the Hyksos, of which 50 years may be contemporary with the native dynasts.

Dynasty, placing its fall in 1788 B. C., determines the maximum length of the period as 208 years.<sup>a</sup> The Eleventh Dynasty, as shown herein (§§ 415-18), lasted at least 160 years, so that the second dark age, between the Old and Middle Kingdoms, terminated about 2160 B. C.

53. The data for determining the length of the dark period preceding the Middle Kingdom are scanty. Its beginning, in Manetho's so-called Seventh Dynasty, is hopelessly obscure, but fortunately the time during which this Seventh Dynasty ruled, as well as the length of the Eighth Dynasty also, is included by the Turin Papyrus in a summation of the time which elapsed from the rise of the Sixth Dynasty to the fall of Memphis (180 years),<sup>b</sup> and also in a grand total of the length of the whole period from the accession of Menes to the close of Memphite supremacy, which terminated with the fall of the Eighth Dynasty. The Heracleopolitan rule, which falls between the end of Memphite and the beginning of Theban domination, is therefore the uncertain factor. Manetho divides the Heracleopolitans into two dynasties, the Ninth and the Tenth. The Turin Papyrus had a dynasty of eighteen kings immediately preceding the Eleventh, and these must be the Heracleopolitans, as is shown by the occurrence of Manetho's second Akhthoes, near the beginning of the series. We have no means of determining how long these eighteen Heracleopolitans ruled, for Manetho's data (with nineteen kings in each of his Heracleopolitan dynasties), like most of his figures, are not to be accepted, unless clearly supported by the contemporary monuments. These eighteen Heracleopolitans vouched for by the Turin Papyrus, if given sixteen years each (a sum below the customary average, in a long period of time<sup>a</sup> under orderly conditions of government), reigned, in round numbers, 285 years. It will be evident that this estimate is extremely uncertain. The period is the only undetermined epoch in the dynastic chronology, and it introduces a margin of uncertainty of several generations in all dates back of the Eleventh Dynasty.

---

<sup>a</sup>The proposal to push back the said Sothic date by a whole Sothic cycle, thus lengthening the above period between the Twelfth and Eighteenth Dynasties by 1,460 years, is hardly worthy of a serious answer. It involves the assumption that nearly fifteen hundred years of history have been enacted in the Nile valley without leaving a trace behind! It is like imagining that in European history we could insert at will a period equal to that from the fall of Rome to the present!

<sup>b</sup>That this summation includes the Eighth Dynasty is shown by the fact that the Heracleopolitans (the Ninth and Tenth Dynasties) immediately follow. So also Meyer, op. cit., 171 ff.

54. The Turin Papyrus gives the length of the Sixth Dynasty (with which it merges the Eighth, ignoring the Seventh<sup>b</sup>) as 181 years. The length of the Fourth and Fifth together is determined by the Turin Papyrus and the contemporary monuments as follows: The royal favorite Mertityôtes, after having been in the harem of Snefru and Khufu successively, was still living under Khafre (§§ 188 ff.). Prince Sekhemkere lived under Khafre, Menkure, Shepseskaf, Userkaf, and Sahure.<sup>c</sup> With Snefru counted in the Third Dynasty, and Userkaf and Sahure (together nineteen years<sup>d</sup>) falling in the Fifth, the length of the Fourth cannot have been more than 150 years, as measured by part of two successive human lives. A third lifetime connects the latter part of the Fourth and the first part of the Fifth. Thus Ptahshepses, the son-in-law of

<sup>a</sup>The Fourth and Fifth Dynasties (including Snefru at the beginning of the Fourth) show an average of 16.6 years for each ruler (Meyer, op. cit., 151); that is, 18 kings ruled 300 years. Again, at the beginning of the dynastic age 18 kings (First and Second Dynasties) ruled 420 years—an average of over 23 years each. The first 53 kings of the Turin Papyrus (from the First to the Eighth Dynasty) ruled 995 years—an average of nearly 19 years. But among these, it should not be forgotten, there are 15 reigns of less than 10 years each, footing up to only 70 years.

<sup>b</sup>See § 53.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 42; Rougé, Six premières dynasties, 77.

<sup>d</sup>See Meyer's reconstruction of the Turin Papyrus (op. cit., plate opposite p. 145).

King Shepseskaf, was born under Menkure and lived into the reign of Nuserre, the sixth king of the Fifth Dynasty (§§ 254 ff.). Now, granting him a long life, he could not have lived more than 40 or 50 years in the Fifth Dynasty. The Turin Papyrus has preserved the length of the reigns at the end of the Fifth Dynasty from Nuserre on, making a total, including him, of about 100 years. If Ptahshepses survived 10 years under Nuserre, the length of the dynasty was at most 130 years, more probably 125 years. The lengths of seven out of the nine reigns are preserved in the Turin Papyrus, and make a total of 122 years +  $x$ .

55. The overlapping of these three lifetimes is very significant:

	Snefru
	Khufu		} Lifetime of Mertityôtes
	Dedefre
	Khafre
Fourth Dynasty	Menkure		} Lifetime of Sekhemkere
	Shepseskaf
	Short reigns
	Userkaf		} Lifetime of Ptahshepses
	Sahure
	Neferirkere
	Shepseskere
	Khaneferre
	Nuserre

Three lifetimes somewhat overlapping, a matter of 200 years at most, run parallel, as stated above, with the end of the Third Dynasty, the whole Fourth, and the first half of the Fifth. The Fourth and Fifth Dynasties thus lasted together not more than 300 years.

56. Now, the Turin Papyrus has preserved the length of the reigns in the Third Dynasty, and they foot up to about 80 years (including Snefru). The Palermo Stone insures at least 500 years for the first three dynasties, leaving about 420 years for the first two dynasties. This gives us a total of 950–75 years for the entire period from the beginning of the dynasties to the final fall of Memphis. Now, it is practically certain that the total of 955 years on a fragment of the Turin Papyrus is a summary of the same period,<sup>a</sup> belonging at the end of the Memphite kings. Deducting the length of the Memphite dynasties (535 years) from this total of 955 years, we have left 420 years for the preceding Thinite period (First and Second Dynasties), just as shown by the Palermo Stone. We thus reach the date 3400 B. C. for the beginning of the dynasties, and 3400 to 2980 B. C. as the Thinite age, the first two dynasties. It is highly improbable that future discovery will shift these dates more than a century in either direction.

57. To recapitulate, in the following table it should be remembered that the dates in the Twelfth Dynasty are astronomically computed and correct within three years. The early part of the Eighteenth is closely correct (all dates astronomically established are starred), and the latter part probably within a decade of error. The margin of error is doubtless somewhat greater between the close of the Eighteenth and the accession of the Twenty-sixth Dynasty, where the dates are again accurate. Back of the Middle Kingdom, the unknown length of the dark age (from the Seventh to the Tenth Dynasty) produces the wide limits of uncertainty affecting all the preceding dynasties (from the First to the Tenth), the end of which period fell about 2160 B. C. It is back of 2160 B. C., therefore, that our chronology of Egyptian history becomes unstable and exhibits a margin of uncertainty of at most two centuries; that is, a century either way.

---

<sup>a</sup>Frag. No. 44. It was already placed here by Seyffarth; a study of the possibilities shows clearly that this position is correct. [Later: This is also the opinion of Meyer (op. cit.).]

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE

58.	INTRODUCTION OF CALENDAR . . . . .	4241 B. C.
	ACCESSION OF MENES AND BEGINNING OF DYNASTIES . . . . .	3400	"
	FIRST AND SECOND DYNASTIES . . . . .	3400-2980	"
	(Eighteen kings, 420 years)
	THIRD DYNASTY
	Zoser to Snefru . . . . .	80 years	2980-2900 B. C.
	FOURTH DYNASTY <sup>a</sup>
59.	Khufu . . . . .	23 years
	Dedefre . . . . .	8	"
	Khafre . . . . .	x	"
	Menkure . . . . .	x	"
	..... <sup>b</sup> . . . . .	x	"
	..... <sup>c</sup> . . . . .	18	"
	Shepseskaf . . . . .	4	"
	..... <sup>d</sup> . . . . .	2	"
	Total . . . . .	150 years	2900-2750 B. C.
	FIFTH DYNASTY <sup>e</sup>
60.	Userkaf . . . . .	7 years
	Sahure . . . . .	12	"
	Neferirkere . . . . .	x	"
	Shepseskere <sup>f</sup> . . . . .	7	"
	Khaneferre <sup>g</sup> . . . . .	x	"
	Nuserre . . . . .	30 <sup>h</sup>	" (+x)
	Menkuhor . . . . .	8	"
	Dedkere-Isesi . . . . .	28	"
	Unis . . . . .	30	"
	Total . . . . .	122 years + x
	Minimum . . . . .	125	" 2750-2625 B. C.

<sup>a</sup>As reconstructed by Meyer from the Turin Papyrus, the Sakkara and Abydos lists, and Manetho. The years are from the papyrus.

<sup>b</sup>Lost in Turin Papyrus; Manetho's Ratoises.

<sup>c</sup>Lost in Turin Papyrus; Manetho's Bikheris. The years may be 28.

<sup>d</sup>Lost in Turin Papyrus; Manetho's Thamphthis.

<sup>e</sup>As restored by Meyer (op. cit., 145 ff.).

<sup>f</sup>Same as Neferefre of the Abydos list.

<sup>g</sup>Only in Sakkara list, but spacing shows room for him in the Turin Papyrus.

<sup>h</sup>Numeral in Turin Papyrus is either 10, 20, or 30 (+ units?), and, as Nuserre celebrated his thirty-years' jubilee, doubtless 30 is correct.

SIXTH DYNASTY

61. Teti II . . . . .	$x$	years
Userkere <sup>a</sup> . . . . .	$x$	"
Pepi I . . . . .	20	"
Mernere I . . . . .	4	"
Pepi II . . . . .	90 <sup>b</sup>	"	(+ $x$ )
Mernere II <sup>c</sup> . . . . .	1	"
Total . . . . .	115	years	+ $x$
Minimum . . . . .	150	"	2625-2475 B. C.

SEVENTH AND EIGHTH DYNASTIES<sup>d</sup>

62. Total . . . . .	30	years	2475-2445 B. C.
---------------------	----	-------	-----------------

NINTH AND TENTH DYNASTIES

18 Heracleopolitans, estimated . . . . .	285	years	2445-2160 B. C.
--	-----	-------	-----------------

ELEVENTH DYNASTY<sup>e</sup>

63. Horus Wahenekh-Intef I . . . . .	50	years	+ $x$
Horus Nakhtneb-Tepnefer-Intef II . . . . .	$x$	"
Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I . . . . .	$x$	"
Vassal Intef III (Shaṭṭ er-Regâl) . . . . .	$x$	"
Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep II . . . . .	46	"	+ $x$
Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III . . . . .	28	"	+ $x$
Nibtowere-Mentuhotep IV . . . . .	2	"	+ $x$
Total . . . . .	126	years	+ $x$
Known total . . . . .	160 <sup>f</sup>	"	2160 <sup>g</sup> -2000 B. C.

<sup>a</sup>Only in the Abydos list; Meyer suggests that he is the same as Ity of whom we have a quarry inscription at Hammamat (§ 386).

<sup>b</sup>Probably 94, as given also by Manetho.

<sup>c</sup>From the Abydos list, instead of Nitokris formerly assigned here on a misplaced fragment of the Turin Papyrus. (See Meyer, op. cit., 164.)

<sup>d</sup>The Seventh Dynasty of Manetho (70 Memphites ruling 70 days) cannot be found in the lists or on contemporary monuments. The ephemeral Eighth Dynasty is given 7 kings in the Turin Papyrus, of whom the reigns of 4 are preserved (2 years, 4 years, 2 years, 1 year). The Eighth Dynasty is passed over in the Sakkara list, but is given 17 kings in the Abydos list.

<sup>e</sup>See reconstruction, §§ 415-18; also my essay, Abhandlungen der Königlichen Preussischen Akademie, 1904 (in Meyer's essay, Aegyptische Chronologie, 156-61); and also my remarks in the American Journal of Semitic Languages, XXI, April.

<sup>f</sup>From Turin Papyrus; the units are lost.

<sup>g</sup>From here on approximately accurate chronology.

TWELFTH DYNASTY<sup>a</sup>

64. Amenemhet I . . . . .	30 years	2000*-1970* B. C.
Sesostris I . . . . .	45 "	1980*-1935* "
Amenemhet II . . . . .	35 "	1938*-1903* "
Sesostris II . . . . .	19 "	1906*-1887* "
Sesostris III . . . . .	38 "	1887*-1849* "
Amenemhet III . . . . .	48 "	1849*-1801* "
Amenemhet IV . . . . .	9 "	1801*-1792* "
Sebeknefrure . . . . .	4 "	1792*-1788* "
Total . . . . .	228 years
Allowance for coregencies . . . . .	15 "
Final total . . . . .	213 <sup>b</sup> years	2000*-1788* B. C.

THIRTEENTH TO SEVENTEENTH DYNASTIES

(Including the Hyksos)

65. 208 <sup>c</sup> years . . . . .	1788*-1580 B. C.
--------------------------------------	------------------

EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY

66. Ahmose . . . . .	22 <sup>d</sup> + $x$ years	1580-1557* B. C.
Amenhotep I . . . . .	10 <sup>e</sup> + $x$ } 56 <sup>f</sup> "	1557*-1501* "
Thutmose I . . . . .	30 <sup>g</sup> + $x$ }
Thutmose III . . . . .	54 <sup>h</sup> "	1501*-1447* "

(Including Thutmose II and Hatshepsut)

<sup>a</sup>A fuller statement of this dynasty, especially of the Sothic date and of the coregencies, will be found in §§ 460 ff.

<sup>b</sup>This total is given by the Turin Papyrus (§ 461) as exactly 213 years, 1 month, and 17 days.

<sup>c</sup>See § 52. <sup>d</sup>II, 27.

<sup>e</sup>Recueil, IX, 94. Accession is astronomically established (Meyer, op. cit., 46 ff.).

<sup>f</sup>Determined by the two limits: the accession of Amenhotep I in 1557 and that of Thutmose III in 1501, both these dates being astronomically fixed.

<sup>g</sup>He celebrated his thirty-years' jubilee, and, as he was never crown prince, he must have ruled at least 30 years. He reached old age (II, 64).

<sup>h</sup>Really a little less (see II, 592). The date of this reign is astronomically established by means of a Sothic date and two calendar dates of the new moon in Thutmose III's Annals (II, 430). Mahler computes his accession as 1504 (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 97); Lehmann noticed that such a calculation must be based on the actual appearance of the new moon, and not on a calculation of when it astronomically occurred. Lehmann thus dated the accession of Thutmose III in 1515 (Zwei Hauptprobleme, 154-58). Meyer accepted Lehmann's method, but showed a slight error in L.'s figures, thus finally placing the date of Thutmose III's accession in 1501 B. C. (Meyer, op. cit., 50). The exact limits are May 3, 1501, to March 17, 1447 B. C.

Amenhotep II . . . . .	$26^a + x$ years	1447*-1420 B. C.
Thutmose IV . . . . .	$8^b + x$ "	1420-1411 "
Amenhotep III . . . . .	$36^c$ "	1411-1375 "
Amenhotep IV . . . . .	$17^d + x$	} $25^e$ " 1375-1350 "
(or Ikhnaton, 1375-1358)
Sakere . . . . .	$x$
Tutenekhamon . . . . .	$x$
Eye . . . . .	$3^f + x$
Total . . . . .	$227 + 4x$ years
Allowance for double counting (3 transfers and 1 coregency, 1 year) . . . . .	$3$ "
Final total . . . . .	$224 + 4x$ years
Minimum . . . . .	$230$ years	1580-1350 B. C.

NINETEENTH DYNASTY

67. Harmhab . . . . .	$34^g + x$ years	1350-1315 B. C.
Ramses I . . . . .	$2^h$ "	1315-1314 "
Seti I . . . . .	$21^i + x$ "	1313-1292 "

<sup>a</sup>Petrie, Six Temples, Plate V; about one year coregent with Thutmose III (II, 184).

<sup>b</sup>II, 825.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 71 c-d; and Amarna Letters, 20.

<sup>d</sup>Petrie, Amarna, Plates XXII ff., pp. 32 ff.

<sup>e</sup>In the reign of Ramses II, in the records of a legal suit, reference is made to legal proceedings in year 59 of Harmhab. As it is evident that Harmhab was not a young man at his accession, it is exceedingly improbable that he reigned nearly 60 years. The highest known date on any monument of his reign is year 21. It is therefore probable that in the early Nineteenth Dynasty, when the chronology for the government files of the immediately preceding reigns was being made up, the series of Ikhnaton and his successors was added to the reign of Harmhab, and the names of the kings at any time implicated in the Aton heresy were swept from the records. We thus have at least 59 years from year 1 of Ikhnaton to the end of Harmhab's reign, of which at least 25 must be credited to Ikhnaton and his successors (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 10, l. 8).

<sup>f</sup>II, 1043.

<sup>g</sup>See preceding note on Ikhnaton and successors. Estimating 25 years for Ikhnaton and successors, we have  $34 + x$  years for Harmhab.

<sup>h</sup>Total length; maximum of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  years (III, 74).

<sup>i</sup>See III, 131.

Ramses II . . . . .	67 <sup>a</sup> years	1292-1225 B. C.
Merneptah . . . . .	10 <sup>b</sup> + x "	1225-1215 "
Amenmeses . . . . .	x "	1215 "
Siptah . . . . .	6 <sup>c</sup> + x "	1215-1209 "
Seti II . . . . .	2 <sup>d</sup> + x "	1209-1205 "
Total . . . . .	142+6 x years
Allowance for 4 transfers (= 2 years) and 1 coregency	3 "
Final total . . . . .	139+6 x years
Minimum . . . . .	145 years	1350-1205 B. C.

INTERIM

68. Anarchy and reign of Syrian usurper <sup>e</sup> . . . . .	5 years	1205-1200 B. C.
---	---------	-----------------

TWENTIETH DYNASTY<sup>f</sup>

69. Setnakht . . . . .	1 <sup>g</sup> (+ x ) years	1200-1198 B. C.
Ramses III . . . . .	31 <sup>h</sup> "	1198-1167 "
Ramses IV . . . . .	6 <sup>i</sup> "	1167-1161 "
Ramses V . . . . .	4 <sup>j</sup> + x "	1161-1157 "

<sup>a</sup>Total length (IV, 471). The attempts to determine the accession of Ramses II astronomically have been unsuccessful.

<sup>b</sup>Papyrus Sallier I, 3, 4; 8, 8; see Erman, Westcar, II, 37. I am unable to find any confirmation of Brugsch's remark (Reiseberichte, 194) that Merneptah's highest date was not less than 25 nor more than 33. In Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 2, plan of "Temple A" at a place marked h is the remark, "Datum des Merneptah," which perhaps refers to Brugsch's remark, but Lepsius has no reference to the date in his text.

<sup>c</sup>See III, 650.

<sup>d</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 258, and Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, Plate 39, and p. 95. He built a temple at Karnak, and another at Eshmunên (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 24, 86).

<sup>e</sup>Papyrus Harris, 75, 2-4 (IV, 398), States that the anarchy lasted "many years;" then followed the rule of the Syrian. Five years for all this is a minimum.

<sup>f</sup>I accept in this reconstruction the results of Sethe (Untersuchungen, I, 59-63).

<sup>g</sup>Papyrus Sallier, I, 6.

<sup>h</sup>Exactly 31 years and 40 days (IV, 153).

<sup>i</sup>Papyrus Turin; Pleyte and Rossi, Plates 51-60; Spiegelberg, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1891, 73 ff., on Plate 54, ll. 12, 13; Maspero, Momies royales, 663.

<sup>j</sup>Ostrakon in Turin, Maspero, Recueil, II, 116, 117.

Ramses VI . . . . .	$x$ years	} 15 <sup>a</sup> years	1157-1142 B. C.
Ramses VII . . . . .	$x$ "
Ramses VIII . . . . .	$x$ "
Ramses IX . . . . .	19 <sup>b</sup>	"	1142-1123 "
Ramses X . . . . .	1 <sup>c</sup> + $x$	"	1123-1121 "
Ramses XI . . . . .	$x$	"	1121-1118 "
Ramses XII . . . . .	27 <sup>d</sup> + $x$	"	1118-1090 "
Total . . . . .	104+5 $x$ years
Allowance for 1 transfer and 1 coregency . . . . .	1 $\frac{1}{2}$ "
Final total . . . . .	102 $\frac{1}{2}$ +5 $x$ years
Minimum . . . . .	110 years		1200-1090 B. C.

TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY<sup>e</sup>

70. Nesubenedbed . . . . .	} $x$ years	1090-1085 B. C.
Hrihor . . . . .
Pesibkhenno I . . . . .	17+ $x$ "	1085-1067 "
Paynozem I . . . . .	40+ $x$ "	1067-1026 "
Amenemopet . . . . .	49+ $x$ "	1026-976 "
Siamon . . . . .	16+ $x$ "	976-958 "
Pesibkhenno II . . . . .	12+ $x$ "	958-945 "
Total . . . . .	134+6 $x$ "
Minimum . . . . .	145 years	1090-945 B. C.

TWENTY-SECOND DYNASTY<sup>f</sup>

71. Sheshonk I . . . . .	21 (+ $x$ ) years	945-924 B. C.
Osorkon I . . . . .	36 (+ $x$ ) "	924-895 "
Takelot I . . . . .	23 <sup>g</sup> (+ $x$ ) "	895-874 "

<sup>a</sup>For this period we have no dates, but it is limited by the following facts: (1) the term of Setau as high priest at El Kab (IV, 415); (2) the succession of the high-priests of Amon; Amenhotep, known as high priest under Ramses IX at least from year 10 (IV, 487) to year 17 (Papyrus Amherst, ed. Newberry, No. VII, p. 1, l. 5), was the son of Ramsesnakht, high-priest known under Ramses IV, year 3. The term of Setau will not permit lengthening the uncertain interim beyond 15 years; nor is it likely to have been less in view of the succession of high-priests.

<sup>b</sup>IV, 535. <sup>c</sup>IV, 535. This year is a coregency with Ramses IX.

<sup>d</sup>Mariette, Abydos, II, 62 = Catalogue général d'Abydos, No. 1173, pp. 442 f.

<sup>e</sup>A fuller statement of this dynasty will be found in IV, 604 ff.

<sup>f</sup>A fuller statement of this dynasty will be found in IV, 693 f.

<sup>g</sup>See IV, 693, and Daressy (Recueil, XV, 174-75), who is undoubtedly correct in recognizing Takelot I on a stela of year 23.

Osorkon II . . . . .	30 (+ x ) years	874-853 B. C.
Sheshonk II . . . . .	∞	died about 877 "
(Died during coregency with Osorkon II)
Takehot II . . . . .	25 + x years	860-834 "
(7 years coregent with Osorkon II)
Sheshonk III . . . . .	52	" 834-784 "
Pemou . . . . .	6 + x	" 784-782 "
Sheshonk IV . . . . .	37 + x	" 782-745 "
Total . . . . .	230 + 6 x <sup>a</sup> years
Allowance for transfers and coregencies . . . . .	30	"
Final total . . . . .	200 + 6 x years
Minimum . . . . .	200 years	945-745 B. C.

TWENTY-THIRD DYNASTY<sup>b</sup>

72. Pedibast . . . . .	23 <sup>c</sup> + x years	745-722 B. C.
Osorkon III . . . . .	14 + x	"
Takehot III <sup>d</sup> . . . . .	x	"
Total . . . . .	37 + 3 x years
Minimum . . . . .	27 <sup>e</sup> years	745-718 B. C.

TWENTY-FOURTH DYNASTY

73. Bekneranef . . . . .	6 <sup>f</sup> years	718 <sup>g</sup> -712 B. C.
Minimum . . . . .	6 years	718-712 B. C.

<sup>a</sup>The x at the end of Osorkon II's reign falls outside of this total, as his son's reign is counted from his own year 23.

<sup>b</sup>This dynasty will be found fully discussed, with table, in the introduction to the Piankhi Stela (IV, 811 ff.).

<sup>c</sup>IV, 794, 4.

<sup>d</sup>Only known as coregent with Osorkon III. The years between Osorkon III and Bekneranef may be filled up by Takehot III or by the two kings, Psammus and Zet, placed by Africanus after Osorkon III.

<sup>e</sup>Africanus gives a total of 89 years, and Syncellus 44, to this dynasty. The 27 is merely the amount necessary to fill up the gap between the end of the Twenty-second Dynasty and Bekneranef.

<sup>f</sup>IV, 884.

<sup>g</sup>From here on, the date B. C. is obtained by dead reckoning back from the accession of the Twenty-sixth Dynasty in 663 B. C.

TWENTY-FIFTH DYNASTY

74. Shabaka . . . . .	12 <sup>a</sup> years	712-700 B. C.
Shabataka . . . . .	12 <sup>b</sup> "	700*-688 "
Taharka (Tirhaka) . . . . .	26 <sup>c</sup> "	688-663 "
Total . . . . .	50 years
Minimum . . . . .	50 years	712-663 B. C.

TWENTY-SIXTH DYNASTY

75. Psamtik I . . . . .	54 <sup>d</sup> years	663-609 B. C.
Necho . . . . .	16 <sup>e</sup> "	609-593 "
Psamtik II . . . . .	5 <sup>f</sup> "	593-588 "
Apries (Hophra) . . . . .	19 <sup>g</sup> "	588-569 "
Ahmose II (Amasis) . . . . .	44 <sup>h</sup> "	569-525 "
Psamtik III . . . . .	a few months	525 "
Total . . . . .	138 years
Known total, 138 years and a few months . . . . .		663-525 B. C.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, V, 1, e.<sup>e</sup>See IV, 984-5.<sup>b</sup>IV, 885.<sup>f</sup>Ibid.<sup>c</sup>A little over 26 years (IV, 959).<sup>g</sup>IV, 984 ff.<sup>d</sup>IV, 974 ff.

<sup>h</sup>IV, 1026-7. This date is found in a contemporary inscription in Hammamat (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 275<sup>b</sup>); as Herodotus also gives 44 as the length of this reign, there is evidently no doubt that we have in it the highest date of the reign.

ADDENDUM ON CHRONOLOGY (§ 42)

A letter from Eduard Meyer calls my attention to a fragmentary relief in the tomb of Thutnakht (El Bersheh, II, Pls. 8 and 9) which shows that the flax harvest in the middle of the twentieth century B. C. took place between the twenty-third and twenty-seventh of the fourth month. This harvest at the present day in the province of Minieh occurs during the early part of April. Thus the 113th-117th days of the calendar, which normally fell between November 9 and 13 (Julian), then fell in early April, showing a shift of the calendar of over 200 days, and corresponding completely with the shift of 225 days indicated by the Kahun Sothic date (§§ 42, 46). The date of the Twelfth Dynasty is thus confirmed beyond a doubt.

THE PALERMO STONE
FIRST TO THE FIFTH DYNASTIES

THE PALERMO STONE<sup>a</sup>

76. The content of this document, remarkable as it is, is perhaps not more valuable than the revelation it furnishes of the existence of royal annals of an official character, regularly kept by the kings of Egypt in the Old Kingdom and extending back into the time of the two kingdoms of the North and South. They reveal a great and powerful kingdom from the beginning of the dynasties, enjoying ordered government under a highly developed and aggressive state, and exhibiting a high degree of culture and civilization such as we could not have anticipated in this remote age.

77. While a translation of the document, owing to its unique and archaic character, is accompanied by many uncertainties, yet the whole is of an importance which justifies a sufficient presentation of the content to make clear the character, scope, and arrangement of these oldest annals of Egypt.<sup>b</sup> The voluminous commentary necessary for the explanation of many obscure references and allusions is unavoidably omitted here; but the obscurity of these particular points does not affect the significance of the whole document, which will be clear to everyone.

---

<sup>a</sup>A fragment of "Diorite anfibolica," 6.5 cm. thick, 0.435 m. high, and 0.25 m. wide; since 1877 in the Museum of Palermo, and commonly known as the "Palermo Stone." It was published by Pellegrini (Archivio storico Siciliano, nuova serie, anno XX, 297-316, and 3 plates); by Schaefer, who first recognized its real character (Ein Bruchstück altaegyptischer Königsannalen [Anhang zu den Abhandlungen der Königlichen Preussischen Akademie, 1902], with 2 plates); and by Naville (La pierre de Palerme, Rec. XXV, 1-20, with 2 plates). Besides the interpretations of the above scholars, see Maspero (Revue critique, 1899, I, 1, and 1901, I, 383), who was the first to recognize the character of the year-names; also Spiegelberg, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXXV, 10.

<sup>b</sup>The following translation is largely an editing of the rendering of Schaefer and Sethe; but, although space and time for commentary fail me, I have made some changes and additions, like the expedition of Snefru to Syria.

78. The fragment herewith presented was broken out of the middle of a large slab some seven feet long and over two feet high, as it stood on the long edge. It was inscribed on both sides with a series of royal annals, beginning with the predynastic kings of the period before the union of the North and the South, and continuing into the dynastic age to the middle of the Fifth Dynasty. The arrangement of these records can be best understood from the figure (—). The upper line of the front contains at present nine names of predynastic kings of Lower Egypt (the Delta).<sup>a</sup> If the line was full, there were possibly some 120 predynastic kings here enumerated, each rectangle of line 1 (front) containing one name, with no indication of how long each king reigned.<sup>b</sup> In the Fifth Dynasty, therefore, the predynastic kings, the last of whom had reigned some seven centuries before the preparation of this table, were already merely a series of names. Other reasons for the mere citation of the bare names are, however, quite conceivable, such as lack of interest in the predynastic kings on the part of the scribe.

79. But, while the length of the predynastic reigns remains totally uncertain, the date of the beginning of the dynastic period is certainly established by this monument within narrower limits than ever before; and the period from the accession of Menes to the beginning of the Fourth Dynasty is determined within reasonable margins for the first time. The dynastic kings are probably arranged as follows: <sup>a</sup>the First Dynasty occupied ll. 2 and 3, following directly upon the predynastic kings; ll. 4 and 5 contained the Second Dynasty; there is some uncertainty about the disposition of reigns in l. 6, but as the first line of the back contained the end of the Fourth Dynasty, the last two lines<sup>b</sup> (7 and 8) of the front must have contained the bulk of the Fourth, which in all probability throws the Third Dynasty back to l. 6,<sup>c</sup> including possibly the end of l. 5. The larger part of the back was occupied with the three reigns of the Fifth Dynasty, which filled up ll. 2-5, and perhaps continued (in two lines) into the reign of Nuserre.

---

<sup>a</sup>Meyer has identified the place of these kings of Lower Egypt in the Turin Papyrus, where no corresponding kings of Upper Egypt were included, and in Manetho (Aegyptische Chronologie, 199 ff., 203 f.). They follow the gods and precede the "Worshippers of Horus," the immediate predecessors of the dynasties.

<sup>b</sup>Meyer believes that this row must have begun with the gods (ibid., 203).

80. The arrangement of each reign (except l. 1, front) was so that in the narrow horizontal space above each line the name of the king was placed, while below it the years of his reign were distributed in successive rectangles, one year in each rectangle. As the space occupied by the years of each reign far exceeded the length of the king's name, the latter was placed over the middle, thus:

KING'S NAME
Year	Year	Year	Year	Year	Year	Year	Year	Year

81. The vertical line on the right of each rectangle has the form of the hieroglyphic sign for "year." Each year-rectangle contains the chief events which occurred in that year, one of which furnished the official name for that year. Thus we have the "Year of the Battle and Smiting of the Northerners," dating a jar of King Besh (Bš) in Philadelphia; or the "Year of Smiting the Troglodytes" in our fragment (front, l. 6, § 104). This was parallel with the same usage in early Babylonia, as has been long known. As time passed, it became more and more common to name the year after the corresponding fiscal enumeration, thus: "Year of the Second Occurrence of the Numbering of all Large and Small Cattle of the North and the South" (§ 339), or "Year of the Seventh Occurrence of the Numbering of Gold and Lands" (front, l. 5, § 135). This was often abbreviated to "Year of the x'th Occurrence of the Numbering," or still more to "Year of the x'th Occurrence."

<sup>a</sup>The Turin Papyrus of kings shows no clear dynastic division for this period, and hence such division rests solely on the lists of Manetho. But Sethe has shown (Untersuchungen, III) that such division is practically certain in our monument, and Meyer indicates that it is probable in the Turin Papyrus.

<sup>b</sup>Or three lines may have followed l. 6.

<sup>c</sup>See § 86.

82. All other events were then gradually abandoned as designations of the years, and by the Fifth Dynasty the fiscal numberings were almost exclusively used. These occurred every two years, in uninterrupted sequence, irrespective of the changes in reign, and hence it was necessary to call a year when no numbering took place, the "Year after the x'th Occurrence (of the Numbering)." Finally, when the numberings became annual, each year received the name of a new numbering, and this was the system of dating in Egypt from the Sixth Dynasty on. It amounted to numbering the years themselves, and gradually became nothing else. The Palermo stone thus furnishes us the origin of the Egyptian system of dating.

83. In addition to the chief events of the year, each year-rectangle contained, at the bottom in the middle, a datum giving a number of cubits, palms, and fingers, which have been thought to be the height of the inundation<sup>a</sup> for each year; but this is very uncertain.

<sup>a</sup>Measured from some fixed point only a few cubits below high water; but the fine subdivisions in the measurements (down to fractions of a finger-breadth) are against the theory.

84. In ll. 2-5 (front), containing the First and Second Dynasties, the events of each year are for the most part celebrations of religious feasts and the like, and in the latter part the "numberings" appear. With the Third Dynasty (l. 6) the events known to the chronicler become more numerous, increasing and making irregular in size the year-rectangles. They become still larger in the Fourth and Fifth. Small as are the rectangles of the First and Second Dynasties, they are in each line of the same size, and this offers the basis for a rough estimate of the number of years in these dynasties, if we can gain even a distant approximation of the total length of the stone.

85. An examination of the back shows that from one-tenth to one-eighth of the total length of the lines is preserved on the fragment. This insures roughly five hundred years for the length of the first three dynasties, of which only about eighty would belong to the Third Dynasty.<sup>a</sup>

86. In this computation the stone offers little for determining the length of the Third Dynasty. This is, however, shown by the Turin Papyrus to have been only fifty-five years before Snefru; or, with Snefru, seventy-nine years,  $x$  months; or, in round numbers, eighty years. That Snefru belonged to the Third Dynasty is favored by the arrangement of the stone, although the Manethonian tradi-

<sup>a</sup>The first attempt at restoring the length of the stone was made by Sethe, who obtained the following results:

First Dynasty (ll. 2-3).....	253 years
Second Dynasty (ll. 4-5).....	302 years
Third Dynasty (l. 6).....	maximum, 100-110 years

These pioneer results have been modified by Meyer (Aegyptische Chronologie) to the following:

First Dynasty (ll. 2-3).....	210 years
Second Dynasty (ll. 4-5).....	243 years

The possible difference is thus about a century. Meyer's results are certainly a minimum, and Sethe's a maximum, but the principle employed by Meyer would now doubtless be accepted by Sethe.

tion perhaps placed him at the head of the Fourth Dynasty. It should be remembered that this difficulty with the Third Dynasty is not peculiar to any theory of restoration of the stone. We cannot, on any scheme of restoration, push the Third Dynasty back into l. 5 (front), for the birth of Khasekhemui, a king of the latter part of the Second Dynasty, is recorded in l. 5 (No. 4). Nor can we assume that Snefru is here reckoned with the Fourth Dynasty, which would leave only the first half of l. 6 for the whole Third Dynasty. Finally, as Snefru is reckoned with the Third Dynasty, and we know that he was its last king (for he was the predecessor of Khufu), all his predecessors in the dynasty, as well as at least six years of his own reign, must have been included in the first half of l. 6. If all the rectangles of the first half of l. 6 were as small as those of l. 2, this would leave perhaps fifty years for his predecessors in the dynasty. The supposition that more lines are lost at the bottom would not at all affect the Third Dynasty. Again, any great prolongation of the lines is forbidden by the back.

87. The stone offers little aid as to the length of the Fourth Dynasty, as most of that dynasty is lost at the bottom of the front, but it furnishes valuable hints as to the close of the Fourth and the first half of the Fifth Dynasty. The short reigns at the close of the Fourth are fragmentarily indicated in l. 1, and the lengths of the short reigns of the first three kings of the Fifth Dynasty roughly corroborate those indicated in the Turin Papyrus.

88. It will be seen that the monument is invaluable as a source for the chronology of the earliest dynasties. Accepting 2900 B. C. as the date for the accession of the Fourth Dynasty, the Palermo Stone furnishes us an assured minimum of 3400 B. C. as the beginning of the dynastic period and the accession of Menes. This date is only affected by the uncertainty attending all our dates back of the Heracleopolitan rule. Future discovery may reduce the date of Menes by at most a century.

89. The content of these annals is also of great importance, but, as they are themselves only a summary, we cannot epitomize them here. Such facts as the dispatch of a fleet of forty vessels to bring cedar from Lebanon under Snefru are, of course, invaluable.

I. PREDYNASTIC KINGS

Kings of Upper Egypt (?) or the Gods (?)

90. <sup>1</sup>_____

Kings of Lower Egypt

—pu (—-pw); Seka (Šk?); Khayu (H<sup>2</sup>-y<sup>w</sup>); Teyew (Ty<sup>w</sup>);
Thesh (Tš); Ne<sup>h</sup>eb<sup>1</sup> (N<sup>h</sup>hb<sup>1</sup>); Wazenez (W<sup>2</sup>d<sup>-c</sup>nd); Mekh (Mh);
—a (—<sup>2</sup>); _____<sup>a</sup>

II. FIRST DYNASTY

KING T<sup>b</sup> (NAME LOST)

x years

91. <sup>2</sup>_____

Year x+1

Worship of Horus.<sup>c</sup>

Birth of Anubis.<sup>c</sup>

Year x+2

92. 6 months and 7 days.<sup>d</sup>

KING U<sup>e</sup> (NAME LOST)

Year 1

93. Fourth month, thirteenth day.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>At least four more names followed.

<sup>b</sup>Either Menes or his successor, Atothis.      <sup>c</sup>Name of a feast.

<sup>d</sup>This is the fraction of the king's last year which was interrupted by his death and left incomplete.

<sup>e</sup>Either Atothis or his successor.

<sup>f</sup>This is the date of the king's accession, and the following name is the regular designation of a king's first year.

Union of the Two Lands.
Circuit of the Wall.<sup>a</sup>
6 cubits.<sup>b</sup>

Year 2

94. Worship of Horus.
Feast of Desher (Dšr).

Year 3

95. Birth of the two children of the King of Lower Egypt.
4 cubits, 1 palm.

Year 4

96. Worship of Horus.
[— — —]

Year 5

97. 'Design' of the House (called): "Mighty-of-the-Gods" (Šym-nṯrw).

Feast of Sokar.
5 cubits, 5 palms, 1 finger.

Year 6

98. Worship of Horus.
Birth of the goddess Yamet (Yḏm·t).
5 cubits, 1 palm.

Year 7

99. Appearance<sup>c</sup> of the King of Upper Egypt.
Birth of Min.
5 cubits

Year 8

100. Worship of Horus.
Birth of Anubis.
6 cubits, 1 palm.

Year 9

101. First occurrence of the Feast of Zet (Dt).
4 cubits, 1 span.

<sup>a</sup>Name of a feast.

<sup>b</sup>See explanation, § 83.

<sup>c</sup>Or "coronation" (hṯ); it is a feast probably in commemoration of the king's coronation.

*Year 10*102. —————<sup>a</sup>

LOST KINGS

3—————

KING V

*King's Name*103. —————<sup>b</sup> [I<sup>h</sup>born of Me]ret-[I<sup>h</sup>Neit].*Year x+1*Station (in)<sup>c</sup> the temple of Saw (S<sup>w</sup>) in Heka— (Hk<sup>w</sup>—).

3 cubits, 1 palm, 2 fingers.

*Year x+2*104. Smiting of the Troglodytes (Yntyw).

4 cubits, 1 span.

Year x+3

105. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.

Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

Sed jubilee.

8 cubits, 3 fingers.

*Year x+4*106. (Numbering of)<sup>d</sup> all people of the nomes of the west, north, and east.

3 cubits, 1 span.

*Year x+5*107. Second occurrence of the Feast of Zet (Dt).

5 cubits, 2 palms.

<sup>a</sup>At least sixteen years more of this reign are lost, as the king's name was placed in the middle over the horizontal line of years. Our fragment does not reach to the middle; hence over ten years more are lost at the other end, besides six which stood under the name. This makes a minimum total of twenty-six years for this king; but the restoration of the stone shows that he (Atothis) probably reigned some fifty years.

<sup>b</sup>We should probably restore the name of King Miebis; see Sethe, Untersuchungen, III, 47.

<sup>c</sup>The omission of such prepositions is common in these archaic texts.

<sup>d</sup>Or is the plant sign (h<sup>w</sup>) an incorrectly made plant of the South? This would give us all the cardinal points.

Year x+6

108. 'Design' of the House (called): "Thrones-of-the-Gods."
Feast of Sokar.
5 cubits, 1 palm, 2 fingers.

Year x+7

109. Stretching of the Cord (for) the House (called): "Thrones-of-the-Gods," (by) the priest of (the goddess) Seshat ( $\dot{S}\dot{s}^{\circ}t$ , Sefkhet).
Great Door.
4 cubits, 2 palms.

Year x+8

110. Opening of the Lake of the House (called): "Thrones-of-the-Gods."
Shooting of the Hippopotamus.
2 cubits.

Year x+9

111. Station (at) the lake of the temple of Harsaphes ( $\dot{H}ry\text{-}\dot{s}\text{-}f$ ) in Heracleopolis.
5 cubits.

Year x+10

112. Voyage (to) Sahseteni ( $\dot{S}^{\circ}h^{\circ}l\text{-}stny$ ).
Smiting of Werka ( $Wr\text{-}k^{\circ}$ ).
4 cubits, 1 span.

Year x+11

113. Birth of Sed ( $\dot{S}d$ ).
6 cubits, 1 palm, 2 fingers.

Year x+12

114. Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
First occurrence of "Running-of-Apis."<sup>a</sup>
2 cubits, 1 span.

Year x+13

115. Birth of Seshat ( $\dot{S}\dot{s}^{\circ}t$ ) and Mefdet ( $M^{\circ}fd\text{-}t$ ).
3 cubits, 5 palms, 2 fingers.

<sup>a</sup>Some unfamiliar Apis ceremony. Schaefer calls attention to Manetho's statement that the Apis-cult began under King Kaiechos.

Year x+14<sup>a</sup>

116. [Appearance] of the King of Upper Egypt.
Birth of —.

III. SECOND DYNASTY

KING NETERIMU

Lost Reigns

117. 4 — — —

King's Name

Horus: Neterimu (Ntry-mw<sup>b</sup>) son of —

Year 1

118. — — — —

Year 2

[First occurrence of the numbering.]

Year 3

Year 4

[Second occurrence of the numbering.]

[First occurrence of the Feast of Sokar.]<sup>c</sup>

Year 5

Year 6<sup>d</sup>

Worship of Horus.

[Third occurrence of the numbering.]

Year 7

119. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.

<sup>a</sup>There must have been fourteen years on the other side of the royal name. Of these twenty-eight, two fall under the royal name. There were at least two or three more under it, making a minimum of thirty or thirty-one years for this king.

<sup>b</sup>On the reading of the name see Sethe, Untersuchungen, III, 40.

<sup>c</sup>This feast occurred at intervals of six years; see years 10 and 16.

<sup>d</sup>This may be the fifth year, as the first numbering may have taken place in the first year.

Stretching of the Cord (for) the House (called) Hor-Ren (Hr-rn).
3 cubits, 4 palms, 2 fingers.

Year 8

120. Worship of Horus.
Fourth occurrence of the numbering.
4 cubits, 2 fingers.

Year 9

121. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.
Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
Running of Apis.
4 cubits, 1 palm, 2 fingers.

Year 10

122. Worship of Horus.
Fifth occurrence of the numbering.
4 cubits, 4 palms.

Year 11

123. Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
Second occurrence of the Feast of Sokar.
3 cubits, 4 palms, 2 fingers.

Year 12

124. Worship of Horus.
Sixth occurrence of the numbering.
4 cubits, 3 fingers.

Year 13

125. First occurrence of the Feast: "Worship-of-Horus-of-Heaven" (Dw<sup>3</sup>-Hr-pt).
Hacking up of the city: Shem-Re (Sm-R).
Hacking up of the city: "House-of-the-North."
4 cubits, 3 fingers.

Year 14

126. Worship of Horus.
Seventh occurrence of the numbering.
1 cubit.

Year 15

127. Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

Second occurrence of "Running-of-Apis."

3 cubits, 4 palms, 3 fingers.

Year 16

128. Worship of Horus.

Eighth occurrence of the numbering.

3 cubits, 5 palms, 2 fingers.

Year 17

129. Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

Third occurrence of the Feast of Sokar.

2 cubits, 2 fingers.

Year 18

130. Worship of Horus.

Ninth occurrence of the numbering.

2 cubits, 2 fingers.

Year 19

131. Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

the Feast of Zet (Dt).

3 cubits.

Year 20

132. Worship of Horus.

Tenth occurrence of [the numbering].

Year 21<sup>b</sup>

LOST KINGS

KING W (NAME LOST)

Year 12<sup>c</sup>

133. Worship of Horus.

Sixth occurrence of the numbering.

2 cubits, 4 palms, 1½ fingers.

<sup>a</sup>Schaefer: "Opfer (?) . . . Göttin Nhbt . . . Dt-Fest."

<sup>b</sup>Of these twenty-one years, sixteen were before the royal name; sixteen more, therefore, followed it; five are under it, making a total of at least thirty-seven.

<sup>c</sup>Or possibly year 11, according to the beginning of the numbering in year 1 or year 2.

Year 13

134. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.
 Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
 (The temple called): "The-Goddess-Abides" was built (of) stone.
 2 cubits, 3 palms, 1 finger.

Year 14

135. Worship of Horus.
 Seventh occurrence of the numbering of gold and lands.
 $3\frac{2}{3}$  cubits.

Year 15

136. Birth of Khasekhemui ( $H^c-s\dot{h}mwy$ ).
 1 cubit, 6 palms,  $2\frac{1}{2}$  fingers.

Year 16

137. Worship of Horus.
 Eighth occurrence of the numbering of gold and lands.
 4 cubits, 2 palms,  $2\frac{2}{3}$  fingers.

Year 17

138. Fourth occurrence of bringing the wall of Dewazefa ( $Dw^2-\dot{d}j^2$ ).
 Shipbuilding.
 4 cubits, 2 palms.

Year 18

139. 2 months, 23 days.<sup>a</sup>

KING X (NAME LOST)

Year 1

140. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.
 Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
 Union of the Two Lands.
 Circuit of the Wall.
 4 cubits, 2 palms,  $2\frac{2}{3}$  fingers.

Year 2

141. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.

<sup>a</sup>The total length of this reign was thus either sixteen or seventeen years, two months, and twenty-three days.

Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
 [Introduction<sup>1</sup> of the King into the double Senut<sup>a</sup>-house.
 4 cubits,  $1\frac{2}{3}$  palms.

Year 3

142. Worship of Horus.
 Birth of Min.
 2 cubits, 3 palms,  $2\frac{3}{4}$  fingers.

Year 4

143. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.
 Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.
 Stretching of the Cord (for) the House (called): "Shelter-of-the-Gods" (Kbh-ntrw).
 3 cubits, 3 palms, 2 fingers.

Year<sup>b</sup> 5

144. Worship of Horus.
 _____
 3 cubits, — —, — —.

IV. THIRD DYNASTY

LOST REIGNS

6 _____

KING SNEFRU

145.

Year  $x+1$ <sup>c</sup>

_____ [Birth of] the two children of the King of Lower Egypt.
 [Sixth occurrence of the numbering.]

Year  $x+2$

146. Building of 100-cubit<sup>d</sup> dewatowe-ships (Dw<sup>3</sup>-t<sup>3</sup>wy) of meru (mr) wood, and of 60 sixteen<sup>e</sup>-barges of the king.

<sup>a</sup>The senut (snwt) are flag-staves on a temple front

<sup>b</sup>At least eleven years more may be added to this reign.

<sup>c</sup>As the numberings are irregular in this reign, it is not safe to compute the year from the two given.

<sup>d</sup>This refers to the length, which was thus some 167 feet.

<sup>e</sup>This numeral refers to a dimension or to the number of oars in each barge, or something similar. Schaefer relevantly recalls the "eights" (ships) of Uni (§ 322, l. 41).

Hacking up the land of the Negro.
 Bringing of 7,000 living prisoners, and 200,000 large and small cattle.
 Building of the wall of the Southland and Northland (called) "Houses-of-Snefru."
 Bringing of 40 ships filled (with) cedar wood.<sup>a</sup>
 2 cubits, 2 fingers.

Year x+3

147. Making 35 houses.<sup>b</sup>
 1—1 of 122 cattle.
 Building of a 100-cubit dewatowe-ship (Dw<sup>3</sup>-t<sup>3</sup>wy) of cedar wood, and 2 100-cubit ships of meru wood.
 Seventh occurrence of the numbering.
 5 cubits, 1 palm, 1 finger.

Year x+4

148. Erection of:
 "Exalted-is-the-White-Crown-of-Snefru-upon-the-Southern-Gate."<sup>c</sup>
 "Exalted-is-the-Red-Crown-of-Snefru-upon-the-Northern-Gate."<sup>c</sup>
 Making the doors of the king's palace of cedar wood.
 Eighth occurrence of the numbering.
 2 cubits, 2 palms, 2 $\frac{3}{4}$  fingers.

Year<sup>d</sup> x+5

149. _____
 _____

<sup>a</sup>This is an expedition by sea to Lebanon. The omission of the prepositions (here m, "with") is common in this inscription, having been copied without change by the Fifth Dynasty scribe, from the ancient original of Snefru's time, in which, as commonly in the archaic inscriptions, the prepositions were lacking.

<sup>b</sup>Some particular kind of building is meant.

<sup>c</sup>These are the names of two gates or parts of the palace of Snefru: one for the South and one for the North. We have thus the double name of a double palace, which, like the organs of the government, was double, to correspond with the old kingdoms of South and North. These two gates are still preserved in the palace of the Empire as seen in the Amarna tombs. The palace front was always referred to as the "double façade" or "double gate" (Rwtj); hence also the dual determinative of pr-c<sup>3</sup>. The state temples also were double; each had a "double façade," and the hypostyle was divided into north and south by the central aisle. The division of the palace audience hall will have been the same. That the two names in § 148 do not refer to two separate buildings is shown by the record of the making of the doors in the next remark, as in the year 7 of Miebis.

<sup>d</sup>After the year-sign, the sign for king and, below, the cubit-sign are visible.

V. FOURTH DYNASTY

LOST REIGNS

?_____

KING Y

King's Name

_____a

LOST REIGNS

rb_____

KING MENKURE (?)<sup>c</sup>Year x— [months], 24 days.<sup>d</sup>

KING SHEPSESKAF

*Year 1150. a) Month 4 (+x), eleventh day.<sup>e</sup>

b) Appearance of the King [of Upper Egypt].

Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

Union of the Two Lands.

Circuit of the Wall.

Seshed (Sšd) Feast.<sup>f</sup>

Birth of Upwawet.

The king worships the gods who united the Two Lands.

151. c) ——— selection of the place of the pyramid (called):
"Shelter-of-Shepseskaf."152. d) ——— 20 [—] of the South and North every day.e) ——— 1,624<sup>g</sup>—; ——— 600 —.

4 cubits, 3 palms, 2½ fingers.

<sup>a</sup>The determinative after the name of his mother and the tip of one sign before it are all that remains of his reign.

<sup>b</sup>Beginning of the back.

<sup>c</sup>Possibly one of the three ephemeral kings placed by the Sakkara list and Manetho at the close of the Fourth Dynasty. See Meyer, Aegyptische Chronologie, 195.

<sup>d</sup>Meyer (ibid.) would see in the vacant space left by the scribe before this note an evidence of the illegitimacy of this king; it would seem, however, that a number of the exigencies of space might have produced such a vacancy.

<sup>e</sup>The date of his accession.

<sup>f</sup>Confer the coronation of Hatshepsut, II, 240.

<sup>g</sup>These numerals, like those in ll. 2-4, are the numbers of the stat of land in the temple endowments of that year.

VI. FIFTH DYNASTY

KING USERKAF

*Years 1-3153. ———Year 4

Third occurrence of the finding of —.

*Year 5<sup>a</sup>154. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt Userkaf; he made (it) as his monument for:155. The spirits of Heliopolis: 20 offerings of bread and beer at every [—] and every [—] feast; 36 stat of land [— —] in the domain of Userkaf.

- 156. 1. The gods of the sun-temple (called): Sepre (Sp-R):
24 stat of land in the domain of Userkaf;
2 oxen, 2 geese every day.
2. Re: 44 stat of land in the nomes of the Northland;
3. Hathor: 44 stat of land in the nomes of the Northland.
4. The gods of the House of [—] of Horus: 54 stat of land; erection of the shrine of his temple (in) Buto of the nome of Xoïs;
5. Sepa (Sp<sup>2</sup>): 2 stat of land; building of his temple.
6. Nekhbet in the sanctuary (ntry) of the South: 10 offerings of bread and beer every day.
7. Buto in Pernu (Pr-nw): 10 offerings of bread and beer every day.
8. The gods of the sanctuary (ntry) of the South: 48 offerings of bread and beer every day.
- 157. Year of the third occurrence of the numbering of large cattle.
4 cubits, 2½ fingers.

*Year 6158. [The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Userkaf; he made (it) as his monument for]:—————<sup>b</sup>: 1,700 stat [— —] in the North; ———

<sup>a</sup>This may be year 6, according as the numbering began in year 1 or 2; but the restoration of the stone rather favors year 5.

<sup>b</sup>Some god's name.

KING SAHURE

3. ———

Year 5<sup>a</sup>

159. a) The King of [Upper] and Lower Egypt, Sahure; he made (it) as his monument for:

1. — in Heliopolis; ——— 200 [—], ——— divine barque
——— [—].

2. Nekhbet, mistress of Perwer (Pr-wr): 800 daily offerings of bread and beer;

3. Buto, mistress of Perneser (Pr-nsr): 4,800 daily offerings of bread and beer;

4. Re in the Senut-house (Šnw): 138 daily offerings of bread and beer;

5. Re in the Sanctuary (ntry) of the South: 40 daily offerings of bread and beer;

6. Re in Tep-het (Tp-h): 74 daily offerings of bread and beer;

7. Hathor in the sun-temple, Sekhet-Re (Šht-R): 4 daily offerings of bread and beer;

8. Re of the sun-temple, Sekhet-Re: 12,000 [—] stat of land in the nome of 'Xois';

9. Mes (Mš): 2 stat of land in the nome of Busiris;

10. Sem (Šm): 2 stat of land in the nome of Busiris;

11. Khent-yawetef (Hnt-y<sup>3</sup>wf): 2 [— —] stat of land in the Memphite nome;

12. Hathor in Ro-she (R<sup>3</sup>-š) of Sahure: 2 [— —] stat of land in the East;

13. Hathor in (the temple of) the pyramid, "The-Soul-of-Sahure-Shines": 1 stat of land in the Libyan nome;

14. The White Bull: 13 [— —] stat of land in the eastern Khent nome (XIV).

15. b) Third occurrence of the finding of [— —]

Year of the second numbering.

2 cubits, 2½ fingers.

Year 6

160. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Sahure; he made it as his monument for]:

<sup>a</sup>It is the second numbering, and may be year 4.

The Divine Ennead,

Year 13<sup>a</sup>

161. 4[The king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sahure; he made it as] his monument for:

1. ————
2. Re Ꞗ—Ꞗ: — [stat] of land in the North and South;
3. Hathor: — [stat] of land in the North and South;
4. —: — [stat] of land in the North and South;
5. —: ———— all things.
6. There were brought from:
7. The Malachite-country, — — Ꞗ6,000Ꞗ —.
8. Punt, 80,000 measures of myrrh, Ꞗ6,000Ꞗ — of electrum, 2,600 Ꞗ—Ꞗ staves, Ꞗ—Ꞗ.

Year after the ꞖseventhꞖ<sup>b</sup> numbering.

Year 14

162. Ꞗ9Ꞗ months, Ꞗ6Ꞗ days.

KING NEFERIRKERE

King's Name

163. Horus: Wsr-hꞖw;Ꞗ King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: HꞖw-m-shmw ————.

Year 1

164. Second month, seventh day.

Birth of the Gods.

Union of the Two Lands.

Circuit of the Wall.

<sup>a</sup>The "numbering" is uncertain, being either 6 or 7. The year may be anywhere from 11 to 15, according as the first numbering was in the year 1 or year 2, or the numbering be the sixth or seventh. Meyer's results make 13 the most probable here.

<sup>b</sup>The number is unfortunately not quite certain, but the margin of uncertainty is not great. The Turin Papyrus gives Sahure twelve years, and Manetho gives him thirteen, both of which numbers might be practically correct, as one might take account of the nine months of the last year, and count the thirteenth year as complete.

<sup>c</sup>"Rich in Diadems."

165. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferirkere (Njr-yr-kꜣ-Rꜣ); he made (it) as [his] monument [for]:

1. The Divine Ennead in [—] of the Senut-house (Šmwꜣt): [—] stat of land in the city (called): “Neferirkere-Beloved-of-the-Divine-Ennead,” under<sup>a</sup> the House of Neferirkere in [—];

2. The Spirits of Heliopolis and the Gods of Khereha (Hr-ꜣhꜣ): [—] stat of land in the city (called): “Neferirkere-Beloved-of-the-Spirits-of-Heliopolis;” 251 (+x) stat of land in the eastern Khent nome (XIV) — under the two high-priests of Heliopolis, the prophets and [officials] of his house [—————]

3. Re: an altar;

4. Hathor: an altar; [— — — —]; [210] divine offerings, 203 offerings of bread and beer; there was made [— —] peasant serfs [—].

5. There was fashioned [—] of electrum, (for) Ihi (Yhy), a statue, followed to the house of Hathor, [mistress] of the sycamore, in Meret-Snefru;

6. Re of Tep-het (Tp-ht); tner was done for him the like —————

3 cubits, — — , — — .

5 —————

Year 9<sup>b</sup>

166. [The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferirkere; he made it as his monument for]:

1. —————

2. [—————]

3. Re in the sun-temple: “Favorite-Seat-of-Re;” there was made for him a feast of the Circuit-[of-the-Wall] —————.

King Setneh (Stnh):<sup>c</sup> — stat of land.

Year of the fifth occurrence [of the numbering].

Year 10

167. 1. Appearance of the King of Upper Egypt.

Appearance of the King of Lower Egypt.

—————

<sup>a</sup>Under charge of?

<sup>b</sup>Or possibly 10; Meyer's results make 9 more probable.

<sup>c</sup>An ancient king, also mentioned in the tomb of Methen; he was perhaps a king of Upper Egypt.

2. Erection of the wall of the sun-barque at the south side [of the sun-temple: "Favorite-Seat-of-Re"].<sup>a</sup>

3. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferirkere; he made (it) as [his] monument [for]:

4. Re in the sun-temple: "Favorite-Seat-of-Re": 18 —<sup>1</sup> loaves: for the evening sun-barque —; and for the morning sun-barque —.

5. The Souls of Heliopolis: — — — of electrum;

6. Ptah, "South-of his-Wall": — stat ———.

7. Buto of the South: — — — of electrum.

8. ———

---

<sup>a</sup>This is a sun-barque like that found at Abusir beside the sun-temple of Nuserre by the excavations of the Berlin Museum.

THE THIRD DYNASTY

REIGN OF SNEFRU

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

168. Although the Pharaohs had operated in the copper region of Sinai as far back as the First Dynasty, Snefru was later regarded as the great founder of the Egyptian mining there. He became a patron god of the region (§ 722), he gave his name to the roads and stations of the eastern Delta (§ 493, l. 9), and officials boasting of their achievements there claimed that nothing like them had been done since the time of Snefru (§ 731).

Being the only existing inscriptional record of achievement by Snefru, this document is of especial importance. The relief to which the inscriptions belong is as important as they. It represents the king in the etef-crown, with upraised war-club about to smite a Bedwi, whom he has forced to kneel, holding him by the hair of his head.<sup>b</sup> This, of course, symbolizes Snefru's victory over the Bedwin of this region, during his mining operations here.

169. The inscriptions contain only titles and names of Snefru; they are:

King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Lord of Truth; Golden Horus: Snefru. Snefru, Great God, who is given Satisfaction, Stability, Life, Health, all Joy forever.

---

<sup>a</sup>Engraved on the rock-walls of the Wadi Maghara in the Peninsula of Sinai. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 2 a; Laborde, Voyage de l'Arabie Pétrée, Pl. 5, No. 4; Laval, Voyage dans la Péninsule Arabique, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, Pl. 3, No. 1; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1492 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 7, 8; Morgan, Recherches, I, 233; Weill, Sinai, 103.

<sup>b</sup>This form of relief is as old as the early First Dynasty. Such a scene had already been left here by King Semerkhet, of the early dynastic age (Weill, Revue archéologique, II [1903], 231); and an ivory tablet shows King Usephais, of the First Dynasty, smiting a Bedwi native in the same way (Macgregor Collection, Spiegelberg, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXXV, 8).

Horus: Lord of Truth.<sup>a</sup>
 Smiter of Barbarians.

A second, similar relief of Snefru in the Wadi Maghara is near the above.<sup>b</sup>

BIOGRAPHY OF METHEN<sup>c</sup>

170. This is the earliest biography which we possess, and it clearly betrays its primitive character. It is impossible to determine with certainty the succession of the parts distributed on the different walls, and the language is so bald, abbreviated, and obscure that some of the narrative remains unintelligible. Apart from the fact that it is our earliest document of the kind, and the only one from the Third Dynasty, the biography is especially valuable because it deals with the geography and government of the North, narrating Methen's activity in the Delta, of the administration of which at this early period we otherwise know almost nothing. The narrative tells of his gradual rise, from a beginning as scribe and overseer of a provision magazine, until he governs a considerable number of towns and districts in the Delta. He also obtained in Upper Egypt the rule of the eastern part of the Fayum and the Anubis nome (Seventeenth). He was liberally rewarded with gifts of lands, became master of the hunt, and tells us the size of his house, with some account of the grounds; all of which, from an age so remote, is of especial interest. He died in the reign of Snefru; all his affiliations were with the families preceding Snefru, and he was naturally buried beside the terraced pyramid of Zoser, of the earlier part of the Third Dynasty.

<sup>a</sup>In the palace façade, the so-called "banner."

<sup>b</sup>Weill, Sinai, 104.

<sup>c</sup>From his mastaba-chamber, found by Lepsius at Sakkara, and now in Berlin (Nos. 1105, 1106); published by Lepsius in Denkmäler, II, 3-7, 120, a-e; Schaefer, Aegyptische Inschriften aus dem Königlichen Museum zu Berlin, I, 68, 73-87; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 1-7.

Death of Methen's Father

171. <sup>1</sup>There were presented to him the things of his father,<sup>a</sup> the judge and scribe Anubisemonekh; there was no grain or anything of the house, (<sup>1</sup>but<sup>1</sup>) there were people<sup>b</sup> and small cattle.

Methen's Career

172. <sup>2</sup>He was made chief scribe of the provision magazine, and overseer of the things of the provision magazine. <sup>3</sup>He was made [————] <sup>4</sup>becoming local governor of Xoïs (Ox-nome), and inferior field-judge of Xoïs. <sup>5</sup>He was appointed [—]<sup>c</sup>-judge, he was made overseer of all flax of the king, <sup>6</sup>he was made ruler of Southern Perked (Pr-kd), and <sup>7</sup>deputy<sup>1</sup>, <sup>7</sup>he was made local governor of the people of Dep, <sup>8</sup>palace-ruler of Miper (My<sup>1</sup>-pr) and Persepa (Pr-sp<sup>2</sup>), and local governor of the Saitic nome, <sup>9</sup>ruler of the stronghold of Sent (Snt). <sup>1</sup>deputy<sup>1</sup> of nomes, <sup>10</sup>ruler of Pershesthet (Pr-šst<sup>1</sup>), ruler of the towns of the palace, of the Southern Lake.<sup>d</sup> <sup>11</sup>Sheret-Methen (Šrt-Mtn) was founded, <sup>1</sup>and the domain which<sup>e1</sup> his father Anubisemonekh presented to him.

Honors and Gifts

173. <sup>1</sup>Administrator<sup>1</sup>, nomarch, and overseer of commissions in the Anubis nome,<sup>f</sup> overseer of [—] of <sup>2</sup>the Mendesian nome, [— —] <sup>4</sup>stat<sup>18</sup> of land, (with) people and everything . . . . <sup>3</sup>. . . . <sup>4</sup>There were founded for him the 12 towns of Shet-Methen (Št-Mtn) in the Saitic nome, in the Xoite nome, and the Sekhemite nome. . . . , <sup>5</sup>There were conveyed to him as a reward 200 stat of lands by numerous royal [—]; <sup>6</sup>a <sup>1</sup>mortuary<sup>1</sup> offering of 100 loaves every day from the mor-

<sup>a</sup>Supply a t, which clearly has been lost or omitted.

<sup>b</sup>See the same expression, § 175, l. 18. These are the serfs attached to the land and conveyed with it.

<sup>c</sup>Nht-hrw, lit. "strong-voiced," an administrative position having to do with lands.

<sup>d</sup>The Southern Lake occurs also next to Nomes XX and XXI (combined) of Upper Egypt in a Tehneh tomb, Annales III, 76.

<sup>e</sup>Or "when his father A. gave (it) to him."

<sup>f</sup>Seventeenth nome of Upper Egypt.

<sup>g</sup>On the doubtful character of the measure here, see Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 412.

tuary temple of the mother of the king's children, Nemathap (N-m<sup>o</sup>c · t-h<sup>o</sup> p); <sup>7</sup>a house 200 cubits long and 200 cubits wide, built and equipped; fine trees were set out, a very large lake was made therein, figs and vines were set out. <sup>8</sup>It was recorded therein according to the king's writings; their names were according to the decree (sr) of the king's writings. <sup>9</sup>Very plentiful trees and vines were set out, a great quantity of wine was made therein. <sup>10</sup>A vineyard<sup>a</sup> was made for him: 2,000 stat of land within the wall; trees were set out, (fin<sup>l</sup>) <sup>b</sup>Imeres (Yy-mrs), Sheret-Methen (Šr-Mtn), Yat-Sebek (Y<sup>o</sup> t-Sbk), Shet-Methen (Št-Mtn).

Methen's Offices

- 174. <sup>1</sup>Ruler<sup>c</sup> of Southern Perked (Pr-ḳd);
<sup>2</sup>Ruler<sup>d</sup> of Perwersah (Pr-wr-s<sup>o</sup> ḥ);
<sup>3</sup>Ruler and local governor of the stronghold, Hesén (Hsn); in the Harpoon nome;
<sup>4</sup>Palace-ruler and local governor in Sekhemu (Šḫmw) of Xoís (Ox-nome).
<sup>5</sup>Palace-ruler and local governor in Dep (Buto);<sup>e</sup>
<sup>6</sup>Palace-ruler and local governor in Miper (Myl-pr), of the Saite nome;<sup>f</sup>
<sup>7</sup>Palace-ruler and local governor in Two Hounds, of the Mendesian nome;
<sup>8</sup>Palace-ruler in Heswer (Hs-wr); ruler of fields in the west of the Saitic nome;<sup>g</sup>
<sup>9</sup>Palace-ruler of the Cow stronghold;<sup>h</sup> local governor in the desert, and master of the hunt;
<sup>10</sup>Ruler of fields, <sup>1</sup>deputy<sup>1</sup> and local governor in the Sekhemite nome;<sup>i</sup>
<sup>11</sup>Nomarch, <sup>1</sup>administrator<sup>1</sup>, and deputy in the eastern Fayum;
<sup>12</sup>Field-judge, palace-ruler of the west of the Saitic nome, leader of <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>.

<sup>a</sup>The first vineyard seems to have been in the garden around his house; the second is a large vineyard by itself.

<sup>b</sup>The connection of these four towns is not evident.

<sup>c</sup>Hk<sup>o</sup>. <sup>d</sup>Var., "Palace-ruler."

<sup>e</sup>Var., "Local governor of Dep, local governor of the people of Dep."

<sup>f</sup>He was also "Palace-ruler and local governor in Mesezui (Msdwt), of the Saitic nome."

<sup>g</sup>Var., "Palace-ruler of fields, and local governor in the Saitic nome."

<sup>h</sup>Var., "Local governor of the Cow stronghold;" this was one of the oases.

<sup>i</sup>Second nome of Lower Egypt.

Gifts of Land

175. <sup>13</sup>There were conveyed to him, as a reward, 200 stat of land by the numerous royal 1—1.

<sup>14</sup>There were conveyed to him 50 stat of land by (his) mother Neb-sent (Nb-sm); <sup>15</sup>she made a will thereof to (her)<sup>a</sup> children; <sup>16</sup>it was placed in their possession by the king's writings (in) every place.

<sup>17</sup>Ruler of 1—1 of the Sekhemite nome. There were given to him 12 stat of land, with<sup>b</sup> his children; <sup>18</sup>there were people and small cattle.<sup>c</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Not "my children," see l. 7, where "the people of Dep" is written in the same way.

<sup>b</sup>That is: "and to his children likewise."

<sup>c</sup>With the land; see §171.

THE FOURTH DYNASTY

REIGN OF KHUFU

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

I

176. The relief is like that of Snefru,<sup>b</sup> except that the god Thoth is here added in the place of the Horus-name, and the king wears the double crown. Similarly also the inscriptions consist only of titles of the king. They are:

Khnum-Khufu,<sup>c</sup> Great God, Smiter of the Troglodytes ———.
All protection and life are with him.

II<sup>d</sup>

Consists only of titles of Khufu.

---

INVENTORY STELA<sup>e</sup>

177. The references to the Sphinx, and the so-called temple beside it in the time of Khufu, have made this monument from the first an object of great interest.

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut into the rock-walls of the Wadi Maghara. Text and relief: Laborde, Voyage de l'Arabie, Pl. 5, No. 2; Laval, Voyage dans la Péninsule Arabique, Insc. hiér., I, No. 2; II, No. 1; Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 2, b, c; Ordnance Survey, III, 5; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1493 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 8; Weill, Sinai, 105.

<sup>b</sup>See §§ 168, 169.

<sup>c</sup>The full form of Khufu's name; it means: "Khnum protects me." For the omission of the god's name cf. the similar usage in Hebrew, e. g., Nathan and Nathaniel. See Müller, Recueil, IX, 176.

<sup>d</sup>Immediately on the right of 1, and published with it.

<sup>e</sup>Discovered by Mariette during his excavations of the Sphinx and vicinity (September, 1853, to 1858), in the little temple of Isis built by Pesebkheno, east of the great pyramid; now in Cairo. Text: Mariette, Album, Pl. 27; Monuments divers, 53; Maspero, Dawn of Civilisation, 413; Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 46; Birch, Egyptian Texts, 5, 6; Bunsen, Egypt's Place, 2d ed., V, 719-21. See also Mariette, Le Sérapéum de Memphis, 90, 100; Meyer, Geschichte des alten Aegyptens, 207, 208; and Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1231.

These references would be of the highest importance if the monument were contemporaneous with Khufu; but the orthographic evidences of its late date are entirely conclusive, and the reference to the temple of a goddess whose cult arose as late as that of Isis, as well as the title of Isis, viz., "mistress of the pyramid," prove conclusively that the present stela is not a copy of an older document.<sup>a</sup> The fact that the priests of Pesebkenno's time regarded the building beside the Sphinx, as the temple of "Osiris of Rosta" (R<sup>2</sup>-st<sup>2</sup>) is, however, of great interest, but does not determine for us the original character of that structure.<sup>b</sup>

178. <sup>c</sup>He made (it) for his mother, Isis, Divine Mother; Hathor, Mistress of 'Nun'.<sup>d</sup> The investigation<sup>e</sup> was placed on a stela. He gave to her an offering anew, and he built her temple of stone again. He found these gods in her place.<sup>f</sup>

179. The inscription in the lowermost section of the sunken panel is also of importance in connection with § 180.

<sup>a</sup>Maspero, Dawn of Civilisation, 364, n. 8.

<sup>b</sup>It is well to recall that in the Empire the true character of the Sphinx had been forgotten or misunderstood. The same might equally well have happened in the case of the building alongside it. [Later: It is now known that the building is a monumental portal, the entrance to the causeway leading up to the second pyramid.]

<sup>c</sup>Top and left side; introduction same as top and right side (§ 180).

<sup>d</sup>Text has the three mw signs used in writing Nun.

<sup>e</sup>Of her titles to the land? It is probably this remark which led Maspero to conclude that this stela is a copy of an older document. The word translated "investigation" (sp' t for s' yp' t) occurs also in Dümichen, Bauurkunde des Dendera-tempels, 16, in the same connection; cf. Brugsch, Hieroglyphisch-demotisches Wörterbuch, 1206, and a better example in Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1223, top line (time of Ramses II).

<sup>f</sup>A reference to the statues of the gods enumerated in the sunken panel. The stela is really an inventory of such statues; see § 180.

The district of the Sphinx of Harmakhis (Hr-m-g<sup>2</sup>hw<sup>1</sup>t) is on the south of the house of Isis, Mistress of the Pyramid; on the north of<sup>a</sup> Osiris, Lord of Rosta (R<sup>2</sup>-st<sup>2</sup>). The writings [of the goddess<sup>b</sup> of] Harmakhis, were brought, in order to investigate.<sup>c</sup> — may he grow; may he live forever and ever, [looking]<sup>d</sup> toward the east.

180. The sunken panel occupying the greater part of the stela contains only reliefs<sup>d</sup> representing the statues of gods, belonging to the temple, and texts giving their names, the materials of which they were made, and their dimensions. The following texts occupy the raised margin and the edge:

<sup>e</sup>Live the Horus: Mezer (Md[r]), King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Khufu, who is given life. He found the house of Isis, Mistress of the Pyramid,<sup>f</sup> beside the house of the Sphinx of <sup>g</sup>[Harmakhis] on the north-west of the house of Osiris,<sup>h</sup> Lord of Rosta (R<sup>2</sup>-st<sup>2</sup>w). He built his pyramid beside the temple of this goddess, and he built a pyramid for the king's-daughter<sup>i</sup> Henutsen (Hmw<sup>1</sup>-sn) beside this temple.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>a</sup>One expects "house of."

<sup>b</sup>Isis?

<sup>c</sup>The connection between this sentence and the preceding is probably that the limits of "The district of the Sphinx" were investigated as found recorded in "the writings (viz., the records) of the goddess." (It is possibly this statement also which leads Maspero to believe the document is a copy of an older one.) The same word (syp) is used in reference to the investigation of old titles, e. g., in Khnum-hotep's tomb, Benihasan (§ 625, l. 44.).

<sup>d</sup>But see § 179.

<sup>e</sup>Top and right side.

<sup>f</sup>This is also her title in the sunken panel.

<sup>g</sup>The genitive n shows that "Harmakhis" as found in the same phrase in the sunken panel, has been omitted.

<sup>h</sup>That this would identify the so-called "temple of the Sphinx" as the temple of "Osiris of Rosta" was early noticed by Mariette (cf. Le Sérapéum, p. 99); but the fact seems to have been unnoticed, and does not find mention in any of the archæologies. The mere statement that the king "found" the Isis temple is unusual; one expects mw: "in ruins" as so very often, and this is confirmed by the statement of the left side: "He built her temple again."

<sup>i</sup>According to Herodotus, the middle of the three small pyramids east of the Great Pyramid, belonged to Khufu's daughter (Herodotus, II, 126). Henutsen is mentioned in a contemporary tomb at Gizeh (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1231).

<sup>j</sup>According to this statement, the little Isis-temple east of the Great Pyramid was standing on the Gizeh plateau before any of the pyramids were built! If Maspero accepts this statement, he should add this Isis-temple to the buildings which he believes were the predecessors of the pyramids on the Gizeh plateau (Maspero, Dawn of Civilisation, 365, n. 2).

EXAMPLES OF DEDICATION INSCRIPTIONS BY SONS

181. Many of the larger mastabas of the Old Kingdom contain long inscriptions by the sons of the deceased nobles relating their pious solicitude for the tombs of their departed fathers. In some cases the tomb was even built by the son after the father's death. All these longer inscriptions will be found herein; the following are only the more important shorter ones. They are all from the Fourth and Fifth Dynasties.

182. <sup>a</sup>By his eldest son, the chief mortuary priest and scribe, Ptah: "I came that I might do this for him, when he was buried in the beautiful west, according to that which he spake about it, while he was [alive] upon his two feet."

183. <sup>b</sup>One whose son shall do this for him, when he is in the west,<sup>c</sup> Ikhi (Yhy), he saith: "I did this for my father, when he journeyed to the west upon the beautiful ways, whereon the revered (dead) journey."

184. <sup>d</sup>By his son, the overseer of the pyramid, "Great-is-Khafre," the king's-confidant, Thethi (Tty), who made (this) for his father and his mother, when they were both buried in the western highland.

185. <sup>e</sup>Revered by the great god, king's-confidante, Henutsen. It was her eldest son, the field-judge, who made (it) for her, to make mortuary offerings to her therein.

---

<sup>a</sup>From the tomb of Thenti (Tnty) at Gizeh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 34, d; Mariette, Mastabas, 538; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 8 (from drawing No. 282, Berlin Museum).

<sup>b</sup>From a false door seen in the hands of a dealer; published by Sethe, Urkunden, I, 9, from Berlin squeeze, No. 1675.

<sup>c</sup>A reminder to the son of the pious son, by recalling what the latter did for his father.

<sup>d</sup>Mastaba at Gizeh; now in British Museum, No. 80; published by Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, 8D; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 15 (collated with Berlin squeeze, No. 661).

<sup>e</sup>Cairo, No. 1691; published by Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 5; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 34 (copy by Erman).

186. <sup>a</sup>By the Pharaoh's<sup>b</sup> treasurer of the god, Zezemonekh, who made this<sup>c</sup> for his wife Nubhotep. He buried her in this beautiful tomb.

<sup>a</sup>The Pharaoh's<sup>b</sup> treasurer of the god Zezemonekh. I made this<sup>c</sup> for my eldest son, the treasurer of the god, Theshen (Ts-hn), while he was a child.

187. <sup>d</sup>Sole companion of love, leader of the palace-hall, overseer of the baths of the palace, overseer of the bounty of the king's field of offerings, revered by his lord every day, governor of the Cow stronghold, Kam. (This tomb is) what his eldest son, his revered, the judge and inferior scribe Hotep, made for him, that he (the son) might be revered by him (the father) when he (the son) journeyed to his (own) ka (viz., died).

---

<sup>a</sup>From the tomb of Zezemonekh, priest of Kings Userkaf and Sahure; Cairo, Nos. 1415, 1417; published by Mariette, Mastabas, 201 (K. 1417), 200 (K. 1415); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 33 (collated by Erman).

<sup>b</sup>Or simply "palace-treasurer, etc."

<sup>c</sup>A false door.

<sup>d</sup>Mariette, Mastabas, 160; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 33 f.

REIGN OF KHAFRE

STELA OF MERTITYÔTES<sup>a</sup>

188. This document is especially useful as indicating the place of Snefru with relation to the first kings of the Fourth Dynasty, and was long ago so employed by E. de Rougé.

189. <sup>b</sup>Kings-wife, his beloved, devoted to Horus,<sup>c</sup> Mertityôtes (Mrtt-yt' s).

<sup>d</sup>King's-wife, his beloved, Mertityôtes; beloved of the Favorite of the Two Goddesses; <sup>e</sup>she who says anything whatsoever and it is done for her.<sup>e</sup>

Great in the <sup>f</sup>favor of Snefr[u] (Sn/r-) — — —; great in the favor of Khuf[u] (H/f[w]), devoted to Horus,<sup>c</sup> honored under Khafre (H' c f-R' c), Mertit[tyôt]es.

---

WILL OF PRINCE NEKURE, SON OF KING KHAFRE<sup>g</sup>

190. A new date of Khafre is the contribution furnished by Sethe's collation of this inscription. The twelfth "numbering" as the numberings took place at this time twice a year, indicates the twenty-fourth year of Khafre. This surprisingly confirms the Turin Papyrus, which gives twenty-

---

<sup>a</sup>Limestone false door of the usual type noted in the Appendice (p. 565) of Mariette's Mastabas, but without text. According to the headline of the page, the tomb stands on the "Plaine de Gizeh;" the false door has never been removed. The text is published by Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, I, 62; Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 36 f.

<sup>b</sup>At the top.

<sup>c</sup>The king.

<sup>d</sup>Right side.

<sup>e</sup>An obscure title of the queens of Egypt, extending from the Old Kingdom down into the Empire. Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 143 f.; cf. also Naville, ibid., 142.

<sup>f</sup>Left side.

<sup>g</sup>In his tomb at Gizeh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 15, a; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 16, 17 (collated with Berlin drawing, No. 253, and Berlin squeezes, Nos. 35 and 38).

four years as the length of Khafre's reign. The king's son, Nekure, was then old enough to feel the necessity of making a will. It is the only document of the kind from the Old Kingdom, which has survived in such excellent preservation.

191. The fortune which Prince Nekure bequeathed to his heirs consisted of fourteen towns, and two estates in the pyramid-city of his father. The latter doubtless consisted of his "town-house" and gardens. These he had left to a daughter, but she had evidently died, and on the reversion of the legacy to himself he left it to his wife. The fourteen towns he distributed among five heirs, of whom one was his wife, and three were his children, while the name of one is lost. Eleven of the fourteen towns are named after Khafre, and there is no reason to doubt that the other three were also so named, but they are now unreadable. Besides these fourteen towns, Prince Nekure had at least twelve<sup>a</sup> towns in the mortuary endowment of his tomb, of which nine were named after Khafre. It is impossible to determine whether these had belonged to the prince's estate, or whether they were given by the reigning king at the prince's death.

Date

192. <sup>1</sup>Year of the twelfth [occurrence] of the numbering of large and sm[all] cattle.

Introduction

193. <sup>2</sup>King's son, Nekure (R<sup>c</sup>-n-k<sup>3</sup>w) — — he makes the (following) [command],<sup>b</sup> (while) living upon his two feet without ailing in any respect.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 15, b. There could not have been more than fourteen towns, as no more than two are broken out.

<sup>b</sup>The determinative of a document is visible at the end of the lacuna; "command, edict" (wḏ·i-md·t) is usual after "make" or "made" in this connection.

<sup>c</sup>"Being of sound mind." This line (2) is engraved horizontally over the following columns, and is evidently the prescript or title of the will. There are eight of the subjoined columns, each column being headed by the name of an heir, below which is entered the legacy bequeathed him. Each legacy is a town or towns; the district or nome is given first and then the town-name, or names, each of which is compounded with that of Khafre, the king.

First Legacy

194. <sup>3</sup>I have given to the king's-confidant, Nekennebti (N-k<sup>2</sup>-n-nbty), (in) —,<sup>a</sup> (the towns<sup>b</sup> of) "Khafre- —," and "Khafre- —."

Second Legacy

195. <sup>4</sup>His son, the king's-confidant, Nekure (in) the eastern back-land, (the towns of) ["Khafre-1 —," "Khafre<sup>1</sup>- —" and "Khafre<sup>1</sup>- —"].<sup>d</sup>

Third Legacy

196. <sup>5</sup>His daughter, the king's-confidant, Hetephires, (in) the eastern district, (the town of) "Khafre- —;" (in) the eastern back-land, (the town of) "Khafre- —."

Fourth Legacy

197. <sup>6</sup>[His son] the king's-confidant, Kennebtiwer (K<sup>2</sup>-n-nbty-wr) (in) —, (the town of) "Great-is-[the-Fame]-of-Khafre;" (in) the Mendesian nome, (the towns of) "Khafre- —," and "Khafre- —."

Fifth Legacy

198. <sup>7</sup>— — — —, (in) the Mendesian nome, (the towns of) "Khafre- —" and "Khafre- —."

Sixth Legacy

199. <sup>8</sup>His beloved wife, the king's-confidante, Nekennebti (N-k<sup>2</sup>-n-nbty), (in) the nome of the Cerastes-Mountain, (the town of) "Beautiful-is-Khafre;" (in) the nome of <sup>e</sup>Upper (the town of) "Brilliant<sup>1</sup>-is-Khafre" (H<sup>c</sup>-j-R<sup>c</sup>-[b]<sup>c</sup>); (in) the pyramid-town) "Great-is-Khafre," the estate of his daughter, — and —.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>A nome-name is lost.

<sup>b</sup>Two towns at least.

<sup>c</sup>The formula "I have given" is omitted after its occurrence once for all in l. 3; hence "his son" instead of "my son."

<sup>d</sup>Three towns, from the size of the lacuna.

<sup>e</sup>Twentieth nome of Upper Egypt.

<sup>f</sup>Two small subcolumns, each containing a designation of some piece of property, but they are no longer legible; it is doubtless the estate, or part of the estate, of a deceased daughter, which, after its reversion to him, he now leaves to his wife. Hence her occurrence twice in the will.

THE TESTAMENTARY ENACTMENT OF AN UNKNOWN
OFFICIAL, ESTABLISHING THE ENDOWMENT OF HIS TOMB BY THE PYRAMID OF KHAFRE<sup>a</sup>

200. As a revelation of the legal organization of this remote age, this document, like the similar instrument of Senuonekh<sup>b</sup> (§§ 231 ff.), is of great interest. Economically it is of importance to note that the king gives whole towns as mortuary endowment, to keep the tomb of the deceased constantly supplied with offerings.

Introduction

201. <sup>1</sup>—————<sup>c</sup> while he was alive upon his two feet, even the sole companion, lord of Nekhen, member of the king's court every day . . . local governor of "Praise-of-Horus-First-of-Heaven,"<sup>d</sup> <sup>2</sup>————— these mortuary priests forever<sup>e</sup> —————<sup>f</sup>.

Endowment is Entailed

202. <sup>3</sup>— — — This is the [dec]ree which I made concerning it: I have not empowered — — any of [my brothers], <sup>4</sup>my sisters, or my daughter's children, inferior mortuary priests, or assistant mortuary priests, [to take lands], <sup>5</sup>people, or anything which I have conveyed to them, for making mortuary offerings to me therewith, whether their man-servant [or their maid-servant], <sup>6</sup>their brothers or their sisters, save to make mortuary offerings [to me therewith, in the cemetery in] <sup>7</sup>my eternal tomb which is at the pyramid, "Great-is-Khafre;" according to the portion of lands, people, and [everything, which I have conveyed to them, for making mortuary offerings to me] <sup>8</sup>therewith.

<sup>a</sup>Stela in Cairo (No. 1432); published by Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1210 ff.; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 11-15 (collated with Berlin squeeze, No. 1597).

<sup>b</sup>Whence the restorations below are drawn.

<sup>c</sup>The lost introduction will be found in the preceding will (§ 193).

<sup>d</sup>Name of a vineyard estate founded by Zoser of the Third Dynasty; see Sethe, in Garstang's Bet-Khallâj, 21. I have omitted before this title a repetition of titles already mentioned.

<sup>e</sup>Probably so rather than "endowment;" for "these mortuary priests of the endowment" is expressed by hn-k> dt (y)pn (Sethe, Urkunden, I, 36, l. 1).

<sup>f</sup>Probably a lacuna of more than one line.

Line of Entailment

203. I have not empowered any mortuary priest of the endowment, to give the lands, people or [anything which I have conveyed to them, for making mortuary offerings to me] <sup>9</sup>therewith, in payment to any person; or to give as property to any person, except that [they] shall give [it to their children], <sup>10</sup>entitled to the division of it with any mortuary priest among these mortuary priests.<sup>a</sup>

Violation of Endowment

204. Whatsoever mortuary priest of the endowment shall violate, — — — — <sup>11</sup>of my mortuary offerings, which the king gave to honor me, the portion in his possession shall be taken from him — — — — <sup>12</sup>.<sup>b</sup>

Endowment not Involved in Suits of Priests

205. <sup>13</sup>Whatsoever mortuary priest of the endowment shall institute legal proceedings against his fellow, and he shall make a writ of his [claim] against the mortuary priest, by which [the] (the defendant?) [forfeits] the portion] <sup>14</sup>in his possession; the lands, people and everything shall be taken from him,<sup>c</sup> which I gave to him for making mortuary offerings to me therewith — — — — <sup>15</sup>therewith. It shall be conveyed back to him because of not instituting proceedings before the officials, [concerning the lands, people and everything, which I conveyed] <sup>16</sup>to the mortuary priests of the endowment, for making mortuary offerings to me therewith, in my eternal tomb, which is in the cemetery at [the pyramid: "Great-is-Khafre"].

Transfer of Priests to Other Service

206. <sup>17</sup>Whatsoever mortuary priest of the endowment shall go forth to other service, in the presence of the officials, — — — — <sup>18</sup>the

<sup>a</sup>Not all their children were entitled to a share in the division, but only those who became mortuary priests; hence the document distinguishes particularly those "entitled to (lit. belonging to) the division of it (the property) with any given (ymn) mortuary priest of these mortuary priests" (viz., those endowed by this document). The paragraph occurs again in the enactment of Senuonekh (§ 233).

<sup>b</sup>Sethe suggests for the lacuna; "for or by the (priestly) order, to which he belongs," as in l. 17.

<sup>c</sup>Of course, read nḥm m c j as in l. 11. See the similar clause in the decree of Senuonekh, § 235.

officials, he shall go forth to other service and the portion in his possession shall revert to the (priestly) order to which he belonged. — — — — — <sup>18</sup>of lands, people and everything, which I conveyed [to] them, for making mortuary offerings to me therewith, in my tomb which is in [the cemetery at the pyramid: "Great-is-Khafre"]; <sup>19</sup>he shall go forth with his meat.

Land Given by King

207. As for this field, which the king gave to me, to honor me — — — — — <sup>20</sup>for making mortuary offerings to me therewith in the cemetery.

Alienation of Endowment

208. As for whatsoever shall be paid out, of that which I gave to them, [I will enter into judgment with them in the place] <sup>21</sup>wherein judgment is had. The portion which remains afterward, shall belong, by tenths, to these (priestly) orders to [whom] I have conveyed this — — — — — [the portion] <sup>22</sup>which remains, for making mortuary offerings to me therewith, in the cemetery in my eternal tomb, which is at [the pyramid: "Great-is-Khafre."]

Towns of the Endowment

209. [As for the towns] <sup>23</sup>of the (mortuary) endowment, which the king gave to me, to honor me, which are maintained for my mortuary offerings, according to the list — — — — — <sup>24</sup>forever, wherewith mortuary offerings are made to me, in my eternal tomb which is in the cemetery at the pyramid: "Great-is-Khafre," — [lands, people,] <sup>25</sup>and everything which I conveyed to them.

As for the towns of the (mortuary) endowment of the purification, wherewith purification is made ————. <sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup>At least three lines are lost at the end.

REIGN OF MENKURE

DEBHEN'S INSCRIPTION, RECOUNTING KING MENKURE'S ERECTION OF A TOMB FOR HIM<sup>a</sup>

210. The unfinished condition of this interesting inscription renders it extremely fragmentary. But mutilated as it is, it tells us plainly enough of the king's visit to the Gizeh cemetery to inspect the work on his family pyramids, and of his detailing fifty men to build a tomb for Debhen. Later the king orders his own people, who are bringing limestone for a temple, to bring also the necessary false doors, etc., for Debhen's tomb from the quarry at Troja.

The Royal Command

211. <sup>1b</sup>———. <sup>2</sup>He saith:

As for this tomb, it was the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkure, [living forever], who caused that it be [made], when [his majesty] was [upon] the road beside the pyramid, Hir<sup>c</sup> (Hir), <sup>3</sup>in order to inspect the work [on] the pyramid: "Divine-is-Menkure."

— — — [[there came<sup>1</sup>] the [naval] commander and the two high priests of Memphis, and the [work]men,<sup>d</sup> <sup>4</sup>standing upon it,<sup>e</sup> to inspect

---

<sup>a</sup>From his tomb (No. 90 on Lepsius' plan) at Gizeh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 37, b; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 18-21 (collated with Berlin drawing, No. 284). The inscription was left unfinished by the sculptor. The artist had drawn all the hieroglyphs in ink, but they were only partially cut, and the uncut portions of the lines disappeared.

<sup>b</sup>This line contained his titles, as the sole remaining sign shows.

<sup>c</sup>Name of pyramid usually supposed to be that of Menkure. It is, however, evidently one of the smaller three beside his own pyramid, the name of which here follows. "Hir" will have belonged to one of his family. That the two pyramids were close together is evident from the text. The king stands on the road by the Hir-pyramid to inspect the other. This disposes of the idea that the former was in Abu Roash (Petrie, History of Egypt, I, 56).

<sup>d</sup>Only the plural determinative of "men" is visible.

<sup>e</sup>The pyramid.

the work [on<sup>1</sup>] [the pyramid, "Divine-is-Menkure"]. — 50 men were assigned to do the work on it<sup>a</sup> every day, besides [exacting<sup>1</sup>] of them, <sup>5</sup>that which the [—<sup>1</sup>] desired. His majesty commanded that [no man should be taken<sup>b</sup>] for any forced labor, except to do the work on it,<sup>a</sup> to his satisfaction.

Building of the Tomb

212. <sup>6</sup>His majesty commanded to [clear<sup>1</sup>] the place of [rubbish<sup>1</sup>] — — — this tomb. His majesty commanded to [hack<sup>1</sup>] — — — — — <sup>7</sup>in order to [clear<sup>1</sup>] the [rubbish<sup>1</sup>] — — — — —. [His majesty commanded] that the two treasurers of the god should come; [said his majesty to them] — — <sup>8</sup> — — — — — given to them — — — — — <sup>9</sup> — — — — — men, whom his majesty judged, that he should go around the work [exacted<sup>1</sup>] <sup>10</sup> — — — — — in his — that there be brought stone from Troja (R<sup>3</sup>-<sup>3</sup>w) to clothe<sup>c</sup> with limestone the temple there,<sup>d</sup> <sup>11</sup>together with two false doors, and a front for this tomb, by the naval commander and the two high priests of Ptah, together with the king's master-builder, who came <sup>12</sup> — — — — — [that there] be [brought] for me a statue [much greater than<sup>1</sup>] life <sup>13</sup> — — — — — every — every day. It is today [—<sup>1</sup>] upon its highland, together with the pure house. <sup>14</sup> — — — — — together with two statues of the assistant, of which one was — — — — — [the other was] — — — — — <sup>15</sup> — — — — — feast of Apis in the temple <sup>16</sup> — — — — — [He did] this, in [order] that I might be his revered one by his lord <sup>17</sup> — — — — — for my [father] and my mother, for whom I have maintained <sup>18</sup> — — — — — green cosmetic, eye-paint — [—<sup>1</sup>] — — — — — <sup>19</sup>outside of the place. Then [I be]sought [[from my lord]] [—<sup>1</sup>] in the Northland, of the cattle in this place [—<sup>1</sup>]. There was issued <sup>20</sup>a command of the king to the chief of [all works of the king to take<sup>1</sup>] people to make it, a tomb of — cubits in its length, <sup>21</sup>by 50 [cubits<sup>1</sup>] in [its width,<sup>1</sup>] by — cubits [in its height<sup>1</sup>] — — according to [that which<sup>1</sup>] this my father did, while he was living. Then the king caused <sup>22</sup> — — — — —.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Debhen's tomb.

<sup>b</sup>Read yn' t.

<sup>c</sup>Verb c yn, meaning "to build or clothe with limestone of Ayan (c yn)."

<sup>d</sup>The expedition to the quarry which brought stone for the temple, brought also the false doors, etc., for Debhen's tomb. The temple meant is probably the pyramid-temple of Menkure.

<sup>e</sup>The remainder of the inscription was never executed.

THE FIFTH DYNASTY

REIGN OF USERKAF

TESTAMENTARY ENACTMENT OF NEKONEKH<sup>a</sup>

213. Besides being the most elaborate document of the kind preserved to us, there are important historical facts contained in these inscriptions. They chiefly concern the disposal of two parcels of land of sixty stat each, given by King Menkure: the one as endowment of the temple of the local Hathor of Royenet (Tehneh); the other as a wakf or endowment of the tomb of Khenuka, a nobleman of Menkure's time. Both endowments were administered by one priesthood, who served at the same time as priests of Hathor and as mortuary priests of Khenuka. At the beginning of the Fifth Dynasty, its first king had honored one of his favorites, a steward of the palace named Nekonekh, by conveying to his single person the offices of priest of Hathor at Tehneh and of mortuary priest of Khenuka. In so doing—though, of course, nothing is said about it in these inscriptions—Userkaf, as the first king of the Fifth Dynasty was plainly dispossessing some supporter of the old dynasty, and strengthening his own house by winning the allegiance of another noble family. a. c. l.

214. Nekonekh, having the right to bequeath the two land-endowments to whom he will, now makes a will, stating the origin of both endowments in Menkure's time, and his own title to them by appointment from Userkaf, and decreeing that they shall now be distributed among his children, acting corporately as his successor in both offices. Each child is annually to serve one month as priest of Hathor, and another month as mortuary priest of Khenuka. For this purpose twelve children were required, and, as Nekonekh had thirteen, he gave to eleven a month each, and divided the remaining month between two. The income from the land was also divided, each of the eleven children receiving the income from five stat for the Hathor temple, and five stat for Khenuka, while the remaining two each received half of this. The twelve months of the year were thus all provided for, the sixty stat belonging to each endowment were completely disposed of, and the thirteen children all made legatees. It is of importance to notice that the mortuary endowment, established in the latter half of the Fourth Dynasty, is still respected and continued in the Fifth Dynasty.

---

<sup>a</sup>From his tomb in Tehneh, excavated and copied by G. Fraser in 1890; published by him in 1902 in Annales, III, 122-30, and Pls. II-V (see also Maspero, ibid., 131-38); again from Fraser, with useful restorations and corrections by Sethe, Urkunden, I, 24-32.

215. Nekonekh's will disposing of his own estate is also among the inscriptions in the tomb (§§ 223-25), though very fragmentary. Another document establishes and adjusts his own mortuary priesthood (§§ 226, 227), and in conclusion he and his wife, probably after decease, receive mortuary statues from two of their children (§§ 228-30).

I. THE PRIESTHOOD OF HATHOR

Introduction

216. <sup>1</sup>Steward<sup>a</sup> of the Palace, governor of the New Towns, superior prophet of Hathor, mistress of Royenet, king's-confidant, Nekonekh (N-k<sup>2</sup>-c n<sup>h</sup>); <sup>5</sup>his wife [Hezethekenu (H<sup>dt</sup>-hknw)], revered by [Hathor].

<sup>8</sup>He makes a decree to his children, to be priests of Hathor, mistress of Royenet.

---

<sup>a</sup>The lines are too short at the beginning to number them all.

List of the Priests of Hathor

217. <sup>9</sup>These are the prophets whom I have made, of my children, of the endowment,<sup>a</sup> to be priests of Hathor. Now, it was King Menkure who conveyed two pieces<sup>b</sup> of land, to these prophets to be priest therewith.

<sup>10</sup>King's-confidant, steward of the Palace, Nekonekh; his wife, the king's-confidante, Hezethekenu; her children.

---

<sup>a</sup>Read dt; the n is misread from the hieratic, as commonly in this word; e. g., Sebni, l. 4 (Sethe, Urkunden, I, 136). Maspero's correction, wdtny, producing a feminine relative form, is ungrammatical, for it follows a masculine noun. The endowment meant is probably that of Khenuka, which the same children administered.

<sup>b</sup>This was probably not a unit of measure, for the document afterward assigns 120 stat, 60 for the Hathor temple, and 60 for the mortuary service of Khenuka; and these 120 stat are obviously the itemization of the two pieces of land above mentioned (the 5 stat of l. 21 are not to be counted).

218.

		Five intercalary days		Land
		1st month	First Season <sup>a</sup>
<sup>11</sup> King's-confidante, Hezethekenu, revered (woman) <sup>b</sup>		1st month	First Season <sup>a</sup>	5 stat
<sup>12</sup> Scribe of the King's records, Henhathor (man)		2d month		5 stat
<sup>13</sup> Shepseshathor, †priest <sup>1</sup> (man)		3d month		5 stat
<sup>14</sup> Nessuhathoryakhet (man)		4th month	Second Season	5 stat
<sup>15</sup> Shepseshathor, †priest <sup>1</sup> (man)		1st month		5 stat
<sup>16</sup> Webkuhathor ([W <sup>c</sup> b-k <sup>o</sup> w-] Hthr) (man)		2d month		5 stat
<sup>17</sup> Kisuthathor (K <sup>o</sup> -y <sup>s</sup> wt-Hthr) (man)		3d month		5 stat
<sup>18</sup> Khebuathor (H <sup>c</sup> -b <sup>o</sup> w-Hthr) (man)		4th month		5 stat
<sup>19</sup> Khentisuthathor (Hnt-y <sup>s</sup> wt-Hthr) (disappeared)		—	Third Season	5 stat
<sup>20</sup> Royenet (R <sup>o</sup> -yn <sup>o</sup> t) (disappeared)		—		5 stat
<sup>21</sup> Left vacant (disappeared)		—		5 stat <sup>c</sup> sic!
<sup>22</sup> — meat, his tenth of all that is paid [into] the temple, beside the rations of bread and beer. Prophet, Henhathor (man with libation vase)		3d month		5 stat
<sup>23</sup> Mortuary Priest	Mer — (man)	4th month		5 stat
<sup>24</sup> Mortuary Priest	†Keksire (K <sup>o</sup> k-s <sup>o</sup> Re) <sup>1</sup> (man)

<sup>a</sup>Written <sup>b</sup>h<sup>o</sup>t and determining the reading of this season. [Later: See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 41, 89.]

<sup>b</sup>In the original, the names are arranged in perpendicular columns, and a figure of the person named is depicted below each name. I have added the sex of the person in each case. The first column is therefore the priests, the second (double) column is the time of service for each priest, and the third is the amount of land from which each draws the necessary income.

<sup>c</sup>This is an error of the scribe as the other table shows, for in it the entire line, date and all are vacant.

The Decree

219. <sup>25</sup>It was the majesty of Userkaf who commanded that I should be priest<sup>a</sup> of Hathor, mistress of Royenet; whatsoever was paid<sup>b</sup> into the temple, it was I who was priest over everything that came into the temple. <sup>26</sup>Now, it is these my children who shall act as priests of Hathor, mistress of Royenet, as I myself did, while I journey to the beautiful west, as one revered, — — in charge of these my children.

II. THE MORTUARY PRIESTHOOD OF KHENUKA

List of Priests of Khenuka

220. <sup>27</sup>Now, it is these people<sup>c</sup> who make the mortuary offerings to the king's-confidant, Khenuka (Hnw-kʿ), his father, his mother his children, and all his 'house'.

---

<sup>a</sup>The text is perfectly clear and correct; emendation is entirely unnecessary.

<sup>b</sup>Read wḏb (as Sethe has done) after the inscription of Persen (Urkunden, I, 37).

<sup>c</sup>The priests of Hathor just mentioned.

221.

<sup>a</sup> Five intercalary days
<sup>28</sup> 1st month	First Season
<sup>29</sup> 2d month		Prophet, Henhathor
<sup>30</sup> 3d month		Royenet ( R<sup>o</sup> -[ yn' t ])
<sup>31</sup> 4th month		Khentisuthathor
<sup>32</sup> 1st month	Second Season	Khebuhathor
<sup>33</sup> 2d month		Kisuthathor
<sup>34</sup> 3d month		Webkuhathor
<sup>35</sup> 4th month		Shepseshathor, 'priest' <sup>1</sup>
<sup>36</sup> 1st month	Third Season	Nessuhathoryakhet
<sup>37</sup> 2d month		Shepseshathor, 'priest' <sup>1</sup>
<sup>38</sup> Vacant		Left vacant
<sup>39</sup> 3d month		Scribe of the king's records, Henhathor
<sup>40</sup> 4th month		King's-confidante, Hezethekenu

<sup>a</sup>This table corresponds exactly with the preceding, and as it contains no column for the land, it is probable that the land column of the first table was intended to serve for both instead of repeating it. Thus both parcels of land mentioned in l. 9 were used: one for Hathor, and one for Khenuka.

The Decree

222. <sup>41</sup>Now, it is these my children who make the mortuary offerings to the king's-confidant, Khenuka, his father, his mother, and all his 'house', at the feast of Wag, the feast of Thoth, and every feast-day.

III. NEKONEKH'S WILL

223. The document is largely lost; the fragments beside the statues are possibly not parts of it, but are relevant, as showing Nekonekh's own enactments regarding these persons.

Introduction

224. The steward of the Palace, king's-confidant, Nekonekh, revered; the king's-confidante, Hezethekenu; — said — — — [to] his children, while he was upon his two feet, alive before the king ———.

By Two Statues of Henhathor

225. — the scribe of the king's records, Henhathor (Hn-Hthr) is my heir upon my seat, and lord of all my possessions.

— her<sup>a</sup> eldest son, honored of his father, scribe of the king's records, Henhathor.

— property; they shall deliver to this my heir, as they did ['to'] myself.

— 'given' to her 'for' the ration of bread and beer as property, 'while' upon my seat, — — as property. May they deliver the [ration of] bread and beer to this my heir, as they did ['to'] myself.

IV. NEKONEKH'S MORTUARY PRIESTHOOD

Scene

226. The deceased Nekonekh sits before a table of food-offerings, while his eight mortuary priests approach from behind in pairs, each pair being designated as under the authority of one of Nekonekh's sons.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>This figure is doubtless beside the mother, the other beside the father. Fraser's description is not explicit in this particular.

<sup>b</sup>Only one pair is perfectly preserved, and one is entirely lost, but the remains indicate that all four pairs were alike.

The Decree

227. [These mortuary priests<sup>a</sup>] are under the authority of these my children. I have not empowered [any] person<sup>b</sup> to take them for any forced labor, save to make mortuary offerings which are divided in this house — — — these mortuary priests. As for these my children, who shall do any work with these mortuary priests, and as for any man who shall violate (this will), I will enter into judgment with him.

V. NEKONEKH'S MORTUARY STATUE

228. A man and woman, the latter the daughter of Nekonekh, had three statues made, representing Nekonekh and themselves. The inscriptions are these:

Dedication

229. His daughter and his son, who made this for him, according to his honor with him.

Over the Three Figures

230. The revered by Hathor, king's-confidante, Ikhnoubet (Y<sup>o</sup> h-nb·t);

Inferior scribe of the king's records, king's-confidant, Nonekhsesi (N-<sup>c</sup> nb-ssy).

Nekonekh, revered by the great god.

TESTAMENTARY ENACTMENT OF SENUONEKH, REGULATING HIS MORTUARY PRIESTHOOD<sup>c</sup>

231. Senuonekh was a priest of Userkaf and Sahure. This decree from his tomb closely resembles and, in some parts, is identical with the decree of Khafre's unknown official (§§ 200–209), but it is better preserved, and also clearer in the wording.

<sup>a</sup>Sethe's very probable restoration.

<sup>b</sup>The connection renders Sethe's restoration certain.

<sup>c</sup>From his tomb; published by Mariette, Mastabas, 318; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 36 f.

Installation of Priests and Descendants

232. <sup>1</sup>These mortuary priests of the endowment, and their children and further the children of their children whom they shall bear forever, are —————

Entailment of Endowment

233. <sup>2</sup>I have not empowered them [to give] (it)<sup>a</sup> in payment as property to any person; but they shall give (it) to their children, entitled to the division of [it with any mortuary priest of these mortuary priests].<sup>b</sup>

Transfer of a Priest

234. <sup>3</sup>As for any mortuary priest among them who shall [default], or who shall be taken for other service, everything which I have given to him shall revert to the mortuary priests who are in his (priestly) order. I have not em[powered] — — — — —

Endowment not Involved in Suits

235. <sup>4</sup>As<sup>c</sup> for any mortuary priest among them who shall institute legal proceedings against his fellow, everything which I have given to him shall be taken away, and shall then be given to the mortuary priest against whom he instituted legal proceedings. I have not empowered —————.

<sup>a</sup>The mortuary endowment.

<sup>b</sup>With this compare the similar precautionary clause of the unknown official of Khafre (§ 203, ll. 8, 9), and see also explanatory note, ibid.

<sup>c</sup>See similar clause in decree of an unknown official under Khafre (§ 205).

REIGN OF SAHURE

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

Relief

236. King in the crown of Upper Egypt, smites kneeling Bedwi as in §§ 168, 169.<sup>b</sup>

The texts, as in §§ 168, 169, and 176, contain only names and titles of the king:

Horus: Lord of Diadems; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Sahure (S<sup>o</sup> ḥw-R<sup>c</sup>); who is given life forever.

Smiler of all countries.

The Great God smites the Asiatics (mntw) of all countries.

---

TOMB STELA OF NENEKHSEKHMET<sup>c</sup>

237. The stela is a well-executed false door of Turra limestone, contrasting strikingly with the poor material and mediocre workmanship of the modest tomb to which it belonged. The cause of this contrast is indicated in the inscription, viz., that the stela was a gift from the king.

The Request

238. The chief physician, Nenekhsekhmet (Shmt-n-<sup>c</sup>nh) spoke before his majesty: "May thy person, beloved of Re, command that there be given to me a false door of stone for this my tomb of the cemetery."

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut into the rocks of the Wadi Maghara in the Peninsula of Sinai. Text and relief: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 39, a; Laval, Voyage dans la Péninsule Arabique, insc. hiér., Pl. 2, No. 2; Laborde, Voyage de l'Arabie, 5, No. 3; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1494 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 32; Weill, Sinai, 106.

<sup>b</sup>Two gods stand behind the king.

<sup>c</sup>From a mastaba at Sakkara, excavated by Mariette; text: Mariette, Monuments divers, 12, 203, 204; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 38-40. Erman's manuscript copy collated with original; Maspero, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 309. Translated by Maspero (ibid.), with discussion of architectural terms; treated by Erman, Aegypten, 431.

King's Compliance

239. His majesty caused that there be brought for him two false doors<sup>a</sup> from Troja (R<sup>2</sup>-<sup>2</sup>w) of stone, that they be laid in the audience-hall<sup>b</sup> of the house (called): "Sahure-Shines-with-Crowns," and that the two high priests of Memphis and the artisans of the [—] be assigned to them, that the work on them might be done in the presence of the king himself. The stone-work<sup>c</sup> went on every day; there was an inspection of that which was done on them in the court daily. His majesty had [color] put on them, and had them painted in blue.

Presentation of the Gift

240. His majesty<sup>d</sup> said to the chief physician Nenekhsekhmet: "As these my nostrils enjoy health, as the gods love me, mayest thou depart into the cemetery at an advanced old age as one revered." I praised the king greatly and lauded every god for Sahure's sake, for he knows the desire of the entire suite. When anything goes forth from the mouth of his majesty, it immediately comes to pass. For the god has given to him knowledge of things that are in the body,<sup>e</sup> because he is more august than any god. If ye love Re, ye shall praise every god for Sahure's sake, who did this for me. I was his revered one; never did I do anything evil toward any person.

TOMB INSCRIPTION OF PERSEN<sup>f</sup>

241. This inscription is over a scene showing people in the act of bringing mortuary offerings of food for Persen's tomb. According to the inscription, these offerings are

<sup>a</sup>Erman suggests that a double false door is meant. The same reference to a double false door is found in the tomb of Debhen (Dbhn). This is the same word (rwty) used later for a temple façade, which would explain the dual.

<sup>b</sup>D<sup>2</sup> dw, see § 501, l. 2.

<sup>c</sup>Read št, which I have rendered "quarry-service" in the Empire (II, 935, l. 6). In the Old Kingdom it retains its literal meaning, "stone-cutting." There was an "overseer of stone-cutting," or quarry service, in the Old Kingdom (§ 343).

<sup>d</sup>The following is the presentation of the false doors by the king.

<sup>e</sup>Of anyone else, "body" or "belly" being the seat of the mind, as we use "heart."

<sup>f</sup>Limestone slab in Berlin (15004); published by Mariette, Mastabas, 300; Schaefer, Aegyptische Inschriften aus dem Königlichen Museum zu Berlin, I, 22.

drawn from the income of the queen mother, Neferhotepes, coming to her from the temple of Ptah.

The bringing of the mortuary offerings to Pharaoh's overseer, Persen, being the payment of heth(ht)-loaves, pesen(psn)-loaves, and sefet(sf)-oil, which comes from the temple of Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, for the king's-mother, Neferhotepes, every day, as a perpetual offering, which he gave for making mortuary offerings there-with in the time of Sahure.

REIGN OF NEFERIRKERE

TOMB INSCRIPTIONS OF THE VIZIER, CHIEF JUDGE, AND CHIEF ARCHITECT WESHPTAH<sup>a</sup>

242. It is much to be regretted that this unusually interesting inscription has suffered so sadly at the hands of time. Weshptah was the greatest man at the court of Neferirkere, being vizier, chief judge, and chief architect. His son Mernuterseteni was called upon to build his father's tomb, and thus narrates how this happened. The king, his family and the court were one day inspecting a new building in course of construction under Weshptah's superintendence as chief architect. All admire the work, and the king turns to praise his faithful minister, when he notices that Weshptah does not hear the words of royal favor. The king's exclamation alarms the courtiers, the stricken minister is quickly carried to the court, and the priests and chief physicians are hurriedly summoned. The king has a case of medical rolls brought; but all is in vain; the physicians declare his condition hopeless. The king is smitten with sorrow, and retires to his chamber, where he prays to Re. He then makes all arrangements for Weshptah's burial, ordering an ebony coffin made and having the body anointed in his own presence. Weshptah's eldest son, Mernuterseteni, was then empowered to build the tomb, the king furnishing and endowing it. The son therefore erected it by the pyramid of Sahure, and, as we have said, recorded the whole story on its walls.

---

<sup>a</sup>From his tomb at Abusir; blocks in Cairo (Nos. 1569, 1570, 1673, 1702); published by Sethe, Urkunden, I, 40-45 (from a copy by Erman).

Erection of the Tomb by His Son

243. <sup>1</sup>[It was] his eldest [son], first under the king, <sup>1</sup>advocate of the people<sup>1</sup>, Mernuterseteni (Šiny-mr-ntr), who made (it)<sup>a</sup> for him, while he was in his tomb of the cemetery.

King Visits a New Building

244. <sup>2</sup>———— Neferirkere (Njr-yr-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>) came to see the beauty of<sup>b</sup> ————— when he came forth upon them <sup>4</sup>————. His majesty [caused] that it be <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> <sup>5</sup>———— the royal children [s]aw <sup>6</sup>———— and they <sup>1</sup>wondered<sup>1</sup> very greatly beyond <sup>7</sup>[everything]. Then, lo, his majesty praised him because of it.<sup>c</sup>

Weshptah's Sudden Illness

245. His majesty saw him, however, that [he] heard not. <sup>8</sup>———— <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>.<sup>d</sup> When the royal children and companions, who were of the court, heard, great fear<sup>e</sup> was in their hearts.

He is Conveyed to Court, and Dies

246. <sup>1</sup>— — — — — [[He was conveyed to<sup>1</sup>] the court, and his majesty had the royal children, companions, ritual priests, and chief physicians come <sup>2</sup>————. His majesty [had] brought for him a case of writings<sup>f</sup> — <sup>3</sup>————. They said before his majesty that he was lost<sup>g</sup> <sup>4</sup>————. [[The heart of his majesty<sup>1</sup> was] exceedingly [[sad<sup>1</sup>] beyond everything; his majesty said that he would do everything according to his heart's desire, and returned to the privy chamber.

King Furnishes Him Sepulture

247. <sup>5</sup>———— he prayed to Re <sup>6</sup>———— [[put<sup>1</sup>] into writing on his tomb <sup>7</sup>————. [[His majesty commanded that there be

<sup>a</sup>This inscription.

<sup>b</sup>Evidently some new building in course of erection by Weshptah should here follow, as Sethe has surmised.

<sup>c</sup>The fine tomb.

<sup>d</sup>A speech of the king is lost in the lacuna, as is shown by a pronoun of the second person singular still discernible.

<sup>e</sup>Lit. "fear beyond everything."

<sup>f</sup>This is, of course, a medical papyrus, like the great Papyrus Ebers. This confirms the claim of this papyrus that some of its recipes were made and used already in the Old Kingdom.

<sup>g</sup>Mortally sick.

made for him a<sup>1</sup> coffin of ] ebony wood, sealed. Never [was it done to one like him before<sup>1</sup>] ——— laid therein. <sup>9</sup>——— these — of the northern <sup>10</sup>———. His majesty had him anointed by the side of his majesty.

His Eldest Son Builds the Tomb

248. <sup>1</sup>[It was] his eldest son, etc.,<sup>a</sup> ——— <sup>2</sup>——— there was [made<sup>1</sup>] for him a flight of steps <sup>3</sup>———plenty. When <sup>4</sup>——— that he [might be consigned<sup>1</sup>] therein to the earth <sup>5</sup>——— he had him come <sup>6</sup>——— all — from the court <sup>7</sup>——— one caused that it be put into writing upon <sup>8</sup>[his tomb]<sup>b</sup> ——— [His majesty praised him<sup>c</sup>] on account of it, and he praised the god for him (thanked him) exceedingly.

King Endows His Tomb

249. From the scanty fragments of a fourth inscription<sup>d</sup> of the same length, it is evident that the king established a mortuary endowment for Weshptah's tomb "which was by the pyramid: The-Soul-of-Sahure-Shines."

<sup>a</sup>As above § 243, l. 1.

<sup>b</sup>See l. 6, § 247.

<sup>c</sup>The son.

<sup>d</sup>Sethe, Urkunden, I, 44, 45. D.

REIGN OF NUSERRE

SINAI INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

Relief

250. King in crown of Upper Egypt smiting a Bedwi as in § 168. The texts, as in the similar Sinai tablets, contain only names and titles of the king.

Great God, Lord of the Two Lands, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Favorite (Yš·t-yb);<sup>b</sup> Golden Horus: Nuter (Nṯr); Nuserre (N-wšr-R)<sup>c</sup> <sup>d</sup>; . . . . . Smiter of all countries.

Horus: Favorite of the Two Lands (Yš·t-yb-tꜣwy), Nuserre, who is given life forever; smiter of the Asiatics of every country.

---

TOMB INSCRIPTIONS OF HOTEPHIRYAKHET<sup>e</sup>

251. Hotephiryakheth was a priest of Neferirkere and of the sun-temple of Nuserre at Abusir. The motive which he proposes to future visitors in his tomb, to induce

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rocks of the Wadi Maghara in the Peninsula of Sinai. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 152, a; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1495 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 53, 54; Weill, Sinai, 107.

<sup>b</sup>Elsewhere Yš·t-yb-tꜣwy, meaning "Favorite of the Two Lands."

<sup>c</sup>This name is to be read N-wšr-R. It is of the same formation as the name of Amenemhet III: N-mꜣc-t-R for which we have the Greek Δαμαρῆς. It is a common formation in proper names, e. g., N-kꜣw-Re, N-kꜣw-Pth, N-cnḫ-Sḫm·t, etc., in all of which the divine name, written first, is to be read last.

<sup>d</sup>There is uncertainty in the arrangement of signs here; the title "Son of Re," inserted at this point, is later followed by the name "Yn" (Cf. Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 88, 89), and the cartouche containing it perhaps stood under the title in the space now broken away. Likewise the following "Buto" must belong to something lost below. The order of the fivefold titulary of the Middle Kingdom has not yet developed.

<sup>e</sup>Mariette, Mastabas, 342; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 49-51.

them to make mortuary offerings to him, is of especial interest. He offers to commend them to the god, just as Seti I later intercedes with the gods for Ramses II, his son (III, 253), and as Ramses III also did for his son (IV, 246 et passim).

252. <sup>1</sup>Judge, attached to Nekhen, Hotepiryakhet (y<sup>o</sup> h<sup>w</sup> t-h<sup>t</sup>p-h<sup>r</sup>); he saith:

“I have made this tomb as a just possession, and never have I taken a thing belonging to any person. <sup>2</sup>Whosoever shall make offering to me therein, I will do (it) for them; I will commend them to the god for it very greatly; I will do this for them, <sup>3</sup>for bread, for beer, for clothing, for ointment, and for grain, in great quantity. Never have I done aught <sup>4</sup>of violence toward any person. As the god loves a true matter, I was in honor with the king.

253. <sup>1</sup>Judge, eldest of the hall, Hotepiryakhet; he saith:

“I have made this my tomb upon the western arm in a pure place. There was no <sup>2</sup>tomb of any person therein, in order that the possessions of him, who has gone to his ka, might be protected. As for any people who shall enter into <sup>3</sup>this tomb as their mortuary property or shall do an evil thing to it, judgment shall be had with them for it, <sup>4</sup>by the great god. I have made this tomb as my shelter; I was honored by the king, who brought for me a sarcophagus.”

---

INSCRIPTION OF PTAHSHEPSES<sup>a</sup>

254. This document is especially important for the concluding history of the Fourth Dynasty, and the chronology of the first half of the Fifth. Ptahshepses was born under Menkure, of the Fourth Dynasty, and was still living under Nuserre, the fifth king of the Fifth Dynasty;<sup>b</sup> thus determining that the period from the last years of Menkure to the first of Nuserre was not longer than a man's lifetime. Unfortunately, the upper ends of the eight vertical lines containing the inscription are broken off at the top. The first two lines are occupied by two reigns, showing that Ptahshepses is narrating his life by reigns. Now, ll. 4, 5, 6, and 7 all begin alike at the point where the loss at the top ends. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that they each contain a reign.<sup>a</sup> Line 3 is different and has "his majesty" so close to the top that it can hardly refer to a new king, but probably continues the reign of Shepseskaf from l. 2. As we know that Ptahshepses lived into the reign of Nuserre, we must insert this king at the top of the last line. Omitting the brief reign of Shepseskaf's successor, and the probably equally brief reign of Khaneferre in the Fifth Dynasty,<sup>b</sup> the kings enumerated by Ptahshepses were not improbably as in following section.

---

<sup>a</sup>From a false door in his mastaba, discovered at Sakkara by Mariette, published by Mariette, Mastabas, 112, 113; Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 66-73; Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 79-80; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 51-53.

<sup>b</sup>He was priest in Nuserre's sun-temple (Mariette, Mastabas).

---

<sup>a</sup>Confer the same wording in the reigns of Menkure and Shepseskaf.

<sup>b</sup>Ptahshepses has omitted two reigns between Menkure and Shepseskaf, hence the other omissions assumed are not wholly arbitrary.

255.

FOURTH DYNASTY			FIFTH DYNASTY
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
Birth and childhood	Menkure (preserved)
Youth	Shepseskaf (preserved)
Marriage		“his majesty,” or Shepseskaf continued
Manhood			Userkaf (name lost)
Manhood				Sahure (name lost)
Manhood					Neferirkere (name lost)
Manhood						Neferire (name lost)
Old age							Nuserre (from Ptahshepes's titles)

Reign of Menkure

256. <sup>1</sup> — — —<sup>a</sup> [in] the time of Menkure (Mn-k<sup>2</sup>w-R<sup>c</sup>); whom he educated among the king's-children, in the palace of the king, in the privy chamber, in the royal harem; who was more honored before the king than any child (hrd); Ptahshepes (Pth-špsš).

Reign of Shepseskaf

257. <sup>2</sup> — — — [in] the time of Shepseskaf (špsš-k<sup>2</sup>f); whom he educated among the king's-children, in the palace of the king, in the privy chamber, in the royal harem; who was more honored before the king than any youth (yd), Ptahshepses<sup>3</sup> — — —. His majesty gave to him the king's eldest daughter, Matkha (M <sup>3</sup> c t-k <sup>c</sup>) as his wife, for his majesty desired that she should be with him more than (with) anyone; Ptahshepses.

<sup>a</sup>Probably: “I was born in the time of M.”

Reign of Userkaf

258. <sup>4</sup>[Attached<sup>a</sup> to Userkaf, high priest of Memphis,] more honored by the king than any servant. He descended into every ship of the court; he entered upon the ways of the southern palace<sup>b</sup> at all the Feasts-of-the-Coronation;<sup>c</sup> Ptahshepses.

Reign of Sahure

259. <sup>5</sup>[Attached<sup>a</sup> to Sahure, more honored by the king than<sup>a</sup>] any servant, as privy councilor of every work which his majesty desired to do; who pleased the heart of his lord every day; Ptahshepses.

Reign of Neferirkere

260. <sup>6</sup>[Attached<sup>a</sup> to Neferirkere, more honored by the king than] any servant; when his majesty praised him for a thing, his majesty permitted that he should kiss his foot, and his majesty did not permit that he should kiss the ground; Ptahshepses.

Reign of Neferefre

261. <sup>7</sup>[Attached to Neferefre, more honored by the king than] any servant; he descended into the sacred barge at all Feasts-of-the-Appearance;<sup>d</sup> beloved of his lord; Ptahshepses.<sup>e</sup>

Reign of Nuserre

262. <sup>8</sup>———— attached<sup>f</sup> to the heart of his lord, beloved of his lord, revered of Ptah, doing that which the god desires of him, pleasing every artificer under the king; Ptahshepses.

<sup>a</sup>Following Sethe, after Mariette, Mastabas, 375.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. the parallel in tomb of Sebu (Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 95) which renders the reading certain here.

<sup>c</sup>The appearances in public of the king at anniversaries of his coronation.

<sup>d</sup>The appearance of the gods in festal procession on the river.

<sup>e</sup>The remaining three lines contain chiefly conventional phrases and titles.

<sup>f</sup>Ptahshepses is now an old man; hence the change in form.

REIGN OF MENKUHOR

SINAI INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

263. The relief, if there was any, has cracked off. The text is as follows:

Horus: Menkhu (Mn-h<sup>c</sup>w); King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menkuhor (Mn k<sup>o</sup>w-Hr), who is given life, stability [like Re, forever].

Commission of [the king],<sup>b</sup> which —<sup>c</sup> executed.

The inscription is the earliest in Sinai in which the leader of the expedition has ventured to insert a commemoration of himself beside that of the king. Such a record of the leader and his followers now becomes customary.

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut in the rocks of Wadi Maghara on the Peninsula of Sinai; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 39, e; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1493 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 54; Weill, Sinai, 109.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 39, d, where the same phrase occurs uninjured (§ 264).

<sup>c</sup>The lacuna contained the name of the official who executed the commission.

REIGN OF DEDKERE-ISESI

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS

I<sup>a</sup>

264. The relief, if any existed, has disappeared. At the top appears the titulary of the king, as follows:

Horus: Dedkhu (Dd-h<sup>c</sup>w), Son of Re, who lives forever. ———
Dedkere (Dd-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>), beloved of Buto and the souls of [Pe], [who is given] life, health, [all] joy [forever].

Commission of the king, which —<sup>b</sup> executed.

II<sup>c</sup>

265. There was apparently no relief; the text is both uncertain and owing to the crudity of the signs is very difficult. It furnishes an excellent example of the old method of dating by the fiscal census.

266. Year after the fourth occurrence of the numbering of all large and small cattle,<sup>d</sup> when the god caused<sup>e</sup> that costly stone be found in the secret mine [—] a [stela] with writing of the god himself;<sup>f</sup> (under)

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut into the rocks of Wadi Maghara, Sinai; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 39, d; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1494 (inscriptions only); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 55; Weill, Sinai, 118.

<sup>b</sup>Name of official has fallen out; “hw — hk —” is still preserved.

<sup>c</sup>Also in the Wadi Maghara; published by Birch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1869, 26 f.; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1494, No. 20 (incomplete); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 55, 56 (from a collation of a squeeze in the British Museum by R. Weill).

<sup>d</sup>Compare § 340 (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 116, a); we have here dates according to the fiscus.

<sup>e</sup>Infinitive in a date? Read dy' i ntr.

<sup>f</sup>I take it that the whole of this is a date, followed by the name of the king, and then the event below. A “writing of the god himself” is the customary designation of any ancient document. Some stela of their ancestors led them to the desired vein.

Horus: Dedkhu ( $\overline{Dd}$ - $\overline{h}^c$ - $w$ ); king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Dedkhu; Golden Horus: Ded ( $\overline{Dd}$ ); Dedkere ( $\overline{Dd}$ - $\overline{k}^c$ - $R^c$ ) Isefi, living forever.

Royal commission sent with the ship-captain, Nenekh-Khentikhet ( $N$ - $\overline{c}$ - $\overline{nh}$ - $\overline{Hnty}$ - $\overline{ht}$ )<sup>a</sup> to the terrace,<sup>b</sup> the name of which is "Malachite."<sup>c</sup>

A list of the members of the expedition followed.<sup>d</sup>

III<sup>e</sup>

267. The king is shown smiting a Bedwi; beside him the words:

Smiter of all countries.

[The Great God]<sup>f</sup> smites the [Asiatics].<sup>f</sup>

IV<sup>g</sup>

Same scene repeated; inscription:

Smiter of all countries.

Perhaps belonging to these scenes is the date:<sup>h</sup>

Year of the ninth occurrence of the numbering of large cattle

TOMB INSCRIPTIONS OF SENEZEMIB, CHIEF JUDGE, VIZIER, AND CHIEF ARCHITECT<sup>i</sup>

268. The most powerful man at Isefi's court here narrates his favors with the king, in the course of which he includes verbatim two letters from his lord, one of which his

<sup>a</sup>A name of the same form as Nenekhsekhmet ( $N$ - $\overline{c}$ - $\overline{nh}$ - $\overline{Shm}$ - $\overline{t}$ ).

<sup>b</sup>Confirming my note (New Chapter, p. 29, n. b).

<sup>c</sup> $\overline{Fk}^c$ - $\overline{t}$  as in the Pyramid Texts; see also the duplicate of Pepi II (§ 342).

<sup>d</sup>Weill, Sinai, 110, and possibly also 114.

<sup>e</sup>Also in Wadi Maghara; published by Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1494, 21; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 56; Weill, Sinai, 119.

<sup>f</sup>So Sethe.

<sup>g</sup>Wadi Maghara; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1494, 19.

<sup>h</sup>Sethe, ibid.; Weill, Sinai, 118.

<sup>i</sup>From his mastaba-tomb by the pyramid of Khufu at Gizeh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 76, c-f (cf. Text, I, 55, 56); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 59-67 (collated with drawings in Berlin Museum, Nos. 366, 367).

majesty wrote with his own hand. A lake of 1,200 cubits' length is planned for by the architect, and the king expresses his delight with the plan. Unfortunately, the fragmentary state of the inscription renders the narrative very obscure.

269. The closing inscriptions were the work of Senezemib's son, who after his father's death recorded in the tomb the mortuary endowment of his father, and the presentation of the sarcophagus by the king.

Senezemib's Fidelity and Honors

270. <sup>a1</sup>[I was one who pleased the king<sup>1</sup> as mas]ter of secret things of his majesty, as favorite of his majesty in everything, <sup>2</sup>— — As for any work which his majesty commanded to do, I did (it) according to the desire of his majesty's heart toward it <sup>3</sup>—— his majesty, while he was in the place<sup>b</sup> of writings. When it came to pass <sup>4</sup>—— his majesty caused that I be anointed with fat <sup>5</sup>[by the side of his majesty]<sup>c</sup> —— [Neve]r [was done] the like by the side of the king for anyone <sup>6</sup>——. [His majesty] himself wrote with his (own) fingers,<sup>d</sup> in order to praise me <sup>7</sup>[[because I did every work which his majesty commanded to do<sup>1</sup>] well and excellently according to the desire of his majesty's heart toward it.

Letter by the King's Own Hand

271. <sup>8</sup>Royal command (to)<sup>e</sup> the chief judge, vizier, chief scribe of the king's writings, <sup>9</sup>chief of all works of [the king, Senezemib].

<sup>10</sup>My majesty has seen this thy letter, which thou hast sent to inform me that <sup>11</sup>—— for (the building called:) "Beloved-of-Isesi," which is built — for the palace of — —, <sup>1</sup>being truly<sup>1</sup> Senezemib — — — <sup>12</sup>in rejoicing the heart<sup>f</sup> of Isesi . . . . . ; [[for thou

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 76, d, Sethe, A. A horizontal line may have preceded this, and contained Senezemib's name and titles.

<sup>b</sup>The king thus visited the public archives in company with the vizier, Senezemib.

<sup>c</sup>The restoration is certain; see Weshptah (§ 247, l. 10).

<sup>d</sup>Dual; this is the letter given below, ll. 8-16.

<sup>e</sup>Omitted also in the second letter and in the letter of Harkhuf (§ 351).

<sup>f</sup>Senezemib's name means "Rejoicing the heart," and the king is punning on his official's name.

canst<sup>1</sup>] <sup>13</sup>speak that which Isesi loves, better than any men who are in this [whole land] — — — <sup>14</sup>. When indeed — — — every vessel — — — <sup>15</sup>it rejoices the heart of Isesi<sup>a</sup> — true — — — <sup>16</sup>most excellent — — —.

King Isesi Counsels with Senezemib<sup>b</sup>

272. <sup>1</sup>———. “Thou shalt make a lake according as he saith in — <sup>2</sup>——— his lord —. [My majesty] greatly desires to hear this thy word <sup>3</sup>——— my majesty — everything — — —.” Said the chief of all works of <sup>4</sup>[the king, Senezemib]<sup>c</sup> ———.

Second Letter from the King

273. <sup>7</sup>Royal command (to)<sup>d</sup> the chief judge, vizier, chief of all works of the king, <sup>8</sup>chief scribe of the king's writings, Senezemib.

<sup>9</sup>My majesty has seen the plan of this command —— <sup>10</sup>for the palace of Isesi (called): Nehbet<sup>e</sup> —— <sup>11</sup>— [length] 1,200 cubits, [width] 221<sup>f</sup> cubits, according to that which was commanded to [thee] — [—] — — —. <sup>12</sup>Now, the god hath made thee the favorite of Isesi [more than any men] <sup>13</sup>who are in this whole land —. I will do every great thing<sup>g</sup> ———.

Endowment of Tomb

274. In the next section<sup>h</sup> Senezemib's son, Senezemib, called Mehi (Mhy) says that “a command was issued” to “gather the princes” and other people. The command evidently concerned the endowment of his father's tomb, called “this his tomb which I made for him in only one year and”

<sup>a</sup>Senezemib's name means “Rejoicing the heart,” and the king is punning on his official's name.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 76 f.; Sethe, B.

<sup>c</sup>Here followed the reply of Senezemib in three lines, but it has almost entirely disappeared; the words “whom Re loves” still visible, show that he is addressing the king.

<sup>d</sup>See § 271, and note.

<sup>f</sup>May be a few units more.

<sup>e</sup>Sethe suggests a garden of the palace.

<sup>g</sup>Fragments of two more lines.

<sup>h</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 76, c; Sethe, C.

‘three<sup>1</sup> months, while he was in ‘— — —’ in the eternal house<sup>a</sup> which is at the pyramid: ‘Isesi <sup>4</sup>-is-[Beautiful].’”

The son then adds: There was brought grain from the accounting of the divine offerings, from the North and the South, with a reference, after a break in the text, to the continuance of the offerings “until today as new. Then his majesty caused decrees to be sealed ‘with<sup>1</sup> the seal of writings,” of course for the perpetuation of the mortuary offerings. A long lacuna doubtless contained other benefactions, after which we find, “he appointed mortuary priests [of the endowment], and I had it put into writing.” The record of it was placed in the tomb where “it was ‘engraved<sup>1</sup> by the artists.” The mortuary priests were “divided into phyles,” and the son then asked the king to give the equipment and furniture of the tomb, referring to the well-known quarry of Troja, whence came so much of the stone used in the Old Kingdom cemeteries.

Sarcophagus

275. Another inscription,<sup>b</sup> now very fragmentary, narrates the bringing of the sarcophagus, etc., for which the son had asked. After a statement of the king’s command, we find the usual officials “on a ferry-boat. Everything was done by these sailors, according to that which had been [commanded]<sup>9</sup> concerning it in the court. <sup>10</sup>———. This sarcophagus, together with [its lid], arrived at the pyramid: ‘Horizon-of-Khufu,’” where the tomb of Senezemib was located. The officers who conducted the work were praised by the king, and “this sarcophagus” was conveyed to its “place.”

<sup>a</sup>A temporary resting-place, while the tomb was being built.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 76, e; Sethe, D.

Relief

276. This inscription is accompanied by a relief, showing the transport of the sarcophagus across the river. Over the relief are the words:

The great <sup>r</sup>tow<sup>l</sup>-boat, the name of which is "Mighty-is-Isesi."

Three men on the bow are designated as: Overseer of ten; [naval] commander; overseer of <sup>r</sup>—<sup>1</sup> (sb<sup>2</sup>); while one in the stern is called "captain." The sarcophagus and lid are shown, accompanied by the words "sarcophagus" and "lid."

Son's Inscription

277. The son Senezemib, called Mehi, left in his father's tomb a short inscription<sup>a</sup> stating that he placed the above records on the walls of his father's tomb. Only the ends of the three lines remain, but the son closes the record of his pious work with a reminder to his own son by referring to himself as one "whose son shall do the like for him."

MORTUARY INSCRIPTION OF NEZEMIB<sup>b</sup>

278. A short mortuary prayer, interesting for its quaint claim that the deceased was never beaten! Nezemib (Ndm-yb) was probably a private citizen of the middle class, from whom very few monuments have descended to us.

279. O ye living who are (yet) upon earth, who pass by this tomb; let water be poured out for me, for I was a master of secret things. Let a mortuary offering of that which is with you come forth for me, for I was one beloved of the people. Never was I beaten in the presence of any official since my birth; never did I take the property of any man by violence; (but) I was a doer of that which pleased all men.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 78, b; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 67.

<sup>b</sup>Cairo, 1732; published by Mariette, Mastabas, 417; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1212; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 75.

TOMB INSCRIPTION OF THE NOMARCH HENKU<sup>a</sup>

280. This nomarch, with his brother, was ruler of the Cerastes-Mountain nome, the twelfth nome of Upper Egypt, opposite the Lycopolite, or thirteenth, nome. He flourished late in the Fifth or early in the Sixth Dynasty, and his descendants enjoyed the favor of the Sixth Dynasty Pharaohs (§§ 344 ff.). So little is known of the nomarchs of the Old Kingdom that the meager data of this inscription are of importance. Especially noteworthy are the statements regarding the settlement of people from other nomes in his nome. Besides being much mutilated, the inscription is frequently very obscure. I have only rendered the more important passages and those which are most intelligible.<sup>b</sup>

281. <sup>1</sup>O all ye people of the Cerastes-Mountain; O ye great lords of other nomes, who shall pass by this tomb, I, Henku (Hnkw), tell good things:

. . . . .<sup>11</sup>. . . . .
 I gave bread to all the hungry of the Cerastes-Mountain; <sup>12</sup>I clothed him who was naked therein. I filled its shores <sup>13</sup>with large cattle, and its <sup>14</sup>lowlands<sup>1</sup> with small cattle. <sup>14</sup>I satisfied the wolves<sup>c</sup> of the mountain and the fowl of heaven with <sup>15</sup>flesh<sup>1</sup> <sup>15</sup>of small cattle . . . . . <sup>16</sup>I was lord and overseer of southern grain in this nome . . . . . <sup>18</sup>I settled the <sup>17</sup>feeble<sup>1</sup> towns in this nome with the people of other nomes;

<sup>a</sup>In a cliff-tomb at Der el-Gebrāwi; published by Davies, Deir-el-Gebrāwi, II, Pls. 24, 25; Sethe (from Davies), Urkunden, I, 76-79.

<sup>b</sup>See Davies' excellent remarks on Henku, ibid., 42.

<sup>c</sup>This general beneficence toward man and beast includes here the animals sacred in Henku's locality. Across the river the jackal was the sacred animal, while in Henku's own nome the hawk was sacred. It is no accident that these are just the two animals which Henku fed, for the word translated "wolf," should be more general, designating all wild animals of the canine family and the like. We have here then the first symptoms from which the belief in the sacredness of whole classes of animals (as opposed to one member only) afterward grew up. The same thing in a later stage is observable in the Saite time. On a stela in Miramar a man says: "I gave bread to the hungry, water [to] the thirsty, clothing to the naked; I gave food to the ibis, the hawk, the cat, and the jackal" (Bergmann, Hieroglyphische Inschriften, Pl. VI, ll. 9, 10).

<sup>19</sup>those who had been peasant-serfs therein, I made their offices as officials (šr). <sup>20</sup>I never oppressed one in possession of his property, so that he complained of me because of it to the god of my city; (but) I spake, and told that which was good; <sup>21</sup>never was there one fearing because of one stronger than he, so that he complained because of it to the god.

I arose then <sup>22</sup>to be ruler (ḥkꜣ) in the Cerastes-Mountain, together with my brother, the revered, the sole companion, ritual priest, Re-am (Rꜥꜣꜣ mꜣ), <sup>23</sup>I was a benefactor to it (the nome) in the folds of the cattle, in the settlements of the fowlers. I settled its every district <sup>24</sup>with men and cattle — — small cattle indeed. I speak no lie, <sup>25</sup>for I was <sup>26</sup>one beloved of his father <sup>27</sup>praised of his mother, <sup>28</sup>excellent in character to his brother, <sup>29</sup>and amiable to [his sister]. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Seven short lines are omitted.

THE SIXTH DYNASTY

REIGN OF TETI

INSCRIPTIONS OF SABU, ALSO CALLED IBEBI<sup>a</sup>

282. Sabu, called also Ibebi, was a favorite official at the courts of Unis, the last king of the Fifth, and Teti, the first king of the Sixth Dynasty. Under both he held the important office of high priest of Ptah at Memphis, and to this oft-repeated title he adds also his other offices, mingled with a long series of self-laudatory epithets and phrases. Of these the inscriptions chiefly consist, but he gives us also a few interesting statements which throw light on the career of such a noble at court. The inscriptions are rendered below with all repetitions, as an unaltered example of such records in the Old Kingdom. In some phrases Sabu's inscription is identical with that of Ptahshepses (§§ 254 ff.).

Career under Unis<sup>b</sup>

283. Attached to (King) Unis, high priest of Ptah, more honored by the king than any servant. He<sup>c</sup> descended<sup>d</sup> into every barge; a member of the court, [when he entered] the ways of [the southern palace] at feasts,<sup>e</sup> Sabu (S<sup>3</sup>bw), whose beautiful name was Ibebi (Ybbj).

284. <sup>e</sup>Honored by the king, doing his pleasure, one whom his lord

---

<sup>a</sup>From his mastaba-tomb at Sakkara; the publications will be found with each section below.

<sup>b</sup>Mariette, Mastabas, 375 D; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 81 A, at the entrance on the right.

<sup>c</sup>Compare Ptahshepses, § 258, l. 4.

<sup>d</sup>H>j is evidently past tense here, as Unis was deceased when the inscription was made.

<sup>e</sup>Mariette, Mastabas, 375 C; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 81 B; at the entrance on the left.

loves, high priest of Ptah, attached to the Double House, feast-day attendant, prophet of Ptah, prophet of Sokar, Sabu, etc.<sup>a</sup>

Career under Teti

285. <sup>b</sup>Today in the presence of the Son of Re: Teti, living forever, high priest of Ptah, more honored by the king than any servant, as master of secret things of every work which his majesty desired should be done; pleasing the heart of his lord every day, high priest of Ptah, Sabu. <sup>2</sup>High priest of Ptah, cup-bearer of the king, master of secret things of the king in his every place, honored by the king, high priest of Ptah, attached to the Double House, feast-day attendant, pleasing every artificer, honored by every sovereign, a member of his court, attached to the heart of his lord, the favorite of his lord's heart, beloved of his lord, revered of Ptah, doing that which the god desired of him every day in the king's presence.

286. <sup>c</sup>Today in the presence of the Son of Re: Teti, living forever; high priest of Ptah, more honored in the king's presence than any servant. He descends<sup>d</sup> into any barge; a member of the court when he enters upon the ways of the southern palace at the "Feasts-of-the-Coronation," high priest of Ptah, feast-day attendant, Sabu. When his majesty favored me, his majesty caused that I enter into the privy chamber, that I might set for him the people<sup>e</sup> into every place; where I found the way.<sup>f</sup> Never was done the like to any servant like me, by any sovereign, because his majesty loved me more than any servant of his; because I did that which he praised every day, because I was honored in his heart. I was useful in his majesty's presence, I found a way in every secret matter of the court, I was honored in his majesty's presence.

<sup>a</sup>As above, § 283.

<sup>b</sup>False door now in Cairo Museum, No. 1565, right side; published by Mariette, Mastabas, 413, 414; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 82, 83 (from copy by Erman).

<sup>c</sup>Same false door, left side; published by Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 95; Mariette, Mastabas, 412-414; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 83, 84 (from copy by Erman).

<sup>d</sup>As Teti was still living at the time the inscription was made, the verbs are evidently present tense; but in Ptahshepses (§ 258, l. 4) they are past.

<sup>e</sup>The people (ꜥnhw) of the court, to whom he assigned their places.

<sup>f</sup>As he pleased? The sense is doubtful, as there are several possible renderings of the construction.

INSCRIPTION OF SABU, ALSO CALLED THETY<sup>a</sup>

287. This Sabu was the successor of Sabu, called also Ibebi (§§ 282 ff.), as High Priest of Ptah.<sup>b</sup> His inscription is of importance as showing that before his time there were always two high priests of Ptah.

288. ———. Today in the presence of his majesty. His majesty appointed me [as High Priest of Memphis alone]<sup>c</sup> ———. [The temple] of "Ptah-South-of-His-Wall" in its every place was under my charge, although there never was [a single High Priest of Ptah before]<sup>a</sup> ——— Sokar in Shetyt (Št), all the sacred possessions and all duties which two high priests of Ptah did. ——— although never was the like done by any high priest of Ptah in the time of [any king] ——— of the house of the crown-possessions as an honor from his majesty. His majesty appointed me ——— under my charge, although their offices were like (those of) [their] fathers ——— under my charge, which was done in the whole land; the heart of his majesty being mightier than anything that is done therein.

INSCRIPTION OF AN UNKNOWN BUILDER<sup>d</sup>

289. The unknown, a mere fragment of whose tomb inscription here follows, was perhaps the builder of the pyramid-temple of Teti, for he relates a royal commission to conduct the work on a ka-temple (ht-k<sup>3</sup>) for which the materials came from the Troja quarry, opposite the Sak-kara cemetery where Teti's pyramid stands.

<sup>a</sup>Fragment of a false door in Cairo Museum, Nos. 1709, 1756; published by Mariette, Mastabas, 390; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 84, 85 (from copy by Erman).

<sup>b</sup>Still another Sabu, a third of the name, was called "Sabu the black" (S<sup>3</sup> bw km Mariette, Mastabas, C 23), perhaps to distinguish him from the other two, for he was also high priest of Ptah.

<sup>c</sup>So restored by Sethe; and, in view of the following context, the restoration is very probable.

<sup>d</sup>Fragment in Cairo, No. 1433, published by Sethe, Urkunden, I, 86, 87 (from copy by Erman).

290. I did so that his majesty praised me on account of it [— —] ———. [His majesty caused that I enter] into the privy chamber, and that I become a member of the sovereign's court ———. . . . . Today in the presence of (king) Teti, my lord ———. His majesty sent me to conduct the works in the ka-temple made — — and in (the quarry) of Troja ——— I made a false door there, conducting [the work] ———. . . . . His majesty caused that I come down-stream ———. . . . .

---

INSCRIPTION OF UNI<sup>a</sup>

291. This is the longest narrative inscription and the most important historical document from the Old Kingdom. Uni's career is narrated from its beginning under King Teti, through the entire reign of Pepi I, to its termination under Mernere. Besides the general instructiveness of the life of a great lord of the court in the Old Kingdom, Uni's narrative tells us of the only important wars of the Old Kingdom of which we are informed.

The biography falls into three parts:

- I. Career under Teti (l. 1), §§ 292-94.
- II. Career under Pepi I (ll. 2-32), §§ 306-15.
- III. Career under Mernere (ll. 32-50) §§ 319-24.

---

<sup>a</sup>From his mastaba-tomb, discovered by Mariette at Abydos. It occupies a single block of limestone 1<sup>m</sup>, 10 high and 2<sup>m</sup>, 70 wide, which formed one of the walls of the exterior chapel of the mastaba (Catalogue général d'Abydos, 84, No. 522). It is now in Cairo. Published by de Rougé, Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions et belles-lettres, XXV, (Paris, 1866); Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, VII-VIII; Mariette, Abydos, II, 44; Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 1-27 (text collated with copies by Brugsch and Golénischeff); a collation of Erman with the original by Piehl, ibid., 1888, 111 f.; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1470-77; Grébaut, Musée, Pl. 27, 28 (photo.); Sethe, Urkunden, I, 98-110. Grébaut's photograph and Sethe's copy from the Berlin squeeze (No. 1541) are the only correct texts. Beside Sethe, I had also a copy collated with the original by Erman and Borchardt.

I. CAREER UNDER KING TETI

292. Under this king Uni passed his childhood and entered upon his official career at the bottom of the ladder as an under-custodian of a royal domain.

Introduction

293. [Count, governor of the South], chamber-attendant, attached to Nekhen, lord of Nekheb, sole companion, revered before Osiris, First of the Westerners, Uni (Wny). He says:

Beginning of Career

294. <sup>a</sup>[I was a child]<sup>a</sup> who fastened on the girdle under the majesty of Teti (Tty); my office was that of supervisor of [—] and I filled<sup>b</sup> the office of inferior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh.<sup>c</sup>

[Continued §§ 306 ff.]

---

<sup>a</sup>Restored from the stela of Simontu (§ 597, l. 5); that we are to read "girdle" here, and not "crown" (Maspero, Dawn, 417), is shown by a pyramid passage (Pepi I, l. 428); see Erman; also Piehl, Sphinx, II, 134. Hence, the current description of the garland-wearing children is without support from the inscriptions.

<sup>b</sup>Lit.: "made," as often elsewhere.

<sup>c</sup>Perhaps a word lost at end of line here.

REIGN OF PEPI I

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

295. It is a question whether these inscriptions are the record of three expeditions or of one. If only one party left these records, it is probable that the jealousies between the bureau service and the practical craftsmen can be discerned in them.<sup>b</sup> They are further interesting, because the master pyramid-builder accompanied the expedition, the object of which must therefore have been the securing of the hard and costly stone for the finer portions of Pepi I's pyramid and its temple at Sakkara.<sup>c</sup>

I. THE KING'S INSCRIPTIONS

296. The royal memorial of this expedition occurs twice: in the first<sup>d</sup> the king's figure appears twice, back to back, enthroned in the jubilee-hall, accompanied by his titulary and the words: "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee." The second<sup>e</sup> shows the king with staff and war-club standing before the ithyphallic Min; above is his titulary, and in front: "Beloved of the lord of Coptos (Min)." Behind the king: "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee."

---

<sup>a</sup>Engraved on the rocks of the Hammamat quarry; on this place, see Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 472. They are published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, a, b, c, e, g, i, k; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 93-96.

<sup>b</sup>See Schaefer, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XL, 75-77.

<sup>c</sup>See Schaefer, loc. cit.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, a; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 96 A.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, e; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 96 B. Three other inscriptions on vessels made for the jubilee celebration, and merely bearing the king's name and the words, "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee," will be found in Sethe, Urkunden, I, 97 C, D, E.

II. THE EXPEDITION'S INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

297. This is the inscription recording the expedition as a whole, led by the chief architect and the two treasurers of the god.

298. Year<sup>b</sup> after the eighteenth occurrence (of the numbering), third month of the third season (twelfth month), day 27 of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Merire (Pepi I), who lives forever; first occurrence of the Sed Jubilee. Royal commission which the chief of all works of the king, the sole companion, master-builder of the king, attached to the Double House, Merire-meriptah-onekh; his son, the ritual priest, Merire-meriptah-onekh; and the treasurers of the god, Ikhi (Yhy) and Ihu (Yhw), carried out.

The names of five "assistant artisans" and of three "king's-confidants and master-builders" are then recorded below.

III. CHIEF ARCHITECT'S INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

299. This record places all the bureau officers first and the two treasurers of the god last.

Year after — — —.

Royal commission which the chief of all works of the king, sole companion, master-builder of the king, attached to the Double House, Merire-meriptah-onekh, carried out.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, g; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 93 (collated with drawing by Lepsius' expedition.)

<sup>b</sup>The date of the Sinai inscription, which is also coincident with the Sed Jubilee, is eleven days later. The discrepancy is easily explained by the fact that these expeditions were both sent out to secure materials for monuments in the year of this festival; the dates given were not intended to indicate its exact day. If the numberings took place every two years, then the first Sed festival occurred in the thirty-sixth or thirty-seventh year, which we know is impossible. Meyer supposes that the numberings had now become more frequent (Aegyptische Chronologie, 169-70), which is probable. See also Sethe, Untersuchungen, III.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, k; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 94.

Overseer of the administration of divine offerings, attached to the Double House, first under the king, judge, inferior scribe, Sesi (Ssy).

Scribe of the king's records, Khenu (Hnw).

Judge, attached to Nekhen, Khui (Hwy).

Treasurer of the god, Ihu.

Treasurer of the god, Ikhi.

IV. INSCRIPTION OF THE TREASURER OF THE GOD, IKHI<sup>a</sup>

300. One of the two treasurers of the god, perhaps incensed at being placed at the foot of the list in the preceding inscription, has in this inscription recorded himself alone as the leader of the expedition, omitting the chief architect and the bureau officials entirely, and even his colleague, Ihu.

At the extreme right, framed between two scepters and the sign for heaven at the top, is the titulary of Pepi I, accompanied by the words: "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee." At the left of this appears the inscription:

301. Royal commission which the treasurer of the god, Ikhi (Yhy), carried out.

His son, the ship-captain Ikhi.

Below appear the names of five "assistant artisans of the palace" and the "master pyramid-builder, Thethi."<sup>b</sup>

---

SINAI INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

302. 1. The titulary of the king in one line at the top is: "King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Merikhet (Mry-ht); Merire (Mry-R<sup>c</sup>), Pepi I,

---

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, c; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 94, 95.

<sup>b</sup>Another inscription (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115, b) contains only the names of the sons of some of the officials.

<sup>c</sup>Engraved on the rocks at Wadi Maghara; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 116, a; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1496, No. 26; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 91-92 (from squeeze); Morgan, Recherches, I, 235; Weill, Sinai, 121.

given all life forever." It surmounts two reliefs: that on the right contains the Horus-name of the king: "Meri-towe (mryy-t<sup>3</sup>wi, 'Beloved of the Two Lands')," and the figure of the king striding as at a ceremonial, preceded by the words: "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee." Establishment<sup>a</sup> of the field [— —]. The relief on the left shows Pepi I smiting the Asiatics in the manner conventional since prehistoric times.

303. 2. Below the reliefs is the inscription of the officers of the expedition, as follows:

Year after the eighteenth occurrence (of the numbering), fourth month of the third season (twelfth month), day 6. Commission which the commander of the army Ibdw (Ybdw),<sup>b</sup> son of the commander of the troops Merire-onekh, carried out.

Then follows a list of fifteen subordinate officials and members of the expedition; such a list, better preserved will be found in § 343.

---

INSCRIPTION IN THE HATNUB QUARRY<sup>c</sup>

304. In the year of the twenty-fifth numbering, Pepi I sent an expedition to the alabaster quarries of Hatnub, back of Tell el-Amarna, under charge of the nomarch of the Hare nome (XV) of Upper Egypt. Attached to the king's name is the phrase "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee," and on any theory of the Sed Jubilee this date is in glaring contradiction of Pepi I's Sed Jubilee in the year of the eighteenth

---

<sup>a</sup>(W)d "put" or "place," perhaps an endowment of land is indicated.

<sup>b</sup>Or "Ibdw's son . . . Merire-onekh."

<sup>c</sup>Blackden-Fraser, Hieratic Graffiti, Pl. 15, 1; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 95, 96, after Blackden-Fraser, but with useful corrections of evident errors; whence also the restorations.

numbering. Is it used here at Hatnub only as an epitheton ornans, in recollection of the feast?

305. Horus: Beloved of the Two Lands (mrꜣꜣ-tꜣwy); king of Upper and Lower Egypt: Merire (Pepi I), given life forever. First occurrence of the S[ed Jubilee]. Year of the twenty-fifth occurrence (of the numbering), first (month) of the first season, [day] —.

[Royal commission which] the sole companion, chief [of the six courts of justice], — — —, first under the king, master of se[cret things] — — —, marshal of the two thrones, governor of the palace, 'real' governor of the South, great lord of the Hare nome, Khuu's (Hꜣꜣꜣꜣ) son, Nenekhseskhnum (Hnm-n-ꜣnh-ss), [executed].

INSCRIPTION OF UNI

[Continued from § 294]

II. CAREER UNDER PEPI I

306. Pepi I promoted the obscure under-custodian of the royal domains, to be a judge of the Nekhen court; at the same time giving him rank among the courtiers and an income as inferior prophet of the pyramid-temple. As judge he soon gained the confidence of his superiors. The king granted him the equipment for his tomb, which was brought from the Troja quarry for him, and then promoted him to a superior custodianship of the royal domain. He rapidly gained royal favor, and when it became necessary to prosecute one of the king's wives, probably for conspiracy, he was chosen to hear the case with only one colleague. He was then called upon to organize an army for a campaign against the Bedwin north of Sinai, and five times he was sent to quell revolts in this region. He finally pushed up into southern Palestine, which is the first Egyptian invasion of that country known in history.

Appointment as Judge

307. <sup>2</sup>— — — [I was] eldest of the [—] chamber under the majesty of Pepi (Ppy). His majesty appointed me to the rank of companion and inferior prophet of his pyramid-city. While my office was — <sup>3</sup>his [majesty made me] judge attached to Nekhen (Nhn). He loved me<sup>a</sup> more than any servant of his. I “heard,”<sup>b</sup> being alone with (only) the chief judge and vizier,<sup>c</sup> in every private matter <sup>4</sup>— in the name of the king, of the royal harem and of the six courts of justice,<sup>d</sup> because the king loved me<sup>a</sup> more than any official of his, more than any noble of his, more than any servant of his.

Equipment of His Tomb by the King

308. <sup>5</sup>Then I [be]sought — the majesty of the king<sup>e</sup> that there be brought for me a limestone sarcophagus from Troja (R<sup>2</sup>-<sup>3</sup>w).<sup>f</sup> The king had the treasurer of the god ferry over, together with a troop <sup>6</sup>of<sup>1</sup> sailors under his hand, in order to bring for me this sarcophagus from Troja; and he arrived with it, in a large ship belonging to the court, together with [its] lid, <sup>7</sup>the false door; the [setting], two [—], and one offering-tablet.<sup>g</sup> Never was the like done for any servant, for I was excellent to the heart of his majesty, <sup>8</sup>for I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty, for his majesty loved me.

Appointment as Superior Custodian

309. While I was judge, attached to Nekhen, his majesty appointed me as sole companion and superior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh, and [—]<sup>h</sup> of the four superior custodians of the domain of Pharaoh, who were there. I did so that his majesty praised me, when preparing

<sup>a</sup>Lit.: “his heart was filled with me.”

<sup>b</sup>Meaning: heard cases in court as judge.

<sup>c</sup>One person; this vizier, whose name is not mentioned, was perhaps Zau (§§ 344 ff.).

<sup>d</sup>Lit.: “six great houses.”

<sup>e</sup>Lit.: “the majesty of the lord.”

<sup>f</sup>Quarries opposite Memphis, five or six miles south of Cairo.

<sup>g</sup>Cf. note on l. 40, § 322. Gmhw is connected by Lemm with gmh't “wick,” and thought to be an oil basin (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1887, 115).

<sup>h</sup>N with a strange determinative; see Gardiner, Inscription of Mes, p. 25, n. 2.

court,<sup>a</sup> when preparing the king's journey (or) when making stations. I did throughout <sup>10</sup>so that his majesty praised me for it above everything.

Prosecution of the Queen

310. <sup>b</sup>When legal procedure was instituted in private<sup>b</sup> in the harem against the queen,<sup>c</sup> Imtes (Ymts)<sup>d</sup> his majesty caused me to enter, in order to hear (the case) alone. No <sup>11</sup>chief judge and vizier at all, no prince at all was there, but only I alone, because I was excellent, because I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty; because his majesty loved me. I alone was the one who put (it) in writing, <sup>12</sup>together with a single judge attached to Nekhen; while my office was (only) that of superior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh. Never before had one like me heard the secret of the royal harem, except that the king caused <sup>13</sup>me to hear (it), because I was more excellent to the heart of his majesty than any official of his, than any noble of his, than any servant of his.

War against the Bedwin

311. His majesty<sup>e</sup> made war on<sup>e</sup> the Asiatic Sand-dwellers (<sup>c</sup>m-hryw-š) and <sup>14</sup>his majesty made an army of many ten thousands: in the entire South, southward to Elephantine,<sup>f</sup> and northward to Aphroditopolis; in the Northland on both sides<sup>g</sup> entire <sup>15</sup>in the 'stronghold',<sup>h</sup> and in the midst of the 'strongholds', among the Irthet (yrtt) negroes, the Mazoi (Md) negroes, the Yam (Ym) negroes, <sup>16</sup>among the Wawat (W) negroes, among the Kau (K) negroes, and in the land of Temeh (Tmh).<sup>i</sup>

<sup>a</sup>There is a contrast here between his duties at the fixed court and making preparations for the king's journeys. The third reference is perhaps to the duty of assigning court stations to noblemen according to rank.

<sup>b</sup>Lit.: "When the matter was contested." Cf. similar phrase, note l. 14 and note l. 29.

<sup>c</sup>Lit.: "great king's-wife." <sup>d</sup>Acc. to Sethe, ym (Verbum I).

<sup>e</sup>Lit.: "repulsed the matter of the A" (hsj yh't), which Erman holds to be an idiom for "punish" (Gespräch, 72).

<sup>f</sup>See § 320, l. 33 and note. <sup>g</sup>See Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, 21.

<sup>h</sup>Some particular stronghold is apparently meant; Erman suggests "the old fortress in the eastern part of the Delta," but this is a conjecture.

<sup>i</sup>This list of Nubian lands has been treated by Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 30-36; Cf. also Lepsius, Nubische Grammatik, lxxxvii ff. The discovery of the Harkhuf inscription has thrown light on the location of Yam, showing that the journey thither and return occupied seven months.

Uni Leads the Campaign

312. His majesty sent me at the head of this army <sup>17</sup>while the counts, while the wearers of the royal seal, while the sole companions of the palace, while the nomarchs and commanders of strongholds belonging to the South and the Northland; the companions, the caravan-conductors, <sup>18</sup>the superior prophets belonging to the South and the Northland, the overseers of the crown-possessions, were (each) at the head of a troop of the South or the Northland, of the strongholds and cities which they commanded, and of the negroes of these countries. <sup>19</sup>I was the one who made for them the plan while my office was (only) that of superior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh of [— — —]. Not one thereof [—]<sup>a</sup> with his neighbor; <sup>20</sup>not one thereof plundered [dough]<sup>1</sup> (or) sandals from the wayfarer; not one thereof took bread from any city; <sup>21</sup>not one thereof took any goat from any people. I despatched them from the Northern Isle, the Gate of Ihotep (y-hitp), the bend<sup>b</sup> of Horus, Nibmat<sup>c</sup> (Hr-nb-m<sup>3</sup>ct, Snefru).<sup>d</sup> While I was of this rank <sup>22</sup>— — — everything, I [inspected]<sup>e</sup> the number of these troops, (although) never had any servant inspected.<sup>e</sup>

Return of the Army

313. This army returned<sup>f</sup> <sup>23</sup>in safety, (after) it had hacked up the land of the Sand-dwellers; this army returned in safety, (after) it had destroyed the land of the Sand-dwellers; <sup>24</sup>this army returned in safety, (after) it had overturned its strongholds; this army returned in safety, (after) it had cut down <sup>25</sup>its figs and its vines; this army returned in

<sup>a</sup>Verb. <sup>b</sup>A river bend, or a district.

<sup>c</sup>See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXX, 62.

<sup>d</sup>Are these three places in apposition or are they three different localities? Erman (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1891, 120, n. 1) thinks we should, as in some other analogous cases, consider the two following names as partitive appositions denoting two places located in the "northern isle." The latter is, I think, the same as the "Isle of Snefru," reached by Sinuhe on his flight through the same region (§ 493, l. 9). In view of the "bend of Snefru" above, this is at least very probable. The name is of course due to the activity of Snefru in this frontier region necessitated by his opening the mines in the Sinai peninsula.

<sup>e</sup>*wb*ḡ. It occurs also in Harkhuf inscriptions, § 334, where the meaning is modified to "explore."

<sup>f</sup>This verb is regularly used of the return from Asiatic campaigns in the Empire, and must have the same meaning here.

safety, (after) it had thrown fire in all its [troops]; this army returned<sup>26</sup> in safety, (after) it had slain troops therein, in many ten thousands; this army returned in safety (after) [it had carried away<sup>a</sup>] <sup>27</sup>therefrom a great multitude as living captives. His majesty praised me on account of it above everything.

Revolts of the Bedwin

314. His majesty sent me to despatch [this army] <sup>28</sup>five times, in order to traverse the land of the Sand-dwellers at each of their rebellions, with these troops. I did so that [his] majesty praised me [on account of it].

Campaign in Southern Palestine

315. <sup>29</sup>When it was said there were revolters because of a matter among these barbarians in the land of Gazelle-nose,<sup>b</sup> I crossed over <sup>30</sup>in troop-ships with these troops, and I voyaged to<sup>c</sup> the back of the height of the ridge<sup>d</sup> on <sup>31</sup>the north of the Sand-dwellers. When this army had been [brought] in the highway, I came and smote them all <sup>32</sup>and every revolter among them was slain.<sup>e</sup>

[Continued §§ 319 ff.]

---

<sup>a</sup>There was probably a first object before ymj, with which "multitude" was in apposition.

<sup>b</sup>m šrt [—]. The reading "Tiba" for this name, given by Maspero (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 64) is not supported by the careful collation of Erman and Borchardt, nor by Piehl (ibid., 26, 112); nor by Sethe.

<sup>c</sup>The same use of m as in Harkhuf, ll. 6 and 8, et passim in that text.

<sup>d</sup>The Palestinian highlands; Maspero in placing this region between Gaza and the Serbonis Lake seems to have overlooked the word "ridge;" there are no highlands in the locality defined by him. Uni must have landed a little farther north and reached the highlands of southern Palestine. See also Müller, Asien und Europa, 33.

<sup>e</sup>The end of Uni's career under Pepi I is marked by a line of separation on the stone.

REIGN OF MERNERE

INSCRIPTIONS AT THE FIRST CATARACT

316. These important inscriptions, which record a visit of Mernere to the region immediately above the first cataract, are supported in their statement that the Nubian chiefs came to do him obeisance, by the biography of Uni (ll. 46-47, § 324), whom Mernere sent to excavate a channel through the cataract. The same negro tribes who furnished the wood for Uni's quarry-boats, here do reverence to his king. This visit and his construction of the canal, are important evidences of Mernere's activity on the Nubian frontier, thus preparing the way for the conquest of lower Nubia in the Twelfth Dynasty.

Northern Inscription<sup>a</sup>

317. The king stands leaning upon his staff, with the lion's tail as his only symbol of royalty. Behind him is the god Khnum, and before him the chiefs of Nubia.<sup>b</sup> Over his head are the usual name and titles:<sup>c</sup> "King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere;" behind him the words:<sup>d</sup> "Beloved of Khnum, Lord of the Cataract;" below him the date: "Year 5, second month of the third season<sup>e</sup> (tenth month), day 28."

---

<sup>a</sup>Roughly cut on a block of granite south of the first cataract "on the eastern bank of the Nile, facing the southern extremity of the island of El-Hesseh;" (not "on" the island as stated, Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1903-1904, 12); text by Sayce, Recueil, XV, 147; manuscript copy by Borchardt; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 110.

<sup>b</sup>There must be a row of Nubian chiefs before him (not noticed by Sayce) as in § 318.

<sup>c</sup>The treasurer's seal at the beginning is probably an error in the reading.

<sup>d</sup>Belonging to the lacking Khnum figure, for undoubtedly there is a figure of Khnum at the left of this column, not noticed by the copyists.

<sup>e</sup>Sayce has ḥ.t.

Before the king is a column of text, as follows:<sup>a</sup>

The coming of the king<sup>b</sup> himself, standing<sup>c</sup> behind the hill-country, while the chiefs of<sup>d</sup> Mazoi (Mꜣꜣ),<sup>e</sup> Irthet (Yrtt), and Wawat (Wꜣwꜣt), did obeisance<sup>f</sup> and gave great<sup>g</sup> praise.

Southern Inscription<sup>h</sup>

318. This is practically a duplicate of the preceding, but there is no date; one of the Nubian chiefs is still visible standing before the king, and the accompanying record is slightly fuller, thus:

The coming of the king himself, appearing behind the hill-country, that he might<sup>i</sup> see that which is in the hill-country, while the chiefs of, etc. (as above).<sup>i</sup>

INSCRIPTION OF UNI

[Continued from § 315]

III. CAREER UNDER MERNERE

319. By Mernere Uni is at length appointed to exalted office, for this king made him governor of the South. As such he was entrusted by the king with the expedition to the granite quarries at the first cataract to secure the neces-

<sup>a</sup>This text contains apparently only the beginning of this column; for the rest we fortunately possess a duplicate in Petrie, Season in Egypt, XIII, 338. See § 318.

<sup>b</sup>"King" is from Petrie, Season in Egypt. <sup>c</sup>Read ꜥꜥ.

<sup>d</sup>So far Petrie, Season in Egypt, is parallel and must be corrected to st ꜥꜥꜣw ww; the copyists could read no farther, as the line is badly preserved.

<sup>e</sup>The final t is of course misread from the determinative. Later: Verified by Borchartd's copy.

<sup>f</sup>sn-tꜣ "smelled the earth;" Sayce has misread the tꜣ-sign as n.

<sup>g</sup>Adverb wꜣt.

<sup>h</sup>On the rocks, "road valley near Philae," Petrie, Season in Egypt, XIII, 338 = Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 116, b=de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 17, No. 78. Sethe, Urkunden, I, 111 (from the publications); de Morgan's text is simply a copy of Lepsius, Denkmäler, with all the mistakes; the best copy is Petrie, Season in Egypt.

<sup>i</sup>But only the m of "mazoi" and part of the word "praise" can be read.

sary stone for the royal pyramid. Likewise he led another expedition to the quarry of Hatnub, back of Amarna, to procure an alabaster altar of vast size for the pyramid-temple. He then canalized the first cataract, excavating five channels, probably the first ever made there. This is in accordance with the interest in Nubia, displayed by Mernere, who visited the cataract in person and received the homage of the lower Nubian chiefs (§§ 316 ff.). Finally, under Mernere, short as his reign was, Uni seems to have died.

Appointment as Governor of the South

320. When I was [master of the footstool]<sup>1</sup> of the palace and sandal-bearer, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere (Mr-n-R), my lord, who lives forever, made me count (h<sup>2</sup> ty-<sup>9</sup>), and governor of the South, <sup>33</sup>southward to Elephantine, and northward to Aphroditopolis;<sup>a</sup> for I was excellent to the heart of his majesty, for I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty, for his majesty loved me.

<sup>34</sup>When I was [master of the footstool]<sup>1</sup> and sandal-bearer, his majesty praised me for the watchfulness<sup>b</sup> and vigilance, which I showed in the place of audience, above his every official, above [his every] noble, <sup>35</sup>above his every servant. Never before was this office conferred upon any servant. I acted as governor of the South to his satisfaction.<sup>c</sup> Not one therein [—]<sup>d</sup> with [his] neighbor. <sup>36</sup>I accomplished all tasks; I numbered everything that is counted<sup>e</sup> to (the credit of) the court in this South twice; all the corvée that is counted to (the credit of) the court in this South twice. I performed the [— — 37 — —]<sup>f</sup> in this

<sup>a</sup>The northern and southern limits of Upper Egypt. See Griffith, Ptahhotep, II, p. 25.

<sup>b</sup>Read hr rsw (with determinative of staff and hide) these determinatives make it certain that we have the word rs "watch" as in Harkhuf (Letter l. 14, also with the hide).

<sup>c</sup>Lit.: "for him . . . to satisfaction." <sup>d</sup>Same verb as in l. 19.

<sup>e</sup>For the same use of "count to" see Rekhmire, II, 717.

<sup>f</sup>This obscure sentence is plainly parallel with the preceding, thus:

1. ypp yht nb ypt n hnw m rs pn.

2. yry srt yrt kd m rs pn; this suggests the rendering: "I exercised the princship that is exercised [—] in this South." Sr t would then be a feminine abstract from sr "prince;" but kd remains a problem. Possibly my has been omitted before it.

South; never before was the like done in this South. I did throughout so that his majesty praised me for it.

Expedition to the Southern Quarries

321. His majesty sent me <sup>38</sup>to Ibhet<sup>a</sup> (Ybhꜣꜣt), to bring the sarcophagus (named): "Chest-of-the-Living," together with its lid and the costly, splendid pyramidion for the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," of the queen.<sup>b</sup>

322. <sup>39</sup>His majesty sent me to Elephantine<sup>c</sup> to bring a false door of granite,<sup>d</sup> together with its offering-tablet, doors and <sup>1</sup>settings<sup>1</sup> of granite; <sup>40</sup>to bring doorways and offering-tablets<sup>e</sup> of granite, belonging to the upper chamber of the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," of the queen.<sup>b</sup> Then I sailed down-stream <sup>41</sup>to the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," with 6 cargo-boats, 3 <sup>1</sup>tow<sup>1</sup>-boats and 3 <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>boats to only one warship. Never had Ibhet

<sup>a</sup>This unknown quarry must be in the vicinity of Assuan, where black granite is found; the material of the sarcophagus (not given here) as discovered in Mernere's pyramid at Sakkara in January, 1881, by Mariette (just a few days before his death) is a fine black granite. (See Maspero, Recueil, IX, 178, and Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 312). Brugsch however says: "aus rothgesprenkeltem Granit" (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1881, 4, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1478). Maspero is corroborated by Petrie (History of Egypt, I, 97). The lid mentioned in our text is pushed back, but still lying on the sarcophagus, within which Mariette's native assistant, Mustapha, found the body of the king Mernere, now in Cairo Museum.—The "pyramidion" or final capstone of the pyramid was of finer material than the other masonry; it is no longer preserved, but tomb paintings often show this final block colored black by the artist. Cf. Maspero, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 312.

<sup>b</sup>The exact place and meaning of the last three words are uncertain; possibly they refer to a burial place of the queen in connection with the pyramid.

<sup>c</sup>This voyage was made in connection with the preceding, as Ibhet could not have been far from Elephantine (see l. 42).

<sup>d</sup>Lit.: "Granite, a false door."

<sup>e</sup>These terms have been compared with the pyramid as existent today by Maspero (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 304-17). The meaning of rwꜣt "false door" and stꜣ "offering-tablet" had already been established by Erman (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 22 and Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 431); the cꜣw or "doors" Maspero thinks are the three portcullises found in the entrance passage; and the rwꜣꜣt, he thinks are the granite settings in the side walls in which the portcullises played. His identification of the "upper chamber" with the exterior chapel is obvious (so also Erman).

and <sup>42</sup>Elephantine<sup>a</sup> been visited<sup>b</sup> in the time of any kings with only one warship. Whatsoever his majesty commanded me I carried out<sup>c</sup> completely according to all that his majesty commanded me.

Expedition to the Alabaster Quarry at Hatnub

323. His majesty sent me to <sup>43</sup>Hatnub (Ht-nb) to bring a huge offering-table of hard stone<sup>d</sup> of Hatnub. I brought down this offering-table for him in only 17 days, it having been quarried<sup>e</sup> in Hatnub, and I had it proceed down-stream in this<sup>f</sup> cargo-boat. <sup>44</sup>I hewed for him a cargo-boat of acacia wood of 60 cubits in its length, and 30 cubits in its breadth, built<sup>g</sup> in only 17 days, in the third month of the third season (eleventh month). Although there was no <sup>45</sup>water on the 1—<sup>h</sup>, I landed in safety at the pyramid (called): “Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful;” and the whole was carried out by my hand, according to the mandate which the majesty of my lord had commanded me.

Second Expedition to Southern Quarries

324. His majesty sent [me]<sup>i</sup> to dig five canals<sup>j</sup> <sup>46</sup>in the South and to make 3 cargo-boats and 4 <sup>1</sup>tow<sup>l</sup>-boats of acacia wood of Wawat

<sup>a</sup>Showing both were visited on one trip.

<sup>b</sup>Lit.: “been made or done,” this rare idiom “to do a place” meaning “to visit it” occurs also in Harkhuf (Letter l. 9); and Khui (§ 361); see Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, May, 1901, 237–39.

<sup>c</sup>Hpr transitive.

<sup>d</sup>Rwd·t “enduring or hard stone” (not šs, alabaster, which is masculine) is applied to the stone of Hatnub in the Middle Kingdom also; (see § 696, l. 2).

<sup>e</sup>This word wh is used of cutting grain, papyrus, plucking grapes, separating blocks from the quarry, and the like. It is used (in pseudo-participle) exactly as here, in the Hammamat inscription of the official Sesostris (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, e): twt . . . wh> m rnp·t tn, “a statue . . . quarried in this year,” and often in the quarry inscriptions. The meaning “suppression” given it in Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 315, does not exist.

<sup>f</sup>The boat of which the description follows.

<sup>g</sup>Lit.: “bind” (sp), taken from the binding of reed boats, cf. Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, May, 1901, 238 f., note. It occurs also in Pepinakht, l. 12 (§ 360).

<sup>h</sup>This uncertain word (tsw) = perhaps “flats,” a pure guess. Maspero guesses “dos de sable.” The word also occurs in Ikhnofret’s stela (§ 669, l. 21). Petrie has made our passage the basis for reckoning the date of the period (Season, 19–21); but see § 43 above.

<sup>i</sup>Omitted in text.

<sup>j</sup>These must be for passing the cataracts; cf. the canal of Sesostris III (§§ 642 ff.).

(W<sup>3</sup>w<sup>3</sup>.t). Then the negro chiefs of Irthet (Yrrt), Wawat, Yam (Y<sup>3</sup>m) and Mazoi (Md<sup>3</sup>)<sup>a</sup> 47 drew timber therefor, and I did the whole in only one year. They were launched and laden with very large granite blocks for the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful." I then [—]<sup>b</sup> 48 for the palace in all these 5 canals, because I honored, because I [—], because I praised the fame of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere, who lives forever, more than all gods, and because I carried out everything <sup>49</sup>according to the mandate which his ka commanded me.

I was one beloved of his father, and praised of his mother; first-born <sup>50</sup>— pleasant to his brothers, the count, the real governor, of the South, revered by Osiris, Uni (Wny).

INSCRIPTIONS OF HARKHUF<sup>c</sup>

325. The important inscriptions of this tomb inform us more fully than any other source, of the commercial relations of the Old Kingdom with the Negro peoples of the extreme

<sup>a</sup>The same chiefs do obeisance to King Mernere at Assuan in the year 5. See §§ 316 ff.

<sup>b</sup>snds.

<sup>c</sup>The tombs of the Assuan nobles were first noticed (1885) and excavations in them were begun by Mustafa, British consular agent at Assuan. They were then excavated by Gen. Sir F. W. Grenfell (1885), assisted by Budge in 1886. See Budge, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, X, 4-40, and Bouriant, Recueil, X, 181-98 (supplemented by Scheil, Recueil, XIV, 94-96), who published the shorter texts, discovered before the end of 1886. The entire series of inscribed tombs discovered up to date has been published with plans by de Morgan (Catalogue des monuments, 141-201). They are seventeen in number, and unfortunately de Morgan's copyists have collated so carelessly that the more difficult texts are worthless. Only three of the tombs have furnished texts of length or great historical importance: that of Sebni (§§ 362 ff.), of Pepi-nakht (§§ 355 ff.), and Harkhuf. Curiously enough, the fellahin on the island of Elephantine discovered a mass of correspondence on papyrus belonging to the same noblemen who are interred in the cliffs opposite. These papyri of the Old Kingdom are in a very fragmentary condition, but will be published by the Berlin Museum, where they now are. One letter has already been translated by Erman in Aus den Papyrus der Königlichen Museen, Berlin, 1899, 91, 92.

The inscriptions of Harkhuf were first noticed by Schiaparelli and published by him in Memorie della Reale Accad. dei Lincei anno CCLXXXIX, Ser. 4<sup>a</sup>, Vol. I, Part I, 21-53 (1892). It was discussed by Maspero, Revue Critique, 1892, II, 357-66; south, involving indirect traffic with the Sudan. Harkhuf was the most successful of the energetic caravan-leaders among the Assuan nobles. He made four journeys to the distant southern Nubian country of Yam and finally thence westward into unknown regions. Three of these journeys were under Mernere (§§ 332-35) and the last under Pepi II (§§ 350 ff.). His inscriptions and those of the other Assuan nobles, for the first time reveal to us the active commerce with the south conducted by these nobles residing on the southern frontier.

326. Harkhuf's full titles were:<sup>a</sup> "Count (h<sup>3</sup>ty-<sup>c</sup>), governor of the South,<sup>b</sup> wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, ritual priest, caravan-conductor." Besides these offices, he was also, "chamber-attendant, attached to Nekhen, lord of Nekheb."

327. He first enumerates some of the less important incidents of his life, in connection with some of the qualities of his character.

328. I came today from my city, I descended from my nome, I built a house, I set up the doors. I dug a lake, and I planted trees. The king praised me. My father made a will for me, (for) I was excellent ——— [one beloved] of his father, praised of his mother, translated and discussed by Erman, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, XLVI, 574-79; with text, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1892, 78-83 (journeys), and ibid., 1893, 65-73 (letter). The entire tomb with plan and texts is published by de Morgan (Catalogue des monuments, I, 162-73), but very inaccurately. As Erman's text (in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache) is based on indistinct photographs, no accurate text has yet been published. The accompanying translation is based upon my copy of the Berlin squeezes, photographs by Borchart, and Erman's recent collation of the original, which he kindly placed at my disposal.

---

Since writing the above, the excellent text of Sethe has appeared (Urkunden, I, 120-31).

<sup>a</sup>This and the following statement of his virtues are inscribed over the door of the tomb. See also the list of titles introducing the journeys.

<sup>b</sup>Harkhuf must have succeeded Uni in this office, who held it under Mernere also, dying under this king; but it was now becoming merely a rank.

whom all his brothers loved. I gave bread to the hungry, clothing to the naked, I ferried him who had no boat.

329. O ye living, who are upon earth, [who shall pass by this tomb whether] going down-stream or going up-stream, who shall say: "A thousand loaves, a thousand jars of beer for the owner of this tomb;" I will [—] for their sakes in the nether world. I am an excellent, equipped spirit, a ritual priest, whose mouth knows.<sup>a</sup>

330. As for any man who shall enter into [this] tomb [as his mortuary possession, I will seize<sup>b</sup>] him like a wild fowl; he shall be judged for it by the great god.

331. I was one saying good things and repeating what was loved. Never did I say aught evil, to a powerful one against any people, (for) I desired that it might be well with me in the great god's presence. Never did I [judge two brothers<sup>c</sup>] in such a way that a son was deprived of his paternal possession.

Introduction<sup>d</sup>

332. <sup>1</sup>Count, sole companion, ritual priest, chamber-attendant, judge attached to Nekhen, lord of Nekheb, wearer of the royal seal, caravan-conductor, privy councilor of all affairs of the South (tp-rsy), favorite of his lord, Harkhuf (Hr-hw), <sup>2</sup>. . . . .<sup>e</sup> who brings the products of all the countries to his lord, who brings the tribute of the royal ornaments, governor of all countries of the South (tp-rsy), who sets the terror of <sup>3</sup>Horus<sup>f</sup> among the countries, who does that which his lord praises,<sup>e</sup> . . . . . the revered by Ptah-Sokar, Harkhuf.

First Journey

333. <sup>4</sup>He says:

The majesty of Mernere (Mr-n-R<sup>c</sup>) my lord, sent me, together with my father, the sole companion, and ritual priest, Iri (Yry) to Yam (Y'm), in order to explore a road to this country. <sup>5</sup>I did it in only seven <sup>a</sup>This is again a promise to intercede with the powers of the hereafter on behalf of the living who repeat a prayer for the sake of the deceased; as in § 252.

<sup>b</sup>See Seneni, § 338, l. 4.

<sup>c</sup>See Pepinakht, § 357, ll. 3, 4.

<sup>d</sup>At the right of the door in fourteen columns on the façade, before the figure of Harkhuf with staff.

<sup>e</sup>Some of the same titles repeated.

<sup>f</sup>The king.

months,<sup>a</sup> and I brought all (kinds of) gifts from it [— —]. I was very greatly praised for it.

Second Journey

334. His majesty sent me a second time <sup>6</sup>alone; I went forth upon the Elephantine road, and I descended<sup>b</sup> from Irthet (Yrtt), Mekher (M<sup>c</sup>hr), Tereres (Trrs), Irtheth (Yrtt), being an affair of eight months. When I descended<sup>b</sup> <sup>7</sup>I brought gifts from this country in very great quantity. Never <sup>8</sup>before was the like brought to this land.<sup>c</sup> I descended from the dwelling of the chief of Sethu<sup>d</sup> (Stw) and Irthet (Yrtt), <sup>9</sup>after I had explored<sup>e</sup> these countries. Never had<sup>f</sup> any companion or caravan-conductor who went forth to Yam (Y<sup>3</sup>m) <sup>10</sup>before this, done (it).<sup>g</sup>

Third Journey

335. His majesty now sent me a third time to Yam; <sup>11</sup>I went forth from [—] upon the Uhet (Wh<sup>3</sup>t)<sup>h</sup> road, and I found the chief of Yam <sup>12</sup>going to the land of Temeh (Tmh)<sup>i</sup> to smite Temeh <sup>13</sup>as far as the western corner of heaven. I went forth after him to the land of Temeh, <sup>14</sup>and I pacified him, until he praised all the gods for the king's sake.

<sup>a</sup>This is the length of the entire journey to and from his destination, including his stay there.

<sup>b</sup>"Descend" usually means "return," but it is uncertain whether it has this meaning in both cases here, though it certainly does in the second.

<sup>c</sup>Egypt.

<sup>d</sup>See Maspero (Recueil, XV, 103 f.), who places Sethu on both sides of the river south of Keneset, which is the first district south of Assuan.

<sup>e</sup>wh<sup>3</sup>, cf. § 312, Uni, l. 22, note. <sup>f</sup>Gmyy is perhaps a participle.

<sup>g</sup>The conclusion of this journey describes the unusual road taken to reach home, after he has already narrated the journey out, and the gifts brought back.

<sup>h</sup>According to the analogy of l. 6 ("Elephantine road"), Uhet must be the starting-point of the road. Hence Griffith's proposal to identify this word with wh<sup>3</sup>t "oasis," seems to me improbable (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XVI, 50). The verb wh<sup>3</sup> commonly means "to quarry stone;" may this not be a word for "quarry," and the road is then the old quarry road still used at the cataract? Harkhuf then later crosses to the west side.

<sup>i</sup>Same as later Temeh (Tmh) or Temehu (Tmhw).

Supplement to Third Journey<sup>a</sup>

336. 1—————<sup>b</sup>t,<sup>c</sup> Yam (Y<sup>o</sup>m) who followed — — in order to inform the majesty of Mernere, my lord, 2—————<sup>b</sup> after the chief of Yam. Now when I had pacified that chief of Yam 3————— below<sup>d</sup> Irthet (Yrtt) and above Sethu (Stw), I found the chief of Irthet, Sethu, and Wawat 4— — 1— — 1.

I descended with 300 asses laden with incense, ebony, heknu, grain, <sup>5</sup>panthers, — —, ivory, <sup>1</sup>throw-sticks<sup>1</sup>, and every good product. Now when the chief of Irthet, Sethu, <sup>6</sup>and Wawat saw how strong and numerous was the troop of Yam, which descended with me to the court, and the soldiers who had been sent with me, (then) <sup>7</sup>this [chief] brought and gave to me bulls and small cattle,<sup>e</sup> and conducted me to the roads of the highlands of Irthet, because I was more excellent, vigilant, and — <sup>8</sup>than any count, companion or caravan-conductor, who had been sent to Yam before. Now, when the servant<sup>f</sup> there was descending to the court, one<sup>g</sup> sent the —, <sup>9</sup>sole companion, the master of the bath, Khuni (Hwny),<sup>h</sup> up-stream with a vessel laden with date-wine, <sup>1</sup>cakes<sup>1</sup>, bread, and beer. <sup>10</sup>The count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, ritual priest, treasurer of the god, privy councilor of decrees, the revered, Harkhuf.

[Continued §§ 350 ff.]

<sup>a</sup>In horizontal lines from right to left, on the left side of the door (on the façade). Below it Harkhuf's son, Zemi (Dmy), offers him incense.

<sup>b</sup>Over one-third line. Harkhuf evidently sent a messenger to inform the Pharaoh that he had gone "after the chief of Yam."

<sup>c</sup>Either Wawat or Irthet preceded, as determinative shows.

<sup>d</sup>He is here giving his return route. <sup>f</sup>Modest for "I."

<sup>e</sup>Or gazelles; not asses.

<sup>g</sup>The king.

<sup>h</sup>Or R<sup>c</sup>-wny, the R<sup>c</sup> or h-sign is possibly a hole; one is tempted to find our old friend Uni here.

REIGN OF PEPI II

CONVEYANCE OF LAND BY IDU, CALLED ALSO SENENI<sup>a</sup>

337. Idu, or Seneni, was priest of Pepi I, Mernere, and Pepi II. This document recorded in his tomb constitutes a gift of land to his wife, apparently as her mortuary endowment, though it is not so called. Strangely enough, the location, size, and limits of the field are not given.

338. <sup>1</sup>Seneni, he saith:

<sup>2</sup>“As for this field, which I have conveyed ———— <sup>3</sup>which I have given to my beloved wife, Disnek (Dyy·s-nk) [<sup>4</sup>it is her<sup>1</sup>] true [<sup>5</sup>possession. As for any persons<sup>1</sup>] <sup>4</sup>who shall take it from this Disnek, they shall be —<sup>b</sup> for it by the great god, <sup>5</sup>lord of heaven, and I will seize them [like<sup>c</sup>] wild fowl. I am (now) an — and excellent spirit. I know <sup>6</sup>———— . . . . . <sup>7</sup>[I have done] this for this Disnek, because she was so greatly honored in <sup>10</sup>my heart; she said nothing to oppose my heart . . . . .”

Disnek, she saith:

“I was one amiable — —, beloved of her entire city. As for any persons who shall take this land from me, I will enter into judgment with them, by<sup>d</sup> the great god.”

---

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS<sup>e</sup>

339. There is no relief with the king's titulary, but the queen-mother is depicted with her inscription. The

---

<sup>a</sup>Inscription in his cliff-tomb in Kasr-es-Saiyâd; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 114, a; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 115-117.

<sup>b</sup>Some verb of condemnation is lost.

<sup>c</sup>See Harkhuf, § 330.

<sup>d</sup>We expect “before.”

<sup>e</sup>Cut on the rocks of Wadi Maghara; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 116, a, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1496, No. 25; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 112, 113; Morgan, Recherches, 236; Weill, Sinai, 126; see Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 130, 131.

date, the royal names and titles occupy four vertical columns, and beneath these is the inscription of the officers and officials who conducted the expedition.

Date

340. Year of the second numbering of all large and small cattle of the North and South.<sup>a</sup>

King's Name

Horus: Nuterkhu, Neferkere (Ntr-ḥ<sup>c</sup>-w, Nfr-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>), who lives forever; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Golden Horus: Kherep; Neferkere, who lives forever, like Re.

Queen's Name

341. King's-mother, attached to<sup>b</sup> the pyramid: "Neferkere-Remains-Living," king's-wife, his beloved, attached to the pyramid: "Merire-Remains-Beautiful," Enekhnes-Merire, whom all the gods love.

Leader of the Expedition

342. Royal commission, sent with the treasurer of the god, Hepi (H<sup>2</sup>py), to the terrace, the name of which is "Malachite."<sup>c</sup>

Members of the Expedition

343. Captain, Bekneptah.

Overseer of stone-work,<sup>d</sup> Uzai (Wd<sup>2</sup>y).

Chief scribe, Senezem.

Captain and                    } { Merire-onekh.

Caravan-conductor } { Neke-onekh (N-k<sup>2</sup>-c-nḥ).

<sup>a</sup>Cf. the same fiscal date under Isesi (§ 266). It is remarkable that we find "North" placed first here.

<sup>b</sup>This is not a simple genitive n(y)t belonging to the preceding as it has always been rendered, but an independent title: n(y)t Nfr-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup> mn c-nḥ = "One who belongs to the pyramid, etc.;" compare the title of the princess Henetre: n(y)t Wnys nfr yswt (Mariette, Mastabas, 360). N masculine is employed in the same way with kings' names, as in Sabu's tomb (Mariette, Mastabas, 375).

<sup>c</sup>See duplicate under Isesi (§ 266).

<sup>d</sup>Read št, see § 239, note.

Captain	}	{	Yekerib ( Ykr-yb ).
and Chief			Khnum-enkhef ( Hnm-<sup>c</sup>nh·f ).
Overseer	}	{	Hemukhrow ( Hmw-hrw ).
Judge and			Zaty ( D<sup>3</sup>tyy ).
Scribe	}	{	— khet.
Leader of the			}
Crew of	Senezem.
Recruits	}	{
Caravan-conductor, — khuf, — khuf, — khuf			(— hwf ).

STELA OF THE TWO QUEENS, ENEKHNES-MERIRE<sup>a</sup>

344. The history of the royal family disclosed by this stela is of great interest as well as of historical importance. Zau, the vizier and chief justice under Pepi II, and perhaps earlier, erected the monument in memory of his brothers and sisters at Abydos. He was the son of a prince, named Khui, and his mother's name was Nebet. Both his sisters married king Pepi I; one became the mother of Mernere, the other of Pepi II, so that besides being half-brothers, the two kings were on the mother's side also cousins. The family tree appears thus:

With both his sisters queens and likewise successively the mother of the king, we can see how Zau became vizier and chief justice under Pepi II; Pepi II's mother Enekhnes-Merire II was much honored by him, and appears with him in the dating of his Sinai inscription (§ 339).

<sup>a</sup>Tablet found built into a well at Abydos by Mariette, now in Cairo, No. 1431; complete text: Mariette, Abydos, I, 2; Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 153, 154; see also Mariette, Catalogue général d'Abydos, No. 523, and Rougé, Recherches sur les monuments qu'on peut attribuer aux VI premières dynasties, 129-84; I also had access to Erman's collation for the lexicon, which corrected a number of mistakes in the published texts. This collation is now published by Sethe, Urkunden, I, 117-19.

Inscription over First Queen

345. King's-wife, (attached to)<sup>a</sup> the pyramid (called): "Merire-Remains-Beautiful," very amiable, very favored, 'great in possessions', companion of Horus,<sup>b</sup> '—' of Horus,<sup>b</sup> king's-mother, (attached to) the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," Enekhnes-Merire.

Inscription over Second Queen

346. King's-wife, (attached to) the pyramid (called): "Merire-Remains-Beautiful," very amiable, very favored, daughter of the god, 'great in possessions,' companion of Horus,<sup>b</sup> '—' of Horus, king's-mother, (attached to) the pyramid (called): "Neferkere-Remains-Alive," Enekhnes-Merire.

Inscription over Man

347. Their brother, the chief justice and vizier, Zau (D<sup>c</sup>w).

Below the preceding is Zau's dedicatory inscription introduced by an enumeration of his five brothers, all of whom bore the name Zau. Thus, the whole family, six brothers Zau, and two sisters Enekhnes-Merire, are all commemorated.

Dedicatory Inscription

348. Their brother, the real hereditary prince, count (h<sup>2</sup>ty-<sup>c</sup>) and governor of the pyramid-city, chief justice and vizier, overseer of the king's records, prophet of the gods of Buto, prophet of the gods of Nekhen, chief ritual priest, sem priest and master of all wardrobes, wearer of the royal seal, judge '—', revered by the god, Zau.

349. I made this in Abydos of Thinis, as one in honor with the majesty of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkere, who lives

---

<sup>a</sup>That the pyramid names in these titles are to be so rendered is made certain by the Wadi Maghara inscription of Pepi, I (§§ 302 ff.), where they occur also, but with n(y)t preceding; see note, ibid.

<sup>b</sup>The king.

forever, with the majesty of King<sup>a</sup> Merire and King<sup>a</sup> Mernere, out of love for the nome in which I was born by the favorite of the king, Nebet (Nb' t), to my father the hereditary prince, count, (meri-nuter) priest, honored by the great god, Khui (Hwy). O ye living, who are upon earth, every superior prophet, every prophet, every [—], of the temple of the majesty of my lord, Osiris (Hnty ymntyw); as the king lives for you,<sup>b</sup> ye shall take for me the mortuary offerings from the income of this temple, of that which I have conveyed by a decree, and of that which ye convey for yourselves, when ye see my offices with the king; because I was more honored by my lord than [any] noble

---

INSCRIPTIONS OF HARKHUF

[Continued from § 336]

LETTER OF PEPI II

350. Harkhuf has made a fourth voyage to Yam, and having sent word to the king of his safe return with many products of the south and especially a dancing dwarf, the king writes him a letter of thanks, promising great rewards, etc., if the dwarf is safely brought to court. This letter, Harkhuf had engraved on the façade of his tomb, which was already complete, so that a further space for the letter had to be smoothed on the extreme right of the façade, where none of the other Assuan tombs has any inscriptions at all. Thus was preserved to us the only complete royal letter of the Old Kingdom.<sup>c</sup> It is as follows:

---

<sup>a</sup>Same as preceding title of Neferkere. Both these kings were deceased at this time, as they do not receive the predicate "who lives forever."

<sup>b</sup>An oath.

<sup>c</sup>With the exception of the Berlin papyrus fragments (§ 325, note) and the fragmentary letters (§§ 271, 273), it is the only letter of any kind surviving from the Old Kingdom.

Date and Introduction

351. <sup>1</sup>Royal seal, year 2, third month of the first season, (third month), day 15.

<sup>2</sup>Royal decree (to)<sup>a</sup> the sole companion, the ritual priest and caravan-conductor, Harkhuf (Hr-hw).

Acknowledgment of Harkhuf's Letter

<sup>3</sup>I have noted the matter of this thy letter, which thou hast sent to the king, to the palace, in order that one<sup>b</sup> might know that thou hast descended <sup>4</sup>in safety from Yam with the army which was with thee. Thou hast said [in] this thy letter, that thou hast brought <sup>5</sup>all great and beautiful gifts, which Hathor, mistress of Imu (Ym<sup>33</sup>w) hath given to the ka of the <sup>6</sup>king of Upper and Lower Egypt Neferkere (Njr-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>9</sup>), who liveth forever and ever. Thou hast said in this thy letter,<sup>c</sup> that thou hast brought a dancing dwarf<sup>d</sup> <sup>7</sup>of the god from the land of spirits, like the dwarf which <sup>8</sup>the treasurer of the god Burded (B<sup>2</sup>-wr-dd) brought from Punt in the time of Isesi (Yssy). Thou hast said to my majesty: "Never <sup>9</sup>before has one like him been brought by any other who has visited<sup>e</sup> Yam."

Harkhuf's Rewards

352. Each year <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> thee <sup>2</sup>doing that which thy lord desires and praises; thou spendest day and night <sup>1</sup>with the caravan<sup>1</sup> in doing that which <sup>11</sup>thy lord desires, praises and commands. His majesty will make <sup>12</sup>thy many excellent honors to be an ornament for the son of thy son forever, so that all people will say <sup>13</sup>when they hear what my majesty doeth for thee: "Is there anything like this<sup>f</sup> which was done for the sole companion, Harkhuf, <sup>14</sup>when he descended from Yam, because of the

<sup>a</sup>Omitted also in both the letters to Senezemib (§§ 271, 273).

<sup>b</sup>Circumlocution for "the king."

<sup>c</sup>By emending in accordance with the preceding sentence.

<sup>d</sup>Lit.: "a dwarf of dances;" cf. the same usage in Hebrew syntax. See Erman's explanation, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1893, 72, 73, and Pietschmann, ibid., 73, 74.

<sup>e</sup>The verb is yry "to make or do" with Yam as direct object; the reading is certain. The same usage occurs in Uni (l. 41), and Khui (§ 361); see Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, May, 1901, 237-39.

<sup>f</sup>Nj.

vigilance which he showed, to do that which his lord desired, praised and commanded!"

King's Instructions

353. <sup>15</sup>Come northward<sup>a</sup> to the court immediately; [—] <sup>16</sup>thou shalt bring this dwarf with thee, which thou bringest living, prosperous and healthy from the land of spirits, <sup>17</sup>for the dances of the god, to rejoice and <sup>18</sup>gladden<sup>1</sup> the heart of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkere, who lives forever. <sup>18</sup>When he goes down with thee into the vessel, appoint excellent people, who shall be beside him <sup>19</sup>on each side of the vessel; take care lest he fall into the water. When [he] sleeps at night appoint excellent people, <sup>20</sup>who shall sleep beside him in his tent;<sup>b</sup> inspect ten times a night. <sup>21</sup>My majesty desires to see this dwarf more than the gifts of Sinai<sup>c</sup> and <sup>22</sup>of Punt (Pwnt). If thou arrivest at court this dwarf being with thee <sup>23</sup>alive, prosperous and healthy, my majesty will do for thee a greater thing than that which was done for the treasurer of the god, Burded (B<sup>3</sup>-wr-dd) <sup>24</sup>in the time of Isesi (Yssy), according to the heart's desire of my majesty to see this dwarf.

354. <sup>25</sup>Commands have been sent to the chief of the New Towns,<sup>d</sup> the companion, and superior prophet, to command that sustenance<sup>e</sup> be taken <sup>26</sup>from him in every store-city and every temple, without stinting therein.

INSCRIPTIONS OF PEPI-NAKHT<sup>f</sup>

355. This nobleman of Elephantine was of high rank, and was entrusted with important commissions by King Pepi II.

<sup>a</sup>It is not necessary to emend dh't to dp't; undoubtedly hd't, infinitive of hd "sail down-stream" is meant; hd makes feminine infinitive in early texts; see Sethe, Verbum, I, 238.

<sup>b</sup>This word (hn) is certain from Merneptah's Karnak text, l. 62 (III, 589), where it also means "tent."

<sup>c</sup>By<sup>3</sup>, the name of a mining region in Sinai; as it is sometimes used with the demonstrative (pn, "this"), I have rendered it "mine" in the inscriptions of the Middle Kingdom, where it is not uncommon.

<sup>d</sup>See § 628.

<sup>e</sup>ss<sup>3</sup> = lit.: "a causing to be satisfied;" the reference is to the provisioning of the expedition by the places passed as it returns. The king has sent orders to the proper officer in each place that he shall furnish such provision.

<sup>f</sup>From his cliff-tomb opposite Assuan (see § 325, note, on the excavation of this tomb); it is No. 9 in de Morgan's plan (Catalogue des monuments, 142). The inscription occupies the façade, seven columns on each side of the door; and

He led two campaigns in Nubia (§§ 358, 359), and a remarkable expedition to the north Red Sea for the rescue of the body of a nobleman bound for Punt, who had been killed by the Sand-dwellers while building his ship for the voyage (§ 360).

356. His titles were as follows:<sup>a</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Custodian of the domain, scribe of the phyle of the pyramid (called): "Neferkere-Remains-Alive," wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, Hekib (Hkꜣ-yb);<sup>b</sup> governor of the pyramid-city: "Pepi-Remains-Beautiful," sole companion, ritual priest, caravan-conductor, who brings the products of the countries to his lord, Pepi-nakht; <sup>3</sup>chief of the phyle of the pyramid: "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful;" who sets the terror of Horus [among] the countries, the revered Hekib, <sup>4</sup>count, sole companion, chamber-attendant, judge attached to Nekhen, lord of Nekheb, revered by the great god, Pepi-nakht.

One more title: "Governor of foreign countries," is found in column 14.

357. His narrative inscription<sup>c</sup> is as follows:

1. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

Pepi-nakht's Character

<sup>2</sup>I was one who said that which was good, and repeated that which was loved. Never did I say anything evil to a powerful one against any people, (for) I desired that it be well with me in <sup>3</sup>the great god's presence. I gave bread to the hungry, and clothing to the naked. Never originally four lines of titles at the top on each side, but only two remain on the north (right) side. The texts (with plan of tomb) are published in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 174-76, but de Morgan's copyists (see 325, note) have failed of the correct reading in all difficult passages. The accompanying translation is based upon my copy of the Berlin squeezes; a collation of the original by Erman and Steindorff, very kindly placed at my disposal. [Later: Sethe's collation with the squeezes has since been published by him (Urkunden, I, 131-35).]

---

<sup>a</sup>Four lines at the top, south side, omitting repetitions.

<sup>b</sup>North side, last upper line states that this was Pepi-nakht's "beautiful name."

<sup>c</sup>Seven columns on each side of the door; we take the right side first.

<sup>d</sup>Titles (next the door); numbering then passes to outside (right) and proceeds toward the door.

did I judge two brothers <sup>4</sup>in such a way that a son was deprived of his paternal possession. I was one beloved of his father, praised of his mother, <sup>5</sup>whom his brothers and sisters loved.

First Nubian Expedition

358. The majesty of my lord sent me, to hack up Wawat (W<sup>2</sup>w<sup>2</sup>·t) and Irthet (Yrtt). I did <sup>6</sup>so that my lord praised me. I slew a great number<sup>a</sup> there consisting of chiefs' children and excellent commanders of [—]. I brought <sup>7</sup>a great number of them to the court as living prisoners<sup>b</sup>, while I was at the head of many mighty soldiers as a hero. <sup>8</sup>The heart of my lord was satisfied with me in every commission with which he<sup>c</sup> sent me.

Second Nubian Expedition

359. Now, the majesty of my lord sent me to pacify these countries. <sup>9</sup>I did so that my lord praised me exceedingly, above everything. I brought the two chiefs of these countries to the court in safety, <sup>10</sup>bulls and live [goats] which they [—] to the court, together with chiefs' children, and the two commanders of [—], who were with them. <sup>11</sup>— — that which the lords of the South do, because I was excellent in watchfulness and because I did that which my lord desired.

Expedition against Asiatics

360. Now the majesty of my lord sent me <sup>12</sup>to the country of the Asiatics (c<sup>2</sup>m[w]) to bring for him the sole companion, [commander]<sup>d</sup> of the sailors, the caravan-conductor, Enekhēt (c<sup>2</sup>n-c<sup>2</sup>nht), who was building a ship there for Punt, <sup>13</sup>when the Asiatics (c<sup>2</sup>mw) belonging to the Sand-dwellers<sup>e</sup> (hr(y)w-š<sup>c</sup>) slew him, together with a troop of the army which was with him<sup>f</sup> <sup>14</sup>. . . . .<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>tr a variant of tnw.

<sup>b</sup>Determinative of men and women.

<sup>c</sup>The pronoun (f) is in the joint of the masonry.

<sup>d</sup>Some such title must have been in the lacuna; this title and the preceding (smr) "companion" are written beside the column. The whole is totally unrecognizable in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments.

<sup>e</sup>The Sand-dwellers have either pushed very far south at this time (if able to disturb the building of ships for the Punt voyage) or these ships were built in the extreme northern Red Sea. The former supposition is the more probable.

<sup>f</sup>An idiom for: "under his command."

<sup>g</sup>Pepi-nakht's name and titles.

15_____a 16_____ 17among his people. I [—] and I slew people among them, (I) and the troop of the army which was with me.
 .....<sup>b</sup>

INSCRIPTION IN THE TOMB OF KHUI<sup>c</sup>

361. One of the pillars contains the following text over Khnemhotep, one of the officials so commonly called hrp-sh, who is carrying offerings to Khui (Hwy):

The hrp-sh, Khnemhotep, says: "I went forth with my lord, the count and treasurer of the god, Thethi (Tty) to Kush, and (my lord the count and treasurer of the god), Khui<sup>d</sup> (Hwy), to Punt, [11] times. I was brought back in safety after I had visited<sup>e</sup> these countries.

INSCRIPTIONS OF SEBNI<sup>f</sup>

362. The adventure which Sebni engraved upon the façade of his tomb is not merely a tale of the greatest interest, but also very important for its religious, geographical, ad-

<sup>a</sup>It is probable that this fragment of four lines (of which only two are preserved) form the conclusion of the expedition against the Asiatics. Sethe has also inserted them here.

<sup>b</sup>Pepi-nakht's name and title.

<sup>c</sup>In the cliffs opposite Assuan; No. 9 on de Morgan's plan (Catalogue des monuments, 142); texts, ibid., 157, 158, but so badly that it is very difficult to use them, and I unfortunately had no other copy (for this tomb was overlooked by both Budge and Bouriant, see § 325, note on excavation), for my note (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, May, 1901, 238), where text is also published, Sethe has since published the same text (Urkunden, I, 140, 141), and his explanation is more probable than mine, though it does not affect the conclusions of my note.

<sup>d</sup>It is quite incomprehensible that Khui's name should not appear here as the lord of Khnemhotep. Hence Sethe's restoration is very probable. This Thethi's tomb is located in the same cliff (de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 199); besides the titles above, he bore the title: "who brings the products of the southern countries to the king," which we should expect of one who voyaged to Kush.

<sup>e</sup>Lit.: "done," as in Uni, § 322, l. 41 and Harkhuf, Letter, § 351, l. 9.

<sup>f</sup>From his tomb hewn in the cliffs on the west shore at Assuan (for the excavation see § 325, note); it bears the No. 26, and is called No. 2 on de Morgan's plan (Catalogue des monuments, 14). It is the largest tomb at Assuan. It is described by Budge with plan (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, X, 16-23) and by Bouriant (Recueil, X, 182-85) both of whom took squeezes and ministrative, and historical data, coming from a period of which we know so very little. Unfortunately, we possess only the second half of the narrative, and this in a condition so fragmentary that a general outline is necessary in order to make the contents clear.

363. The first half, now no longer legible, must have contained the narrative of an expedition into Nubia by Sebni's father, Mekhu. On this expedition Mekhu in some way meets his death.<sup>a</sup> Here the surviving portion of the inscription begins; information of Mekhu's death is brought to his son Sebni, and he sets out with troops and 100 asses, laden with presents to rescue his father's body for embalmment; otherwise of course there would be no life hereafter for Mekhu (ll. 1-3). He sent messengers to the king to inform promised (1887) soon to publish the long text. It was finally published (1893) by de Morgan (Catalogue des monuments, 147, 148), but his copyists have clearly spent no time on the difficult collation, and the publication is unusable; the inscription has never been translated or treated. The long text occupies nineteen columns on the right of the door; these are the continuation from the beginning on the left of the door, which has now unfortunately almost totally disappeared. The nineteen columns are crossed by six wide horizontal cracks, some of which were filled up and did not interrupt the scribe's writing, and some of which he jumped over. It is always a question whether the crack has caused a lacuna, e. g., in ll. 11-17 in the third crack from the top there are no lacunæ. Moreover, the whole text is very badly weathered, and one can sit for hours pouring over one line in varying lights, without being certain of the reading. The accompanying translation is based on my copy of the Berlin squeezes, collated with Erman's collation of the original; Erman and I then spent an entire day going over the doubtful passages in the squeezes together, and it is to be hoped that the text is now fixed. Sethe has since published all our readings and his own collation of the squeeze (Urkunden, I, 135-40).

---

<sup>a</sup>It is certainly remarkable that of the three narrative inscriptions of Assuan, two contain accounts of the death of a nobleman on a foreign expedition and the rescue of the body: Mekhu in Nubia and Enekheth on the northern shores of the Red Sea (§ 360). For the tomb of an Egyptian buried in Sinai, see Borchartd, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1897, 112. Another Egyptian who apparently perished in the desolate quarries of Hammamat is commemorated on the rocks as follows: "O ye living, the ones who come to this land, who desire to return to the king, bearing their gifts to their lord; say ye, '1000 loaves, 1000 jars of beer, etc., etc., for the wearer of the royal seal, etc., Sheme (Šm?).'" Text in Golénisheff, Hammamat, III, No. 1.

him of his departure and the purpose of his journey (l. 3). He reached Wawat, and pacified it and its further neighbors, secured the body of his father and started upon the return (ll. 3-6). On reaching Wawat again, he sent the officer Iri and two companions to the court with some of the native products which his father had acquired (ll. 6, 7). They were evidently instructed to return with embalmers and equipment for embalming the deceased Mekhu, for as Sebni descended the river he met Iri returning from the court with all the people and paraphernalia necessary for the embalment (ll. 8-10). Iri brought also written instructions from the king to Sebni, containing promises of great reward for his pious deed (ll. 10-12). Sebni then buried his father and proceeded to Memphis with the Nubian products which his father had gotten (ll. 12, 13). He was highly praised by the king, and given very rich gifts (ll. 14-16). Later a communication from the vizier reached him, conveying to him a gift of land, either as a further reward for his good deed to refund him his expenses, or as an endowment of his father's tomb (ll. 17-19).

364. Sebni's titles are:<sup>a</sup> Count, wearer of the royal seal, governor of the South, sole companion, ritual priest, Sebni (S<sup>3</sup> bny).

365. The long text is as follows:

Information of Mekhu's Death

1-----<sup>b</sup> [[Then came<sup>1</sup>] the ship captain, Intef (Yntf), and the overseer of -----<sup>1</sup> Behkesi (Bhksy),<sup>c</sup> to give information<sup>d</sup> that the sole companion, and ritual priest <sup>2</sup>Me[khu] [[was dead<sup>1</sup>].

<sup>a</sup>De Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 146, omitting repetitions.

<sup>b</sup>One-third line.

<sup>c</sup>Probably the name of a Nubian; it is determined by the soldier, but bearing an c<sup>3</sup>m-club; a similar club is before the y (!) which renders the reading questionable. Of course, one thinks of nh<sup>3</sup>sy, but we have the wrong s.

<sup>d</sup>rd' t r<sup>h</sup> ntt.

Departure of Sebni

366. [Then I took<sup>1</sup>] a troop of my estate, and 100 asses with me, bearing ointment, honey, clothing, oil (ihnt) and [—] of every sack,<sup>a</sup> in order to [make presents [in]<sup>1</sup> these countries [and I went out to]<sup>1</sup> these countries of <sup>3</sup>the negroes.

Sebni's Message to the King

367. ———<sup>b</sup> [Then I sent<sup>1</sup>] people<sup>c</sup> who were in the Door,<sup>d</sup> and I made letters to give information that I had gone out to bring this my father, from Wawat (W<sup>3</sup>w<sup>3</sup>·t), and Utheth (Wt̄t̄).

Expedition of Sebni

368. I pacified <sup>4</sup>these countries ———<sup>e</sup> [in<sup>1</sup> the countries of [—] the name of which is Mether (Mtr). [I loaded<sup>1</sup>] the body of this sole companion upon an ass, and I had him carried by the troop of my estate. <sup>5</sup>I made for him a coffin ———<sup>f</sup> I brought [—] — — — in order to bring him out of these countries. Never did I send [—] or any negro-caravan <sup>6</sup>———<sup>g</sup>. I was greatly praised on account of it.

Return of Sebni

369. I descended to Wawat and Uthek (Wtk)<sup>h</sup> and I [sent<sup>1</sup>] the royal attendant Iri (Yry) with two people of my estate as [—],<sup>i</sup> bearing incense, clothing,<sup>j</sup> ———,<sup>k</sup> 3 cubits long, one tusk, in order to give information that my [best one<sup>1</sup>] was 6 cubits long; one [hide<sup>1</sup>], and that I had brought this my father and all kinds of gifts from these countries.

<sup>a</sup>Or "every equipment" (c pr) or "every costume" (ḏb)?

<sup>b</sup>One-third line.

<sup>c</sup>The determinative and plural ending are all that is visible.

<sup>d</sup>Elephantine is often called the "Door of the South;" and it is probably meant here.

<sup>e</sup>One-quarter line.

<sup>f</sup>One-quarter line, followed by fragmentary words.

<sup>g</sup>One-quarter line.

<sup>h</sup>Or "Uthek of Wawat." The t̄ of Uthek is doubtful.

<sup>i</sup>It is possible that this curious word contains the names of the two people.

imnh' t-ntr.

<sup>k</sup>One-fifth line.

Embalment of Mekhu

370. <sup>8</sup>When I descended to give information ———<sup>a</sup> from the bend, (W<sup>c</sup>r·t) behold, Iri [‘‘came’’] from the court, [‘‘as I’’] came, to embalm<sup>b</sup> the count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, ritual priest, <sup>9</sup>this Mekhu (Mḥw). He brought ——— embalmers, the chief ritual priest, ymy-w<sup>c</sup>b, — shḏ,<sup>c</sup> the mourners and all offerings of the [‘‘White’’] House. He brought festival oil from the double White House <sup>10</sup>and secret things from the double w<sup>c</sup>b·t-<sup>d</sup>house, ——— from the ḥ-house, clothing of the double White House, and all the burial equipment which is issued from the court, like the issuance for the hereditary prince, Meru.

Sebni’s Letter from the King

371. Now, when this <sup>11</sup>Iri arrived, he brought to me a command (also), [‘‘to’’] praise me on account of it. It was said in<sup>e</sup> this command: ‘‘I will do for thee every excellent thing, as a reward for this great deed, because of bringing thy [father]<sup>f</sup> ———. <sup>12</sup>[N]ever<sup>g</sup> has the like happened before.

Mekhu’s Burial

I buried this my father in his tomb of the necropolis; never was one of his rank<sup>h</sup> (so) buried [before].

Sebni’s Honors at Court

372. I [went north] to Memphis<sup>i</sup> bearing the gifts <sup>13</sup>of these countries which this count<sup>j</sup> had brought. I deposited every gift which this my father deposited — before this my army and the negroes [— —]. <sup>14</sup>The servant<sup>k</sup> there was praised at the court, and the servant there [‘‘gave praise’’] to the king, because the servant there was so greatly favored

<sup>a</sup>One-fifth line.

<sup>c</sup>Titles of funeral functionaries.

<sup>b</sup>Or ceremoniously to receive.

<sup>d</sup>The ‘‘pure’’ house.

<sup>e</sup>r as in the letter of Harkhuf, § 351, l. 7.

<sup>f</sup>The determinative of ‘‘father’’ is still visible.

<sup>g</sup>The negative n is not visible either on the squeeze or original.

<sup>h</sup>Lit.: ‘‘his equal.’’ Zau affirms the same regarding his father (§ 382); there is a remarkable resemblance between this and the inscription of Zau.

<sup>i</sup>Lit.: ‘‘the wall,’’ a designation for Memphis, e. g., several times in Papyrus Harris.

<sup>j</sup>His father.

<sup>k</sup>Common circumlocution for ‘‘I.’’

by [the king<sup>1</sup> <sup>15</sup>f—]. There was given to me a chest of carob wood, — containing — and containing ointment; there was given [to me] [—] — — with clothing; <sup>16</sup>there was given to me the gold of praise; there were given to me rations, meat, and fowl. Now, when [—] — — [—] — — <sup>17</sup>by my lord.

Sebni's Reward

373. Said the servant <sup>a</sup>there: "There came to me a command of the chief judge — — — [lord of] Nekheb, <sup>18</sup>the inferior prophet Ini (Yny) while he was [—] in Per<sup>b</sup>-Hathor-Resit (Pr-Hthr-rsy't) [saying: that I might bring<sup>c1</sup>] this [my father<sup>1</sup>] immediately <sup>19</sup>that I might bury this [my father<sup>1</sup>] in his tomb north of Nekheb.

Sebni's Reward

374. There were given to me 30 (+<sup>d</sup>x) stat of land in the North and Southland, in the domain<sup>e</sup> of the pyramid: "Neferkere-Remains-Alive," — — in order to honor the servant there.

INSCRIPTIONS OF IBI<sup>f</sup>

375. The nomarch, Ibi, begins the history of a new family in the twelfth nome, whose relations with the royal house are especially instructive. In all probability Ibi was the son of the powerful Zau of Abydos (§§ 344 ff.), nomarch of the Thinite nome, whose two sisters became the queens of Pepi I. Ibi was a contemporary of Pepi I, Mernere, and Pepi II during the first part of his reign. Although Mernere appointed him to the nomarchy of the Cerastes-Mountain, it

<sup>a</sup>Common circumlocution for "I."

<sup>e</sup>I see traces of nd on the squeeze.

<sup>b</sup>See II, 728.

<sup>d</sup>Not more than 70.

<sup>e</sup>Or possibly "as custodian of the domain of the pyramid, etc.;" meaning that he received the gift by virtue of his office.

<sup>f</sup>From his tomb in the southern necropolis of Der el-Gebrāwi; published by Davies, The Rock Tombs of Deir-el-Gebrāwi, Pl. 23 and 7; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 142-5 (from Davies).

is also probable that he was appointed to it in confirmation of his title to it through his marriage to a lady named Rahenem (R<sup>c</sup> hnm), in whom we may recognize the heiress to the said nome. He thus became the head, not only of his hereditary nome of Thinis, the ancient capital of Egypt, but also of the twelfth nome. To the latter for some reason he transferred his residence. It is possible that he had not at first received the Thinite nome, and that on his marriage, he went to the Cerastes-Mountain first, as his only nome, and remained there even after his appointment to the Thinite nome. But it is his office in the latter of which he is most proud.

376. The office of “great lord” or at least that of “count” (h<sup>2</sup> ty-<sup>c</sup>) of a nome, was at this time evidently one of appointment by favor of Pharaoh. The royal house thus maintained control of the landed lords, who were the descendants of the local governors of the Fourth and Fifth Dynasties.

Ibi introduced a severe and effective discipline into the organization of the nome, and must have prospered greatly from its revenues. His son Zau-Shemai succeeded him in both nomes.<sup>a</sup> (§ 380)

377. <sup>a</sup>Wearer<sup>b</sup> of the royal seal, commander of a stronghold, sole companion, great lord of the Thinite nome, Ibi (Yby); he saith:

“I was a youth who bound on the gir[dle under] [the majesty] [of] the King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Merire (Pepi I)].”

[“The majesty of] <sup>3</sup>my lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere, living — [— —] [appointed me] as count (h<sup>2</sup> ty-<sup>c</sup>), sole companion, and great lord of the nome of the Cerastes-Mountain.”

378. “The majesty of my lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Nefkere (Pepi II)], appointed me governor of the South.”

The real governor of the South, <sup>4</sup>Ibi; he saith: “As for any people who shall enter into this tomb [as] their mortuary property, [I] will seize [them] <sup>5</sup>like wild fowl. I am an excellent, equipped soul, I know every charm and the secrets of the court, the [—] which is in the nether world. I was <sup>6</sup>one beloved of [his] father [praise]d of his mother, honored by the king, honored by his city-god, possessed of love, Ibi.”

<sup>a</sup>Davies, ibid., 33, 34.

<sup>b</sup>Over the east wall, on the left, Davies, Pl. 23.

<sup>a</sup>———— “Now, I gave [bread] to [the hungry], clothing <sup>5</sup>to the naked . . . . . of grain, <sup>6</sup>of oxen, and of the peasants of my domain.

379. <sup>1</sup>. . . . . <sup>b</sup> I have made this<sup>c</sup> from the towns of my domain as a mortuary possession, and from the royal mortuary offering which the majesty of my lord gave to me; in order to make for me —————
<sup>2</sup>with peasants of my domain, filled with bulls, goats, and asses, as [—]
—, except the possessions of my father, while I was commander of the stronghold of the granary: 203 stat of land [which] the majesty of my lord gave [to me], to make me rich.

INSCRIPTION OF ZAU<sup>d</sup>

380. This nomarch of the Cerastes-Mountain was the grandson of Ibi whom Mernere had appointed to this nome. Ibi's son Zau-Shemai died early, and his son Zau succeeded him. He was a contemporary of Pepi II, under whom he held the office of “keeper of the door of the South,” an office usually belonging to the nobles of Elephantine. At his father's death he was obliged to petition the king that he might succeed to the paternal nomarchy.<sup>e</sup> His account

<sup>a</sup>Over the east wall, on the right; Davies, Pl. XXIII.

<sup>b</sup>On the east wall over the scenes of cattle and under women bringing offerings (Davies, Pl. VII). The omitted introduction contains only name and titles of Ibi, preceded by “For [the k> of].”

<sup>c</sup>The endowment from which the offerings depicted before him are drawn. It includes eleven villages or settlements.

<sup>d</sup>In the Gebel Marâg, marked on the Fund map (Pl. IV) as “Dêr-el-Gebrâwi Tombs,” north of Assiut on the east side of the river. Text copied by Sayce and published in Recueil, XIII, 65-67; comments by Maspero, ibid., 68 ff. Corrections by Sayce, ibid., XX, 170 ff.; better by Davies, Deir-el-Gebrâwi, II, Pl. XIII, but unfortunately the inscription suffered much in the interim between Sayce's and Davies' visits; Sethe (from Davies), Urkunden, I, 145-47. See also Newberry, Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1892-1893, 14, 15.

<sup>e</sup>See Davies, ibid., II, 35 ff.

of his construction of a common tomb for his father, and himself, is the most remarkable expression of sentiment which this remote age has bequeathed us. He seems to have been the last of his line.

Introduction

381. <sup>1</sup>His eldest son, his beloved, of his body; — — <sup>2</sup>his favorite, his darling, <sup>a</sup> prince of the palace, wearer of the royal seal, commander of a stronghold, <sup>3</sup>real sole companion, great lord<sup>b</sup> of the nome of Cerastes-Mountain,"<sup>c</sup> Zau (D<sup>c</sup>w). I say: "I <sup>4</sup>was one beloved of his father, praised of his mother, <sup>5</sup>whom his brothers and sisters loved.

Father's Burial

382. I buried <sup>6</sup>my father the count, Zau, beyond the splendor, beyond the goodliness of any [<sup>7</sup>equal] of his <sup>7</sup>who was in this South. I requested as an honor<sup>d</sup> <sup>8</sup>from the majesty of my lord, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkere (Pepi II), who lives forever, that <sup>9</sup>there be taken<sup>e</sup> a coffin, clothing, and festival perfume <sup>10</sup>for this<sup>f</sup> Zau. His majesty caused <sup>11</sup>that the custodian of the royal domain should bring a coffin of wood, festival perfume, <sup>12</sup>(s<sup>g</sup>l-)oil, clothing, 200 (pieces) of prime (h<sup>h</sup><sup>g</sup>tyw) linen, <sup>13</sup>and of fine southern linen of [<sup>14</sup>—], taken from the double White House <sup>14</sup>of the court for this Zau. Never had it been done <sup>15</sup>to another of his rank.

Son's Burial

383. Now, I caused that I should be buried in the same tomb <sup>16</sup>with this Zau, in order that I might be with him in one place; <sup>17</sup>not, however, because I was not in a position<sup>g</sup> to make a second tomb; but I did this in order that <sup>18</sup>I might see this Zau every day, in order that I might be with him in one place."

<sup>a</sup>Lit.: "in his heart, belonging to the place of his heart."

<sup>b</sup>The rule that this title (hry-d<sup>g</sup>d<sup>g</sup>-c<sup>g</sup>) is to be found only in the Middle Kingdom (Bersheh, II, 4) does not hold. The title arose in the Sixth Dynasty.

<sup>c</sup>Name of the Antaeopolite nome.

<sup>d</sup>The same rare word s<sup>g</sup>r "honor" as in Harkhuf, Letter, § 352, l. 11.

<sup>e</sup>šd; it occurs in precisely the same connection in the Abydos inscription of D<sup>g</sup>w, see § 349, and is the regular word for legally collecting.

<sup>f</sup>The demonstrative is customary in referring to the dead; cf. the deceased Mekhu in the Sebni inscription or the pyramid texts passim.

<sup>g</sup>h<sup>g</sup>r-c; lit.: "having the hand" or "power."

Zau's Prayer

384. The count, commander of a stronghold, sole companion,<sup>19</sup>Zau; I say: "O ye living, who are upon earth, servants like me; those whom the king shall love <sup>20</sup>and their city-god shall favor, are they who shall say: 'A thousand loaves, beer, oxen, geese, clothing for Zau, son of Zau.'"

Zau Succeeds His Father

385. I requested <sup>21</sup>[fro]m [his majesty]<sup>a</sup> that I might fulfil the office of count, of this Zau. His majesty caused that there be issued (lit., made) the decree appointing him<sup>b</sup> count, as an offering which the king gives.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Something similar must have been in the lacuna (nearly one-third line); there is not room for "as an honor from," as in ll. 7, 8.

<sup>b</sup>The change of person is very sudden, but Zau can be referring to no other than himself, from the standpoint of the command issued.

<sup>c</sup>The mode of obtaining the office of h<sup>21</sup>ty-c "count" at this time, points clearly to its source in the royal favor. The designation of the appointment as "an offering which the king gives." the usual term for a mortuary gift of the king, certainly indicates that this term did not originally designate solely a mortuary gift, but must have at first enjoyed a wider application, which in course of time was narrowed to exclusively funerary largesses of the king. [Later: A letter from Eduard Meyer suggests that the rank of count was given to the deceased father after his death as a mortuary honor. This would explain its designation as a mortuary gift, and the pronoun "him."]

REIGN OF ITY

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

386. This is the only inscription of King Ity known. His pyramid mentioned in the inscription has never been found<sup>b</sup> and the place of the king in the series of Pharaohs is uncertain. The inscription is dated in his first year, and records an expedition which was sent to procure the finer stone necessary for the king's pyramid.

387. Year of the first occurrence (of the numbering), fourth month of the first season, day 2.

— Ihy (Yhy); Khufu (Hwf); commander of the army — Yakhetirni (Y<sup>3</sup> h' t yrn(y)).<sup>c</sup>

Came the ship captain, Ipi (Ypy), and Nekuptah (Pth-n-k<sup>3</sup>w) to do the work on the pyramid (called): "Fame-of-Ity" (Yty); together with 200 soldiers and 200 workmen, making<sup>1</sup> 200 (sic!).

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rocks in the Wadi Hammamat; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 115 f.; partially Golénischeff. Hammamat, VII; Sethe, Urkunden, I, 148; see Maspero, Recueil, 17, 56 ff.

<sup>b</sup>See Maspero, ibid., 56 ff.

<sup>c</sup>These names were perhaps later inserted between the date and the following.

REIGN OF IMHOTEP

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTION

388. This unknown king, from whom we have no other documents, sent his eldest son Zaty, who held the office of treasurer of the god, as well as that of general in the army, to the Hammamat quarries to procure a monument, possibly a statue for the king. Zaty left the following record of the enterprise:

389. <sup>1</sup>Commission which the eldest king's-son, the treasurer of the god, commander of the army, Zaty (D<sup>2</sup>ty), called Kenofer (K<sup>2</sup>-n/r) executed.

390. <sup>2</sup>I was at the front of the people (h<sup>2</sup>m) in the day of battle, <sup>3</sup>I controlled the going in the day of attack, by my counsel. <sup>4</sup>I was exalted above multitudes, I made this work of Imhotep<sup>a</sup> <sup>5</sup>with <sup>6</sup>1,000 men of the palace, <sup>7</sup>1,200 'soldiers' and <sup>8</sup>50 '—'. <sup>8</sup>His majesty sent this numerous troop <sup>9</sup>from the court. <sup>10</sup>I made this work while '—' in every '—', while his majesty gave <sup>11</sup>50 oxen and 200 asses<sup>b</sup> every day.

Palace-overseer, Intef.

Scribe of the marine, Mereri.

---

<sup>a</sup>The name is in a cartouche with the determinative of a king.

<sup>b</sup>For the transport of the monument.

THE NINTH AND TENTH DYNASTIES

INSCRIPTIONS OF SIUT<sup>a</sup>

391. Of the five inscribed tombs of Siut, three<sup>b</sup> date from the period of the Ninth and Tenth Dynasties, and form our only contemporary source of information for that obscure epoch. They belonged to three princes of the Lycopolite nome: Tefibi (§§ 393-97), his son Kheti I (§§ 398-404), and another Kheti (II) (§§ 405-14), whose relation to the two others is not clear. These princes as nomarchs all bore the same titles: "Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, superior prophet of Upwawet, lord of Siut." They were the continual friends and supporters of the weak Heracleopolitan kings, forming a buffer state, warding off the attacks of the rebellious Theban princes, who are the ancestors of the Eleventh Dynasty.<sup>c</sup> Unfortunately, they do not mention any of the Thebans against whom they fought, and only one of the Heracleopolitans whom they served—Merikere.

392. The language of these texts is exceedingly obscure and difficult; these hindrances, together with the very <sup>a</sup>In an upper row of three tombs, side by side, high up in the face of the cliffs overlooking the modern city of Assiut (or Siut). First copied by the expedition of Napoleon, they were almost wholly neglected till late in last century, having in the interim been frightfully mutilated (serving as a stone quarry!). Finally, after repeated visits, from 1886 to 1888, Mr. F. Ll. Griffith published a careful text, not only of the difficult original, but, where necessary, also of all existing earlier fragmentary copies (The Inscriptions of Siut and Dêr Rîzeh, London, 1889). Mr. Griffith furnished an account of his edition, and a digest of the content of the texts in the Babylonian and Oriental Record, III, 121-29, 164-68, 174-84, 244-52, where he also gives an exhaustive bibliography. Maspero (Revue critique, II (1889), 410-21) reviewed Griffith's work and gave a very free paraphrase of the texts, some of which is repeated, Dawn, 456-58.

---

<sup>b</sup>For the remaining two, which belong to the Twelfth Dynasty, see §§ 535 ff.

<sup>c</sup>See §§ 415 ff.

fragmentary state of the texts, often make translation quite impossible. The restorations make no claim to reproduce the lost words, but merely indicate the probable connection.

I. INSCRIPTION OF TEFIBI<sup>a</sup>

393. The conflict with the South is here clearer than anywhere else, but unfortunately the unfinished condition of the inscription (see l. 16, n., § 396) breaks all continuity. The content in outline is as follows: Tefibi adjures all passers-by to pray for him (l. 1). He sets forth the beneficence of his rule—a rule without distinction of persons, maintaining the security of all, even if abroad at night (ll. 2–12). Because of his beneficent rule his son, when a child, succeeded him without opposition (ll. 13–15). On his (Tefibi's) first campaign, the southern nomes from Elephantine to an uncertain point on the north were united against him (l. 16). He defeated them first on the west shore, driving them as far as "the fortress of the port of the South" (Abydos? ll. 16–18). He then crossed to the east shore, where he defeated a second army of the enemy (ll. 19–22) and also discomfited a hostile fleet (ll. 23, 24). He thus suppressed rebellion and had opportunity to promote deserving officers (ll. 25–27). The result was widespread respect for his energetic government, prosperity of the temples, and envy of the evil-minded (ll. 36–40).

Address to Passers

394. O ye living! O ye who are upon earth, children who shall be born; those who shall sail down-stream, those who shall sail up-stream, those who shall come in the following of Upwawet, lord of Siut, those who shall pass by this bend,<sup>a</sup> those who shall enter into this tomb, those who shall see that which is in it; as Upwawet, lord of Siut and Anubis, lord of the 'cave', live for you, ye shall pray for the mortuary offering for the prince Tefibi.

<sup>a</sup>Tomb III. The southernmost of the three tombs on the same terrace, north wall east of pillars. Published by Griffith, Sit, 11, 12. See above, § 391, note.

Tefibi's Kind Rule

395. <sup>2</sup>The hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, superior prophet of Upwawet, lord of Siut, Tefibi (Tj-yby), says: ———<sup>b</sup> 3f—<sup>1</sup>. Hearken to me, ye who are to come. I was openhanded to everyone, [— —] ———<sup>b</sup> 4f— —], I was one of excellent plans, one useful to his city, one [—] of face toward a petition, ———<sup>b</sup> 5f— — —] one of open face to the widow. . . . . I was a Nile<sup>c</sup> ———<sup>b</sup> 6f for his people. . . . . 7. . . . .<sup>d</sup> 10When night came, he who slept on the road gave me praise, for he was like a man in his house; the fear of my soldier was his protection. . . . .<sup>13</sup>. Then<sup>e</sup> came my son in my place, the officials were 'under' his 'authority'. He ruled as a child<sup>f</sup> of a cubit (high); the city rejoiced over him, she remembered <sup>14</sup>the good.<sup>g</sup> Because, any noble who shall do good to the people, who shall surpass the virtue of him that begot him, he shall be — <sup>15</sup>blessed in the hereafter, his son shall abide in his father's house, his memory shall be pleasant in the city, his statue shall be glorified and 'carried'<sup>h</sup> by the children of his house.

<sup>a</sup>Used alike of the cliffs or the river.

<sup>b</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>c</sup>Amenhotep IV also calls himself a Nile for his people.

<sup>d</sup>The omissions contain obscure phrases, chiefly referring to Tefibi's kindness to his people.

<sup>e</sup>See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1893, 108.

<sup>f</sup>The text has "person." The stature indicated, "1 cubit," is that of a newborn child, as shown by Papyrus Westcar (X, 10), where the three children are each "of one cubit" at birth. The same statement is made of Khety II (§ 413, l. 21), where it is confirmed by the context, and seems to be a favorite boast of such princes: in Benihasan (Tomb 13), the owner, Khnumhotep, boasts of being one "whose place was advanced while he was a child." The Pharaohs make the same boast.

<sup>g</sup>Meaning the good his father had done, as the following shows.

<sup>h</sup>It shall receive the proper ceremonies and be carried in the festal processions. Cf. the contracts of Hepzefi, §§ 535 ff.

War with the South

396. <sup>16a</sup>The first time that my soldiers fought with the southern<sup>b</sup> nomes, which came together southward as far as Elephantine and northward as far as <sup>16c</sup> ———, [“they smote them”] as far <sup>17</sup>as the southern boundary.<sup>d</sup> <sup>17</sup> — — the west side.<sup>e</sup> When I came to the city,<sup>f</sup> I overthrew [“the foe”] ———<sup>g</sup> [“I drove him”] <sup>18</sup> — as far as the fortress of the port of the South.<sup>h</sup> He gave to me land, while I did not restore his town ———<sup>g</sup> <sup>19</sup> — — I I reached the east side, sailing up-stream; [“there came”] another,<sup>i</sup> like a jackal <sup>19</sup> — — ———<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Lines 16–40 were never finished; the lower third was never cut (my restorations chiefly indicate the probable connection). Moreover, they were plastered over, and a new inscription containing the conventional encomium was painted on the plaster. As the content of this very portion of the text is political, this must have been the motive for effacing it. See Griffith, Babylonian and Oriental Record, III, 128. As the effacement was done before the inscription was finished, it would seem that there was interference from the south during the construction of the tomb.

<sup>b</sup>The word “southern” is broken and not quite certain. It exactly fits the remaining traces as well as the context, and later course of the war.

<sup>c</sup>Maspero reads “Gaou” (Kau), (Revue critique, 1889, II, 416), but wisely adds? The same name occurs at Benihasan (§ 620, note), but cannot be located.

<sup>d</sup>The southern boundary of the Heracleopolitan kings (?), which was then not far north of Abydos; cf. § 423. In this case there would have been an invasion of the Heracleopolitan kingdom by the Thebans, who were then driven out.

<sup>e</sup>A reference to his campaign on the west shore of the river; the east shore follows in l. 19.

<sup>f</sup>This must have been a city on the frontier between the territory of the north and south, for he has just passed “the southern boundary,” and in the next line reaches “the fortress of the port of the South.”

<sup>g</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>h</sup>See Erman (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1891, 120), who suggests that tp ršy is really the south, and šm middle Egypt. This distinction is apparently maintained in these Siut texts, and is clear at this point, where Tefibi drives his enemy as far as the southern (ršy) border of the Northern Kingdom, and then “as far as the fortress of the port of the South (tp ršy).” The northernmost point to which tp ršy is applied is the Thinite nome. Now, the Theban king, Intef (Horus: Wꜥḥ ꜥnḥ), states that he captured all of the Thinite (Abydos) nome, and “opened all her fortresses” (§ 423), using the very word for fortress (ytḥ) employed in l. 18, above. He also made the Aphroditopolite nome (just north of the Thinite nome) “the door of the North” (ibid.). Remembering that Tefibi’s campaign is thus far confined to the west shore, one would suspect that Tefibi’s “port of the South” is Intef’s “door of the North.” All the indications, therefore, point to this region as the southern extremity of Tefibi’s campaign.

<sup>i</sup>With the determinative of a person.

<sup>20</sup>with another army from his confederacy. I went out against him with one —. There was no fear ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>21</sup>He hastened to battle like the [light]; the Lycopolite nome — like a bull going forth ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>22</sup>— forever. I ceased not to fight [to the end [making use<sup>1</sup> of the south wind] as well as the north wind, of the east wind as well as [of the west wind] ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>23</sup>— —]. He fell in the water, his ships ran aground, his army were like bulls, ———<sup>a</sup> [when attacked by wild beasts, and running] <sup>24</sup>with tails to the front.<sup>b</sup> [— —] — — — fire was put ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>25</sup>— — — —] I drove out rebellion by —, by the plan of Upwawet, ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>26</sup>of a mighty bull. When a man did well, [I placed] him at the head of my soldiers ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>27</sup>for his lord.<sup>c</sup> . . . . . ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>36</sup>Heracleopolis. The land was under the fear of my soldiers; no highland was free from fear. If he made ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>37</sup>fire in the southern nomes. He did it as an affair of his land, to equip ———<sup>a</sup>

Conclusion

397. <sup>38</sup>The temples were made to flourish, offerings were made to the gods; the wicked saw it, ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>39</sup>he put not eternity before him, he looked not to the future, he saw evil ———<sup>a</sup> <sup>40</sup>. . . . .

II. INSCRIPTION OF KHETI I<sup>d</sup>

398. Kheti (called I<sup>e</sup> to distinguish him from Kheti II of the next tomb) was the son of Tefibi of the preceding tomb. He inherited the lands and titles of his father, being a nomarch by inheritance from his mother (l. 8). Besides the usual functions of the Assiut nomarchs, he was also

<sup>a</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>b</sup>Of the pursuer.

<sup>c</sup>The following lines, to l. 35, inclusive, are very fragmentary and obscure. In l. 28 there is reference to "the South" ("Oh, speak a word to the South (tp ršy)"). In l. 33 the goddesses "Bast of the South" (B<sup>3</sup> stt nt tp-ršy) and Hereret (Ḥrri) are mentioned, and the following lines (to l. 35, inclusive) consist of epithets in the feminine, referring to one of them. In l. 35 there is reference to Middle Egypt (šm c) and the building of "its fortresses."

<sup>d</sup>In the middle tomb (IV) of the three on the same terrace, on the north wall, opposite the scene of the soldiers with large shields. Text in Griffith, Siut, Pls. 13, 14, 20. See also § 391.

<sup>e</sup>Griffith, Siut, IV, 75; cf. Kheti II's title, § 410.

“military commander of the whole land.” His inscription is of great importance for the inner history of the Heracleopolitan kingdom, but is unfortunately fragmentary and obscure. After some references to Kheti’s services to the king, Merikere (ll. 1-7), and the ancient origin of Kheti’s family (ll. 7-9), it is stated that he has chastised Middle Egypt for the king’s sake (l. 10), a clear indication of insurrection within the Heracleopolitan kingdom. This trouble quelled, Kheti conducts the king up-river, probably to receive the homage of the kingdom, which, including the nobles of Ehnas, was in great fear, as Kheti’s enormous fleet passed up (ll. 10-15). Returning to Ehnas-Heracleopolis, the king is received with acclamation by old and young (ll. 16, 17). Kheti now returns to his home and is commissioned to restore the ancient temple of Upwawet, which, at the present day, lies somewhere beneath the modern buildings of Siut (ll. 17-31). The people lived in peace and security during the remainder of Kheti’s reign (ll. 31-34).

399. Of the first seven lines only the upper portion (from a third to a half line) is preserved. The content was important, but only the merest scraps are now intelligible. They show that the text is an address to the deceased Kheti, of historical import, and are as follows: “————— a stock<sup>a</sup> of ancient time —————<sup>3</sup>. . . . .
King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Merikere (Mry-k<sup>3</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>)
 . . . . . <sup>6</sup>of Heracleopolis. Thou overthrowest
the rebels. . . . . ————— <sup>7</sup>lord of the two regions, beloved of the god, shade of the whole land.” These last epithets (l. 7) refer to the king; and probably Kheti’s services to him in overthrowing the rebels, furnish the connection. The text now becomes more connected, though still very obscure in places.

<sup>a</sup>Referring to the ancient origin of Kheti’s family; see also l. 8.

Kheti's Lineage

400. [Heir]<sup>8</sup> of a ruler, ruler of rulers,<sup>a</sup> son of a ruler, son of the daughter of a ruler, an ancient stock —————<sup>b</sup> [son of] the daughter of a ruler, <sup>9</sup>— of the beginning, a noble [without] an equal. . . . .
<sup>10</sup>. . . . .<sup>c</sup> for thou hast put [fear] in the land, thou hast chastised Middle Egypt for his<sup>d</sup> sake alone.

Services for the King

401. Thou didst convey him up-river, the <sup>11</sup>heaven cleared for him,<sup>e</sup> the whole land was with him, the counts of Middle Egypt, and the great ones of Heracleopolis, the district<sup>f</sup> [of] the queen<sup>g</sup> of the land, who came <sup>12</sup>to repel the evil-doer. The land trembled, Middle Egypt [feared], all the people were in terror, the villages in [panic], <sup>13</sup>fear entered into their limbs. The officials of Pharaoh were (a prey) to fear, the favorites to the terror of Heracleopolis. <sup>14</sup>The land burned in its<sup>h</sup> flame

<sup>a</sup>Griffith (Babylonian and Oriental Record, III, 164) and later Maspero (Revue critique, II [1889], 413) have interpreted this passage as indicating that Kheti was the descendant of five princes. It seems to me there are two convincing objections to this: (1) five princes could be written in Egyptian only by employing the usual construction with the numeral 5, not by repeating the word "prince" (hk) five times! (2) The usual method of indicating a line of descent is the one employed in this very passage, by repeating the paternity of the parent (s s t hk); hence a male descent through five generations of princes would be written (s hk) "son of a ruler," repeated five times. (I have rendered the politically very unprecise title hk by the equally unprecise "ruler;" it is probably synonymous with nomarch in this passage.) Of the 5 hk-signs, the first is genitive after a lost noun preceding, as shown by the surviving n; the second is nomen regens of a genitive construction in which the following plural of hk (written three times as often) is nomen rectum. The last construction, written in the same way with four hk-signs, is found in Sirepowet's tomb (Assuan, de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 185, l. 8), and often with other words, e. g., in the name of Amenhotep IV's queen (njr-njrw with four njr-signs).

<sup>b</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>c</sup>King Merikere's benefits to Kheti are referred to.

<sup>d</sup>The king's sake.

<sup>e</sup>See Erman (Gespräch, 69, 70), who makes the verb transitive: "he cleared the heavens."

<sup>f</sup>Lit.: "(river)-bend" (many different localities are so designated) apparently in apposition with Heracleopolis. See Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1891, 120, and Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, 21, and infra index.

<sup>g</sup>Some protecting goddess.

<sup>h</sup>The pronoun refers to Heracleopolis.

.....<sup>15</sup>..... Never was the front of a fleet brought into Sheshotep, while its rear was still at [—]<sup>1a</sup>.....<sup>16</sup>..... They descended by water and landed at Heracleopolis. The city came, rejoicing over [Ther] lord, the son of her lord; women <sup>17</sup>mingled with men, old men and children.

Old Age

402. <sup>b</sup>The ruler's (hḳꜣ) son, he reached his city, entering into the house of his father. He saw the <sup>18</sup>approach<sup>1</sup> to their house,<sup>c</sup> his sarcophagus, his old age. When a man is in his place (his tomb), the city [— —] <sup>19</sup>of eternity [— —].

Building the Temple

403. Thy city-god loves thee, Tefibi's son, Kheti. He hath <sup>1</sup>presented<sup>1</sup> thee, that he might look to the future in order to <sup>20</sup>restore his temple, in order to raise the ancient walls, the original places of offering, to [—] the venerable ground, <sup>21</sup>[— — —] which Ptah built with his fingers, which Thoth founded, for Upwawet, lord of Siut,<sup>d</sup> <sup>1</sup>by<sup>1</sup> command of the king, <sup>22</sup>the ruler (hḳꜣ) of the Two Lands, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Merikere, to make a monument for the souls of Anubis, the great god; that he (the king) might spend for him (the god) millions of years, that he might repeat Sed Jubilees; <sup>23</sup>under the leadership<sup>e</sup> of the confidant of the king, Tefibi's son, Kheti, great lord of Middle

<sup>a</sup>The reading of this second locality is unfortunately quite uncertain. Maspero reads "Hou" (Revue critique, II (1889), 418). Sheshotep is the modern Shatb (Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 205), just south of Assiut, while Hou is 125 miles farther up-river. It is impossible that the fleet should have been 125 miles long. Moreover, the direction of the fleet's movement (l. 10) is up-river, so that the rear must have been at a place below Sheshotep. The return down-river is narrated in l. 16 following. [Since writing the above, I notice that Maspero (Dawn, 457) has changed "Hou" to "Gebel-Abufodah," which would make the fleet about 30 miles long; but this is a guess like "Hou."]

<sup>b</sup>As the preceding paragraph closes very abruptly, it is possible that the following paragraph contains the words of the rejoicing multitude to the king as he enters the city.

<sup>c</sup>His own approach to the house, meaning the tomb of his ancestors; hence his death.

<sup>d</sup>This "by" would of course not refer to the building by the gods, but to the proposed restoration.

<sup>e</sup>Meaning that the building of the temple is to be under Kheti's leadership.

Egypt. Behold, thy<sup>a</sup> name shall be forever in the temple <sup>24</sup>of Upwawet, thy memory shall be beautiful in the colonnade. Some shall communicate it to others,<sup>b</sup> [—] the future [—] <sup>25</sup>in years, one hundred after another hundred,<sup>c</sup> of added life upon earth; thou shalt (still) be among them that dwell on [earth].<sup>1</sup> . . . . . <sup>31</sup>. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

Peaceful Rule

404. How beautiful is that which happens in thy time, the city is satisfied with thee. That which was concealed from the people, <sup>32</sup>thou hast done it [openly], in order to make gifts to Siut, — by thy plan alone. Every [official] was at his post, <sup>33</sup>there was no one fighting, nor any shooting an arrow. The child was not smitten beside his mother, (nor) the citizen beside his wife. There was no evil-doer <sup>34</sup>in [—], nor any one doing violence against his house [—]. Thy city-god, thy father who loveth thee, [leadeth] thee.

III. INSCRIPTION OF KHETI II<sup>e</sup>

405. Kheti II's relation to the two preceding nomarchs is not quite certain, but the unmolested rule which he enjoyed would seem to indicate that he lived before the war with the Thebans, and hence before Tefibi. His inscription curiously inverts the order of his life, placing his youth last, but does not mention the name of his father.<sup>f</sup> On the death of his maternal grandfather, who was lord of the Lycopolite nome, Kheti's mother ruled until he grew up to succeed to his maternal heritage (ll. 40-25). Meantime, he was educated with the royal children by the king (ll.

<sup>a</sup>Pronoun refers to Kheti.

<sup>b</sup>The text has a dittography of n kt.

<sup>c</sup>See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1893, 113.

<sup>d</sup>The intervening lines contain praise of Kheti as builder of the temple. The text then proceeds to the government of the nome.

<sup>e</sup>In tomb V, the northernmost of the three tombs on the same terrace, in a false door on the back wall (ll. 1-24) and on the south wall, inner half. Text, Griffith, Siut, Pl. 15. See § 391.

<sup>f</sup>On his mother's name, see note on l. 38.

22, 23), and was installed in his nome at an early age (l. 21). His life was peaceful and prosperous, and devoted to the development of the material resources of the nome. He dug a much-needed irrigation canal, conducting the water to land unreached by the inundation (ll. 1-8). He was rich in grain, which he dispensed to the people (ll. 9, 10). He remitted taxes (ll. 10, 11), and his herds greatly multiplied (ll. 11-14). He built in the temple, increased its offerings (ll. 14-16), was a good soldier, and, as military commander of Middle Egypt, he raised a troop (ll. 16-18); like Kheti I, he had a navy (ll. 18, 19). His people and those of Heracleopolis were pleased with his government, and recognized the instruction of a king in it (ll. 23, 24). It is possible that Kheti II became an official of the contemporary Theban king (Eleventh Dynasty) after the triumph of Thebes and the consolidation of the country (see note on l. 38).

406. The inscription opens with the usual titles of the Siut nomarchs,<sup>a</sup> and Kheti states that there is no falsehood in his narrative, but that all which he did was done in the face of the people (ll. 1, 2); and then proceeds:

New Canal

407. I brought a gift for this city, in which there were no families of the Northland, nor people<sup>b</sup> of Middle Egypt (šm);<sup>c</sup> making a monument in ———<sup>c</sup> I substituted a channel of ten cubits.<sup>d</sup> I excavated for it upon the arable land. I equipped a gate<sup>f</sup> for<sup>1</sup> its ———<sup>e</sup> it

<sup>a</sup>See § 391.

<sup>b</sup>The determinative shows that people of some sort are meant, parallel with "families." The remarkable statement perhaps means that no forced labor was employed on the canal, from any part of Egypt composing the Heracleopolitan kingdom, viz., the "Northland" (Delta) and "Middle Egypt."

<sup>c</sup>About one-third line is lost; it doubtless contained some reference to an insufficient canal. Kheti's gift to the city, is a larger canal "of 10 cubits," probably in breadth.

<sup>d</sup>A little over 17 feet.

<sup>e</sup>About one-third line.

in the ground of [—] in one building, free from [—]. I was liberal as to the monument [—] s[—] ———. <sup>a</sup> [I sustained] the life of the city, I made the [—]<sup>b</sup> with grain-food, to give water at [mid]day, <sup>c</sup>to [— —] ———. <sup>a</sup> [I supplied water] in the highland district, I made a water-supply<sup>c</sup> for this city<sup>d</sup> of Middle Egypt in the [mountain],<sup>e</sup> which had not seen water. <sup>7</sup>I secured the borders — — — [—]. I made the elevated land a swamp. I caused the water of the Nile to flood over the ancient [landmarks], <sup>8</sup>I made the arable land — — water. Every neighbor was [supplied with water, and every citizen had] Nile water to his heart's desire; I gave waters to his neighbors, and he was content with them.

Wealth and Generosity

408. <sup>9</sup>I was rich in grain. When the land was in need, I maintained the city with kha<sup>f</sup> and with heket.<sup>f</sup> I allowed <sup>10</sup>the citizen to carry away for himself grain; and his wife, the widow and her son. I remitted <sup>11</sup>all imposts which I found counted by my fathers. I filled the [pastures] with cattle, <sup>12</sup>[every] man had many colors;<sup>g</sup> the cows<sup>h</sup> brought forth twofold, the folds were full of <sup>13</sup>calves. I was kind to the cow, when she said, "It is [—]."<sup>i</sup> I was one rich in bulls <sup>14</sup>— his ox; — — he lived well.

<sup>a</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>b</sup>The determinative is a man. The word itself hsb means "to reckon." Maspero says: "Hobsou (reading the root as hbs) est l'homme qui paie la redevance annuelle, le contribuable" (Revue critique, II (1889), 413, n. 3), and hence renders "sujet," but I cannot find any such usage elsewhere. Furthermore, the grammatical construction is not clear.

<sup>c</sup>The same word (c-mw) is used in enumerating the duties of the vizier (II, 698), among which was care of the water-supply in the whole land.

<sup>d</sup>This means Siut. Maspero (loc. cit., 414, n. 2) calls it Thebes. But šm c in these inscriptions means Middle Egypt, not South; and "this city" in a nomarch's inscription means his own city; see II, 11.

<sup>e</sup>The sign for mountain is certain, but an uncertain sign precedes it; the parallelism with "highland" demands a word like "mountain."

<sup>f</sup>ḥḥ<sup>3</sup> and ḥḥ' t are measures of capacity referring here to grain. See Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology. XIV, 425.

<sup>g</sup>Doubtless referring to breeds of cattle.

<sup>h</sup>The text has "bulls" (!) misread from l. 13, where the word "bulls" occurs with "many" before it, as in this line.

<sup>i</sup>Compare the talking cows in Papyrus d'Orbigny.

Kheti's Monuments

409. I was one rich in monuments of the temple, <sup>15</sup>—————<sup>a</sup> [who 'increased'] that which he found, who repeated offerings. I was a favorite, <sup>16</sup>—————<sup>b</sup>.

His Army

410. I was one strong with the bow, mighty with his sword, <sup>17</sup>great in fear among his neighbors. I made a troop of soldiers —————<sup>a</sup> <sup>18</sup>as commander<sup>c</sup> of Middle Egypt.

His Fleet

411. I had goodly ships, — — — — a favorite of the king <sup>19</sup>when he sailed up-river.<sup>d</sup>

His Tomb

412. I was one 'vigilant' in that which he said; with a 'determined' heart on the evil ['day']. I had a lofty <sup>20</sup>tomb with a wide stair before the chamber.

Kheti's Childhood

413. I was a favorite of the king, a confidant of his princes, his 'exalted ones' <sup>21</sup>before Middle Egypt. He caused that I should rule as a child of a cubit<sup>e</sup> (in height); he advanced my seat as a 'youth'<sup>f</sup>.
<sup>22</sup>He had me instructed in swimming along with the royal children. I was one correct of 'speech', <sup>23</sup>free from 'opposition' to his lord, who brought him up as a child. Siut was satisfied with <sup>24</sup>my administration; Heracleopolis praised god for me. Middle Egypt and the Northland (Delta) said: "It is the instruction of a king."<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>About one-half line.

<sup>b</sup>About two-thirds line.

<sup>c</sup>The title (h<sup>3</sup>-tpy) was also borne by Kheti, son of Tefibi (§ 398), but with the addition "of the whole land."

<sup>d</sup>From Heracleopolis to Siut.

<sup>e</sup>See note, § 395, l. 13.

<sup>f</sup>The phrase is literally "as a hairy one," and the parallelism demands a word like "child" or "youth." It is possibly a reference to the lock of childhood.

<sup>g</sup>The description of Kheti's childhood is now continued in the fragmentary lower ends (mostly less than half the height) of sixteen columns on the south wall (Griffith, p. 11; but on the west wall according to Pl. 15). Originally there were twenty-four columns. The numbering of the lines on Pl. 15 (ll. 25-40) must be reversed, but I have retained it for convenience, beginning with 40 and going back to 25. The probable connection between the fragments is indicated as usual in brackets, but without pretense to even approximate restoration for which the basis is lost. For the interpretation of these lines, see § 405.

Death of Kheti's Grandfather

414. 40Saith [Kheti] ——— 39f.—1 ——— born of 38Si[t]<sup>a</sup> —
 ——— night watch 37 ——— in glorifying his<sup>b</sup> name.

36 ——— [Then mourned<sup>1</sup>] the king himself, all Middle Egypt and the Northland (Delta) 35 ———. The king himself and the counts were gathered together 34 [for the burial. He was interred in his tomb of the<sup>1</sup>] highlands.

Regency of Kheti's Mother

The son of his daughter made his name to live and glorified 33[him].
 ——— [His daughter ruled in<sup>1</sup> Si]ut, the worthy stock<sup>c</sup> of her father 32[reigned in the city<sup>1</sup>] ——— beloved of Upwawet, rejoicing<sup>d</sup> in doing good to her city<sup>1</sup> 31 ——— . . . . .<sup>e</sup> 30 ——— beloved<sup>f</sup> of the king, his favorite.<sup>f</sup> The city was satisfied with that which she said. 29 ——— [She acted as<sup>1</sup>] lord, until her son became strong-armed<sup>g</sup> 28 . . . . . 25 . . . . .<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The Kheti who appears with an unidentified Intef offering homage to Nib-khru-Re=Mentuhotep at Shatt er-Regâl (cf. § 425) is elsewhere an official of the same king (§ 426), and his mother's name is Sitre. This renders it possible that he is the same as the Siut Kheti of our text whose mother was "Si[t] —." Our Kheti II may therefore have become an official of the Theban Mentuhotep II after the subjugation of the North. His tomb and inscriptions would then have been made before the union of North and South, and show no trace of it.

<sup>b</sup>The deceased is the grandfather of Kheti.

<sup>c</sup>With a feminine determinative. <sup>d</sup>Feminine ending.

<sup>e</sup>This obscure phrase occurs also, Griffith, Siut, III, 7.

<sup>f</sup>Feminine. <sup>g</sup>See Sethe, Verbum, § 366, 2.

<sup>h</sup>The remaining fragments are apparently the usual encomium, but too disconnected for translation.

THE ELEVENTH DYNASTY

THE ELEVENTH DYNASTY

415. The plan of these volumes does not include dynastic discussion, but a few reasons must nevertheless be offered for the order of the kings here adopted.<sup>a</sup> Any arrangement of the Eleventh Dynasty must proceed from the fact that the war between the Heracleopolitans and Thebans was still going on in the reign of Horus-Wahenekh-Intef. Now, a great-grandson of a Thinite official of this king erected his tombstone at Abydos in the thirty-third year of Sesostris I (§§ 529 ff.). It was therefore not less than four generations from the reign of the said Intef to the thirty-third year of Sesostris I. Allowing 40 years to the generation, this period was some 160 years in length, of which 53 years fell in the Twelfth Dynasty. The close of this Intef's reign was therefore not later than about 100 years before the accession of the Twelfth Dynasty. The war between Thebes and the North, therefore, continued perhaps as late as 100 years before the accession of the Twelfth Dynasty, and Wahenekh-Intef's accession was not later than 150 years before the end of the Eleventh Dynasty, as we know that he reigned at least 50 years (§ 423).

416. Now, the Turin Papyrus gives 160 years as the length of the Eleventh Dynasty,<sup>b</sup> which corresponds admirably with the above result, viz., that the Eleventh Dynasty must have succeeded the Heracleopolitans at the latest 150 years before the rise of the Twelfth Dynasty. The Turin Papyrus had seven kings in the Eleventh Dynasty, of whom Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep, Senekhkere-Mentuhotep, and a lost name at the end were the last three. The last king, whose name is lost, was, of course, one who ruled the whole country, and whose reign shows no trace of war with the North. Among the remaining kings of the time the only one who clearly fulfils these conditions is Nibtowere-Mentuhotep. The second half of the dynasty is thus fairly certain. Working back from Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep, we find that he was suzerain of a vassal king, Intef (§ 424), giving us then an Intef and three Mentuhoteps as the order of this group, thus:

---

<sup>a</sup>Other indications will be found in connection with the following translations. See also my essay, "New Light on the History of the Eleventh Dynasty," American Journal of Semitic Languages, XXI, 163 ff.

<sup>b</sup>The number is  $160+x$ , the  $x$  not being more than 9 years, of course. That this total refers to the Eleventh Dynasty is perfectly certain; it immediately precedes the heading of the Twelfth Dynasty, and does not reach back to a beginning point behind the Eleventh Dynasty, because there is a summation preceding the seven kings of the Eleventh Dynasty. See Wilkinson, fragg. 61 and 64.

Intef (other names unknown),
 Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep,
 Senekhkere-Mentuhotep,
 Nibtowere-Mentuhotep.

417. The first and second of these three Mentuhoteps reigned not less than 74 years.<sup>a</sup> The third had a prosperous reign, as the inscriptions of his second year in Hammat show; so that the above three Mentuhoteps may easily have reigned in all 80 years, and the whole group more than this. Now, Horus-Wahenekh-Intef was still reigning some 100 years before the end of the dynasty. He therefore did not long precede the above group of four. But he never ruled north of Abydos, for on his tombstone in his fiftieth year he tells of having established his northern frontier there (§ 423), and his treasurer, Thethi, corroborates this (§ 423D). He must therefore have preceded Nibhotep-Mentuhotep, who openly boasts of having gained the Two Lands by conquest. But as Wahenekh-Intef was succeeded by his son, a second Intef, both these Intefs must have preceded Nibhotep-Mentuhotep, forming a group of three which evidently immediately preceded the above group of four. The only other ruler of the period remaining is the nomarch Intef, who of course should head the line;<sup>a</sup> but he was not included in the Turin Papyrus.

<sup>a</sup>See table on p. 197.

418. We thus obtain seven names in the dynasty, as the Turin Papyrus prescribes. As four of these are Mentuhoteps, we have another proof that there were not more than three Intefs in the Eleventh Dynasty.<sup>b</sup> Thus reconstructed, the dynasty is as follows:

	Years
Horus-Wahenekh-Intef I . . . . .	50 <sup>c</sup> (+x)
Horus-Nakhtneb-Tepnefer-Intef II . . . . .	x
Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I . . . . .	x
Intef III (Shatt er-Regâl) <sup>d</sup> . . . . .	x
Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep II . . . . .	46 <sup>e</sup> (+x)
Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III . . . . .	28 <sup>f</sup> (+x)
Nibtowere-Mentuhotep IV . . . . .	2 <sup>g</sup> (+x)
Total . . . . .	126 (+x)

As the Turin Papyrus gives at least 160 years to the dynasty, we have at least 34 years to be distributed among the seven above x's.

<sup>a</sup>As in the erratic Karnak list, Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, I: better in Zwölfte Dynastie; Prisse, Monuments, I; Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, I. The publications are all very inaccurate; Prisse being probably the best. I had my own copy of the original in the Bibliothèque Nationale. That there may have been a series of Theban kings preceding the list of the dynasty as given in the Turin Papyrus, is perhaps probable, in view of the Intefs and the Mentuhotep who follow the nomarch Intef in the Karnak list.

<sup>b</sup>Steindorff has shown that we have contemporary monuments from only three Intefs before the Twelfth Dynasty (besides the nomarch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1895, 77-96). No one without preconceived opinions will appeal to the Karnak list to prove that the Intefs all ruled before the Twelfth Dynasty. If we are to depend on the Karnak list, then Sesostri I ruled immediately before or after the Seventeenth Dynasty! And such absurdities abound in this list. But accepting this preposterous list as usable, we find that it puts Nb-hpr (w)-Re, Intef either just before or just after the Seventeenth Dynasty. Hence Petrie's statement (History of Egypt, I, 5th ed., xxi) that "the ancient lists are entirely against" the above arrangement of the Intefs must be rejected. All the other evidence, moreover, is in favor of dividing the Intefs into two groups.

<sup>c</sup>I, 423.

<sup>d</sup>Eduard Meyer writes me that he would not include this vassal king in the dynasty, but would gain the seven kings demanded by the Turin Papyrus, by inserting a Mentuhotep before Intef I, as in the Karnak list. This would give us five Mentuhoteps, thus: Mentuhotep I, two Intefs and four Mentuhoteps in succession; but the value of the erratic Karnak list seems to me very dubious.

<sup>e</sup>Turin Stela of Meru, No. 1447, Cat. I, 117.

<sup>f</sup>His highest date is the year 8; his successor celebrated a Sed Jubilee in his second year, and must therefore have been appointed crown prince 30 years earlier by Mentuhotep III, who thus reigned at least 28 years.

<sup>g</sup>I, 435.

THE NOMARCH, INTEF

MORTUARY STELA<sup>a</sup>

419. The Karnak list<sup>b</sup> places as first of the Intefs a nomarch, without royal title.<sup>c</sup> He is the founder of the Theban line, and is so recognized by Sesostris I, who dedicated a statue to him in Karnak with the inscription: "The king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere (Sesostris I); he made it as his monument for his father, the hereditary prince (rꜥꜥꜣ ty), Intefo, . . . . . born of Ikuī (Ykwy)."<sup>d</sup> The following mortuary stela probably belonged to him.

420. At the top is a three-line inscription, beginning with the usual mortuary formula, for the benefit of

The hereditary prince, count, great lord of the Theban nome, satisfying the king as keeper of the Door<sup>e</sup> of the South, great pillar of him,<sup>f</sup> who makes his Two Lands<sup>f</sup> to live, superior prophet, . . . . . Intef.

---

<sup>a</sup>Limestone stela, discovered by Mariette, in Draḥ abu-ḥn-Neggah, now in Cairo, Cat. 20009; also published by him in Monuments Divers, 50, b, and p. 16; also Maspero, Guide, pl. and p. 34; Dawn, 115; Petrie, History of Egypt, I, 126.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, I. (See § 417, note.)

<sup>c</sup>The family came from Hermonthis, where they were nomarchs. Inscriptions from the tomb of an Intef, one of these nomarchs, are in Copenhagen and Berlin (No 13272; see Lange, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 34, 25-35, and plate).

<sup>d</sup>Discovered by Legrain, in March, 1899 (Recueil, XXII, 64). The addition of o (ꜥ), "great," is not found in the royal list of Karnak with the name of the Rꜥꜥꜣ ty Intef; but as there is only one rꜥꜥꜣ ty in the Karnak list, the two must be identical.

<sup>e</sup>See Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1887, 35, and Brugsch, ibid., 1884, 93 f. The title continued from the Sixth Dynasty, into Saite times (IV, 995).

<sup>f</sup>This participial epithet is usually applied to Intef, but this is impossible; for Intef, who acknowledges a king in the phrase, "satisfying the king," cannot speak of himself, a mere nomarch, as "making his two lands live." Nor can "two lands," so commonly in parallelism with the title "King of Upper and Lower Egypt," be made to mean the two shores of the river in Intef's nome. Compare, e. g., § 441, l. 8. Šꜥꜥꜣ nḥ-tꜣwy is an epithet, like šꜥꜥꜣ mnḥ-sw, designating the king. It is in excellent parallelism with "king," and indeed serves as king Senekhkere's Horus-name. This Intef therefore ruled before the rebellion against the North, and the "king" referred to is an Heracleopolitan.

REIGN OF HORUS-WAHENEKH-INTEF I

ROYAL TOMB STELA<sup>a</sup>

421. This is the stela referred to in the remarkable passage in the Papyrus Abbott (IV, 514), where it is described as bearing a figure of the king standing with one of his dogs. The name of the dog given in the papyrus, Behka, is still preserved on the stela. It is a Berber name,<sup>b</sup> and the stela accompanies it with a translation into Egyptian. The king stands on the right with his five dogs; before him were seven columns of inscription, of which only the lower half is preserved. The first two lines were occupied with an account of the king's good works for the gods; among these we may discern the following:

I filled his (Amon's) temple with august vases, in order to offer libations. . . . . I built their temples, wrought their stairways, restored their gates, established their divine offerings for all eternity. I 'found' ———.

<sup>a</sup>Lower portion of a large limestone stela, now about 80 cm. high and 130 cm. wide; now in Cairo, No. 20512. It was discovered in 1860, by Mariette, in the brick pyramid of Intef II, at Drah abu-<sup>3</sup>n-Neggah (Thebes). After making an incomplete and inaccurate copy, Mariette left the stela where he found it, to be taken by a fellah, twenty years later, and broken up for use in a sâkieh. Two years later some of the fragments were rescued with much difficulty by Maspero, and installed at Bulâq (now Cairo; cf. Guide du Visiteur, 67, and Mariette, Monuments divers, Texte, 15; Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IV, 193, 194). Apparently no search has ever been made on the spot for the upper portion, already lacking in Mariette's time. His copy was published in Monuments divers, 49 (p. 15 also); another copy by E. de Rougé (Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 161, 162). I have collated these with a careful copy of the original in Schaefer's manuscript of the Cairo catalogue.

<sup>b</sup>On the Berber name of one of these dogs, see Maspero, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, V, 127, and Etudes de mythologie et d'archéologie, III, 331). The others also bore foreign names, and the ancient scribe has appended a translation to each. Daressy (Recueil, XI, 79, 80) found a fifth dog; Basset (Sphinx, I, 87-92) admits a second name as possibly Berber; see also Birch, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IV, 172-86. Finally, Maspero explains another name as Berber (Recueil, XXI, 136).

422. The statement of his good works is followed by a narrative of his conquest of territory on his northern frontier. He does not state against whom he contended, but it is of course against the Heracleopolitans, defended by the princes of Siut (see § 391). It is the only distinct reference in the Eleventh Dynasty inscriptions to the geographical location of the northern enemy in the civil wars which raged between North (Heracleopolis) and South (Thebes) for at least several generations before the overthrow of the Heracleopolitans.

423. <sup>3</sup>———— her northern boundary as far as the nome of Aphroditopolis.<sup>a</sup> I drove in the mooring-stake<sup>b</sup> in the sacred valley, I captured the entire Thinite nome, I opened all her fortresses, I made her the Door of the North.<sup>c</sup>

<sup>4</sup>———— like a flood, great in possessions, like a sea, splendid for the glory of Thebes (nw' t), great for the [— — —] of this land, which I myself have bequeathed to my son,<sup>d</sup> [—] <sup>5</sup>————. There is no lie that has come forth from my mouth, there is no word like that which I have spoken. There was no [violence] for one (dwelling) upon his sandy land, nor —<sup>e</sup> for one in possession of his paternal property, nor — — <sup>6</sup>———— them forever and ever.

Year 50, when this stela was set up [—] by — Horus, Wahenekh (W<sup>3</sup> h-<sup>c</sup> n h), King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Son of Re, In[tef], the great (Yn[tf-]<sup>c</sup>).<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Read the serpent and feather. That this is the proper reading is rendered almost certain by the connected data. King Intef is here speaking of the establishment of his northern boundary. The inscription of Intefoker (§§ 529 ff.) shows that he ruled as far north as Akhmim, which is directly across the river from the nome of Aphroditopolis, and the latter is just north of the Thinite nome.

<sup>b</sup>This simply means "I landed," as in § 612, l. 14; and Papyrus Ebers, 58, 9. Cf. Sethe, Verbum, I, 257.

<sup>c</sup>This is parallel with the phrase "Door of the South" applied to Elephantine. Thus the Aphroditopolite nome under this Intef occupied the same frontier position in the North as the region of the first cataract in the South (see § 396, l. 18, note). I have retained the gender of the pronouns to show this; the Thinite nome is masculine.

<sup>d</sup>This is corroborated by the treasurer Thethi (§ 423G).

<sup>e</sup>Partially broken out; read c h c; it is evidently a synonym of the first word (c r with determinative of bowstring), rendered "violence," with which it is parallel.

<sup>f</sup>This is the proper reading of the name as shown by l. 7, where it occurs as above restored, preceded by the same Horus-name.

REIGN OF HORUS-NAKHTNEB-TEPNEFER-
INTEF II

STELA OF THETHI<sup>a</sup>

423A. This new and important document contains the autobiography of Thethi, the chief treasurer of Intef I and II. It is the first document from the Eleventh Dynasty clearly narrating the succession of the kingship from father to son,<sup>b</sup> and it also places for us the Horus-name of Intef II for the first time.<sup>c</sup> Besides these facts it also gives us the northern and southern boundaries of Intef I's kingdom, although the southern limit given cannot be identified with certainty as yet. The northern boundary is given as Thinis, corroborating Intef I's tomb stela (§ 423); but as Thethi's stela was made after Intef I's death, it is evident that this king never reigned north of that point. The account of Thethi's appointment and duties is also of the greatest interest.

Introduction

423B. '[Live] Horus: Wahenekh; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Son of Re, Intef (I), fashioner of beauty, living like Re forever.

Thethi's Titles

423C. His real and favorite servant, having an advanced seat in the house of his lord, great and favorite official, knowing the private

---

<sup>a</sup>Stela seen by G. C. Pier in the hands of a native dealer in 1903. Mr. Pier was able to make only a hurried copy, which he published in the American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, April, 1905, 159 ff. The text is in places, therefore, still uncertain. The following translation was also first published, ibid., 163 ff.

<sup>b</sup>But see § 423, l. 4.

<sup>c</sup>In my publication of the text, I overlooked the earlier occurrence of this Intef's Horus-name on a stela at Abydos (Mariette, Catalogue d'Abydos, 96, No. 544).

affairs of his lord, following him at all his goings, <sup>1</sup>great<sup>1</sup> hearted <sup>2</sup>— in very truth, head of the grandees of the palace, in charge of the seal in the privy office, one whom his lord trusted more than the grandees, who delighted the heart of Horus (the king) with that which he desired, favorite of his lord, his beloved, chief treasurer, in charge of <sup>3</sup>the privy office which his lord loved, chief treasurer, first under the king, the revered, Thethi (Tty), says:

Career under Intef I

423D. I was one beloved of his lord, his favorite every day. I passed a long period of years under the majesty of my lord, Horus, Wahenekh, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>4</sup>Son of Re, Intef, this land being under his authority up-river as far as <sup>1</sup>Thes<sup>1</sup> and down-river as far as Thinis; while I was his servant, his subject, his real subordinate. He made me great, he advanced my seat, he set me in his <sup>5</sup>confidential office, in his palace because of <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>; the treasury was put in my charge (m c y), under my seal-ring, as one chosen for the sake of every good thing brought to the majesty of my lord, from South and from North at every <sup>1</sup>accounting<sup>1</sup>; for the sake of pleasing (the king) with the tribute of this whole land; because of his apprehension lest <sup>6</sup>this land diminish that which was brought to the majesty of my lord from the sheiks<sup>a</sup> who are in the Red Land; and because of his apprehension lest the highlands diminish. Then he gave this (office) to me, recognizing the excellence of my ability. Then I reported it to him; never was anything lacking <sup>7</sup>therein <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>,<sup>b</sup> because of my great wisdom.

423E. I was one who was a real favorite of his lord, a great and favorite official, the coolness and the warmth in the house of his lord, [<sup>1</sup>to whom<sup>1</sup>] the arms were drooped (in respect) among the grandees, I did not <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1c</sup> behind <sup>8</sup>the two <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>, for which men are hated. I was one loving good, and hating evil, a character beloved in the house of his lord, attending to every procedure according to the <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1d</sup> of the desire of my lord. Now, at every procedure on account of which he (the king) commanded me to arise <sup>9</sup>. . . . .<sup>e</sup> I did not exceed

<sup>a</sup>Compare § 429.

<sup>b</sup>Nt hsf.

<sup>c</sup>Wd, "put, place."

<sup>d</sup>If this is d> dw, "audience-hall," then sm t, "going" (rendered above "procedure"), is literal, viz., "every going to the audience-hall at the desire, etc."

<sup>e</sup>When the king dismissed him, the court arose as he went out. The following dozen obscure words indicate the compliments of the court as Thethi passed out.

the number<sup>a</sup> which he commanded me; I did not put one thing in the place of another<sup>b</sup> [ — — — ]<sup>10</sup> I did not take a thing from a legacy, (but) every procedure was attended to. Now, as for all royal food which the majesty of my lord commanded to give to him, I made for it a list of all that his ka desired; then I rendered it to him; I carried out successfully all their administration; never<sup>11</sup> was a thing lacking therein, because of my great wisdom.

Death of Intef I

423F. I made a barge<sup>c</sup> for the city, and a boat<sup>d</sup> for following my lord.<sup>e</sup> I was counted with the grandees at every time of [ — — ], while I was honored and great. I supplied [myself — ]<sup>12</sup> with my own things, which the majesty of my lord gave to me because he so greatly loved me, (even) Horus, Wahenekh, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Son of Re, Intef (I), living like Re, forever; until he journeyed to his horizon<sup>f</sup> (tomb).

Career under Intef II

423G. Then, when his son assumed his place,<sup>13</sup> (even) Horus, Nakht-neb-Tepnefer, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Son of Re, Intef (II), fashioner of beauty, living like Re, forever, I followed him to all his good seats of pleasure. Never did he [ — — ] therein, because of my great wisdom. He gave me the function<sup>14</sup> which I had in the time of his father, making it to prosper under his majesty, without anything being lacking therein. I passed all my time on earth, as first under the king, his subject; being mighty and great under his majesty. I was one fulfilling his character, whom his lord praised every day.

<sup>a</sup>In treasury business.

<sup>b</sup>Perhaps meaning that in the count he did not substitute less valuable for more valuable things.

<sup>c</sup>Mb. <sup>d</sup>Shy.

<sup>e</sup>One for official use at Thebes, and another for use when the king was on a journey.

<sup>f</sup>This is the brick pyramid-tomb on the western plain of Thebes, containing his mortuary stela (§§ 421, 422); the same tomb which the Ramessid inspectors investigated a thousand years later than this and found uninjured (IV, 514). It has now disappeared.

REIGN OF NIBHOTEP-MENTUHOTEP I

TEMPLE FRAGMENTS FROM GEBELEN<sup>a</sup>

423H. These scanty fragments tell a remarkable story, not yet noticed, as far as I know, in any of the histories. The first block bears the Horus-name of the king, and thus identifies him as Nibhotep-Mentuhotep<sup>b</sup> (I). It represents him smiting an enemy bearing the inscription: "Chief of Tehenu and 1—1." The second block represents the king again smiting the enemy, four in number. The king bears the inscription: "Son of Hathor, Mistress of Dendera, Mentuhotep." The first enemy is without inscription, but represents an Egyptian!<sup>c</sup> The other three are designated as: "Nubians, Asiatics (sttyw), Libyans."<sup>d</sup> Over the whole is the inscription: "Binding the chiefs of the Two Lands, capturing the South and Northland, the highlands and the two regions, the Nine Bows and the Two Lands" (sic!). The king makes no distinction between his victories over foreign foes and his conquest of Egypt itself, and actually places the figure of the conquered Egyptian among those of the barbarians on the temple wall. Mentu-

---

<sup>a</sup>Inscribed blocks, now in Cairo, from a temple of Mentuhotep I at Gebelen, which had been rebuilt into a Ptolemaic temple wall. They have been very inaccurately published by Daressy (Recueil, XIV, 26, and XVI, 42); much better by Frazer (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 409, Pl. XV). Fortunately, I also found Erman's copy of them among the Lexicon manuscripts.

<sup>b</sup>The Intef-custom of putting "Son of Re" within the cartouche is observable here.

<sup>c</sup>Overlooked by Daressy; and seemingly not identified by Frazer.

<sup>d</sup>Of these three, the first two are the same in appearance; the Libyan as usual wears a feather. They symbolize the foes of Egypt on south, east, and west, in harmony with the same king's inscription on the Island of Konosso (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 150, b = de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 73, 44) which states: "all countries are beneath his feet."

hotep I therefore acquired the land of Egypt by conquest, and made no effort to conceal the source of his title by pretense to legitimacy. It was evidently this conquest which overthrew the Heracleopolitans of the Tenth Dynasty. Hence the reign of Mentuhotep I marks the conclusion of the war with the North. The place of his reign is clearly after Intef II, and before the last three Mentuhoteps who controlled the whole country.<sup>a</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Schaefer states that similar representations were found by Borchardt in the temple of Nuserre at Abusir. The conception may therefore be more general than I have supposed above. See also Papyrus Anastasi II, II, 7, for similar statements concerning Ramses II.

REIGNS OF INTEF III AND NIBKHRURE- MENTUHOTEP II

RELIEFS NEAR ASSUAN

424. The Intef whom we have called the third, appears in no other monuments which can be identified as his, because we do not know his other names. He can hardly be the same as the preceding Intef II, from whom he is separated by Mentuhotep I. He was obliged to give way to another member of the family, Mentuhotep II, who permitted him to reign as a vassal.

425. The most important of Mentuhotep II's monuments<sup>a</sup> is the relief on the rocks at Shatt er-Regâl, near Assuan,<sup>b</sup> where, accompanied by his mother, a lady not of royal lineage, he receives the homage of this vassal, King Intef, who is ushered into the royal presence by Mentuhotep II's chief treasurer, Kheti. This Kheti was an important officer, who appears again on the rocks near Assuan in the presence of Mentuhotep II, with the following inscription:<sup>c</sup>

426. Year 41,<sup>d</sup> under (the majesty of) Nibkhrure (Nb-ḥrw-R), came the wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, chief treasurer, Kheti, born of Sitre,<sup>e</sup> triumphant; and ships to Wawat 𓏏 — — — 𓏏.

---

<sup>a</sup>See list, Maspero, Dawn, 462, n. 1.

<sup>b</sup>Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1881, 99, 100; Petrie, Season in Egypt, XVI, 489; not in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments; Dawn, 463.

<sup>c</sup>Petrie, Season in Egypt, VIII, No. 213. I had also a photograph, kindly loaned me by Professor Petrie.

<sup>d</sup>His highest date, "year 46," is on the tablet of Meru at Turin (No. 1447, Catalogue Turin, I, 117).

<sup>e</sup>This Kheti may be the same as Kheti II at Assiut. See § 405, and § 414, l. 38, note.

This was doubtless an expedition against the Nubians of Wawat. Mentuhotep II's inscriptions are elsewhere not infrequent, but contain only a word or two, chiefly his titles. His appearance on the monuments of later generations is such as to show that he was regarded as the first great king of the Theban line.

REIGN OF SENEKHKERE-MENTUHOTEP III

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTION OF HENU<sup>a</sup>

427. As the only document of Mentuhotep III, this inscription is of great historical importance. The lists of Sakkara and Abydos show him as the immediate predecessor of the Twelfth Dynasty and the successor of the powerful Mentuhotep II; but the Turin Papyrus has after his, a lost name belonging to the last king of the dynasty. Mentuhotep III's minister, Henu, drew men for this Hammamat expedition from territory between Oxyrrhyncus and Gebelen (l. 10), which shows that practically all of Egypt above the Delta was under this king's rule. The Delta was also certainly subject to Senekhkere, for Henu calls himself (l. 8) one "who quells the Hau-nebu," the peoples of the distant north in the Mediterranean, who could only be reached in the Delta.

Introduction

428. <sup>1</sup>Year 8, first month of the third season (ninth month), day 3; <sup>2</sup>his real favorite servant, who does all that he praises every day, wearer of the royal seal, [sole] com[panion], — overseer of that which is and that which is not, overseer of the temples, overseer of the granary and White House, <sup>3</sup>overseer of horn and hoof, chief of the six courts of justice, high-voiced in proclaiming the name of the king on the day of warding off [—] who judges the prisoner according to his desert. . . . .
. . . . . <sup>7</sup>. . . . .<sup>b</sup> Satisfying the heart of the king as keeper of the Door of the South; over the <sup>8</sup>administration of the nomes of the South, chief treasurer . . . . . who quells (s'bdš) the Haunebu (H<sup>2</sup>-nbw), to whom the Two Lands come bowing down, to whom every office reports; wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, <sup>9</sup>the steward, Henu says:

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rocks in the Wadi Hammamat. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 150, a; better, Golénischeff, Hammamat, XV–XVII. For old literature, see Maspero, Dawn, 495, n. 1. I had also a collation of the Berlin squeeze by Mr. Alan Gardiner, which he kindly permitted me to use.

<sup>b</sup>The omitted lines contain similar but exaggerated epithets indicating Henu's high rank and great power; but no formal titles; omissions of similar character follow.

Preparation for the Expedition

429. [My lord, life, prosperity],<sup>a</sup> health! sent me to dispatch a ship to Punt to bring for him fresh<sup>b</sup> myrrh from the sheiks over the Red Land, by reason of the fear of him in the highlands. Then I went<sup>c</sup> forth from Koptos <sup>10</sup>upon the road, which his majesty commanded me. There was with me an army of the South from —<sup>d</sup> of the Oxyrrhyncus nome, the beginning thereof<sup>e</sup> as far as Gebelen; the end thereof as far as [—]<sup>f</sup>; every office of the king's house, those who were in town and field, united, came after me. The army [—] cleared the way <sup>11</sup>before, overthrowing those hostile toward the king, the hunters and the children of the highlands<sup>g</sup> were posted as the protection of my limbs. Every official body of his majesty was placed under my authority. They reported messengers to me, as one alone commanding, to whom many hearken.

Departure and Provisions

430. I went forth with an army of 3,000 men. <sup>12</sup>I made the road a river, and the Red Land (desert) a stretch of field,<sup>h</sup> for I gave a leathern bottle, a carrying pole (sšs), 2 jars<sup>i</sup> of water and 20 loaves to each one among them every day.<sup>j</sup> The asses were laden with sandals [— — —].

<sup>a</sup>Restored from Hammamat inscription of Amenemhet (vizier), § 446, l. 7 Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149. e, l. 7.

<sup>b</sup>Read w>g.

<sup>c</sup>No lacuna as in Lepsius, Denkmäler.

<sup>e</sup>Read š>ym.

<sup>d</sup>See same phrase, § 442, l. 13.

<sup>f</sup>Read š>bt.

<sup>g</sup>This passage indicates a campaign before the expedition, in order to clear the country of the Troglodytes.

<sup>h</sup>See a similar statement by the vizier Amenemhet (§ 447, l. 10). The same rare phrase "stretch or tract of field" (c>d) occurs also in Sinuhe (Berlin, ll. 9, 10).

<sup>i</sup>Read gš later dš.

<sup>j</sup>The loaves are small like the German "Brödchen." The "every day" doubtless applies only to the last two articles, the rest being intended for carrying the rations. At the rate of 60,000 loaves a day, this expedition (which could not have lasted less than a month) consumed 1,800,000 loaves, which they must have brought with them from Coptos. Water skins could be replenished at the quarries. See the elaborate arrangements of Ramses IV for provisioning his expedition (IV, 467).

Wells Dug

431. Now, I made 12 wells<sup>a</sup> in the bush, <sup>13</sup>and two wells in Idehet (Yd<sup>2</sup>ht), 20 <sup>1</sup>square cubits<sup>b</sup> in one, and 31 <sup>1</sup>square cubits<sup>b</sup> in the other. I made another in Iheteb (Y<sup>2</sup>htb), 20 by 20 cubits on each side [— — — —].

Ship Built and Sent

432. Then I reached the (Red) Sea; then I made this ship, and I dispatched it<sup>c</sup> with everything, when I had made for it a great oblation of cattle, bulls and <sup>14</sup>ibexes.

Return and Quarrying at Hammamat

433. Now, after my return from the (Red) Sea, I executed the command of his majesty, and I brought for him all the gifts, which I had found in the regions of God's-Land. I returned through the <sup>1</sup>valley<sup>d</sup> of Hammamat, I brought for him august blocks for statues belonging to the temple. Never was brought down the like thereof for the king's court; never <sup>15</sup>was done the like of this by any king's-confidant sent out since the time of the god. I did this for the majesty of my lord because he so much loved me. . . . .<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Mr. Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 420), has read the sign before 12 as a measure of area; giving "a well of 12 — ?" As this would leave the word "well" without either determinative or feminine ending, it is improbable. The sign in question is more probably a part of the word for well (nm), giving *hnm*t as usual.

<sup>b</sup>See Mr. Griffith, ibid.

<sup>c</sup>Henu only equipped and dispatched the ship, but did not accompany it to Punt; he then returned to Egypt by way of Hammamat (l. 14).

<sup>d</sup>Possibly W<sup>2</sup>g, another land.

<sup>e</sup>Further asseverations of the king's favor follow. The same obscure phrases also Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, e, l. 13 = Golénischeff, Hammamat, XIII l. 13.

REIGN OF NIBTOWERE-MENTUHOTEP IV

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

434. These are among the most important of the Hammamat inscriptions. Besides their unusual archæological interest, they throw great light on the reign of Nibtowere-Mentuhotep (IV), from whom we have no other inscriptional material. They show clearly that the wars with the North (Heracleopolis), had long ceased, and that the North was now united under his rule; for he had an army of 3,000 men from the Delta to transport the lid block of his sarcophagus to Egypt (§ 453, l. 21; similar indications in § 451, 3, ll. 8-10). The only place that he can have held in the series of Eleventh Dynasty kings is therefore at the end of that dynasty. The place of Mentuhotep II and III is certain from the Turin Papyrus. Our Mentuhotep cannot precede Mentuhotep II, who supplanted an Intef; nor does the Turin Papyrus permit him to follow Mentuhotep II. The only place open after the close of the war with the North is at the end of the dynasty after Mentuhotep III, where the Turin Papyrus shows a lost name.

I. THE FIRST WONDER<sup>b</sup>

435. A relief shows the king offering wine before Min of Coptos; behind the king are the words: "First occurrence of the Sed Jubilee; at the top the date: Year 2,<sup>a</sup> second month of the first season (second month), day 3.”

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rock-walls of the Wadi Hammamat. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, c to g; Golénisheff, Hammamat, X-XV; and partially in the manuscripts of Nestor l'Hôte in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. I had also collations of the Berlin squeezes by Mr. Alan Gardiner, of which he very kindly gave me the use.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, c = Golénisheff, Hammamat, X. Copy in manuscript of Nestor l'Hôte; translated by Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1891, 60.

436. Then the following:

<sup>1</sup>This wonder which happened to his majesty: that the beasts<sup>b</sup> of the <sup>2</sup>highlands came down to him; there came a gazelle great with young, going with her face toward the people before her, <sup>3</sup>while her eyes looked <sup>1</sup>backward<sup>1</sup>; (but) she did not turn back, until she arrived at this august mountain,<sup>4</sup>at this block, it being still in its place, (intended) for<sup>c</sup> this lid of this sarcophagus. She dropped her young upon it while this army of <sup>5</sup>the king was looking. Then they cut off her neck <sup>1</sup>before<sup>1d</sup> it (the block) and brought fire. <sup>6</sup>It descended in safety.<sup>e</sup>

437. Now, it was the majesty of this august god, <sup>7</sup>lord of the highlands, who gave the offering (m<sup>2c</sup>) to his son, Nibtowere (Nb-t<sup>2</sup>wy-R<sup>c</sup>), Mentuhotep IV, living forever, in order that his heart might be joyful, that he might <sup>8</sup>live upon his throne forever and forever, that he might celebrate millions of Sed Jubilees.

438. <sup>9</sup>The hereditary<sup>f</sup> prince, count, governor of the city and vizier, chief of all nobles of judicial office, supervisor of that which heaven gives, the earth creates, and the Nile brings, supervisor of everything in this whole land, the vizier, Amenemhet.

II. THE OFFICIAL TABLET<sup>g</sup>

439. The above prodigy, which doubtless occurred soon after their arrival, found record twelve days before the official record of the expedition, which is as follows:

<sup>a</sup>This king was therefore nominated as crown prince 28 years before his father's death, as he celebrates his 30-years' jubilee in his second year. Thus Mentuhotep III reigned at least 28 years.

<sup>b</sup>Suggested by Gardiner; Erman: "Gebirgs (arbeiter)."

<sup>c</sup>Undoubtedly this explanation of Erman is correct.

<sup>d</sup>Read hnt-hrj? l'Hôte shows a šms-sign before hr'j; and Gardiner saw a similar sign. The soldiers sacrificed the gazelle upon the block.

<sup>e</sup>That is, the block reached Egypt in safety.

<sup>f</sup>The leader of the expedition here adds his name and titles. A double line separates them from the king's inscription above them.

<sup>g</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, d=Golénischeff, Hammamat, XI.

Date

440. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, second month of the first season, day 15, <sup>2</sup>(of) Nibtowere-Mentuhotep<sup>a</sup> (IV) living forever.

Erection of Stela

441. <sup>3</sup>His majesty commanded to erect<sup>b</sup> this stela to his father Min, lord of the highlands in this <sup>4</sup>august, primeval mountain, . . . . .
<sup>5</sup>. . . . .<sup>6</sup>. . . . .<sup>c</sup> in order that his ka may be satisfied and that the god may [—] in his desire, as <sup>7</sup>does a king who is upon the great throne, first in thrones; enduring in monuments, excellent god, lord of joy, <sup>8</sup>mighty in fear, great in love, heir of Horus in his Two Lands, whom <sup>9</sup>the divine Isis, Min, and Mut, the great sorceress reared for the dominion <sup>10</sup>of the two regions of Horus, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nibtowere (Mentuhotep IV), living like Re, forever; <sup>11</sup>he says:

Dispatch of Expedition

442. My majesty sent forth the hereditary prince, governor of the city and vizier, chief of <sup>12</sup>works, favorite of the king, Amenemhet, with an army of 10,000<sup>d</sup> men <sup>13</sup>from the southern nomes, Middle<sup>e</sup> Egypt, and the [—]<sup>f</sup> of the Oxyrrhyncus <sup>14</sup>nome; to bring for me an august block of the pure costly stone which is in this mountain, <sup>15</sup>whose<sup>g</sup> excellent things<sup>1</sup> Min makes; for a sarcophagus, an eternal memorial, and for monuments <sup>16</sup>in the temples of Middle Egypt,<sup>h</sup> according as a king over the Two Lands sends <sup>17</sup>to bring for himself the desire of his heart, from the highlands of his father Min.

<sup>a</sup>Full five-name titulary.

<sup>b</sup>The word "erect" (lit., "cause to stand") is here loosely used from habit, although the inscription is cut on a natural wall of rock, which could not have been "erected."

<sup>c</sup>Eulogistic epithets of the god.

<sup>d</sup>Gardiner gives the sign as certain; Golénischeff also has apparently a finger (= 10,000); both give the top pointing wrong, but this is a peculiarity of the Hammamat inscriptions (cf. Henu, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 150, a, l. 7, thrice!) and is only one of many instances of the influence of the hieratic in these texts. This peculiarity occurs frequently also in the Assiut texts of the same period. Cf. the 8,368 men of a later expedition, IV, 466.

<sup>e</sup>Šm c' w, perhaps "South."

<sup>f</sup>Hnty written only with the nose; determinative house.

<sup>g</sup>Referring to "stone" (feminine). <sup>h</sup>Šm c' w, perhaps "South."

Dedication

443. He made (it) as his monument for his father Min of Koptos, lord of the highlands, head of the Troglodytes, in order that he (the king) might celebrate very many [Sed Jubilees], living like Re, forever.<sup>a</sup>

III. THE COMMANDER'S TABLET<sup>b</sup>

444. On the same day, Amenemhet, the commander of the expedition, engraved his own record of the achievement, as follows:

Date and Introduction

445. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, second month of the first season, day 15. Royal commission, executed by the hereditary prince, count, governor of the city, chief judge, favorite of the king, chief of works, distinguished in his office, great in his rank, with advanced place in <sup>3</sup>the house of his lord, commanding the official body, chief of the six courts of justice, judging the people (p<sup>c</sup>·t) and the inhabitants (r<sup>h</sup>y·t), and hearing<sup>1</sup> causes; to whom the great come bowing down, <sup>4</sup>and the whole land, prone upon the belly; whose offices his lord advanced; his favorite, as keeper of the Door of the South; conducting for him millions of the inhabitants (r<sup>h</sup>y·t) to do for him the desire of his heart <sup>5</sup>toward his monuments, enduring on earth; magnate of the King of Upper Egypt, great one of the King of Lower Egypt, conductor of the palace, [— —] in stretching the measuring-cord; judging without partiality, governor of the whole South, to whom is reported <sup>6</sup>that which is and that which is not; conducting the administration of the Lord of the Two Lands; <sup>1</sup>zealous<sup>1</sup> of heart upon a royal commission; commander of those that command, conductor of overseers; the vizier of the king, at his audiences, Amenemhet, <sup>7</sup>says:

Choice of Amenemhet

446. My lord, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nibtowere (Nb-t<sup>3</sup>wy-R<sup>c</sup>, Mentuhotep IV) living forever, sent me, as one sending, in whom are divine members; to establish his monument in <sup>8</sup>this land. He chose me before his city, I was preferred before his court.

<sup>a</sup>There is an appendix here of the twenty-seventh or twenty-eighth day, which is the latest date in the series; it is translated at the end (§§ 452, 453).

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, e = Golénischeff, Hammamat, XII, XIII; manuscripts of Nestor l'Hôte.

Personnel of Expedition

447. Now, his majesty commanded that there go forth to this august highland <sup>a</sup>an army with me, men of the choicest of the whole land: miners, artificers, quarrymen, artists, draughtsmen, stonecutters, gold-workers<sup>l</sup>, <sup>10</sup>treasurers of Pharaoh, of every department of the White House, and every office of the king's-house, united behind me. I made the highlands a river, and the upper valleys <sup>11</sup>a water-way.<sup>a</sup>

Return with Sarcophagus

448. I brought for him a sarcophagus, an eternal memorial, an everlasting reminder. Never descended its like in this highland since the time of the god. <sup>12</sup>My soldiers descended without loss; not a man perished, not a troop was missing, not an ass died, not a workman was enfeebled. It happened for the majesty of my lord <sup>13</sup>as a distinction, which Min wrought for him because he so much loved him, that his ka might endure upon the great throne in the kingdom of the two regions of Horus. <sup>14</sup>He made (it) as something greater than it.<sup>b</sup> I am his favorite servant, who does all that he praises every day.

IV. THE SECOND WONDER<sup>c</sup>

449. Eight days after the erection of the two preceding records, a second wonder occurred, which was immediately recorded on the rocks, as follows:

Date

450. <sup>1</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nibtowere (Nb-t<sup>3</sup>wy-R<sup>c</sup>, Mentuhotep IV) who liveth forever, born of the king's mother, Imi (Ymy), second month of the first season, day 23.

<sup>a</sup>Referring to the desert march. See the similar, but more explicit, statement of Henu on the same march, § 430, l. 12. According to the figures given there, this expedition consumed 200,000 loaves a day! (See note, ibid.)

<sup>b</sup>Grammatically, the sentence is clear, but its meaning? The same phrase in Henu, l. 16.

<sup>c</sup>Golénischeff, Hammamat, XIV=Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149 f.

Rain and a Well

451. One set<sup>a</sup> to work <sup>2</sup>in this mountain on the 'lid' block<sup>b</sup> of the sarcophagus. The wonder was repeated, rain was made, the forms of this god appeared, <sup>3</sup>his fame was shown to men, the highland was made a lake,<sup>c</sup> the water went to the 'margin' of the stone,<sup>d</sup> a well was found in the midst of the valley, <sup>4</sup>10 cubits by 10 cubits on its every side, filled with fresh water, to its edge, undefiled, kept pure and cleansed from gazelles, concealed <sup>6</sup>from Troglodyte barbarians. Soldiers of old, and kings who had lived aforetime, went out and returned by its side, no eye had seen it, the face of man had not fallen upon it, (but) to his majesty himself it was revealed. . . . .<sup>8</sup>. . . . .<sup>e</sup> Those who were in Egypt (T<sup>3</sup>-mry) heard it, <sup>9</sup>the people who were in Egypt (Km·t), South and Northland (Delta),<sup>f</sup> they bowed their heads to the ground, <sup>10</sup>they praised the goodness of his majesty forever and ever.

V. COMPLETION OF THE WORK <sup>g</sup>

452. On the twenty-eighth day of the month the work was completed, and the following appendix was added to the king's official stela:

453. <sup>19</sup>Day 28. The lid of this sarcophagus descended, being a block 4 cubits, by 8 cubits, by 2 cubits,<sup>h</sup> <sup>20</sup>on coming forth from the work. Cattle were slaughtered, goats were slain, incense was put <sup>21</sup>on the fire. Behold, an army of 3,000 sailors of the nomes of the Northland (Delta) followed it in safety to Egypt.

<sup>a</sup>Lit.: "laying the hand on the work." The form is an infinitive, the same construction continuing to the end of l. 5.

<sup>b</sup>I am not quite certain that this rendering is correct; it is lit.: "laid or set block of the sarcophagus."

<sup>c</sup>Water in the highland was always remarkable; compare Kheti's feat (§ 407) who "made the elevated land a swamp" by means of a canal.

<sup>d</sup>Might also be "lake."

<sup>e</sup>Obscure references to the discovery as a favor to the king.

<sup>f</sup>It is clear that Nibtowere governs all Egypt.

<sup>g</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, d=Golénischeff, Hammamat, XI.

<sup>h</sup>About 6 feet, 9 inches wide, 13 feet, 9 inches long, and 3 feet, 5 inches thick.

TABLET OF SENEKH<sup>a</sup>

454. This tablet does not belong to the same expedition as the preceding, but it narrates the attempts to settle with people the desert stations in Hammamat, and along the road from Coptos to the Red Sea.

455. Nibtowere (Mentuhotep IV), living forever. Commander of troops in the highlands, steward in Egypt, commander of [—] on the river, Senekh (S<sup>c</sup>nh), says:

456. I was commander of the troops of this entire land in this highland, equipped with water skins<sup>b</sup> (šdw), [baskets,<sup>1</sup> with bread, beer, and every fresh vegetable of the South. I made its valleys green, and its heights pools of water; settled with children throughout, southward to Thau (T<sup>3</sup>cw) and northward to Menet-Khufu (Mn<sup>c</sup>t-Hfw). I went forth to the sea (Red Sea), I hunted adults, I hunted cattle. I went forth to this highland with 60 people of years, and 70 young ones of the children<sup>c</sup> of one (woman). I did all correctly for Nibtowere (Mentuhotep IV), living forever.

STELA OF ETI<sup>d</sup>

457. This biography of an active official is of interest as showing the agricultural and industrial conditions in the Middle Kingdom, when the skilful administration of resources by the governing princes was necessary to prevent a famine. Eti was so successful in this respect that he even conveyed surplus grain to neighboring towns, and Thebes, sent to him for supplies.

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rocks at Wadi Hammamat; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, g; and Newberry, Beni Hasan, II, 18 (where the translation is misleading). I had also a collation of the Berlin squeeze, kindly loaned to me by Mr. Alan H. Gardiner.

<sup>b</sup>Gardiner.

<sup>c</sup>Or: "I went forth to this desert as a man of 60 years, and 70 little children, the offspring of one (woman);" "offspring" or "children" (ms'w) is of course used in sense of "descendants."

<sup>d</sup>Limestone stela (0.47 m. by 0.75 m.) from Gebelên, now in Cairo, Catalogue, 20001; also published by Daressy, Recueil, XIV, 21.

458. An interesting reference in ll. 7, 8, where Eti states, “I followed my great lord, I followed my small lord,” may possibly indicate that we are to refer this document to the early Eleventh Dynasty, when the Theban princes ruled above Thebes, but were not yet kings. The powerful Theban prince would then be Eti’s “great lord,” and the local nomarch his “small lord.” In accordance with this, his field of activity did not extend below Thebes.

459. <sup>1</sup>The assistant treasurer Eti<sup>a</sup> (Yty); he says:

“I was an excellent citizen (nds), achieving with his strength, the great pillar <sup>2</sup>in the nome of Thebes, Nehebkauf<sup>b</sup> in the upper country (hnty·t). I sustained (s·c·nh) <sup>3</sup>Gebelên<sup>c</sup> during unfruitful years, there being 400 men <sup>4</sup>in distress<sup>1</sup>. <sup>4</sup>But I took not the daughter of a man, I took not his field. I made ten herds of goats, <sup>5</sup>with people in charge of each herd; I made two herds of cattle and a herd of asses. I raised all (kinds of) small cattle. I made 30 ships, (then) <sup>6</sup>30 other ships, and I brought grain (rsy) for Eni (Yny)<sup>d</sup> and Hefat<sup>e</sup> (Hj·t), after Gebelên was sustained. The nome of Thebes <sup>7</sup>went up-stream.<sup>f</sup> Never <sup>8</sup>did one below or above Gebelên bring to another district.<sup>g</sup> I followed <sup>8</sup>my great lord, I followed my small lord, and nothing was lost therein. I built a house <sup>9</sup>—<sup>1</sup>, filled with every luxury. The people said: “He is innocent of violence to another.”

His beloved eldest son,<sup>h</sup>— made it for him.

<sup>a</sup>He was also “wearer of the royal seal, and sole companion.”

<sup>b</sup>An uncertain epithet, “who controls his ka’s,” also applied to a well-known mortuary god.

<sup>c</sup>Yw-mytrw.

<sup>d</sup>Eni is probably Esneh (Yny·t).

<sup>e</sup>Tuphium. Same as the Ophieion of the Cornelius Gallus inscription at Philae; see Sethe, Sitzungsberichte der Berliner Akademie, 1896, 482; it is located on the east bank of the Nile, between Thebes and Hermonthis.

<sup>f</sup>Probably for supplies.

<sup>g</sup>Or: “never did Gebelên send down-stream or up-stream (‘dy<sup>1</sup> hd hnt) to another district” (namely, to procure supplies).

<sup>h</sup>The name of the son is lacking, but one surviving sign would indicate that it was also Yty.

THE TWELFTH DYNASTY

CHRONOLOGY OF THE TWELFTH DYNASTY

460. As the chronology of the Twelfth Dynasty is more fully and accurately known to us than that of any dynasty in or before the Empire, it has seemed necessary to insert a statement of it, with a reconstruction based on the latest data from the monuments. The contemporary monuments and the Turin Papyrus enable us to make the following table<sup>a</sup> of the dynasty (excluding coregencies):

Amenemhet I . . . . .	20 <sup>b</sup> years
(10 years more with his son) <sup>c</sup>
Sesostris I . . . . .	42 <sup>d</sup> "
(at least 3 years more with his son) <sup>e</sup>
Amenemhet II . . . . .	32 <sup>f</sup> "
(at least 3 years more with his son) <sup>f</sup>
Sesostris II . . . . .	19 <sup>g</sup> "
Sesostris III . . . . .	38 <sup>h</sup> "
(coregency of uncertain length with son)
Amenemhet III . . . . .	48 <sup>i</sup> "
(coregency of uncertain length with his son) <sup>j</sup>
Amenemhet IV . . . . .	9 y., 3 m., 27 d. <sup>k</sup>
Sebeknefrure . . . . .	3 y., 10 m., 24 d. <sup>k</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 41, 38 ff.

<sup>b</sup>The stela of Intef in Cairo bears the double date: "Year 30 of Amenemhet I, Year 10 of Sesostris I" (Mariette, Abydos, II, 22 = Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, VIII = Rougé, Album photographique, No. 146; = Mariette, Catalogue général d'Abydos, 104, No. 558).

<sup>c</sup>Amenemhet I died in the thirtieth year of his reign. See Tale of Sinuhe (§ 491).

<sup>d</sup>The stela of Upwaweto at Leyden (V., 4) bears the double date: "Year 44 of Sesostris I = Year 2 of Amenemhet II" (Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, Pl. 10; Lepsius, Zwölfte Dynastie, II, No. 4; also my own photograph of the original; and the Turin Papyrus gives him 45 years, so that he must have ruled 3 years with his son.

<sup>e</sup>On the stela of Simontu (§ 594), Sesostris I is still living in the third year of Amenemhet II.

<sup>f</sup>The inscription of Hapu at Assuan (§ 614).

<sup>g</sup>Kahun papyri of the second find, fragment transliterated by Borchardt and distributed in private copies at the Congress of Orientalists, Rome, 1899.

<sup>h</sup>The highest date on the monuments is year 33 (Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, 85). Sethe's reconstruction of the Turin Papyrus proves that 38 is to be restored.

<sup>i</sup>The highest date is year 46 (ibid., 86); 48 is certain from Sethe's reconstruction.

<sup>j</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, 10; Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, 9; its length is unknown.

<sup>k</sup>Turin Papyrus, see above.

461. The Turin Papyrus gives 213 years, 1 month, and 17 days, as the total length of the dynasty.

The Sothis date in the Kahun Papyri enables us to establish the date of the accession of Amenemhet I as 2000 B. C.<sup>a</sup>

462. We may then construct the following table:<sup>b</sup>

	Length	Date B. C.	Coregencies
Amenemhet I. . . . .	30 years	2000-1970	{ 2000-1980 alone 1980-1970 with his son 1980-1970 with his father
Sesostris I. . . . .	45 "	1980-1935
Amenemhet II. . . . .	35 "	1938-1903	{ 1970-1938 alone 1938-1935 with his son 1938-1935 with his father 1935-1906 alone 1906-1903 with his son 1906-1903 with his father
Sesostris II. . . . .	19 "	1906-1887
Sesostris III. . . . .	38 "	1887-1849	{ 1903-1887 alone Uncertain period with son Uncertain period with father <sup>c</sup>
Amenemhet III. . . . .	48 "	1849-1801
Amenemhet IV <sup>d</sup> . . . . .	9 "	1801-1792
Sebeknefrure . . . . .	4 "	1792-1788

<sup>a</sup>Borchardt, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 99 ff.; Mahler, ibid., 40, 83; Meyer's calculation (Aegyptische Chronologie, 51, 52, 57, 58) has slightly modified the date as calculated by Borchardt and Mahler, without affecting the principle employed, carrying back the beginning of the dynasty to 2000 B. C.

<sup>b</sup>This table differs considerably in the last four reigns from that given by Mahler (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 83-85, and Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, June, 1902, 248 f.), as he unfortunately has overlooked the higher dates in the reigns of Sesostris III and Amenemhet III, found since the publication of Brugsch's and Meyer's tables, upon which Mahler depends.

<sup>c</sup>The coronation of Amenemhet III as coregent with his father was narrated on the walls of a temple probably that of Crocodilopolis in the Fayûm. Fragments of the inscription are preserved in Berlin (Nos. 15801-4), and published in Aegyptische Inschriften aus den Königlichen Museen, III, 138. The coronation inscription of Hatshepsut at Der el-Bahri was copied from this of Amenemhet III. I am indebted for these facts to my friend, Mr. Alan H. Gardiner, who kindly called my attention to them.

<sup>d</sup>The length of his coregency with his father is unknown, and hence not indicated in years.

---

The opposite table is as nearly correct as the astronomical data will permit, the most nearly accurate of all the Egyptian dynasties back of the Twenty-sixth, and the earliest series of absolute dates known in history, in spite of the margin of four years within which each date falls.

REIGN OF AMENEMHET I

INSCRIPTION OF KHNUMHOTEP I<sup>a</sup>

463. Khnumhotep I was the first of the powerful Benihasan nobles in the Twelfth Dynasty of whom we have any account. He was evidently of service to Amenemhet I during that king's final and successful struggle for the mastery and the crown of Egypt. The text is in such a fragmentary state that much must be read between the lines. It is, however, clear that Khnumhotep accompanied the king on an expedition in which "20 ships of cedar" were engaged, which resulted in expelling a certain foe from Egypt (l. 5). This foe, referred to only by the pronoun "him," whom it was necessary to expel from Egypt, must almost certainly have been one of Amenemhet's rivals for the crown. Then follows the submission of foreign foes, the Asiatic in the North and the Negro in the South, and of highland and lowland alike ("the two regions," l. 6). This accomplished, the king rewards his faithful adherents, and Khnumhotep is made "count of Menet-Khufu" (l. 7) where he ruled to the complete satisfaction of the king.

464. His titles are:<sup>b</sup> "Hereditary prince and count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, [—] great lord of the Oryx nome [— —], attached to Nekhen (judge)." This shows that he was later intrusted with the entire principality of the Oryx, in agreement with the statements of his grandson, Khnumhotep II, whose long inscription narrates the same appointments of his grandfather and follows the history of the family (§§ 619 ff.) in this fief for several generations.

<sup>a</sup>Tomb No. 14 at Benihasan; first noticed and copied by Newberry and published by Newberry, Beni Hasan, I, Pl. XLIV; see also p. 84 and II, 7, 8. The text is painted on the west wall, and is exceedingly fragmentary.

<sup>b</sup>Ibid., II, Pl. XLIV, l. 1.

465. I came out from my city, I went to [my nome]. Never did I commit evil against a man. . . . . 4. . . . . Then appointed me [my lord] the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>5</sup>Sehetepibre (Shṭp-yb-R<sup>c</sup>), Son of Re: Amenemhet (I) living forever and ever, to the 'office' — —. I went down with his majesty to '—',<sup>a</sup> in twenty ships of cedar 'which' he 'led', coming to —. He expelled him from the two regions (Egypt). <sup>6</sup>Negroes '— —', Asiatics, fell; he seized the lowland, the highlands, in the two regions '— —' with the people — remain in their positions '— —' — — — '— —' 7 — — —. Then his majesty appointed me as count of Menet-Khufu. My administration was excellent in the heart of his majesty, pleasant in —. Then I '—' my city, I benefited my people. His majesty caused to be done for me, that which my mouth uttered '— — —' <sup>8</sup> — the — were —, the — were —, its taxpayers were —, the citizens were servants. . . . .

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTION OF INTEF<sup>b</sup>

466. This inscription records the only official expedition of Amenemhet I to Hammamat of which we know anything.<sup>c</sup> Only one block is mentioned, for which Intef spent eight days in a vain search, and only succeeded in finding it after propitiating the local gods.

<sup>a</sup>There must have been a geographical name here, which is corrupt in the original or has been imperfectly read.

<sup>b</sup>Cut on the rocks of Wadi Hammamat; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 118, d = Golénischeff, Hammamat, VIII = Maspero, VIIIe Congrès International des Orientalistes, Section africaine, 50-54. I had also a collation of the Berlin squeeze, kindly loaned me by Gardiner. It is, like all the Hammamat inscriptions, strongly influenced by the hieratic; the graver, who did not know hieratic, has then so corrupted the scribe's sketch that much of it is unintelligible.

<sup>c</sup>The other Hammamat inscription bearing his name (Golénischeff, Hammamat, II, 4 = Maspero, ibid., 156), is incomplete; it does not record an official, but a private expedition, and the introduction, containing references to the safe conduct of the expedition ("I returned . . . . none missing, none dead") does not

467. Above is the full titulary of Amenemhet I, without further date. Then follow the titles of Intef:<sup>a</sup> “Hereditary prince and count, wearer of the royal [seal], sole companion, royal messenger, superior prophet of Min.” After the conventional series of personal epithets (ll. 2–6), his narrative then proceeds:

468. 6. . . . . My lord sent me to Hammamat, to bring this august stone; never was brought its like since the time of the god. There was no hunter who knew 7the marvel of it, none that sought it reached it. I spent 8 days searching this highland; I knew not the 1place1 wherein it was. I prostrated myself to Min, to Mut, to 1—1 Great-in-Magic, and all the gods of this highland, giving to them incense upon the fire. The land brightened at early morning,<sup>b</sup> I 1—1 8to go forth to the mountain 1—1 Hammamat, the 1—1 being behind me, and the 1—1 people scattered upon the mountains, searching this whole [desert].<sup>c</sup> Then I found it, and the 1—1 were in festivity, the 1entire1<sup>d</sup> army was praising, it rejoiced with 1obeisance1;<sup>e</sup> I gave praise to Montu.<sup>f</sup> mention the name of the leader as usual. Then follows (l. 3): “Fourth month of the third season, day 3; came the wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, inferior prophet, privy councilor of the treasurer of the god, Idi (Ydy), (l. 4) to bring down stone for the merinuter priest, the hereditary prince, ritual priest, sole companion, superior prophet, governor of the South [superior prophet of Min] (restored from Golénischeff, Hammamat, III, 3, l. 3), Putoker (P>wt-ykr) (l. 5). I brought down for him 2 blocks, each one (l. 6) 10 cubits (over 17 feet) in length, — cubits in its width.” Idi has another inscription in the vicinity (Golénischeff, Hammamat, III, 3 = Maspero, ibid., 157) as follows: “Year 1—1, third month of the third season, day 1—1; came the . . . . . (titles) Idi, to bring down stone for . . . . . (titles) Putoker. I brought down for him a block of 12 cubits (about 20 feet, 6 inches), with 200 men. I brought 2 oxen, 50 asses, 1—1 5 1—1”. It is clear that Idi is here executing the commissions of Putoker, an official of high rank, not those of the king.

<sup>a</sup>According to l. 6, his name may have been Sebeknakht, and his father’s name Intef.

<sup>b</sup>Read dw> dw>, as in Sinuhe, l. 248.

<sup>c</sup>Suggested by Gardiner.

<sup>d</sup>Read r dr’ f?

<sup>e</sup>Read sn-t>?

<sup>f</sup>The last line was omitted by Lepsius, and it is possible that even in Golénischeff’s copy the conclusion is lacking, for the concluding phrase above is very abrupt.

INSCRIPTION OF NESSUMONTU<sup>a</sup>

469. The stela is dated at the top in the "year — 4" of Amenemhet I, and adds the titulary of Sesostris I. As Sesostris I was associated with his father in the twentieth year of the latter, we must restore the above date as "year 24."

470. The stela contains the conventional mortuary texts and representations, but in the lower right-hand corner adds nine short columns of historical content:<sup>b</sup> showing that Nessumontu led expeditions against the Bedwin ("Sand-dwellers") and other Asiatics at the north end of Egypt's eastern frontier.

471. <sup>1</sup>Respecting [every] word of this tablet, it is truth, <sup>2</sup>which happened by my arm, it is that which I did in <sup>3</sup>reality.<sup>c</sup> There is no deceit, and there is no lie therein. <sup>4</sup>I [defeated] the Asiatic Troglodytes, the Sand-<sup>5</sup>dwellers. I overthrew the [strongholds<sup>d</sup>] of the <sup>6</sup>nomads<sup>1</sup>, as if [they had never] been. [I] <sup>7</sup>coursed<sup>e</sup> through <sup>8</sup>the field, I went <sup>a</sup>Stela in Louvre (C 1); the top lines containing the date are published by Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, 10, and Lepsius, Zwölfte Dynastie, II, 3. The entire text: Maspero in Report of First International Congress of Orientalists at Paris, 1873, II, 48–61, and again in Maspero, Études de mythologie et d'archéologie, III, 153–64; Pierret, Inscriptions, 2, 27; Gayet, Stèles, I. All these are inaccurate. A good text is given by Piehl, Inscriptions, I, I–II, but he unfortunately overlooked the nine lines of historical text and copied them from Maspero. Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1467) copied them from Pierret. These nine lines alone have been carefully given by Müller (Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, 1900, 47–48), who, however, does not consider his copy "einen völlig abschliessenden Text." I therefore carefully copied and collated the original (in January, 1901, for the Berlin Dictionary) under excellent light, which insured some additional readings, and it is probable that my text may be regarded as final. I have since published it, American Journal of Semitic Languages and Literatures, XXI, 153 ff. Müller also gives a translation, from which mine differs in several places, but is indebted to him for several suggestions.

<sup>b</sup>It is unfortunately only this important corner of the stela which is badly broken and weathered, seriously mutilating the text.

<sup>c</sup>Yr(y) i' n' y pw m wn' m' c.

<sup>d</sup>The word cannot be hn, "tent," as Müller suggests, for it ended in feminine t, while hn, "tent," is masculine, as shown by Harkhuf, Letter, l. 20. The feminine form cited by Müller from the Israel stela is not "tent," but "water skin" (hn't). I connect our word with hn't, "prison."

<sup>e</sup>Read hns; see Müller, Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, III, 433.

forth 1 before those who were 1 behind 2 their defenses, without [my] equal therein, 3 by command of Montu, to him who followed the plan of —.

INSCRIPTION OF KORUSKO<sup>b</sup>

472. The Nubian conquests of the Twelfth Dynasty, were already begun by Amenemhet I, and the place where the following inscription was discovered, over half-way up to the second cataract, indicates that the statement in the king's "Teaching" (§ 483) is trustworthy.

473. Year 29,<sup>c</sup> of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sehetepibre (Shtp-yb-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenemhet I), living forever. We came to overthrow Wawat — —

THE TEACHING OF AMENEMHET<sup>d</sup>

474. This composition purports to be the practical injunctions of the old king, Amenemhet I, to his son and coregent, Sesostris I. Maspero thinks they were posthu-

<sup>a</sup>Nn sn'y ym.

<sup>b</sup>Cut on a rock at the entrance of the valley road leading from Korusko to Abu Hamed. It was discovered by Dr. Lüttge in 1875, and by him shown to Brugsch (Geschichte, 117, 118), who published it seven years later, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 30; and in Thesaurus, V, 1213.

<sup>c</sup>Maspero's statement (Dawn, 478, n. 2) that this inscription belongs to the "XXXth year" must be an oversight.

<sup>d</sup>The text is preserved in seven hieratic manuscripts of the Empire, mostly incomplete, as follows:

1. Millingen Papyrus (original lost), published from copy of Peyron, by Maspero, Recueil, II, 70, and XVII, 64.
2. Papyrus Sallier, II, 1-3, British Museum.
3. Papyrus Sallier, I, 8, Verso (=Millingen, I, II, 1).
4. Ostrakon, British Museum, 5623 (=Millingen, I, II, 6).
5. Ostrakon, British Museum, 5638 (=Millingen, II, 5-11); Dümichen, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1874, 30 ff.
6. Papyrus, Berlin, 3019 (Millingen, I, 9 to II, 11).
7. Leather Manuscript Louvre, 4920, "now completely spoiled." "All these appear to be of about one period, perhaps from the end of the reign of Ramses II to the reign of Seti II" (Griffith, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 34, 36; Millingen mous,<sup>a</sup> but Griffith does not agree.<sup>b</sup> It can hardly be doubted that the composition is a work of the Twelfth Dynasty, and there is no serious reason why it should not be attributed to the old king, whose "teaching" the introduction distinctly states it is. Griffith regards the occasion of the work as the attempt on his life when the king determines "to announce his son's succession in a formal manner." This would date the work from the beginning of the coregency in the twentieth year of Amenemhet I. There is a reference in the document, however, which would indicate a later date. In III, 2, the king speaks of his campaign against Nubia. Now, the only campaign of Amenemhet I in Nubia known to us was in his twenty-ninth year (§ 473).<sup>c</sup> This reference, therefore, would date the work not long before the king's death in his thirtieth year, and is an indication that we have in it his final instructions to his son.

475. Its chief purpose was to warn the young Sesostris against any confidences or intimate associations with those about him. To enforce this warning, the old king dwells on the kindness and beneficence, the order and prosperity, of his reign; in contrast with which he bitterly depicts the treachery and ingratitude which have been his reward. There is an element of pathos in these words of the old man, which do not fail of their effect even after nearly four thousand years.

---

may be later), and are in a frightful state of corruption. The best manuscript, Mil-lingen, is unfortunately incomplete, almost all of the third page being lost. The latest and best treatment and text, employing all the manuscripts, are by Griffith (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 34, 35-49), from whom the above statement of materials is taken. An excellent translation of the clearer passages by Erman also in Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 44, 45. To both these the present version is much indebted. The older "translations" are very free paraphrases; for bibliography of them, see Maspero, Dawn, 467, n. 2.

<sup>a</sup>Dawn, 466.

<sup>b</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 34, 38.

<sup>c</sup>An earlier campaign is not impossible, but remains an assumption.

476. The composition is in poetic form, and the lines are separated as usual in the New Kingdom by a dot at the end of each line.<sup>a</sup> It must have been a favorite composition, to judge from the number of manuscripts which have survived. They are all, however, so excessively corrupt that much is unintelligible, and has been omitted in the version below.

477. Whether the historical statements in the document are authentic or not, there is no reason to doubt their truth; on the contrary, all but the attempt upon the king's life are corroborated by conclusive external evidence. These statements, in the order of their occurrence, are as follows: (1) the attempt on the king's life (I, 11—II, 4); (2) Sesostris I's coregency (II, 5, 6); (3) the king's reorganization of Egypt (II, 10, 11); (4) the agricultural prosperity (II, 11—III, 1); (5) foreign conquests in Nubia and among the Bedwin (III, 2, 3); (6) building of a palace (III, 2—6). There seems to be no chronological order in this enumeration, for the reorganization of the country took place in the first years, long before the coregency. It is fair to conclude, however, that the attempt on the king's life was the cause of the association of Sesostris on the throne.

478. I. <sup>b</sup>Beginning with the teaching, which the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Sehetepibre, Son of Re: Amenemhet (I) triumphant, composed.

He saith, <sup>2</sup>while distinguishing truth,
 For his son, the All-Lord;
 He saith: "Shine as a god!
 Hearken to that which I say to thee,
 That thou mayest be king of the earth,
 That thou mayest be ruler of <sup>3</sup>the lands,

<sup>a</sup>The paragraph division, retained in the accompanying translation, is also indicated by rubrics.

<sup>b</sup>Numbering of pages (Roman numerals) and lines (Arabic numerals) from Papyrus Millingen, after Griffith.

That thou mayest increase good.
479. <sup>1</sup>Harden<sup>1</sup> thyself against all subordinates.
 The people give heed <sup>4</sup>to him who terrorizes them;<sup>a</sup>
 Approach them not alone.
 Fill not thy heart with a brother,
 Know not a friend,
 Nor make <sup>5</sup>for thyself intimates,
 Wherein there is no end.
 When thou sleepest, guard for thyself thine own heart;
 For a man has no people,
 In the <sup>6</sup>day of evil.
 I gave to the beggar, I nourished the orphan;
 I admitted the insignificant as well as him who <sup>7</sup>was great of account.<sup>b</sup>
 (But) he who ate my food made insurrection,
 He, to whom I gave my hand, aroused fear therein;
 They who put <sup>8</sup>on my fine linen looked upon me as <sup>1</sup>—<sup>3</sup>.
 They who anointed themselves with my myrrh, <sup>1</sup>defiled <sup>9</sup>me<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup>—<sup>3</sup>
 . . . . . <sup>10</sup>. . . . . <sup>11</sup>. . . . .

480. It was after the evening meal, night had come.
 I took <sup>12</sup>an hour of heart's ease.
 Lying upon my couch, I relaxed;
 II <sup>1</sup>My heart began to follow slumber.
<sup>1</sup>Behold, weapons were flourished<sup>1</sup>,
<sup>1</sup>Council was held against me,<sup>1</sup>
<sup>1</sup>While I was like a serpent of <sup>2</sup>the desert.<sup>1</sup>
 I awoke to fight, utterly alone.
 . . . . . <sup>3</sup>. . . . .
 As I quickly grasped the weapons in my hand,
 I hurled back the wretches . . . . .
<sup>4</sup>. . . . .
 . . . . .
 . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>But see Gardiner's careful grammatical analysis of this line (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 24, 353 f.). He renders: "That cometh to pass, to whose terrors no thought has been given." This is grammatically better than the above rendering, although it does not fit either the preceding or following context.

<sup>b</sup>Lit.: "him who was not, as well as him who was." Compare the saying of the unjust official: "The name of a poor man is mentioned, by reason of his lord" (Eloquent Peasant, Berlin, 3023, l. 20).

481. <sup>5</sup>Behold, the abomination occurred, while I was without thee,
While the court had not (yet) heard that I had delivered to thee
(the kingdom).

While I had not yet sat with thee.

<sup>6</sup>Let me adjust thy administration;

For I do not terrify them, I do not think of them,

My heart does not endure the slackness of servants.

7. . . . . 9. . . . . <sup>a</sup>

482. <sup>10</sup>I sent to Elephantine,

I reached the Delta,

I stood on the borders of the land,

<sup>11</sup>I inspected its interior,

I carried forward the boundaries of valor by my bravery, by my deeds.

483. I was one who cultivated <sup>12</sup>grain, and loved the harvest-god;<sup>b</sup>

The Nile greeted me in every <sup>1</sup>valley<sup>1</sup>;

None was hungry in my years, none thirsted (III) <sup>1</sup>then;

One dwelt (in peace) through that which I did; conversing concerning me.

All that I commanded was correct.

I <sup>1</sup>captured<sup>1</sup> <sup>2</sup>lions, I took crocodiles,

I <sup>1</sup>seized<sup>1</sup> the people of Wawat,

I captured the people of Mazoi.

<sup>3</sup>I caused the Bedwin to go like hounds.<sup>c</sup>

I made a <sup>1</sup>palace<sup>1</sup> decked <sup>4</sup>with gold,

Whose ceilings were of lazuli, <sup>1</sup>and the walls therein<sup>1</sup>.

The floors <sup>1</sup>— —<sup>1</sup>,

<sup>5</sup>The doors were of copper,

The bolts were of bronze,

<sup>6</sup>Made for everlastingness,

At which eternity fears.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The general sense is: the conspiracy was formed in the palace.

<sup>b</sup>Bebi, in whose inscription Brugsch thought to find references to Joseph's famine (Geschichte, 246), uses verbatim the same words (Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1527, l. 11) regarding himself.

<sup>c</sup>This line is slightly doubtful, but compare similar phrase, Piankhi, l. 3.

<sup>d</sup>Not being able to destroy it. The remainder of p. III, for which Papyrus Millingen is wanting, is too corrupt for translation.

DEDICATION INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

484. A relic of Amenemhet I's building activity at Karnak, is preserved in this dedication, found on the base of a shrine from the Karnak temple of Amon, whence it had been taken to the Ptah-temple:

Amenemhet I; he made it as his monument for his father Amon-Re, lord of Thebes (Ns' wt-<sup>l</sup>wy), making for him a shrine of pink granite, that he may thereby be given life forever.

485. Another dedication<sup>b</sup> at Bubastis runs as follows:

Amenemhet I; he made it as his monument for his mother Bast, making for her<sup>c</sup> a gate —————.

THE TALE OF SINUHE<sup>d</sup>

486. The tale of Sinuhe is a highly artificial piece of "fine writing" in poetical form,<sup>e</sup> most of which is lost to our modern taste. It is, however, so rational and sober throughout, and breathes such an air of reality, that it is not to be disregarded as a historical source.

<sup>a</sup>Annales, III, 102.

<sup>b</sup>Naville, Bubastis I, Pl. 33A.

<sup>c</sup>An s has been omitted, either in the publication or by the ancient scribe.

<sup>d</sup>The bulk of this tale (311 lines) is preserved in a hieratic papyrus of the Middle Kingdom, now in Berlin (P. 3022), published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, VI, 104-7. The beginning, lacking in the Berlin Papyrus, is preserved in a hieratic ostrakon (a large flake of limestone) discovered in a Twentieth Dynasty tomb by Maspero (now in Cairo, No. 27149), and published by him in Mémoires de l'Institut égyptien, II, 1-23, and Pls. I, II, 1886. This fragment, excessively corrupt, is supplemented by eleven lines from the Amherst Papyrus (Newberry, Amherst Papyri, Pl. I), which have been incorporated with the Cairo ostrakon and published in transcription by Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 453, 454). The whole has been translated by Erman in Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 14-29. My materials were: all the above publications except Maspero's (which was not accessible), the Berlin original, and especially a transcription of the Cairo ostrakon, made by Erman from the original, which he kindly placed at my disposal.

<sup>e</sup>The Cairo ostrakon containing the beginning separates the lines by red dots, and divides into stanzas. The above translation preserves these lines and stanzas as far as the ostrakon goes, after which the division is uncertain.

487. The hero, Sinuhe, a noble of high rank, is with the young coregent, Prince Sesostris I, in the western Delta, on a campaign against the Libyans, when the message announcing the death of the old king, Amenemhet I, reaches the camp. Sesostris I does not allow the news to be made public, but secretly returns to the royal residence, in order firmly to establish himself as king before any pretender can precede him. Sinuhe accidentally overhears the message, and, evidently for political reasons, immediately flees the country, making Palestine his goal. Here he spends many years, experiencing manifold adventures, until in old age, after becoming rich and powerful, he is pardoned by Sesostris I, and permitted to return to Egypt.

488. The date of Amenemhet's death, given in the tale as in the thirtieth year of his reign, is corroborated by the monuments, where his highest date is also the thirtieth year;<sup>a</sup> hence the introductory narrative may probably be accepted as essentially historical. Moreover, the style of the writing in the Berlin papyrus shows that the document could not have been written very much later than the reign of Sesostris I, when the historical facts were still well known.

489. The geography of the flight<sup>b</sup> is correct as far as traceable, but the error of Upper Tenu for Upper Retenu, the Empire term for Palestine, shows unfamiliarity with one of the most important, and later the most frequent, designations in the Egyptian's geography of Asia.<sup>c</sup> But it is the earliest occurrence of the name; for the tale offers us the oldest account of pre-Israelitish Palestine from any source. This account appears to be essentially true to the facts, and shows us how superior was the Egyptian of this time, to the Bedwin of Palestine.

<sup>a</sup>The stela of Intef bears the joint date: "Year 30 of Amenemhet I, year 10 of Sesostris I" (Cairo, Mariette, Abydos, II, 22=Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, VIII=Rougé, Album photographique, No. 146; Mariette, Catalogue général d'Abydos, 104, No. 558).

<sup>b</sup>See especially Müller, Asien und Europa, 38-47.

<sup>c</sup>Retenu was, however, known in the Middle Kingdom, and is mentioned in a Sinai inscription (see Weill, Sinai).

490. Hereditary prince, count,
Wearer of the royal seal, sole companion,
Judge, local governor,
King [among] the Bedwin,
Real confidant of the king, his beloved,
The attendant, Sinuhe, saith:

I was one who follows his lord,
A servant of the royal [harem] of the queen,
Rich in praise,

. . . . .
. . . . .
. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

491. In year 30, second month of the first season, on the 7th day,
Departed the god into his horizon,
The king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sehetepibre.
He ascended [to] heaven, joined with the sun;
The divine limbs were mingled with him that begat him.
In the court, silence [ — — — ].
The great double doors were closed,
The court sat (in mourning),
The people [bowed down in] silence.

492. Behold, his majesty had sent out
A numerous army to the land of the Libyans;
The eldest son was commander thereof,
The Good God<sup>c</sup> Sesostris.
Now, just as he was returning, having taken
Living captives of the Libyans,
And all cattle, without limit;
The companions of the court,
They sent to the west side,<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>These three lines are totally corrupt; the names of Amenemhet and Sesostris, and the pyramid-city, Kenofer (K<sup>o</sup>-n/r) are mentioned.

<sup>b</sup>Toward Libya.

In order to inform the king<sup>a</sup>
 Of their plan, conceived in the cabinet chamber.
 The messengers found him on the way,
 They reached him at the time of evening.

. . . . .
 The hawk,<sup>b</sup> he flew, together with his following,
 Without letting his army know †it†.

Then sent the royal children,
 Who followed this army;
 No one had called <sup>c†</sup>to† one of them.<sup>d</sup>

Behold, I stood; I heard his voice
<sup>2</sup>As he spoke, while I †— —†,
 My heart cleaved, <sup>3</sup>my arms opened,
 While trembling fell on all my members.

I stole away <sup>4†</sup>— —† —,
 To seek for myself a place of concealment.

I placed <sup>5</sup>myself between two bushes,
 To †avoid† the way which they went.

I <sup>6</sup>proceeded up-stream,
<sup>7</sup>Not intending (however) to reach the court;
 I thought there was fighting (there).

. . . . .
493. <sup>8</sup>I reached †—† in the region of Sycomore, <sup>9</sup>I arrived at the Isle of Snefru.<sup>e</sup>

I tarried in a stretch <sup>10</sup>of field,<sup>f</sup>
 It grew light, I went on, when it was day.
 I came upon a man, standing <sup>11</sup>in †—† the way;
 He saluted me, and was afraid.

<sup>12</sup>When the time of the evening meal<sup>g</sup> drew on,
 I reached the city of <sup>13</sup>the Ox (Ng<sup>2</sup>w).
 I ferried over, in a vessel without a rudder,

<sup>a</sup>Sesostris I.

<sup>b</sup>Poetical designation of the prince, Sesostris, who now secretly leaves the camp and hastens to the royal residence, to be crowned.

<sup>c</sup>The Berlin papyrus begins here; the line numbers refer to that manuscript.

<sup>d</sup>To inquire after the absent Sesostris.

<sup>e</sup>See § 312, l. 21, note.

<sup>f</sup>See § 430, l. 12, note.

<sup>g</sup>Compare the same meal in § 480.

<sup>14</sup>[By means of] a wind of the west.<sup>a</sup>
 I passed by on the east of the quarry,
<sup>15</sup>Past the highland goddess, mistress of the Red Mountain.<sup>b</sup>
 As I gave <sup>16</sup>the way to my feet, [going northward],<sup>c</sup>
 I came to <sup>17</sup>the Walls of the Ruler,
 Made to repulse the Bedwin,
 [And to smite the sand-rangers]<sup>d</sup>
 I bowed <sup>18</sup>down in the bushes,
 For fear the sentinels <sup>19</sup>on the fort,
 Who belonged to its day (-watch), should see me.
 I went on <sup>20</sup>at time of evening,
 As the earth brightened, I arrived at Peten (Ptn).<sup>e</sup>
<sup>21</sup>When I had reached the lake of Kemwer (Km-wr),<sup>f</sup>
 I fell down for thirst, <sup>22</sup>fast came 'my' breath,
 My throat was hot,
<sup>23</sup>I said: This is the taste of death.
 I upheld my heart, I <sup>24</sup>drew my limbs together,
 As I heard the sound of the lowing of <sup>25</sup>cattle,
 I beheld the Bedwin.
<sup>26</sup>That chief among them, who had been in Egypt, recognized me.
<sup>27</sup>He gave me water, he cooked for me milk.<sup>g</sup>
 I went <sup>28</sup>with him to his tribe,
 Good was that which they did (for me).
 One land sent me on to <sup>29</sup>another,
 I loosed<sup>h</sup> for Suan (Swn),<sup>i</sup>

<sup>a</sup>This shows clearly the eastward direction of his flight.

<sup>b</sup>This is the mountain of red conglomerate just northeast of modern Cairo. It is still called the Red Mountain (Gebel el-Aḥmar), and is still used as a quarry. See Baedeker, 74, and Murray, 418.

<sup>c</sup>Only in Empire text.

<sup>d</sup>Found only in the Empire text. <sup>e</sup>Unknown land.

<sup>f</sup>Lit.: "the great black," the earlier northern extension of the Gulf of Suez. See Maspero, Dawn, 351, n. 3, and 471, n. 3, who renders "the very (wr't) black," although the writing is always wr (= "great," without t); and Müller, Asien und Europa, 39-43.

<sup>g</sup>Here the Cairo ostrakon stops, and the verse division is from here on uncertain.

<sup>h</sup>Perhaps a nautical term.

<sup>i</sup>From "swn," "to trade," evidently a trading-post on the Asiatic frontier, like Swn (Assuan) on that of Nubia.

I arrived at Kedem<sup>a</sup> (Kdm);
I spent <sup>30</sup>a year and a half there.

494. Emuienshi, that sheik <sup>31</sup>of Upper Tenu,<sup>b</sup> brought me forth Saying to me: "Happy art thou with me,
(For) thou hearest the speech <sup>32</sup>of Egypt."
He said this, (for) he knew my character,
He had heard of <sup>33</sup>my wisdom;
The Egyptians <sup>34</sup>who were there with him, bare witness of me.

495. Emuienshi now questions Sinuhe as to the reason of his flight, and the latter responds evasively, merging his reply into a long hymn in praise of the king (ll.
34-77). Whereupon Emuienshi replies:

496. <sup>78</sup>"Behold, thou shalt now abide with me;
Good is that which I shall do for thee."
He put me at the head of his children,
He married me <sup>79</sup>to his eldest daughter,
He made me select for myself of his land,
<sup>80</sup>Of the choicest of that which he had,
On his boundary with <sup>81</sup>another land.
It was a goodly land, named Yaa (Y>>);<sup>c</sup>
There were figs <sup>82</sup>in it and vines,
More plentiful than water was its wine,
Copious was <sup>83</sup>its honey, plenteous its oil;
All fruits were upon its trees.
<sup>84</sup>Barley was there, and spelt,
Without end all <sup>85</sup>cattle.
Moreover, great was that which came to me,
Which came for love <sup>86</sup>of me,
When he appointed me sheik of the tribe,

<sup>a</sup>Long misread "Edom;" first corrected by Erman, in 1885, Aegypten, 495. The region was east of Jordan and the Dead Sea, and receives the same name in the Old Testament.

<sup>b</sup>This is the first occurrence of Upper [Re]tenu, the usual designation, in the Empire for the higher portions of Palestine. That the text has omitted an r is almost certain. See Müller, Asien und Europa, 47.

<sup>c</sup>An unknown district in Palestine; it is written as if it were the name of some plant.

From the choicest of <sup>87</sup>his land.
I portioned the daily bread,
And wine <sup>88</sup>for every day,
Cooked flesh, and fowl <sup>89</sup>in roast;
Besides the wild goats of the hills,
Which were trapped <sup>90</sup>for me, and <sup>1</sup>brought<sup>1</sup> to me;
Besides that which my dogs captured for me.
<sup>91</sup>There was much — made for me,
And milk in <sup>92</sup>every sort of cooked dish.
I spent many years,
My children <sup>93</sup>became strong,
Each the mighty man of <sup>94</sup>his tribe.
The messenger going north,
Or passing southward to the court,<sup>a</sup>
<sup>95</sup>He turned in to me.
For I had all men turn in (to me).

497. The tale now proceeds with examples of the personal prowess of Sinuhe, but the remainder of over 200 lines contains nothing of historical importance.<sup>b</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>The court of Egypt is meant.

<sup>b</sup>The remainder of the story can be read in the latest and far the best translation by Erman, Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 20–29 (German), or a very free paraphrase by Maspero, Contes populaires, or an English version after Maspero, by Petrie, Egyptian Tales.

REIGN OF SESOSTRIS I

THE BUILDING INSCRIPTION OF THE TEMPLE OF HELIOPOLIS<sup>a</sup>

498. This building inscription in its present form has a very interesting history. It is not preserved to us upon a great stela, to which such inscriptions were usually intrusted, but has reached us on more fragile material—a roll of leather. This had been used by a scribe in the third year of Amenhotep II<sup>b</sup> for scratching down various data, either for the sake of practice or for temporary preservation; for they were often washed off and replaced by others. At present we can read, although half washed out, part of the legal proceedings of a sculptor against his own son, and notes regarding the receipt and issue of lumber.<sup>c</sup> To one of these notes he has fortunately fixed the date, as given above. On the other side of the leather our scribe copied the beginning of the dedicatory building inscription of Sesostris I, placed by him on a great stone stela<sup>d</sup> in his temple at Heliopolis. In the time of our scribe the stela had already been standing five hundred years. It has since utterly perished, with the temple in which it stood, and thus the great king's building inscription has survived only in the accidental copy of a humble scribe.

---

<sup>a</sup>A hieratic manuscript, written in two columns on one side of a piece of leather; bought in Thebes by Brugsch, 1858 (Geschichte, 123); first published by Stern, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1874, 85 ff.; then by Birch, Egyptian Texts, 49–58. It has been translated by Stern, Records of the Past, XII, and by Erman, Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 59–63. My materials were the original now in Berlin (P. 3029) and a transcription by Erman. The above translation depends, with a few exceptions, upon his version in loc. cit.

<sup>b</sup>Not Amenhotep IV, as read by Stern.

<sup>c</sup>See Erman, Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 87, 88.

<sup>d</sup>See § 501, l. 5.

499. In form the inscription was a poem, and its lines have been separated by the scribe by red dots, as usual in the Empire. The content is obscured by elaborate phraseology, but its drift is nevertheless evident. In his third year Sesostris I called together his court, and announced his purpose of erecting a temple to the sun-god at Heliopolis (§§ 501-3). The court responds with the conventional encomium (§ 504), and the king then deposes the treasurer to undertake the building (§ 505). An interval of time having elapsed of which there is no indication in the narrative, the ground plan of the building is laid out with the customary ceremony (§ 506). As usual in such inscriptions, there must have followed some description of the construction, material, and furniture of the temple, but the scribe unfortunately copied no farther.

500. This was of course not the first temple at Heliopolis, but an extension of the old, undoubtedly on a much larger scale. A fragment of a building inscription<sup>a</sup> from the same temple perhaps belonged to Sesostris I. It shows that he, or one of his name, built throughout Egypt. It reads:

<sup>1</sup>(For) ————— a mšn·t-stone necklace, a necklace (mny·t), many great seals [—] ————— <sup>2</sup>————— many great — [—] —. (For) Anuket: a mšn·t-stone necklace, a seal — a silver vase,<sup>b</sup> a golden vase, a bronze vase, two copper vases, an ebony censer, a silver censer. (For) First of the Westerners, Lord of Abydos (Osiris): ————— <sup>3</sup>————— a bronze vase, two copper vases, an ebony censer. (For) Onouris: in Thinis: a silver vase, a golden vase, a bronze vase, two copper vases, an ebony censer, a silver<sup>c</sup> censer. (For) Min (Ypw): a silver vase, a golden vase, a bronze vase, two copper vases, an ebony censer, a silver

<sup>a</sup>Engraved on two sides of a piece of a red grit-stone door-post, now in a native house by the Mosque of el-Azhar in Cairo. Published by Daressy, from a copy by Ahmed bey Kamal, in Annales IV.

<sup>b</sup>Hs; all the vases herein recorded are of this form.

<sup>c</sup>The published text is evidently to be so corrected.

[censer] ——— 4———. (For) ——— a necklace. (I) built a temple for Satet, for Anuket and Khnum, lord of the cataract, of <sup>1</sup>sculptured<sup>1a</sup> stone. (I) built a temple for Horus of Nubia (T<sup>2</sup>-p<sup>d</sup>·t) in the (nome of) Apollinopolis Magna (W<sup>t</sup>s-Hr)<sup>b</sup> ——— 5———. He [made] (it) as his monument for Atum, lord of Heliopolis: silver vessels ———<sup>6c</sup> ——— a golden dwd·t, a silver ——— 7——— a royal statue of —<sup>d</sup> for Sais. Buto, mistress of Pe and Dep, was fashioned, a copper bowl <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>. A royal statue of Sesostris (III) for Pe <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> Nephthys ——— 8———. (For) the Nine Gods in Kher-eha (Hr·<sup>c</sup>h<sup>2</sup>): a copper bowl; Hapi was fashioned. (I) sailed upstream to Elephantine, offering-tables were given to the southern gods. (For) Hathor, mistress of Dendera: a golden ——— 9——— a hm<sup>2</sup>g·t-stone necklace, — — a — stone necklace — —. (For) Hathor, mistress of Cusae: a hm<sup>2</sup>g·t-stone necklace, a m<sup>s</sup>n·t-stone necklace ———.

This list of the king's good works for the gods doubtless comes from the Heliopolis temple, the building of which is recorded in our leather roll, as follows:

501. <sup>1</sup>Year 3

Third month of the first season, day —, under
The majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere, Son of Re, Sesostris (I), triumphant.<sup>e</sup>
Living forever and ever.

<sup>2</sup>When the king appeared in the double crown,
Occurred the sitting in the audience-hall,<sup>f</sup>
One took counsel with his suite,
The companions of <sup>3</sup>the court,

<sup>a</sup>S<sup>c</sup>h<sup>c</sup>, see IV, 231, ll. 6, 8, and 11; possibly we should render S<sup>c</sup>h<sup>c</sup> here with its usual meaning, "erect," and regard the following sign (the builder), as the determinative, and render "I erected."

<sup>b</sup>Second nome of Upper Egypt.

<sup>c</sup>The inscription here passes around the corner of the block; it is uncertain whether the two faces should be connected as above.

<sup>d</sup>Remains of a cartouche.

<sup>e</sup>Inserted by the Empire scribe.

<sup>f</sup>This hall (d<sup>2</sup>dw) is mentioned also in the reign of Sahure (see § 239), where it was part of a house called: "Sahure-Shines-or-Appears-With-Crowns." The name also occurs in the Fourth Dynasty in the same connection (Sethe, Urkunden, I, 22, l. 14), and must be an audience-hall.

The princes at the place of [—].
 One<sup>a</sup> commanded, while they heard,
 One took counsel, while <sup>4</sup>making them reveal:
 “Behold, my majesty is exacting a work,
 And taking thought in an excellent matter.
 For <sup>5</sup>the future I will make a monument,
 And set up an abiding stela for Harakhte.

502. He begat me <sup>6</sup>to do that which he did,
 To execute that which he commanded to do.
 He appointed me shepherd of this land.
 He recognized [him who should defend] <sup>7</sup>it,
 He hath given to me that which he protects,
 And that which the eye,<sup>b</sup> that is in him, illuminates.
 [Doing throughout]<sup>c</sup> as he desires.
 I have [rendered] <sup>8</sup>that which he exacted [—].<sup>d</sup>
 I am a king of his character,
 A sovereign, to whom he [—] not.
 I conquered as <sup>9</sup>a lad,
 I was mighty in the egg.

. . . . .<sup>e</sup>
 He appointed me lord of the two halves,<sup>f</sup>
 As a child, <sup>10</sup>before the swaddling-clothes were loosed for me,
 He appointed me lord of mankind,
 [—] <sup>11</sup>in the presence of the people.
 He perfected me to be occupant of the palace,
 As a youth, before my two [—] came forth.
 He gave his length and his breadth [to me].
 Who have been brought up <sup>12</sup>in his character, which he took.
 To whom was given the land; I am its lord.
 My fame<sup>g</sup> has reached <sup>13</sup>the height of heaven,
 My excellence [—————].
 . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>The king.

<sup>b</sup>The sun; that which the eye illuminates is, of course, the earth.

<sup>c</sup>It is all obedient to him?

<sup>d</sup>A very uncertain line.

<sup>f</sup>Upper and Lower Egypt.

<sup>e</sup>A mutilated line.

<sup>g</sup>Lit.: “Fame for me . . . . .”

<sup>14</sup>He has commanded me to conquer that which he conquered, 𓂏 — Horus, who have<sup>a</sup> numbered 𓂏his limbs.<sup>1</sup>

503. I have established the offerings of <sup>15</sup>the gods,
 I will make a work, namely, a great house,
 For my father Atum.
 He<sup>b</sup> will make it broad, according as he has caused me to conquer.
<sup>16</sup>I will victual his altars on earth,
 I will build my house in the 𓂏.<sup>c</sup>
 My beauty shall be remembered <sup>17</sup>in his house,
 My name is the pyramidion, and my name is the lake,<sup>d</sup>
 Eternity is that excellent thing which 𓂏I have made;
 The king <sup>18</sup>dies not, who is mentioned by reason of his achievements.

. . . . .
 It is my name 𓂏 which is mentioned <sup>19</sup>in reality,
 Which passes not away because of eternal things.
 That which I make is that which shall be,
 That which I seek is <sup>20</sup>the excellent things.
 Excellent food is 𓂏.
 It is vigilance in eternal things.”

504. II. <sup>1</sup>Then spake these companions of the king,
 And they answered before their god:<sup>e</sup>
 “Hu is [in] thy mouth, and Esey<sup>f</sup> 𓂏is behind thee.
 O sovereign, it is thy plans which are realized,
 O king, who shinest as Favorite of the Two Goddesses,
 To <sup>3</sup>𓂏 in thy temple.
 It is excellent to look to the morrow,
 And with excellent things, to (coming) time.

<sup>a</sup>First person.

<sup>b</sup>We expect “I,” viz., “I will make it broad according as he has made my kingdom broad.”

<sup>c</sup>S>h, which occurs also as the place where a temple is built, in II, 890, l. 24.

<sup>d</sup>Meaning that these accessories of the temple will be memorials of his name. By a curious accident, the only witness to the king's building surviving on the spot is his solitary obelisk (at Maṭarīyeh-Heliopolis), surmounted as usual by the “pyramidion.”

<sup>e</sup>The king.

<sup>f</sup>Hu and Esey are the deities of taste and wisdom.

The multitude completes nothing <sup>4</sup>without thee,<sup>a</sup>
 For thy majesty is the two eyes of all people.
 Thou art great that thou mayest make thy monument,
<sup>5</sup>In Heliopolis, the dwelling of the gods.
 Before thy father, the lord of the great house,
 Atum, the bull of the gods.
 Let thy house arise, <sup>6</sup>that it may offer to the oblation-tablet;
 That it may do the service for its favorite statue,
 For thy figure in all <sup>7</sup>eternity.

505. The king himself said

To the wearer of the royal seal, the sole companion,
 The overseer <sup>1</sup>of<sup>1</sup> the double <sup>8</sup>White House,
 The privy councilor of <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>:
 It is thy counsel, which shall cause the work to be done.
 Of which my majesty desires, <sup>9</sup>that it should be;
 Thou art the commander belonging to it,
 Who shall do, according to that which is in my heart,
 . . . . . <sup>10</sup>vigilance,
 That it may come to pass without laxity,
 That all the work . . . . . <sup>11</sup> . . . . .
 . . . . . <sup>12</sup> . . . . . <sup>b</sup>
<sup>13</sup>I have commanded those who work,
 To do according as thou shalt exact.

506. The king was crowned with the diadem,

<sup>14</sup>All the people were following him,
 The chief ritual priest and scribe of the sacred book stretched <sup>15</sup>the cord,
 . . . . . the <sup>1</sup>stake<sup>1</sup> in the earth,<sup>c</sup>
<sup>16</sup>— was done in this temple,
 His majesty had <sup>17</sup>a royal scribe go <sup>1</sup>before<sup>1</sup> the people,
<sup>18</sup>Who were gathered [in] one place, south and north,
<sup>19</sup>. . . . .

<sup>a</sup>Text has nb for k—a mistake which could have been made only from the hieroglyphic, thus showing that the scribe certainly had the stone original before him.

<sup>b</sup>Four verses are omitted.

<sup>c</sup>This is a description of the usual measuring and staking out of the ground plan of the temple, which was a sacred ceremony conducted by the king in person.

INSCRIPTION OF MERI<sup>a</sup>

507. The usual texts of the Middle Kingdom mortuary stelæ are here preceded by seven lines referring to the building of Sesostris I's pyramid-chapel, which was intrusted to Meri. The mention of columns and gates may indicate that only the chapel, and not the pyramid entire, is meant.<sup>b</sup> If the date at the top is, as we may suppose, that of Meri's death, then Sesostris I had completed his mortuary chapel, and perhaps his pyramid at Lisht, by his ninth year.

508. <sup>1</sup>Year 9, second month of the first season, day 20, <sup>2</sup>under the majesty of Sesostris I,<sup>c</sup> living like Re, forever. <sup>3</sup>His real servant, his favorite, who does all that which he praises every day, <sup>4</sup>the revered assistant treasurer, Meri (Mry), born of Menkhet (Mnh·t), says:

509. I was a zealous servant, great in character, amiable in love. <sup>5</sup>My lord sent me with a commission, because I was so very zealous, to execute for him an eternal dwelling,<sup>d</sup> greater in name than Rosta, and more excellent<sup>e</sup> in appointments <sup>6</sup>than any place, the excellent district<sup>f</sup> of the gods. Its columns<sup>g</sup> pierced heaven; the lake which was dug, it reached<sup>h</sup> the river; the gates,<sup>i</sup> towering <sup>7</sup>heavenward, were of limestone of Troja. Osiris, First of the Westerners, rejoiced over all the monuments of my lord; I myself rejoiced, and my heart was glad at that which I had executed.

<sup>a</sup>Mortuary stela in the Louvre (C 3), published by Pierret, Inscriptions, II, 104, 105; Gayet, Stèles, IV, V; Maspero, Mélanges d'archéologie égyptienne, II, 221 f.; again Maspero, Études de mythologie et d'archéologie, III, 208 f.; and Piehl, Inscriptions, I, II-IV. Of these, the only careful copy is Piehl's. He also offers an excellent translation (ibid., 3-5).

<sup>b</sup>This chapel and pyramid at Lisht were excavated by J. E. Gautier (Mémoire sur les jouilles de Licht par J. E. Gautier et G. Jéquier [Cairo, 1902], 3-43; in Mémoires de l'Institut, VI, fasc. 1).

<sup>c</sup>Full titulary.

<sup>d</sup>The pyramid; it is lit., "an eternal seat."

<sup>e</sup>Lit.: "More advanced."

<sup>f</sup>Read wc·r·t, originally a bend in the cliffs or river. Maspero reads whm·t, "repeating, reproducing the excellences of the gods." Compare Piehl, Inscriptions, I, 4.

<sup>g</sup>Piehl's text has "walls."

<sup>h</sup>This may be figurative, viz., "reached," in the sense of "equaled," which suits the context.

<sup>i</sup>Belonging to the chapel on the east side.

WADI HALFA INSCRIPTION OF MENTUHOTEP<sup>a</sup>

510. This carries the Nubian wars of Sesostris I to their southernmost point.<sup>b</sup> It was set up in the eighteenth year, by the general, Mentuhotep.<sup>c</sup>

At the top is a relief showing Sesostris I standing, facing "Montu, Lord of Thebes," who says: "I have brought for thee all countries which are in Nubia ( $T^2$ - $pd \cdot t$ ), beneath thy feet, Good God." Suiting these words, the god leads and presents to the king a line of bound captives, symbolizing Nubian towns. The head and shoulders of each captive surmount an oval, containing the name of the town represented. There were originally ten of these towns (of which four have disappeared),<sup>d</sup> as follows: (1)  $k^2 s$ , (2)  $y$  [—], <sup>a</sup>A sandstone stela found in the sanctuary of the northernmost of the two temples on the west shore opposite Wadi Halfa village. First noticed by Ricci, it was taken out by Champollion and Rosellini in 1829, who failed to notice that they had left the lower portion in situ under the sand. This upper portion has been in Florence for many years (No. 1542). Some sixty years later, (1893) Captain Lyons took out the lower portion, and it is now in Florence; only one intermediate line has been lost, for the two parts fit together, at one corner. The upper portion has often been published, but with no approach to accuracy: Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, XXV, 4; Champollion, Monuments, I, 1; Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 34-36; II, 692; Schiaparelli, Catalogue, I, 243-46; Berend, Monuments du Musée égyptien de Florence, 51, 52; Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1444 f.; a photograph in Petrie's Italian Photographs, No. 46. The lower portion was published by Pellegrini in Bessarione, Anno V, Vol. IX, Nos. 59, 60. I photographed and copied both portions (the readings from my copy were incorporated in Pellegrini's publication), repeatedly collated the original, and the Berlin squeeze (A 1375) of the upper portion, as well as the old publications for signs now lost, and published the whole in Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, May, 1901, 231-35, and three plates.

<sup>b</sup>Another expedition under Sesostris I, which extended an uncertain distance southward, was accompanied by the nomarch of Elephantine, Sirenpowet. It is recorded in his Assuan tomb (de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 183), but is so fragmentary and so badly published, that very little can be made of it. The following is discernible: "His majesty [sent me or came] to overthrow K[ush] the vile . . . . . His majesty [came] bringing . . . . ." Before the latter phrase an elephant is mentioned, to which there is probably reference in the last line: "Four men brought him ———."

<sup>c</sup>The date and name of the officer are furnished by the newly discovered lower portion (§ 512).

<sup>d</sup>All ten were still partially readable in Champollion's time, and he gives the complete list (Notices descriptives, II, 693); the later publications all give only six, and do not add Champollion's material.

(3) *prw*w, (4) ym<sup>3</sup>w, (5) h<sup>r</sup>—<sup>1</sup>, (6) w<sup>3</sup>w,<sup>a</sup> (7) yhrkyn, (8) š<sup>3</sup>c·t, (9) hš<sup>3</sup>y, (10) šmyk. The Kummeh temple of Thutmose III was built of “good white stone of š<sup>3</sup>c·t,”<sup>b</sup> the eighth district in this list, which must therefore have been in the vicinity of Kummeh, some thirty-seven miles above Wadi Halfa where our monument was set up. It is safe to conclude that none of the others, although little known, was far south of Kummeh. Thus the conquests of Sesostris I had already reached the southern limit, later marked, and fortified by Sesostris III (§§ 651–60).

511. Below the relief were two inscriptions; the first belonging to the king—the second to Mentuhotep. Of the king’s inscription only fragments of six lines survive, showing the titulary of Sesostris I, followed by the epithet, “Horus who seizes in an instant” (l. 1).<sup>c</sup> Other phrases discernible are: “[Light] of the eyes, star<sup>d</sup> of the South, illuminating the Two Lands, white Bull, trampling the Troglodytes” (l. 2); and in l. 4 is a reference to “smiting Nubia.” On the lower, more recently recovered portion, two more, fragmentary lines, continue similar epithets of the king.<sup>e</sup>

512. Mentuhotep’s inscription begins with his titles, as follows:

<sup>8</sup>Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, favorite of the king ————<sup>f</sup> <sup>9</sup>local governor, attached to Dep, lord

<sup>a</sup>According to Champollion, Notices descriptives, but the original shows the goose as the last sign, and not w; w<sup>3</sup> with w and eagle is also suspicious.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 67, b; Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1444.

<sup>c</sup>Preserved completely in Champollion, Monuments, but misplaced at the beginning of l. 1, although it belongs at the end after the royal name.

<sup>d</sup>See Thutmose III’s Hymn of Victory (II, 658, l. 15).

<sup>e</sup>The king’s inscription is in horizontal lines, and the following inscription of Mentuhotep is in vertical lines.

<sup>f</sup>The numbering of lines is continued from the inscription of the king on this fragment. There is an uncertain amount lost at the end of each line, and even the portions above the final break are very fragmentary.

of Pe. . . . .<sup>11</sup> . . . . .<sup>a</sup> commander of recruits, commander of the army, ———<sup>12</sup> Sesostri I made me ———. <sup>13</sup> Year 18, first (month) of the second season, day 8, the day of ———<sup>14</sup> broad in stride, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, [Kheper]ke[re] (Sesostri I). <sup>16</sup> Their life is finished,<sup>b</sup> slain, ———<sup>17</sup> fire in the tents<sup>c</sup> ———. <sup>18</sup> Her grain cast to the Nile,<sup>d</sup> ———<sup>19</sup> zealous, not transgressing [the command of the palace] ———<sup>20</sup> a man in the strength of his ka, in ———<sup>21</sup> forever, the Son of Re, Sesostri (I) ———<sup>22</sup> I myself swear, this happened in<sup>e</sup> <sup>23</sup> very truth; I, the general of the army, <sup>24</sup> Amu's son, (<sup>c</sup>mw) Mentuhotep.

513. It is clear that ll. 12 and 13, and probably two lines before, contained important historical statements, of which the merest fragments are now discernible. The description is similar to the one on the second Semneh stela of Sesostri III (§§ 655-60).

514. Below at the left was the figure of Mentuhotep, of which only the top of the head is preserved. This is not the only place where his figure appeared on the stela. In the upper relief behind the king is the figure of a hawk-headed deity, very rudely done and not of the same workmanship as the other figures. A close examination reveals hieroglyphics under this figure. Over its head is a fan, the handle of which cuts across the head and shoulders of the figure.<sup>f</sup> It is clear, then, that this hawk-headed figure is not original, but was cut in later to displace the figure of

<sup>a</sup>Conventional epithets.

<sup>b</sup>This phrase is common in the Twentieth Dynasty; hence the reading here with km-sign inverted is certain.

<sup>c</sup>The determinative is lost; it may be that we have Yam (Y>m).

<sup>d</sup>This phrase (k>m n ytr) occurs also in Papyrus Westcar (IV, 10), where the unfaithful wife is burned and "cast to the Nile," and on the Mentuhotep stela (§ 748), l. 19.

<sup>e</sup>I read m wm m c>; there is no loss at the end of l. 17; for it is like ll. 18 and 19, which are stopped by Mentuhotep's head, the top of which can barely be seen under the lines, the rest of the head and figure being lost.

<sup>f</sup>None of this appears in any of the old publications.

a fan-bearer, who could have been no one else but Mentuhotep. He must have fallen into disfavor, and for some reason have been displaced from his position of honor behind the king.

INSCRIPTION OF AMENEMHET<sup>a</sup> (AMENI)

515. Amenemhet was one of the most powerful of the Benihasan<sup>b</sup> princes. He succeeded his father (I, 465, ll. 7-8) Khnumhotep I, the founder of the Benihasan family, in the eighteenth year of Sesostris I, and ruled twenty-five years. He records three royal expeditions, the first of which he accompanied as commander of the military contingent from his nome, in a war against Nubia. It cannot be certainly identified with any of the Nubian expeditions of Sesostris I recorded in other sources.

516. The second and third expeditions were both for the purpose of bringing gold; the destination of the third was the mines back of Coptos,<sup>c</sup> and that of the second, although not stated, was probably the same.

517. The inscription concludes with an interesting and important description of Amenemhet's administration of his principality.

518. <sup>1</sup>Year 43 under the majesty of <sup>2</sup>Sesostris I,<sup>d</sup> living forever and ever; <sup>3</sup>corresponding to year 25<sup>e</sup> in the Oryx nome with the heredi-

<sup>a</sup>Carved on the jambs of the doorway of his cliff-tomb in Benihasan (No. 2), copied by Champollion in 1828 and published (Monuments, 395, 399; Notices descriptives, II, 427-30); copied by Hay in 1828 (British Museum, Add. Manuscript No. 29813, 84, 85); by Wilkinson in 1834 (Manuscripts, II, 22-26); by Lepsius in 1842, published (Denkmäler, II, 122); from Lepsius by Birch, Egyptian Texts, 7-11; and Bunsen, Egypt's Place, 2d ed., V., 724 f.; finally by Newberry (Beni Hasan, I, Pl. VIII; see his bibliography, 24).

<sup>b</sup>On the Benihasan princes and Amenemhet's place therein, see §§ 620 ff.

<sup>c</sup>For the mines of Wadi Foakhir, on the Coptos road, see Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 463, and Wilkinson-Birch, II, 238.

<sup>d</sup>Full titulary.

<sup>e</sup>This fixes the accession of Amenemhet in the Oryx nome, in the eighteenth year of Sesostris I.

tary prince, count, [—] Amen[emhet],<sup>a</sup> triumphant. <sup>4</sup>Year 43, second month of the first season, day 15. O ye who love life and hate <sup>5</sup>death, say ye, 1,000 loaves and beer, 1,000 oxen and geese <sup>6</sup>for the ka of the hereditary prince, count, [—], great lord of the Oryx nome, [—], attached to Nekhen, lord of Nekhbet, chief of prophets, Ameni, triumphant.

First Expedition

519. I followed my lord when <sup>7</sup>he sailed southward to overthrow his enemies among the four<sup>b</sup> barbarians. I sailed southward, as the son of a count, wearer of the royal seal, and commander in chief of the troops of <sup>8</sup>the Oryx nome, as a man represents his old father,<sup>c</sup> according to [his] favor in the palace and his love in the court. I passed Kush, <sup>9</sup>sailing southward, I advanced the boundary of the land, I brought all gifts; my praise, it reached heaven. Then <sup>10</sup>his majesty returned in safety, having overthrown his enemies in Kush the vile. I returned, following him, with ready face.<sup>d</sup> <sup>11</sup>There was no loss among my soldiers.

Second Expedition

520. I sailed southward, to bring gold ore for the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere (Sesostris I), living forever and ever. <sup>12</sup>I sailed southward together with the hereditary prince, count, oldest son of the king, of his body, Ameni.<sup>e</sup> I sailed southward, with a number, 400 of all the choicest of <sup>13</sup>my troops, who returned in safety, having suffered no loss. I brought the gold exacted of me; I was praised for it in the palace;<sup>f</sup> <sup>14</sup>the king's-son praised god for me.

<sup>a</sup>The full form of this nomarch's name is Amenemhet (Ymn-m-h · t = "Amon is in front"). In place of this, another form of name is frequently used in these inscriptions, viz., Ameni (Ymny = "Belonging to Amon"), sometimes defectively written "Amen."

<sup>b</sup>Compare the "four eastern countries," § 675, l. 9.

<sup>c</sup>This shows that he must have succeeded his father in the Oryx nome. Although his father's name is lacking here, it must have been Khnumhotep (I), the first of the Benihasan family (see § 627, l. 56).

<sup>d</sup>Orders were always given "in the face of" an officer; an officer prepared for efficient service is therefore "ready of face" in the Egyptian idiom.

<sup>e</sup>This is the crown prince, who afterward became King Amenemhet II; his name, like that of our nomarch Amenemhet often, is here in the form Ameni.

<sup>f</sup>The inscription here proceeds to the left (north) door jamb.

Third Expedition

521. Then I sailed southward to bring ore, to the city of Coptos, together with the hereditary prince, count, governor of the city and vizier, Sesostris. I sailed southward with a number, 600 <sup>15</sup>of all the bravest of the Oryx nome. I returned in safety, my soldiers uninjured; having done all that had been told me.

Ameni's Able Administration

522. I was amiable, and greatly loved, a ruler beloved of his city. Now, I passed years <sup>16</sup>as ruler in the Oryx nome. All the imposts of the king's house passed through my hand. The gang-overseers of the crown possessions of the shepherds of the Oryx nome gave to me<sup>a</sup> 3,000 bulls in their yokes. I was <sup>17</sup>praised on account of it in the palace each year of the loan-herds. I carried all their dues<sup>b</sup> to the king's house; there were no arrears against me in any office of his. The entire Oryx nome labored<sup>c</sup> for me <sup>18</sup>in <sup>19</sup>— —<sup>d</sup>.

Ameni's Impartiality and Benevolence

523. There was no citizen's daughter whom I misused, there was no widow whom I oppressed, there was no <sup>1</sup>peasant<sup>1</sup> whom I repulsed,<sup>e</sup> there was no shepherd whom I repelled, <sup>19</sup>there was no overseer of serf-laborers whose people I took for (unpaid) imposts, there was none wretched in my community, there was none hungry in my time. When years of famine came <sup>20</sup>I plowed all the fields of the Oryx nome, as far as its southern and northern boundary, preserving its people alive

<sup>a</sup>This means that Amenemhet received a herd of 3,000 cattle from the royal herds, to be maintained by him on shares. He kept them so well that he was praised for it each year when his payments fell due. The cattle of the king on the estate of Thuthotep (Bersheh, I, Pl. XII) are also clearly distinguished from his own; thus: ". . . . . great numbers of his cattle from the king, and his cattle of the estate in the districts of the Hare nome;" his own cattle being those of "the estate."

<sup>b</sup>The dues for the herds which he had received. On this entire transaction, see Müller, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1885, 85, 86.

<sup>c</sup>To labor or work for a king or nobleman is to pay him an impost from the results or products of one's labor. It is used of entire countries in the Empire.

<sup>d</sup>"In extended goings," probably meaning in widely extended activity.

<sup>e</sup>Read hsj(w)·n·y=relative form.

and furnishing its food so that there was none hungry therein. I gave to the widow as (to) her who had a husband; <sup>2</sup>I did not exalt the great above the small in all that I gave. Then came great Niles,<sup>a</sup> possessors of grain<sup>b</sup> and all things, (but) I did not collect the arrears of the field.<sup>c</sup>

---

STELA OF IKUDIDI<sup>d</sup>

524. This stela was erected at Abydos on the occasion of Ikudidi's visit there, while on an expedition to the oases which lie in the desert behind Abydos. It is the mention by him of the occasion of his visit which makes his stela of importance; for this is the earliest expedition to these peoples of which we know anything.

The inscription is very crude and difficult, and contains many hieratic signs which the artist could not put into hieroglyphic.

Date

525. <sup>1</sup>Year 34 under the majesty of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere, the Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of <sup>2</sup>Offering, Beloved of All Gods, Son of Re, Sesostris (I), living forever and ever.

Prayer

526. <sup>3</sup>An offering which the king gives, etc., . . . . .<sup>4</sup>. . . .<sup>e</sup> for the revered one <sup>5</sup>before the great god, the lord of heaven, the steward, Ikudidi (Ykw-dydy).

---

<sup>a</sup>Inundations.

<sup>b</sup>Meaning that the inundations brought these things; two kinds of grain were apparently mentioned.

<sup>c</sup>Meaning that he did not collect the balance due after the short payments of taxes during the unfruitful years.

<sup>d</sup>Stela from Abydos in the Berlin Museum, No. 1199, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 89. I used a copy kindly furnished me by Schaefer.

<sup>e</sup>The usual mortuary prayer in the name of Osiris.

Expedition

527. I came from Thebes, as a king's-confidant, <sup>6</sup>doing all his pleasure, in command of the youth of the recruits, to visit the <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> of the land of the Oasis-<sup>7</sup>dwellers, as an excellent official, whom his lord knows, effective in plan, <sup>8</sup>whom the officials of the palace exalt.<sup>a</sup>

Tomb

528. I have made this tomb at the stairway of the great god, in order that I may be among <sup>9</sup>his followers, while the soldiers who follow his majesty give to my ka of his bread <sup>10</sup>and his <sup>1</sup>provision<sup>1</sup>, just as the king's-messenger does, who comes inspecting the boundaries of his majesty.

INSCRIPTION OF INTEFYOKER<sup>b</sup>

529. In striking corroboration of the stela of Intef I is that of Intefyoker. Above is the date: "Year 33 under the majesty of Kheperkere (Sesostris I), living forever." The usual mortuary offering is then invoked:

"For the revered, scribe of <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>,<sup>c</sup> supervisor of fields in the Thinite, nome of the South (tp ršy),<sup>d</sup> Imsu (Ymsw), southward as far as the Crocodile nome,<sup>e</sup> northward as far as the Panopolite nome.<sup>e</sup> The <sup>a</sup>Or: "who exalts the officials of the palace," their position being subject to him.

<sup>b</sup>Mortuary stela, in Leyden Museum (V, 3; Leemans, Description raisonnée des monuments égyptiens à Leide, 264-66). The historical portion was first published by de Rougé, Revue archéologique, 1st ser., VI, 560; then completely by Piehl, Inscriptions, III, XXI-XXII. I had also an excellent copy from the original by Sethe, which he kindly loaned me.

<sup>c</sup>Brugsch (Geographical Inscriptions, I, 211) states that this is the "Hinterland" of the Thinite nome.

<sup>d</sup>See § 396, l. 18, note.

<sup>e</sup>In the list of Ramses II at Abydos (Mariette, Abydos, I, 11, a) and in the oldest of all the lists, discovered February, 1900 (MS. Borchardt's Tagebuch) by Borchardt at Abusir, the Crocodile nome occupies the sixth place from Elephantine, and the order is Thebes, Coptos, Crocodile (end of Abusir list), Diospolis parva, Abydos, Akhmim. Hence the ancient Thinite (Abydos) nome was bounded on the north by the Panopolite (Akhmim) nome, and on the south by the Crocodile nome; the nome of Diospolis parva being a later division.

father's father of my father<sup>a</sup> was field-scribe in the waters of Abydos of the Thinite nome, since the time of Horus: Wahenekh (W<sup>3</sup> h-<sup>c</sup> nb), King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Son of Re, Intef (I)."<sup>b</sup>

---

INSCRIPTIONS OF MENTUHOTEP<sup>c</sup>

530. The inscriptions of Mentuhotep contain little of historical importance, but were regarded as so excellent in style and content that they were partially copied<sup>d</sup> on the mortuary stela of Sehetepibre, a nobleman living under Sesostris III and Amenemhet III. Their favor continued even into the Empire, when a nobleman under Queen Ahhotep also copied them on his stela.<sup>e</sup> The text on the front, beginning with the names of Sesostris I, proceeds as follows:

531. Hereditary prince, vizier and chief judge, attached to Nekhen, prophet of Mat (goddess of Truth), giver of laws, advancer of offices, confirming<sup>f</sup> the boundary records, separating a land-owner from his neighbor, pilot of the people, satisfying the whole land, a man of truth before the Two Lands, 'accustomed' to justice like Thoth, his like in satisfying the Two Lands, hereditary prince in judging the Two Lands,

---

<sup>a</sup>Imsu's great-grandfather was therefore a contemporary of King Intef I. Allowing 40 years for a generation, this Intef was still living over 100 years before Amenemhet I. Cf. § 415 and Steindorff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1895, 90, 91, and Birch, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IV.

<sup>b</sup>The king's name is not inclosed in a cartouche.

<sup>c</sup>On his mortuary stela found at Abydos, now in Cairo (No. 20539); published by Mariette, Abydos, II, 23 (very inaccurate; Catalogue général d'Abydos, 144, No. 617) = Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 303, 304; Daressy has added the verso, Recueil, X, 144-49. I had also a copy of the original by Schaefer, which he kindly loaned me.

<sup>d</sup>The form of the representations in the arch of the stela was also adopted. See Daressy, Recueil, X, 144.

<sup>e</sup>The text on the verso was the one copied. It is much mutilated. Daressy has published all three in a parallel arrangement.

<sup>f</sup>Or: "recording."

supreme head in judgment, putting matters in order, wearer of the royal seal, chief treasurer, Mentuhotep.

Hereditary prince, count, chief of all works of the king, making the offerings of the gods to flourish, setting this land [— —] according to the command of the god. [————], sending forth two brothers satisfied with the utterances of his mouth, upon whose tongue is the writing of Thoth, more accurate than the weight, likeness of the balances, fellow of the king in counseling [— —], giving attention to hear words, like a god in his hour, excellent in heart, skilled in his fingers, exercising an office like him who holds it, favorite of the king before the Two Lands, his beloved among the companions, powerful among the officials, having an advanced seat to approach the throne of the king, a man of confidences to whom the heart opens.

532. Hereditary prince over the [—] of the (royal) castle (wsh·t), finding the speech of the palace, knowing that which is in every body (heart), putting a man into his real place, finding matters in which there is irregularity, giving the lie to him that speaks it, and the truth to him that brings it, giving attention, without an equal, good at listening, profitable in speaking, an official loosening the (difficult) knot, whom the king (lit., god) exalts above millions, as an excellent man, whose name he knew, true likeness of love, free from doing deceit, whose steps the court heeds, overthrowing him that rebels against the king, hearing the house of the council of thirty, who puts his 'terror' among the barbarians (h<sup>2</sup> s' tyw), when he has silenced the Sand-dwellers, pacifying the rebels because of their deeds, whose actions prevail in the two regions, lord of the Black Land and the Red Land, giving commands to the South, counting the 'number' of the [—] of the Northland, in whose brilliance all men move, pilot of the people, giver of food, advancing offices, lord of designs, great in love, associate of the king in the great castle (wsh·t), hereditary prince, count, chief treasurer, Mentuhotep, he says:

533. "I am a companion beloved of his lord, doing that which pleases his god daily, prince, count, sem priest, master of every wardrobe of Horus, prophet of Anubis of [— —], the hry ydb, Mentuhotep, prince in the seats of 'Splendor,'<sup>a</sup> at whose voice they (are permitted to) speak in the king's-house, in charge of the silencing of the courtiers, unique one of the king, without his like, who sends up the truth to the palace, great herald of good things, alone great, sustaining alive the people. One to whom the great come in obeisance at the double gate of the king's-house; attached to Nekhen, prophet of Mat, pillar 'before' the Red Land, overseer of the western highlands, leader of the magnates of South and North, 'advocate of the people, — —', merinuter priest, prophet of Horus, master of secret things of the house of sacred writings, '— —', governor of the (royal) castle, prophet of Harkefti, great lord of the royal wardrobe, who approaches the limbs of the king, '————', overseer of the double granary, overseer of the double silver-house, overseer of the double gold-house, master of the king's writings of the (royal) presence, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, master of secret things of the 'divine words' (hieroglyphics), chief treasurer, Mentuhotep." He says: . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>Name of a building.

534. Here follows a mortuary prayer, after which the concluding lines (22, 23) refer specifically to his building commissions at Abydos, as follows: "I conducted the work in the temple, built his<sup>a</sup> house (pr), and dug the lake; I masoned the well, by command of the majesty of Horus." The back<sup>b</sup> also contains references to buildings at Abydos:

I conducted the work in the temple, built of stone of Ayan. . . . .
I conducted the work on the sacred barque (nšm t), I fashioned its colors.
. . . . . ——— offering-tables of lapis lazuli, of bronze, of electrum, and silver; copper was plentiful without end, bronze without limit, collars of real malachite, ornaments (mn-njr t) of every kind of costly stone. — — — of the choicest of everything, which are given to a god at his processions, by virtue of my office of master of secret things.

<sup>a</sup>This must refer to the king or the god.

<sup>b</sup>The text of the back as copied very copiously by Schetepibre, has been translated only once, to save space (see §§ 746 ff.). Only the references to building are translated here. The back begins with a royal decree, commanding that there be built for Mentuhotep "a tomb at the stairway of the great god, lord of Abydos, recording all thy offices and all the pleasing things which thou didst." It was to be furnished with statues and endowments; but the conclusion is illegible.

THE CONTRACTS OF HEPZEFI<sup>a</sup>

535. Legal documents from civil, as distinguished from criminal, processes of early Egypt are so rare, and the contracts of Hepzefi also throw so much light on both political and social conditions in the Middle Kingdom, that it seemed necessary to include them in these historical translations. They offer nothing in the political history of the family of the Siut nobles, and it is not possible to connect the nomarch, Hepzefi, in any way with the earlier generations, known to us at Siut in the Tenth and Eleventh Dynasties (§ 391). He doubtless marks a new family installed here by the powerful Twelfth Dynasty, in preference to the earlier family, which had been friendly to the northern dynasty.

The ten contracts were made solely to secure to Hepzefi, after his death, certain ceremonies and offerings from the priesthoods of Siut. Similar contracts were customarily made with the priests of Abydos. Mentuhotep and Sehetepibre, nobles of the same time, say on their Abydos tombstones: "I gave contracts for the remuneration of the prophets of Abydos"<sup>b</sup> (§ 746). The kings did the same (§ 765).

536. The form of the contracts is sufficiently clear; but the language is very involved, and burdened with an excess of relative clauses. Space will not permit the full commentary which they need in many places;<sup>c</sup> but attention should at least be called to the sixth contract which Hepzefi as count made with himself as superior prophet of Upwawet.

<sup>a</sup>Engraved upon the east wall of the great hall in Hepzefi's cliff-tomb at Assiut (see § 391 and note). The only complete copy is that published by Mr. Griffith (F. L. Griffith, The Inscriptions of Siut and Dêr Râjeh, London, 1889), which is a model of care and accuracy. It is unnecessary to refer to the earlier publications, as Mr. Griffith has collated them all. The first adequate treatment was that of Erman, written, unfortunately, before the appearance of Mr. Griffith's text (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 159-84), which fact necessitated leaving some obscure passages unrendered. Cf. also Maspero, Etudes de mythologie et d'archéologie, I, 62-74.

<sup>b</sup>Reverse of the well-known Mentuhotep stela, Recueil, X, 146.

<sup>c</sup>The general reader should refer to Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 145-47, 497, 498.

Two facts in the socio-political organization of the time are brought out by these contracts: (1) The property of the prince was held under two different titles, viz., (a) by inheritance from his father, the property being called the "paternal estate" (nw-pr-yt), which he could bequeath at will; and (b) by virtue of his appointment<sup>a</sup> as "count" (h<sup>3</sup>ty-<sup>c</sup>) by the king, the property being called the "count's estate" (pr-h<sup>3</sup>ty-<sup>c</sup>), which he could not legally bequeath. The distinction between these two estates is clearly maintained throughout, and whenever Hepzefi bequeathes anything from his "count's estate" he concedes that such a title can endure only so long as his successors are willing to recognize it, and by appeal to the common feeling in such matters, he urges his successors to recognize it (e. g., § 547, ll. 280, 281) (2) There are in the contracts four classes of society: the "count" (h<sup>c</sup>ty-<sup>c</sup>), or nomarch; the official (sr); the "citizen" (nds, lit., "the small"), and the "peasant" (y<sup>c</sup>hty), lit., "belonging to the field," enumerated in descending scale. The interrelations of the four are not wholly discernible. The "citizen," like the count, gives to the temple from fields called "his field," which he therefore either owned or held in rental. The peasant is called "his (the citizen's) peasant," and may therefore have been his serf or slave. He cultivated the field for the citizen, and carried the harvest offering to the temple for him (cf. ll. 280, 281). The "official" (sr) may have been of the same social class as the "citizen."

The importance of these contracts in a study of the mortuary customs and beliefs is evident, but a discussion of these questions does not fall within the scope of the present translations.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup>On such appointment by the king, see § 385.

537. There is a title above (l. 260):<sup>b</sup> “The command, which the hereditary prince and count, etc., Hepzefi, made,” which belongs to an introduction, giving instructions to Hepzefi’s mortuary priest, as follows:

538. <sup>269</sup>The hereditary prince and count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi; he says to his mortuary priest:<sup>c</sup> “Behold, all these things, which I have secured by contract from these priests, are under thy charge. For, behold, it is the mortuary priest of a man, who should maintain his possessions and maintain his offering.

<sup>270</sup>Behold, I have informed thee; (as for) these things, which I have given to these (w<sup>c</sup>b-) priests, as compensation for these things, which they have given to me, take heed lest anything among them be lacking. (As for) every word of my lists, which I have given to them, let thy son hear it, thy heir, <sup>271</sup>who shall act as my mortuary priest. Behold, I have endowed thee with fields, with people, with cattle, with gardens (and) with everything, as every count of Siut (does), in order that thou mayest make offerings to me with contented heart. Thou standest over all my possessions, which I have put <sup>272</sup>under thy hand. Behold, they are before thee in writing.<sup>d</sup> These things shall belong to thy particular son, whom thou lovest, who shall act as my mortuary priest, before thy (other) children, as food which I have [bequeathed] to him; not permitting that he divide them to his children, (but) according to this word which I have commanded thee.”

I. FIRST CONTRACT

Title

539. <sup>273</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made, with the lay priests of the temple of Upwawet, lord of Siut, to-wit:

<sup>a</sup>See Erman’s treatment, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 163–65.

<sup>b</sup>The numbering of lines follows Griffith’s edition.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., “servant of his ka” (k), indicating his office very clearly as a mortuary one; hence the above rendering.

<sup>d</sup>Referring either to these inscriptions or papyrus originals in possession of the mortuary priest.

What Hepzefi Receives

540. There shall be given<sup>a</sup> to him: A white loaf per individual (w<sup>c</sup>b-) priest, for his statue, which is in the temple of Anubis, <sup>274</sup>lord of Rekreret (Rkrret) on the first of the 5 intercalary days, when Upwawet, lord of Siut, proceeds to this temple.

What He Pays

541. He hath given<sup>a</sup> to them for it his share in the bull offered to Upwawet, lord of Siut, in this temple, when <sup>275</sup>he proceeds to it, consisting of his quarter, due to the count.

Source of Payment

542. Lo, he spake to them, saying: "Behold ye, I have given to you this quarter due to me from this temple, in order that this white bread may be endowed, <sup>276</sup>which ye give to me." Lo, they had given to him the inherited portion of the bull, for his statue, (which is) in charge of his mortuary priest, before he gave to them of this quarter.

Conclusion

543. Lo, they were satisfied with it.

II. SECOND CONTRACT

Title

544. <sup>277</sup>Contract, which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made with the lay priests of the temple of Upwawet, lord of Siut, to-wit:

What Hepzefi Receives

545. There shall be given to him:

(a) White bread by each one among them, for his statue, (which is) in charge of his mortuary priest, in the first month of the first season on the first day, <sup>278</sup>New Year's Day, when the house makes gifts to its lord, when the fire is kindled in the temple.

<sup>a</sup>The verbal forms are regularly in the first clause an infinitive (lit., "concerning giving to him") and in the second a relative form ("what he hath given").

(b) And they shall<sup>a</sup> go forth following his mortuary priest, at his glorification, until they reach the northern corner of the temple, as they do, when they glorify their own noble ones,<sup>b</sup> <sup>279</sup>on the day of kindling the fire.

What He Pays

546. He hath given to them for it a heket of grain from every field of the estate (pr-dt), from the first of the harvest of the count's estate; as every citizen of Siut does, from the first of his harvest. Now, behold, he begins <sup>280</sup>with having his every peasant give it into this temple, from the first of his field.

Injunction to Future Nomarchs

547. Lo, he said: "Behold, ye know that, as for anything which any official (sr) or any citizen gives into the temple, from the first of his harvest, it is not agreeable to him, that there should be lack <sup>281</sup>therein. Therefore shall no future count diminish to future priests, that which is secured by contract of another count. This grain shall belong to the lay priests, each by himself; <sup>282</sup>no priest, who shall give to me this white bread, shall divide (it) to his colleagues; because they give this white bread, each by himself."

Conclusion

548. Lo, they were satisfied with it.

III. THIRD CONTRACT

Title

549. <sup>283</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made, with the official body of the temple, to-wit:

What Hepzefi Receives

550. There shall be given to him bread and beer in the first month of the first season, on the eighteenth day, the day of the Wag-feast. List of that which shall be given:

<sup>a</sup>An infinitive construction continued from the first clause (lit., "besides the going forth on their part").

<sup>b</sup>The dead.

<sup>284</sup> Register of Names	( Kby -) Jars of Beer	Flat Loaves	White Loaves
Superior prophet.....	4	400	10
Announcer.....	2	200	5
Master of secret things.....	2	200	5
Keeper of the wardrobe <sup>1</sup> .....	2	200	5
Overseer of the storehouse.....	2	200	5
Keeper of the wide hall.....	2	200	5
Overseer of the house of the ka.....	2	200	5
Scribe of the temple.....	2	200	5
Scribe of the altar.....	2	200	5
Ritual priest.....	2	200	5

What He Pays

551. He hath given to them for it, 22 temple-days, from his property of his paternal estate, but not from the property of the count's estate: <sup>285</sup>4 days to the superior prophet, and 2 days to each one among them.

Definition of "Temple-Day"

552. Lo, he hath said to them: "Behold, as for a temple-day, it is  $\frac{1}{360}$  <sup>286</sup>of a year. When ye therefore divide everything that comes into this temple, consisting of bread, of beer, and of meat for each day, that which makes <sup>287</sup> $\frac{1}{360}$  of the bread, of the beer, and of everything, which comes into this temple, is the unit <sup>b</sup>in these temple-days which I have given to you. <sup>288</sup>Behold, it is my property of my paternal estate, but it is not the property of the count's estate; for I am a priest's (w<sup>c</sup>b) son, like each one of you. Behold, <sup>289</sup>these days shall belong to every future official staff of the temple, since they deliver to me this bread and beer, which they give to me."

Conclusion

553. Lo, they were satisfied with it.

IV. FOURTH CONTRACT

Title

554. <sup>290</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made with the lay priests of Upwawet, lord of Siut, to wit:

<sup>a</sup>I do not understand the hnt inserted here.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "the per unum" (hr w<sup>c</sup>), as we use per centum; hr is here the distributive preposition as in all the passages, indicating the individual priest.

What Hepzefi Receives

555. There shall be given to him:

(a) A white loaf per each individual among them, for his statue, which is in the temple, in the first month of the first season, on the eighteenth day, <sup>291</sup>the day of the Wag-feast.

(b) And they shall go forth, following his mortuary priest, at his glorification, when the fire is kindled for him, as they do when they glorify their own noble ones, on the day of kindling the fire in the temple. Now, <sup>292</sup>this white bread shall be under the charge of my mortuary priest.

What He Pays

556. He hath given to them for it:

(a) A khar<sup>a</sup> (ḥ<sup>c</sup>r) of fuel for every bull, and an uhet<sup>a</sup> (wḥ<sup>2</sup>·t) of fuel for every goat, which they give into the storehouse of the count, when each bull and each goat is offered to the temple, <sup>293</sup>as ancient<sup>b</sup> (dues) which they give into the storehouse of the count. Lo, he hath remitted it to them, not collecting it from them.

(b) And hath given to them 22 jars (ḥby) of beer and 2,200 flat loaves which the official body of the temple give to him in the first month of the first season, on the eighteenth day, <sup>294</sup>as compensation, for their giving white bread per each individual among them, from that which is due to them from the temple, and (as compensation for) his glorification.

Further Specification

557. Lo, he spake to them, saying: "If this fuel be reckoned against you<sup>c</sup> by a future <sup>295</sup>count; behold, this bread and beer shall not be diminished, which the official body of the temple deliver to me, which I have given to you. Behold, I have secured it by contract from them."

<sup>a</sup>Measures of bulk. The meaning of this clause is obscure; but probably it means that each bull or goat due the prince (of those offered to the temple) is given him by the priests together with fuel. This latter he now remits as part payment for the white bread.

<sup>b</sup>Or: "as recompense for that which they give, etc."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "reckoned from you," probably meaning: "as due from you." The fuel, etc., could not be legally conveyed by the count, because they belonged to the count's and not to the paternal estate. If payment of the fuel, etc., should be ultimately exacted, the lay priests would still have the bread and beer which the prince has secured by contract from the "official body" of the Upwawet temple (see third contract).

Conclusion

558. Lo, they were satisfied with it.

V. FIFTH CONTRACT

Title

559. <sup>296</sup>Contract, which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzeſi, triumphant, made with the 'keeper of the wardrobe' of the temple, concerning:

What Hepzeſi Receives

560. Three 'wicks' with which the fire is kindled for the god.

What He Pays

561. While he (the count) has given to him (the keeper) for it: 3 temple-days. Now, these 3 temple-days shall be due to every future 'keeper of the wardrobe', because <sup>297</sup>these 3 'wicks' are due to him (the count).

Disposition of Wicks

562. 1. Lo, he spake to him, saying: "One of them shall be given to my mortuary priest, when he goes forth, kindling the fire with it for the god, on the fifth of the 5 intercalary days, New Year's<sup>a</sup> night, by the 'keeper of the wardrobe'. He shall 'deliver' it <sup>298</sup>to my mortuary priest after he does that which he does with it in the temple."

563. 2. "He shall give another on New Year's Day, in the morning, when the house makes gifts to its lord, when the lay priests of the temple give to me this white bread, which they give to me per individual priest (w<sup>c</sup>b), on New Year's Day. It shall be due <sup>299</sup>from my mortuary priest at my glorification."

564. 3. "He shall give another in the first month of the first season on the eighteenth day, the day of the Wag-feast, at the same time with the white bread, which they give to me per individual priest (w<sup>c</sup>b). This 'wick' shall be due from my mortuary priest when glorifying me, together with the lay priests."

Lo, he said to him:

---

<sup>a</sup>Really the evening before New Year's Day.

Definition of "Temple-Day"

565. <sup>300</sup>"Behold, as for a temple-day, it is  $\frac{1}{360}$  of a year.<sup>a</sup> When ye<sup>b</sup> therefore divide everything that comes into the temple, consisting of bread, beer, and everything for each day, that which makes  $\frac{1}{360}$  of the bread, of the beer, and of everything which comes into this temple, is the unit in these temple-days which I have given <sup>301</sup>to thee. Behold, it is my property, of my paternal estate, but not of the count's estate."

Future Validity of Agreement

566. "Now, these 3 temple-days shall belong to every future [keeper of the wardrobe,<sup>1</sup>] because these 3 [wicks<sup>1</sup>] are due to him, which thou hast given to me for these 3 temple-days, which I have given to thee."

Conclusion

567. Lo, he was satisfied with it.

VI. SIXTH CONTRACT

Title

568. <sup>302</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made with the superior prophet of Upwawet,<sup>c</sup> concerning:

What Hepzefi Receives

569. The roast of meat which is due upon the altar, which is placed upon the oblation-table, for every bull which is slaughtered in the temple.

And one (st<sup>2</sup>-) jar for (every) (ds-) jar of beer every day <sup>303</sup>of a procession; which shall be due to every future superior prophet.

What He Pays

570. He (the count) hath given him (the superior prophet) for it, 2 temple-days from his property, of his paternal estate, but not from the property of the count's estate.

<sup>a</sup>See the same computation in the second contract.

<sup>b</sup>Although speaking to the keeper of the wardrobe, as the conclusion (l. 301) shows.

<sup>c</sup>That is, with himself! In his capacity as count he makes a contract with himself in his capacity as superior prophet of Upwawet.

Disposition of Meat

571. Lo, the count Hepzefi spake, saying: "When <sup>304</sup>this roast of meat and this (st<sup>2</sup>-) jar of beer come for every day of a procession, they are due to my statue, (which is) in charge of my mortuary priest."

Conclusion

Lo, he was satisfied therewith, in the presence of the official body of the temple.

VII. SEVENTH CONTRACT

Title

572. <sup>305</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made, with the great (w<sup>c</sup>b-) priest of Anubis, concerning:

What Hepzefi Receives

573. Three <sup>1</sup>wicks<sup>1</sup> due to him, with which the fire is kindled in the temple of Anubis:

One on the fifth of the 5 intercalary days, the New Year's night.

Another on New Year's Day.

Another <sup>306</sup>in the first month of the first season, on the seventeenth day, the night of the Wag-feast.

What He Pays

574. He hath given to him for it: 1,000 (h<sup>2</sup>·t)-measures of land in <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>,<sup>a</sup> from the fields of his father, as compensation for these 3 <sup>1</sup>wicks<sup>1</sup>, which he gives to my mortuary priest, in order to kindle the light for me therewith.

Conclusion

575. Lo, he was satisfied therewith.

VIII. EIGHTH CONTRACT

Title

576. <sup>307</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made, with the lay priests of the temple of Anubis; to-wit:

<sup>a</sup>Sm<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>y = "the southern union," a designation of some locality in Hepzefi's estate.

What Hepzefi Receives

577. There shall be given to him:

(a) A white loaf per each individual among them, for his statue, in the first month of the first season, on the seventeenth day, the night of the Wag-feast.

(b) And that they shall go forth, following his mortuary priest, and kindle for him (the count), the fire at <sup>308</sup>his glorification, until they reach the lower steps of his tomb, just as they glorify their noble ones, on the day of kindling the fire.

(c) And that the priest belonging in each month shall give <sup>1</sup>— of bread (p<sup>3</sup> k) and a jar of beer for his statue, which is on the lower steps of his tomb, when he comes forth from offering in <sup>309</sup>the temple<sup>a</sup> every day.

What He Pays

578. He hath given to them for it: grain from the first of the harvest of every field of the count's estate, as every citizen of Siut does from the first of his harvest. Now, behold, he begins with having his every peasant give it from the first of his field into the temple of <sup>310</sup>Anubis.

Injunction to Future Nomarchs

579. Lo, the count, Hepzefi, said: "Behold, ye know, that, as for every official (šr) and every citizen, who gives the first of his harvest into the temple, it is not agreeable to him, that there should be lack therein. Therefore shall no future count diminish to future priests that which is secured by contract of another count."

Individual Payment and Remuneration

580. <sup>311</sup>This grain shall belong to the lay priests, per each individual<sup>b</sup> priest, who shall give to me this white bread. He shall not divide it to his colleagues, because they give this white bread, each by himself.

<sup>a</sup>This would imply that the temple of Anubis was close to the necropolis and Hepzefi's tomb, a similar indication is seen in the fact that the officials of the necropolis receive the wicks from the "great priest" of Anubis to be carried to the mortuary priest. The temple of Upwawet was, on the contrary, in the town. See Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 165.

<sup>b</sup>Heretofore this idea has been expressed by the distributive preposition hr, "per;" but in this passage a remarkable idiom appears, lit., "by the mouth of the head of each priest."

Conclusion

581. Lo, they were satisfied therewith.

IX. NINTH CONTRACT

Title

582. <sup>312</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, triumphant, made, with the overseer of the necropolis, and with the mountaineers,<sup>a</sup> to-wit:

What Hepzefi Receives

583. There shall be given:<sup>b</sup>

(a) That they go to the house of Anubis, on the fifth of the 5 intercalary days, (being) New Year's night, and on New Year's Day, to receive 2 'wicks', which the great priest (w<sup>c</sup>b) of Anubis gives to the count, Hepzefi.

(b) And that they go, at his glorification, until they reach <sup>313</sup>his tomb.

(c) And that they give this one 'wick' to his mortuary priest, after they glorify him, just as they glorify their noble ones.

What He Pays

584. He hath given to them for it:

(a) 2,200 (h<sup>2</sup>·t-) measures of land in the '—',<sup>c</sup> from his property of the paternal estate, but not of the count's estate:

<sup>314</sup> Register of Names	( H<sup>2</sup>·t- ) Measures
Overseer of the Necropolis	400
Chief of the Highland	200
Eight mountaineers	1,600

(b) Besides giving to them the foot of the leg of every bull, that shall be slaughtered upon this highland, in every temple.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "those who are upon the mountain" (tpyw-dw); they must also be connected with the necropolis, and receive their name from its location in the mountainous cliffs.

<sup>b</sup>The usual "to him" is omitted.

<sup>c</sup>W<sup>2</sup>b·t.

What Hepzefi Further Receives

585. They have given to him:<sup>a</sup>

The Overseer of the Necropolis, 2 (ds-) jars of beer; 100 flat loaves; 10 white loaves.

The Chief of the Highland, 1 (ds-) jar of beer; 50 flat loaves; 5 white loaves.

<sup>315</sup>Eight mountaineers, 8 (ds-) jars of beer; 400 flat loaves; 40 white loaves.

For his statue, (which is) in charge of his mortuary priest, in the first month of the first season, on the first day, (being) New Year's Day, when they glorify him.

Future Validity of Contract

586. Lo, he said to them: "Behold, these (h<sup>2</sup>-t-) measures of land, which I have given to 'you',<sup>b</sup> shall belong to <sup>316</sup>every overseer of the necropolis, to every chief of the highland, and to every mountaineer who shall come (hereafter), because they shall deliver to me this bread and beer."

Additional Stipulation

587. <sup>317</sup>"And ye shall be behind [my] statue which is in my garden, following it when ————,<sup>c</sup> <sup>318</sup>at every feast of the beginning of a season, which is celebrated in this temple."

Conclusion

588. Lo, they were satisfied therewith.

X. TENTH CONTRACT

Title

589. <sup>319</sup>Contract which the count, the superior prophet, Hepzefi, made, with the overseer of the highland, to-wit:

<sup>a</sup>The addition of a second stipulation of payments to the count is in violation of the usual form.

<sup>b</sup>Mr. Griffith saw traces of j ("him") in this place, which is broken, but the context demands "you."

<sup>c</sup>From l. 316 on, the lines are shorter, so that not more than five or six words are lost here.

What Hepzeft Receives

590. There shall be given to him 1 (hbn' t-) jar of beer, <sup>320</sup>1 large (— rrt-) loaf, 500 flat loaves, and 10 white loaves, for his statue, (which is) in charge of his mortuary priest, in the first month of the first season, on the seventeenth day, the night of the Wag-feast.

What He Pays

591. <sup>321</sup>He hath given to him for it:

(a) 1,000 (h' t-) measures of land in [—],<sup>a</sup> from his property of his paternal estate, but not from the property of the count's estate.

(b) And <sup>322</sup>a quarter of every bull that is slaughtered on this highland in every temple.

Future Validity of Contract

592. Lo, he said to the overseer of the highland: <sup>323</sup>“Behold, these (h' t-) measures of land shall belong to every future overseer of the highland, because he delivers to me this <sup>324</sup>bread and beer.”

Conclusion

593. Lo, he was satisfied therewith.

---

<sup>a</sup>W b' t.

REIGN OF AMENEMHET II

INSCRIPTION OF SIMONTU<sup>a</sup>

594. Besides determining the succession of the first three kings of the Twelfth Dynasty, this stela is also important because it shows that Sesostris I was living in the third year of his son, Amenemhet II's reign. They were therefore coregent at least that long.

Date

595. <sup>1</sup>Year 3 <sup>2</sup>under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nubkure (Nb-k<sup>2</sup>w-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenemhet II), living like Re.

Simontu's Titles

596. <sup>3</sup>Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, favorite of Horus, lord of the palace, who does that which his lord praises <sup>4</sup>every day, royal scribe, Simontu (S<sup>2</sup>-Mn<sup>t</sup>w), the revered; he saith:

Simontu's Birth and Childhood

597. I was born<sup>5</sup> in the time of the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sehetepibre (Amenemhet I) triumphant. I was a child who fastened on the girdle<sup>b</sup> under his majesty (Amenemhet I), <sup>6</sup>when he departed in peace.<sup>c</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>On a stela in the British Museum (No. 828, also called "Anastasi 17"); published by Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 697; Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, I, 83; from Sharpe by Bunsen, Egypt's Place, 2d ed., V, 724 f.; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1250; Maspero, Etudes de mythologie et d'archéologie, I, 39, 40; Piehl, Sphinx, II, 131-36 after Brugsch. None of these texts is without considerable divergence from the rest. A collation of the Berlin squeeze (No. 1083), and later of the original in London, shows that no copy is without error.

<sup>b</sup>See the same phrase § 294, l. 1.

<sup>c</sup>Piehl has shown from the well-known parallel examples of the Old Kingdom (Sphinx, II, 135) that the words here: "proceeded, departed, or passed on in peace," mean "died." This is undoubtedly correct, but the question is: Whose death is referred to? It cannot be the death of Sesostris I, who is called "living forever,"

Career under Sesostri I.

598. The king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere (Sesostri I), living forever; his majesty appointed me scribe <sup>7</sup>of the harem <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>;<sup>a</sup> he praised me on account of it very greatly.

His majesty appointed me scribe <sup>8</sup>of <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>; his majesty praised me on account of it very greatly.<sup>b</sup>

His majesty made me grain-registrar <sup>9</sup>in South and North; his majesty praised me on account of it very greatly.

His majesty appointed me scribe of the great harem; <sup>10</sup>his majesty praised me on account of it very greatly.

His majesty appointed me royal scribe and chief of works <sup>11</sup>in the entire land; his majesty praised me because I was silent,<sup>c</sup> he loved me, because I repelled the <sup>1</sup>inflamed<sup>1</sup>,<sup>d</sup> I never repeated any evil word.

The revered royal scribe, Simontu.

INSCRIPTION OF SIHATHOR<sup>e</sup>

599. Sihathor's sole title is that of "assistant treasurer," an office which he really administered, and one which called him to varied enterprises of historical importance, the chief of which were his expeditions to Nubia and Sinai. After the usual mortuary formularies follow the biographical remarks.

and was therefore still living when the inscription was made. Grammatically, it is also impossible to accept Sesostri as subject of the verb, when verb and adverbial phrase precede the subject. Hence the verb must be a pseudo-participle, in a temporal clause, belonging to the preceding sentence. This leaves Sesostri without a verb, so that it must be an anticipatory subject, in apposition with "his majesty," of l. 6.

<sup>a</sup>Is this the official called sgm in the Empire?

<sup>b</sup>"Greatly," omitted in all the copies, is clear on the squeeze.

<sup>c</sup>Gr, as shown by the squeeze against all the copies, which have hr (except Sharpe).

<sup>d</sup>See the clever explanation of Piehl, Sphinx, II, 135 f.

<sup>e</sup>Mortuary stela from Abydos, now in the British Museum (No. 569), published by Sharpe, Inscriptions, II, 74; Birch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1874, 112 f., and Egyptian Texts, 21-24. These texts are so bad that it is difficult to use them at all. The translation is made from my own copy of the original. See also Brugsch, Geschichte, 136 ff.

Sihathor's Many Commissions

600. I was real "beloved of his lord," the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nubkure (Nb-k<sup>3</sup>w-R<sup>c</sup> Amenemhet II), living forever. He commanded, he sent me many times on every excellent commission, the things which his majesty desired should be done according to the desire of the heart of his majesty.

Pyramid Statues

601. His majesty commanded that I should be brought to the pyramid: Amenu-kherep (Ymnw-hr<sup>p</sup>),<sup>a</sup> living forever, to superintend the work on his 16<sup>b</sup> statues of hard stone of millions of years, which happened [within]<sup>c</sup> a day of two months. Never happened the like with any superintendent [—————].

Expeditions to Sinai and Nubia

602. I visited<sup>d</sup> the Mine-land (Sinai) as a youth, and I forced the (Nubian) chiefs to wash gold. I brought malachite,<sup>e</sup> I reached Nubia (t<sup>3</sup>-pd<sup>3</sup>t) of the negroes. I went, [overthrowing]<sup>f</sup> by the fear of the Lord of the Two Lands; I came [to] He (H<sup>3</sup>),<sup>g</sup> I went around its islands, I brought away its produce.

603. The real beloved of his lord, his favorite, saying the good and repeating that which is loved, doing that which the Lord of the Two Lands praises, communicating his design, not [knowing]<sup>1</sup> the [—] hearted, free from blemish, defending his boundary, watching his possessions, watchful without laxity, the assistant treasurer Sihathor, triumphant.

<sup>a</sup>This is the pyramid of Amenemhet II. A similar reference to him, with name Ameni for Amenemhet, occurs at Benihasan (§ 520). (See Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 39 f.) The name of the pyramid is also written Ameni-kherep on the Stela No. 839 in the British Museum.

<sup>b</sup>So the original; the publications all have 15.

<sup>c</sup>Hm n.

<sup>d</sup>On the verb yr<sup>y</sup> ("make") in the sense of "visit," see § 351, l. 9, note. The Mine-land (By<sup>3</sup>) is here written with feminine t; it is elsewhere masculine, so that it is possible that we should render it merely "mine."

<sup>e</sup>F<sup>3</sup> k<sup>3</sup> t is of course to be read mf<sup>3</sup> k<sup>3</sup> t as in the Pyramid Texts, see the same writing § 266. This is equivalent to saying "I visited Sinai," and this gives us a second antithetic parallelism with Sinai and Nubia; that is, north and south, as the extremes.

<sup>f</sup>Read hr s<sup>hr</sup> t?

<sup>g</sup>Birch's and Brugsch's reading "Heha" is impossible, otherwise one would identify the place with Heh (Hh) = Semneh. It is near Abu Simbel; see III, 496.

INSCRIPTION OF KHENTKHETWER<sup>a</sup>

604. The tablet is of particular importance, having been found on the Red Sea at Wadi Gasus, of which it furnishes the Egyptian name, "Sewew" (S<sup>2</sup>w<sup>w</sup>), to which place an expedition led by Khentkhetwer returned from Punt, in the twenty-eighth year of Amenemhet II.

605. Above is Amenemhet II offering a libation to Min of Coptos; below is the figure of Khentkhetwer with arms uplifted in worship, accompanied by the following inscription:

<sup>1</sup>Giving divine praise and laudation to Horus [—], to Min of Coptos, <sup>2</sup>by the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, the master of the judgment-hall <sup>3</sup>Khentkhetwer (Hnt-ht-wr) after his arrival in <sup>4</sup>safety from Punt; his army being <sup>5</sup>with him, prosperous and healthy; and his ships having landed <sup>6</sup>at Sewew (S<sup>2</sup>w<sup>w</sup>). <sup>7</sup>Year 28.

SINAI INSCRIPTION<sup>b</sup>

606. The inscription records the opening of a new mine in the twenty-fourth year of Amenemhet II.

Year 24, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Amenemhet II.

Mine-chamber which the real king's-confidant . . . . .<sup>c</sup> the captain of sailors,<sup>d</sup> Men, born of Mut, triumphant and revered, excavated.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>On a stela discovered by Burton (Wilkinson, General View, 364) in the Wadi Gasus on the coast of the Red Sea opposite Coptos; now in the Museum of Alnwick Castle (No. 1935); published first by Erman from a squeeze, in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 204, 205; then by Birch, Catalogue Alnwick Castle, pl. III, 268 ff. Cf. Brugsch, Völkertafel, 54, 55, and 68; Schweinfurth, Wadi Gasus, 11, n. 2.

<sup>b</sup>Cut on the rocks near the great reservoir in the Sarbût el-Khadem; published from British Museum squeeze, No. 99, by Weill, Sinai, 158.

<sup>c</sup>Conventional epithets, but the text is unsafe. <sup>d</sup>Mr-c prw.

<sup>e</sup>Verb of the relative clause; a similar record under the same king, but without the year, is in the vicinity (Weill, Sinai, 159).

STELA OF KHENTEMSEMETI<sup>a</sup>

607. This stela is chiefly occupied with a pompous recitation of honors, such as is characteristic of the time. Many of the noble's functions in connection with the royal person—he had charge of the king's wardrobe—are entirely unintelligible. The interest and importance of the monument lie in Khentemseteti's meager record of a journey of inspection among the temples of Egypt, undertaken by command of the king. He went up the river as far as Elephantine, and on his return stopped at Abydos, where he improved the opportunity of his official visit, as so many other functionaries did, to erect a memorial stela at the sanctuary of the great god of the dead. This is the stela with which we are dealing.

Introduction

608. <sup>1</sup>Amenemhet II, beloved of Osiris, First of the Westerners; given life. <sup>2</sup>His real favorite servant, master of secret things of the king's wardrobe, Khentemseteti (Hnt-m-sm'y'ty); he says:

His Honors

609. "His majesty set me <sup>3</sup>at his feet in youth, my name was mentioned before my equals. His majesty greeted <sup>4</sup>me, he <sup>5</sup>— a daily marvel, and I was verily <sup>6</sup>—; I was praised <sup>7</sup>today more than yesterday. I became real king's-confidant, and his majesty received my approaches. When the officials were placed in their stations, <sup>8</sup>I <sup>9</sup>held<sup>1</sup> office before them <sup>10</sup>— — — —; priest of the Southern Crown, (of) the Northern Crown, <sup>11</sup>(of) Khnum; servant of the royal toilet, adjusting (the crown called) "Great-in-Magic," supporting the White Crown in the "Great House" (Pr-wr). Great lord of Nekheb (El Kab), servant <sup>12</sup>of Neit in the northern palace, to whom (the goddess)

<sup>a</sup>From Abydos; now in British Museum, No. 574; published by Sharpe, Inscriptions, I, 79; Piehl, Inscriptions, III, XV, XVI. I had my own copy of the original.

<sup>b</sup>At royal audiences.

Rekhet gives the hand, one whose approach is avoided, when adjusting the Red Crown, when <sup>9</sup>bringing forth in splendor, Horus, lord of the palace. Nurse of the god (Pharaoh) in the private chamber [————]. Chief of Sais, <sup>10</sup>in the administration of private affairs, lord of fear in the houses of Neit, great companion in the gold-house, at the birth of the god in the morning.

His Appointment to Inspect Temples

610. <sup>11</sup>I came at the front in the presence of his majesty, he had me inspect the divine fathers,<sup>a</sup> to expel evil and to prosper the fashion <sup>12</sup>of their work, in eternal affairs.<sup>b</sup> I commanded to fashion<sup>c</sup> their offering-tables (wḏh), the electrum was under <sup>13</sup>my seal.

Arrival at Elephantine

611. I reached Elephantine according to this command; I kissed the earth before the lord of the cataract (Khnum).

Return to Abydos

612. I returned by <sup>1</sup>the way<sup>1</sup> over which I had passed. <sup>14</sup>I drove in the mooring-stake<sup>d</sup> at Abydos.

Erection of Stela

613. I fixed my name <sup>15</sup>at the place where is the god Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord of eternity, ruler of the West, (the place) <sup>16</sup>to which all that is, flees, for the sake of the benefit therein, in the midst of <sup>17</sup>the followers of the lord of life, that I might eat his loaf, and come forth by day; that my spirit might enjoy <sup>18</sup>the ceremonies of people, kind in heart toward my tomb, and in hand <sup>19</sup>toward my stela. For I have not done [—]; that the god may <sup>1</sup>be favorable<sup>1</sup> to me in <sup>20</sup>judgment, when I am “there;”<sup>e</sup> that I may labor, being a spirit in the necropolis-cliff, <sup>21</sup>the ruler of eternity; that I may operate the rudder, that I may descend into the sacred barque (nšm' t); that I may smell <sup>22</sup>the earth before Upwawet. Khentemseti, triumphant, lord of reverence.

<sup>a</sup>Priests.

<sup>b</sup>Temple matters.

<sup>c</sup>Nb, the verb used especially of metal-work; the determinative is probably a man with a blow-pipe.

<sup>d</sup>Meaning “I landed,” as in § 423.

<sup>e</sup>A designation of the abode of the dead.

REIGN OF SESOSTRIS II

INSCRIPTION OF HAPU<sup>a</sup>

614. The following inscription contains a double date, showing that Sesostris II was associated as coregent with his father in the latter's thirty-second year, the coregency continuing at least three years. It also shows that the forts in Nubia were subject from time to time to inspection by officers especially sent thither for the purpose; but, unfortunately, not all have recorded their mission on the rocks as did the officer Hapu.

615. On the right is the name of Amenemhet II, "beloved of Satet, mistress of Elephantine;" on the left is the name of Sesostris II, "beloved of Khnum, lord of the cataract region;" between them is the following inscription:

616. Made in the year 3, under the majesty of Horus: Seshmutowe (Sšmw-t<sup>3</sup>wy=Horus-name of Sesostris II), corresponding to the year 35<sup>b</sup> under the majesty of Horus: Hekenemmat (Hkn-m-m<sup>c3</sup>t=Amenemhet II). The r-<sup>1</sup>,<sup>c</sup> Hapu (H<sup>3</sup>pw) came, in order to make an inspection in the fortresses of Wawat.<sup>d</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the rocks near Assuan; published by Young, Hieroglyphics, Pl. 61 (very bad); Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, 10 (copied from Young); Lepsius, Zwölfte Dynastie, II; Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 123, e (good), and de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 25, No. 178 (date wrong). I also had Lepsius' squeeze (No. 360, a) which I collated with all the publications; the text of de Morgan, ibid., is almost as bad as Young's.

<sup>b</sup>So all the texts except de Morgan's (Catalogue des monuments, 25), which has 36! As we have a double date here, this would increase the reign of Amenemhet II by an entire year, if correct. The squeeze is quite clearly 35; this was also the opinion of Sethe, who examined the squeeze with me.

<sup>c</sup>An uncertain title (r-<sup>1</sup>kf<sup>3</sup>-yb), which occurs also with Hapu's figure below the inscription; see Bergmann, Recueil, VII, 187.

<sup>d</sup>The original has the mountain-determinative against de Morgan's hill-country.

INSCRIPTION OF THE TREASURER KHNUMHOTEP<sup>a</sup>

617. Above stands Sesostris II, before the god Soped, from whom he receives the symbol of life. Below stands Khnumhotep, accompanied by the following inscription:

618. <sup>1</sup>Year 1, his monument in God's-Land was executed. <sup>2</sup>The treasurer<sup>b</sup> of the god, real king's-confidant, his beloved, his favorite, the darling of his lord, <sup>3</sup>knowing the law, discreet in executing (it); <sup>4</sup>zealous for him<sup>c</sup> who favors him; <sup>5</sup>not trespassing against the injunction of the palace, the command of the court; <sup>6</sup>favorite of the crown, being in the palace, praiser of <sup>7</sup>Horus, Lord of the Two Lands; presenting the court to the king, <sup>8</sup>truly accurate like Thoth, master of the double cabinet, Khnumhotep.

INSCRIPTION OF KHNUMHOTEP II<sup>d</sup>

619. The inscription of Khnumhotep II is our fullest and most important source for a study of the relations between the powerful nomarchs, the local counts or barons of the Twelfth Dynasty, and their contemporary kings. Like the nobles of El Kab at the rise of the Eighteenth Dynasty, the princes of Benihasan were a mainstay of the royal house in the early Twelfth. Their domain was the principality of

<sup>a</sup>Stela found at Wadi Gasus on the Red Sea, opposite Coptos; now in the collection of Alnwick Castle (No. 1935); first published by Erman from a squeeze, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 204, 205; then by Birch, Catalogue Alnwick Castle, Pl. IV, 268-70. Cf. Brugsch, Völkertafel, 54, 58, and 68; Schweinfurth, Wadi Gasûs, 11, n. 2; Wilkinson, General View, 364.

<sup>b</sup>This title is at the left of the second line (first vertical line), and appears only in Birch's text.

<sup>c</sup>The king.

<sup>d</sup>Cut on the walls of the superb chapel chamber in his tomb at Benihasan; published by Burton (Excerpta Hieroglyphica, 33, 34); by Champollion (Notices descriptives, II, 418-22); by Lepsius (Denkmäler, II, 124, 125); by Brugsch (Monuments de l'Égypte, 15-17; and Thesaurus, VI, 1513-25); and by Newberry (Beni Hasan, I, Pls. XXV, XXVI). The last, the publication of the Archæological Survey of the Egypt Exploration Fund, contains in two volumes the entire Benihasan necropolis. Its text of the great inscription of Khnumhotep II

the Oryx (the sixteenth nome of Upper Egypt), which included both banks of the river between the Hare nome on the south and the Jackal nome on the north. The desert cliffs are not far from the river on the east shore, and the narrow strip thus inclosed was sometimes detached from the Oryx nome, as a separate principality, known as "Horizon of Horus," designated usually by its chief town, Menet-Khufu, the birthplace of the great Fourth Dynasty king, Khufu. The sole witnesses to the ancient power and prosperity of this principality are its tombs, those of the Middle Kingdom being located at Benihasan, 169 miles above Cairo.

620. The first of the family in this principality, Khnumhotep II's grandfather, Khnumhotep I, was appointed by Amenemhet I; at first as count only of Menet-Khufu, and finally of the entire Oryx nome (§§ 625, 626). The narrative of the appointment refers significantly to Amenemhet I's personal visit to the principality, establishing the boundary lines, "when he cast out evil," meaning of course rebellion, or at least of unjust aggression, the last expiring struggles of other ambitious noblemen in their opposition to the new dynasty,<sup>a</sup> marking the close of the long obscure period of such wars, between the Old and the Middle Kingdom. As is much the best. The texts of Maspero (Recueil, I, 169-81) and Krebs (De Chnemoth's nomarchi inscriptione aegyptiaca commentatio, Berlin, 1890) are taken from the publications. The original text contains many patent blunders of the scribe, which render certain parts unintelligible; Mr. Griffith furnishes some useful emendations of such passages (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1890, 263-68), and some others I have added, which will be evident from the notes. The lines of the original are so short, that the translation could not be so often divided, and only every fifth line is there numbered. It has not been practicable to cut up the inscription, and assign each portion to the reign which it concerns; hence the whole has been put in the reign from which it dates.

---

<sup>a</sup>The reference is not so clear as those in the inscription of Ahmose of El Kab, who narrates three rebellions against King Ahmose I at the rise of the Eighteenth Dynasty (II, 11, 15, 16).

a special favor of the king, Sesostris I, Khnumhotep I's sons received the same domain; Nakht being appointed to Menet-Khufu (§ 627), and Amenemhet<sup>a</sup> receiving the Oryx nome, in the king's eighteenth year (§§ 518, ll. 1-3, and 627). At the same time, the sister of these two princes, Khnumhotep I's daughter Beket, married a powerful official at the court, the vizier and governor of the royal residence city. Nehri, who was also probably prince of the neighboring Hare nome (§ 628). Of this union was born Khnumhotep II, who received Menet-Khufu as his just claim through his mother, on the death of his predecessor, his uncle, Nakht,<sup>b</sup> in the nineteenth year of Amenemhet II. He ruled with great prosperity until at least the sixth year of Sesostris II,<sup>c</sup> in which year a party of thirty-seven Bedwin visited him, bringing gifts and probably desiring traffic.<sup>d</sup> Khnumhotep II greatly strengthened his family by marrying Kheti, the eldest daughter of the prince of the Jackal nome. His eldest son, Nakht, was therefore appointed to the principedom of the Jackal nome as his inheritance from his mother,<sup>e</sup> while his next son, Khnumhotep (III), after honors at

<sup>a</sup>Amenemhet (Ameni) is not mentioned by Khnumhotep II's great inscription. See note, l. 56.

<sup>b</sup>Nakht had held the principality, therefore, 43 years.

<sup>c</sup>This is the latest date in the tomb (Newberry, Beni Hasan, I, Pl. XXXVIII), so that Khnumhotep II ruled at least nineteen years. If born not long after his uncle Nakht's accession, he would have been not less than forty years of age at his own accession, and nearly sixty years old at the above latest date in his tomb.

<sup>d</sup>This is the subject of the famous scene in his tomb, naïvely identified by early Egyptologists with Abraham's visit to Egypt, with which, it is needless to say, it had nothing to do. The accompanying inscription is as follows: "The arrival, bringing eye-paint, which 37 Asiatics bring to him" (Newberry, Beni Hasan, I, Pl. XXX). Their leader is called: "Sheik of the highlands, Ibshe (Yb-š)," a good Hebrew name. The report handed in by Khnumhotep's secretary dates the event in the sixth year of Sesostris II, and calls them "Asiatics of the desert" (C<sup>o</sup>mw n šw, ibid., Pl. XXXVIII).

<sup>e</sup>For a similar inheritance through the mother, of the grandfather's office at Siut, see §§ 413 ff.

court, was appointed to his father's countship of Menet-Khufu.<sup>a</sup>

621. We are thus able to trace the history of the family through four generations in this great inscription, but the Benihasan tombs do not carry the career of these princes farther, and, perhaps because of increasing power and centralization on the part of the kings, these tombs cease abruptly at this point in the middle of the Twelfth Dynasty.

Introduction

622. <sup>1</sup>The hereditary prince, count, king's-confidant, whom his god loves, governor of the eastern highlands, Nehri's (Nḥry) son, Khnumhotep, triumphant; born of a count's (ḥꜣty-ꜥ) daughter, the matron, Beket (Bꜣḳꜣt), triumphant.

The Tomb, its Paintings and Inscriptions

623. He made (it)<sup>b</sup> as his monument; his first virtue was in adorning <sup>5</sup>his city, that he might perpetuate his name forever, and that he might establish it for eternity in his tomb of the necropolis; that he might perpetuate the name of his official staff, establishing (them) according to their offices: the excellent ones, who were in <sup>12</sup>his household, whom he raised over <sup>11</sup>his peasant-slaves (mrꜣt); every office that he sustained; all artificers according to their kind.<sup>c</sup>

His Appointment as Count of Menet-Khufu

624. His mouth saith: <sup>14</sup>"The majesty of . . . . ."<sup>d</sup>
Amenemhet (II), who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, for-

<sup>a</sup>This is not stated in the great inscription, but is referred to in a hunting scene (Newberry, Beni Hasan, I, Pl. XXXII): "to whom was given the rule (ḥḳꜣꜣt) of Khnumhotep (II) triumphant, in Menet-Khufu, when his son was appointed to the rule of I—1." To whom the last son refers is not clear, and the name of the principality is unknown. It occurs also at Siut (§ 396, l. 16), as the northern limit from which the troops of the south were mustered against Siut, and must therefore be south of Siut, and not near Benihasan.

<sup>b</sup>The tomb in which the inscription is found.

<sup>c</sup>All his favorite servants and officials of his estate are represented in the superb tomb paintings, engaged in their various duties, with their names added; it is this "perpetuation" which is meant in ll. 7-12.

<sup>d</sup>Full fivefold titulary.

ever, appointed me to be hereditary prince, count, governor of the eastern highlands, priest of Horus, and [priest] of Pakht; to the inheritance of my mother's father in <sup>20</sup>Menet-Khufu (Mn<sup>c</sup>·t-Ḥwfw).<sup>a</sup> He established for me the southern landmark;<sup>b</sup> he perpetuated the northern, like the heavens. He divided the great river along its middle, as was done for the father <sup>25</sup>of my mother, by command which came forth from the mouth of the majesty of . . . . .<sup>c</sup> Amenemhet I, who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

His Grandfather Appointed Count of Menet-Khufu

625. <sup>30</sup>He appointed him to be hereditary prince, count, governor of the eastern highlands in Menet-Khufu. He established the southern landmark, perpetuating the northern, like the heavens; he divided the great river along its middle; its eastern side <sup>35</sup>of the "Horizon of Horus,"<sup>d</sup> was as far as the eastern highland; at the coming of his majesty, when he cast out evil, shining like Atum himself, when he restored that which he found ruined; that which a city had taken <sup>40</sup>from its neighbor; while he caused city to know its boundary with city, establishing their landmarks like the heavens, distinguishing their waters according to that which was in the writings, investigating according to <sup>45</sup>that which was of old, because he so greatly loved justice.

His Grandfather Appointed Prince of Oryx Nome

626. Lo, he appointed him to be hereditary prince, count, [—], great lord of the Oryx nome. He established the landmarks: the southern on his boundary as far as <sup>50</sup>the Hare nome; his northern as far as the Jackal nome. He divided the great river along its middle: its water, its fields, its trees, its sand as far as the western highlands.<sup>e</sup>

Khnumhotep II's Uncle, Nakht, Made Count of Menet-Khufu

627. He (the king) appointed his (Khnumhotep I's) eldest son, Nakht (I) <sup>55</sup>triumphant, revered, to the rule (hk<sup>2</sup>) of his inheritance in <sup>a</sup>The chief town of the countship. It means "Nurse of Khufu," and was located in the region of Benihasan. See note, § 625.

<sup>b</sup>Lit.: "tablet."      <sup>c</sup>Full fivefold titulary.

<sup>d</sup>The "county" or principality of which Menet-Khufu was the chief town (see note on ll. 19, 20, § 624). It occupied the east side of the valley to the cliffs.

<sup>e</sup>The principality, or nome, therefore occupied the western side of the valley to the cliffs.

Menet-Khufu<sup>a</sup> as a great favor of the king, by the command which issued [from] the mouth of the majesty of king . . . . .<sup>b</sup> <sup>61</sup>Sesostris I, who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

Khnumhotep II's Birth

628. This my chief nobility is my birth, my mother having gone to be hereditary <sup>65</sup>princess, and countess, as the daughter of the ruler (hkꜣ) of the Oryx nome, to Hat-Sehetepibre<sup>c</sup> . . . . . to be the wife of the hereditary prince, count, ruler (hkꜣ) of the "New Towns," the <sup>1</sup>rd of the king of Upper Egypt, the <sup>1</sup>rd <sup>7</sup>o of the king of Lower Egypt, <sup>1</sup>in<sup>1</sup> his rank of governor of the residence city, Nehri (Nhry), triumphant, revered.

His Appointment as Count of Menet-Khufu

629. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nubkure (Amenemhet II), who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever, brought me, being the son of a count (hꜣty-ꜣ), into the inheritance of the rule (hkꜣꜣt) of my mother's father, because <sup>75</sup>he so greatly loved justice. He is Atum himself, Nubkure (Amenemhet II), who is given life, stability, satisfaction, gladness of his heart, like Re, forever. He appointed me to be count (hꜣty-ꜣ) in the year 19, in Menet-Khufu.

His Buildings and Piety

630. Then I adorned <sup>80</sup>it, and its treasures<sup>e</sup> grew in all things. I perpetuated the name of my father; I adorned the houses of the ka's

<sup>a</sup>Although the fact remains for some reason not mentioned here, it is clear that the Oryx nome, that is, the bulk of the principality, goes to Amenemhet, who began his rule in the eighteenth year of Sesostris I (§ 518, ll. 1-3), for the Oryx nome here remains unaccounted for, during the life of Nakht I.

<sup>b</sup>Fivefold titulary,

<sup>c</sup>The name of the city where Nehri lived; it means: "House of Amenemhet I," and is followed by the usual royal salutations. As Nehri was "governor of the residence city," this must be the name of the city where the king lived. The residence city of Amenemhet I was Ithtowe (Yt-tꜣwy) between Medum and Memphis, and probably that of Sesostris I, also. Griffith thinks therefore that Hat-Sehetepibre is simply another name for Ithtowe (Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, 88), a very plausible conclusion.

<sup>d</sup>Both unknown titles, here parallel.

<sup>e</sup>As emended by Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1890, 263).

and the dwelling thereof; I followed my statues<sup>a</sup> to the temple; I devoted for them <sup>85</sup>their offerings: the bread, beer, water, wine, incense, and joints of beef credited to the mortuary priest. I endowed him with fields and peasants; I commanded the mortuary offering of bread, beer, oxen, and geese, at every feast <sup>90</sup>of the necropolis: at the feast of the first of the year, of New Year's Day, of the great year, of the little year, of the last of the year, the great feast, at the great Rekeh, at the little Rekeh,<sup>b</sup> at the feast of the 5 intercalary days, at [— —], <sup>95</sup>at the 12 monthly feasts, at the 12 mid-monthly feasts; every feast of the happy living, and of the dead.<sup>c</sup> Now, as for the mortuary priest, or any person, who shall disturb them, he shall not survive, his son shall not survive in his place.

Khnumhotep II's Honors at Court

631. Greater <sup>100</sup>was my praise at the court than (that of) any sole companion. He (the king) exalted me above his nobles, I was placed<sup>d</sup> before those who had been before me. [—]<sup>e</sup> <sup>105</sup>the official body of the palace, giving praise according to my appointment, according to (my) favor which came to pass in the (royal) presence, the command of the king <sup>110</sup>himself. Never happened the like to servants [————]. He knew the manner of my tongue, the [moderation] of my character. <sup>115</sup>I was an honored one with the king; my praise was with his court, my popularity was before his "companions." The hereditary prince, count, <sup>120</sup>Nehri's son, Khnumhotep, revered.

Appointment of K. II's Son, Nakht, as Prince of Jackal Nome

632. Another honor accorded me (was): my eldest son, Nakht, born of Kheti<sup>f</sup> was appointed to the rule (hk<sup>g</sup>) of the Jackal nome, to the inheritance of his mother's father; <sup>125</sup>made sole companion; appointed to be forefront of Middle Egypt.<sup>g</sup> There were given to him

<sup>a</sup>He means the statues of his ancestors.

<sup>b</sup>Rekeh (Rkḥ) means "heat."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "every feast of the happy one in the (valley-) plain, and of the one on the mountain;" those who are on the plain still live, but those on the mountain are the dead in the cliff-tombs.

<sup>d</sup>Read dy.

<sup>f</sup>One of Khnumhotep II's two wives.

<sup>e</sup>The verb.

<sup>g</sup>Or possibly: "the South."

all ranks of nobility by the majesty of<sup>a</sup> . . . . .<sup>130</sup>. . . Sesostris II, who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever. He (the king) made his monuments in the Jackal nome, restoring that which he found obliterated, that which a city had taken from its neighbor; causing him to know<sup>135</sup> his boundary according to the 'record', investigating according to that which was of old, putting a landmark at his southern boundary, perpetuating the northern like the heavens, establishing on the fields<sup>140</sup> of the low ground,<sup>b</sup> a total amounting to 15 landmarks;<sup>c</sup> establishing upon its northern fields its boundary as far as Oxyrrhyncus. He divided the great river along its middle, <sup>145</sup>its western side (going) to the Jackal nome as far as the western highlands; when the hereditary prince, count, Khnumhotep's son, Nakht, triumphant, revered, petitioned, saying: "My waters know not the great favor of <sup>150</sup>the king's<sup>d</sup> presence."

Honors of Khnumhotep II's Second Son, Khnumhotep

633. Another prince (wr) is counselor, sole companion, great 'among' the sole companions, of numerous gifts to the palace,<sup>e</sup> sole companion. <sup>155</sup>There is not one possessed of his virtues; to whom the (sdm w-) officers hearken, the unique mouth,<sup>f</sup> closing (other) mouths, bringing advantage to its<sup>g</sup> possessor, keeper of the door of the highlands,

<sup>a</sup>Full fivefold titulary.

<sup>b</sup>Rendered by Krebs campus hostium, and treated as a proper name. The determinative of hrw is not that of the enemy as in Krebs' text, but merely a falling man, as might be expected after the root hr. It has a second determinative of land, and the word is not unknown as "low land," the best, most fertile land, next the river.

<sup>c</sup>The passage was rendered with essential correctness thirty years ago by Maspero (Recueil, I, 166) giving "quinze stèles-frontières" and "Ouob" = Oxyrrhyncus. It is therefore an oversight as now rendered in his history (Dawn, 524), recording the gift to Khnumhotep of fifteen nomes extending "from Aphroditopolis to Thebes," thus making one nomarch ruler of three-fourths of Upper Egypt. The careful establishment of the northern boundary by erecting 15 landmarks was natural, as Oxyrrhyncus is in the vicinity of the home of the hostile northern families, the descendants of the Ninth and Tenth Dynasties who fought the rising Thebans of the Middle Kingdom (see §§ 391 ff.).

<sup>d</sup>Meaning the king had not yet determined the limits in this nome, and the settling of the limits just mentioned was a result of this request.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "numerous of gifts of the palace;" the word "gifts" indicating "that which is brought;" cf. the Arabic hādīyyātūn.

<sup>f</sup>Meaning "unique counselor."

<sup>g</sup>"Its" refers to "advantage," not to "mouth."

Khnumhotep, son of Khnumhotep, son of Nehri, <sup>160</sup>who was born of the matron, Kheti.

His Restoration of Ancestors' Tombs

634. I kept alive the name of my fathers, which I found obliterated upon the doorways,<sup>a</sup> (making them) legible<sup>b</sup> in [form<sup>1</sup>]; accurate in reading, not <sup>165</sup>putting one in the place of another.<sup>c</sup> Behold, it is an excellent son, who restores the name of the ancestors; Nehri's son, Khnumhotep, triumphant, revered.

His Father's Mortuary Buildings

635. <sup>170</sup>My chief nobility was: I executed a cliff-tomb, (for) a man should imitate that which his father does.<sup>d</sup> My father made for himself a house of the ka in the town of Mernofret, of <sup>175</sup>good stone of Ayan, in order to perpetuate his name forever and establish it eternally; that his name might live in the mouth of the people and abide in the mouth of the living, <sup>180</sup>upon his tomb of the necropolis, in his excellent house of eternity, his seat of everlastingness; according to the favor of the king's presence, his love in the court.

His Father's Excellent Administration

636. He ruled his city as a babe, <sup>185</sup>before he was loosed from swaddling-clothes;<sup>e</sup> he executed a royal commission, and his two<sup>f</sup> plumes danced, as a child not yet circumcised; [for<sup>1</sup>] the king knew<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The doorways of the tombs, where it was customary to engrave the name and titles; for similar restorations by posterity, see §§ 688, 689.

<sup>b</sup>Rh in the negative is used in the sense of "undiscernible, illegible" on a stela, of Sabako, in the British Museum (No. 135), see Breasted, Zeitschrift für Ägyptische Sprache, 39, Pls. I, II, 1. 2.

<sup>c</sup>He means he was careful and accurate in reading the names, not introducing confusion among them, by restoring a name in the wrong place.

<sup>d</sup>He begins to tell of the construction of his own tomb, but is diverted by the reference to his father, whose tomb and early favor at court he recounts, before he again reverts to his own tomb and other buildings (l. 192).

<sup>e</sup>There is no doubt that this is the same word used in the description of Sesotris I's youth (§ 502, ll. 9, 10), although much corrupted.

<sup>f</sup>His plumes of office.

<sup>g</sup>Read rh stny, as shown by Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1890, 267).

the manner of his tongue, the [moderation] of his character, <sup>190</sup>Sebek-enekh's son, Nehri, triumphant, revered, whom he exalted before his nobles to be ruler (hkꜣ) of his city.

His Own Buildings

637. The achievements of the count, Khnumhotep: I made a monument in the midst of my city; I built a colonnaded hall which I found <sup>195</sup>in [ruin];<sup>a</sup> I erected it with columns anew, inscribed with my own name. I perpetuated the name of my father upon them.<sup>b</sup> I [recorded] my deeds upon <sup>200</sup>every monument.

I made a door of 7 cubits, of cedar wood without [—] for the first doorway of the tomb; double doors for<sup>c</sup> an opening of 5 cubits, 2 palms, for the shrine of the august chamber, which is in this tomb.<sup>d</sup> A prayer <sup>205</sup>for offerings, the mortuary oblations of bread, beer, oxen, geese, was upon every monument, which I made. I . . . . .<sup>e</sup> greater in monuments [in] this city than the fathers; <sup>210</sup>a child of this city, more excellent in monuments of its burial place than the ancestors, [in the buildings] made before me.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>This stands in place of the usual m ws "in ruin," and probably means something similar. (See Loret, Revue égyptologique, X, 87-94.) What this building in the city was, it is impossible to say; all city buildings having perished. Compare also the work of Kheti another member of the family, as recorded thus: "Prince and count, sole companion, [—] great lord of the Oryx nome, who made eternal monuments in the temple (ht-ntr) of Khnum, lord of Herur (Hr-wr)" (Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 354).

<sup>b</sup>N and plural strokes are lost in the lacuna; the feminine s could not have stood alone, for the building is masculine.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "of."

<sup>d</sup>"The first doorway" is, as we should expect, the main entrance to the tomb chapel. A comparison of the height of the "door" given above (7 cubits) with the surviving doorway shows that the door was enough higher than the doorway to lap slightly at top and bottom. The second doorway was for double doors; the only double doors in the tomb of Khnumhotep are those of the shrine containing his statue, in the back wall of the chapel chamber. A comparison of the height of this doorway, given by the inscription, with the surviving doorway itself, shows exact correspondence. On the whole passage, see Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 88-90.

<sup>e</sup>These lines are unintelligible.

<sup>f</sup>The syntax of both these comparisons is doubtful in several places; it is clear in both that he is comparing his own building activity with that of his ancestors; the first comparison referring to his works in the city, and the second to those in the highland of the necropolis.

Crafts Encouraged

638. I was munificent in monuments; I taught every craft <sup>215</sup>which had been [neglected] in this city, in order that my name might be excellent upon every monument which I [made], . . . . .<sup>a</sup>

Conclusion

639. <sup>220</sup>The hereditary prince, count, Nehri's son, Khnumhotep, born of Beket, triumphant, revered.

<sup>22</sup> Foreman of the tomb, the chief treasurer, Beket.<sup>b</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Unintelligible.

<sup>b</sup>This is the architect's "fecit," the signature of the official who conducted the work.

REIGN OF SESOSTRIS III

THE CONQUEST OF NUBIA

640. Sesostris III completed the conquest of Nubia, begun by his predecessors nearly one hundred years before, and was known in the Empire as the real conqueror of the region between the first and second cataracts. He conducted not less than four campaigns in this district, and probably more; and by his canalization of the cataract passages, and the erection of fortresses at strategic points, he made this country a permanent possession of the Pharaohs, which was never lost except for a time during the Hyksos period, until the dissolution of the Empire. Important material documents, like the fortresses of Kummeh and Semneh, are graphic witnesses of the character and permanence of this conquest.<sup>a</sup>

641. The documentary materials for Sesostris III's operations in Nubia are as follows:

- I. The Canal Inscriptions (§§ 642-48).
- II. The Elephantine Inscription (§§ 649, 650).
- III. The First Semneh Stela (§§ 651-52).
- IV. The Second Semneh Stela (§§ 653-60).
- V. Inscription of Ikhernofret (§§ 661-70).
- VI. Inscription of Sisetet (§§ 671, 672; see also §§ 676 ff., and 687).

I. THE CANAL INSCRIPTIONS

642. In order to establish unbroken water communication with the country above the first cataract, Sesostris III cleared a channel<sup>a</sup> which permitted the passage of his war fleets, and later doubtless of much commerce also. Although this enterprise had been begun in the Sixth Dynasty, it was now over five hundred years since Uni's attempts to pierce the cataract (§ 324). Sesostris III's achievement was recorded in the two following inscriptions, cut on the rocks of the Island of Sehel. The first, recording the "making" of the canal, is undated, but as the second states, he repaired ("made anew")<sup>b</sup> the canal in the eighth year, it must have been made before this date, and probably in anticipation of the campaign of that year.

---

<sup>a</sup>A further reference to one of these Nubian campaigns of Sesostris III is found in the life of Sebekkhu (§§ 676 ff.).

First Inscription<sup>c</sup>

643. A scene above, represents the king, Sesostris III, standing before the goddess Anuket, exactly as below (§ 646) before Satet; below them is the inscription:

644. He made (it) as his monument for Anuket, mistress of Nubia (T<sup>3</sup>·-p<sup>d</sup>·t) — — —, making for her a canal, whose name is: "Beautiful-Are-the-Ways-of-Khekure" (Sesostris III), that he may live forever.

645. In the eighth year the channel was already in need of repair, and had to be cleared for the passage of the expedition of that year. This is recorded in the

<sup>a</sup>Mr. Wilbour and Mr. Somers Clarke found a rock-cut canal south of Sehel, but its dimensions do not coincide with those given in the inscription (see Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1894, 63, 64).

<sup>b</sup>But it should be remembered that "anew" may possibly mean "for the first time" as it later sometimes does.

<sup>c</sup>Text published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 136, b=de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 87, No. 39. This inscription was known fifty years before Mr. Wilbour's discovery below, but the name of the canal was misunderstood as that of a city (e. g., Wiedemann, Ägyptische Geschichte, 252). The inscription did not become clear until the publication of Mr. Wilbour's discovery (cf. quotation of Erman's letter, Recueil, XIII, 203). The old misunderstanding still survives, and the canal appears as "an emporium" bearing the name "Ways of Khâkeri" in some publications.

Second Inscription<sup>a</sup>

646. In a scene at the top stands the king, Sesostris III, wearing the crowns of Upper and Lower Egypt, and bearing the (w<sup>3</sup>s-) scepter and (hrp-) baton. The goddess "Salet, mistress of Elephantine," stands before him, presenting him with life; while behind him is the "chief treasurer . . . . chief of works."<sup>b</sup> Below is the following inscription:

647. Year 8 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Khekure (H<sup>c</sup>-k<sup>3</sup>w-R<sup>c</sup>, Sesostris III), living forever. His majesty commanded to make the canal anew,<sup>c</sup> the name of this canal being: "Beautiful-Are-the-Ways-of-Khekure-[Living]-Forever," when his majesty proceeded up-river to overthrow Kush, the wretched.

Length of this canal, 150 cubits; width, 20; depth, 15.

648. The canal was still in use in the New Kingdom, and was cleared again by Thutmose I and III (II, 75, 76, 649, 650).

II. ELEPHANTINE INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

649. In addition to the great works on the canal, Sesostris III also gave some attention to the fortress<sup>e</sup> of Elephantine as he passed southward on the campaign of the eighth year. The work was recorded there by Ameni, the officer commissioned to do it, in the following inscription:

<sup>a</sup>Discovered by Mr. Charles Wilbour, and published by him in Recueil, XIII, 202-4; later by de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 86, No. 20.

<sup>b</sup>He has been omitted by Wilbour, and his name is lacking in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments.

<sup>c</sup>Or possibly: "for the first time."

<sup>d</sup>From a small stela now in the British Museum (No. 852); it was published by Birch (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1875, 50), and again, Egyptian Texts, 12, 13. I used my own copy of the original, as that of Birch contains a number of inaccuracies.

<sup>e</sup>The fortress is supposed by Maspero (Recueil, XIII, 204) to be the wall connecting Assuan and Philæ, of which there are considerable remains at the present day.

650. Year 9,<sup>a</sup> third month of the third season under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris III) beloved of Satet, mistress of Elephantine, living forever. Command of his majesty to the Magnate of the South, Ameni, [to make] a doorway in the fortress of Elephantine, to make a [—] (a building) for the crown-possessions<sup>b</sup> of the South — — the — people in the region of Elephantine; when [my lord, life! prosperity! health! journeyed to overthrow the wretched Kush.

III. THE FIRST SEMNEH STELA<sup>c</sup>

651. Sesostris III, having, in his eighth year, pushed his southern advance above the second cataract, to a point about thirty-seven miles south of Wadi Halfa, set up his landmark, the stone marking the southern boundary of his realm. His great-grandfather, Sesostris I, had already conquered to this point (§§ 510 ff.), but Sesostris III was now prepared to maintain the conquest.

652. <sup>1</sup>Southern<sup>d</sup> boundary, made in the year 8, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris III), who is given life forever <sup>2</sup>and ever; in order to prevent that any Negro should cross it, by water or <sup>3</sup>by land, with a ship, (or) any herds of <sup>4</sup>the Negroes; except a Negro who shall come to do trading in Iken<sup>e</sup> (Ykn), <sup>5</sup>or with <sup>a</sup>Birch has 8, but the original has 9: the last unit on the left is very faint, and was therefore overlooked. This is doubtless the date on which the work was finished, the order having been given as the king passed, a year previously. It is hardly probable that there was another campaign in the ninth year after that of the eighth.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. § 522, l. 16.

<sup>c</sup>A red granite stela discovered by Lepsius at Semneh on the west bank of the Nile. It is now in Berlin (No. 14753); published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 136, i, and (copied therefrom) Lemm, Lesestücke, 62. On its strange history, see § 653, note, p. 294.

<sup>d</sup>At the top of the stela is the single word "West," indicating on which side of the river it belonged. There must have been another on the other side, but it has never been found.

<sup>e</sup>Unknown place.

a commission. Every good thing<sup>a</sup> shall be done with them, but without allowing <sup>6</sup>a ship of the Negroes to pass by Heh<sup>b</sup> (Hh), going downstream, forever.

IV. THE SECOND SEMNEH STELA<sup>c</sup>

653. After the campaign of the eighth year, it was again necessary in the twelfth year to chastise the Nubians. Of this expedition only the meagerest record has reached us in an inscription<sup>d</sup> on the rocks at Assuan, of which, beside the date and the name of Sesostris III, we can read only the following: "His majesty journeyed to overthrow Kush."

654. Already in the sixteenth year further disturbances in Kush again called the king thither, and this expedition is twice recorded: on the second Semneh stela; and on a duplicate found on the island of Uronarti, just below Semneh.<sup>e</sup> The duplicate contains in the first line, after the

<sup>a</sup>Read yh·t, "thing," the hieratic for which was mistaken by the copyist for tw (Erman).

<sup>b</sup>Modern Semneh (see Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 379), on the west side of the river, about thirty-seven miles above Wadi Halfa. Here and at Kummeh, on the eastern side, Sesostris III erected two fortresses for enforcing the blockade above decreed.

<sup>c</sup>Red granite stela set up on the west shore at Semneh in the temple in the fortress of Sesostris III (see § 640). It has had a remarkable history since its discovery by Lepsius in July, 1844. Broken into two pieces, the upper portion after packing, was forgotten by Lepsius' workmen, and with the "First Semneh Stela" (§§ 651 f.) was left in Semneh, so that only the lower portion of the "Second Stela" reached Berlin. Some forty years later (1886) the forgotten pieces were found by Insinger on the banks of the river, still in Lepsius' boxes. They were taken to Cairo, where they remained in the Gizeh (Bulak) collection for many years, but were at last secured by the Berlin Museum, and the two portions of the "Second Semneh Stela" were rejoined in 1899, after a separation of over fifty years (Berlin, No. 1157). Published by Lepsius (Denkmäler, II, 136, h); I also had a copy from the original, kindly loaned me by Professor Erman.

<sup>d</sup>Petrie, Season in Egypt, XIII, 340. It has been omitted in de Morgan's Catalogue des monuments.

<sup>e</sup>It was discovered by Steindorff, Borchardt, and Schaefer in March, 1900. It is not yet published, and I collate the variants from a copy by Borchardt, cited in the note as U. An account of it, with a copy of the title, is given by Steindorff in Berichte der philologisch-historischen Classe der Königlichen Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Leipzig, Juni, 1900, p. 233.

king's name, a variant of great historical importance, as follows: "Stela made in the year 16, third month of the second season, when the fortress: 'Repulse-of-the-Troglodytes'<sup>a</sup> was built."

655. It was on this campaign, therefore, that the Uronarti fortress was built. The temple in the Semneh fortress was already built for a feast, likewise called "Repulse-of-the-Troglodytes,"<sup>b</sup> doubtless in commemoration of this victory, which was celebrated in it on the twenty-first of Pharmuthi, a month later. This feast continued to be celebrated in the Empire, and the enactments for offerings upon it, and the other feasts of this temple, were reinstated by Thutmose III (see II, 167 ff.).

656. The "Second Semneh Stela" is as follows:<sup>c</sup>

Introduction

<sup>1</sup>Live the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>2</sup>Sesostris III,<sup>d</sup> who is given life, stability, satisfaction forever.

Boundary Established

657. <sup>3</sup>Year 16, third month of the second season,<sup>e</sup> (occurred) his majesty's making the southern boundary as far as Heh<sup>e</sup> (Hh). <sup>4</sup>I

<sup>a</sup>This is certainly the name of the fortress on Uronarti; we could render: "the fortress which repulses the T.," for which we have the parallel: "the walls of the prince, made to repulse the Bedwin" (§ 493); but the fact that a feast of Sesostris III, probably celebrating this victory, was also called "Repulse-of-the-Troglodytes" (II, 171), is clear evidence that we have here a name for the fortress. Moreover, another fortress of Sesostris III is mentioned in the same way in the inscription (Lepsius, Denkmäler, 151, c) of an officer of one of the first Sebekhoteps, cut on the neighboring rocks to record the height of the Nile (§§ 751, 752).

<sup>b</sup>There was another feast celebrating a similar victory in this temple, called "Binding-of-the-Barbarians" (see II, 171, l. 12), at which offerings were made to the queen, "great king's-wife Merseger." have made my boundary beyond<sup>a</sup> (that) of my fathers; I have <sup>5</sup>increased that which was bequeathed to me.<sup>b</sup> I am a king who speaks and executes; that which my heart conceives <sup>6</sup>is that which comes to pass by my hand; (one who is) eager to possess, and <sup>7</sup>powerful to <sup>7</sup>—; not allowing<sup>c</sup> a matter to sleep in his heart . . . . . <sup>8</sup>. . . . . <sup>8</sup> attacking him who attacks<sup>1</sup>, silent in a matter,<sup>d</sup> or <sup>9</sup>answering a matter according to that which is in it; since, if one is silent after attack, it strengthens <sup>10</sup>the heart of the enemy. Valiance is eagerness, cowardice is to slink back; he is truly a craven <sup>11</sup>who is repelled upon his border; since the Negro hearkens <sup>12</sup>to<sup>1</sup> the <sup>12</sup>— of the mouth; <sup>12</sup>it is answering him which drives him back; when one is eager against him, he turns his back; when one slinks back, he begins to be eager. <sup>13</sup>But they are not a people of might, they are poor and broken<sup>e</sup> in heart. <sup>14</sup>My majesty has seen them; it is not an untruth.

<sup>c</sup>The variants in the duplicate are chiefly of grammatical importance, but where they clear up the meaning, I have adduced them in the notes.

<sup>d</sup>Text has full titulary.

<sup>e</sup>This phrase is lacking in U; and in its place appears the statement above (§ 654) regarding the fortress.

Plundering of Nubia

658. I captured their women, I carried off<sup>15</sup> their subjects, went forth to their wells, smote their bulls; I reaped<sup>f</sup> their grain, and <sup>16</sup>set fire thereto. (I swear) as my father lives for me, I speak<sup>g</sup> in truth, without a lie<sup>h</sup> therein, <sup>17</sup>coming out of my mouth.

Future Maintenance of Boundary

659. Now, as for every son of mine who shall maintain this boundary, <sup>18</sup>which my majesty has made, he is my son, he is born to my

<sup>a</sup>Lit., “in front of,” which is to an Egyptian the same as “southward of.”

<sup>b</sup>At this point the narrative is interrupted by an encomium on himself by the king, which is in poetic parallelism, and in parts is unintelligible. It merges into satire on the Negroes, and continues to l. 14, where the narrative is resumed.

<sup>c</sup>U has tm ssgr, lit., “not causing a matter to sleep.”

<sup>d</sup>U has gr mdi.

<sup>e</sup>U has sd·w “broken, pierced,” heretofore known only in connection with a wall, an egg, or the like; it has nothing to do with “tails,” as rendered, Petrie, History of Egypt, I, 180.

<sup>f</sup>This word does not mean “destroy,” as so often rendered, but is used of gathering the harvest, the vintage, or even getting stone from a quarry, e. g., inscription of Uni (§ 323, l. 43). U has the finite form: wh>·ny, “I reaped.”

<sup>g</sup>U has “I have spoken” (dd-ny).

<sup>h</sup>U has: hn ym n cbc, in which we are to read hn n cbc together like hn-n-mdwt; hn n is a pleonastic phrase before nouns indicating speech (see Erman, Glossar, s. v.).

majesty, the likeness of a son who is the champion of his father, <sup>19</sup>who maintains the boundary of him that begat him, Now, as for him who shall relax it, and shall not fight <sup>20</sup>for it; he is not my son, he is not born to me.

Royal Statue at Boundary

660. Now, behold, my majesty caused a statue<sup>a</sup> <sup>21</sup>of my majesty to be made upon this boundary, which my majesty made; in<sup>b</sup> order that ye might prosper because of it, and in order that ye might fight for it.<sup>c</sup>

V. INSCRIPTION OF IKHERNOFRET<sup>d</sup>

661. The following commission of Ikhernofret to Abydos, of great interest and importance in many respects, is inserted here especially for its bearing on the Nubian wars of Sesostri III. It is not dated, but we are able to date it from another source with considerable probability. Ikhernofret was accompanied to Abydos by one of his officials, Sisatet;<sup>e</sup> each of the two men erected a stela there on this occasion, and that of Sisatet states that the visit was made "when . . . . . Sesostri III journeyed to overthrow the wretched Kush, in the year 19." The gold taken from Kush (ll. 3, 4) was therefore probably captured in the campaign of the sixteenth year (§ 657). We have nowhere else any record of the campaign of the nineteenth year.

662. Ikhernofret narrates how he executed the king's commission, and adds a statement of the functions which

<sup>a</sup>No trace of this statue has ever been found.

<sup>b</sup>U has the proper genitive n.      <sup>c</sup>Or: "upon it," the boundary.

<sup>d</sup>On his memorial tablet erected at Abydos; now in Berlin (No. 1204, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 90, 91); published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 135, h. It is in bad condition, and full of gaps. I had a copy made from the original, which Schaefer kindly placed at my disposal; it filled nearly all of the gaps in Lepsius' Denkmäler. Schaefer has since published it, with full translation and commentary, in Sethe's Untersuchungen, IV, but I have not yet seen it.

<sup>e</sup>§§ 671 ff.

he fulfilled at the feasts of Osiris and the celebration of the sacred drama, re-enacting incidents from the myth of the god. Among these duties, there is one of the greatest interest, viz., the conduct of Osiris "to his tomb before Peker." This is, of course, none other than the tomb of the hoary old King Zer, which already at this time was misunderstood as the tomb of Osiris.

Introduction

663. <sup>1</sup>Live the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khékure (Sesostri III),<sup>a</sup> who is given life forever and ever.

Royal Letter; Introduction

664. <sup>2</sup>Royal command to the hereditary prince, count, —, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, lord of the double gold-house, lord of the double silver-house, chief treasurer, Ikhernofret (yy-hr-n/r' t), revered:

Commission to Abydos

665. <sup>3</sup>"My majesty commands that thou shalt be sent up-river to Abydos,<sup>b</sup> to make monuments for my father Osiris, First of the West-erners, to adorn his secret place with the gold, <sup>4</sup>which he<sup>c</sup> caused my majesty to bring from Upper Nubia in victory and in triumph. Lo, thou shalt do this in <sup>5</sup>— for offering, in satisfying my father Osiris, since my majesty sendeth thee, my heart being certain of thy doing everything <sup>6</sup>according to the desire of my majesty; since thou hast been brought up in the teaching of my majesty; thou hast been in the training of my majesty, <sup>7</sup>and the sole teaching of my palace. My majesty appointed thee —, while thou wast a young man (hwn) of 26 years. My majesty hath done this, <sup>8</sup>(because) I have seen thee to be one excellent in character (sbr), ready of tongue on coming forth from the body, and sufficient in speech. My majesty [sendeth]<sup>a</sup> thee <sup>9</sup>to do this, (since) my [majesty] has recognized that no one doing it possesses thy good qualities. Quickly go thou, and do thou according to all that my majesty has commanded.”

<sup>a</sup>Full fivefold titular.

<sup>b</sup>The reference shows the royal residence was down-river, that is, northward from Abydos. An inscription of the king's sixth year, hitherto unnoticed, furnishes further indication of his interest in the Abydos temple. The mortuary stela of a certain Sebekhotep (British Museum, No. 257) after the usual prayer, states: "His majesty commanded to dispatch the servant (the deceased) to the crown possessions of Thinis of the South (tp ršy), to cleanse the temples. He did them; <sup>1</sup>cleansed<sup>1</sup> that they might be pure for the monthly feast, and clean for the half-monthly feast." At the top is the date.

<sup>c</sup>Probably Osiris.

Execution of the Commission

666. <sup>10</sup>I did according to all that his majesty commanded, by adorning all that my lord commanded for his father, Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord of Abydos, great, mighty one residing in Thinis.

Temple Monuments and Utensils

667. <sup>11</sup>I acted as “Son, Whom He Loves,” for Osiris, First of the Westerners, I adorned the great — forever and ever. I made for him <sup>12a</sup>a portable shrine,<sup>b</sup> the “Bearer-of-Beauty” of the “First-of-the-Westerners,” of gold, silver, lazuli, fragrant woods, carob wood, and meru wood. (I) fashioned the gods <sup>13</sup>belonging to his divine ennead, (I) made their shrines anew.

Priestly Duties

668. I caused the lay priests to [know how] to do their duties, (I) caused them to know <sup>14</sup>the stipulation of every day, the feasts of the beginnings of the seasons. I superintended the work on the sacred barque (nšm[˙t]), I fashioned (its) chapel.<sup>c</sup> <sup>15</sup>I decked (šhkr) the body of the lord of Abydos with lazuli and malachite, electrum, and every costly stone, among <sup>16</sup>the ornaments of the limbs of a god. I dressed (db˙) the god in his regalia (h˙w) by virtue of my office as master of secret things, and of my duty as (wtb˙) priest. <sup>17</sup>I was pure-handed in decking the god, a (sm-) priest of clean fingers.

<sup>a</sup>Only the determinative of a verb of going or motion is preserved.

<sup>b</sup>Knyw.

<sup>c</sup>This word (snlyy, perhaps snȳ˙t, as on the Piankhi stela,) has a determinative exactly like the chapel or cabin in the determinative of nšm˙t.

Osirian Festival Drama

669. I celebrated the (feast of) "Going Forth" of Upwawet, when he proceeded to champion his father. <sup>18</sup>I repelled the foe from the sacred barque (nšm·t), I overthrew the enemies of Osiris. I celebrated the "Great-Going-Forth,"<sup>a</sup> following the god at his going. <sup>19</sup>I sailed the divine boat (dp·t) of Thoth upon ——. I equipped the barque (called): "Shining-in-Truth" of the lord of Abydos, with a chapel. <sup>20</sup>(I) put on his regalia when he went forth to — Peker; I led the way of the god to his tomb<sup>b</sup> before Peker; I <sup>21</sup>championed Wennofer at "That Day of the Great Conflict;" I slew all the enemies upon the [flats]<sup>c</sup> of Nedyt (Ndy·t). I conveyed him <sup>22</sup>into the barque (called): "The Great," when it bore his beauty; I gladdened the heart of the eastern highlands; I —ed the rejoicing in the western highlands. <sup>23</sup>When they saw the beauty of the sacred barge, as it landed at Abydos, they brought [Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord] of Abydos to his palace, and I followed the god into his house, <sup>24</sup>to attend to his —, when he [resumed] his seat. I loosed the knot in the midst of — — — — his [attendants], among his courtiers.

670. Below appear five of Ikhernofret's relatives, among them Sisatet, whose stela follows herein (§§ 671–73), Sitameni, the mother, is also mentioned, as she is likewise on the stela of Sisatet.<sup>d</sup>

VI. INSCRIPTION OF SISATET<sup>e</sup>

671. After a prayer for the benefit of Sisatet's father, Ameni, follows a long list of his near relatives, beginning

<sup>a</sup>This is the designation of a funeral procession "going forth" to the necropolis, as is evident from the description in Bergmann, Hieroglyphische Inschriften, VI, l. 12. It refers above to the funeral procession of Osiris in the drama.

<sup>b</sup>This is unquestionably the tomb of Zer, already in the Twelfth Dynasty mistaken for the tomb of Osiris.

<sup>c</sup>This is the word (tsw) used in Uni (§ 323, l. 45; see note) for "flats" or the like.

<sup>d</sup>Ikhernofret's mortuary stela, erected at Abydos on his death, is now in Cairo (Catalogue No. 20310). It contains nothing of historical importance.

<sup>e</sup>On his family mortuary stela, from Abydos, now in the Museum of Geneva; published by Maspero in Mélanges d'archéologie égyptienne, II, 217–19, and again, Maspero, Études de mythologie et d'archéologie, III, 211–15. I had also my own copy of the original.

with his mother, Sitameni. The inscription of Sisetet then follows, giving the occasion of his visit to Abydos, during which, of course, he erected this stela to secure for his family the favors of Osiris in the next world. It is as follows:

672. Master of the double cabinet,<sup>a</sup> Sisetet; he saith: "I came to Abydos, together with the chief treasurer, Ikhernofret, to carve (a statue of) Osiris, lord of Abydos, when the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris III), living forever, journeyed, while overthrowing the wretched Kush, in the year 19."

673. Some nineteen years later, perhaps at Sisetet's death, his own memorial stela<sup>b</sup> was erected at Abydos. The inscription above begins:

"Year 1, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nematre (N-m<sup>d</sup>t-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenemhet III), living forever and ever. Stela which the master of the double cabinet of the office of the chief treasurer, Sisetet, made, in order that his name might endure at the stairway of the great god.

---

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

674. The principal interest attaching to this inscription arises from the destination of the stone taken out, which is stated to be Ehnas Heracleopolis. The text is so barbarously cut that much is unintelligible:

675. <sup>1</sup>Year 14, fourth month of the first season, day 16, under the majesty of . . . . . <sup>2</sup> . . . . . the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris III), living forever and ever, <sup>3</sup>beloved of Min-Hor of Coptos. Behold, his majesty commanded to dispatch me to

---

<sup>a</sup>His title on his own mortuary stela is: "Master of the double cabinet of the office of the chief treasurer."

<sup>b</sup>Now in the Louvre (C 5); published by Gayet (Sitèles, VIII-IX, very inaccurate).

<sup>c</sup>Engraved on the rocks in the Wadi Hammamat; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 136, a.

<sup>4</sup>Hammamat, to bring a monument, which his majesty commanded to make <sup>5</sup>for Harsaphes (Hr-š), lord of Heracleopolis, for the sake of the life of <sup>6</sup>the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure, living forever and ever; being a beautiful block of <sup>7</sup>black basalt.<sup>a</sup> He sent me as foreman of the work, because I was valuable in the opinion of his majesty, a true leader <sup>1</sup>— <sup>1</sup>for his lord, smiting for him the four eastern countries,<sup>b</sup> bringing for him the good products of Tehenu, by the greatness of his majesty's fame; saying good things, and reporting pleasing things, at the utterances of whose mouth there is satisfaction; knowing the place of his —, free from lying, kind-hearted, void of <sup>1</sup>—, excellent in speech, — hearted, reporting to the king; one whose foot is firm, real king's-confidant, his beloved, his favorite, steward of the storehouse of the leader of works, Khui (H<sup>c</sup>wy) born of Hapi (H<sup>2</sup>py)."

---

STELA OF SEBEK-KHU, CALLED ZAA<sup>c</sup>

676. This stela, as furnishing the only mention of an invasion of Syria by any Pharaoh of the Middle Kingdom, is of great importance. Sebek-khu, who states at the top of the stela that his other or "beautiful name" was Zaa (d<sup>22</sup>), gives a brief outline of his career on this mortuary stela which he erected at Abydos. He was born in the twenty-seventh year of Amenemhet II (l. 11), at whose death he was therefore five years old.

677. Of his life during the nineteen years' reign of Sesostris II he says nothing, but with the accession of Sesostris III, Sebek-khu, who was now twenty-four years old, was

---

<sup>a</sup>This stone (bhn) is the same as the two obelisks in the British Museum (Description, V, 21, 22), which are stated by the inscription to be bhn. An examination, kindly made by Mr. Gardiner, shows that the obelisks are of the black basaltic rock of Hammamat.

<sup>b</sup>Compare the four countries in the inscription of Ameni, § 519, l. 7.

<sup>c</sup>A small limestone stela discovered at Abydos (Arábah) by Mr. John Garstang, and published by him (El Arábah, Quaritch, London, 1901, Pls. IV, V), with a translation by Newberry (ibid., 32, 33); see also Müller, Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, VI, 448, 449.

made an attendant of the king (l. 13), with six men under him (l. 14). He was presently promoted among the personal troops of the king as "attendant (lit., follower) of the ruler" (l. 14), and commanded sixty men on an expedition of the same king into Nubia. Which one of Sesostri III's Nubian campaigns (§§ 640-73) this was, it is impossible to say, but Sebek-khu's gallantry won him a promotion as a "commander" (šḥd) of the king's personal troops, with one hundred men under him.

678. His next expedition was against a region called Sekmem (Skmm) in Retenu, or Syria.<sup>a</sup> We are unfortunately unable to locate this Sekmem with certainty, but it could hardly have been very far northward.<sup>b</sup> A battle occurred here (l. 2), during which Sebek-khu commanded the reserves (l. 3). When finally his men mingled in the fight (l. 3) he personally captured a prisoner (l. 4), whom he delivers to two of his men, to be disarmed. Continuing the battle (l. 4), he is finally rewarded by the king with a rich gift of arms, as well as the weapons of his prisoner.<sup>c</sup> There is no evidence that this, the only Syrian campaign known under the Twelfth Dynasty, gained anything more than plunder for Sesostri III, or that any attempt was made to hold the territory of the conquered Sekmem.<sup>d</sup>

679. Sebek-khu now became "commandant" (w<sup>c</sup>rtw) of the (residence) city," the office which he held when he

<sup>a</sup>This campaign was so important in Sebek-khu's life that he places it at the beginning of his autobiography, though it chronologically belongs toward the end.

<sup>b</sup>Müller (l. c.) suggests Shechem, and would explain the second m as the plural ending of a nisbe, which is of course exceedingly doubtful.

<sup>c</sup>Compare the same gifts to brave officers of the Eighteenth Dynasty kings; this is the earliest example of the custom.

<sup>d</sup>This Syrian expedition is not likely to have been the only one made by this dynasty. The language of Sinuhe, exiled in Syria, just before Sebek-khu's time, shows that the power of the Pharaoh was known and feared there, this implies similar expeditions thither under the first kings of the dynasty.

erected this stela (ll. 7 and 10), some time before the death of Sesostris III. He doubtless, like so many officials visiting Abydos, erected the stela himself, hence it does not contain the end of his career. A number of years later, in the ninth year of Amenemhet III, when Sebek-khu could not have been less than sixty-six years old, he appears superintending the king's observations of the height of the inundation at the second cataract.<sup>a</sup> He then held the rank of "commandant<sup>1</sup> of the ruler," but of the end of his career we know nothing.

Asiatic Campaign

680. <sup>1</sup>His majesty proceeded northward, to overthrow the Asiatics (Mntyw-Sṯt). His majesty arrived at a district, Sekmem (Škmm)<sup>b</sup> was its name. <sup>2</sup>His majesty led the good way<sup>c</sup> in proceeding to the palace<sup>d</sup> of "Life, Prosperity, and Health," when Sekmem had fallen,<sup>e</sup> together with Retenu (Rṯnw) the wretched, <sup>3</sup>while I was acting as rear-guard.

Sebek-khu's Valor

681. Then the citizens<sup>f</sup> (ḥnw) of the army mixed in, to fight with the Asiatics (ḥmw). Then <sup>4</sup>I captured an Asiatic (ḥm), and had his weapons seized by two citizens (ḥnw) of the army, (for) one did not <sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 136, b.

<sup>b</sup>Possibly Škmm.

<sup>c</sup>This idiom (dy·j·tp·j·nfr) is parallel with the similar one common in the Empire (šp·tp·w·t·nfr·t). It has no connection with tp·nfr "good conduct," an inseparable compound, into which j could not be inserted.

<sup>d</sup>The successful outcome of the adventure and the return home are indicated at the beginning, as is common in oriental narrative. Moreover, the following battle may have occurred on the return march.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "Sekmem, it had fallen."

<sup>f</sup>These men (ḥnw) are of the class to which belong the men under Sebek-khu (who with the bodyguard is in the rear), as is shown by l. 4, where two of them are under his command. They now rush forward into action. (See also wild-cattle hunt of Amenhotep III, II, 864, and especially Decree of Harmhab, III, 51, 57, 59); they are always spoken of as "of the army."

turn back from the fight, (but) my face was to the front, and I gave not my back to the Asiatic (<sup>c</sup>m).<sup>a</sup>

His Rewards

682. As Sesostris lives, <sup>5</sup>I have spoken in truth. Then he gave to me a staff of electrum into my hand, a bow, and a dagger wrought with electrum, together with his<sup>b</sup> weapons.

His Titles

683. <sup>6</sup>The hereditary prince, count, firm of sandal, satisfied in going, treading the path of him that favors him, <sup>7</sup>whose plenty the Lord of the Two Lands has furnished, whose seat his love has advanced, the great <sup>1</sup>commandant<sup>1c</sup> of the (residence) city, Zaa (<sup>D</sup>ꜣ).

His Tomb

684. <sup>8</sup>He says: "I have made for myself this splendid tomb; its place is inserted at the stairway of <sup>9</sup>the great god, lord of life, presider over Abydos, at the bend: 'Lord-of-Offerings,' and at the bend: 'Mistress-of-Life';<sup>d</sup> <sup>1</sup>that I may<sup>1</sup> smell the incense <sup>10</sup>that comes forth from this — as the odor of the god."

His Career; Birth

685. The chief attendant of the (residence) city, Zaa; <sup>11</sup>he says: "I was born [in] the year 27 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nebkure (Amenemhet II), triumphant.

Commander of Six

686. <sup>12</sup>The majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris III), triumphant, appeared with the double diadem upon the

<sup>a</sup>He means that as the fight kept on he was unable to disarm his prisoner, and therefore turned him over to two privates, while he himself continued fighting. There is also a touch of boasting in it, as it took two men to manage the prisoner he had captured alone.

<sup>b</sup>Those of the Asiatic whom he had captured.

<sup>c</sup>W c rtw. This uncertain title is shown to be, here at least, that of the officers of the king's personal troops; but the frequent defining additions show that it was a title of general meaning, like "chief," or "leader," (see Müller's useful note Recueil, IX, 173, 1).

<sup>d</sup>Evidently two promontories of the desert margin in the cemetery of Abydos.

Horus-throne of the living. <sup>13</sup>His majesty caused that I should render service as a warrior, behind and beside his majesty, with six men of <sup>14</sup>the court.

Campaign in Nubia

687. Then I made ready at his side, (and) his majesty caused that I be appointed to be an 'attendant of the ruler.' <sup>15</sup>I furnished<sup>a</sup> sixty men when his majesty proceeded southward to overthrow the <sup>16</sup>Troglodytes of Nubia. Then I captured a Negro in —<sup>b</sup> alongside my city.<sup>c</sup> <sup>17</sup>Then I proceeded northward, following with six<sup>d</sup> of the court; then he appointed (me) commander of the attendants, and gave to me 100 men<sup>e</sup> as a reward."

INSCRIPTIONS OF THUTHOTEP<sup>f</sup>

688. Thuthotep and his line were nomarchs of the Hare nome, the chief city of which was Khmunu (Hermopolis, Eshmunen) nearly opposite el-Bersheh, where the tombs of the family are located. Their immediate neighbors on the north were the princes of the Oryx nome, with whom they were probably related. Thuthotep's family was an ancient

<sup>a</sup>Or. "commanded sixty men (lit., heads)."

<sup>b</sup>Geographical, as shown by the determinative.

<sup>c</sup>It is inconceivable that Zaa's city should have been in Nubia. He probably means the city where he held command temporarily in Nubia.

<sup>d</sup>The original six of his command, the sixty during the Nubian campaign being a temporary command.

<sup>e</sup>Lit.: "heads."

<sup>f</sup>From his tomb at el-Bersheh. The scene of the transport of the colossus early drew attention to this tomb (discovered by English travelers in 1817), but beyond this scene very little in the el-Bersheh group was copied. After many years of neglect, during which they suffered lamentable mutilation, the tombs were exhaustively copied and surveyed by the Archaeological Survey of the Egypt Exploration Fund in 1891-92, and published in two volumes: Bersheh, I (Newberry and Fraser), Bersheh, II (Griffith, Newberry, and Fraser), London. This work has consulted and collated all the earlier publications. The scene of the transport will also be found: Rosellini, Monumenti civili, II, 48, 1; Wilkinson Birch, Manners, II, 305; Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 134, 135; Chabas, Mélanges égyptologiques, III, Pl. V (long inscription only); and often in the later histories. See full account of literature and existing manuscripts in Bersheh, 5. ~^.

one, and regarded the hoary Sixth Dynasty princes, who were buried in the neighboring tombs of Shekh Sa<sup>c</sup>id, as their ancestors. Their interest in these remote predecessors of theirs was such that at least two of them repaired their ancestors' fallen tombs at Shekh Sa<sup>c</sup>id, and recorded the pious deed in the following words:<sup>a</sup>

689. He made (it) as his monument for his fathers, who are in the necropolis, the lords of this promontory; restoring what was found in ruin and renewing what was found decayed, the ancestors, who were before, not having done it. By the count, [marshal of the two thrones], superior prophet, overseer of the king's-house, governor of the South, great lord of the Hare nome, great in his office, great in his rank, of advanced position in the king's-house, Thutnakht, born of Teti.

690. It is, however, very difficult to trace back the earlier family.<sup>b</sup> The neighboring alabaster quarry of Hatnub contains a number of inscriptions (hieratic graffiti) recording the incessant activity of the family there, in which the princes frequently boast of their wealth and power. These records also show that the princes of the Hare nome were not merely provincial nobles, but that they sometimes held high offices under the king. Only one royal date, however (thirty-first year of Sesostris I), occurs in these quarry inscriptions; otherwise they are dated according to the year of the nomarchy, which is a striking indication of the independence of these princes at some time, probably before the Twelfth Dynasty. Probably at least four generations lived during the Eleventh Dynasty. Two of these earlier princes say: "I rescued my city in the day of violence from the [—] terrors of the royal house,"<sup>a</sup> which may be a reference to the aggression of the Eleventh Dynasty as it pushed northward.

<sup>a</sup>This inscription occurs four times in the tombs of Shekh Sa<sup>c</sup>id; three times with the name of Thutnakht (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 112, e, and 113, b, c); and once with the name of Ihe (Yh<sup>2</sup>) (Bersheh, II, 10), both of whom were themselves buried at el-Bersheh. See also Davies, Shekh Said, Pl. XXX, and cf. ibid., Pl. XXIX. The same inscription occurred at least once at el-Bersheh also (ibid., 11), showing the restoration of pre-Middle Kingdom tombs there also. At Kasr-es-Sayad there are also records of the restoration of Sixth Dynasty tombs by Twelfth Dynasty nobles (Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 216).

<sup>b</sup>The material from the tombs of el-Bersheh and the quarry of Hatnub has been carefully sifted in an interesting reconstruction of the family tree by Griffith Bersheh, II, 4-14. The following data have been taken thence.

691. The tomb of Thuthotep is the only one at el-Bersheh, in which royal names have been preserved. It contains the names of Amenemhet II and Sesostris II and III, under whom Thuthotep lived. His appointment as prince of the Hare nome, in which he succeeded his grandfather, is referred to in the tomb as follows:<sup>b</sup>

692. His utterance before his father, that he might [establish] the name of him from whom he came forth. Are not these praises very great before my father and before my god, in that he appoints me chief of his city and great lord of the Hare nome, as successor of him who begat him? He was the staff of the old age of this<sup>c</sup> his father, and he hath appointed me as chief of his city.

693. His father calls upon the people to rejoice, and adds:

See this! which my lord has done for me; hear<sup>d</sup> this! which my

<sup>a</sup>Graffiti Nos. I and VIII. Blackden and Fraser, Hatnub, transliterated by Griffith, Bersheh, II, Pl. XXII.

<sup>b</sup>Inscription of the shrine, Bersheh, I, Pl. XXXIII (=Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 134), accompanying Thuthotep and his father Key, who stand facing each other; essentially Mr. Griffith's rendering (ibid., II, 13).

<sup>c</sup>"This his father" is of course Key's father; the use of "this" implying that he was now deceased. His name was Nehri. Thus Nehri lived to a very advanced age, and Key was so old at his father's (Nehri's) death that he immediately resigned the succession to his own son. This would explain the succession from grandfather to grandson, in which Key seems to have the appointing power. The references to the father and son (Key and Thuthotep) as together deserving the praise of the people (§§ 700-704) are thus explained by the fact that Key survived his son Thuthotep's accession.

<sup>d</sup>Sgm, not hsb "reckon" (as in the Survey notes).

god has done for me, in that he hath appointed my son as chief of his city, great lord of the Hare nome, as successor of him that begat me.<sup>a</sup>

694. The well-known scene of the transport of the colossus has made the tomb famous. The only other inscriptions of historical importance are those connected with this scene. They throw much light upon the power and organization of the government in a Middle Kingdom nomarchy, and, of course, the whole scene is of unusual archæological interest.

695. The quarries from which the great block for the statue was cut are located ten miles from the river in the desert back of el-Amarna.<sup>b</sup> The difficult road from the quarries over the desert, down the cliffs, and across the plain to the river at the modern village of Hagg-Kandîl, had been in use since the days of Khufu, and Uni had transported stone upon it (§ 323). Along this road the block was transported to the river,<sup>c</sup> and then floated down-stream to Hermopolis-Eshmunen, where the statue was sculptured.

<sup>a</sup>"Him that begat me" is the grandfather Nehri. He may be the same Nehri who was the father of Khnumhotep II.

<sup>b</sup>They were first seen by Mr. Newberry, who was taken there by natives in 1891. Excellent map by Petrie (Amarna, XXXIV) and very useful description (ibid., 3, 4); also by Fraser (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archæology, XVI, 73 ff.). They contain numerous graffiti published by Blackden and Fraser (Collection of Hieratic Graffiti from the Alabaster Quarries of Hatnub).

<sup>c</sup>That the statue would be sculptured in the desert quarry, nearly a day's journey from water and supplies, then to run the risk of the long and dangerous transportation to Eshmunen, as is usually supposed, is a priori exceedingly improbable. The inscription is also clearly against this supposition. The scene depicts the arrival of the statue at its destination, and naturally the inscription begins with that event, which it describes in six lines. Then (l. 6) it reverts to the work of getting the stone from the quarry, and says distinctly that on leaving the quarry the statue was "a squared block." After this the ships for the river transport are referred to, and then Thuthotep mentions his arrival "in the district of this city" (doubtless Eshmunen). Similarly the statue of Amenhotep III, now lying unfinished at the Assuan quarry, was merely roughed out to reduce its weight for transportation (de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 62 f.).

It was then conveyed to its destination, some building<sup>a</sup> in the city where it was permanently deposited. This event is depicted with great detail in the famous scene of the transportation. Behind the statue march the “foremen of the work on this statue” and other officials, who are followed by Thutotep himself; accompanied by the following inscription:

696. <sup>1</sup>Following a statue of 13 cubits,<sup>b</sup> of stone of Hatnub. Lo, the way, upon which it came, was very difficult, beyond anything. Lo, <sup>2</sup>the dragging of the great things upon it was difficult for the heart of the people, because of the difficult stone of the ground,<sup>c</sup> being hard stone.

697. I caused <sup>3</sup>the youth, the young men of the recruits to come, in order to make for it (the statue) a road, together with shifts of necropolis-miners and of quarrymen, the foremen and the wise. The people of strength said: “We come to bring it;”<sup>d</sup> while my heart was glad; the city was gathered together rejoicing; very good it was to see <sup>5</sup>beyond everything. The old man among them, he leaned upon the child; the strong-armed together with the tremblers, their courage rose. <sup>6</sup>Their arms grew strong; one of them put forth the strength of 1,000 men.

698. Behold, this statue, being a squared block on coming forth from the great mountain,<sup>e</sup> was <sup>7</sup>more valuable than anything. Vessels were equipped, filled with supplies, <sup>8</sup>in advance<sup>1</sup> of my army of recruits, the youth <sup>9</sup>bore <sup>10</sup>— in advance of<sup>1</sup> it. Their words were laudation, and my praises from the king. My children <sup>11</sup>— adorned were behind me.

<sup>a</sup>Perhaps the “house of the ka” (h't-k), which appears as part of the temple at Siut and at Benihasan. See also the contracts of Hepzefi (§ 535 ff.) for the services and ceremonies due to such statues.

<sup>b</sup>Over 22 feet, indicating the height. It would weigh toward 60 tons, and is the largest alabaster statue known. The immense alabaster statue of Amon found in 1899 by Legrain at Karnak may have been nearly as large.

<sup>c</sup>The stony ground through which the road passed; such stone would be alabaster at the quarry, and limestone afterward. Rwd't (“hard stone”) is applied to the stone of Hatnub also in Uni (§ 323, l. 42); it is later “sandstone.”

<sup>d</sup>Another possible rendering is: “. . . the foremen, and the wise; saying: 'O people of strength, come to me to bring it.'”

<sup>e</sup>This is a reference to the crude block which was brought from the quarry.

My nome shouted praise. I arrived in the district of this city, <sup>10</sup>the people were gathered together, praising; very good it was to see, beyond everything. The counts who were of old; the judge and local governor who were appointed for <sup>11</sup>— in this city, and established for the [—] upon the river, their hearts had not thought of this which I had done, [in that I made] for myself <sup>12</sup>— established for eternity, after that this my tomb was complete<sup>a</sup> in its everlasting work.

699. The statue is drawn by 172 men in four double rows,<sup>b</sup> manning four ropes. The middle two rows consist of the priests and the soldiers; the outside two, of the youths from the two banks of the river.<sup>c</sup> Each row is accompanied by an inscription as follows:

First Row

700. The<sup>d</sup> youths of the west of the Hare nome come in peace. Utterance: "The west is in festivity, their hearts are glad, when they see the monuments of their lords, the heir who comes in their midst, his house and the house of his father when he was a child. — — —."

Second Row

701. The youths of the warriors of the Hare nome arrive in peace. Utterance of the recruits of the youths whom their lord mustered, the heir who prospers in the favor of the king, the lord: "Let us come, let us prosper his children after him! Our hearts are glad at the favor of the king who abides permanently."

<sup>a</sup>The text is poetic and has, lit., "had rested from its everlasting work." Thuthotep means that after the work on his tomb was complete, he had the great statue made for it, and that his ancestors had never conceived such a great enterprise.

<sup>b</sup>A man, standing on the knees of the statue, beats time for the men at the ropes. He has the inscription: "Beating time for the soldiers by the [foreman] [of] Thuthotep, beloved of the king." Before him is a man offering incense, whom the inscription calls the artist of this tomb. Beneath are men of the "estate" "carrying water," and with them workmen "carrying planks for the dragging." For further details, see the Archæological Survey volumes.

<sup>c</sup>On the social relations of these men, see Griffith, Kahun Papyri, II, 24, 25.

<sup>d</sup>From above.

Third Row

702. The courses of the priests of the Hare nome come in peace. Utterance: "He whom Thoth loves, Thuthotep, beloved of the king, he whom his city loves, whom all its gods praise; the temples are in festivity; their hearts are glad, when they see thy favor with the king."

Fourth Row

703. The youths of the east of the Hare nome come in peace. Utterance: "My lord hath proceeded to Thereti (Trty), the god rejoices over him; his fathers are in festivity, their hearts are glad, rejoicing over his beautiful monuments."

704. Over the men at the ropes are platoons of youths bearing (palm?) branches; inscription:

The Hare nome is in festivity, its heart is glad; its old men are children, its youths are refreshed, its children jubilate; their heart is in festivity, when they see their lord, the son of their lord as a favor of the king, making his monument.

705. In advance of all these, oxen are being slaughtered, and rows of servants approach laden with offerings; inscription:

Bringing forward the chief offerings which the districts that are in the Hare nome have brought, for this statue of the count, Thuthotep.<sup>a</sup>

706. A doorway appears behind these people, which is intended to be the entrance of the building for which the statue is destined. It bears the name and titles of Thuthotep and the name of the building itself: "The love of Thuthotep abides in the Hare nome."<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>This inscription clearly settles whose the statue is, and there is no ground for the supposition that it was a statue of the king.

<sup>b</sup>In the doorway at one side appears the figure of Thuthotep standing with staff. This is the usual figure, cut on the thickness of the doorway, which is here swung out, as it were, like a door, that it may be seen.

HAMMAMAT INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

707. Already in his second year Amenemhet III carried on work at Hammamat, under an officer named Amenemhet. His inscription<sup>b</sup> is dated: Year 2, third month of the first season, day 1, and is followed by ten lines of self-praise, in which we find the only phrases of historical value: “smiting the Negro, opening the land of the Asiatic” (l. 7). His titles occupy two lines (ll. 11, 12): “commander of troops (mnjy't), commander (shḏ) of followers, Amenemhet, son of Ibeb (Ybb), triumphant; his father was Aabu (c<sup>3</sup>bw).” At the end there is only the following meager record of one line: “I came to this highland in safety with my army by the power of Min, lord of the highlands.” Exactly a year and two days later four officers recorded the date and their names.<sup>c</sup> The chief expedition was in the nineteenth year, of which we have three records. The material taken out was intended for a place or building called Enekh-Amenemhet, “Life of Amenemhet.” We naturally think of his pyramid-temple at Hawara. The first record,<sup>d</sup> is as follows:

708. <sup>1</sup>Year 19, first month of the second season, [day] 15; <sup>2</sup>the Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nematre (Amenemhet III), who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

709. <sup>3</sup>His majesty sent to bring for him(self) monuments from <sup>4</sup>the valley of Hammamat, of beautiful black (basaltic) stone<sup>e</sup> as <sup>5</sup>far as “Enekh-Amenemhet,”<sup>f</sup> living forever and ever; at <sup>6</sup>the house of Sebek, of Crocodilopolis:<sup>g</sup> 10 statues of 5 cubits,<sup>h</sup> upon a throne,

<sup>a</sup>Besides the publications I had also for these inscriptions a collation of the Berlin squeezes, kindly furnished by Mr. Alan Gardiner.

<sup>b</sup>Cut on the rocks in Wadi Hammamat; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, a.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, b.

<sup>e</sup>See § 675, note.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, e.

<sup>f</sup>See above, § 707.

<sup>g</sup>An adjective (nisbe) belonging to Sebek; it does not necessarily show that the temple was in Crocodilopolis.

<sup>h</sup>Five cubits high (8½ feet) when seated.

<sup>7</sup>quarried in this year by the real "beloved of his lord" . . . . .<sup>a</sup>
the overseer of the 1-1 (gs) of the miners, Sesostris.

710. Another official<sup>b</sup> has left a record<sup>c</sup> of the same expedition, in which he also refers to the "10 statues of 5 (cubits)."<sup>d</sup> He also adds the numbers of the men in the expedition: "His soldiers of the necropolis, 20; quarrymen, 30; sailors, 30; a numerous army, 2,000."<sup>e</sup>

711. Still another officer<sup>f</sup> dates an inscription<sup>g</sup> in the nineteenth year of Amenemhet III, which doubtless refers to the same expedition. The date occupies one line, the usual phrases in eulogy of self thirteen lines, and the following record is in the last line: "He came to this inaccessible highland of Hammamat, on a commission of Horus, lord of the palace (the king), to bring a monument for his majesty."

712. The latest and only other record<sup>h</sup> is dated: Year 20, third month of the first season, day 13.

INSCRIPTIONS IN SINAI

I. WADI MAGHARA

713. The earliest inscription of Amenemhet III in the peninsula of Sinai, is that of Khenemsu<sup>i</sup> in the Wadi Maghara. It is as follows:

<sup>a</sup>The usual encomium of self, made up of obscure phrases.

<sup>b</sup>His name is uncertain, but may have been "Meri's son, Hu (Ḥw)" according to l. 8.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, c = Golénischeff, Hammamat, IX, No. 1. It is very obscure and uncertain, but seems to refer to difficulties in getting out the blocks for the ten statues.

<sup>d</sup>He omits the word "cubits," l. 13.

<sup>e</sup>Lines 14, 15.

<sup>f</sup>His name is likewise uncertain (it is at the beginning of l. 14).

<sup>g</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138, d = Golénischeff, Hammamat, IX, No. 2.

<sup>h</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 138 f.

<sup>i</sup>Cut on the rocks in the Wadi Maghara; published by Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 689 = Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, XII = Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, c = Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1492 = Laval, Voyage dans la Péninsule Arabique,

Inscriptions of Khenemsu

Year 2 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nematre (N-m<sup>ḥ</sup>c-t-R), Son of Re, Amenemhet (III), living forever and ever. The treasurer of the god, master of the double cabinet, chief of the treasury, Khentkhetihotep-Khenemsu was dispatched, in order to bring malachite and copper. List of his soldiers: 734.

714. Below stands the king before Thoth and Hathor, and three petty officers have appended a mortuary prayer at the bottom.

715. Khenemsu's expedition (§§ 713, 714) also operated in Sarbût el-Khadem in the same year,<sup>a</sup> and his officers have left their names on the rocks, surmounted by the date and a relief showing Amenemhet III before "Hathor, mistress of the malachite country."<sup>b</sup>

716. Below<sup>c</sup> are the figures of four officers accompanied by their names:

1. Treasurer of the god, master of the double cabinet, chief of the treasury, Khenemsu.
2. Deputy of the chief treasurer, Ameniseneb.
3. —seneb, son of Stira (Sty-r<sup>ḥ</sup>) —————.
4. Master of the double cabinet of the treasury, Sebeko, son of Metenu.

Inscription of Harnakht

717. The following inscription<sup>d</sup> of Harnakht, a subordinate treasury official, evidently connected with the preceding

Pl. 5, No. 2 = Weill, Sinai, 129; see last for British Museum squeeze and manuscript sources. An official of the same expedition named Sesostri-Seneb dates a prayer on the rocks in the year 2 (Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1487); Weill, Sinai, 131, 132. Below is a list of his workmen (l. c.).

<sup>a</sup>Another inscription at Sarbût el-Khadem, of the year 20, shows only the date (Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137).

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, a.

<sup>c</sup>Back of the king stood the chief treasurer, but his figure is now gone, and only a portion of his titles is still visible.

<sup>d</sup>Wadi Maghara; published by Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1488; better by Spiegelberg, after squeeze by Euringer, Recueil, 21, 51; and Weill, Sinai, 134.

expedition, is of especial interest as showing that the journey to Wadi Maghara was made by water. Even if the customary point of departure was at the extreme north end of the Gulf of Suez, a wearisome desert journey in Sinai was thus avoided.

718. Year 2 under the majesty of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nematre (Amenemhet III), living forever. The chosen before his subjects, who treads the path of his benefactor, (says): "I crossed over the sea, bearing luxuries<sup>a</sup> (špšš), by commission of Horus, lord of the palace (Pharaoh)." Official of the treasury (yry-<sup>c</sup>t-n-pr-ḥd), chief fowler,<sup>b</sup> Harnakht (Ḥr-nḥt); his beautiful name, Harnetamehu (Ḥr-n-t<sup>2</sup>-mḥw).

Inscription of Sebekdidi

719. An inscription of the year 41<sup>c</sup> records an expedition in the Wadi Maghara, which was conducted by a palace official named Sebekdidi-Ranefseneb. It reads:

Year 41 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Nematre (N-m<sup>2</sup>-<sup>c</sup>t-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenemhet III), given life, like Re, forever.

720. The real king's-confidant, his beloved, his favorite, conductor of the palace, Sebekdidi-Ranefseneb. May Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, and Hathor,<sup>d</sup> mistress of the malachite country, love him who shall say: "An offering which the king gives for the ka of the treasurer, the assistant of the chief treasurer, Sesostris — (S[n]-Wsr't ———).

Below is a short list of subordinate officers.

<sup>a</sup>The connection would indicate that these were offerings from the Pharaoh to be presented to the local Hathor; although špšš.w are frequently the costly stones of Sinai.

<sup>b</sup>This not uncommon title (ḥb-<sup>c</sup>, with determinative of a goose), has been strangely misunderstood in the last two editions of the text.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137 f. = Ordnance Survey, III, Pl. 3 = Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica XII; Weill, Sinai, 137, 138. A short inscription of the year 30 is in Weill, Sinai, 135; it is without historical content beyond the statement of the official: "I worked (yry'ny) the gmy and the malachite therein."

<sup>d</sup>Misread by Weill.

Inscription of Ameni

721. In the year 42 there was evidently an important expedition in the Wadi Maghara, for which the following meager record is our only source:<sup>a</sup>

Year 42, under the majesty of the king, Lord of the Two Lands, Nematre (Amenemhet III), living forever, [beloved]<sup>b</sup> of Hathor, mistress of the malachite country.

722. The master of the double cabinet, chief of the White House (wr pr ḥd), Ameni, triumphant, beloved of Hathor, mistress of the malachite country.

The treasurer,<sup>c</sup> assistant of the chief treasurer, Sesostris—seneb-Sebekkhi, favorite of Hathor, mistress of the malachite country, of Soped, lord of the east, of Snefru,<sup>d</sup> lord of the highlands, and of the gods and goddesses who are in this land.

723. There were made for Hathor, all beautiful (mine)-chambers.

May he be beloved and arrive in safety who shall say: "An offering which the king gives for the ka of the treasurer, the assistant of the chief treasurer, Sebekhotep, beloved of Hathor, mistress of the malachite country; the storeroom-keeper, Yatu (y<sup>2</sup>-tw); — — — mmu (— mmw); the chief of the house of Pharaoh, Senebtefi; and 20<sup>e</sup> (+x) quarrymen ————.

Another expedition left a short inscription in the year 43.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 690 = Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, XII = Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, g = Ordnance Survey, III, Pl. 3 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1490 (inaccurate) = Weill, Sinai, 140, with full literature. There is another inscription of the same year at this place, but only the date, king's name, and epitheta, with two signs at the top of each of three lost vertical lines, are preserved.

<sup>b</sup>Omitted by the scribe; see Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, h.

<sup>c</sup>It is clear that this official, who has attached the longest blessing to his name, was the personal leader of the expedition.

<sup>d</sup>Snefru as a god of Sinai. His name is here in a cartouche (with Horus-hawk as determinative); he appears in the same way with Soped, and Hathor in an inscription of Amenemhet III's sixth year (Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1491, No. 9).

<sup>e</sup>Not more than thirty; a list of subordinate workmen followed, but it is now broken off.

<sup>f</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, i = Weill, Sinai, 142.

II. SARBÛT EL-KHADEM

724. Amenemhet III began work here as early as the year 2,<sup>a</sup> and dated inscriptions of the years 20,<sup>b</sup> 30,<sup>b</sup> and 38<sup>c</sup> indicate its continuance, although they are without historical content, and show only the date and the king's name.

Inscription of Sebek-hir-hab

725. In the year 44, however, the king opened a new mine, and Sebek-hir-hab, the official in command, has left a record of the event there, which he had engraved in the form of a stela,<sup>d</sup> on the walls of the reservoir furnishing the water-supply of the expedition. The place of the stela indicates some connection between the expedition of Sebek-hir-hab and the completion of the reservoir.

Opening of the mining chamber<sup>e</sup> successfully; "Flourish-its-Army-Which-Delivers-That-Which-is-in-it," is its name.

Year 44 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, . . . . . Amenemhet III, beloved of Hathor, mistress of malachite, given life, like Re, forever. O ye who live upon earth, who shall come to this Mine-land! As your king has established you, as your gods favor you, that ye may arrive (at home) in safety, so say ye: "A thousand loaves, jars of beer, cattle, fowl, incense, ointment, and everything on which the gods live, for the ka of the master of the double cabinet of

<sup>a</sup>List of his officials in that year (perhaps the same expedition recorded in Wadi Maghara in that year, § 713), in Weill, Sinai, 163.

<sup>b</sup>Weill, Sinai, 164.

<sup>c</sup>Ibid., 165.

<sup>d</sup>Copied by Ricci, and from his copy, by Champollion, as published in Notices descriptives, II, 691. Birch says of it: "Tablet engraved on the rock inside of the large reservoir, which is one mile due south of the Sarbût el Khadem" (Ordinance Survey, I, 183, 184). Published much better, from British Museum squeezes, by Weill, Sinai, 166.

<sup>e</sup>The word used (ht' t) is the usual one for a quarrying or mining excavation; but as the inscription is cut on the wall of an excavated reservoir, it might be the reservoir which is here meant. Against this is the name of the excavation, which refers to its valuable content. Hence some new mine in the vicinity is probably meant.

the treasury, Sebek-hir-hab (Sbk-hr-hb), living again happily, repeating a happy life (whm<sup>c</sup> nh<sup>c</sup> njr), born of the matron Henut (Hnwt), triumphant."

726. Master of the double cabinet, Sebek-hir-hab; he says: "I excavated a mine-chamber for my lord, and my youths returned<sup>a</sup> in full quota, all of them. There was none that fell among them."

This official, he says: "O ye king's-grandeess, companions of the palace! Give praise to the king, exalt [his] fame, laud the king, and watch that which belongs to him. The mountains bring forth what is in them ——— and the hills bear their wealth.<sup>b</sup> His father Keb,<sup>c</sup> he gives it, because of —.

727. Sebek-hir-hab then closes with an account of his offerings to Hathor:

I brought for her offering-tables of mesnet stone, linen (pk<sup>2</sup>·t)
 ——— I presented to her divine offerings, bulls, 'fowl' ———.
 She 'led' me 'in' by her gracious going '—' ——— to the — terrace, which I made for her. I swear, I have spoken in truth.

Inscription of Ptahwer

728. The last dated inscription<sup>d</sup> of Amenemhet III at the Sarbût el-Khadem is of the year 45, and it reads as follows:

Year 45 under the majesty of the Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Nematre (Amenemhet III), given life forever, beloved of Hathor.

['I was one sent<sup>1</sup>] to bring plentiful — from the land of —,<sup>e</sup> ready in his reports to his lord, [delivering] Asia (Sit) to him who is in the palace (the Pharaoh), bringing Sinai (Mntw) at his heels, traversing inaccessible valleys, bringing unknown extremities (of the world), the master of the double cabinet, chief of the treasury, Ptahwer, triumphant, born of Yata (Y<sup>2</sup>-t<sup>2</sup>).

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "came."

<sup>b</sup>Similar phrases, Weill, Sinai, 178, and again, 179.

<sup>c</sup>The earth-god. A similar idea is found in the Kubbân Stela (III, 288, ll. 17, 18).

<sup>d</sup>Weill, Sinai, 168.

<sup>e</sup>Lost name ending in kwy.

729. An undated inscription<sup>a</sup> of this reign records the opening of a mine called "Vision-of-the-Beauty-of-Hathor;" and another<sup>b</sup> contained a memorandum of a month's supplies delivered: "1 measure of grain, 23 large and small cattle, 2 w<sup>3</sup>d-fowl, 30 mny't-geese," followed by a list of six petty officials.

Inscription of Amenemhet<sup>c</sup>

730. The king who dispatched this officer to the Sarbût el-Khadem, where his inscription is engraved, is not mentioned, but as the officer's name is Amenemhet, he certainly belongs under a Twelfth Dynasty Pharaoh. The reference to Snefru is of interest, and, besides this, it is evident that Amenemhet worked somewhere else, evidently Maghara, before going to Sarbût el-Khadem. This conclusion is corroborated by the same thing observable in the expedition of Harurre (§§ 733-38).

Work in Wadi Maghara (?)

731. This god dispatched the treasurer of the god, the master of the double cabinet, leader of recruits, companion of the palace, Amenemhet, to bring splendid, costly stone for his majesty. This treasurer of the god says: "I came to the mine of Ka<sup>d</sup> (K<sup>3</sup>); I exacted the impost (bkw), I attended to the levying of the impost of malachite, being 1—<sup>10</sup> for 1 every<sup>1</sup> 5<sup>f</sup> men every day correctly 1— — 1. Never had the like been done since the time of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Snefru, triumphant.

<sup>a</sup>Weill, Sinai, 169.

<sup>b</sup>Ibid., 170.

<sup>c</sup>Niebuhr, Reisen nach Arabien, I, Tab. XLV; Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 144, 9 = Laval, Pl. IV, 5; mentioned by Birch, Ordnance Survey, I, 185, but is not among the photographs of the Survey.

<sup>d</sup>The name of the man in charge, who was evidently responsible for a fixed amount each season.

<sup>e</sup>Here was evidently the amount exacted from each gang of men daily.

<sup>f</sup>Or possibly 15.

Work in Sarbût el-Khadem

732. Then I arrived at this land,<sup>a</sup> and I completed the work successfully. The might of the king ————. It is a 'command' of his majesty ————.

Inscription of Harurre<sup>b</sup>

733. This interesting stela is unfortunately not dated, but it is unquestionably of the Middle Kingdom, and is here provisionally placed in the reign of Amenemhet III. It is of importance because it shows that expeditions were not customarily sent to Sinai in summer. Harurre, treasurer of the god, in the service of an unknown king, erected our stela to inform future generations, who might come in the same unfavorable time of year, that he had survived the heat, when "the mountains brand the skin," and had brought more than the amount of ore exacted of him. He arrived at Maghara in the seventh month; then later transferring his force to Sarbût el-Khadem,<sup>c</sup> he completed the work in the ninth month. These two months of the civil calendar fell in summer, thus corroborating the place of the calendar furnished by the Kahun Sothis date.

734. The language of the monument is in a number of places very obscure and difficult, chiefly in the speeches, so that the general sense of the whole document is fortunately not in doubt. The remarkable use of the word ynm "skin," which appears four times—three times with a meaning

<sup>a</sup>That is Sarbût el-Khadem; the malachite mine was therefore in another locality, which he had first visited.

<sup>b</sup>Stela in Sarbût el-Khadem (Niebuhr, Reisen nach Arabien [4to, Kopenhagen, 1778], Tab. XLV; Laval, IX, 2; Ordnance Survey, III, 10 [photograph]; Weill, Sinai, 174, after manuscript copy by Burton, and squeeze in British Museum). I had also a photograph by Borchardt, which gives more in the last line than Weill.

<sup>c</sup>The sudden statement that he "arrived in this land" (Sarbût) long after the account of his arrival in Sinai, can be explained in this way only. The same thing is observable in the inscription of Amenemhet (§§ 730-32).

evidently quite unusual—is noteworthy. What its meaning may be is not evident. I have not burdened the translation with conjectures in any of the questionable passages.

Work in Maghara (?)

735. <sup>1</sup>The majesty of this god dispatched the treasurer of the god, master of the double cabinet ꜥ—ꜥ, Harurre (Hr-ꜥwr-Rꜥ) <sup>2</sup>to this Mine-land (Byꜥ); I arrived in this land in the third month of the second season (prꜥt), although it was not the season for going <sup>3</sup>to this Mine-land.

736. This treasurer of the god saith to the officials who shall come to this Mine-land at this season:<sup>a</sup> <sup>4</sup>“Let not your faces flinch on that account;<sup>b</sup> behold, Hathor will turn it <sup>5</sup>to profit. I looked to myself, and I dealt<sup>c</sup> with myself; when I came from Egypt, <sup>6</sup>my face flinched, and it was hard for me ꜥ—<sup>d</sup> — —ꜥ. The highlands are hot <sup>7</sup>in summer, and the mountains brand the skin ꜥ—ꜥ. When morning dawns, <sup>8</sup>a man is ꜥ— —ꜥ. I addressed the workmen concerning it: <sup>9</sup>“How favored is he who is in this Mine-land!” They said: “There is malachite <sup>10</sup>in this eternal mountain; it is ꜥ—<sup>11</sup>ꜥ to seek (it) at this season.<sup>e</sup> <sup>12</sup>One like us hears the like of (such) marvels,<sup>f</sup> coming at this season. It is ꜥ—<sup>13</sup>ꜥ <sup>14</sup>to ꜥ—ꜥ for it in this evil summer-season.”

Work in Sarbūt el-Khadem

737. Now, when <sup>15</sup>I was dispatched to this Mine-land; the souls of the king put it in my heart. <sup>16</sup>Then I arrived in this land, and I began the work prosperously. <sup>17</sup>My army arrived in full quota, all of it, there was none that fell among them. My face flinched not <sup>18</sup>before the work.

<sup>a</sup>Viz., the hot season.

<sup>b</sup>Viz., because they have come in the wrong season.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., “did something with myself,” probably meaning: “I struggled with myself.”

<sup>d</sup>Ynm (with the sign of a skin); but it evidently is here a folk-etymology for something quite different from “skin,” the usual meaning of the word.

<sup>e</sup>Summer time.

<sup>f</sup>Or: “Our hearing is like a marvel, etc.”

738. I succeeded in mining the good sort,<sup>a</sup> and I finished in the first month <sup>17</sup>of the third season (šmw). I brought genuine costly stone for the luxuries, more than <sup>18</sup>any one who came (hither), and (more than) all the exactions [— — — <sup>19</sup>— — —]. It was better than the accustomed seasons thereof. Offer ye, <sup>20</sup>offer ye to the mistress of heaven, appease ye Hathor; if ye do it, it will be profitable <sup>21</sup>for you. If ye increase to her, it shall be well among you. <sup>22</sup>I led my army very kindly, and I was not loud-voiced <sup>23</sup>toward the workmen. I acted before all the army and the recruits, <sup>24</sup>and they rejoiced in me, — official <sup>25</sup>———. <sup>b</sup>

---

TURRA INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

739. At the top is the date: “Year 43,”<sup>d</sup> beneath which, with accompanying names of Ptah, Anubis, and Hathor, is the name of the king: “Son of Re, Amenemhet;” this must be the third, for no other Amenemhet ruled so long.

740. <sup>1</sup>Quarry-chambers were opened anew,<sup>e</sup> to quarry<sup>2</sup> fine limestone of Ayan (ʿyn), for the temples of <sup>1</sup>this prophet,<sup>f</sup> of millions <sup>3</sup>of years. Executed under the hand of the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal [seal], sole companion <sup>4</sup>———<sup>g</sup> <sup>5</sup>———.

---

<sup>a</sup>The same statement is found in two other inscriptions at Sarbūt el-Khadem (Weill, Sinai, 179 and 180).

<sup>b</sup>Possibly one more line lost.

<sup>c</sup>Cut in the walls of the quarry at Turra; published by Vyse (Operations, III, opp. p. 94) and Lepsius (Denkmäler, II, 143, i).

<sup>d</sup>Omitted by Lepsius, Denkmäler.

<sup>e</sup>The n after m-w t is an error for the book-roll; cf. Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 3, a.

<sup>f</sup>This remarkable phrase (quite clear in both texts) designates the king, for in the Turra inscription of Ahmose (II, 26 ff.) we have “his (the king’s) temples” as a parallel; but this is so unusual that an error in the text is more probable, possibly for “this god?”

<sup>g</sup>The name of the official is lost. Cf. the similar inscription of Ahmose (II, 26 ff.) at the beginning of the Eighteenth Dynasty. They are so similar that one cannot imagine the usually accepted lapse of one thousand years between them.

EL KAB STELA<sup>a</sup>

741. If the “Wall of Seshmu-towe” is a designation of the stronghold of El Kab, then its famous wall is the work of Sesostris II, whose Horus-name is Seshmu-towe. This stela was found at El Kab. The only place there which could conceivably contain a temple inclosure is the town within the wall. This document, therefore, shows that Sesostris II should be regarded as the builder of the famous wall of El Kab.

Above are the Horus- and throne-names of Amenemhet III, “beloved of Nekhbet, mistress of heaven;” and below is the following inscription:

742. Year 44, under the majesty of this god. He made (it) as his monument; his majesty commanding to build the inclosure wall, which is in “Wall of Seshmu-towe,”<sup>b</sup> triumphant ———.

INSCRIPTION OF SEHETEPIBRE<sup>c</sup>

743. Besides a meager record of works, which he executed for Amenemhet III at Abydos, Sehetepibre also placed upon his mortuary stela a very interesting poem containing <sup>a</sup>Found at El Kab by Rev. H. Stobart in 1854–55; it has since disappeared; published in Egyptian Antiquities Collected on a Voyage Made in Upper Egypt, etc., by Rev. H. Stobart, M.A. (Paris and Berlin, 1855), Pl. I, and from Stobart by Legrain, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, March, 1905.

<sup>b</sup>In cartouche; it is a designation of the king, meaning “Leader or administrator of the Two Lands,” the Horus-name of Sesostris II. There is nothing unique in the use of the Horus-name in a cartouche. M. Legrain’s recent explanation of the name as “Samou” (reading “two lands” as m, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, March, 1905, 106 ff.) is impossible, as the horizontal m does not occur until long after the Twelfth Dynasty.

<sup>c</sup>Mortuary stela discovered by Mariette at Abydos, now in Cairo (No. 20538); published very inaccurately by him, Abydos, II, 25 (= Catalogue général d’Abydos, No. 670). It is accurately published by Piehl, Inscriptions, III, Pls. IV–VII. I was also able to use a collation of the Berlin squeeze by Sethe, and afterward a copy of the original by Schaefer.

instructions to his children regarding the proper plan of life. It consists simply in serving the king faithfully and cultivating his favor. With the exception of this instruction, a large portion of the inscriptions was copied from the stela of Mentuhotep,<sup>a</sup> a powerful official under Sesostris I.

744. Above<sup>b</sup> is the Horus-name of Amenemhet III, surmounted by the Horus receiving life from Osiris; below is the following inscription, which is a good example of the exaggerated titular epithets conventionally applied to the Middle Kingdom noble of power and favor at court.

Titles and Honors

745. <sup>1</sup>The hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion in love, magnate of the King of Upper Egypt, great one of the King of Lower Egypt, prince at <sup>2</sup>the head of the people, overseer of horn, hoof, and feather,<sup>c</sup> [<sup>3</sup>overseer<sup>1</sup>] of the two pleasure-marshes,<sup>d</sup> whose coming is heeded by the court, <sup>3</sup>to whom the bodies tell their affairs, whose excellence the Lord of the Two Lands sees, whom he hath exalted before the two regions, possessed <sup>4</sup>of silver and gold, mighty in costly stones,<sup>e</sup> a man of truth before the Two Lands, a truthful witness <sup>5</sup>like Thoth, master of secret things<sup>f</sup> in the temples, chief of all works of the king's-house, more accurate than the weight, <sup>6</sup>the likeness of the balances, taking thought,<sup>g</sup> excellent in counsel, speaking that which is good, repeating that which is loved, <sup>7</sup>taking thought, without his like, good at listening, excellent in speaking, a prince who

<sup>a</sup>See §§ 530 ff.; compare Daressy (Recueil, X, 144-49), who arranges both parallel. He unfortunately uses Mariette's inaccurate text of Sehetepibre without revision.

<sup>b</sup>Recto.

<sup>c</sup>The live-stock of the royal estate.

<sup>d</sup>These are the "preserves" of fish, wild fowl, etc. There were officially two, in deference to the conventional fiction, one for Upper and one for Lower Egypt.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "Belonging to silver, etc.;" these and the epithets in l. 2 are poetical references to his office.

<sup>f</sup>This has no reference to esoteric teachings, for Sehetepibre was not a priest, but refers simply to the secret chambers of the temples, containing costly images, etc.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "putting the heart" (exactly parallel with the Hebrew קים לב I find it used in parallelism with שׁבּ = "remember" (e. g., Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 149, e, l. 10).

looses the knot,<sup>a</sup> whom his lord exalts <sup>8</sup>before millions, real image of love, free from acting deceit, favorite of the heart of the king, to whom is assigned (the office of) "Pillar of the South" <sup>9</sup>in<sup>b</sup> the king's-house, who follows his lord at his goings, entering into his heart before the court; belonging behind his lord, being the favorite of the Horus, <sup>10</sup>excellent in the palace; the real favorite of his lord; to whom secret matters are told, who finds the word of counsel, <sup>11</sup>sweetening misfortune, doing things by good rule, the wearer of the royal seal, overseer of royal property, deputy of the chief treasurer, Sehetepibre; he saith:<sup>c</sup> . . . . .

Abydos Tomb

746. <sup>1d</sup>Now, I made this excellent tomb, <sup>2</sup>and beautified its place. I gave contracts for the remuneration of the prophets <sup>3</sup>of Abydos. I acted as "Son-Whom-He-Loves" in the conduct of the house of gold, in the secrets of the lord of Abydos. <sup>4</sup>I conducted the work on the sacred barque, I fashioned its colors, I acted as Hakro (H<sup>3</sup>k-r<sup>2</sup>) <sup>5</sup>of his Lord (at) every procession of Upwawet, making for him all the festal offerings, which the prophet read. I clothed the god at his processions by virtue of my office as master of secret things, and my duty as [— 7—]. I was one whose two hands were [—] in adorning the god, a (sm-) priest with pure fingers.<sup>e</sup> May I be a follower of the god, <sup>8</sup>in order that I may be glorious and mighty at the stairway of the lord of Abydos.

The Instruction

747. The beginning of<sup>f</sup> the teaching which he composed before his children. <sup>9</sup>I speak great things, I cause you to hear, I cause you to know the eternal manner, the true manner of <sup>10</sup>life<sup>g</sup>—the passing of life in peace.

<sup>a</sup>Referring to difficult matters; compare our "knotty problem."

<sup>b</sup>Mentuhotep has: "of the king's-house."

<sup>c</sup>A mortuary prayer follows.

<sup>d</sup>This new numbering begins on the verso.

<sup>e</sup>The reference is to the festal processions in which the god appeared in public. The festal decoration of the figure was the work of Sehetepibre, and for this duty he possessed the requisite ceremonial purity.

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "The beginning with the teaching," the usual introduction of such compositions.

<sup>g</sup>N-m<sup>3</sup>c w-R<sup>c</sup>, a pun on the following name of the king, N-m<sup>3</sup>c t-R<sup>c</sup>; but its meaning is not certain.

Adore the king, Nematre (Amenemhet III), living forever, in the midst <sup>11</sup>of your bodies;

Enthroned his majesty in your hearts.

He is Esye<sup>a</sup> (Sy<sup>2</sup>) in the hearts;

His two eyes, they search <sup>12</sup>every body.

He is the Sun, seeing with his rays;<sup>b</sup>

He illuminates the Two Lands more than the sun-disk.

He makes the Two Lands green <sup>13</sup>more than a great Nile;

He hath filled the Two Lands with strength.

(He is) life, cooling the nostrils;

When he begins <sup>14</sup>to rage,<sup>c</sup> he is satisfied to [—].

The treasures<sup>d</sup> which he gives are food for those who are in his following;

He feeds those who tread <sup>15</sup>his path.

The king is food (k<sup>2</sup>),

His mouth is increase.

He is the one creating that which is;

He is the Khnum<sup>e</sup> of <sup>16</sup>all limbs;

The Begetter, who causes the people to be.

He is Bast protecting the Two Lands.

He who adores <sup>17</sup>him shall [escape] his arm,

He is Sekhmet<sup>f</sup> toward him who transgresses his command.

He is [gentle] toward him who has [—].

748. Fight for his name,

<sup>18</sup>Purify yourselves by his oath.

And ye shall be free from trouble.

The beloved of the king shall be <sup>19</sup>blessed;

There is no tomb for one hostile to his majesty;

But his body shall be thrown<sup>g</sup> to the waters.

Do ye this, and your limbs shall be sound;

Ye shall be glorious [—] forever.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>God of wisdom and knowledge. The argument is: honor the king in your innermost hearts, for he knows your hearts.

<sup>b</sup>Or: "by whose rays there is seeing" (passive participle).

<sup>c</sup>Or: "He is far from raging, he is satisfied, etc."

<sup>d</sup>Read h<sup>c</sup>w "heaps;" but it possibly belongs to preceding.

<sup>e</sup>One of the gods, who created man. gKm<sup>2</sup> n, see § 512, l. 18.

<sup>f</sup>Goddess of war and terror.

<sup>h</sup>Another mortuary prayer follows.

REIGN OF AMENEMHET IV

KUMMEH INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

749. All of the few dated records of Amenemhet IV are beyond the borders of Egypt. The earliest is the rock inscription of Kummeh, recording the height of the Nile there.

Height (r<sup>2</sup>) of the Nile of the year 5, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makhrure (M<sup>2</sup>c-hrw-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenemhet IV), living forever and ever.

---

SINAI INSCRIPTIONS

750. Amenemhet IV continued the exploitation of the Sinaitic mines at least as late as his sixth year. At Wadi Maghara his officials have left two records, the first<sup>b</sup> containing only the date and the leader's titles, as follows:

Year 6 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makhrure (Amenemhet IV), given life forever, — beloved of Soped, [lord of the East] and Hathor, mistress of malachite.

—————<sup>c</sup> desire, treading the way of him (the king) who favors him; whom the soldiers love, [—] his designs, giving attention, [— — —] storeroom-keeper of the palace, Kheye (H<sup>c2</sup>y), [born of] Henut (Hnw[t]).

A further inscription<sup>d</sup> also bears the same date, but contains only a mortuary prayer.

At Sarbût el-Khadem two inscriptions<sup>e</sup> contain only the Pharaoh's name.

---

<sup>a</sup>Engraved on the rocks above the river at Kummeh; Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 152 f.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 137, d; Weill, Sinai, 145.

<sup>c</sup>Titles of the official.

<sup>d</sup>Weill, Sinai, 148.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 140, o. p.; Weill, Sinai, 171, 172.

FROM THE THIRTEENTH DYNASTY TO THE HYKSOS

REIGN OF SEKHEMRE-KHUTOWE

RECORDS OF NILE-LEVELS<sup>a</sup>

751. These four inscriptions are the latest of the well-known records on the rocks at Semneh, above the second cataract, which mark the maximum level of the river. They begin under Amenemhet III, and continue into the reign of Sekhemre-Khutowe, when they abruptly cease with these four, here discussed, which thus possess a certain importance. These Nile records are indeed our only historical inscriptions from the reign of this obscure king,<sup>b</sup> and the first ray of light after the fall of the Twelfth Dynasty. They continue uninterruptedly from the year 1 to the year 4, inclusive, but only that of the year 3<sup>c</sup> contains more than the words, "Height of the Nile of the year —;" it is as follows:

752. Height of the Nile of the year 3, under the majesty of King Sekhemre-Khutowe (Shm-R<sup>c</sup>-hw-t<sup>3</sup>wy), living forever; when the wearer of the royal seal, the commander of the army, Renseneb (Rn snb), was commanding in the fortress: "Mighty-is-Khekure" (Sesostris III).<sup>d</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Inscribed on the rocks above Semneh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 151, a-d.

<sup>b</sup>Administrative documents from his first, and probably also his second and fifth years, are found in the Kahun Papyri (Griffith, Kahun Papyri, Pl. X, ll. 1, 3; and Pl. IX, l. 9; see Griffith's remarks, p. 86). Blocks bearing his name were found also at Bubastis. There is no evidence connecting this king with the name Sebekhotep.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 151, c.

<sup>d</sup>This is evidently either the fortress of Semneh or that of Kummeh opposite.

REIGN OF NEFERHOTEP

GREAT ABYDOS STELA<sup>a</sup>

753. As the only considerable document of this king, containing more than his name or those of his family, this inscription is of great importance; but, besides this, its unique content renders it of especial interest. Neferhotep was the son of a priest, “the divine father, Ha-enkhej (h<sup>2</sup>-nhj)” and “the royal mother, Kemi (Kmy),”<sup>b</sup> through whom he possibly inherited royal blood, although he is more likely to have usurped the throne, thus giving his mother her title. Like the ephemeral Khenzer, he gave special attention to the maintenance of the Abydos temple, and this stela, erected to testify to his zeal, tells how he investigated the ancient records at Heliopolis to ascertain exactly what was due to Osiris, particularly the proper form for the divine statue, as it was at the beginning of the world.

754. In order to carry out what he had found in the records, he proceeded in person to Abydos, sending a messenger thither before him, to bring forth the statue of the god to meet him. The divine image was carried in festal procession to the sacred barge, which sailed out on the canal, probably to the Nile, seven miles away, where the king was met and accompanied back to the temple amid a celebration in which the incidents of the Osiris-myth were dramatically enacted by the priests. On his arrival the king personally carried out all that he had discovered in the records of Atum. He then admonished the priests to vigilance and pronounced a curse on those who should disregard his established offerings.

---

<sup>a</sup>A sandstone stela, nearly 6 feet high and over 3 feet wide, set up on the wall of the road leading to the Middle Kingdom Osiris-temple. It was in such bad condition that Mariette left it in situ; but, after years of exposure to weather and vandalism, it has now been brought to the Cairo Museum. It was evidently exceedingly indistinct and difficult to copy, and the two copies of Mariette and Devéria, from which the text is published (Mariette, Abydos, II, 28-30; Catalogue général d'Abydos, 233, 234, No. 766) contained many errors, only a portion of which it is possible to correct. These and the frequent lacunæ render a complete translation impossible, but enough has been given to make the essential progress of the narrative clear. A better text is now hardly a possibility.

<sup>b</sup>Family list cut on the rocks at Assuan (Petrie, Season in Egypt, XIII, No. 337=Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 151, e=Text, IV, 126) and on Sehel at the first cataract (Mariette, Monuments divers, 70, 3); also on several scarabs (Petrie, Scarabs, Nos. 293-98.

Introduction

755. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, under the majesty of King Neferhotep,<sup>a</sup> born of the royal mother, Kemi (Kmy), who is given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever. <sup>2</sup>His majesty appeared<sup>b</sup> upon the throne of Horus in the palace, "Structure<sup>1</sup>-of-Beauty."<sup>c</sup> His majesty spake to the nobles, and companions, who were in his suite, the real scribes of the hieroglyphs, the masters of all secrets:

King's Speech

756. "My heart hath desired to see the ancient writings of Atum;<sup>d</sup> open ye for me for a great investigation; let the god know concerning his creation, and the gods concerning their fashioning, their offerings and their<sup>1</sup> oblations . . . . . (let) me know the god<sup>4</sup> in his form, that I may fashion him as he was formerly, when they made the statues<sup>1</sup> in their council, in order to establish their monuments upon earth.<sup>e</sup> They have given to me the inheritance of Re as far as<sup>1</sup> the

<sup>a</sup>Full fivefold titulary.

<sup>b</sup>Read ḥꜥꜥ, lit., "the appearance of his majesty . . ."

<sup>c</sup>Or: "Bearer (wꜥs)-of-beauty," which must be the name of the palace.

<sup>d</sup>The sanctuary of Atum was at Heliopolis, and his writings would be there; this explains why the messenger of the king journeys southward to Abydos (l. 14), whereas he would have gone northward from the royal residence in Thebes.

<sup>e</sup>The reference is apparently to a council of the gods in which the form of the god's statue was determined once for all. This the king expects to find in the ancient writings.

circuit of the sun <sup>5</sup> . . . . . I will increase that which I shall have investigated,<sup>a</sup> and they shall [increase<sup>1</sup> love for me — to <sup>6</sup>do according to that which they command.”

Reply of Court

757. These companions said: “That which thy ka hath [commanded<sup>1b</sup> is that which happens, O sovereign and lord. Let thy majesty proceed to the libraries,<sup>c</sup> and let thy majesty see every hieroglyph.”

Examination of Ancient Rolls

758. His majesty proceeded <sup>7</sup>to the library. His majesty opened the rolls together with these companions. Lo, his majesty found the rolls of the House of Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord of Abydos.

King's Purpose

759. His majesty said to these companions: “My majesty <sup>8</sup>hails my father Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord of Abydos. I will fashion [him, his limbs — his face, his fingers<sup>1</sup> according to that which my majesty has seen in the rolls [— —] his [form<sup>1</sup> as King of Upper and Lower Egypt, at his coming forth from the body of Nut.<sup>d</sup> <sup>9</sup>. . . . .
<sup>12</sup>. . . . .<sup>e</sup>”

Messenger Sent to Abydos

760. His majesty had the king's-confidant, who was in his majesty's suite, called to him; his majesty said [to] him: <sup>13</sup>“Betake thyself southward — — [together with] troops<sup>1</sup> and marines. Sleep not night nor day until thou arrivest at Abydos; cause the First of the Westerners

<sup>a</sup>Or: “that which is assigned to me.” He means he will increase what his investigation shows is demanded in the ancient writings.

<sup>b</sup>The emendation is almost certain. Cf. the similar statement in the instruction to the priests of Abydos (II, 91, l. 5).

<sup>c</sup>Lit., “houses of writings or rolls.”

<sup>d</sup>He means he has found in the writings the original form of the god as king at his birth.

<sup>e</sup>The remainder of the king's speech contains only conventional phrases, in the course of which, reference is again made to “making the monuments of Osiris and perpetuating the name of Wennofer” (l. 10). The answer of the courtiers is very short (occupying the first half of l. 12) and very fragmentary.

(Osiris) to proceed (forth).<sup>a</sup> May I make his monuments according to "the beginning."<sup>b</sup>

Reply of Court

761. These companions said: "That which thou commandest [is that which happens, O sovereign]<sup>c</sup> and lord; thou doest all — in Abydos for thy father, First of the Westerners."

Messenger Departs

762. This official betook himself southward<sup>d</sup> [to do] "that which his majesty commanded him. He arrived at [Abydos] [—] — —. The majesty of this god came to the sacred barge of the lord of eternity [—] — — the banks of the river were flooded [with his fragrance and with] "the odors of Punt."<sup>e</sup> [The majesty of this god] arrived in the midst — — —. One came to inform his majesty, saying: "This god has proceeded in peace."

King Goes to Abydos

763. His majesty proceeded [in] "the sacred ship . . . . . together with this god, causing that sacred offerings be presented to his father, the First of the Westerners: myrrh — "and sacred things for Osiris, First of the Westerners, in all his names . . . . . those hostile to the sacred barge were overthrown. Lo, the majesty of this god appeared in procession,<sup>h</sup> his ennead united [with him]. "Upwawet was before him, he opened the ways<sup>i</sup> . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>In order to meet the king at his coming to Abydos, as the conclusion shows.

<sup>b</sup>The original form as at the beginning of the world, which he learned from the rolls.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from l. 6.

<sup>d</sup>Because the royal party is at Heliopolis (see note, l. 3) there is no reason here to suppose that the royal residence is in the north.

<sup>e</sup>There is no trace of an expedition to Punt here, as frequently stated; the description is the usual one accompanying the bodily approach of a god; see that of Amon, II § 196.

<sup>f</sup>Evidently the meeting of the king and the god occurred at this point; there is a reference to the "head of the canal," probably the canal on which the god voyaged in his barge to meet the king. See Great Abydos Inscription of Ramses II, l. 29.

<sup>g</sup>A series of incidents in the myth of the god are now dramatically enacted by the priests as the procession of the king and the god moves toward Abydos.

<sup>h</sup>He leaves the barge, to return in procession to the temple.

<sup>i</sup>The name of the god Upwawet (Wp-w>wt) means: "Opener of the ways." One of the priests, wearing a jackal mask, acts the part of Upwawet.

King Executes Temple Works

764. Lo, his majesty caused that this god should proceed<sup>1</sup> to f—<sup>1</sup> that he should rest [on] his throne in the house of gold; in order to fashion the beauty of his majesty<sup>a</sup> and his ennead, his oblation-tables — — — of <sup>2</sup>every splendid, costly stone of God's-Land. Behold, [the king] himself led the work on them — gold, (for) his majesty was pure with the purity of a god . . . . .<sup>b</sup>

King's Concluding Speech

765. <sup>33</sup>. . . . . Be ye vigilant for the temple, look to the monuments <sup>34</sup>which I have made. I put the eternal plan before me, I sought that which was useful for the future by putting this example in your hearts, which is about to occur in this place, which the god made, because of my desire <sup>35</sup>to establish my monuments in his temple, to perpetuate my contracts<sup>c</sup> in his house. His majesty loves that which I have done for him, he rejoices over that which I have decreed to do, (ffor<sup>1</sup>) triumph has been given<sup>1</sup> to him. <sup>36</sup>I am his son, his protector, he giveth to me the inheritance of the earth.<sup>d</sup> [I] am the king, great in strength, excellent in commandment. He shall not live who is hostile to me; he shall not breathe <sup>37</sup>the air who revolts against me; his name shall not be among the living; his ka shall be seized before the officials; he shall be cast out for this god, [together with<sup>1</sup>] him who shall disregard the command of my majesty and those who shall not <sup>38</sup>do according to this command of my majesty, who shall not exalt me to this august god, who shall not honor that which I have done concerning his offerings [who shall not] give to me praise <sup>39</sup>at every feast of this temple, of the entire [lay priesthood]<sup>e</sup> of the sanctuary of this temple, and every office of Abydos. Behold, my majesty has made these monu-

<sup>a</sup>The god; he is taken to the workshop of the goldsmith, that a new statue may be made.

<sup>b</sup>The further execution of the work is narrated in a few very fragmentary sentences, in which is the interesting statement: "No scribe who was in the suite of his majesty had ever found it" (l. 21), referring doubtless to the king's discovery in the rolls. The continuation merges (l. 22) into a long speech of the king, addressed to the god; at l. 27 begins a prayer of the king, which merges at l. 32 into an address to the court.

<sup>c</sup>See § 535.

<sup>d</sup>"The estate of the earth," literally.

<sup>e</sup>Restored from Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, XXI, l. 15.

ments, for my father, Osiris, First of the Westerners, Lord of Abydos, <sup>40</sup>because I so much loved him, more than all gods; that he might give to me a reward for this [which I have done], — — —<sup>a</sup> consisting of millions of years . . . . .

---

BOUNDARY STELA<sup>b</sup>

766. This stela was one of two, erected one at each end of a part of the Abydos cemetery, and bearing a decree of Neferhotep forbidding all public access to this part of the necropolis.

Dedication

767. He made (it) as his monument for his father Upwawet, lord of Tazoser.

Entrance Prohibited

768. Year 4. My majesty, L. P. H., decrees that the cemetery (Tazoser) south of Abydos shall be protected and defended<sup>c</sup> for his father Upwawet, lord of Tazoser, as Horus did for his father Osiris-Wennofer; not permitting any persons to set foot in this cemetery (Tazoser).

Stelæ Bearing Decree

769. Two<sup>d</sup> stelæ are set up at its south and at its north, engraved with the great name of my majesty, L. P. H. The southern (stela) is made in addition<sup>e</sup> to these stelæ,<sup>f</sup> which are as far as the south, and the northern (stela) in addition<sup>e</sup> to these stelæ, which are as far as the north.

---

<sup>a</sup>The reward consists of millions, etc.

<sup>b</sup>Limestone stela, round-topped, found by Mace at Abydos; published by him, El Amrah, Pl. XXIX.

<sup>c</sup>All sacred things, including the king's person, are "protected and defended" (hwy mky) by the gods; cf. IV, 424, 528, l. 7, the last also of a cemetery.

<sup>d</sup>One at each end.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "upon."

<sup>f</sup>Which were already there; other stelæ already existed, and the two bearing this decree are added to the former.

Penalties

770. As for him<sup>a</sup> whom anyone shall find within these stelæ, whether a craftsman or a priest at his business, he shall be branded.<sup>b</sup>

As for any official, who shall have a tomb made for himself within this cemetery (ys·t-dsr·t), he shall be reported, and the law shall be executed upon him, and the necropolis-custodian as on this day.<sup>c</sup>

People's Burial Place

771. Now, as for any addition to this cemetery (ys·t-dsr·t), (in) the place where the people make tombs for themselves, there shall they be buried.

Benediction

772. May he (the king) be thereby given life, stability, satisfaction, health; may his heart be glad together with his ka, upon the throne of Horus, like Re, forever.

---

<sup>a</sup>See another example of nty-tw in Recueil, XV, 84, l. 8.

<sup>b</sup>See same word, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 257, a, l. 36.

<sup>c</sup>Or: "from this day"?

REIGN OF NUBKHEPRURE-INTEF

COPTOS DECREE<sup>a</sup>

773. In addition to its significant content, this decree is important as showing beyond doubt that one of the Intefs lived after the Twelfth Dynasty, for it is engraved upon a doorway of Sesostri I, and must, of course, be later than his reign.<sup>b</sup>

774. The document itself decrees the degradation from office of a count of Coptos, with the loss of all income appertaining to the office, both to himself and his posterity; and the appointment of another to the position. The crime thus punished, vaguely called "an evil thing," is, of course, treason, and is doubtless one of the many attempts at rebellion such as produced the downfall of the Middle Kingdom. Teti, the traitor deposed, had he succeeded, would have become one of the ephemeral kings, whose names make up the long list of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Dynasties in the Turin Papyrus. The remarkable reference to mercy or favor being shown him by other rulers can hardly designate future kings, but is doubtless an indication of the divided state of the country under a number of petty kings reigning contemporaneously with Intef of our decree. The history of the whole period from the fall of the Twelfth Dynasty to the rise of the Eighteenth owes its paucity of monuments to the endless wars growing out of such attempts, complicated eventually by the invasion of the Hyksos. The plotting and revolts of local princes continued into the reign of Ahmose who, suppressed at least three such (§§ 11, 15, 16), and the name of the rebel in the third case was Teti-en (§ 16, l. 23), almost the same as that of the traitor in this decree.

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on a doorway of Sesostri I at Coptos; found by Petrie and published in Coptos, VIII.

<sup>b</sup>There can be no doubt that the Nb-hpr-Rc placed just before the Seventeenth Dynasty in the Karnak list, is this Intef.

Date

775. <sup>1</sup>Year 3, third month of the second season, day 25, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nubkheprure (Nb-ḥprw-R), Son of Re, Intef, who is given life, like Re, forever.

Title of Decree

776. Royal decree to:
 The wearer of the royal seal, the count of Coptos, <sup>2</sup>Minemhet;
 The king's-son, commandant of Coptos, Kinen (Ky-nn);
 The wearer of the royal seal, the priest of Min, scribe of the temple, Neferhotepur;
 The whole army of Coptos,
 And the entire lay priesthood of the temple.

Discovery of Culprit

777. Behold, <sup>3</sup>there is brought to you this decree, to let you know: that my majesty, L. P. H., has sent the scribe of the sacred treasury of Amon, Siamon, and the <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> Amensere (Ymn-wsr-ḥ), <sup>4</sup>to make an inspection in the temple of Min; and that the lay priesthood of the temple of my father, Min, applied to my majesty, L. P. H., saying: "An evil thing is about to happen in this <sup>5</sup>temple. Foes have been <sup>1</sup>stirred up<sup>1</sup> by, a curse to his name! Teti, son of Minhotep.

Punishment of Culprit

778. Cause him to be deposed<sup>a</sup> from the temple of my father, Min; cause <sup>6</sup>him to be<sup>1</sup> cast out of his temple office, from son to son, and heir to heir;<sup>b</sup> <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> upon the earth; take away his bread, his <sup>1</sup>food<sup>1</sup>, and his joints of meat.<sup>a</sup> His name shall not be remembered in this temple, according as it is done toward one like him, <sup>b</sup>who is hostile toward the enemies of his god.<sup>b</sup> His entries<sup>c</sup> shall be cast out from the temple of Min, from the treasury, and on every book likewise.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "Cause him to be put upon the ground;" to put upon the ground is to annul, and is used, for example, of remitting taxes (§ 408, ll. 10, 11).

<sup>b</sup>The penalty is entailed upon his posterity.

No King or Dynast to Show Him Mercy

779. As for any king <sup>8</sup>or any ruler,<sup>d</sup> who shall be merciful to him, he shall not receive the white crown, he shall not wear the red crown, he shall not sit upon the Horus-throne of the living, the two patron goddesses shall not be gracious to him <sup>9</sup>as their beloved. As for any commandant or any official who shall apply to the king, L. P. H., to be merciful to him (the traitor), his (the applicant's) people, his goods, his fields shall be given to the sacred property of <sup>10</sup>my father, Min, lord of Coptos.

Culprit's Office Given to Minemhet

780. No one of his connections, or of the family of his father or of his mother shall be inducted into this office, <sup>11</sup>but this office shall be given to the wearer of the royal seal, the overseer of royal property, Minemhet. Its bread, its <sup>1</sup>food<sup>1</sup> and its<sup>c</sup> joints of meat shall be given to him, established for him in writing, in the temple <sup>12</sup>of my father Min, lord of Coptos, from son to son and heir to heir.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The income of his office.

<sup>b</sup>There are no difficulties of lexicon or grammar in this clause, but the meaning when rendered, is uncertain.

<sup>c</sup>The registration of temple dues to be paid him.

<sup>d</sup>Šm-yrj. The indication is strong that the king is not here referring to future kings, his successors, but to contemporary rulers of Egypt.

<sup>e</sup>The possessive pronouns refer to "this office" and indicate the income belonging to it, formerly paid to the traitor.

<sup>f</sup>The office is hereditary.

REIGN OF KHENZER

INSCRIPTIONS OF AMENISENEB<sup>a</sup>

781. Ameniseneb was commissioned by the vizier in the time of King Khenzer to cleanse the temple of Abydos, a task which he accomplished so well that he was appointed to direct all inspections in the temple during the rest of his life. These honors he therefore recorded in the following interesting inscriptions, one of which refers to the work of Sesostri I on the Abydos temple over two hundred years before Ameniseneb's time.

782. The first stela<sup>b</sup> begins with the usual mortuary prayer "for the ka of the chief of a priestly phyle of Abydos, Ameniseneb, triumphant, son of Emku (<sup>c</sup>m-k<sup>w</sup>), born of the matron Nebetyotej (Nb · t-ytj)." It then proceeds as follows:

Commission by the Vizier

783. <sup>3</sup>He saith: "The scribe of the vizier, Seneb,<sup>c</sup> the son of the vizier, came to call me, by order of <sup>4</sup>the vizier. Then I went with him, and I found the governor of the residence city, the vizier, <sup>5</sup>Enkhu<sup>d</sup> (<sup>e</sup>nḥw) in his hall. Then this official laid upon me a command, saying: 'Behold, <sup>6</sup>it is commanded, that thou cleanse this temple of Abydos.

---

<sup>a</sup>On his two stelæ from the Middle Kingdom temple of Abydos, now in the Louvre (C 11 and C 12). Published by Horrack (Mélanges égyptologiques, 3<sup>me</sup> ser., Vol. II, Pl. XIV, XV), and Sharpe (Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 24). Neither is accurate. I had also a text collated with the Berlin squeeze by Sethe, and my own copy of the original.

<sup>b</sup>Louvre, C 12.

<sup>c</sup>Seneb is the scribe's name, and in apposition with "son."

<sup>d</sup>This vizier is mentioned in other documents of the time: the Account Papyrus (Cairo, No. 18, Pl. XVI, l. 3); a stela in St. Petersburg (Lieblein, Dictionnaire, No. 1542); and a stela in Budapest (noted by Pieper). His statue was found at Karnak by Legrain in the great cache.

Artificers shall be given to thee for the contract thereof, together with the lay priesthood of the 'districts' of the storehouse of offerings.'"

Commission Executed

784. "Then I cleansed it in the <sup>8</sup>lower house and the upper house, <sup>a</sup> on <sup>b</sup> its walls, behind, and within; the painters filling with color, <sup>9</sup>with [—]<sup>10</sup> and with [—], <sup>c</sup> restoring that which <sup>10</sup>the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Kheperkere (Sesostris I), triumphant, made."<sup>d</sup>

Ameniseneb's Rewards

785. "Then came 'the protector of the oil tree'<sup>e</sup> <sup>11</sup>to assume his place in this temple,<sup>f</sup> while the deputy of the chief treasurer, Sionouris (S<sup>2</sup>-ym-hr't) followed him. Then <sup>13</sup>he thanked<sup>g</sup> me greatly, beyond everything, saying: 'How prosperous is he who has done <sup>14</sup>this for his god!' Then he gave to me a 'heap'<sup>h</sup> of 10 deben (weight), supplied with <sup>15</sup>dates and half an ox."

"Then came the official (sr) of [—] <sup>16</sup>down-stream; then were seen these works; <sup>17</sup>then was rejoicing thereat exceedingly, beyond everything."

786. The other stela<sup>i</sup> furnishes the name of the king for whom Ameniseneb executed the foregoing commission, and <sup>a</sup>Doubtless the upper and lower story; the upper story can only be the roof of the temple, over which awnings were drawn.

<sup>b</sup>Or: "in." <sup>c</sup>Tyt and ym; the latter is probably paste.

<sup>d</sup>Whether this indicates the whole of the temple or not, it is impossible to say. It cannot be said that this passage makes Sesostris I the founder of a new Abydos temple, as is often affirmed. On the commission to Abydos, intrusted by him to Mentuhotep, see § 534.

<sup>e</sup>This (hw-b<sup>2</sup>k) is doubtless a name of the cultus image of the god.

<sup>f</sup>The image of the god had been removed during the work in the holy place, and was now carried back to his place.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "he praised the god for me."

<sup>h</sup>"Heap" (hc) is a term commonly designating a pile of offerings, and regularly used of a group of articles of food when thus presented. Cf. § 747, l. 14, n. The insignificant weight is not the weight of the objects received, but their value in metal, weighing 10 deben (nearly 2½ pounds, troy). What metal is meant is not stated, but the weight clearly shows that copper is meant.

<sup>i</sup>Louvre, C 11.

THIRTEENTH DYNASTY: KHENZER

---

records the rewards decreed him by the king. At the top is the titulary, as follows:

The Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nematre-Nekhe[re],<sup>a</sup> who is given life forever; Bodily Son of Re, Khenzer,<sup>b</sup> who is given life, stability, satisfaction forever.

The text then proceeds:

787. <sup>1</sup>It was commanded to charge the chief of a priestly phyle of Abydos, Ameniseneb, triumphant, saying: "Behold, <sup>2</sup>these works which thou hast done have been seen; the king praises thee, his ka praises thee. <sup>3</sup>Spend thy good old age in this temple of thy god." Then it was commanded <sup>4</sup>to give to me the hind quarters of an ox, and it was commanded to charge me, saying: "Conduct <sup>5</sup>every inspection which takes place in this temple." I did according to all that was commanded; <sup>6</sup>I had every [shrine] (mnkb) of every god, who is in this temple, restored, <sup>7</sup>their altars renewed with cedar, and the great [oblation-table] which was in the presence.<sup>c</sup> <sup>8</sup>I executed my desire, it pleased my god; the king praised me.

---

<sup>a</sup>N-m>c·t-R<sup>c</sup> N-b<sup>c</sup>, in which the R<sup>c</sup> is perhaps to be twice read.

<sup>b</sup>Rather than R<sup>c</sup>-ndr (Nezerre).

<sup>c</sup>Of the god; or possibly "which was formerly there."

ADDENDUM

The reading of the name of Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep has been shown to be Nb-hp·t-R<sup>c</sup> (instead of Nb-hrw-R<sup>c</sup> as used above) by the recent excavations at Der el-Bahri. I owe this note to the kindness of Mr. Alan H. Gardiner.

Class 932

Book Bn

Library of Adelbert College v.2

of Western Reserve University, Cleveland. O.

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT

ANCIENT RECORDS

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF WILLIAM RAINY HARPER

---

First Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA
EDITED BY ROBERT FRANCIS HARPER

Second Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT
EDITED BY JAMES HENRY BREASTED

Third Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF PALESTINE, PHOENICIA
AND SYRIA
EDITED BY WILLIAM RAINY HARPER

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT*

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PERSIAN CONQUEST, COLLECTED
EDITED AND TRANSLATED WITH COMMENTARY

BY

JAMES HENRY BREASTED, PH.D.

PROFESSOR OF EGYPTOLOGY AND ORIENTAL HISTORY
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

VOLUME II

THE EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY

932
B72
V2

C

CHICAGO

THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

1906

LONDON: LUZAC & CO.

LEIPZIG: OTTO HARRASSOWITZ

COPYRIGHT 1906, BY
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
Published March 1906

a. c. l.

Composed and Printed By
The University of Chicago Press
Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

VOLUME I

	§§
THE DOCUMENTARY SOURCES OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY . . . . .	1-37
CHRONOLOGY . . . . .	38-57
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE . . . . .	58-75
THE PALERMO STONE: THE FIRST TO THE FIFTH DYNASTIES	76-167
I. Predynastic Kings . . . . .	90
II. First Dynasty . . . . .	91-116
III. Second Dynasty . . . . .	117-144
IV. Third Dynasty . . . . .	145-148
V. Fourth Dynasty . . . . .	149-152
VI. Fifth Dynasty . . . . .	153-167
THE THIRD DYNASTY . . . . .	168-175
Reign of Snefru . . . . .	168-175
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	168-169
Biography of Methen . . . . .	170-175
THE FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	176-212
Reign of Khufu . . . . .	176-187
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	176
Inventory Stela . . . . .	177-180
Examples of Dedication Inscriptions by Sons . . . . .	181-187
Reign of Khafre . . . . .	188-209
Stela of Mertityôtes . . . . .	188-189
Will of Prince Nekure, Son of King Khafre . . . . .	190-199
Testamentary Enactment of an Unknown Official, Establishing the Endowment of His Tomb by the Pyramid of Khafre . . . . .	200-209
Reign of Menkure . . . . .	210-212
Debhen's Inscription, Recounting King Menkure's Erec- tion of a Tomb for Him . . . . .	210-212
THE FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	213-281
Reign of Userkaf . . . . .	213-235

v

53112

	§§
Testamentary Enactment of Nekonekh . . . . .	213-215
I. The Priesthood of Hathor . . . . .	216-219
II. The Mortuary Priesthood of Khenuka . . . . .	220-222
III. Nekonekh's Will . . . . .	223-225
IV. Nekonekh's Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	226-227
V. Nekonekh's Mortuary Statue . . . . .	228-230
Testamentary Enactment of Senuonekh, Regulating His Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	231-235
Reign of Sahure . . . . .	236-241
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	236
Tomb Stela of Nenekhsekhmet . . . . .	237-240
Tomb Inscription of Persen . . . . .	241
Reign of Neferirkere . . . . .	242-249
Tomb Inscriptions of the Vizier, Chief Judge, and Chief Architect Weshptah . . . . .	242-249
Reign of Nuserre . . . . .	250-262
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	250
Tomb Inscriptions of Hotephiyakhmet . . . . .	251-253
Inscription of Ptahshepses . . . . .	254-262
Reign of Menkuhor . . . . .	263
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	263
Reign of Dedkere-Isesi . . . . .	264-281
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	264-267
Tomb Inscriptions of Senezemib, Chief Judge, Vizier, and Chief Architect . . . . .	268-277
Mortuary Inscription of Nezemib . . . . .	278-279
Tomb Inscription of the Nomarch Henku . . . . .	280-281
THE SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	282-390
Reign of Teti . . . . .	282-294
Inscriptions of Sabu, Also Called Ibebi . . . . .	282-286
Inscription of Sabu, Also Called Thety . . . . .	287-288
Inscription of an Unknown Builder . . . . .	289-290
Inscription of Uni . . . . .	291-294
I. Career under Teti (l. 1) . . . . .	292-294
II. Career under Pepi I (ll. 2-32) . . . . .	306-315
III. Career under Mernere (ll. 32-50) . . . . .	319-324
Reign of Pepi I . . . . .	295-315
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	295-301

	§§
I. The King's Inscriptions . . . . .	296
II. The Expedition's Inscription . . . . .	297-298
III. Chief Architect's Inscription . . . . .	299
IV. Inscription of the Treasurer of the God Ikhi . . . . .	300-301
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	302-303
Inscription in the Hatnub Quarry . . . . .	304-305
Inscription of Uni: II Career under Pepi I . . . . .	306-315
Reign of Mernere . . . . .	316-336
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	316-318
I. Northern Inscription . . . . .	317
II. Southern Inscription . . . . .	318
Inscription of Uni: III Career under Mernere . . . . .	319-324
Inscriptions of Harkhuf . . . . .	325-336
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued) . . . . .	350-354
Reign of Pepi II . . . . .	337-385
Conveyance of Land by Idu, Called Also Seneni . . . . .	337-338
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	339-343
Stela of the Two Queens, Enekhnes-Merire . . . . .	344-349
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued from § 336) . . . . .	350-354
Letter of Pepi II . . . . .	350-354
I. Dates and Introduction . . . . .	351
II. Acknowledgment of Harkhuf's Letter . . . . .	351
III. Harkhuf's Rewards . . . . .	352
IV. King's Instructions . . . . .	353-354
Inscriptions of Pepi-Nakht . . . . .	355-360
Inscriptions of Khui . . . . .	361
Inscriptions of Sebni . . . . .	362-374
Inscriptions of Ibi . . . . .	375-379
Inscription of Zau . . . . .	380-385
Reign of Ity . . . . .	386-387
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	386-387
Reign of Imhotep . . . . .	388-390
THE NINTH AND TENTH DYNASTIES . . . . .	391-414
Inscriptions of Siut . . . . .	391-414
I. Inscription of Tefibi . . . . .	393-397
II. Inscription of Kheti I . . . . .	398-404
III. Inscription of Kheti II . . . . .	405-414

	§§
THE ELEVENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	415-459
The Nomarch, Intef . . . . .	419-420
Mortuary Stela . . . . .	419-420
Reign of Horus-Wahenekh-Intef I . . . . .	421-423
Royal Tomb Stela . . . . .	421-423
Reign of Horus-Nakhtneb-Tepnefer-Intef II . . . . .	423A-423G
Stela of Thethi . . . . .	423A-423G
Reign of Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I . . . . .	423H
Temple Fragments from Gebelen . . . . .	423H
Reigns of Intef III and Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep II . . . . .	424-426
Relief near Assuan . . . . .	424-426
Reign of Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III . . . . .	427-433
Hammamat Inscription of Henu . . . . .	427-433
Reign of Nibtowere-Mentuhotep IV . . . . .	434-459
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	434-459
I. The First Wonder . . . . .	435-438
II. The Official Tablet . . . . .	439-443
III. The Commander's Tablet . . . . .	444-448
IV. The Second Wonder . . . . .	449-451
V. Completion of the Work . . . . .	452-456
Stela of Eti . . . . .	457-459
THE TWELFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	460-750
Chronology of Twelfth Dynasty . . . . .	460-462
Reign of Amenemhet I . . . . .	463-497
Inscription of Khnumhotep I . . . . .	463-465
Hammamat Inscription of Intef . . . . .	466-468
Inscription of Nessumontu . . . . .	469-471
Inscription of Korusko . . . . .	472-473
The Teaching of Amenemhet . . . . .	474-483
Dedication Inscription . . . . .	484-485
The Tale of Sinuhe . . . . .	486-497
Reign of Sesostris I . . . . .	498-593
The Building Inscription of the Temple of Heliopolis . . . . .	498-506
Inscription of Meri . . . . .	507-509
Wadi Halfa Inscription of Mentuhotep . . . . .	510-514
Inscription of Amenemhet (Ameni) . . . . .	515-523
Stela of Ikudidi . . . . .	524-528
Inscription of Intefyoker . . . . .	529

	§§
Inscriptions of Mentuhotep . . . . .	530-534
The Contracts of Hepzefi . . . . .	535-538
I. First Contract . . . . .	539-543
II. Second Contract . . . . .	544-548
III. Third Contract . . . . .	549-553
IV. Fourth Contract . . . . .	554-558
V. Fifth Contract . . . . .	559-567
VI. Sixth Contract . . . . .	568-571
VII. Seventh Contract . . . . .	572-575
VIII. Eighth Contract . . . . .	576-581
IX. Ninth Contract . . . . .	582-588
X. Tenth Contract . . . . .	589-593
Reign of Amenemhet II . . . . .	594-613
Inscription of Simontu . . . . .	594-598
Inscription of Sihathor . . . . .	599-605
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	606
Stela of Khentemseti . . . . .	607-613
Reign of Sesostris II . . . . .	614-639
Inscription of Hapu . . . . .	614-618
Inscription of Khnumhotep II . . . . .	619-639
Reign of Sesostris III . . . . .	640-748
The Conquest of Nubia . . . . .	640-672
I. The Canal Inscriptions . . . . .	642-649
I. First Inscription . . . . .	643-645
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	646-648
II. The Elephantine Inscription . . . . .	649-650
III. The First Semneh Stela . . . . .	651-652
IV. The Second Semneh Stela . . . . .	653-660
V. Inscription of Ikhnofret . . . . .	661-670
VI. Inscription of Sisetet . . . . .	671-673
See also . . . . .	676 ff. and 687
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	674-675
Stela of Sebek-Khu, called Zaa . . . . .	676-687
Inscriptions of Thuthotep . . . . .	688-706
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	707-712
Inscriptions of Sinai . . . . .	713-738
I. Wadi Maghara . . . . .	713-723
I. Inscriptions of Khenemsu . . . . .	714-716

	§§
II. Inscription of Harnakht . . . . .	717-718
III. Inscription of Sebekdidi . . . . .	719-720
IV. Inscription of Ameni . . . . .	721-723
II. Sarbût el-Khadem . . . . .	724-738
I. Inscription of Sebek-hir-hab . . . . .	725-727
II. Inscription of Ptahwer . . . . .	728-729
III. Inscription of Amenemhet . . . . .	730-732
IV. Inscription of Harurre . . . . .	733-738
Turra Inscription . . . . .	739-742
Inscription of Sehetepibre . . . . .	743-748
Reign of Amenemhet IV . . . . .	749-750
Kummeh Inscription . . . . .	749
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	750
FROM THE THIRTEENTH DYNASTY TO THE HYKSOS . . . . .	751-787
Reign of Sekhemre-Khutowe . . . . .	751-752
Records of Nile-Levels . . . . .	751-752
Reign of Neferhotep . . . . .	753-772
Great Abydos Stela . . . . .	753-765
Boundary Stela . . . . .	766-772
Reign of Nubkheprure-Intef . . . . .	773-780
Coptos Decree . . . . .	773-780
Reign of Khenzer . . . . .	781-787
Inscriptions of Ameniseneb . . . . .	781-787

---

VOLUME II

	§§
THE EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-1043
Reign of Ahmose I . . . . .	1-37
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	1-3
I. Career under Ahmose I (ll. 1-24) . . . . .	4-16
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-39
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	17-25
I. Ahmose's Campaigns [Continued § 40] . . . . .	18-20
II. Ahmose's Rewards . . . . .	21-24
III. Ahmose's Summary . . . . .	25

	§§
Quarry Inscription . . . . .	26-28
Karnak Stela . . . . .	29-32
Building Inscription . . . . .	33-37
Reign of Amenhotep I . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	38-39
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	40-42
Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	40-42
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	43-46
I. Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	44-46
II. Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	99-108
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Stela of Harmini . . . . .	47-48
Stela of Keres . . . . .	49-52
Reign of Thutmose I . . . . .	54-114
Coronation Decree . . . . .	54-60
Biographical Inscription of Thure . . . . .	61-66
Tombos Stela . . . . .	67-73
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	74-77
I. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	75
II. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	76
III. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	77
Inscription of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	78-82
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	83-85
Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	83-85
Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	86-89
Abydos Stela . . . . .	90-98
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	99-108
II. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 4-14) . . . . .	99-108
Stela of Yuf . . . . .	109-114
Reign of Thutmose II . . . . .	115-127
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	115-118
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
Assuan Inscription . . . . .	119-122
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	123-124
IV. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	123-124

	§§
Campaign in Syria . . . . .	125
The Ebony Shrine of Der el-Bahri . . . . .	126-127
Reign of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	128-390
Introduction . . . . .	128-130
Inscription of the Coronation; Buildings and Offerings	131-166
Semneh Temple Inscriptions . . . . .	167
I. Renewal of Sesostris III's List of Offerings . . . . .	168-172
II. Dedication to Dedun and Sesostris III . . . . .	173-176
Biography of Nebwawi . . . . .	177
I. The Statue Inscription . . . . .	178-183
II. Abydos Stela . . . . .	184-186
The Birth of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	187-191
I. The Council of the Gods . . . . .	192
II. Interviews Between Amon and Thoth . . . . .	193-194
III. Amon with Queen Ahmose . . . . .	195-198
IV. Interview Between Amon and Khnum . . . . .	199-201
V. Khnum Fashions the Child . . . . .	202-203
VI. Interview Between Thoth and Queen Ahmose . . . . .	204
VII. Queen Ahmose is Led to Confinement . . . . .	205
VIII. The Birth . . . . .	206-207
IX. Presentation of the Child to Amon . . . . .	208
X. Council of Amon and Hathor . . . . .	209
XI. The Nursing of the Child . . . . .	210
XII. Second Interview of Amon and Thoth . . . . .	211
XIII. The Final Scene . . . . .	212
Statue of Enebni . . . . .	213
Vase Inscription . . . . .	214
The Coronation of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	215
I. The Purification . . . . .	216
II. Amon presents the Child to All the Gods . . . . .	217-220
III. The Northern Journey . . . . .	221-225
IV. Coronation by Atum . . . . .	226-227
V. Reception of the Crowns and the Names . . . . .	228-230
VI. Proclamation as King before Amon . . . . .	231
VII. Coronation before the Court . . . . .	232-239
VIII. Second Purification . . . . .	240-241
IX. Concluding Ceremonies . . . . .	242
Southern Pylon Inscription at Karnak . . . . .	243-245

	ii
The Punt Reliefs . . . . .	246-295
I. Departure of the Fleet . . . . .	252-253
II. Reception in Punt . . . . .	254-258
III. The Traffic . . . . .	259-262
IV. Loading the Vessels . . . . .	263-265
V. The Return Voyage . . . . .	266
VI. Presentation of the Tribute to the Queen by the Chiefs of Punt, Irem and Nemyew . . . . .	267-269
VII. The Queen Offers the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	270-272
VIII. Weighing and Measuring the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	273-282
IX. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition before Amon . . . . .	283-288
X. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition to the Court . . . . .	289-295
Inscription of the Speos Artemidos . . . . .	296-303
The Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	304-307
I. Shaft Inscriptions; Middle Columns . . . . .	308-311
II. Shaft Inscriptions; Side Columns . . . . .	312-313
III. Base Inscription . . . . .	314-321
Reliefs of Transportation of Obelisks . . . . .	322
I. Transport . . . . .	323-329
II. Reception in Thebes . . . . .	330-335
III. Dedication of the Obelisks . . . . .	336
Rock Inscription in Wadi Maghara . . . . .	337
Building Inscription of Western Thebes . . . . .	338-339
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	340-343
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	344
Conclusion of Summary . . . . .	344
Inscriptions of Senmut . . . . .	345-368
I. Inscriptions on the Karnak Statue . . . . .	349-358
II. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	359-362
III. Inscriptions on the Berlin Statue . . . . .	363-368
Inscription of Thutiy . . . . .	369-378
Inscriptions of Puemre . . . . .	379
I. Statue of Inscription . . . . .	380-381
II. Tomb Inscriptions . . . . .	382-387
Inscriptions of Hapuseneb . . . . .	388-390

	§§
Reign of Thutmose III . . . . .	391-779
The Annals . . . . .	391-405
The Annals: Conspectus of Campaigns . . . . .	406
I. Introduction . . . . .	407
II. First Campaign (Year 23) . . . . .	408-443
Wadi Halfa Inscription . . . . .	411-437
Fragment on the Siege of Megiddo . . . . .	438-443
III. Second Campaign (Year 24) . . . . .	444-449
IV. Third Campaign (Year 25) . . . . .	450-452
V. Fourth Campaign . . . . .	453
VI. Fifth Campaign (Year 29) . . . . .	454-462
VII. Sixth Campaign (Year 30) . . . . .	463-467
VIII. Seventh Campaign (Year 31) . . . . .	468-475
IX. Eighth Campaign (Year 33) . . . . .	476-487
X. Ninth Campaign (Year 34) . . . . .	488-495
XI. Tenth Campaign (Year 35) . . . . .	496-503
XII. Eleventh Campaign (Year 36) . . . . .	504
XIII. Twelfth Campaign (Year 37) . . . . .	505
XIV. Thirteenth Campaign (Year 38) . . . . .	506-515
XV. Fourteenth Campaign (Year 39) . . . . .	516-519
XVI. Fifteenth Campaign . . . . .	520-523
XVII. Sixteenth Campaign . . . . .	524-527
XVIII. Seventeenth Campaign . . . . .	528-539
XIX. Conclusion . . . . .	540
Feasts and Offerings from the Conquests . . . . .	541-573
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	574-592
Fragments of Karnak Pylon VII . . . . .	593-598
Great Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	599-608
Building Inscription of the Karnak Ptah-Temple . . . . .	609-622
Obelisks . . . . .	623
I. Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	624-625
II. Lateran Obelisks . . . . .	626-628
III. Constantinople Obelisk . . . . .	629-631
IV. London Obelisk . . . . .	632-633
V. New York Obelisk . . . . .	634-636
Medinet Habu Building Inscriptions . . . . .	637-641
Heliopolis Building Inscriptions . . . . .	642-643
Nubian Wars . . . . .	644-654

	§§
I. Canal Inscription . . . . .	649-650
II. Inscriptions of Nehi, Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	651-652
III. Offerings from the South Countries . . . . .	653-654
Hymn of Victory . . . . .	655-662
Tomb of Rekhmire . . . . .	663-759
I. Appointment of Rekhmire as Vizier . . . . .	665-670
II. Duties of the Vizier . . . . .	671-711
III. The Sitting of the Vizier . . . . .	712-713
IV. Reception of Petitions . . . . .	714-715
V. Inspection of Taxes of Upper Egypt . . . . .	716
A. Above Thebes . . . . .	717-728
B. Below Thebes . . . . .	729-745
VI. Reception of Dues to the Amon-Temple . . . . .	746-751
VII. Inspection of Daily Offerings and of Monuments . . . . .	752
VIII. Inspection of Craftsmen . . . . .	753-755
IX. Inspection of Sculptors and Builders . . . . .	756-759
X. Reception of Foreign Tribute . . . . .	760-761
XI. Accession of Amenhotep II . . . . .	762
Stela of Intef the Herald . . . . .	763-771
Tomb of Menkheperreseneb . . . . .	772-776
Stela of Nibamon . . . . .	777-779
Reign of Amenhotep II . . . . .	780
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	780-798
I. Karnak Stela . . . . .	781-790
II. Amâda and Elephantine Stelæ . . . . .	791-798
III. Karnak Chapel . . . . .	798A
Turra Inscription . . . . .	799-800
Tomb of Amenken . . . . .	801-802
Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	803-806
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	807-809
Reign of Thutmose IV . . . . .	810-840
Sphinx Stela . . . . .	810-815
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	816-822
Konosso Inscription . . . . .	823-829
Lateran Obelisk . . . . .	830-838
Stela of Pe'aoke . . . . .	839-840
Reign of Amenhotep III . . . . .	841-931
Birth and Coronation . . . . .	841

	§§
Nubian War . . . . .	842-855
I. Stela at First Cataract . . . . .	843-844
II. Stela of Konosso . . . . .	845
III. Bubastis Inscription . . . . .	846-850
IV. Semneh Inscription . . . . .	851-855
Tablet of Victory . . . . .	856-859
The Commemorative Scarabs . . . . .	860-869
I. Marriage with Tiy . . . . .	861-862
II. Wild Cattle Hunt . . . . .	863-864
III. Ten Years Lion-Hunting . . . . .	865
IV. Marriage with Kirgipa . . . . .	866-867
V. Construction of a Pleasure Lake . . . . .	868-869
Jubilee Celebrations . . . . .	870-874
Quarry and Mine Inscriptions . . . . .	875-877
Building Inscription . . . . .	878-892
I. Introduction (ll. 1-2) . . . . .	882
II. Temple of the (Memnon) Colossi (ll. 2-10) . . . . .	883-885
III. Luxor Temple and Connected Buildings . . . . .	886-887
IV. Sacred Barge of Amon (ll. 16-20) . . . . .	888
V. Third Pylon of Karnak (ll. 20-23) . . . . .	889
VI. Temple of Soleb (ll. 23-26) . . . . .	890
VII. Hymn of Amon to the King (ll. 26-31) . . . . .	891-892
Building Inscriptions of the Soleb Temple . . . . .	893-898
Great Inscription of the Third Karnak Pylon . . . . .	899-903
Dedication Stela . . . . .	904-910
I. Speech of the King (ll. 1-13) . . . . .	905-908
II. Speech of Amon (ll. 14-20) . . . . .	909
III. Speech of the Divine Ennead (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	910
Inscriptions of Amenhotep, Son of Hapi . . . . .	911-927
I. Statue Inscription . . . . .	913-920
II. Mortuary Temple Edict . . . . .	921-927
Statue of Nebnefer . . . . .	928-931
Reign of Ikhnaton . . . . .	932-1018
Quarry Inscription at Silsileh . . . . .	932-935
Tomb of the Vizier Ramose . . . . .	936-948
The Tell El-Amarna Landmarks . . . . .	949-972
Assuan Tablet of the Architect Bek . . . . .	973-976
The Tell El-Amarna Tombs . . . . .	977-1018

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xvii

	§§
Tomb of Merire II . . . . .	981
Tomb of Merire I . . . . .	982-988
Tomb of Eye . . . . .	989-996
Tomb of Mai . . . . .	997-1003
Tomb of Ahmose . . . . .	1004-1008
Tomb of Tutu . . . . .	1009-1013
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1014-1018
Reign of Tutenkhamon . . . . .	1019-1041
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1019-1041
I. Investiture of the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	1020-1026
II. Tribute of the North . . . . .	1027-1033
III. Tribute of the South . . . . .	1034-1041
Reign of Eye . . . . .	1042-1043

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Punt Reliefs . . . . .	105

VOLUME III

	§§
THE NINETEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-651
Reign of Harmhab . . . . .	1-73
Tomb of Harmhab . . . . .	1-21
I. Leyden Fragments . . . . .	2-9
I. Stela with Adoration Scene . . . . .	2-5
II. Reward of Gold . . . . .	6-9
II. Vienna Fragment . . . . .	10-12
III. Alexandria Fragments . . . . .	13
IV. British Museum Fragments . . . . .	14-19
I. Doorposts . . . . .	14-17
II. Stela with Three Hymns . . . . .	18-19
V. Cairo Fragments . . . . .	20-21
Coronation Inscription . . . . .	22-32
Graffiti in the Theban Necropolis . . . . .	32A-32C
The Wars of Harmhab . . . . .	33-44
I. In the North . . . . .	34-36
II. In the South . . . . .	37-44
Edict of Harmhab . . . . .	45-67

	§§
I. Introduction (ll. 1-10) . . . . .	49
II. Introduction: The King's Zeal for the Relief of the People (ll. 10-14) . . . . .	50
III. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Royal Breweries and Kitchens (ll. 14-17)	51
IV. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Wood Due the Pharaoh (ll. 17-18) . . . . .	52
V. Enactment Against Exacting Dues from a Poor Man Thus Robbed (ll. 18-20) . . . . .	53
VI. Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Harem or the Gods by the Soldiers (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	54
VII. Enactments Against Unlawful Appropriation of Slave Service (ll. 22-24) . . . . .	55
VIII. Enactment Against Stealing of Hides by the Soldiers (ll. 25-28) . . . . .	56-57
IX. Against Connivance of Dishonest Inspectors with Thievish Tax-Collectors, for a Share of the Booty (ll. 28-32) . . . . .	58
X. Enactment Against Stealing Vegetables Under Pretense of Collecting Taxes (ll. 32-35) . . . . .	59
XI. Enactments too Fragmentary for Analysis (ll. 35- 39) and Right Side (ll. 1, 2) . . . . .	60-62
XII. Narrative of the King's Reforms, Containing Also an Enactment Against Corrupt Judges (ll. 3-7) . . . . .	63-65
XIII. Narrative of the King's Monthly Audiences and Largesses (ll. 7-10) . . . . .	66
XIV. Laudation of the King, and Conclusion (Left Side) . . . . .	67
Tomb of Neferhotep . . . . .	68-73
Reign of Ramses I . . . . .	74-79
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	74-79
Reign of Seti I . . . . .	80-250
Karnak Reliefs . . . . .	80-156
Scene 1. March through Southern Palestine . . . . .	83-84
Scene 2. Battle with the Shasu . . . . .	85-86
Scene 3. Capture of Pekanán . . . . .	87-88
Scene 4. Capture of Yenoam . . . . .	89-90

	§§
Scene 5. Submission of the Chiefs of Lebanon . . . . .	91-94
Scenes 6 and 7. Binding and Carrying Away Prisoners . . . . .	95-97
Scene 8. Reception in Egypt . . . . .	98-103
Scene 9. Presentation of Shasu Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	104-108
Scene 10. Presentation of Syrian Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	109-112
Scene 11. Slaying Prisoners Before Amon . . . . .	113-119
Scene 12. First Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	120-122
Scene 13. Second Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	123-132
Scene 14. Return from Libyan War . . . . .	133-134
Scene 15. Presentation of Libyan Prisoners and Spoil to Amon . . . . .	135-139
Scene 16. Capture of Kadesh . . . . .	140-141
Scene 17. Battle with the Hittites . . . . .	142-144
Scene 18. Carrying off Hittite Prisoners . . . . .	145-148
Scene 19. Presentation of Hittite Spoil and Prisoners to Amon . . . . .	149-152
Scene 20. Slaying Prisoners before Amon . . . . .	153-156
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	157-161
Inscriptions of Redesiyeh . . . . .	162-198
I. First Inscription . . . . .	169-174
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	175-194
III. Third Inscription . . . . .	195-198
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	199-250
I. First Cataract Inscription . . . . .	201-204
1. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	201-202
2. Elephantine Stela . . . . .	203-204
II. Silsileh Quarry Stela . . . . .	205-208
III. Gebelên Quarry Inscription . . . . .	209-210
IV. Mortuary Temple at Thebes (Kurna) . . . . .	211-221
V. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	222-224
VI. Mortuary Temple at Abydos . . . . .	225-243
VII. Temple Model of Heliopolis . . . . .	244-246
VIII. Miscellaneous . . . . .	247-250
Reign of Ramses II . . . . .	251-568
Great Abydos Inscription . . . . .	251-281
Kubbân Stela . . . . .	282-293

	§§
The Asiatic War . . . . .	294-391
I. Beginning of the Hittite War . . . . .	296-351
I. First Campaign . . . . .	297
II. Second Campaign: The Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	298-351
a. Poem of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	305-315
b. Official Record of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	316-327
c. The Reliefs of the Battle of Kadesh. . . . .	328
I. The Council of War . . . . .	329-330
II. The Camp . . . . .	331-332
III. Ramses' Messengers . . . . .	333-334
IV. The Battle . . . . .	335-338
V. The Defense of the Camp . . . . .	339-340
VI. After the Battle . . . . .	341-347
VII. Presentation of Captives to Amon . . . . .	348-351
III. Palestinian Revolt . . . . .	352-362
I. Reconquest of Southern Palestine . . . . .	353-355
II. Reconquest of Northern Palestine . . . . .	356-362
IV. Campaign in Naharin . . . . .	363-391
I. Conquest of Naharin . . . . .	364-366
II. Treaty with the Hittites . . . . .	367-391
Relations of Egypt with the Hittites after the War . . . . .	392-491
I. The Blessing of Ptah . . . . .	394-414
II. Marriage Stela . . . . .	415-424
III. Message of the Chief of Kheta to the Chief of Kode . . . . .	425-426
IV. Coptos Stela . . . . .	427-428
V. Bentresh Stela . . . . .	429-447
Nubian Wars and References to Northern Wars . . . . .	448-491
I. Abu Simbel Temple . . . . .	449-457
II. Bet el-Walli Temple . . . . .	458-477
III. Assuan Stela . . . . .	478-479
IV. Luxor Temple . . . . .	480-484
V. Abydos Temple . . . . .	485-486
VI. Tanis Stelæ . . . . .	487-491
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	492-537
I. Great Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	495-499
II. Small Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	500-501
III. Temple of Serreh . . . . .	502

	§§
IV. Temple of Derr . . . . .	503
V. Temple of Sebûa . . . . .	504
VI. Temple of el Kab . . . . .	505
VII. Temple of Luxor . . . . .	506-508
VIII. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	509-513
IX. The Ramesseum . . . . .	514-515
X. Temple of Kurna . . . . .	516-522
XI. Seti I's Temple at Abydos and Great Abydos
Inscription . . . . .	262-267
XII. Ramses II's Temple at Abydos . . . . .	524-529
XIII. Memphis Temples . . . . .	530-537
1. Great Abydos Inscription (l. 22) . . . . .	260
2. Blessing of Ptah (ll. 32, 35) . . . . .	412-413
XIV. City of Tanis (Blessing of Ptah (ll. 16-18) . . . . .	406
Stela of the Year 400 . . . . .	538-542
Royal Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	543-560
I. First Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	552
II. Bigeh Inscription . . . . .	553
III. Second Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	554
IV. Third Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	555
V. Fourth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	556
VI. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	557
VII. El Kab Inscription . . . . .	558
VIII. Fifth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	559
IX. Sixth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	560
Inscription of Beknekhonsu . . . . .	561-568
Reign of Merneptah . . . . .	569-638
The Invasion of Libyans and Mediterranean Peoples . . . . .	569-617
I. The Great Karnak Inscription . . . . .	572-592
II. The Cairo Column . . . . .	593-595
III. The Athribis Stela . . . . .	596-601
IV. The Hymn of Victory . . . . .	602-617
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Roy . . . . .	618-628
Daybook of a Frontier Official . . . . .	629-635
Letter of a Frontier Official . . . . .	636-638
Reign of Siptah . . . . .	639-650
Nubian Graffiti . . . . .	639-650

LIST OF FIGURES		PAGE
Fig. 1.	Plan of the Reliefs of Seti I, on the North Wall of the Great Hall of Karnak . . . . .	39
Fig. 2.	Seti I on the Route through Southern Palestine (Scene 1) . . . . .	44
Fig. 3.	Showing Two Superimposed Figures . . . . .	61
Fig. 4.	Inserted Figure of "First King's-Son" . . . . .	61
Fig. 5.	An Unknown Prince Following the Chariot of Seti I (Scene 14) . . . . .	66
Fig. 6.	Figure of an Unknown Prince Inserted in a Fragmentary Scene (§ 130) . . . . .	66
Fig. 7.	Map of the Orontes Valley in the Vicinity of Kadesh . . . . .	126
Fig. 8.	March to Kadesh: First Positions . . . . .	128
Fig. 9.	Battle of Kadesh: Second Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 10.	Battle of Kadesh: Third Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 11.	Battle of Kadesh: Fourth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 12.	Battle of Kadesh: Fifth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 13.	The Modern Mound of Kadesh . . . . .	152

VOLUME IV

		§§
THE TWENTIETH DYNASTY . . . . .		1-603
Reign of Ramses III . . . . .		1-456
Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		1-150
Building and Dedication Inscriptions . . . . .		1-20
Historical Inscriptions . . . . .		21-138
I. Treasury of Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		25-34
II. First Libyan War, Year 5 . . . . .		35-58
1. Great Inscription in the Second Court (Year 5) . . . . .		36-58
III. Northern War, Year 8 . . . . .		59-82
1. Great Inscription on the Second Pylon, Year 8 . . . . .		61-68
2. Relief Scenes Outside North Wall and in Second Court, Year 8 . . . . .		69-82
IV. Second Libyan War . . . . .		83-114

	§§
1. Great Inscription on the First Pylon (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	85-92
2. Poem on Second Libyan War . . . . .	93-99
3. Relief Scenes on First Pylon and Outside North Wall (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	100-114
4. Papyrus Harris . . . . .	405
V. The Syrian War . . . . .	115-135
VI. The Nubian War . . . . .	136-138
Medinet Habu Temple Calendar . . . . .	139-145
Act of Endowment of the Temples of Khnum . . . . .	146-150
Papyrus Harris . . . . .	151-412
Discussion of . . . . .	151-181
Content:
I. Introduction . . . . .	182-183
II. Theban Section . . . . .	184-246
III. Heliopolitan Section . . . . .	247-304
IV. Memphite Section . . . . .	305-351
V. General Section (Small Temples) . . . . .	352-382
VI. Summary . . . . .	383-396
VII. Historical Section . . . . .	397-412
Record of the Royal Jubilee . . . . .	413-415
Records of the Harem Conspiracy . . . . .	416-456
I. Appointment of the Court . . . . .	423-424
II. The Condemned of the First Prosecution . . . . .	425-443
III. The Condemned of the Second Prosecution . . . . .	444-445
IV. The Condemned of the Third Prosecution . . . . .	446-450
V. The Condemned of the Fourth Prosecution . . . . .	451-452
VI. The Acquitted . . . . .	453
VII. The Practicers of Magic . . . . .	454-456
Reign of Ramses IV . . . . .	457-472
Hammamat Stela . . . . .	457-468
I. The First Stela . . . . .	457-460
II. The Second Stela . . . . .	461-468
Abydos Stela . . . . .	469-471
Building Inscription of the Khonsu Temple . . . . .	472
Reign of Ramses V . . . . .	473
Tomb Dedication . . . . .	473
Reign of Ramses VI . . . . .	474-483

	§§
Tomb of Penno . . . . .	474-483
Reign of Ramses VII . . . . .	484-485
Stela of Hori . . . . .	484-485
Reign of Ramses IX . . . . .	486-556
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Amenhotep	486-498
I. Building Inscriptions . . . . .	488-491
II. Records of Rewards . . . . .	492-498
• The Records of the Royal Tomb-Robberies . . . . .	499-556
I. Papyrus Abbott . . . . .	509-535
II. Papyrus Amherst . . . . .	536-541
III. Turin Fragment . . . . .	542-543
IV. Mayer Papyri . . . . .	544-556
Reign of Ramses XII . . . . .	557-603
The Report of Wenamon . . . . .	557-591
Records of the Restoration of the Royal Mummies . . . . .	592-594
Letter to the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	595-600
Building Inscriptions in the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	601-603
THE TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY . . . . .	604-692
The Twenty-First Dynasty . . . . .	604-607
Reign of Hrihor . . . . .	608-626
Inscriptions of the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	608-626
Reign of Nesubnebded . . . . .	627-630
Gebelên Inscription . . . . .	627-630
Reign of the High Priest and King Paynozem I . . . . .	631-649
I. Paynozem I as High Priest . . . . .	631-635
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	631-635
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	636-642
II. Paynozem I as King . . . . .	643 ff.
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	643-647
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	648-649
High Priesthood of Menkheperre . . . . .	650-661
Stela of the Banishment . . . . .	650-658
Record of Restoration . . . . .	659
Karnak Graffito . . . . .	660
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	661
High Priesthood of Paynozem II . . . . .	662-687
Records on the Priestly Mummies . . . . .	662-663
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	664-667

	§§
Record of Paynozem II's Burial . . . . .	668
Stela of the "Great Chief of Me," Sheshonk . . . . .	669-687
High Priesthood of Pesibkhenno . . . . .	688-692
Records on Mummy-Wrappings . . . . .	688
Burial of Nesikhonsu . . . . .	689
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	690-692
THE TWENTY-SECOND DYNASTY . . . . .	693-792
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	693-698
Reign of Sheshonk I . . . . .	699-728
Records on Mummy-Bandages of Zeptahefonekh . . . . .	699-700
Building Inscription . . . . .	701-708
Great Karnak Relief . . . . .	709-722
Presentation of Tribute . . . . .	723-724
Karnak Stela . . . . .	724A
Dakhel Stela . . . . .	725-728
Reign of Osorkon I . . . . .	729-737
Record of Temple Gifts . . . . .	729-737
Reign of Takelot I . . . . .	738-740
Statue of the Nile-God Dedicated by the High Priest, Sheshonk . . . . .	738-740
Reign of Osorkon II . . . . .	742-751
Flood Inscription . . . . .	742-744
Statue Inscription . . . . .	745-747
Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	748-751
Reign of Takelot II . . . . .	752-755
Graffito of Harsiese . . . . .	752-754
Stela of Kerome . . . . .	755
Reign of Sheshonk III . . . . .	756-777
Annals of the High Priest of Amon, Osorkon . . . . .	756-770
I. East of Door . . . . .	760-761
II. West of Door . . . . .	762-770
First Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	771-774
Record of Installation . . . . .	775-777
Reign of Pemou . . . . .	778-781
Second Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	778-781
Reign of Sheshonk IV . . . . .	782-792
Stela of Weshtehet . . . . .	782-784

	§§
Serapeum Stela of Harpeson . . . . .	785-792
THE TWENTY-THIRD DYNASTY. . . . .	793-883
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	793-794
Reign of Osorkon III . . . . .	795
Will of Yewelot . . . . .	795
Reign of Piankhi . . . . .	796-883
The Piankhi Stela . . . . .	796-883
THE TWENTY-FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	884
Reign of Bocchoris . . . . .	884
Serapeum Stelæ . . . . .	884
THE TWENTY-FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	885-934
Records of the Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	885-888
Reign of Shabaka . . . . .	889
Building Inscription . . . . .	889
Reign of Taharka . . . . .	892-918
Tanis Stela . . . . .	892-896
Building Inscription in Large Cliff-Temple of Napata	897-900
Inscription of Mentemhet . . . . .	901-916
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	917-918
Reign of Tanutamou . . . . .	919-934
Stela of Tanutamou . . . . .	919-934
THE TWENTY-SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	935-1029
Reign of Psamtik I . . . . .	935-973
Adoption Stela of Nitocris . . . . .	935-958
Statue Inscription of the Chief Steward, Ibe . . . . .	958A-958M
First Serapeum Stela . . . . .	959-962
Second Serapeum Stela . . . . .	963-966
Statue Inscription of Hor . . . . .	967-973
Reign of Necho . . . . .	974-980
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	974-979
Building Inscription . . . . .	980
Reign of Psamtik II . . . . .	981-983
Statue Inscription of Neferibre-Nofer . . . . .	981-983
Reign of Apries . . . . .	984-995
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	984-988
Stela of the Divine Consort Enekhnesneferibre . . . . .	988A-988J
Inscription of Nesuhor . . . . .	989-995

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xxvii

---

	ii
Reign of Amasis (Ahmose II). . . . .	996-1029
Elephantine Stela . . . . .	996-1007
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	1008-1012
Statue Inscription of the General Ahmose . . . . .	1013-1014
Statue Inscription of Pefnefdineit . . . . .	1015-1025
Mortuary Stelæ of the Priest Psantik . . . . .	1026-1029

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Scenes and Inscriptions in Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .	5
INDEX . . . . .	521

EXPLANATION OF TYPOGRAPHICAL SIGNS AND SPECIAL CHARACTERS

1. The introductions to the documents are in twelve-point type, like these lines.

2. All of the translations are in ten-point type, like this line.

3. In the footnotes and introductions all quotations from the documents in the original words of the translation are in italics, inclosed in quotation marks. Italics are not employed in the text of the volumes for any other purpose except for titles.

4. The lines of the original document are indicated in the translation by superior numbers.

5. The loss of a word in the original is indicated by —, two words by — —, three words by — — —, four words by — — — —, five words by — — — — —, and more than five by —————. A word in the original is estimated at a “square” as known to Egyptologists, and the estimate can be but a very rough one.

6. When any of the dashes, like those of No. 5, are inclosed in half-brackets, the dashes so inclosed indicate not lost, but uncertain words. Thus [—] represents one uncertain word, [— —] two uncertain words, and [————] more than five uncertain words.

7. When a word or group of words are inclosed in half-brackets, the words so inclosed are uncertain in meaning; that is, the translation is not above question.

8. Roman numerals I, II, III, and IV, not preceded by the title of any book or journal, refer to these four volumes of Historical Documents. The Arabic numerals following such Romans refer to the numbered paragraphs of these volumes. All paragraph marks (§ and §§, without a Roman) refer to paragraphs of the same volume.

9. For signs used in transliteration, see Vol. I, p. xv.

THE EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY

REIGN OF AHMOSE I

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE, SON OF EBANA<sup>a</sup>

1. This inscription contains the biography of a naval officer, Ahmose, a nobleman of El Kab, who served with distinction under three successive kings: Ahmose I, Amenhotep I, and Thutmose I, his father having served under the predecessor of Ahmose I, Sekenenre. It is especially important, because it is our only contemporary source for the expulsion of the Hyksos, and forms, with the biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet (§§ 17 ff.), our only source for the wars of the early Eighteenth Dynasty; for the royal records of this critical period have totally perished. The family of nomarchs at El Kab<sup>b</sup> were strong supporters of the rising dynasty, and it is clear that such loyalty was liberally rewarded with the gifts of slaves and land,<sup>c</sup> of which both the El Kab Ahmoses boast. It was by thus cementing a firm friendship with such local nobility that the first kings

---

<sup>a</sup>On the wall of Ahmose's cliff-tomb at El Kab; in two parts: the first, of 31 lines on the right-hand wall, and the second, of 8 lines, on the door-wall at the left of door. Text: Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 655-57, only 26 lines, and very inaccurate; first completely published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 12, a and d; thence inaccurately copied by Rheinisch, Chrestomathie, Pl. 6, omitting d; and equally incorrectly, Lemm, Lesestücke, 67; Bunsen, Egypt's Place, 2d ed., V, 732, 733 (beginning only). I have collated the excellent Berlin squeeze (No. 172), which mostly sustains Lepsius, Denkmäler, but furnishes some important corrections. Valuable discussion of difficult passages by Piehl, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 256-58, and Sphinx, III, 7-12.

<sup>b</sup>The family is far older than the Empire, and already under the Thirteenth Dynasty enjoyed the favor of the king (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 14, b); but it is impossible to trace the line back of Ahmose, son of Ebana's grandmother.

<sup>c</sup>A boundary stone marking one limit of such a gift by Thutmose I was acquired by the Berlin Museum in 1899. It reads: "Southern boundary of the fields given as a favor of the royal presence, to the orderly (snn) of his majesty, Nekri (Nkry); 150 stat." See a similar tablet in Mariette, Monuments divers, 47A, under Thutmose IV.

of the Eighteenth Dynasty maintained themselves during their long and exhausting wars. The royal children were even intrusted to these El Kab princes, to be reared under their charge,<sup>a</sup> and they finally ruled from El Kab to Esneh.<sup>b</sup>

2. The ten campaigns in which Ahmose took part are treated in the respective reigns under which they fall, as follows:

I. Career under Ahmose I, ll. 1-24 (§§ 4 ff.).

II. Career under Amenhotep I, ll. 24-29 (§§ 38 ff.).

III. Career under Thutmose I, ll. 29-39 (§§ 78 ff.).

3. The immediate authorship of the inscription is established by the neighboring relief. Ahmose is represented as standing at the left, and before him is his grandson, Pahari (P<sup>h</sup>-hry), accompanied by the following words:

By the son of his daughter the conductor of the works in this tomb, perpetuating the name of the father of his mother, the draughtsman<sup>c</sup> of Amon, Pahari,<sup>d</sup> triumphant.

The long inscription was therefore executed by Ahmose's grandson, Pahari, who was a draughtsman.

I. CAREER UNDER AHMOSE I

[Ll. 1-24; continued §§ 38 ff.]

4. After an introduction and a few words about his youth and parentage, Ahmose plunges directly into his first

<sup>a</sup>See Tomb of Pahari, "Eleventh Memoir," Egyptian Exploration Fund, and Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 10, b and 11, b.

<sup>b</sup>Pahari, grandson of Ahmose, son of Ebana, was "prince of Esneh (Yny't), governor of the southern lands (h't), satisfying the excellent heart of his lord from the House of Hathor to El Kab." Tylor, Tomb of Pahari, Pl. III.

<sup>c</sup>See Goodwin, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1872, 21.

<sup>d</sup>His tomb is the most interesting one at El Kab; see The Tomb of Pahari at El Kab, by Griffith and Tylor, "Eleventh Memoir," of Egyptian Exploration Fund.

campaign, with an account of a siege of the city of Hatwaret (ht-w<sup>c</sup> r·t). This can be no other than the city called Avaris by Manetho (Josephus, Contra Apion, I, 14), where, according to him, the Hyksos make their last stand in Egypt.<sup>a</sup> It is also mentioned as the residence of the Asiatics (mw, § 303, l. 37) by Hatshepsut, and by a papyrus of the late Nineteenth Dynasty,<sup>b</sup> as the residence of an Apophis; so that there is no doubt about the identification with Avaris. The siege, which must have lasted many years, was interrupted by the rebellion of some disaffected noble in Upper Egypt; but the city was finally captured, and the Hyksos, fleeing into Asia, were pursued to the city of Sharuhem (Josh. 19:6). Here they were besieged for six years by Ahmose I, and this stronghold was also captured. It was probably at the conclusion of this siege that Ahmose I pushed northward and invaded Syria, as narrated by Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet (§ 20), probably still in pursuit of the last remnants of the Hyksos.

5. The king now returned, and carried his army to the other extreme of his domain, invading Nubia. He was recalled from a successful campaign there, to quell two successive rebellions, the last of the internal dissensions which had distracted the country since the fall of the Middle Kingdom. At this point the wars, and probably the reign, of Ahmose I closed, Ahmose, son of Ebana, having gained distinction in all his campaigns.

---

<sup>a</sup>According to Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report (1900-1901, 13), there is in Cairo a stela containing a reference to this war with the Hyksos, but I have been unable to gain any information concerning it. It is probably § 30.

<sup>b</sup>Sallier I, 1-3; it contains a folk-tale narrating the cause of the war between a Hyksos king, Apophis in Avaris, and a Sekenenre, who was ruler (hk<sup>2</sup>) in Thebes. Unfortunately, only the beginning is preserved. Most of the current translations and interpretations of this document are largely the products of a vivid imagination.

Introductory Address

6. <sup>1</sup>Chief of the sailors, Ahmose (Y<sup>c</sup> h-mš), son of Ebana (ʔ-bʔ-nʔ), triumphant; <sup>2</sup>he says: "I will tell you, O all ye people; I will cause you to know the honors which came to me. I was presented with gold seven times<sup>a</sup> in the presence <sup>3</sup>of the whole land; male and female slaves likewise. I was endowed with very many fields." The fame of one valiant in his achievements shall not perish <sup>4</sup>in this land forever.<sup>b</sup>

His Youth

7. He speaks as follows: "I spent my youth in the city of Nekheb<sup>c</sup> (Nḥb), my father being an officer of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Sekenenre (Sḳnyn R<sup>c</sup>-), triumphant, Baba (Bʔbʔ), <sup>5</sup>son of Royenet, (Rʔ-yn-t), was his name. Then I served as an officer in his stead, in the ship 'The Offering' in the time of the Lord of the Two Lands, Nebpehtire (Nb-ḫty-R<sup>c</sup>, Ahmose I), triumphant, <sup>6</sup>while I was (still) young, not having taken a wife,<sup>d</sup> and while I was still sleeping in the [—] garment.<sup>e</sup> Then after I set up a household, I was transferred <sup>7</sup>to the northern fleet, because of my valor. I followed the king on foot<sup>f</sup> when he rode abroad in his <sup>8</sup>chariot.

Campaign against the Hyksos; Siege of Avaris

8. One besieged the city of Avaris (Ḥt-w<sup>c</sup> r-t); I showed valor on foot<sup>f</sup> before his majesty; then I was appointed <sup>9</sup>to (the ship) 'Shining-in-Memphis.'<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Ahmose has recorded elsewhere in his tomb (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 12, c) a list of the gifts he received, making a total of 9 men and 10 women; the total of land is lost. This does not agree with his narrative, which does not summarize, but in different gifts mentions in all 9 men and 7 women received from the king, and 8 men and 7 women captured.

<sup>b</sup>This last statement is probably a proverbial phrase; see Spiegelberg, Recueil, XXVI, 41, 42.

<sup>c</sup>El Kab.

<sup>d</sup>See Müller, Liebespoesie, 3.

<sup>e</sup>This is, of course, some garment worn by a youth; cf. the girdle of Uni's youth (I, 294, l. 1).

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "on my two feet;" this is emphasized as land service, Ahmose being a naval officer.

<sup>g</sup>Reward after the first battle at Avaris.

Second Battle of Avaris

9. One fought on the water in the canal: Pezedku (P<sup>3</sup>-ḏdkw) of Avaris. Then I fought hand to hand, <sup>10</sup>I brought away a hand.<sup>a</sup> It was reported to the royal herald. One gave to me the gold of valor.<sup>b</sup>

Third Battle of Avaris

10. Then there was again fighting in this place; I again fought hand to hand <sup>11</sup>there; I brought away a hand. One gave to me the gold of bravery in the second place.<sup>c</sup>

First Rebellion, Interrupting Siege of Avaris

11. One fought in this Egypt,<sup>d</sup> south of this city; <sup>12</sup>then I brought away a living captive, a man; I descended into the water; behold, he was brought<sup>e</sup> as a seizure upon the road of this <sup>13</sup>city,<sup>e</sup> (although) I crossed with him over the water. It was announced to the royal herald. Then one presented<sup>f</sup> me with gold in double measure.<sup>g</sup>

Capture of Avaris

12. One <sup>14</sup>captured Avaris; I took captive there one man and three women, total four heads, his majesty gave them to me for slaves.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Cut off as a trophy, from a slain enemy.

<sup>b</sup>Reward after the second battle.      <sup>c</sup>Reward after the third battle.

<sup>d</sup>There can be no doubt that the word (km't) means here, as always elsewhere, "Egypt;" "this city" is then El Kab, for the word "south" is an adjective feminine agreeing with "Egypt." The phrase can only be translated into a language like Greek or German, thus: "in diesem südlich von dieser Stadt befindlichen Aegypten." The siege of Avaris is therefore interrupted by a rebellion in upper Egypt, similar to the two later ones (§§ 15, 16), and for this reason the narrative particularly specifies "this Egypt, south, etc." See also § 13, l. 15.

<sup>e</sup>Contrast with this the two men "captured as a seizure upon the ship of the enemy" (l. 21). There is no ground for the fanciful rendering, indicating that he lost his way! Ahmose means that, although obliged to descend to and cross over the water (of some canal) with his prisoner, he brought him away as safely as one seized upon the road of the city.

<sup>f</sup>Read hr for myk (confusion from hieratic?), as in l. 28.

<sup>g</sup>Reward after the fourth battle.

<sup>h</sup>Reward after the fifth battle; apparently Avaris was captured on the fourth assault; but these brief references to fighting may each one indicate a whole season of the siege, which would then have lasted four years, as that of Sharuhē lasted six. See § 13.

Siege of Sharuhen

13. <sup>15</sup>One besieged Sharuhen<sup>a</sup> (Š<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>-h<sup>2</sup>-n<sup>2</sup>) for 6 years,<sup>b</sup> (and) his majesty took it. Then I took captive there two women and one hand. <sup>16</sup>One gave me the gold of bravery, [besides] giving me the captives for slaves.

Campaign against Nubia

14. Now, after his majesty had slain the Asiatics (Mntyw Stt), <sup>17</sup>he ascended the river to Khenhennofer (Hnt-hn-nfr), to destroy the Nubian Troglodytes;<sup>c</sup> his majesty made a great slaughter among them. <sup>18</sup>Then I took captive there, two living men, and three hands. One presented me with gold in double measure, [besides] giving to me two female slaves.<sup>d</sup> <sup>19</sup>His majesty sailed down-stream, his heart joyous with the might of victory, (for) he had seized Southerners and Northerners.

Second Rebellion

15. <sup>20</sup>There came an enemy of the South; his fate, his destruction approached; the gods of the South seized him, and his majesty found him in Tintto-emu (Tynt-t<sup>2</sup>-mw).<sup>e</sup> His majesty carried him off <sup>21</sup>a living prisoner, and all his people carried captive. I carried away two

<sup>a</sup>Cf. Josh. 19:6.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, has "5," which has been generally accepted; Champollion's text and Brugsch's translation have "6." I repeatedly examined the squeeze for this point with especial care; it has a clear "6." The correctness of the rendering "for 6 years" rather than "in the year 6" has been clearly demonstrated by Piehl (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 258). Another proof is that m, the preposition here, is used all through the Beknekhonsu inscription (Munich) for "during" or "for" a period of years. This throws a new light on the whole Asiatic campaign, for the stubbornness of the besieged and the persistence of Ahmose are almost certainly an indication that the siege is an extension of the campaign against the Hyksos, who, having retreated to Sharuhen, are here making their last stand. We may suppose, therefore, that the siege of Avaris itself also lasted many years, allowing opportunity for a rebellion in Upper Egypt. See § 11, l. 11.

<sup>c</sup>Cf. Müller, Asien und Europa, 21.

<sup>d</sup>These slaves being women, are not the two captives just taken, as the translations of Renouf and Petrie indicate.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "She of the land of the water-supply" (c-mw, "water-supply," occurs at Siut, I, 407, l. 6, and in Rekhmire, § 698, l. 25); possibly the district of the first cataract is meant, as the rebellion was in the South. The name is elsewhere unknown.

archers<sup>a</sup> as a seizure in the ship of the enemy;<sup>b</sup> one <sup>22</sup>gave to me five heads besides pieces of land (amounting to) five stat (st<sup>2</sup>t)<sup>c</sup> in my city.<sup>d</sup> It was done to all the sailors likewise.

Third Rebellion

16. Then came that fallen one,<sup>e</sup> <sup>23</sup>whose name was Teti-en (Tty-c n);<sup>f</sup> he had gathered to himself rebels.<sup>g</sup> His majesty slew him and his servants,<sup>h</sup> annihilating<sup>i</sup> them. There were given <sup>24</sup>to me three heads, and fields (amounting to) five stat<sup>j</sup> in my city.

[Continued §§ 38 ff.]

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE-PEN-NEKHBET

17. This El Kab nobleman, like Ahmose, son of Ebana (§§ 1-16), served under the first kings of the Eighteenth Dynasty, but he lived to a greater age. Beginning his career under Ahmose I, he continued under Amenhotep I, Thutmose I, II, and III, and died enjoying the favor of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut. He has separated his

<sup>a</sup>This hitherto uncertain word (myg <sup>2</sup>) is rendered tolerably certain by a scene in the tomb of Harmhab (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, Pl. III, foll. p. 434; see also 420), where it bears the determinative of shooting, and stands over a man with a bow, with the title "chief archer (myg <sup>2</sup>) of his majesty."

<sup>b</sup>The determinative indicates an enemy, not a proper name, but the meaning of the word (2<sup>2</sup>t<sup>2</sup>) is unknown. The rendering "fiévreux" from Chabas is based on an impossible etymology. See Piehl, Sphinx, III, 11.

<sup>c</sup>A land measure containing about seven-tenths acres, here in apposition with "pieces of land."

<sup>d</sup>El Kab.

<sup>e</sup>Term of contempt for a foe.

<sup>f</sup>There is no reason for supposing that this is not the rebel's real name. On the contrary, this very name was especially common at this period; see the ushebtis published by Borchardt (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 32, pp. 113 f.).

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "the wicked of heart."

<sup>h</sup>Written feminine(!) in the text.

<sup>i</sup>Lit., "as that which exists not."

<sup>j</sup>A land measure containing about seven-tenths of an acre, here in apposition with "pieces of land."

biography into three parts: his campaigns,<sup>a</sup> his rewards,<sup>b</sup> and a summary.<sup>c</sup>

I. AHMOSE'S CAMPAIGNS<sup>d</sup>

[Continued § 40]

18. He enumerates his campaigns and his captures under Ahmose I, Amenhotep I, Thutmose I and II.

I. Career under Ahmose I

19. His meager reference to a campaign of Ahmose I in Zahi is our sole source of knowledge for that event. It probably followed the capture of Sharuhén.

Campaign in Syria

20. <sup>1</sup>Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal,<sup>e</sup> chief treasurer, herald <sup>1</sup>of his Lord,<sup>f</sup> —<sup>1</sup>, <sup>2</sup>Ahmose, called Pen-Nekhbet (Pn-Nḥb·t), triumphant; he says: "I followed King Nebpehtire (Nb-phṯy-R <sup>c</sup>, Ahmose I), triumphant. <sup>3</sup>I captured for him in Zahi (D<sup>2</sup>-hy) a living prisoner and a hand."

[Continued § 40]

<sup>a</sup>Campaigns, three originals: (1) statue-base belonging to Mr. Finlay, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 77, 78; (2) statue-base in the Louvre, Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XIV A; Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, IV; (3) Ahmose's tomb-wall at El Kab, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 43, a (lower left-hand corner), and Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 85. All sources have been collated.

<sup>b</sup>Rewards, two originals: (1) statue-base belonging to Mr. Finlay, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 78; (2) statue-base in the Louvre, Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XIV B; Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, IV.

<sup>c</sup>Summary, Ahmose's tomb-wall in El Kab, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 43, a, ll. 10-20; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 85, corrected and revised; and partially, Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 46.

<sup>d</sup>The translation of the campaigns is distributed under the different reigns, under which he lived, because they furnish very important historical events, but his rewards and the summary, being more purely personal, are given in this reign.

<sup>e</sup>All except the Finlay text insert other titles here, but, except the first, "sole companion," they are illegible.

<sup>f</sup>All the other texts have whm kf <sup>c</sup>, which would mean "repeating captures." This unusual title was also in the rewards (l. 4).

<sup>g</sup>Lines numbered from the Finlay statue text.

II. AHMOSE'S REWARDS

21. <sup>1</sup>. . . . . <sup>2</sup>. . . . . <sup>3</sup>. . . . . <sup>4</sup>. . . . .<sup>a</sup> Ahmose, called Pen-Nekhbet; he says: "By the <sup>5</sup>sovereign, who lives forever! I was not separated from the king upon the battlefield, from (the time of) <sup>6</sup>King Nebpehtire (Ahmose I), triumphant, to King Okhepernere (Thutmose II), triumphant; I was in the favor <sup>7</sup>of the king's presence, until King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), living forever.<sup>b</sup>

22. King Zeserkere (Amenhotep I), triumphant, gave to me, <sup>8</sup>of gold: two bracelets, two necklaces, an armlet, a dagger, a headdress, a fan, and a mekhtebet.

23. <sup>9</sup>King Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant, gave to me, of gold: two bracelets, four necklaces, one armlet, six flies,<sup>c</sup> <sup>10</sup>three lions;<sup>d</sup> two golden axes.

24. King Okhepernere (Thutmose II),<sup>e</sup> triumphant, gave to me of gold: three bracelets, six necklaces, three armlets, a mekhtebet; a silver axe."

III. AHMOSE'S SUMMARY<sup>f</sup>

25. <sup>10g</sup>He says, "I followed the Kings <sup>11</sup>of Upper and Lower Egypt, the gods; I was with <sup>12</sup>their majesties when they went to the South and North country, in every place where they went; [from] <sup>13</sup>King Nebpehtire (Ahmose I), triumphant, King Zeserkere (Amenhotep I) [triumphant], King <sup>14</sup>Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant, King

<sup>a</sup>Unimportant titles of Ahmose (see § 20, l. 1) very fragmentary; lines are numbered according to text in Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden.

<sup>b</sup>This phrase shows that Thutmose III is still alive at this time, but Ahmose is now too old to be "upon the battlefield," under him.

<sup>c</sup>These are golden flies, like those among Ahhotep's jewelry at Cairo. They were a decoration of honor. The word has been mistranslated "helmets." See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1900, pp. 94, 95.

<sup>d</sup>Cf. inscription of Amenemhab, § 585.

<sup>e</sup>Finlay text, according to Maspero's copy, has Thutmose I; corrected by Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 239, n. 1, as above.

<sup>f</sup>Ahmose's tomb-wall in El Kab; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 43, a, ll. 10-20; ibid., Text, IV, 46; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 85, corrected and revised, most of the lacunæ restored from Lepsius' papers and his squeeze.

<sup>g</sup>The summary does not begin until l. 10; ll. 1 and 2 contain an adoration of Re by Ahmose, and his titles occupy ll. 3-9. These 9 lines lack half their length.

Okhepernere (Thutmose II), triumphant, until this Good God, King Menkheperre (Thutmose III) <sup>15</sup>who is given life forever.<sup>a</sup>

I have attained a good old age, having <sup>16</sup>had a life<sup>b</sup> of royal favor, having had<sup>b</sup> honor under their majesties and the love of me having been in the court."

[Concluded in § 344]

QUARRY INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

26. The inscription records the work of Neferperet, an official of Ahmose I, who, in the latter's twenty-second year, took out stone from the Ma <sup>c</sup> sara quarry, for the temples of Ptah and of Amon. The inscription is important, because it is the last dated document of Ahmose I, because it records the first resumption of building after the expulsion of the Hyksos, and for its reference to the Fenkhu, whose cattle were captured on some Asiatic campaign.

Above, in a position of significant prominence in the queen's case, are the names and titles of Ahmose I, and his queen, Ahmose-Nefretiri (Y<sup>c</sup> h-mš, nfr t-ryr).

27. <sup>1</sup>Year 22 under the majesty of the king, Son of Re, Ahmose, who is given life. <sup>2</sup>The quarry-chambers were opened a[ne]w; good limestone <sup>3</sup>of Ayan (<sup>c</sup> nw) was taken out for his temples of myriads of [years],<sup>d</sup> the temple of Ptah, the temple of Amon in southern Opet (Yp't, Luxor), and all the monuments which his majesty made [for him].

<sup>a</sup>This phrase after Thutmose III's name shows that he was living at the time of this inscription; all the others were at this time "triumphant" (deceased). Hence Ahmose, now an old man, died under Thutmose III.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "having been in a life," and "having been in honor."

<sup>c</sup>On the wall of the limestone quarry of Ma <sup>c</sup> sara, just southeast of Cairo. Published by Vyse, Operations, III, 99; Young, Hieroglyphics, 88; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 3, a = Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 488 = Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, I, 15; and Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 3, b; the text of the last is the same as the preceding, but it represents a second inscription. Both are badly broken, but they supplement each other, so that practically nothing is lost.

<sup>d</sup>A conventional phrase applied to all temples, and referring, of course, to their durability.

The stone was dragged with oxen<sup>a</sup> which his m[a]jesty captured [in his] victories [among]<sup>b</sup> the Fenkhu (Fnhw).

28. The assistant, the hereditary prince ———, [vigilant]<sup>c</sup> one of the Lord of the Two Lands in restoring the monuments of e[ternity], greatly [satisfying] the heart of the Good God; the wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, chief treasurer, Neferperet (Njr-pr't).

---

KARNAK STELA<sup>d</sup>

29. Among Ahmose's pious works for the temples was the restoration of the furniture, utensils, and the like, belonging to the ritual of the Karnak temple of Amon. He recorded this work upon a splendid stela, containing thirty-two lines of inscription, of which only the last six are devoted to the record of his benefactions, while the other twenty-six contain only conventional eulogy of himself. In the course of this tedious succession of phrases, there is a vague reference to his wars:

30. The Asiatics approach with fearful step together, standing at his judgment-hall; his sword is in Khenthennofer, his terror is in the Fenkhu-lands, the fear of his majesty is in this land like Min (l. 12).

31. He was thus as much feared in Egypt as in Nubia or Asia. The introduction closes with the names of Ahmose I and the queen Ahhotep, after which follows the record of the work in Karnak (ll. 27-32):

---

<sup>a</sup>It is not the Fenkhu themselves who are employed in the quarry (as sometimes stated, e. g., Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 93; also Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 36), but only the oxen captured.

<sup>b</sup>The horizontal lines in Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, a, l. 5, indicate an m = "in," or "among;" indeed, the entire phrase, "which his majesty captured in his victories in —," is so common that the restorations are probable.

<sup>c</sup>[R5]-ḏ > ḏ >, lit., "of watchful head."

<sup>d</sup>A white limestone stela over 7½ feet high and nearly 3½ feet wide; found by Legrain by Pylon VII at Karnak. It was below the pavement of Thutmose III, and had been buried before Ikhnaton's time. Published in Annales, IV, 27-29.

32. Now, his majesty commanded to make monuments for his father Amon-Re, being: great chaplets of gold with rosettes of genuine lapis lazuli; seals<sup>a</sup> of gold; large vases (hs·t) of gold; jars (nms·t) and vases (hs·t) of silver; tables (wḏh·w) of gold, offering-tables (dbḥ·t ḥtp) of gold and silver; necklaces of gold and silver combined with lapis lazuli and malachite; a drinking-vessel for the ka, of gold, its standard of silver; a drinking-vessel for the ka, of silver rimmed with gold, its standard of silver; a flat dish (ḥnyw) of gold; jars (nms·t) of pink granite, filled with ointment; great pails (wšmw)<sup>b</sup> of silver rimmed with gold, the [handles]<sup>c</sup> thereon of silver; a harp of ebony,<sup>c</sup> of gold and silver; sphinxes of silver; a [—]<sup>d</sup> with gold; a barge of the "Beginning-of-the-River" called "Userhetamon,"<sup>e</sup> of new cedar of the best of the terraces, in order to make his voyage [therein]. I erected columns of cedar — — likewise; I gave ———.

BUILDING INSCRIPTION<sup>f</sup>

33. This document discloses to us the name of the mother of Ahmose I's father and mother. She was a queen Tetisheeri, and although she is called a "king's-mother and great king's-wife," she is not designated as king's daughter. She was doubtless the wife of the last Sekenenre, and her daughter Ahmose I's mother, was, of course, the famous Queen Ahhotep. The latter's brother-husband, the father of Ahmose I, was probably Kemose.

<sup>a</sup>Or: "seal rings."

<sup>b</sup>These are the ceremonial pails with bucket handles, swelling or bulbous below, with more or less pointed bottom. Schaefer calls my attention to the example on the Ethiopian stela in the Louvre, l. 11 (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1895, Pl. V). There are many examples in bronze in the museums.

<sup>c</sup>I suspect that a word has been omitted at this point, as the repetition of the preposition indicates.

<sup>d</sup>špt, Schaefer suggests the špd which appears in the Mentuhotep coffin at Berlin.

<sup>e</sup>Meaning "mighty is the front of Amon." This is the usual name of the sacred barge of Amon.

<sup>f</sup>Stela about 6½ feet high and 3 feet wide, found by Petrie at Abydos; published by him in Abydos, III, Pl. LII.

The inscription is so picturesque, and unconventional in form, as to be unique. In content it records the king's determination to erect further mortuary buildings for his grandmother, Queen Tetisheri.

Introduction

34. <sup>1</sup>Now, it came to pass that his majesty sat in the audience-hall, (even) the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nebpehtire, Son of Re, Ahmose (I), given life; <sup>2</sup>while the hereditary princess, great in favor, great in amiability, king's-daughter, king's-sister, divine consort, great king's-wife, Ahmose-Nefretiri, who liveth, was with his majesty.

The Conversation

35. One spoke <sup>3</sup>with the other, seeking benefactions for<sup>a</sup> the departed (dead), to present libations of water, to offer upon the altar, <sup>4</sup>to enrich the offering-tablet at the first of every season, at the monthly feast of the first of the month, the feast of the coming forth of the sem, <sup>5</sup>the feast of the night-offerings on the fifth of the month, the feast of the sixth of the month, the feast of Hakro<sup>b</sup> (H<sup>3</sup> k-r<sup>3</sup>), the feast of Wag (W<sup>3</sup> g), the feast of Thoth, and at the first <sup>6</sup>of every season of heaven, and of earth. His sister spake and answered him: "Wherefore has this been remembered? <sup>7</sup>And why has this word been spoken? What has come into thy heart?"

Ahmose's Purpose

36. The king himself spake to her: "I, <sup>8</sup>it is, who have remembered the mother of my mother, and the mother of my father, great king's-wife and king's-mother, Tetisheri (Tty-šry), triumphant. <sup>9</sup>(Although) she already has a tomb (yš) and a mortuary chapel<sup>c</sup> (m<sup>c</sup> h<sup>c</sup> t) on the soil of Thebes and Abydos, I have said this to thee, in that <sup>10</sup>my majesty has desired to have made for her (also) a pyramid and a house (h' t) in

<sup>a</sup>The negative n is to be read as the preposition n; see the converse confusion in l. 14.

<sup>b</sup>The r<sup>3</sup> has been overlooked in the publication?

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "Her tomb and her chapel are at this moment (m ty (sic!) » t) on the soil, etc." I can only understand this clause as concessive, and that the new buildings planned by Ahmose are in addition to the ones in l. 9.

Tazeser, as a monumental donation of my majesty. Its lake shall be dug, its trees shall be planted, <sup>11</sup>its offerings shall be founded, equipped with people, endowed with lands, presented <sup>12</sup>with herds, mortuary priests and ritual priests having their duties, every man knowing his stipulation.”

37. <sup>13</sup>Lo, his majesty spake this word, while this was in process of construction. His majesty did <sup>14</sup>this because he so greatly loved her, beyond everything. Never did former kings the like of it for <sup>15</sup>their mothers. Lo, his majesty extended his arm, and bent his hand;<sup>a</sup> he pronounced for her a mortuary prayer. . . . .<sup>b</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>A posture of prayer.

<sup>b</sup>Here follow three fragmentary lines, giving the names of the gods appealed to, and the usual objects in such an offering.

REIGN OF AMENHOTEP I

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE, SON OF EBANA<sup>a</sup>

[Ll. 24-29, continued from § 16; concluded §§ 78 ff.]

II. CAREER UNDER AMENHOTEP I

38. Under this king Ahmose commands the royal transports in a campaign against Kush. The enemy is defeated, Ahmose fighting at the head of the Egyptian troops. He brings the king back to Egypt in two days, and is given "the gold," and a title of honor: "Warrior of the Ruler." The campaign extended to the Middle Kingdom frontier, for a rock inscription of Amenhotep's eighth year has been found on the island of Uronarti, just below Semneh.<sup>b</sup>

39. I sailed the King Zeserkere (Dšr-k<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenhotep I), triumphant, when he ascended the river to Kush (Kš), in order to extend <sup>25</sup>the borders of Egypt. His majesty captured that Nubian Troglodyte in the midst of his army, ————— who were brought away as prisoners, none of them missing. [— —] thrust <sup>26</sup>aside<sup>c</sup> like those who are annihilated. Meanwhile I was at the head of our<sup>d</sup> army; I fought incredibly;<sup>e</sup> his majesty beheld my bravery. I brought off two hands, <sup>27</sup>and took (them) to his majesty. One pursued his people and his cattle. Then I brought off a living prisoner, and took (him) to his majesty. I brought his majesty in two days to

<sup>a</sup>Bibliography, etc., p. 3, n. a.

<sup>b</sup>Steindorff, Berichte der Philologisch-historischen Classe der Königlichen Sächsischen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaft, Leipzig, Sitzung vom 18. Juni, 1900, p. 233.

<sup>c</sup>Same phrase, Tombos Inscription (§ 71, l. 7).

<sup>d</sup>This and § 81 are the only places in all the historical texts of Egypt, where "our troops" are spoken of. It is a real touch of patriotism.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "I fought more than what is true."

Egypt <sup>28</sup>from the upper well;<sup>a</sup> one presented me with gold. Then I brought away two female slaves, in addition to those which I had taken <sup>29</sup>to his majesty. One appointed me 'Warrior of the Ruler.'

---

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE-PEN-NEKHBT<sup>b</sup>

[Continued from § 20; continued §§ 83 ff., and 344]

II. CAREER UNDER AMENHOTEP I

40. Ahmose-Pen-Nekhbet accompanied the king on two campaigns: one against the Nubians, of which we have a fuller account in the biography of Ahmose, son of Ebana (§ 39); and the other against the Libyans; this biography being our only source for this war of Amenhotep I in Libya. For his valor on these occasions he was rewarded by the king.

Campaign in Kush

41. I <sup>4</sup>followed King Zeserkere (Dsr-k<sup>3</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>, Amenhotep I), triumphant; I captured for him <sup>5</sup>in Kush, a living prisoner.

Campaign in Libya

42. Again I served for King Zeserkere, triumphant; <sup>6</sup>I captured for him on the north of Imukehek (Y<sup>3</sup>mw-khk), three hands.

[Continued §§ 83 ff., and 344]

---

BIOGRAPHY OF INENI<sup>c</sup>

43. This official served under four kings: Amenhotep I, Thutmose I, Thutmose II, and Thutmose III, reigning with

---

<sup>a</sup>In view of Amenhotep I's inscription at the second cataract, we are probably correct in concluding that the second cataract is meant here.

<sup>b</sup>Bibliography on p. 10, n. a.

<sup>c</sup>From a Theban tomb at Abd el-Kurna, first noted by Champollion (Notices descriptives, I, 492-94), and then by Brugsch, who published some fragments (Recueil de monuments, I, 36, 1-3, tree list, etc., and Pl. 65, 4-5); also Piehl. Inscriptions, I, Pls. 129 Q-130 and pp. 105, 106. The long text is found in Recueil, Hatshepsut. He evidently died under this joint reign; his biography was composed at this time, and is the most important of all sources for the history of the succession of the Thutmosids. Ineni was:

Hereditary prince, count, chief of all works in Karnak; the double silver-house was under his charge; the double gold-house was on his seal; sealer of all contracts in the House of Amon; excellency, overseer of the double granary of Amon.<sup>a</sup>

These offices brought him the superintendence of many of the most important works executed in Thebes by the kings whom he served. His career is divided as follows:

- I. Career under Amenhotep I (§§ 44-46).
- II. Career under Thutmose I (§§ 99-108).
- III. Career under Thutmose II (§§ 115-18).
- IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut (§§ 340-43).

I. CAREER UNDER AMENHOTEP I

44. The beginning, containing the name of the king, is lost, and the narrative begins in the middle of the account of a building probably Amenhotep I's gate on the south of the Karnak temple, found below the later pavement, of which the two dedications read:<sup>b</sup>

1. "Amenhotep I; he made (it) as his monument for his father Amon, lord of Thebes (ns-wt-t' wy), erecting for him a great gate of 20 cubits (in height) at the double façade of the temple, of fine limestone of Ayan, which the Son of Re, Amenhotep, living forever, made for him."

XII, 106, 107, where it is inaccurately published by Bouriant. (See also, ibid., XIV, 73, 74.) The first "7 or 8 lines" are wanting, according to Bouriant, and also the ends of the first 14 remaining lines; following these are 6 complete lines. The wall scenes and plans of the tomb (also the long inscription) have been published by an architect, H. Boussac (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, XVIII). To the Egyptologist the publication is little more than worthless, and the work must be done again. But the long inscription has now disappeared.

<sup>a</sup>One of Boussac's plates; he has not numbered them!

<sup>b</sup>Legrain, Annales, IV, 15 ff.

2. [Amenhotep I]; . . . . .<sup>a</sup> building his house, establishing his temple, erecting the southern gate, made high, even 20 cubits, of fine white limestone ———.

It is important to note that this gate was erected in celebration of the king's first Sed Jubilee. Turning again to Ineni, his inscription begins:

Buildings<sup>b</sup>

45. ——— <sup>1</sup>Hatnub (Ht-nb), its doors were erected of copper made in one sheet; the parts thereof were of electrum. I inspected that which his majesty made ——— <sup>2</sup>bronze, Asiatic copper, collars, vessels, necklaces. I was foreman of every work, all offices were under my command. ——— <sup>3</sup>at the feasts of the beginning of the seasons; likewise for his father Amon, lord of Thebes; they were under my control. Inspection was made for me, I was the reckoner. ——— 4r-1.

Death of Amenhotep I

46. His majesty having spent life in happiness and the years in peace, went forth to heaven; he joined the sun, he associated (with him) and went forth ———.

[Continued §§ 99-108]

STELA OF HARMINI<sup>c</sup>

47. Harmini (hr-myny) prefixes no other title to his name than "scribe," but he was no less a man than the chief magistrate of Nekhen-Hieraconpolis. This important post on the original Nubian frontier either resulted in his promotion to the governorship of Wawat in lower Nubia, or his Nekhen appointment involved jurisdiction in Wawat, in view of the fact that earlier Nubia began in the vicinity of Nekhen. In any case, he had charge of the "tribute" from Wawat, which was later in the hands of the "king's-son of Kush" (§§ 1034 ff.). Although the inscription mentions no king, it clearly belongs to the Eighteenth Dynasty before the first appointment of a "governor of the south countries, and king's-son of Kush," by Thutmose I (§§ 61 ff.). Hence we are not far wrong in placing it under Amenhotep I, though Harmini must of course have served under Ahmose I, also.

<sup>a</sup>As in the first, as far as "Thebes."

<sup>b</sup>Possibly also the mortuary temple of Amenhotep I, found by Spiegelberg in 1896 at Drah abu-'n-Neggah on the west side at Thebes (see Spiegelberg, Zwei Beiträge zur Geschichte und Topographie der thebanischen Nekropolis im Neuen Reich (Strassburg, 1898; and Sethe, Götting'sche Gelehrte Anzeigen, 1902, No. 1, 29-31). The temple is referred to as "House of Zeserkere (Amenhotep I) on the west of Thebes" (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 238). See also Sethe, loc. cit., 30.

<sup>c</sup>Mortuary stela of unknown provenience (probably Abydos), now in the Florence Museum, No. 1567; published in Catalogue, 288-90; Pichl, Recueil, II, 122-24. I had also my own photograph of the original.

48. After the usual mortuary prayer, the inscription continues, in Harmini's own words:

I passed many years as mayor (h<sup>2</sup> ty-<sup>c</sup>) of Nekhen (Hieraconpolis). I brought in its tribute to the Lord of the Two Lands; I was praised, and no occasion was found against me. I attained old age in Wawat, being a favorite of my lord. I went north with its tribute for the king, each year; I came forth thence justified; there was not found a balance against me.

---

STELA OF KERES<sup>a</sup>

49. Keres, like his contemporary, Yuf (§§ 109 ff.), was in the service of one of the queen-mothers. The question arises here whether the "king's-mother Ahhotep," whom Keres served, was Ahhotep (II), wife of Amenhotep I, in whose tenth year her command was issued, or Ahhotep (I), mother of King Ahmose. As Ahhotep II was never the mother of a king, it must have been Ahhotep I, who had a tomb erected at Abydos for Keres. We thus see this queen, from whom the Eighteenth Dynasty sprang, still living in the tenth year of the second king of the dynasty.

---

<sup>a</sup>Limestone stela, 0.82 m. high, from Drah abu-'n-Neggah, now in Cairo, without a number. Published by Bouriant, Recueil, IX, 94 f., No. 74 (his text is excessively incorrect); much better by Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 117 f. I am also indebted to Schaefer for a carefully collated copy made from the original.

50. Keres, who was her herald, has not only preserved for us the old queen's command, honoring him with a tomb and a statue at Abydos, but has also added a loose enumeration of his duties as her herald, which resembles that of the herald, Intef (§§ 763-71).

51. <sup>1</sup>Year 10, first month of the third season (ninth month), first day, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Zeserkere, Son of Re, of his body: Amenhotep (I), beloved of Osiris, given life.

52. <sup>2</sup>Command of the king's-mother to the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, overseer of the gold-house, overseer of the silver-house, chief steward of the king's-mother, <sup>3</sup>Ahhotep, who liveth; the herald (whm·w), Keres (K·rs). The king's-mother has commanded to have made for thee a tomb <sup>4</sup>at the stairway of the great god, lord of Abydos, confirming thy every office and every favor. There shall be made for thee thy <sup>5</sup>statues, abiding in the temple, among the followers of ————<sup>a</sup> their virtues in writing <sup>6</sup>in — — —.<sup>a</sup> There shall be made for thee mortuary offerings (hꜣp dy stny), as the king's-wife does for the one whom she has loved, for the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, the steward, the herald, Keres (Krs), only favorite united <sup>7</sup>with the limbs of Sekhmet, following his queen (hnw·t) at her going. He <sup>8</sup>before the people, the real <sup>9</sup>confidant<sup>1</sup> of his queen, to whom secret things are told, <sup>8</sup>experienced<sup>1</sup> in the plans of his queen, transmitting affairs to the palace, finding <sup>9</sup>solutions, making agreeable unpleasant matters, one upon whose word his queen depends, approaching the truth, knowing the affairs of the mind, profitable in speech to his queen, <sup>10</sup>great in respect in the house of the king's-mother, weighty in affairs, excellent in speech, secretive in mind, administering the palace, <sup>11</sup>sealing (his) mouth concerning that which he hears, official who solves knotty problems, chief steward, Keres (Krs), vigilant administrator for the king's-mother, <sup>12</sup>not more lax<sup>b</sup> by night than by day, the herald, Keres (Krs).

<sup>a</sup>Cut out.

<sup>b</sup>Read wsj.

53. He says: "O ye mayors, scribes, ritual priests, <sup>13</sup>attendants, citizens (<sup>c</sup> nh·w) of the army, as your city-gods favor you, and love you, as ye would bequeath your office(s) to your children <sup>14</sup>after old age; verily so shall ye say: 'An offering which the king gives; ————,<sup>a</sup> king, of the two lofty plumes, lord of life, giver of that which is desired, <sup>15</sup>lord of burial after old age. May he give bread, beer, oxen, geese, everything good and pure, that comes forth upon the table of <sup>16</sup>the All Lord, for the ka of . . . .<sup>b</sup> Keres, a man of truth, before the Two Lands, really honest, free <sup>17</sup>from lying, [—] in deciding matters, protecting the weak, defending him who is without <sup>18</sup>him (sic!), sending forth two men, reconciled by the utterance of his mouth, accurate like a pair of balances, <sup>19</sup>the like [of Thoth] in [—] the name, inclining the heart to hear matters, the likeness of a god in his hour, real [confidant]<sup>3</sup> <sup>20</sup>of his queen, whom the queen of the Two Lands has advanced. . . . Keres."

<sup>a</sup>Name of Amon cut out in time of Ikhnaton.

<sup>b</sup>His titles.

REIGN OF THUTMOSE I

CORONATION DECREE<sup>a</sup>

54. This unique document is a royal decree issued on the king's coronation day to the viceroy of Nubia, Thure, informing him of the king's accession, fixing the full titulary, the royal name to be used in offering oblations, and the royal name to be used in the oath. Thure's official residence was doubtless Elephantine, for he is charged to offer oblations to the gods of that city, and it was he who put up the records of Thutmose I's return from his Nubian campaign, at the first cataract (§§ 74 ff.). He then caused the decree to be cut on stelæ and set up in Wadi Halfa,<sup>b</sup> Kubbân, and probably also Elephantine.

Superscription

55. Royal<sup>c</sup> command to the king's-son, the governor of the south countries, Thure (Tw-r) triumphant.

Announcement of Accession

Behold, there is brought to thee this [command]<sup>d</sup> of the<sup>d</sup> king in order to inform thee that my majesty has appeared<sup>e</sup> as King of Upper

---

<sup>a</sup>In two copies: (1) a sandstone (?) stela, 72 by 84 cm., found at Wadi Halfa, now in Cairo, published from a copy of Brugsch by Erman (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 29, 117 = Erman, Aegyptische Grammatik, 37*–38*); (2) a sandstone stela, 67 by 76 cm., found by Borchardt at Kubbân (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 26, n. 1), now in Berlin (No. 13725, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 131), unpublished. The beginning is lost on the Cairo stela, and the end on the Berlin stela; the two thus furnish a practically complete text. The relief at the top is lost on both. I used my own copy of the Berlin text.

<sup>b</sup>Not Elephantine, as stated (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 29, 117). See ibid., 36, 3, n. 1.

<sup>c</sup>See the similar introduction to Pepi II's letter to Harkhuf (I, 351, l. 2).

<sup>d</sup>Supplied from the Story of Sinuhe, 180, 181.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "dawned;" the same word is used for the rising sun, and is transferred without change to the king. It is regularly used also of his appearance in public.

and Lower Egypt upon the Horus-throne of the living, without his like forever.

Titulary

56. Make my titulary as follows:

Horus:<sup>a</sup> "Mighty Bull, Beloved of Mat;"

Favorite of the Two Goddesses:<sup>a</sup> "Shining in the Serpent-diadem, Great in Strength;"

Golden Horus:<sup>a</sup> "Goodly in Years, Making Hearts Live;"

King of Upper and Lower Egypt:<sup>a</sup> "Okheperkere;"

Son of Re:<sup>a</sup> "[Thutmose], Living forever, and ever."

Name to be Used in the Cultus

57. Cause thou oblations to be offered to the gods of Elephantine of the South,<sup>b</sup> as follows:<sup>c</sup> "Performance of the pleasing ceremonies<sup>d</sup> on behalf of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere, who is given life."

Name to be Used in the Oath

58. Cause thou that the oath be established in the name of my majesty, born of the king's-mother, Seniseneb, who is in health.

Conclusion

59. This is a communication to inform thee of it; and of the fact that the royal house is well and prosperous — —.

Date

60. Year 1, third month of the second season (seventh month) twenty-first day; the day of the feast of coronation.

---

<sup>a</sup>These five titles are common to all Middle Kingdom and Empire kings; only the names following each title are individual.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. Erman (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 29, 117).

<sup>c</sup>This preposition (m) introduces the title or designation of the ceremony of presenting oblations by the priest on the king's behalf.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "doing of the pleasing things."

BIOGRAPHICAL INSCRIPTION OF THURE<sup>a</sup>

61. In this inscription the name of the author is lost. He served under Ahmose, Amenhotep I, Thutmose I, by whom he was appointed viceroy of Kush (l. 6), Thutmose II, and Thutmose III (l. 14, note). He is supposed by Brugsch (Egypt under the Pharaohs, 135), and by Maspero (Struggle of the Nations, 230, n. 2) to be the same as Nehi, the viceroy of Kush, who also served under Thutmose III, and has also placed his inscription on the façade of the Semneh temple (§§ 651 ff.).

Now, Nehi was still in office in Thutmose III's fifty-second year, and if he began his official career under Ahmose, he would have been over 117 years old<sup>b</sup> at that time! The identity with Nehi, which was at best an assumption, is therefore impossible. Another identification is, however, certain. This unknown was appointed viceroy of Kush by Thutmose I, at whose accession he was in his prime. He is therefore the same as the viceroy, Thure, whom we find at Elephantine in Thutmose I's first year (§ 55), being the earliest viceroy of Kush whom we know. That he survived into Thutmose III's reign is shown by a tomb at Silsileh, where he is mentioned under Hatshepsut.<sup>c</sup>

Service under Ahmose I

62. <sup>1</sup>——— under the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nebpehtire (Ahmose I); he made me overseer of the — <sup>2</sup>——— of very good character in his heart, not careless in — <sup>3</sup>——— his court.

<sup>a</sup>Inscribed on the south wall (façade) of Thutmose III's Semneh temple; text: Young, Hieroglyphics, 91; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 47, c. The upper half of all the lines has been cut away for a later relief of Thutmose III. I am indebted to Steindorff for the use of his collation of the original.

<sup>b</sup>If he was 25 at Ahmose I's death, we must then add 10 for Amenhotep I, 30 for Thutmose I, and 51 for Thutmose III—a total of 117 years.

<sup>c</sup>Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XII, 104. See also note on l. 14 in the translation, infra.

Service under Amenhotep I

63. Favor was repeated by his son, King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Zeserke]re (Amenhotep I) <sup>4</sup>———— the granary of Amon, to conduct the works in Karnak — — <sup>5</sup>———— [‘I did’] for him the excellent things of (his)<sup>a</sup> heart; he favored me for doing his<sup>a</sup> truth — — <sup>6</sup>————.

Service under Thutmose I

64. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I); he appointed me to be king’s-son of [Kush] — — — <sup>7</sup>———— of gold; an armlet the second time — — — — <sup>8</sup>———— gave me of gold: a vase, two bracelets — — — — <sup>9</sup>———— he — me more than the magnates of the palace, he recognized the excellence of — — — — <sup>10</sup>———— <sup>11</sup>———— in the place of satisfying the heart. He attained old age — — — <sup>12</sup>————.

Service under Thutmose II

65. The first of the repetition of the favor of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okhepernere (Thutmose II); he made [‘me’] ————— <sup>13</sup>———— with a royal message, recording ————— <sup>14</sup>————.<sup>c</sup>

Service under Thutmose III

66. [King Thutmose III]; he magnified me in the midst —————.

TOMBOS STELA<sup>d</sup>

67. Three important facts are preserved to us in this inscription:

<sup>a</sup>Both these pronouns refer to Amon; the same thought occurs in Suti and Hor’s tablet (British Museum, 826), ll. 16, 17.

<sup>b</sup>The portion preserved is hopelessly obscure.

<sup>c</sup>Here are the remains of a royal oval, which certainly contained the name of Thutmose III; in this king’s second year, a viceroy of Kush is mentioned in this same temple (§ 170, l. 2), but the name is unfortunately broken out. He is doubtless the same as our viceroy.

<sup>d</sup>Engraved on the rocks on the island of Tombos, just above the third cataract of the Nile; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 5, a, and thence Piehl, Petites études égyptologiques. The Berlin squeeze (No. 284) permitted some important corrections, but the publication (Lepsius, Denkmäler) is a brilliant example of correctness in the form of the signs, as drawn by M. Weidenbach.

1. In the second year Thutmose I defeated the Nubians and conquered the country as far as the third cataract<sup>a</sup> (cf. ll. 6 and 7, and the location of the inscription);

2. He then built a fortified station for his troops at Tombos, remains of which still survive, and thus established his southern frontier at this point (cf. l. 10).<sup>b</sup>

3. His empire extended from this point on the south to the Euphrates on the north (cf. l. 13); the Asiatic peoples are already subdued (cf. ll. 3, 4, and 16), but his Asiatic campaign did not take place until after this Nubian expedition (see § 81, l. 35). Hence we must suppose, either that he had already made an Asiatic campaign of which no account has survived; or that his predecessors had already made the conquest of the country as far as Euphrates, and thus he could refer to it as in his domain. The latter is the more probable supposition.

68. Other interesting data are the fact that the oath, even in the foreign provinces, is made in the name of the king (l. 14), according to the instructions in his coronation announcement (cf. § 58); and the curious reference to the Euphrates as "that inverted water which goes down-stream in going up-stream" (cf. l. 13, note).

Unfortunately, this important inscription offers no sober narrative of the events which it commemorates, but is written in that fulsome style so often found in victorious hymns of the Pharaohs. This is a style so overloaded with far-fetched figures and unfamiliar words that it is often quite unintelligible.<sup>a</sup> It is at its worst in ll. 5-9, where some phrases containing only exaggerated epithets applied to the king have necessarily been left untranslated.

<sup>a</sup>An unpublished inscription of his, on the Island of Arko (Wilkinson, Thebes, 472, note) shows that he pushed some forty miles south of the third cataract.

<sup>b</sup>This expedition left another inscription at Tangûr, about seventy-five miles above the second cataract, but we possess only a partial copy by a layman, from which it is impossible to make out much. It is dated "Year 2, first month of third season," which shows that it was made on the way out (Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 41), about five months before the Tombos inscription.

Introduction

69. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, second month of the first season, fifteenth day, under the majesty of Horus: Mighty Bull, Beloved of Mat (M<sup>3</sup>c·t); Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Shining in the Serpent-diadem, Mighty<sup>b</sup> in Strength; Golden Horus: Goodly in Years, Making hearts live; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Okheperkere, who is given life; Son of Re: Thutmose (I, living) forever, eternally.<sup>c</sup>

Hymn of Victory

70. [— —] of his induction <sup>2</sup>his coronation as Lord (hry-ḏ<sup>3</sup> ḏ<sup>3</sup>) of the Two Lands, to rule the circuit of the sun; South and North land as ruler of the portions of Horus and Set,<sup>d</sup> the Uniter of the Two Lands. He has seated himself upon the throne of Keb, wearing <sup>3</sup>the radiance of the double crown, the staff<sup>e</sup> of his majesty; he hath taken his inheritance, he hath assumed the seat of Horus, in order to extend the boundaries of Thebes and the territory of Khaftet-hir-nebes;<sup>f</sup> so that the Sand-dwellers and the barbarians shall labor for her.<sup>g</sup> <sup>4</sup>An abomination<sup>1</sup> of the god are the Haunebu; bound are the Ekbet (ḥḥt); the Southerners come down<sup>h</sup>-river, the Northerners come up<sup>h</sup>-river, and all lands are together bringing their tribute <sup>5</sup>to the Good God, the primordial, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), who liveth forever, the mighty one,

<sup>a</sup>There is a good example on the second Semneh stela (I, 657).

<sup>b</sup>The coronation letter has "great in strength," the usual form.

<sup>c</sup>Cf. the titulary given by the king himself in the coronation letter (§ 56).

<sup>d</sup>The myth of Horus and Set states that they divided the Nile country between them; over both these domains the Pharaoh rules, and hence follow the words: "uniter, etc.," It is possible that "Horus and Set" should be translated only "the two lords;" see Piehl, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XX, 199, 200.

<sup>e</sup>For the same phrase applied to a successor, see I, 692.

<sup>f</sup>The goddess of western Thebes.

<sup>g</sup>The pronoun refers to Thebes; the foreign captives are to be employed on her buildings.

<sup>h</sup>To Thebes, the royal residence.

Horus, Lord of the Two Lands, [— — —]. The [Sand]-dwellers, chiefs of their tribes [—] to him, bowing down; the [interior]<sup>1a</sup> peoples<sup>b</sup> send to his majesty, doing obeisance to that which is on his front.<sup>c</sup>

Victory in Nubia

71. He hath overthrown the chief of the [Nubians]<sup>1</sup>; the Negro is [helpless, defenseless]<sup>1</sup> in his grasp. He hath united the boundaries <sup>7</sup>of his two<sup>d</sup> sides, there is not a remnant among the Curly-Haired,<sup>e</sup> who come to attack him; there is not a single survivor among them. The Nubian Troglodytes fall by the sword, and are thrust aside in their lands; <sup>8</sup>their foulness, it floods their valleys; the [—]<sup>1</sup> of their mouths is like a violent flood. The fragments cut from them are too much for the birds,<sup>f</sup> carrying off the prey to another place. <sup>9g</sup>. . . . . the sole staff of Amon; Keb, divine begetter, whose name is hidden, <sup>10</sup>reproducer, Bull of the divine ennead, chosen emanation of the divine members who doeth the pleasure of the Spirits of Heliopolis.

Tombos Fortress Built

72. The lords of the palace have made a fortress for his army, (called) "None-Faces-Him-<sup>11</sup>Among-the-Nine-Bows-Together;"<sup>h</sup> like a young panther among the fleeing cattle; the fame of his majesty blinded them.

Universal Triumph

73. (He) brought the ends of the earth into his domain; (he) trod its two extremities <sup>12</sup>with his mighty sword, seeking battle; (but) he

<sup>a</sup>Hwtwyw, with a hide as the first determinative.

<sup>b</sup>The interior peoples of the neighboring lands.

<sup>c</sup>This means the sacred uraeus serpent on his forehead, as the determinative shows.

<sup>d</sup>See I, 311, l. 14.

<sup>e</sup>An epithet for the Negro, used also by Amenhotep II (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 61), by Seti I (III, 155, l. 4); and again in the Nineteenth Dynasty, Recueil, XXII, 107, ll. 7, 8. See Piehl, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 261 f., and Sphinx, VI, 19 f.

<sup>f</sup>Determinative is an eagle.

<sup>g</sup>The first half of line 9 is a series of obscure epithets of praise applied to the king.

<sup>h</sup>It is doubtful whether this is the name of the fortress. It is probably the same fortress which is referred to by Thutmose II in his Assuan inscription (§ 121, l. 7).

found no one who faced him.<sup>a</sup> (He) penetrated valleys which <sup>13</sup>the (royal) ancestors knew not, which the wearers of the double diadem had not seen. His southern boundary is as far as the frontier of this land,<sup>b</sup> (his) northern as far as that inverted water<sup>c</sup> which goes down-stream in going up-stream.<sup>d</sup> <sup>14</sup>The like has not happened to other kings; his name has reached as far as the circuit of heaven, it has penetrated the Two Lands as far as the nether world;<sup>e</sup> the oath is taken<sup>f</sup> by it (viz., his name) in all lands, because of the greatness of the fame of his majesty. <sup>15</sup>They (viz., the lands) were not seen in the archives of the ancestors since the Worshipers of Horus,<sup>g</sup> who gives his breath to the one that follows him, his offerings to the one that treads <sup>16</sup>his way. His majesty is Horus, assuming his (Horus's) kingdom of myriads of years, <sup>1</sup>subject<sup>1</sup> to him are the isles of the Great Circle ($n[w]-wr, Okeanos), the entire earth is under his two feet; <sup>17</sup>bodily son of Re, his beloved, Thutmose (I), living forever and ever. Amon-Re, king of gods is his father, the creator of his beauty, <sup>18</sup>beloved of the gods of Thebes, who is given life, stability, satisfaction, health, joy of his heart upon the throne of Horus, <sup>1</sup>leading<sup>1</sup> all the living like Re, forever.

---

INSCRIPTIONS AT THE FIRST CATARACT

74. Some eight months after the preceding expedition passed Tangur, about seventy-five miles above the second cataract, on the way out, they had reached Assuan on the return—a fact which was recorded by Thure, the viceroy of Kush, in two inscriptions on the island of Sehel and one at Assuan.

---

<sup>a</sup>See Sethe, Verbum, II, § 967.

<sup>b</sup>Nubia.

<sup>c</sup>The Euphrates.

<sup>d</sup>For the Egyptian on the Nile north was “down-stream,” and south was “up-stream.” It seemed very curious to him that in another country as here on the Euphrates, one went south in going down-stream; hence the anomaly of the text, which becomes clear, if we substitute “south” for “up-stream.” See also IV, 407.

<sup>e</sup>Heaven, earth, and the nether world, include the entire Egyptian universe.

<sup>f</sup>In the coronation announcement the form of the king's title to be used in the oath is given (see § 58).

<sup>g</sup>The pre-dynastic kings, now mythical demigods.

I. SEHEL INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

75. On arriving at the first cataract, the king found the canal of Sesostris III (see I, 642 ff.) stopped up. He cleared it, and the viceroy made the following records:

Year 3, first month of the third season, day 22, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), who is given life. His majesty commanded to dig this canal, after he found it [stopped up] with stones, (so that) no [ship sailed upon it]. He [sail]ed [down-stream] upon it, his heart [glad, having slain his enemies].<sup>b</sup> The king's-son, [Thure].<sup>c</sup>

II. SEHEL INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

76. Above are the Horus-, throne- and personal-names of Thutmose I; and below, the following:

Year 3, first month of the third season, day 22. His majesty sailed this canal in victory and in power, at his return from overthrowing the wretched Kush.

The king's-son, Thure.

III. ASSUAN INSCRIPTION<sup>e</sup>

77. On the same day the king arrived at Assuan, where he left a similar record:

Year 3, first month of the third season, day 22, under the majesty of Thutmose (I).<sup>f</sup> His majesty arrived from Kush, having overthrown the enemy.

<sup>a</sup>De Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 85, No. 13.

<sup>b</sup>The preceding restorations are from Thutmose III's copy of this inscription (see §§ 649 f.).

<sup>c</sup>Restored from the following inscription. Thure, also § 55.

<sup>d</sup>Discovered by Wilbour, and published in Recueil, XIII, 202; better, de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 85, No. 19.

<sup>e</sup>De Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 41, No. 185.

<sup>f</sup> Full titulary.

INSCRIPTION OF AHMOSE, SON OF EBANA<sup>a</sup>

[Ll. 29-39; concluded from § 39]

III. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE I

78. Ahmose's career under Thutmose I is still one of active service in campaigning. He first sails the royal transport in the campaign against Nubia (§ 80), resulting in his appointment to the head of the naval forces. They returned in triumph with the Nubian foe hanged head downward at the bow of the royal barge.

79. It was not until after this Nubian campaign that the famous expedition to Naharin set out. Our only sources for this event are the biographies of the two El Kab Ahmoses. Thutmose III states that he set up his boundary tablet beside that of his father (§ 478), and it must have been on this campaign that this first boundary tablet was set up by Thutmose I.<sup>b</sup> For it is always supposed that this campaign was the only Asiatic expedition of Thutmose I; but as the Tombos inscription (§§ 67 ff.) speaks of the conquest of Asia as far as the Euphrates, before the Asiatic campaign narrated by the two Ahmoses, we must suppose either that Thutmose I had already made a still earlier campaign in Syria; or that his predecessors, Ahmose I and Amenhotep I, had achieved greater conquests in Asia than our scanty sources for their reigns would indicate.

Campaign against Nubia

80. I sailed the King Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant, when he ascended the river to Khenthennofer (Hnt-hn-njr),<sup>30</sup> in order to cast out violence in the highlands, in order to suppress the raiding<sup>a</sup> of the hill region. I showed bravery in his presence in the bad water, in the [passage] of <sup>31</sup>the ship by the bend. One appointed me chief of the sailors. His majesty was ———. <sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see p. 3, note a.

<sup>b</sup>The inscription of Hatshepsut's childhood (§ 225, l. 11) mentions her father's (Thutmose I's) survivals among the chiefs of Retenu, meaning those he had left.

<sup>32</sup>His majesty was furious thereat, like a panther;<sup>c</sup> his majesty cast his first lance, which remained in the body of that fallen one.<sup>d</sup> This was — — — —<sup>e</sup> <sup>33f</sup>—<sup>1</sup> powerless before his flaming uraeus,<sup>f</sup> made [so] in an instant of destruction; their people were brought off as living prisoners. <sup>34</sup>His majesty sailed down-river, with all countries in his grasp, that wretched Nubian Troglodyte being hanged head downward at the [prow]<sup>g</sup> of the ba[rge] of his majesty, and landed <sup>35</sup>at Karnak.

Asiatic Campaign

81. After these things<sup>h</sup> one journeyed to Retenu (Rṯnw) to wash his heart<sup>i</sup> among the foreign countries.

His majesty arrived at Naharin (N ḥ ḥ ry-n ḥ) <sup>36</sup>his majesty found that foe when he was [planning] destruction; his majesty made a great slaughter<sup>j</sup> among them. <sup>37</sup>Numberless were the living prisoners, which his majesty brought off from his victories. Meanwhile I was at <sup>a</sup>The flying raids into the valley of the Nile made by the barbarians inhabiting the desert behind the hills on either side of the valley. The account of the battle is very obscure, but the weakness of the enemy makes the result certain.

<sup>b</sup>The text ends here in the middle of a sentence, and proceeds around the corner of the wall with what seems to be the account of another incident in the same Nubian campaign.

<sup>c</sup>This is precisely what is said of Thutmose II in his Nubian war (Assuan Inscription, l. 9, II, 121) when the announcement of revolt was brought to him, hence a similar incident probably should precede here.

<sup>d</sup>Cf. Sinuhe's weapon which "remained in his (his foe's) neck."

<sup>e</sup>It is possible that there is no lacuna here, as the squeeze shows not a trace of a sign in the last 9 inches of the line.

<sup>f</sup>The sacred serpent which crowns the royal forehead.

<sup>g</sup>The restoration is from the Amâda tablet of Amenhotep II, II, 797, l. 17, where the same phrase occurs.

<sup>h</sup>This phrase shows clearly that the Nubian campaign took place before the Asiatic campaign. The same order is observed in the biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet (§§ 84, 85). The usual supposition that the Asiatic preceded the Nubian campaign is based on a false conclusion from the Tombos inscription (§§ 67 ff.).

<sup>i</sup>An idiom for taking revenge or obtaining satisfaction.

<sup>j</sup>From the squeeze; cf. also l. 17.

the head of our troops,<sup>a</sup> and his majesty beheld my bravery. <sup>38</sup>I brought off a chariot, its horses, and him who was upon it as a living prisoner, and took them to <sup>b</sup>his majesty.<sup>b</sup> One presented me with gold in double measure.

His Old Age

82. <sup>39</sup>When I grew old, and had attained old age, my honors were as at their beginning.<sup>c</sup> —————<sup>d</sup> a tomb, which I myself made.

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE-PEN-NEKHBET<sup>e</sup>

[Continued from § 42; concluded §§ 123-4, 344]

III. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE I

83. In this reign Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet took part in the campaign in Nubia; and also accompanied the Asiatic campaign to Naharin, of which Ahmose, son of Ebana, furnishes a fuller account (§ 81). He was then richly rewarded for his valor by the king.

Campaign in Kush

84. I <sup>7</sup>followed the King Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant; I captured for him <sup>8</sup>in Kush, two living prisoners, beside three living prisoners, whom I brought off <sup>9</sup>in Kush, without counting them.<sup>f</sup>

Campaign in Naharin

85. Again<sup>g</sup> I served <sup>10</sup>for King Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant; I captured for him in the country of Naharin (N<sup>2</sup>-h-ry-n<sup>2</sup>), <sup>11</sup>21 hands, one horse, and one chariot.

<sup>a</sup>See note on l. 26, § 39.

<sup>b</sup>From the squeeze; cf. also l. 27.

<sup>c</sup>He continued to receive rewards as at the beginning.

<sup>d</sup>Nearly one-third line is lacking.

<sup>e</sup>Bibliography, p. 10, note a.

<sup>f</sup>Perhaps meaning that they were not included in the official count.

<sup>g</sup>Showing clearly that the Asiatic campaign took place after the Nubian campaign.

KARNAK OBELISKS<sup>a</sup>

86. This pair stood before the pylon (IV) of Thutmose I in the great Karnak temple; the northern obelisk, which Pococke saw still standing, has since fallen. Their erection by Thutmose I is narrated by the chief architect in charge, Ineni (see § 105). Both Ineni and the standing obelisk refer to "two great obelisks," so that there can be no doubt that Thutmose I erected both.<sup>b</sup> The work must have been done just before his demission of the crown—an event which left the northern obelisk still uninscribed. It is certainly very significant that it was later inscribed by Thutmose III! If he did not reach the throne until after the reigns of Thutmose II and Hatshepsut, the northern obelisk remained uninscribed for some twenty-three years at least! This is improbable, and the fact that the northern obelisk was not usurped by Thutmose II or Hatshepsut would indicate that they had no opportunity to do so, because Thutmose III, having succeeded Thutmose I for a few years, had already taken possession of it himself (see Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 39 f.).

Only the middle columns of the standing obelisk are the inscriptions of Thutmose I; the side columns are later additions by Ramses IV and Ramses VI of the Twentieth Dynasty. The middle columns of the north and south sides contain only the elaborate titulary of Thutmose I; those of the east and west, his dedication, as follows:

<sup>a</sup>Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 6; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 127 f.; Champollion, Monuments, IV, 312-313; Rougé, Album photographique, 50, 53, 54, 68. See also Pococke, Description of the East, I, 95; and Brugsch, Reiseberichte, 159.

<sup>b</sup>See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 90. The two additional bases noted in Baedeker (1902, 253) probably belong to some other king, perhaps Amenhotep III, who mentions obelisks (§ 903, l. 57); or to Thutmose III.

87. <sup>a</sup>Horus: Mighty bull, beloved of Truth; King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Shining with the Serpent-diadem, great in strength; Okheperkere, Setepnere; Golden Horus: Beautiful in years, who makes hearts live; Bodily Son of Re, Thutmose (I), Shining-in-Beauty.

He made (it), as his monument for his father Amon, Lord of Thebes, Presider over Karnak, that he might be given life like Re, forever.

88. <sup>b</sup>Horus: Mighty bull, beloved of Truth, King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Okheperkere, Setep-Amon (Thutmose I).

He made (it) as his monument for his father Amon-Re, chief of the Two Lands, erecting for him<sup>c</sup> two great obelisks<sup>c</sup> at the double façade of the temple. The pyramidions were of ————.<sup>d</sup>

89. A fragment of an obelisk<sup>e</sup> on the island of Elephantine also refers to Thutmose I's jubilee. It still bears the words:

————— Thutmose (I); Shining-in-Beauty; he made (it) as his monument to his father, Khnum; making for him two obelisks of granite. First occurrence.<sup>f</sup> That he may be given life forever.

ABYDOS STELA<sup>g</sup>

90. This stela recorded the king's works in the Abydos temple of Osiris. In the lost introduction he has apparently held an audience and declared his intention of exe-

<sup>a</sup>Middle column, east side.

<sup>b</sup>Middle column, west side.

<sup>c</sup>See Ineni, ll. 9-11, § 105.

<sup>d</sup>About one-third of the line is flaked off; the material of the pyramidions crowning the obelisks was usually copper or bronze.

<sup>e</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1220. The epithet, "Shining-in-Beauty," is found on Thutmose I's Karnak obelisk, and is not used by other Thutmosids. Hence the obelisk certainly belongs to Thutmose I.

<sup>f</sup>Referring, of course, to the royal jubilee.

<sup>g</sup>Sandstone stela from Abydos, now in Cairo; published by Mariette (Abydos, II, 31) and by de Rougé (Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 19-22). Only the lower portion is preserved, the relief above being broken off, and probably a considerable fraction of the text.

cutting certain works for the god; whereupon the priests reply in the words with which the preserved portion begins. The chief treasurer is then instructed to execute the said works, which, he states, he did. On their completion the king delivers an address to the priests like that of Thutmose III (§§ 571 ff.).

Address of the Priests

91. <sup>2</sup>—<sup>a</sup> “How pleasant is this in the hearts of the people! How beautiful is this in the sight of the gods! Thou makest a monument for Osiris, thou beautifiest the First of the Westerners, the great god of the beginning, whose place Atum advanced, whom he magnified before <sup>3</sup>his — — his heart, for whom kings have labored since this land was founded. As for thee, thou wast born to him; he made thee in the uprightness of his heart, to do that which he did in the earth, to restore <sup>4</sup>the sanctuaries of the gods, [to] — their temples. Thou art gold, thine is the silver, Keb<sup>b</sup> has opened for thee that which is in him, Tatenen<sup>c</sup> has given to thee his things. All the countries labor for thee, all the lands are under thy rule. <sup>5</sup>Every costly stone is [collected]<sup>1</sup> — in thy house; [if there is]<sup>1</sup> a wish in thee, it must be done; it is that which thy ka desires which happens.

Royal Instructions to the Chief Treasurer

92. His majesty commanded the chief treasurer: “Conduct the work, causing to come <sup>6</sup>— — — — every prepared one of his workmen, the best of his lay priests, who knows the directions and is skilful in that which he knows, who does not transgress what was commanded him, <sup>7</sup>[to erect] the monument of his father [Osiris], to equip his everlasting statue. Execute the very secret things, no one seeing, no one beholding, no one knowing his body. Make for him the portable chapel-barque (wts-nfr w) of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, black copper, <sup>8</sup>every splendid costly stone.”

Words of the Chief Treasurer

93. I executed for him the offering-tables, — (sh̄m-) sistrums and (šsy t-) sistrums, necklace-rattles (mny wt), censers, [a flat dish]<sup>1</sup> (tnyw), <sup>a</sup>The number of lines lost before this point is uncertain.

<sup>b</sup>The earth-god.

<sup>c</sup>Ptah.

a great oblation there. I did not [remove] them. I did not discontinue them.

The Sacred Barge

94. I built<sup>a</sup> the august [barge] of new cedar of the best of the terraces; its bow and its stern being of electrum, making festive the lake;<sup>b</sup> to make his voyage therein at his feast of the "District of Peker" (Pky).

Statues of the Gods

95. Furthermore, <sup>19</sup>[his majesty] commanded to shape<sup>c</sup> (statues of) the great ennead of gods dwelling in Abydos; (each) one of them is mentioned by his name; Khnum, lord of Hirur, dwelling in Abydos; Khnum, lord of the cataract, dwelling in Abydos; Thoth, leader of the great gods, <sup>11</sup>presider over Hesret; Horus, presider over Letopolis; Harendotes; Upwawet of the South, and Upwawet of the North; mysterious and splendid were their bodies. The standards<sup>d</sup> thereof were of <sup>12</sup>electrum, more excellent than their predecessors; more splendid were they than that which is in heaven; more secret were they than the fashion of the nether world; more — were they than the dwellers in Nun.

Words of the King

96. <sup>13</sup>My majesty did these things for my father Osiris, because I loved him so much more than all gods, in order that my name might abide and my monuments endure in the house of my father, Osiris, First of the Westerners, <sup>14</sup>lord of Abydos, forever and ever.

Address to the Priests

97. [I say to] you, divine fathers<sup>e</sup> of this temple, priests (w<sup>c</sup> b·w), ritual priests, dwellers in the place of the hand,<sup>f</sup> <sup>15</sup>all the lay priests of the temple; offer ye to my tomb, present ye to my oblation-tablet; maintain ye the monuments of my majesty; mention ye my name;

<sup>a</sup>Read: ḳḫ as in Ineni (§ 105, l. 10).

<sup>b</sup>Meaning it was reflected in the water; see same idea more clearly (§ 888, l. 20).

<sup>c</sup>Ms., "to shape," with a following name of a god, is not uncommon (cf. I, 672).

<sup>d</sup>These are the standards upon which the statues were borne.

<sup>e</sup>Priestly title.

<sup>f</sup>An order of priests of whom we know nothing.

remember ye my titulary; give ye <sup>16</sup>praises to my likeness; praise ye the statue of my majesty; set my name in the mouth of your servants, my memory among your children. For <sup>17</sup>I am a king excellent because of what he has done; the unique in might through the (mere) mention of his name <sup>18</sup>— —<sup>a</sup> which I made in this land, till ye know it. There is no lie before you, nor exaggeration <sup>18</sup>therein. I have made monuments for the gods; I have beautified their sanctuaries for the future; I have maintained their temples, I have restored that which was ruinous, I have surpassed <sup>19</sup>that which was done before. I have informed the priests (w c b w) of their duties, I have led the ignorant to that which he did not know. I have increased the work of others, the kings <sup>20</sup>who have been before me; the gods had joy in my time, their temples were in festivity.

Universal Triumph

98. I made the boundaries of Egypt (t<sup>2</sup>-mry) as far as that which the sun encircles. I made <sup>21</sup>strong those who were in fear; I repelled the evil from them. I made Egypt the superior of every land <sup>22</sup>— — — —<sup>1</sup> favorite of Amon, <sup>22</sup>Son of Re, of his body, his beloved Thutmose (I), Shining like Re, beloved of Osiris, First of the Westerners; Great God, lord of Abydos, ruler of eternity; given life, stability, satisfaction, and health, while shining as King upon the Horus-throne of the living; and joy of his heart, together with his ka, like Re, forever.

BIOGRAPHY OF INENI<sup>b</sup>

[Continued from § 46; continued § 115]

II. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE I (LL. 4-14)

99. The career of Ineni, which began under Amenhotep I, continues here under Thutmose I. The king's name and the narrative of his accession unfortunately fall in the lacunæ at the ends of the lines (probably l. 4). The biography then narrates the wide dominion of the king, and the rich tribute therefrom (§ 101); Ineni's advancement to superintendence of the king's building projects (§ 102) especially the construction of the Karnak pylons of Thutmose I, and the erection before them of his two obelisks, one of which still stands (§§ 103-5); also the excavation of the king's cliff-tomb and improvements in the necropolis of Thebes (§ 106); Ineni's rewards in serfs and treasury dues (§ 107); and the death of the king (§ 108).

<sup>a</sup>Read r-d' t.

<sup>b</sup>Bibliography on p. 18, note c.

100. The Karnak hall, which Ineni constructed, is of great historic interest, as it was the first hall on entering the building, and served as the chief hypostyle, or colonnaded hall, of the temple throughout the reign of Thutmose I. It was in this hall that Thutmose III was proclaimed king by the priests of Amon (§§ 131 ff.), thus putting aside either its builder, Thutmose I, or the weakling Thutmose II, and in this hall Hatshepsut erected her two great obelisks. The description of the erection of the hall itself is unfortunately lost in the lacuna at the end of l. 7, and l. 8 begins with a reference to the "great pylons on its either side," the erection of which follows. But Thutmose III informs us of the interesting fact that he replaced with stone columns the cedar columns erected by Thutmose I in this hall (§ 601). Indeed, Thutmose I himself was obliged to replace the northernmost two of his cedar columns by stone ones before the end of his reign.<sup>a</sup> The fact is recorded by him on one of the new columns (see Piehl, Actes du 6<sup>me</sup> congrès des orientalistes à Leide, 1883, IV<sup>me</sup> partie, section 3, 203-19). This inscription is unfortunately now only a series of disconnected fragments, of which little is intelligible. The dedication on one of the columns is as follows: "Thutmose I, he made (it) as his monument for his father Amon-Re, chief of the Two Lands, making for him an august colonnade, which adorns the Two Lands with its beauty." (Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1311, and Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 163.) On the further career of this historic hall, only begun here, see §§ 599 ff.; 803 ff.

<sup>a</sup>This is a hint as to the length of his reign; he must have reigned long enough for the wooden colonnade to begin to decay.

Accession and Power of Thutmose I

101. ——— 5the Good God, who smites the Nubians, lord of might, who overthrows the Asiatics. He made his boundary as far as the 6Horns of the Earth,<sup>a</sup> and the marshes in Kebeh (Kbh) ——— 6r— —<sup>1</sup> Elephantine. The Sand-dwellers bore their tribute like the impost of the South and the North; his majesty forwarded them to Thebes, for his father Amon, each year. Everything was made to prosper<sup>b</sup> for me under ———.

Ineni's Promotion

102. 7He filled his heart with me,<sup>c</sup> I was brought to be a dignitary, overseer of the granary; the fields of divine offerings were under my authority; all<sup>d</sup> the excellent works together were under my administration.

Karnak Pylons

103. I inspected the great monuments<sup>e</sup> which he made ——— 8great pylons on its either side of fine limestone of Ayan (<sup>c</sup> nw); august flagstaves were erected at the double façade of the temple of new cedar of the best of the Terraces;<sup>f</sup> their tops were of electrum.<sup>g</sup> I inspected ——— 9wrought with electrum.

<sup>a</sup>The same phrase occurs in Assuan inscription of Thutmose II (§ 120, l. 4), where it refers to the south; the marshes above must therefore be those of the Euphrates in the north, also used by Thutmose II, loc. cit.

<sup>b</sup>Such a passive is often a respectful circumlocution to indicate an act of the king.

<sup>c</sup>An idiom signifying favor with the king.

<sup>d</sup>Read: nb' t.

<sup>e</sup>The following is the description of the erection and adornment by Ineni of the hall and two pylons of Thutmose I at Karnak (IV and V), and the two obelisks before them, of which one still stands.

<sup>f</sup>Meaning the slopes of Lebanon; cf. the "Myrrh-terraces."

<sup>g</sup>Four such flagstaves, set in channels cut for them in the faces of the pylons, usually adorned the temple façade.

Karnak Portal

104. I inspected the erection of the great doorway (named): "Amon-Mighty-in-Wealth;"<sup>a</sup> its huge door was of Asiatic copper whereon was the Divine Shadow,<sup>b</sup> inlaid with gold.

Karnak Obelisks

105. I inspected the erection of two<sup>c</sup> obelisks ———— <sup>10d</sup>built the august boat<sup>d</sup> of 120 cubits in its length, 40 cubits in its width,<sup>e</sup> in order to transport these obelisks. (They) came in peace, safety<sup>f</sup> and prosperity, and landed at Karnak ———— <sup>11</sup>of the city. Its [track] was laid with every pleasant wood.

Thutmose I's Cliff-tomb

106. I inspected the excavation of the cliff-tomb of his majesty, alone, no one seeing, no one hearing.<sup>g</sup> I sought out the excellent <sup>h</sup>things upon ———— <sup>12f</sup>—<sup>1</sup> I was vigilant<sup>i</sup> in seeking that which is excellent. I made fields of clay, in order to plaster their tombs of the necropolis; it was a work such as the ancestors had not done which I was obliged to do there [— — —] <sup>13</sup>I sought out for those

<sup>a</sup>The name is not among the ten gates given by Mariette, Karnak, 38.

<sup>b</sup>Explained § 889, note.

<sup>c</sup>Hence Petrie, depending on Mariette's plan (Karnak, 2) is under misapprehension in attributing one of these obelisks to Thutmose III (Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 67). The standing obelisk of this pair distinctly refers to the erection of "two great obelisks" (§ 88); hence Thutmose III must have appropriated the now fallen obelisk after it was up, and before the inscriptions were cut.

<sup>d</sup>The same words are used of the transport of Hatshepsut's obelisks; see § 326, note.

<sup>e</sup>Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1895-96, 9 and 10, where Naville gives the equivalents of the above dimensions rather inaccurately. One hundred and twenty royal cubits = 206.6 feet, and 40 royal cubits = 68.86 feet.

<sup>f</sup>Read hṯp, c nd, wḏ 2.

<sup>g</sup>The same phrase: "no one seeing, no one hearing," occurs on the statue of Sennefer, British Museum, 48. See also § 92. This remarkable statement indicates the secrecy with which the vast rock-cut tombs of the Emperors were excavated, in order to avoid the tomb-robberies, which finally forced the removal of the royal mummies to Der el-Bahri. Another officer, Hapuseneb (§ 389, ll. 7, 8), also states that he worked on the king's "cliff-tomb" (hr' t), see Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 23, 59. See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 90-94. The construction of such a tomb is described in the last twelve lines of Sinuhe; see Goodwin, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1872, 21 ff.

<sup>h</sup>The various supplies for the tomb. <sup>i</sup>Lit., "My head was watchful."

who should be after me. It was a work of my heart, my virtue was wisdom; there was not given to me a command by an elder. I shall be praised because of my wisdom after years, by those who shall imitate that which I have done, ———<sup>14</sup>while I was chief (r<sup>2</sup>-hry) of all works.

Ineni's Rewards

107. My praise endured in the palace, my love among the court. His majesty endowed me<sup>a</sup> with peasant-serfs, and my income was from the granary of the king's estate on each day.

Death of Thutmose I

108. The king rested from life, going forth to heaven, having completed his years in gladness of heart.

[Continued §§ 115-18]

STELA OF YUF<sup>b</sup>

109. This official served under Queen Ahhotep, the mother of King Ahmose I, and administered her property in Edfu. He also repaired for her there a ruined tomb belonging to her ancestor, the queen Sebekemsaf, who was the wife of one of the Thirteenth Dynasty Intefs.<sup>c</sup> He says nothing of any subsequent connection with the royal house under the following reign of Amenhotep I, but he was later in the service of Queen Ahmose, the favorite wife of Thutmose I, and mother of Hatshepsut. His career therefore extended through at least part of four generations of the royal house.

<sup>a</sup>The same rare phrase in Ahmose, son of Ebana (§ 6, l. 3).

<sup>b</sup>Sandstone stela, 0.62 m. high, from Edfu, now in Cairo, old No. 238; published by Bouriant, Recueil, IX, 92, 93, No. 72. I had also a carefully revised copy, kindly loaned me by Schaefer.

<sup>c</sup>See Newberry, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXIV, 285-89. Maspero supposed (Momies royales, 625-28) that Sebekemsaf was a deceased daughter of Ahhotep, but Newberry has clearly shown that she was an ancestor of Ahhotep.

Relief

110. In the middle is an offering-table, before which on the left are two women sitting, and on the right a man, standing, accompanied by his son. Before the first woman are the words: "Divine consort, great king's-wife, Ahhotep, triumphant"; before the second: "King's-wife, king's-sister [Sebek]emsaf<sup>a</sup> —."

Before the first man is a mortuary prayer for "thy (fem.) ka," but his name is illegible; before the son: "His son, prophet of the dues (š<sup>2</sup>w), Harhotep, triumphant." Below is the following inscription:

Mortuary Prayer

111. <sup>1</sup>An offering which the king gives; Horus of Edfu, Osiris and Isis; may they give bread, beer, oxen, geese, everything good and pure for the ka of the great king's-wife, <sup>2</sup>the king's-mother, Ahhotep, triumphant; and her son Nebpehtire (Ahmose I), triumphant.

Restoration of Sebekemsaf's Tomb

112. She gave to me.<sup>b</sup> The <sup>1</sup>second<sup>1c</sup> prophet of the dues (š<sup>2</sup>w) of the altar, <sup>3</sup>the door-keeper of the temple, the priest, Yuf (Yw' f), son of Iritset (Yry' t-s' t), he says: "I repaired this tomb (ysy) of <sup>4</sup>the king's-daughter, Sebekemsaf, after finding it beginning to go to ruin."

Favor under Queen Ahhotep

113. Then this priest said: "<sup>5</sup>O ye who pass by this stela, I will tell you, and I will cause you to hear my favor with the great king's-wife, Ahhotep. She appointed <sup>6</sup>me to offer to her; she intrusted me with the statue of her majesty. She gave to me bread: <sup>7</sup>100 (by' t-) loaves, and 10 persen loaves; <sup>2</sup> (ds-) jars of beer, and a joint (pnsw) from every ox. I was endowed<sup>d</sup> [with] <sup>8</sup>upland, and with lowland.

<sup>a</sup>Of course, Sebekemsas is meant.

<sup>b</sup>The connection of this phrase is not clear; the following list of titles terminating with the name of the owner of the stela can hardly be connected with the preceding. Perhaps the stela is the gift meant.

<sup>c</sup>Two strokes, perhaps misunderstood from hieratic determinative for a man.

<sup>d</sup>S<sup>2</sup> h' kwy, as in Ahmose, § 6, l. 3.

She repeated to me another favor, she gave to me all her property in Edfu, <sup>9</sup>to administer<sup>a</sup> it for her majesty.

Favor under Queen Ahmose

114. Another favor of the great king's-wife, Ahmose, triumphant, whom king <sup>10</sup>Okheperkere (Thutmose I), triumphant, loves. She appointed me to be scribe of the assistant treasurer. She intrusted me with <sup>11</sup>the statue of her majesty, she gave to me 100 loaves of bread, 2 (ds-) jars of beer, and a joint (w<sup>c</sup> b<sup>t</sup>) from every ox. <sup>12</sup>I was endowed with upland, and with lowland.

Field-scribe<sup>b</sup> of Horus of Edfu, Denereg (Dnrg).

---

<sup>a</sup>Hrp; hence we may possibly render: "to present it (the income?) to her majesty."

<sup>b</sup>Evidently the subscript of the scribe who made the document.

REIGN OF THUTMOSE II

BIOGRAPHY OF INENI<sup>a</sup>

[Continued from 108; concluded §§ 340 ff.]

III. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE II

115. According to this biography, Thutmose II succeeded directly at the death of Thutmose I;<sup>b</sup> under the new reign, Ineni enjoyed the greatest favor, until the death of Thutmose II.

Succession of Thutmose II

116. The Hawk<sup>c</sup> in the nest<sup>d</sup> [appeared as]<sup>d</sup> the <sup>15</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okhepernere (<sup>c</sup>ḥpr-n-R<sup>c</sup>, Thutmose II), he became king of the Black Land<sup>e</sup> and ruler of the Red Land,<sup>e</sup> having taken possession of the Two Regions in triumph.

Ineni's Favor

117. I was a favorite of the king<sup>f</sup> in his every place; greater was that which he did for me than<sup>g</sup> those who preceded (me). I attained the old age of the revered, I possessed the favor of his majesty every day. I was supplied from the table of the king <sup>16</sup>with bread of oblations for

---

<sup>a</sup>Bibliography on p. 18, note c.

<sup>b</sup>This seems unfavorable to Sethe's theory that Thutmose III succeeded Thutmose I and reigned for a short time before the accession of Thutmose II. But Sethe offers very cogent arguments in explanation of Ineni's silence on this point. See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 19, § 29, and 39, § 52; and Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36.

<sup>c</sup>This is a poetical designation of the crown prince as Horus, who also succeeded his father, Osiris.

<sup>d</sup>Ermann's restoration. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 40, n. 1.

<sup>e</sup>The cultivable land and the desert.

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "one who filled the heart of the king."

<sup>g</sup>Supply of course: "than that which he did for those who, etc.;" or "than that which those did who, etc.," meaning he received greater favor than from preceding kings.

the king, beer likewise, meat, fat-meat, vegetables, various fruits, honey, cakes, wine, oil. My necessities were apportioned in health and life, as his majesty himself said, for love of me.

Death of Thutmose II

118. (He) went forth to heaven, having mingled with the gods.<sup>a</sup>

[Concluded §§ 340-43]

ASSUAN INSCRIPTION<sup>b</sup>

119. This inscription narrates: (1) the arrival of a messenger who announces to his majesty a rebellion in Kush, and mentions a frontier fortress of the king's father, Thutmose I (see § 72) (ll. 5-9); (2) the anger of the king (ll. 9-11); (3) his dispatch of an army thither (ll. 11, 12); (4) the overthrow of Kush, and the capture of one of the chief's children with some other prisoners (ll. 12-15); (4) the complete pacification of the country (ll. 15-17). The inscription is dated on the day of the king's accession, and, according to l. 7, his father, Thutmose I, was living at the time, thus proving the coregency of the two.

Protocol

120. <sup>1</sup>Year 1, second month of the first season, day 8, coronation day<sup>c</sup> under the majesty of Horus: Mighty Bull, Powerful in Strength; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Divine in kingship; Golden Horus: Powerful in Being; <sup>2</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Okheperne, Son of Re: Thutmose (II), Beautiful in diadems, upon the Horus-

<sup>a</sup>See also Senmut's reference to his death (§ 368, ll. 7, 8).

<sup>b</sup>Cut into the rock on the road from Assuan to Philæ; text in Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 16, a; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 3, 4, and Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 250, 251; but the best text is revised from a squeeze by Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 81; translation, 38.

<sup>c</sup>The "appearance" (lit., dawning) of a king is his coronation; it is to be construed with "upon, etc.," after the names of the king. As this is the king's first year, the coronation is not an anniversary, but the very first day of the reign.

throne of the living; his father, Re, is his protection, and Amon, lord of Thebes; <sup>3</sup>they smite for him his enemies. Lo, his majesty is in the palace, (¶but<sup>1</sup>) his fame is mighty; the fear of him is in the land, [his] terror in the lands of the Haunebu; <sup>4</sup>the two divisions of Horus and Set<sup>a</sup> are under his charge; the Nine Bows together are beneath his feet. The Asiatics come to him bearing tribute, and the Nubian Troglodytes bearing baskets. His southern boundary is as far as the Horns of the Earth<sup>b</sup> (his) <sup>5</sup>northern as far as the ends; <sup>c</sup>the marshes of Asia<sup>c</sup> are the dominion of his majesty, the arm of his messenger is not repulsed among the lands of the Fe[n]khu.

Announcement of Rebellion

121. One came to inform<sup>d</sup> his majesty as follows: "The wretched Kush <sup>6</sup>has begun to rebel, those who were under the dominion of the Lord of the Two Lands purpose hostility, beginning to smite him. The inhabitants of Egypt are about to bring away the cattle behind this <sup>7</sup>fortress<sup>e</sup> which thy father built in his campaigns, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), living forever,<sup>f</sup> in order to repulse the rebellious barbarians, the Nubian Troglodytes of Khenthennofer, for those who are <sup>8</sup>there on the north of the wretched Kush [— — —]<sup>g</sup> with the two Nubian Troglodytes among the children of the chief of the wretched Kush who [—] before the Lord of the Two Lands <sup>9</sup>— [— — —] 1." His majesty was furious thereat, like a panther, when he <sup>10</sup>heard it. Said his majesty, "I swear,<sup>h</sup> as Re loves me, as my father, lord of gods, Amon, lord of Thebes, favors me, I will not let live anyone among their males [—] <sup>11</sup>among them."

<sup>a</sup>Cf. § 70, l. 2.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. § 101, l. 5; and Index V.

<sup>c</sup>See Index V, s. v.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "to make prosperous the heart of his majesty," which is the conventional form for introducing a matter to a superior in letter-writing.

<sup>e</sup>These are the cattle of Egyptians who have settled in Nubia beyond the frontier military station, and are thus in danger of being pillaged by the rebellious Nubians.

<sup>f</sup>This epithet indicates that Thutmose I is still living.

<sup>g</sup>Sethe: "neigen zum Bündniss?"

<sup>h</sup>Compare the same royal oath in the obelisk inscription of Hatshepsut (§ 318, l. 2, north side) and in the Megiddo campaign of Thutmose III (§ 422, l. 40).

The Campaign

122. Then his majesty dispatched a numerous army into Nubia (T<sup>2</sup>-pd·t) on his first occasion of a campaign, in order to overthrow all those who were rebellious against his majesty or hostile to the Lord of the Two Lands. <sup>12</sup>Then this army of his majesty arrived at wretched Kush [—————].<sup>a</sup> This army <sup>13</sup>of his majesty overthrew those barbarians; they did [not]<sup>b</sup> let live anyone among their males, according to all the command of his majesty, except one of those children of the <sup>14</sup>chief of wretched Kush, who was taken away alive as a living prisoner with their people to<sup>c</sup> his majesty. They were placed under the feet of the Good God; for his majesty had appeared upon his throne when <sup>15</sup>the living prisoners were brought in, which this army of his majesty had captured. This land was made a subject of his majesty as formerly, the people <sup>16</sup>rejoiced, the chiefs were joyful; they gave praise to the Lord of the Two Lands, they lauded this god, excellent in examples of his divinity. It came to pass on account of the fame of his majesty, <sup>17</sup>because his father Amon loved him so much more than any king who has been since the beginning. The King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Okhepernere, Son of Re: Thutmose (II), Beautiful in Diadems, given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE-PEN-NEKHBET<sup>d</sup>

[Concluded from § 85; see also § 344]

IV. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE II

123. The conclusion of the long military career of this officer, at least in so far as he has recorded it, was a campaign of Thutmose II against the Shasu-Bedwin, of which this is our only record. It is probable that this defeat of the Shasu was only an incident in the northward march

<sup>a</sup>Partially broken away.

<sup>b</sup>The negative is broken out in the text, but may certainly be supplied from l. 10.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "to a place under his majesty" = the place where his majesty was.

<sup>d</sup>Bibliography on p. 10, note a.

against Niy (§ 125).<sup>a</sup> This last campaign also brought its reward of valor from the king (§ 24).

Campaign against the Shasu

124. I followed King Okheperner<sup>b</sup> (Thutmose II), triumphant; there were brought off for me in Shasu (Š<sup>2</sup>-sw) very many living prisoners; I did not count them.

[See also § 344]

CAMPAIGN IN SYRIA<sup>c</sup>

125. The great importance of this fragment has been overlooked in all the histories, and was first noticed by Sethe.<sup>d</sup> It records a campaign of Thutmose II in "Retenu, the Upper" and as far probably as Niy.

<sup>1</sup>e[Gifts which were brought to]<sup>e</sup> the fame of the king, Okheperner (Thutmose II)<sup>f</sup> [from his vic]<sup>2</sup>tories ———— <sup>3</sup>elephant[s]<sup>g</sup> ———— <sup>4</sup>horse[s] ———— [Retenu] <sup>5</sup>the Upper ———— [the land] <sup>6</sup>of Niy ———— <sup>7</sup>kings ———— <sup>8</sup>his majesty in ———— <sup>9</sup>[when] he came out of ————.

<sup>a</sup>The reign of Thutmose II was so short that we can hardly suppose that he made more than one campaign into Asia, in addition to his Nubian campaign (§§ 119-22).

<sup>b</sup>Published by Maspero (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 78) as "Thutmose I;" corrected as above, Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 239, n. 1.

<sup>c</sup>Fragment from the Der el-Bahri temple, middle colonnade, toward the right end of the Punt reliefs (§ 272). Only the extreme tops of nine lines are preserved. Text: Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 7; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 17; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 102 and 40. Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 80. Besides this inscription, there is a short building inscription of Thutmose II in the Der el-Bahri temple, giving the usual dedication of a doorway which he erected there (Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, 69, 1).

<sup>d</sup>Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 40.

<sup>e</sup>As the inscription accompanies a relief representing gifts, the beginning is undoubtedly to be restored according to numerous analogies, as Sethe has done, Untersuchungen, I, 40.

<sup>f</sup>In Naville's text the end of the name is lost; hence Naville, not having collated the old publications, is unable to identify the name, but says "it seems to be that of Thothmes I" (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 17). Both Mariette and Dümichen give Thutmose II.

<sup>g</sup>Cf. the elephant hunt in the same region here mentioned, in Amenemhab (ll. 22-25, § 588) under Thutmose III.

THE EBONY SHRINE OF DER EL-BAHRI<sup>a</sup>

126. The left side-panel of an ebony shrine, unearthed by Naville in the temple of Der el-Bahri, contains the following dedication written thrice on the outside. It is in the name of Thutmose I and II, but the feminine pronoun occurs thrice, and the feminine verbal ending four times;<sup>b</sup> hence Hatshepsut was certainly the author of the monument. Moreover, one of Hatshepsut's partisans, Thutiy, states that he made just such an ebony shrine in her time (§ 375, l. 24). It was therefore later usurped by the two Thutmoses, showing that Hatshepsut reigned for a time before them.

127. The Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, lord of offering, lord of diadems, who hath taken the crown of the Two Lands, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okhepernere, Bodily Son of Re, Thutmose (II)<sup>c</sup>; he made (it) as his monument for his<sup>d</sup> father, Amon-Re, making for him an august shrine of ebony of the best of the highlands, that she<sup>e</sup> might live and abide<sup>f</sup> for him<sup>g</sup> like Re, forever.

<sup>a</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, II, xxv-xxix.

<sup>b</sup>The feminine occurs continually in the other inscriptions on the shrine also, as Sethe has shown (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 8, 9).

<sup>c</sup>Right-hand column has Thutmose I!

<sup>d</sup>The column on the edge has "her!"

<sup>e</sup>Naville has not noted this feminine, which occurs in two of the three texts; he offers an impossible masculine in his translation.

<sup>f</sup>"Live" and "abide" are both feminine forms. They are ignored by Naville; Pl. XXVII is very inaccurate in reproducing the alterations evident in the original.

<sup>g</sup>Or: "through him."

REIGN OF THUTMOSE III AND HATSHEPSUT

INTRODUCTION

128. The close of Thutmose I's independent reign was followed by years of conflict and strife among the Thutmosids, in which the parties of Thutmose I (not yet deceased), Thutmose II, Thutmose III, and Hatshepsut were all pushing the claims of their respective candidates for the throne at the same time. As they all succeeded for longer or shorter periods, there is the greatest confusion of royal names on the monuments dating from this period. It seems to the author that Sethe's explanation of the problem is the first correctly to solve the difficulty. It is the first, and thus far the only, scientific study of the problem employing and reckoning with all the materials. Sethe maintains the following propositions:

1. The instigator of the insertion of a royal name over another royal name is the king bearing the inserted name; hence

2. The systematic insertion of the names of Thutmose I and Thutmose II together, over the name of Hatshepsut on buildings erected by her together with Thutmose III, shows that Thutmose I and II reigned for a short time together, after the joint reign of Hatshepsut and Thutmose III had begun.

3. The earliest monuments of Thutmose III show that he at first reigned alone, Hatshepsut being called merely "great king's-wife," until she later became king coregent with him.

129. The real succession on the first fall of Thutmose I was therefore probably thus:

1. Thutmose III reigns for a time alone.

2. Hatshepsut's party forces her upon Thutmose III as coregent.

3. About year 6 of Thutmose III, Thutmose I and II together gain the throne, for a brief coregency, but are not able to suppress Thutmose III, who, on the disappearance (probably death) of Thutmose I, regains the throne, and rules as coregent with Thutmose III, till the latter's death,<sup>a</sup> which followed shortly, about year 8 of Thutmose III's reign (numbered from his first accession).

4. Thutmose III, with Hatshepsut now associated with him permanently, holds the throne, and they rule together at least twelve years more, till the death of the queen, when Thutmose III finally holds undivided possession. He numbered his years from his first accession, ruling at least thirty-four years more, till the year 54.<sup>b</sup>

130. It will be seen that in this readjustment of the reigns practically all of the reign of Thutmose I falls before, and the bulk of Thutmose III's reign after, the period of the family conflict; while the reign of Thutmose II falls in the midst of this period of conflict that lies between. Hence the old numbering of these three kings need not be changed, and for this reason also their inscriptions are taken up in the old order. It should be noted that a number of difficulties

---

<sup>a</sup>Fragments of a statue from the temple of Wazmose at Thebes, as published by Daressy (Annales du service, I, 99) bear the date: year 18 of Thutmose II! In view of Daressy's numerous errors in publishing the short inscription, this is not to be accepted without examination of the original which, according to Borchardt, is stated by Daressy to be missing at Cairo. The date is probably year 18 of Thutmose I.

<sup>b</sup>It is impossible here to discuss the large mass of evidence which favors the above conclusions. Some of it will be found in the following translations. For the rest, the student is referred to Sethe's first treatise (Untersuchungen, I), his discussion with Naville (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 35, 36, and 37), and Breasted, A New Chapter in the Life of Thutmose III (Leipzig, 1900, or Untersuchungen, II). For year 20 of Hatshepsut, see Petrie, Catalogue . . . Sinai, p. 19.

beset any theory of the Thutmosid struggle. The above reconstruction, in view of recent discoveries, is perhaps not to be regarded as finally demonstrated, but it at least deals with and attempts to solve the otherwise insuperable difficulties of the current traditional theory.

---

INSCRIPTION OF THE CORONATION; BUILDINGS AND OFFERINGS<sup>a</sup>

131. This inscription contains historical material of the highest importance, which has been overlooked in all the histories. On the occasion of the completion of one of his numerous additions to the Karnak temple, sometime between the years 15 and 22 (l. 17), Thutmose III held an audience and addressed his court, informing them that he owed his crown to Amon, and that he had shown his gratitude by great buildings and sumptuous offerings (ll. 1-22). The court replied, acknowledging his divine call to the throne (ll. 22-24). All this is now recorded as an intro-

---

<sup>a</sup>In the Karnak temple of Amon, on the exterior of the south wall of the chambers south of the sanctuary; three fragments were first published in 1863 by Brugsch (Recueil de Monuments, I, Pl. XXVI), then entire by Mariette (Karnak, 14-16) in 1875, with lines numbered backward and incorrect arrangement of fragments; then more accurately, but less completely and without the fragments, by de Rougé (Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 165-74) in 1879, with lines numbered correctly; then much better than either, with correct arrangement of fragments, by Brugsch (Thesaurus, 1281-90); finally I published the coronation portion alone, based on the old publications (New Chapter, 6-9). But I have since secured much better materials, especially a careful copy of the original by my friend, Mr. Alan Gardiner, which he kindly placed at my disposal; also, through the kindness of Mr. Newberry, two large photographs made by Dr. Page May; and finally two more, which I owe to the thoughtfulness of Borchardt. These materials add much to the publications, and show that Brugsch made numerous restorations in the lacunae, without indication that the added signs were not found on the original. The inscription is in forty-nine vertical lines, and as the upper courses of masonry have perished, the upper half of all the lines has been lost, except ll. 36-49, where fragments with the tops of these lines have survived, though with lacuna: below them.

duction to a three-fold list of the king's benefactions to the god: first, his buildings (ll. 25–36); second, his offerings of the field, and the herds, besides gifts of lands (ll. 36–41); third, temple utensils and the like (ll. 42–48). A short peroration concludes the record (ll. 48–49).

132. The introductory speech of the king begins with an account of his youth and of how he was named king. In the course of these reminiscences, the king in one phrase only (l. 3) compares himself to the youthful Horus in the Delta marshes. This very common comparison of the king with Horus<sup>a</sup> in the Delta, together with the following context,<sup>b</sup> was misunderstood by Brugsch as literal.<sup>c</sup> This error was exposed by Maspero<sup>d</sup> in 1880, and since then the inscription was left for twenty years untouched, as if its significance and content had been finally settled. This conclusion, however, is hardly to be justified if we notice that the inscription as used in all the histories now current, is translated backward!<sup>e</sup>

133. Translating the king's speech in the proper direction, it becomes coherent in spite of the loss of the first half of each line, and tells a remarkable story. The king states, with protestations of his truthfulness, that he was a lad in the temple of Amon, before he had received his appointment as priest (hn-ntr, "prophet,"<sup>f</sup> l. 2); and that he later

<sup>a</sup>See, for example, the identical statement with reference to Amenmeses, 111, 642, note (Lepsius, Denkmaler, 111, 201, c).

<sup>b</sup>It was the following context which misled Brugsch, for he remarks that such comparisons were an "oft wiederkehrende Redensart junger Konige" (365).

<sup>c</sup>Geschichte, 365, and 288, 289; for the same error recently repeated, see Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1904, 37.

<sup>d</sup>Revue critique, 1880, I, 107, n. 1; and Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 133.

<sup>e</sup>Brugsch, the entire inscription, beginning with the last line, and ending with the first. As far back as 1879 the publication of the admirable de Rougé had added the proper numbering to the lines; Brugsch has it in his Thesaurus (1891).

<sup>f</sup>Of course, this appointment must have followed later.

occupied the priestly office of “Pillar of his Mother” (l. 3). On the occasion of a great feast the young priest was stationed by the god in the northern hypostyle (l. 3). The splendid procession of the god appeared (l. 4), with the then king (who is unfortunately not named) offering incense and conducting the ceremonies (l. 5). The procession passed around the hall where the young priest was, while the god” sought for him (l. 6). As he stopped before the young priest the latter fell down before him in adoration, but was raised up and placed before the god (l. 7).

134. Then followed the oracle<sup>b</sup> of the god, proclaiming him king; it is unfortunately lost in the lacuna, but immediately following is a reference to the “secrets in the hearts of the gods” now revealed, namely, their intention to make him king (l. 8).<sup>c</sup> At this juncture in their coronation by the gods, Hatshepsut and Amenhotep III proceed to Heliopolis to be crowned by the sun-god, as was the immemorial custom (cf. §§ 221 ff.). But the young priest, Thutmose, is more highly favored; for him the gates of heaven are opened, he flies thither to be received by the sun-god (l. 9), who then crowned him (ll. 10, 11), and fixed his four royal names<sup>d</sup> (in addition to the fifth, Thutmose, which he already bore), in accordance with divinely conferred qualities (ll. 12–14). Thus he is installed in the kingship, and his authority established at home and abroad (ll. 15, 16), in

<sup>a</sup>Or possibly the then king.

<sup>b</sup>This oracle is referred to by the court in their reply (l. 23), and by Thutmose III himself in his inscription of year 23 at Halfa: “He (the god) hath assigned to him his inheritance as a body which he begat; he uttered an oracle concerning him (nd: j r > hr: f) that his coronation might be established for him (as) king upon the Horus-throne of the living” (ll. 3, 4, from a photograph by Steindorff).

Compare the designation of Hatshepsut and Amenhotep III as king by the gods before their coronation (§ 231).

<sup>d</sup>Harmhab's names are declared at his divine coronation at precisely the same juncture (ll. 29, l. 19).

order that he may offer the wealth of the earth to Amon (ll. 16, 17), erect him buildings, and present him offerings like the present ones (ll. 17–22).

135. This remarkable narrative, under a cloak of alleged divine interposition, like that in the life of Harmhab (111, 22 ff.), records the elevation of Thutmose III from a position of humble rank in the priesthood of the Karnak temple of Amon to the throne of Egypt. This is unquestionable fact. The only difference between this elevation of Thutmose III and that of Harmhab is that Harmhab reached it after a long official career, culminating in great political power, while Thutmose III rose to it directly from his priestly rank in the temple. Any attempt to explain this is to pass distinctly from fact to theory. Suppose that Thutmose III was the oldest son of Thutmose I, born before the latter's accession; his mother being, as we know, a lady not of royal blood, named Iṣiṣ. This would explain why we find him as a priest in the Amon temple. When his father, Thutmose I, after marrying the royal princess Ahmose, gained the throne, and Hatshepsut, his daughter by her, grew up, she (Hatshepsut) was given in marriage to the king's eldest son, still a priest in the temple. Thus was the young priest immediately invested with a future claim upon the throne—a claim which a young man of the ability which we know he possessed, would surely make effective. Queen Ahmose dies, and with her perishes Thutmose I's right to the throne. The young priest immediately claims his right to reign, through his wife, precisely as his father, Thutmose I, had done.<sup>a</sup> And now we pass from theory to fact again.

---

<sup>a</sup>Harmhab also gained his right to the throne through his wife, a royal princess, who is referred to in his coronation inscription (111, 28, l. 15).

136. On the occasion of a great feast, when the god appears in procession, the future Thutmose III has all arranged so that the god shall stop before him as he stands in his place among the ranks of priests in the colonnaded hall, and shall indicate him as the future king. The plan is carried out successfully, and a superb stroke of imagination adds also the visit to the celestial realm there to be crowned and 'named by Re, the sun-god himself. Thus Thutmose III succeeded his father; and of his wife, the royal heiress, Hatshepsut, in whose right he ruled, we hear not a word in the whole transaction.<sup>a</sup> The later buildings and gifts are also all in his own name.

137. The inscription refers to offerings of the fifteenth year; it is important to note that already at this time, between this date and the beginning of his great campaigns (year 22), Thutmose III possessed forest domains in Syria (l. 34), from which he drew cedar for his temple doors. He was also receiving captives and the children of native princes from Syria at this time. These facts indicate that he was still holding his father's conquests, at least as far north as Lebanon;<sup>b</sup> and it was to suppress a widespread and persistent revolt that he began his campaigns in Syria at the close of the year 22.<sup>c</sup>

Birth and Youth of Thutmose III

138. I ————<sup>d</sup> my — is he; I am his<sup>e</sup> son, whom he commanded that I should be upon his throne, while I was one dwelling in his

<sup>a</sup>This coincides with Sethe's conclusion that Thutmose III succeeded Thutmose I for a time alone, before the legitimists forced Hatshepsut upon him as coregent.

<sup>b</sup>Where his forest domains of cedar must have been located.

<sup>c</sup>For a full exposition of the historical and other data in this remarkable inscription, see the author's A New Chapter in the Life of Thutmose III (in Sethe's Untersuchungen), Hinrichs, Leipzig, 1900.

<sup>d</sup>The king in the relief is represented enthroned at the left, holding audience. There is little doubt that l. 1 began "year x, month x, day x, occurred the sitting (hpr hms't)", as, e. g., at Der el-Bahri (§ 292). The audience now begins with a speech from the throne.

<sup>e</sup>The god's; see "his temple" (l. 2).

nest;<sup>a</sup> he begat me in uprightness of heart <sup>2</sup>———— there is no lie therein; since my majesty was a stripling, while I was a youth in his temple, before occurred my installation to be prophet <sup>3</sup>———— my majesty. I was in the capacity<sup>b</sup> of the “Pillar of his Mother,”<sup>c</sup> like the youth Horus in Khemmis. I was standing in the northern hypostyle<sup>d</sup> <sup>4</sup>————,

The Feast

139. ————— the splendors of his horizon.<sup>e</sup> He made festive heaven and earth with his beauty; he received the great marvels;<sup>f</sup> his rays were in the eyes of the people like the “Coming forth of Harakhte.” The people, they gave to him <sup>5</sup>[praise] ————— the <sup>1</sup>altar of his temple. His majesty placed for him incense upon the fire, and offered to him a great oblation consisting of oxen, calves, mountain goats, <sup>6</sup>—————

Search and Discovery

140. ————— [the god]<sup>g</sup> made the circuit of the hypostyle<sup>h</sup> on both sides<sup>i</sup> of it, the heart of those who were in front did not comprehend his actions, while searching for my majesty in every place. On recognizing me, lo, he halted <sup>7</sup>————— [I threw myself on] the pave-

<sup>a</sup>A common figure for the young king, conceived as the young Horus-hawk; see § 116.

<sup>b</sup>Or: “rôte.”

<sup>c</sup>A title of the god Horus, and then of a priest; (see New Chapter, 12 and 30) as it was an office which could be held by a high priest (ibid., 30), this indicates promotion of Prince Thutmose from the rank of “prophet.”

<sup>d</sup>This is the northern half of the colonnaded hall built by Thutmose I in the ~~Karnak~~ temple between his two Pylons (IV and V, see § 99 and my New Chapter, 12–14, 30, 31). As it was later dismantled by Hatshepsut for the erection of her obelisks in it, we have here also a terminus ad quem for the date of Thutmose III’s coup d’état. On the later history of the hall, see §§ 600, 601, and 803 ff.

<sup>e</sup>A common poetic designation for the temple of a god; to or from the temple at this juncture the sacred procession is moving, as the following three sentences show. In the lacuna opening the next line, he reaches “his temple,” these being the first words of the line which are preserved.

<sup>f</sup>Doubtless the things offered to him.

<sup>g</sup>Or the procession.

<sup>h</sup>Where Prince Thutmose has already been stationed by the god (l. 3).

<sup>i</sup>Meaning the colonnades on either side of the central aisle; Prince Thutmose is standing in the left, or “northern,” colonnade.

ment, I prostrated myself in his presence. He set me before his majesty;<sup>a</sup> I was stationed at the "Station of the King."<sup>b</sup> He was astonished at me<sup>8</sup>——— without untruth. Then they [revealed]<sup>1</sup> before the people the secrets in the hearts of the gods, who know these his —; there was none who knew them, there was none who revealed them<sup>9</sup> [beside him].

Ascent to Heaven

141. [He opened<sup>1</sup> for] me the doors of heaven; he opened the portals of the horizon of Re. I flew to heaven<sup>c</sup> as a divine hawk, beholding<sup>d</sup> his form in heaven; I adored his majesty<sup>10</sup>——— feast. I saw the glorious forms of the Horizon-God upon his mysterious ways in heaven.

Coronation in Heaven

142. Re himself established me, I was dignified with the diadems which [we]re upon his head, his serpent-diadem, rested upon "[my forehead] —— [he satisfied] me with all his glories; I was sated with the counsels<sup>e</sup> of the gods, like Horus, when he counted his body at the house of my father, Amon-Re. I was [present]<sup>1</sup>ed with the dignities of a god, with<sup>12</sup>——— my diadems.

Fixing Titulary<sup>f</sup>

143. His own titulary was affixed for me.

<sup>a</sup>Probably "his majesty"—"himself;" viz., he raised me up and set me before himself.

<sup>b</sup>The "Station of the King" is the place in the holy of holies where the king stood in the performance of the prescribed state ritual. One is known in Amâda, in Elephantine, in Thebes (temple of Memnon colossi), and, as above, at Karnak. (See Spiegelberg, Recueil, XX, 50, and my New Chepter, 16, 17.) I have since found another at Memphis (111, 532). The placing of Prince Thutmose at this official "Station of the King" is a public recognition of him as king.

<sup>c</sup>The usual meaning of this phrase applied to a king is that he died, but this is clearly not its meaning here, where the king on the throne uses the phrase himself in addressing his courtiers.

<sup>d</sup>So Brugsch, but Gardiner and photographshave only a lacuna for "beholding."

<sup>e</sup>𓄏𓄚𓄚𓄚," see Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 24, 83–85; it occurs also in Harmhab's coronation, ll. 3 and 11.

<sup>f</sup>Compare the fixing of the titulary by the gods in the coronation of Hatshepsut and that of Amenhotep III (§§ 230, 239).

First Name

He fixed my Horus upon the standard;<sup>a</sup> he made me mighty as a mighty bull. He caused that I should shine in the midst of Thebes <sup>13</sup>[in this my name, Horus: “Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes”].<sup>b</sup>

Second Name

144. [He made my kingship enduring, like Re in heaven, in]<sup>c</sup> this my [name], Favorite of the Two Goddesses: “Enduring in Kingship, like Re in Heaven.”

Third Name

145. He formed me as a Horus-hawk of gold, he gave to me his might and his strength and I was splendid with these his diadems, in this my name, <sup>14</sup>[Golden Horus: “Mighty in Strength, Splendid in Diadems”].

Fourth Name

146. ——— [in this my name], King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands: “Menkheperre” (the being of Re abides).

Fifth Name

147. I am his' son who came forth from him, a likeness fashioned like the presider over Hesret;<sup>d</sup> he beautified all my forms, in this my name, Son of Re: “Thutmose, Beautiful of Form,” living forever and ever.

Recognition of His Authority

148. <sup>15</sup>——— my —; he caused that [the princes of] all [coun]-tries [should come], doing obeisance because of<sup>e</sup> the fame of my majesty; my terror was in the hearts of the Nine Bows; all lands were under my sandals. He gave victory by my arms, in order to widen <sup>16</sup>[the boundaries of Egypt] ——— because — so much — — — him. He <sup>c</sup>This restoration is not literally certain, but something similar must have occupied the lacuna.

<sup>a</sup>This is the Horus-hawk which surmounts the so-called standard or banner (really the façade of a building) containing the Horus-name of the king.

<sup>b</sup>Restored from the name of the king, as it occurs elsewhere.

<sup>d</sup>That is, Thoth, with whose name “Thutmose” (or Thothmose) is compounded.

<sup>e</sup>Or: “to.”

rejoiced in me, more than (in) any king who had been in the earth since it was loosened.<sup>a</sup>

Purpose of His Choice

149. I am his son, beloved of his majesty, whom his double desires <sup>f</sup>to cause<sup>1</sup> that I should present this land at the place, where he is. I cause to encompass <sup>17</sup>———— which he established, to make a monument abiding in Karnak. I requited his beauty with something greater than it by magnifying him more than the gods. The recompense of him who does excellent things is a reward for him of things more excellent than they. I have built his house as an eternal work. <sup>18</sup>———— my [<sup>f</sup>father] caused that I should be divine, that I might extend the throne of him who made me; that I might supply with food his altars upon earth; that I might make to flourish for him the sacred slaughtering-block with great slaughters in his temple, consisting of oxen and calves without limit. <sup>19</sup>———— descending <sup>f</sup>for<sup>3</sup> things, of those which were paid anew, — the dues therefor. I filled for him his granaries with barley and spelt without limit. I increased for him the divine offerings, I gave to him increase, <sup>20</sup>———— for this temple of my father Amon, at all feasts; <sup>b</sup>of the sixth day (of the month)<sup>b</sup> satisfied with that which he desired should be. I know that it is forever; that Thebes is eternal. Amon, Lord of Karnak, Re of Heliopolis of the South (Hermonthis), his gloriouseye which is in this land <sup>21</sup>————.

Erection of This Monument

150. I made my monument, I recorded my commands at the stairway of the lord of Karnak, of the fashioner of all that is or exists. Everything shall remain forever, that is therein <sup>f</sup>———— 1 22 ————— a libation, together with the things of his gods, when the god is satisfied with his things. The monument is a work in the temple for a memorial of my beauty in his house, and I shall endure in the mouth<sup>c</sup> forever.

---

<sup>a</sup>That is, loosened (w<sup>h</sup> c) and separated from the heavens at the beginning, as in the Pyramid Texts.

<sup>b</sup>So Brugsch; it is not now visible on the wall.

<sup>c</sup>Of the people.

Reply of the Court

151. These companions, they said: <sup>23</sup>“——— this [word] which has been spoken to us; which we have heard in the court, L. P. H. May thy nostrils be rejuvenated with satisfying life; may thy majesty endure upon the great throne. The oracle of the god himself,<sup>a</sup> is like the word of Re at the first beginning. Thoth is he who makes the writing speak,<sup>b</sup> <sup>24</sup>——— rejoicing. His kingship is assigned to thee; established is thy coronation upon the Horus-throne, and recorded are thy annals as King of Upper and Lower Egypt. He has united for thee the Two Lands in peace, all countries in subjection.”

A New Chapel<sup>c</sup>

152. <sup>25</sup>——— anew, together with a “Divine Abode,” a monument of fine white sandstone. The king himself performed with his two hands the stretching of the cord and the extension of the line, putting (it) upon the ground, and furnishing on this monument the exaction of work, according to the command of <sup>26</sup>——— enduring work of their hands.

A Holy of Holies

153. Behold, my majesty erected for him an august Holy of Holies: the favorite place of Amon (named): “His-Great-Seat-is-Like-the-Horizon-of-Heaven,” of sandstone of the Red Mountain.<sup>e</sup> Its interior was wrought with electrum <sup>27</sup>———

Three Portals

154. I [erected] the first portal, (named:) “Menkheperre-is-Splendid-in-the-Opulence-of-Amon;” the second portal, (named:) “Menkhe-

<sup>a</sup>Evidently a reference to the oracle which decreed Thutmose III king. Compare the “oracle of the god himself” in the Punt reliefs (§ 285, l. 5).

<sup>b</sup>See Papyrus Ebers, I, 8.

<sup>c</sup>Here the audience of the court seems to have been concluded, and the list of buildings and offerings begins.

<sup>d</sup>The form of the determinative is like the shrine of Saft-el-Henneh.

<sup>e</sup>Near Cairo (cf. Baedeker’s Egypt, 1902, 77; wrongly stated to be near Syene in Egypt under the Pharaohs, 176), about two miles east of the city. It yields a reddish, sandy conglomerate called “gritstone.” This passage shows the elastic character of the word rendered “sandstone” (rwḏ:t); it indicated only gritty, hard stone, and usually sandstone. See also Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 478, n. 1.

perre-is-Abiding-in-Favor-with-Amon;" [the third<sup>a</sup> portal, (named:) "Menkheperre,]<sup>b</sup>is-the-Great-One-of-the-Souls-of-Amon ;" wrought with real electrum, through which Mat<sup>c</sup> enters for him <sup>28</sup> making festive the monument. He rejoiced in his praise, he did that which he desired, he united his (sic) majesty with satisfying life, and joy of heart forever.

Pylon VI

155. My majesty [erect]ed an august pylon<sup>d</sup> of the interior in front of <sup>29</sup>[the holy of holies] — — I erected for him a great door, fashioned of new cedar, wrought with gold, mounted with real black copper, — with copper. The great name upon it was of electrum, doubly [refined<sup>1</sup>] gold and black copper <sup>30</sup> the [—<sup>1</sup>] thereof were of doubly [refined<sup>1</sup>] gold made in the likeness of the horizon of heaven. It was more beautiful than [[anything]] that has (ever) been.

My majesty further made for him these three portals<sup>e</sup> <sup>31</sup>

Shrines and Statues

156. — the northern —; shrines of stone, (with) doors of new cedar thereto; <sup>f</sup>the statues of [my majesty] belonging thereto, and the statues<sup>g</sup> of my fathers, the kings <sup>32</sup>[of Egypt who were before me].

<sup>a</sup>Mariette found six gates bearing the name of Thutmose III in Karnak; but of the three above named he could only find the last (see Mariette, Karnak, Textes, 58, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1311, 1312, 1315. The first was found by Legrain in 1901 (Annales du service, 11, 227); the second has never been found.

<sup>b</sup>Inserted by Brugsch, but no longer visible on original.

<sup>c</sup>Goddess of truth.

<sup>d</sup>This pylon of the interior is, of course, the pylon (VI) of Thutmose III, behind the two pylons (IV and V) of his father, Thutmose I, and just in front of the holy of holies. The back of this pylon is occupied by the conclusion of the Annals and the record of feasts and offerings (§§ 541 ff.), and the front by Nubian lists.

<sup>e</sup>Apparently a further reference to the three portals mentioned before (§ 154).

<sup>f</sup>So Brugsch, but it is probably one of his tacit restorations, as there is no trace of it on the wall.

<sup>g</sup>These statues were those of his ancestors mentioned in the list in one of the rear chambers of the Karnak temple and now in Paris (see §§ 604 f.).

A Restoration<sup>a</sup>

157. ——— [for] my father Amon-Re in Karnak, by making for him a monument anew, — upon — the ancestors, by beautifying for him his temple which built<sup>b</sup> for him <sup>33</sup>[my majesty] ———. Behold, my majesty found this (made) of brick,<sup>c</sup> very ruinous, of the work of the ancestors. My majesty himself wrought with his two hands, at the feast of “Stretching-the-Cord,” upon this monument <sup>34</sup>——— Its beautiful name which my majesty made was: “Menkheperre-(Thutmose-111)-Adored-of-the-People-is-Great-in-the-Strength-of-Amon.” Its great door was of cedar of the royal domain: wrought with [copper; the great name upon it]<sup>e</sup> was of electrum. <sup>35</sup>———

Conclusion of Buildings

158. He [‘did’] more than any king who has been since the beginning. There was none beyond his majesty in knowledge of everything in every handicraft, exacting<sup>f</sup> — — — —<sup>36</sup> — — — —<sup>f</sup> when there was an “Appearance”<sup>g</sup> at ——— of very great monuments, excellent in work according to the desire of his majesty concerning them, because he so much loved his father Amon [‘lord of Thebes’].

---

<sup>a</sup>It is impossible to identify this structure, but it must have been a considerable building, as a special ceremony of laying out the plan was held. It may have been the chambers attributed to Hatshepsut, on the south wall of which the inscription stands. As this is the last building in the list, its conclusion or dedication is doubtless the occasion of the audience of the court and the introductory speech of the king.

<sup>b</sup>Egyptian order preserved, to indicate division of lines.

<sup>c</sup>In contrast with his restoration of it in stone (which here falls into the following lacuna); cf. Thutmose III’s Ptah-temple at Karnak, which bears the inscription: “His majesty found this temple of brick — — he made this temple of sandstone” (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1188).

<sup>d</sup>This domain must have been in Syria, for cedar did not grow in Egypt. This indicates that Thutmose III maintained his authority there before the beginning of his great campaigns (see my New Chapter, 28, 29).

<sup>e</sup>So Brugsch; evidently another tacit restoration.

<sup>f</sup>At this point begins a part of the lost upper portions of the lines, preserved on two blocks at the top of the wall. They have been set on wrong by Mariette, and should be shifted two lines to the right. From here to the end, the average loss is from one-quarter to one-half line.

<sup>g</sup>Of the god, in procession.

New Offerings

159. The king himself commanded to make divine offerings, <sup>37</sup>anew for his father Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, ——— 30 jars of —, 100 bundles of vegetables, 3 (hbn·t-) jars of wine, (ht·c·) fowl, fruit, white loaves, <sup>a</sup>1 nd<sup>2</sup> of (<sup>2</sup>h-) herb and 1 nd<sup>2</sup> of dates.<sup>a</sup>

Live Offerings

160. My majesty furthermore commanded <sup>38</sup>to present an offering, consisting of oxen, calves, of bulls, of gazelles, ———

Vegetable Garden and Lands

161. My majesty made for him a garden anew, in order to present to him vegetables and all beautiful flowers. My majesty furthermore gave lands, <sup>39</sup>2800 stat<sup>b</sup> to be fields of divine offerings; many lands in South and North, —<sup>c</sup> [stat].

Foreign Slaves

162. ——— supplied with people. I filled it with [captives] from the south and north countries, being children <sup>40</sup>[of] the chiefs of Retenu<sup>d</sup> and children [of the chiefs] of Khenthennofer, according as my father [Amon] commanded ——— milk therein, each day for these vessels<sup>e</sup> (m[hr]w) of silver, gold, and bronze, which my majesty made for him <sup>41</sup>anew.

Another New Offering

163. Year 15, first (month) of the third season, day 27; my majesty commanded to found a great divine offering anew ——— [in the year]<sup>f</sup> for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of my majesty, in order that the altars of my father Amon may be supplied for all eternity.

<sup>a</sup>See same two items together in feasts and offerings (§ 571, l. 30, and note).

<sup>b</sup>See Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 412.

<sup>c</sup>Numeral is lost.

<sup>d</sup>See New Chapter, 28.

<sup>e</sup>They are mentioned from l. 42 on, § 164.

<sup>f</sup>So Brugsch, but there is now no trace of it.

Small Monuments,<sup>a</sup> Utensils, Etc.

164.<sup>42</sup>My majesty furthermore presented to him [very many]<sup>b</sup> monuments: a great vase (hs·t) of electrum, of 7 cubits<sup>c</sup> ——— of silver, gold, bronze, and copper, they shone over the (sacred) lake; the Two Lands were flooded with their brightness,<sup>43</sup>like the stars in the body of Nut, while my statue followed. Offering-tables of electrum of ——— real —, which my majesty exacted anew. I made it for him out of the conceptions of my heart,<sup>d</sup> by the guidance of the god himself,<sup>44</sup>being the work of the hands of “Him-Who-is-South-of-His-Wall.”<sup>e</sup> Never was made the like in this land since the time of the an[cestors] ——— beyond everything! My majesty furthermore presented to him 2 great (hbn·t) jars, as the first of this great oblation,<sup>45</sup>which my majesty founded anew, for my father Amon, lord of Thebes, ——— at all his feasts forever. My majesty furthermore [made] many †chambers<sup>f</sup> wrought with electrum and black copper,<sup>g</sup> erecting an †enclosure<sup>1</sup>, a seat<sup>46</sup> ———

A Harp, Etc.

165. [My majesty made]<sup>h</sup> a splendid harp wrought with silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, and every splendid costly stone,<sup>47</sup>for the praise of the beauty of his majesty’ at his appearances in the names ——— gold, bronze, and every costly stone, a hall as in the beginning; (mnh·t) linen, made anew, supplied with all that belongs thereto;<sup>48</sup>two chambers (yswy) containing splendid ointment for [†my father Amon] ——— [†which] I [†exact]ed for it.

Conclusion

166. My majesty did this for my father Amon, †lord [of Thebes], as recompense for the permanence of<sup>49</sup>the statues of my majesty which are in [this] temple ——— the limbs, as an everlasting work, to make his voyage therein, at his great feasts of the New Year.

<sup>a</sup>The Egyptian uses the word “monument” also for smaller works, vessels, utensils, etc., of which a list begins here.

<sup>b</sup>So Brugsch, but Gardiner has the mh-sign and a lacuna.

<sup>c</sup>If this refers to the height, as seems certain, it was of the astonishing height of twelve feet!

<sup>d</sup>The same phrase (km ʔ-n-yb) occurs in Papyrus Harris (IV, 308, l. 4).

<sup>e</sup>An epithet of Ptah, patron of handicrafts. <sup>f</sup>Sbh·t.

<sup>g</sup>See Building Inscription of Amenhotep III, ll. 3, 11, and 22 (§§ 883, 886, and 889).

<sup>h</sup>So Brugsch; no trace on original. <sup>i</sup>The god.

SEMNEH TEMPLE INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

167. The temple of Semneh was rebuilt of stone from the ground up, by Thutmose III, with the pious intention of restoring the brick sanctuary of his great ancestor (at least officially so), Sesostris III, in whose fortress of Semneh the temple stands. Of Sesostris III's original temple nothing has ever been found, unless the "Second Semneh Tablet" (I, 653-60) was a part of it. This tablet Thutmose III piously set up in the wall of his new temple; and also had recorded on the new walls the old list of feasts and offerings which he found among the inscriptions of Sesostris III. More than this the old temple was sacred to Khnum and Dedun; but Thutmose III adds to them Sesostris III, now apotheosized as the hero who conquered Nubia<sup>b</sup> (see I, 640 ff.). There is here a noble regard for the greatest king of the Middle Kingdom, which contrasts very strikingly with the shameful desecration of which the Nineteenth Dynasty was guilty.

Thutmose III completed his new temple early in his second year, and the original sculptures show not a trace of Queen Hatshepsut's regnancy.<sup>c</sup>

I. RENEWAL OF SESOSTRIS III'S LIST OF OFFERINGS-

Scenes

168. On the right Sesostris III is enthroned under a baldachin. Before him at the extreme left stands Thutmose III.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 111, 47, a-56, b; Young, Hieroglyphics, 91-95. Steindorff's collation of Lepsius with the original shows that the latter's plates are very accurate.

<sup>b</sup>This apotheosis of Sesostris III doubtless took place earlier than this, but we have no earlier evidence.

<sup>c</sup>On later traces of her in the reliefs, see Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 59-63, and Pls. VI-X.

<sup>d</sup>On the east wall, outside (Lepsius, Denkmäler, 111, 55, a-b).

Inscription

169. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, second month of the <sup>2</sup>third season (tenth month), day 7 under the majesty of . . . . .<sup>a</sup> <sup>2</sup>Thutmose (111), given life.

Decree of Renewal

170. That which was spoken by<sup>b</sup> the majesty of the Court, L. P. H., to the wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, king's-son, governor of the southern countries —<sup>c</sup>: <sup>3</sup>“Cause that there be engraved the divine offerings, which the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering, Khekure (Sesostris III)<sup>d</sup> . . . . . made — — — <sup>4</sup>in the temple of his father Dedun, presider over Nubia, the avenging son; that he might do excellent things for his fathers who begat him; and the festal offerings, that This name might be mentioned in the house of<sup>e</sup> his father] <sup>5</sup>Khnum, binder of the (Nine) Bows, smiter of the Shasu (ššꜣw); while the king, Khekure (Sesostris III) was among the living, while he lived — — — <sup>6</sup>the gods; causing that there be offered divine offerings to the gods and the mortuary offering to the dead by his majesty. Divine offerings were made anew — — — <sup>7</sup>in the house of his father Dedun, that his name might be mentioned in the house of his father Khnum, binder of the (Nine) Bows, smiter of the Shasu.

Sesostris III's List

171. There shall be given: southern grain and spelt<sup>f</sup> for them, and the water of Wawat — — — — <sup>8</sup>for his father Dedun, presider over Nubia, a festal offering of the beginning of the seasons: of southern grain, 15 heket; <sup>9</sup>for his father Dedun, presider over Nubia: of southern grain, 645 heket; of spelt, 20; — — — — [for his father], <sup>10</sup>Khnum, binder of the (Nine) Bows: a festal offering of the beginning of the seasons: southern grain, 50 heket; southern grain, 425 heket; <sup>11</sup>of spelt, 20; each year for his father Khnum, binder of the (Nine) Bows: a bull of the herd for the New Year (wꜣ-rꜣꜣꜣꜣ); for his father

<sup>a</sup>Full titulary.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., “from” (m).

<sup>c</sup>The name of the official is lost, but it is almost certainly the viceroy of Kush, who was appointed by Thutmose I (§§ 61 ff.), whose name was probably Thure.

<sup>d</sup>His Horns-name follows.

<sup>e</sup>Restored after I 7.

<sup>f</sup>See Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 430).

<sup>g</sup>The offerings are separated by a semicolon.

Dedun: a bull — — — — <sup>10</sup>a bull of the herd for the feast, (named:) “Repulse-of-the-Troglodytes,”<sup>a</sup> which occurs in the fourth month of the second season, on the twenty-first day, <sup>b</sup>a festal offering of the beginning of the seasons;<sup>b</sup> southern grain, 50 heket; southern grain, 202<sup>c</sup> heket; of spelt, 15; each year at (the feast) “Repulse-of-the-Troglodytes:” royal linen, 8 — — — — [for] <sup>11</sup>the feast, which occurs in the first of the third season<sup>d</sup> (ninth month): a bull of the herd; for his father Khnum, binder of the (Nine) Bows, smiter of the Shasu: southern grain, 26 heket; each year for the king’s-wife: ———, <sup>12</sup>southern grain, 26 heket; each year for the great king’s-wife, Merseger (Mr-sgr), at (the feast) “Binding-of-the-Barbarians:”<sup>e</sup> southern grain, 135 heket; of spelt, 10; each year for the king, Khekure (Sesostris 111): ———

172. <sup>13</sup>His majesty enjoined them upon the chiefs, and governors of the fortresses of Elephantine of the South, as dues of each year to abide and to endure: ———

11. DEDICATION TO DEDUN AND SESOSTRIS III

Scene<sup>f</sup>

173. Sacred barque, containing a shrine with statue of Sesostris III; behind this Thutmose III and Dedun standing, the god embracing the king.

Words of Dedun

174. My beloved son, Menkheperre, how beautiful is this beautiful monument, which thou hast made for my beloved son, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris 111). Thou hast perpetuated his name forever, that thou mayest live.

<sup>a</sup>See I, 654.

<sup>b</sup>The season feast and the feast of victory seem to have fallen together.

<sup>c</sup>There is a small lacuna after the units; the number is probably 205.

<sup>d</sup>Probably Thutmose III’s coronation feast, which occurred on the fourth of this month.

<sup>e</sup>There is no doubt that this is another feast introduced by r, “at,” as in I. 10.

<sup>f</sup>Inside, on the west wall (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 48, b-49, e). There is a similar scene on the newer portion of the same wall, farther north.

175. On the opposite wall in a similar scene<sup>a</sup> Dedun adds :

Thou hast renewed his birth<sup>b</sup> a second time in a monument in memoriam.<sup>c</sup> Thou hast presented to him many offering-tables of silver and gold, bronze, and Asiatic copper. The reward thereof for thee is satisfying life, like Re, forever.

176. The dedication inscription in full is as follows:<sup>d</sup>

<sup>1</sup>The Good God, Menkheperre (Thutmose 111). He made (it) as his monument for his father Dedun, presider over Nubia (T<sup>2</sup>-p<sup>d</sup>·t), and for the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Khekure (Sesostris 111); making for them a temple <sup>2</sup>of fine white stone of Nubia (T<sup>2</sup>-p<sup>d</sup>·t) although my majesty found (it) of ruinous brick; as a son does, <sup>1</sup>according to<sup>1</sup> the desire which his father desired, <sup>3</sup>who assigned to him the Two Regions, who brought him up to be Horus, lord of this land. I have set it in my divine heart that I should make his monument; that I should make him mighty according as he gave <sup>4</sup>—; that I should perpetuate his house forever, according as he has become greater than any god. He hath given to me all life, stability and satisfaction like Re, forever.

---

BIOGRAPHY OF NEBWAWI

177. This official enjoyed a long career, beginning early in the reign of Thutmose III and continuing under Amenhotep II. The narrative of his career was evidently distributed upon a number of monuments,<sup>e</sup> some of which are lost, so that we now possess only the story of his earliest and latest years, the former on a statue, the latter on a stela, both of which were gifts from the king.

---

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 111, 50, b.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "repeated birth for him."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "a monument of putting the heart," that is, of putting in mind, reminding. Compare Hebrew, לֵב לֵב.

<sup>d</sup>On the outside of the west wall; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 52, b; see also Young, Hieroglyphics, 93.

<sup>e</sup>Perhaps four (see Spiegelberg, Recueil, XIX, 99).

I. THE STATUE INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

178. This text narrates the career of Nebwawi during the first nine years of Thutmose III; during which he rises to be High Priest of Osiris at Abydos. It is significant that Hatshepsut is not referred to until the ninth year, and even then not by name.

At this point the narrative is abruptly concluded, as if to be continued on another monument.

Introduction

179. <sup>1</sup>Given as a favor of the king, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose 111), living forever, to the High Priest of Osiris, Nebwawi (Nb-w<sup>c</sup>wy). He saith: "I was a servant, useful to his lord, zealously serving<sup>b</sup> him who favored him.

First Period

180. I filled the first office in the house of my father, Osiris; I was made chief in the — of the temple. A royal command came before me every day ———<sup>c</sup> in the secret of the lord of Abydos. I ———<sup>c</sup> This period was until the year 13<sup>1,d</sup> My lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose 111), praised me for it.

Second Period

181. I was appointed to be High Priest of my father Osiris; every office of this house was placed under the authority of the king's-servant. Another time it was commanded me, that I should go, to <sup>e</sup>bring forth in procession<sup>e</sup> his father, Harendotes, in the house of Min, lord of <sup>a</sup>On a statue in the hands of a native dealer in Luxor; seen and copied by Spiegelberg and published, Recueil, XIX, 97, 98; thence by Révillout, Revue égyptologique, VIII, 132. Unfortunately, the dealer allowed Spiegelberg only a few moments to copy it, and he was unable to secure a reliable text. See the translation and full discussion by Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 71 ff.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "pressing (i.e., following) the way of, etc."

<sup>c</sup>An entire line is lost; its length is not given as published.

<sup>d</sup>It is almost certain that Spiegelberg's 10 is to be read 2; giving 3.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "to cause to dawn."

Panopolis, at all his feasts in Panopolis, I being there as chief of the prophets and all the workmen of the entire temple. This period was until the year 6. It was the occasion — — — — in the Thinite nome. The majesty of my lord praised me.

Third Period

182. I was appointed to be chief in the — — of his father, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nebpehtire (Ahmose I); his treasuries were upon my seals; I came forth therefrom, safe and prosperous, until the year 9.

183. I conducted the work on the ship.<sup>a</sup> I repulsed him that rebelled against her majesty<sup>b</sup> (fern.).

11. ABYDOS STELA<sup>c</sup>

184. This monument takes up the life of Nebwawi after a long interruption at the close of Thutmose III's reign, after the coregency of Amenhotep II had begun, for it carries the narrative into the reign of Amenhotep 11, although the monument is a gift of Thutmose III.<sup>d</sup> This conclusion is corroborated by the epithet "living forever" after the name of Thutmose III, in the reign of Amenhotep 11. Nebwawi was called to the court, and probably died there during the coregency.

<sup>a</sup>This is the sacred barge used in the drama of the Osiris-myth; see the same connection in the inscription of Pefnefdineit (IV, 1023).

<sup>b</sup>Read "his majesty;" the feminine was doubtless inserted by Spiegelberg as consistent with the rest of the inscription. Osiris is referred to.

<sup>c</sup>Stela found at Abydos, now in Cairo; Mariette, Abydos, II, 33, = Birch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1876, 5, 6 (very bad) = Rougé, Album photographique, No. 151. I have not seen the last, but used Berlin squeeze (A 1628). Translated by Spiegelberg, Recueil, XIX, 99.

<sup>d</sup>On the coregency, see Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 55. It must have begun late in the year 53, or early in 54, for we find Thutmose III still alone in year 52 (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 45, e; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 23, n. 2), and Amenhotep II already alone in his third year. As the campaign in Asia was already over by Amenhotep II's third year, and it was certainly made necessary by Thutmose III's death, it is clear that Amenhotep II reigned his first year with Thutmose III, fought out his war in Asia in his second year, and went to Nubia in his third (§§ 780-4

Reign of Thutmose III

185. <sup>1</sup>Given as a favor of the king's presence, the King Menkheperre, living forever, <sup>2</sup>to the High Priest of Osiris, Nebwawi.

He saith: "I conducted many works in <sup>3</sup>the house of my father Osiris, of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, and every splendid costly stone. <sup>4</sup>All these were upon my seal, (for) he knew that I was excellent of heart <sup>5</sup>toward him. I administered the 'affairs' of my lord, as protector of the house of my father. <sup>6</sup>I attained reverence<sup>a</sup> under the favor of the king's presence. I was 'summoned' <sup>7</sup>to his house of gold, and my place was made among his princes. <sup>8</sup>My feet strode in the splendid place;<sup>b</sup> I was anointed with the best ointment, <sup>9</sup>a wreath (w<sup>3</sup> h) was at my throat, as the king does to him whom he has favored.

Reign of Amenhotep II

186. His son repeated to me favor, <sup>10</sup>the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheprure (Amenhotep II), living forever. He gave to me a statue of his father, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>11</sup>Menkheperre (Thutmose III), living forever; his likeness of millions of years in the house of his father Osiris; divine offerings; <sup>12</sup>lands of the royal domain. Every writing remained 'in force' for the L. P. H. of the Son of Re, his beloved <sup>13</sup>Amenhotep (II), beloved of Osiris, First of the Westerners, lord of Abydos, given life, like Re, forever."<sup>c</sup>

THE BIRTH OF QUEEN HATSHEPSUT<sup>d</sup>

187. Beginning with the Fourth Dynasty, every Egyptian king might bear the title, "Son of Re," the sun-god. It is not an accident therefore, that the interesting folk-tale preserved to us in the Papyrus Westcar narrates

<sup>a</sup>Old age.

<sup>b</sup>The halls of the palace.

<sup>c</sup>Here follow seven lines containing the usual mortuary prayer.

<sup>d</sup>A series of reliefs and inscriptions in the Der el-Bahri temple, occupying the north half of the middle colonnade (corresponding to the Punt reliefs on the south half, §§ 246 ff.). They were uncovered by the excavations of the Egypt Exploration Fund under Naville, which began excavating the temple in 1894. Published in Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 46-55.

that the three children of a priest's wife, begotten by Re, and born among astonishing prodigies, became the first three kings of the Fifth Dynasty.<sup>a</sup> The rise of the title, "Son of Re," on the Fifth Dynasty monuments thus corresponds remarkably with the legendary tale current a thousand years later among the common people.<sup>b</sup> As Re had once ruled as king of Egypt, lineal descent from him through intervening kings was claimed by all Pharaohs from this time on, and was sufficient to justify the assumption of the title; but in its strictest sense the title indicated that the king was immediately and physically the offspring of the god and a mortal mother. It is probable that this interpretation was pressed at first only by kings whose claims to the throne through their mortal parents were questionable. Naturally, there gradually grew up around so fruitful a theme a literary version of the story, as well as pictures of the various incidents in the drama. These finally took stereotyped form, and the pictures,<sup>c</sup> accompanied by explanatory text, made up of fragmentary quotations from the story in poetic form, have been preserved to us by Hatshepsut at Der el-Bahri and by Amenhotep III at Luxor.

188. The Papyrus Westcar,<sup>b</sup> dating from the rise of the Eighteenth Dynasty, has preserved to us the charming folk-tale in which the state fiction found expression and circulated among the common people. The explanatory texts, accompanying the reliefs of Hatshepsut and Amenhotep III, unfortunately furnish us only the merest fragments of the fine poem in which the court and the higher classes heard the story of the monarch's divine paternity. The meagerness of the surviving fragments of the court poem makes a comparison with the folk-tale a very brief matter, but enough of the former is preserved to show that one quotes from the other, or both quote from a common source in traditional stock phrases long orally current. For the same gods figure at the birth in both, and at least in two incidents the same words are employed by both.

<sup>a</sup>See Petrie, History of Egypt, I, 69 f.

<sup>b</sup>The Papyrus Westcar (see Erman, Die Märchen des Papyrus Westcar, Berlin, 1890; Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 373 ff., and Aus den Papyrus des königlichen Museums zu Berlin, 38, 39) is from 700 to 1,000 years later than the birth of the three kings which it narrates.

<sup>c</sup>That these pictures are composed of conventionally current scenes is shown by the fact (1) that both Hatshepsut and Amenhotep III used almost identically the same scenes in their birth reliefs; (2) that the sculptor of Hatshepsut's scenes, copied his traditional models in every detail, including the sex of the child (of course, a boy! This was not to conceal the child's sex, for all the pronouns in the accompanying texts are feminine!); had he been sketching something new, prompted by this particular occasion, his sketches would have been made to suit the occasion.

189. Later every king claimed Amon (successor of Re) as his physical father, and in Ptolemaic times the incidents in the divine birth of the king were regularly depicted in the temple reliefs.<sup>a</sup> The most notable example in late times, Alexander the Great, who journeyed to the Oasis of Amon that he might be recognized as the god's son, was therefore merely acting in harmony with a state fiction as old as the Fifth Dynasty. He thus became the legitimate king of Egypt by the only possible means.

190. In the case of Hatshepsut, it was, of course, a violent wrenching of the traditional details to apply the fiction to a woman, for the entire legend was fitted only to a man. The result was in some cases startling inconsistency (e. g., § 202). Undoubtedly, this tale of Hatshepsut's divine

---

<sup>a</sup>For example, Lepsius, Denkmäler, 11, 59-61; Champollion, Monuments, 11, 145 sext. ff.; these late representations have not been collected and published; to put them all, early and late, together would be a very useful piece of work. Much material, especially with reference to Alexander the Great, has been collected by Maspero (Comment Alexandre devint dieu en Egypte, Ecole des hautes études, annuaire 1897).

<sup>b</sup>See Mahaffy, The Ptolemaic Dynasty, 15, 16.

paternity, designing her before her birth for the throne, was intended by her supporters to enforce her claims to the kingship. The whole was therefore sculptured in a series of magnificent reliefs at Der el-Bahri, which have suffered sadly from a twofold attack: by the triumphant Thutmose III, who erased the figure and inscriptions of the queen; and by the Amon-hating Amenhotep IV, who did likewise for those of Amon. Hence it has been necessary to employ also the duplicate by Amenhotep III in Luxor.<sup>a</sup>

191. The reliefs begin at the south end of the colonnade, proceed northward (lower row) without interruption, and conclude at the north end.

I. THE COUNCIL OF THE GODS<sup>b</sup>

Scene

192. Amon enthroned at the right, before twelve gods<sup>c</sup> in two rows at the left.

Inscription

The long inscription of probably twenty-one lines<sup>d</sup> between Amon and the gods contained the words of the gods (three lines at the left) and those of Amon (all the rest) in which he has evidently prophesied the birth of Hatshepsut and promises her great power; for we can still read:

I will unite for her the Two Lands in peace. . . . . I will give to her all lands, all countries.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See §§ 841 ff. I have arranged the Der el-Bahri and Luxor texts in parallel columns, and find that they largely supplement each other. They are practically identical.

<sup>b</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 46 (Luxor, Gayet, 73 (66), fig. 189).

<sup>c</sup>Osiris, Isis, Harsiese, Nephthys, Anubis, Hathor, Montu, Tum, Shu, Tefnut, Keb, and Nut.

<sup>d</sup>Including two lines behind Amon; all have been carefully hacked away, and only the tops of the lines have escaped destruction. In front of Amon is Ramses II's clumsy note: "Restoration of the monument which King Usermare-Setepnere (Ramses ZZ) made, for his father Awn." The note has been cut directly over the old inscription!

<sup>e</sup>Amenhotep III has Thoth before this council of gods at Luxor.

My soul is hers, my <sup>1</sup>bounty<sup>1</sup> is hers, my crown <sup>1</sup>is hers,<sup>1</sup> that she may rule the Two Lands,<sup>a</sup> that she may lead all the living —————<sup>b</sup>

IV. INTERVIEW BETWEEN AMON AND KHNUM<sup>c</sup>

199. Amon now calls in the aid of the god Khnum, who created man.

Scene

Amon stands on the left before Khnum on the right. The following inscriptions accompany them :

Instructions of Amon<sup>d</sup>

200. Utterance of Amon, presider over Karnak: “Go, to make her, together with her ka, from these limbs which are in me; go, to fashion her better than all gods; <sup>1</sup>shape for me,<sup>1e</sup> this my daughter, whom I have begotten. I have given to her all life and satisfaction, all stability, all joy of heart from me, all offerings, and all bread, like Re, forever.”

Reply of Khnum

201. “I will form this [thy] daughter [Makere] (Hatshepsut),<sup>f</sup> for life, prosperity and health; for offerings ————— for love of the beautiful mistress. Her form shall be more exalted than the gods, in her great dignity of King of Upper and Lower Egypt.”

V. KHNUM FASHIONS THE CHILD<sup>g</sup>

Scene

202. Khnum is seated before a potter’s wheel, upon which he is fashioning two male (!) children,<sup>h</sup> the first being <sup>d</sup>They have all disappeared but one line. The rendering is partially from Luxor, with corresponding changes of gender. In fashioning the child (at Der el-Bahri, Pl. 48), Khnum repeats the instructions he has received from Amon, which can thus be reconstructed from this source, also. I have arranged the three sources in parallel columns, and employed all.

<sup>a</sup>Luxor adds: “like Re, forever” and ends here.

<sup>b</sup>Nearly two lines of conventional promises, in a very fragmentary state, follow here.

<sup>c</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 48 (=Luxor, 63 (71), Fig. 203).

<sup>e</sup>Read twt ny?

<sup>f</sup>Luxor adds: “together with all his (Amenhotep III’s) ka’s.”

<sup>g</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 48 (=Luxor, 63 (71), Fig. 202).

<sup>h</sup>This would indicate that the reliefs were made according to old and traditional sketches in which, of course, a female child had no place. All the pronouns used by Khnum in addressing the child are feminine!

11. INTERVIEW BETWEEN AMON AND THOTH<sup>a</sup>

Scene

193. Amon stands at the left before Thoth on the right.<sup>b</sup>Inscriptions<sup>c</sup>

The words of Amon are almost totally illegible, the record of Ramses II's restoration being placed over the lower half. Without them, it is difficult to discern the exact purpose of the interview. The words of Thoth are better preserved:

Words of Thoth<sup>d</sup>

194. ——— thou<sup>e</sup> maiden whom thou hast mentioned. Lo, [— —] an old man.<sup>f</sup> Ahmose is her name, the beneficent, mistress of ——— in this whole land, She is the wife of the king [O]kheperkere (Thutmose I), given life forever. While his majesty is in [—], go thou ——— to her.

Amon and Thoth are now seen<sup>g</sup> proceeding to the queen.III. AMON WITH QUEEN AHMOSE<sup>h</sup>

Scene

195. Amon and Queen Ahmose are seated facing each other; the god extends to her the symbols of life. They

<sup>a</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 47 (Luxor, Gayet, 62 (72)).

<sup>b</sup>The Luxor scene shows one feature omitted in Der el-Bahri, viz., the queen and Hathor standing between Amon and Thoth. Hathor embraces the queen, and the fragmentary inscription would indicate that the goddess is informing the queen of what is to befall her.

<sup>c</sup>Between and over the gods.

<sup>d</sup>By combining Der el-Bahri and Luxor.

<sup>e</sup>End of an optative imperative?

<sup>f</sup>Possibly a reference to the fact that the king is old as a reason that Amon should become the father of Hatshepsut?

<sup>g</sup>On the right of the preceding scene (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 47; Luxor, 63 (71)).

<sup>h</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 47, Luxor, Gayet, 63 (71); a much better text than Gayet's, although with impossible conjectures in the lacunæ, is by Bouriant, Recueil, IX, 84, 85.

are sitting upon the heavens,<sup>a</sup> symbolic of the exalted character of the interview, supported by two female divinities who are seated upon a couch.<sup>b</sup> The inscriptions are as follows:

The Interview<sup>c</sup>

196. Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak.<sup>d</sup> He made his form like the majesty of this husband, the King Okheperkere (Thutmose I). He found her as she slept in the beauty of her palace. She waked at the fragrance of the god, which she smelled in the presence of his majesty. He went to her immediately, coivit cum ea, he imposed his desire upon her, he caused that she should see him in his form of a god. When he came before her, she rejoiced at the sight of his beauty, his love passed into her limbs, which the fragrance of the god flooded; all his odors were from Punt.

Words of the Queen<sup>e</sup>

197. Utterance by the king's-wife and king's-mother Ahmose, in the presence of the majesty of this august god, Amon, Lord of Thebes: "How great is thy fame!<sup>f</sup> It is splendid to see thy front; thou hast united my majesty (fern.) with thy favors,<sup>g</sup> thy dew is in all my limbs." After this, the majesty of this god did all that he desired with her.

Words of Among

198. Utterance of Amon, Lord of the Two Lands, before her: "Khmet-Amon-Hatshepsut shall be the name of this my daughter, whom I have placed<sup>h</sup> in thy body,<sup>i</sup> this saying which comes out of thy mouth.' She shall exercise the excellent kingship in this whole land.'<sup>j</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Plainer in Luxor.

<sup>b</sup>Upon which the interview really took place.

<sup>c</sup>Text behind Amon.

<sup>d</sup>The following is not really the words of Amon.

<sup>e</sup>Behind the queen.

<sup>f</sup>Luxor has a different text here: "— — — the plans which thou hast made; thy [heart] is satisfied with my majesty" (feminine).

<sup>g</sup>Next to the right; four lines.

<sup>h</sup>Read wd'ny.

<sup>i</sup>The connection is not clear.

<sup>j</sup>This announcement of the god to Hatshepsut's mother is strikingly like the announcement of Re to Rededet, the mortal mother of his three unborn children in Papyrus Westcar (IX, 10, 11): "He (Re) hath said to her: 'They shall exercise this excellent office in this whole land.'"

My soul is hers, my <sup>1</sup>bounty<sup>1</sup> is hers, my crown <sup>1</sup>is hers,<sup>1</sup> that she may rule the Two Lands,<sup>a</sup> that she may lead all the living —————<sup>b</sup>

IV. INTERVIEW BETWEEN AMON AND KHNUM<sup>c</sup>

199. Amon now calls in the aid of the god Khnum, who created man.

Scene

Amon stands on the left before Khnum on the right. The following inscriptions accompany them :

Instructions of Amon<sup>d</sup>

200. Utterance of Amon, presider over Karnak: "Go, to make her, together with her ka, from these limbs which are in me; go, to fashion her better than all gods; <sup>1</sup>shape for me,<sup>1e</sup> this my daughter, whom I have begotten. I have given to her all life and satisfaction, all stability, all joy of heart from me, all offerings, and all bread, like Re, forever."

Reply of Khnum

201. "I will form this [thy] daughter [Makere] (Hatshepsut),<sup>f</sup> for life, prosperity and health; for offerings ————— for love of the beautiful mistress. Her form shall be more exalted than the gods, in her great dignity of King of Upper and Lower Egypt."

V. KHNUM FASHIONS THE CHILD<sup>g</sup>

Scene

202. Khnum is seated before a potter's wheel, upon which he is fashioning two male (!) children,<sup>h</sup> the first being <sup>d</sup>They have all disappeared but one line. The rendering is partially from Luxor, with corresponding changes of gender. In fashioning the child (at Der el-Bahari, Pl. 48), Khnum repeats the instructions he has received from Amon, which can thus be reconstructed from this source, also. I have arranged the three sources in parallel columns, and employed all.

<sup>a</sup>Luxor adds: "like Re, forever" and ends here.

<sup>b</sup>Nearly two lines of conventional promises, in a very fragmentary state, follow here.

<sup>c</sup>Navigle, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 48 (=Luxor, 63 (71), Fig. 203).

<sup>e</sup>Read twt ny?

<sup>f</sup>Luxor adds: "together with all his (Amenhotep III's) ka's."

<sup>g</sup>Navigle, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 48 (=Luxor, 63 (71), Fig. 202).

<sup>h</sup>This would indicate that the reliefs were made according to old and traditional sketches in which, of course, a female child had no place. All the pronouns used by Khnum in addressing the child are feminine!

Hatshepsut and the second her ka. The frog-headed goddess Heket,<sup>a</sup> kneeling on the right, extends the symbol of life to the two children.

Inscription

203. Khnum repeats the instructions he has received from Amon, putting them now in the first person.

Utterance of Khnum, the potter, lord of Hirur (Hr-wr): “I have formed thee of these limbs of Arnon, presider over Karnak. I have come to thee (fern.), to fashion thee better than all gods.<sup>b</sup> I have given to thee (fern.) all life and satisfaction, all stability, all joy of heart with me; I have given to thee (fern.) all health, all lands; I have given to thee (fern.) all countries, all people;<sup>c</sup> I have given to thee (fern.) all offerings, all food; I have given to thee (fern.) to appear upon the throne of Horus like Re, forever; ———<sup>d</sup> I have given to thee (fern.) to be before the ka’s of all the living, while thou (fern.) shinest as King of Upper and Lower Egypt, of South and North, according as thy (fern.) father who loves thee (fern.) has commanded.

VI. INTERVIEW BETWEEN THOTH AND QUEEN AHMOSE<sup>e</sup>

Scene

204. Queen Ahmose standing on the right is saluted by Thoth, who stands with outstretched arm at the left.

Inscriptions

They unfortunately contain only titles and epithets of praise, so that the purpose of the interview is not clear.

VII. QUEEN AHMOSE IS LED TO CONFINEMENT<sup>f</sup>

Scene

205. Khnum and Heket appear on each side of the queen leading her by either hand. Before them nine divinities in three rows of three. All are led by Amon.

<sup>a</sup>At Luxor it is Hathor.

<sup>b</sup>In Papyrus Westcar (X, 14) Khnum “makes sound his limbs.”

<sup>c</sup>Unimportant variants in Luxor. <sup>d</sup>Two short lines lost.

<sup>e</sup>Navigle, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 48 (=Luxor, 64 (69), Fig. 197).

<sup>f</sup>Navigle, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 49 (=Luxor 64 (69), Fig. 198).

Inscriptions

They again offer only titles and epithets of praise; the inscription of Heket,<sup>a</sup> however, did contain some references to the scene; we can discern: “Thou didst conceive immediately after this, thou [—] a child [Go] with him<sup>b</sup> to the court, to [—];” but the bulk of her speech is hacked out or covered by Ramses II's renewals. Before Amon a long inscription of thirteen lines, now completely hacked out, doubtless contained the description of the scene.

VIII. THE BIRTH<sup>c</sup>Scene

206. The queen<sup>d</sup> sits enthroned in the middle of the upper row, holding the child; before her are four female divinities, acting as midwives and extending their arms for the child.<sup>e</sup> Behind her are five goddesses;<sup>f</sup> the foremost, extending to the queen the sign of life. The entire row rests upon a couch. In the middle row, which also rests upon a couch, we see directly under the queen two genii of myriads of years; and on either side of them the genii of the east and west.<sup>g</sup> The bottom row shows: on the left, the genii of the north and south; on the right, Bes and

<sup>a</sup>Her titles are also interesting: “Heket, mistress of Hirur, White One of Nekhen, deliverer” (at births), in which she is identified with Eileithuia because of similar functions.

<sup>b</sup>Khnum or Amon?

<sup>c</sup>Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 51 (=Luxor, 65 (70), Fig. 199).

<sup>d</sup>She bears the name of Hatshepsut! But in Luxor the corresponding position is occupied by the mother of the child, and there can be no doubt of the identity here.

<sup>e</sup>In Luxor, one of these midwives is passing the child to the next.

<sup>f</sup>Among them Isis and Nephthys; these two, together with Khnum and Heket who led in the queen, and Meskhenet, who sits at the right, are the same five divinities who figure at the birth of the children of Re in Papyrus Westcar (IX, 23).

<sup>g</sup>Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 16.

Teweret, with a blank space which contained an inscription now totally gone.<sup>a</sup> At the extreme right sits Meskhenet, the goddess of births, directing the midwives.

Inscriptions

207. The divinities on the right in the upper row and Meskhenet all utter the conventional promises, as in the speech of Khnum<sup>b</sup> (§ 203).

IX. PRESENTATION OF THE CHILD TO AMON<sup>c</sup>

208. The child is now presented to her father by Hathor.

Scene

1. Hathor, enthroned on the right, extends the child to Amon, who is standing on the left.

Inscriptions

2. The brief words of Hathor have almost disappeared; one can still read: “she extends her arm before his majesty.”

Words of Amon

3. Utterance of [Amon]. . . . . d ——— to see his daughter, his beloved, the king, Makere (Hatshepsut), living, after she was born, <sup>e</sup>while his heart was exceedingly happy.<sup>e</sup>

Utterance<sup>f</sup> of [Amon to] his bodily daughter [Hatshepsut]: “Glorious part which has come forth from me; king, taking the Two Lands, upon the Horus-throne forever.”

<sup>a</sup>It is better preserved at Luxor, but I can see no connection with chap. 137 of the Book of the Dead, to which Naville finds a resemblance (Deir-el-Bahari, II, 16).

<sup>b</sup>In Papyrus Westcar (X, 13, 14). Meskhenet says: “A king, who shall exercise the kingship in this whole land.”

<sup>c</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, II, 52 (=Luxor, 65 (70), Fig. 200).

<sup>d</sup>The usual promises.

<sup>e</sup>Exactly the same phrase (ndm yb) is used by the divinities in Papyrus Westcar (XI, 5), as they announce the birth of his children to Rawoser, saying: “Let thy heart be happy, Rawoser; behold three children are born to thee.”

<sup>f</sup>Under his extended arm.

X. COUNCIL OF AMON AND HATHOR

Scene

209. Amon is enthroned at the left holding the child before Hathor, enthroned at the right. Behind the latter is the goddess Serek,<sup>a</sup> who is perhaps summoning the child to its nourishment in the following scene.

Inscriptions

They are unfortunately so defaced that little more than the conventional promises can be made out.<sup>b</sup>

XI. THE NURSING OF THE CHILD<sup>c</sup>Scene

210. On a couch at the left (above) sits Queen Ahmose, supported by a goddess, and before her the child and its ka are nursed by two cow-headed Hathors. Below the couch are two Hathor cows, suckling the child and its ka.<sup>d</sup> On the right are the ka's, twelve in number, which have already been suckled and are being passed on to the Nile-god and an obscure deity named Heku (hk<sup>3</sup>w), who present them to three enthroned divinities.

Inscription

It has almost all been hacked out, but we can discern the words: "Nursing her majesty (fern.) together with all her ka's."

---

<sup>a</sup>She is lacking at Luxor.

<sup>b</sup>Luxor is no better.

<sup>c</sup>Naveille, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 53 (=Luxor, 66 (67), Figs. 192 and 193, and 67 (68), Fig. 194).

<sup>d</sup>The children have been hacked out, but they are clear in Luxor. There is a splendid granite statue of such a Hathor cow in Florence, suckling the infant King Harmhab.

XII. SECOND INTERVIEW OF AMON AND THOTH

Scene

211. Amon and Thoth stand facing each other, and hold between them the child<sup>a</sup> and its ka.<sup>a</sup>

Inscriptions

Only the conventional promises; the purpose of the interview is perhaps the arrangement of the child's future.

XIII. THE FINAL SCENE<sup>b</sup>Scene

212. At the left Khnum and Anubis advance, the latter rolling a large disk before him. Before them two female divinities in the upper row present the child and its ka to a kneeling god (the Nile-god?), and in the lower row the same scene appears before another unknown divinity. Behind (at the right) stands Sefkhet, keeping record, accompanied by an attendant god.

Inscriptions

Only the conventional promises; it is therefore impossible to explain the purpose of this scene. The child is now launched upon its career.

STATUE OF ENEBNI<sup>c</sup>

213. A statue upon which the nobleman Enebni refers to Thutmose III as "her (Hatshepsut's) brother."

<sup>a</sup>Hacked out.

<sup>b</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, 55 (=Luxor, 67 (68), Fig. 195, and 64 (69), Fig. 196.

<sup>c</sup>Statue in the British Museum. Inscription: Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, 17; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 123, e, and cf. also 6, 7, and 51; also Maspero, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 170 ff.

Made as a favor<sup>a</sup> of the Good Goddess, Mistress of the Two Lands, Makere (Hatshepsut), living and abiding like Re, and her brother the Good God, Lord of Offering, Menkheperre (Thutmose 111), who is given life like Re, forever.

An "offering-which-the-king-gives" ———<sup>b</sup> for the ka of the only excellent one, the favored of his god, the beloved of his lord, because of his excellence; the follower of his lord on his journeys in the South country and the North country,<sup>c</sup> the king's-son, chief of the archers, master of the royal weapons, Enebni (<sup>ʿ</sup>nbny), triumphant before the great ennead of gods.

VASE INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

214. A small jar, presented by Hatshepsut to her mother, Ahmose, bears the words:

Divine Consort, Great King's-Wife,<sup>e</sup> Hatshepsut; she made (it) for her mother, Great King's-Wife, Ahmose, triumphant before Osiris.

THE CORONATION OF QUEEN HATSHEPSUT<sup>f</sup>

215. The scenes and inscriptions in this series are in uninterrupted continuation of the birth series (§§ 187–212).

<sup>a</sup>The usual formula has: "Given as a favor, etc.," see, e. g., Senmut statue (§ 366).

<sup>b</sup>The usual formulary—in the name of Amon, Osiris, and Anubis—is omitted.

<sup>c</sup>This suggests unknown campaigns of Thutmose III, while he was still hampered by the association with Hatshepsut.

<sup>d</sup>In Gizeh; text in Mariette, Monuments divers, 48, d 1; Maspero, Momies royales, 633, n. 4; Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, I, Pl. 36, 4, and p. 49; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 122, 6, 20.

<sup>e</sup>Showing clearly that the queen for a time after her accession bore the usual titles of the king's legitimate wife, with no pretense of being king herself. See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, § 31 and § 36, where another vase inscription shows the same fact.

<sup>f</sup>Reliefs and inscriptions on the wall of the northern half of the middle colonnade in the Der el-Bahri temple; they begin on the south end-wall (directly over the first scene of the birth series, which they continue), proceed northward along the west wall, and conclude on the north end-wall (directly over the last scene of the birth series). They were uncovered by the Fund excavations under Naville, and published by Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 111, 56–64.

They represent the child consecrated to the kingship by the gods; then grown to maidenhood and crowned by them; and finally crowned by her father, Thutmose I, before the assembled court. This is followed by some concluding ceremonies by the gods. The birth series of Amenhotep III at Luxor continues to furnish a parallel as far as the coronation by Atum (III) and the reception of names and crowns (IV). The entire series has been more or less defaced and systematically hacked out by the queen's political enemies. The historical value of the different sections is discussed as they are taken up.

I. THE PURIFICATION<sup>a</sup>

Scene

216. The child<sup>b</sup> stands between Amon on the right and Khonsu on the left, who are pouring water over her head.

Inscriptions

Both the gods utter the following words:<sup>c</sup>

Thou art pure, together with thy ka, [for] thy great dignity of King of Upper and Lower Egypt, living.

11. AMON PRESENTS THE CHILD TO ALL THE GODS<sup>d</sup>

Scene

217. Amon, enthroned at the left, fondles the child upon his knees; before him stand six figures: three (above) representing "all the gods of the South," and three (below) representing "all the gods of the North."

<sup>a</sup>Middle terrace, northern half, on the south end-wall, upper row, over the first scene in the birth series; published by Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 56 (=Luxor, 75 (64), Fig. 186).

<sup>b</sup>The figure has totally disappeared at Der el-Bahri, but is preserved at Luxor.

<sup>c</sup>Same in Luxor.

<sup>d</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 56 (=Luxor 73 (66), Fig. 190).

Inscriptions

218. They have as usual been hacked out and further obscured by the barbarous restorations of Amon's name where it did not belong, by Ramses 11.

Words of Amon

219. Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of <sup>a</sup>[heaven to] the gods:" "Behold ye, my daughter [Hatshepsut]<sup>b</sup> living; be ye loving toward her, and be ye satisfied with her."

He shows<sup>c</sup> her to all the gods of South and North, who come to look upon her, <sup>f</sup>doing obeisance before her<sup>1</sup>.

Words of the Gods

220. 'Utterance of all the gods, [to] Amon-[Re]: "This thy daughter [Hatshepsut], who liveth, we are satisfied with her in life and peace. <sup>2</sup>She is now thy daughter of thy form, whom thou hast begotten, prepared. Thou hast given to her thy soul, thy <sup>f</sup>—, thy <sup>f</sup>bounty<sup>1</sup>, the magic powers of the diadem.<sup>d</sup> <sup>3</sup>While she was in the body of her that bare her, the lands were hers, the countries were hers;<sup>e</sup> all that the heavens cover, all that the sea encircles. Thou hast now done <sup>4</sup>this with her, for thou knowest the two æons.' Thou hast given to her the share of Horus in life, the years of Set in satisfaction. We have given to her<sup>g</sup> . . . . .

III. THE NORTHERN JOURNEY<sup>h</sup>

221. With this incident in the queen's childhood we pass out of pure fiction into a narrative which possibly contains

---

<sup>a</sup>Ramses II's restoration renders this uncertain.
<sup>b</sup>In the blank where the name of the queen had been cut out, Ramses II has inserted "Amon."
<sup>c</sup>Lit., "he causes them to see her."
<sup>d</sup>See the same statement by Amon himself in the birth scenes (§ 198).
<sup>e</sup>Read h s' t (or nt) and ns ymy = "belonging to."
<sup>f</sup>Periods of 60 years.
<sup>g</sup>Ramses II has again put in a restoration of Amon in the wrong place. After that follow the conventional promises of life, satisfaction, etc.
<sup>h</sup>Text first published by Naville, Recueil, 18, Pl. 1, and corrections, ibid., 19, 209-11. Later and much more correctly Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 57.

a kernel of fact. Having actually, during her father's lifetime, made a journey with him to the north, she now slightly warps its purpose (of which we really know nothing) and represents the journey as the occasion of an acknowledgment of her coming kingship by all the gods of Egypt as she proceeds to Heliopolis to be crowned by Atum. According to the date of her jubilee (year 15), she must have spent fifteen years as crown prince (being nominated thirty years before the jubilee).<sup>a</sup> After references to her godlike appearance and blooming beauty, having grown from childhood to maidenhood, the journey is barely mentioned, but it is stated that all the gods came to her as she journeyed northward. Following this, over half of the inscription (ll. 8–15) is occupied with the splendid promises of the gods regarding the greatness of her future kingdom. That this journey northward is represented as primarily in order to visit Heliopolis, and there be acknowledged and crowned by Atum, is shown by the accompanying scene, in which she is crowned in his presence.

222. The same incident occurs in the coronation of Amenhotep III. This was undoubtedly an old custom, for Atum was the solar deity, who was always associated with the kingship; and, as we noticed in the preceding birth series, Atum's successor at Heliopolis, Re, became the father of all mortal kings of Egypt. In accordance with this old custom, Amenhotep III also visited Atum, and was crowned by him, before his accession. The visit of Piankhi (IV, 871) was due to the same custom, and Thutmose III's ascension to heaven (§ 141) to be crowned and receive his royal names is but a splendid variation of the customary fiction.

<sup>a</sup>See Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 65.

The Queen's Growth and Beauty

. 223. <sup>1</sup>Her majesty saw all this thing<sup>a</sup> herself, which she told to the people, who heard, falling down for terror among them. <sup>2</sup>Her majesty grew beyond everything; to look upon her was more beautiful than anything; her <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> was like a god, her form was like a god, she did <sup>3</sup>everything as a god, her splendor was like a god; her majesty (fern.) was a maiden, beautiful, blooming, Buto in her time. <sup>4</sup>She made her divine form to flourish, a <sup>1</sup>favor of<sup>1</sup> him that fashioned her.

The Journey

224. Her majesty (fern.) journeyed <sup>5</sup>to the North country after her father, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere, who liveth forever. There came<sup>b</sup> her mother, Hathor, patroness of Thebes; Buto, mistress of Dep; Amon, lord of Thebes; <sup>6</sup>Atum, lord of Heliopolis; Montu, lord of Thebes; Khnum, lord of the Cataract; all the gods that are in Thebes, all the gods of the South and North, and approached <sup>7</sup>her. They traversed for her, pleasant ways, (they) came, and they brought all life and satisfaction with them, they exerted their protection behind her; one proceeded <sup>8</sup>after another of them, they passed on behind her every day.

Promises of the Gods

225. They said, "Welcome, daughter of Amon-Re; thou hast seen thy administration in the land, thou shalt set <sup>9</sup>it in order, thou shalt restore that which has gone to its ruin,<sup>c</sup> thou shalt make thy monuments in this house, thou shalt victual the offering-tables of him who begat thee, thou shalt pass through the land<sup>d</sup> and thou shalt embrace <sup>10</sup>many countries. Thou shalt strike among the Tehenu, thou shalt smite with the mace the Troglodytes; thou shalt cut off the heads of the soldiers, thou shalt seize <sup>11</sup>the chiefs of Retenu, bearing the sword, the survivals<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>What thing is meant is not clear; possibly it refers to the preceding presentation to the gods, which she narrates now to the people. Then follow her growth into youth and beauty, and the journey.

<sup>b</sup>Yw hr is a sdm hr-form.

<sup>c</sup>This is a clear reference to the queen's restoration of the temples recorded at Benihasan (§§ 296 ff.), and plainly indicates the late date of the coronation reliefs, which are thus evidently later than the temple restorations.

<sup>d</sup>Read hms t t (t for two land-signs).

<sup>e</sup>Meaning those whom her father Thutmose I had left; hence this is further evidence of his Asiatic campaign.

of thy father. Thy tribute is myriads of men, the captives of thy valor; thy 'reward' is <sup>12</sup>thousands of men for the temples of the 'Two Lands! Thou givest offerings in Thebes, the steps of the king, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes. <sup>13</sup>The gods have [endowed] thee with years, they 'present' thee with life and satisfaction, they praise thee, for their heart hath given understanding to the egg<sup>a</sup> which <sup>14</sup>[they] have fashioned. They shall set thy boundary as far as the breadth of heaven, as far as the limits of the twelfth hour of the night; the Two Lands shall be filled with children —, thy numerous children <sup>15</sup>are (as) the number of thy grain, 'which' thou '—' in the hearts of thy people; it is the daughter of the bull of his mother,<sup>b</sup> — beloved.

IV. CORONATION BY ATUM<sup>c</sup>

226. The queen on the left is led by Hathor<sup>d</sup> into the presence of Atum standing on the right. In Luxor, after being led in by Sekhmet, the king (corresponding to the queen in Der el-Bahri) kneels before Atum enthroned." Before them stands Thoth, of whose inscription only the following has survived:

Words of Thoth

227. Set his diadem upon his head; put — — — — — titulary — — — — before the gods. . . . . f

V. RECEPTION OF THE CROWNS AND THE NAMES~

228. The coronation before Atum is followed by a similar ceremony before Amon.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Meaning the queen. <sup>b</sup>Amon-Kamephis.

<sup>c</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 111, 57, 58 (=Luxor, 73 (66), Fig. 191, and 74 (65), Fig. 188).

<sup>d</sup>There is another divinity before the queen, and there were others behind Hathor, but all have disappeared.

<sup>e</sup>It is probable that this scene was also in the Der el-Bahri series in the erased space immediately following the above introduction to Atum.

<sup>f</sup>The conventional phrases.

<sup>g</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 4, where only an account of the scene is given with a few sentences of text, as the whole is almost completely hacked out. At Luxor the scene of the crowns is well preserved (Gayet, 75 (64), Fig. 184 incomplete; better Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 75, c), but the scene of names is omitted.

<sup>h</sup>This is of course a later custom, as Amon himself is a later god.

Scene

The queen,<sup>a</sup> standing, is embraced by Amon, enthroned at the left; from the right approach two goddesses,<sup>b</sup> one bearing the crown of Upper and the other the crown of Lower Egypt, and behind them are the genii of the cardinal points.

Inscriptions

229. Presented to thee is this red crown, which is upon the head of Re; thou shalt wear the double crown, and thou shalt take the Two Lands by this its name

Presented to thee is this white crown, mighty upon thy head; thou shalt take the lands by its diadem, by this its name.

Reception of Names

230. There was here a scene (wanting in Luxor), representing the reception by the queen of her new royal names, conferred by the gods." The scene is totally destroyed, with the exception of the figures<sup>d</sup> of Sefkhet and Thoth (?) on the right accompanied by the words:

Writing the name, Golden Horus: Divine of Diadems. Writing the name, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere.

VI. PROCLAMATION AS KING BEFORE AMON<sup>e</sup>

Scene

231. The queen, in king's costume, with the double crown of Upper and Lower Egypt, stands before Amon, enthroned on the left. Behind the queen are the genii of the cardinal points, and behind these again Sefkhet and Thoth are keeping record.

<sup>a</sup>From Luxor, where, of course, it is the king.

<sup>b</sup>From the Der el-Bahri inscription it is evident that they are Nekhbet and Buto, the goddesses of South and North, as we should expect.

<sup>c</sup>See the conferring of names upon Thutmose III (§§ 143 ff.) by the gods. Later, when the queen's names are really conferred by the officials, it is naively explained that they have been revealed to the officials by the god (§ 239).

<sup>d</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 59.

<sup>e</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 59, 60.

Inscriptions

The accompanying inscriptions are either destroyed or, where preserved, show only conventional phrases. That the coronation before the gods is complete is seen from the fragmentary words of Thoth: "Thou hast set these thy diadems [upon thy head]."

VII. CORONATION BEFORE THE COURT<sup>a</sup>

232. We now reach the alleged real coronation of the queen, which is represented as taking place before the court, at the command of Thutmose I, who retires from the throne in Hatshepsut's favor. As she bore the title "great king's-wife," for some time after her accession,<sup>b</sup> it is clear that she did not immediately succeed her father in the kingship as here represented.

233. This fact alone shakes one's confidence in the truth of the coronation inscription; but to this fact we must add another still more decisive. The date of the coronation is given as the first of Thoth, New Year's Day, of itself a remarkable coincidence. The selection of this date is explained as intentional on the part of Thutmose I in a passage, which states:<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>First published by Naville in Recueil, 18, Pl. III; corrections, ibid., 19, 211, 212; finally, much better (but not without errors) in Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, 111, 60-63.

<sup>b</sup>See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, § 31 and § 36, and Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, 67.

<sup>c</sup>Naville's rendering is as follows: "at (r) the festival day (h-disk) of her coronation; when the first day of the year and the beginning of the seasons should be united, etc." (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 7, l. 33). The h-disk cannot be read as the sun-disk ("day"), for it lacks the stroke, never lacking with the sun-disk in this inscription (e. g., in the neighboring lines twice, l. 27 and l. 29). We must read rh-j, "he knew, recognized." Nfr follows in the usual construction with n. There is not a shadow of doubt as to the correct rendering. Later: Naville's later altered rendering, in a recent number of Sphinx, is grammatically impossible.

“He (Thutmose I) recognized the auspiciousness of a coronation on<sup>a</sup> New Year’s Day as the beginning of the peaceful years and of the spending of myriads (of years) of very many jubilees.”<sup>b</sup>

Thutmose I therefore ostensibly selected New Year’s Day as the most auspicious day for his daughter’s coronation. But if we examine her obelisk inscription (§ 318, l. 8), we find that, as she actually reckoned, the beginning of her regnal year fell somewhere between the first of the sixth and the thirtieth of the twelfth month, and not on New Year’s Day. Finally, this account of the coronation in the Der el-Bahri temple, is taken verbatim from the account of the coronation of Amenemhet III in the Middle Kingdom temple at Arsinoe,<sup>c</sup> and deserves no more credence than the geographical lists of Ramses III at Medinet Habu, which have been copied from the lists of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Dynasties. It is clear that this entire coronation of Hatshepsut, like the supernatural birth, is an artificial creation, a fiction of later origin, prompted by political necessity. As such it is closely paralleled by the similar representations of Ramses II in his great Abydos inscription (III, 251–81), with the sole difference that his father is stated to have remained as coregent on the throne.

Scene

234. Thutmose I is enthroned at the left, with his daughter standing before him; in their presence three rows of courtiers standing on the right.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., “of,” making the phrase, “New Year’s coronation.”

<sup>b</sup>§ 239, ll. 33, 34.

<sup>c</sup>Fragments in Berlin (Nos. 15801–4; see Aegyptische Inschriften aus den Königlichen Museen zu Berlin, Heft III, 138). I owe the knowledge of the character of these fragments to my friend, Mr. Alan Gardiner, who kindly called my attention to them.

Inscriptions<sup>a</sup>

They furnish the only surviving account of such a coronation, in the presence of the superseded monarch and the court.

Thutmose I Summons His Daughter to be Crowned

235. <sup>1</sup>There saw her<sup>b</sup> the majesty of her father, this Horus;<sup>c</sup> how divine is her great fashioner! Her heart is glad, (for) great is her crown; <sup>2</sup>she advocates her cause <sup>3</sup>in<sup>1</sup> truth, <sup>4</sup>exalter<sup>1</sup> of her royal dignity, and of that which her ka does. <sup>5</sup>The living were set before her<sup>d</sup> <sup>6</sup>in his palace<sup>e</sup> of <sup>7</sup>—<sup>1</sup>. Said his majesty to her: “Come, glorious one;<sup>f</sup> I have placed (thee) before me; that <sup>8</sup>thou mayest see thy administration<sup>g</sup> in the palace, and the excellent deeds of thy ka’s<sup>h</sup> that thou mayest assume thy royal dignity, glorious <sup>9</sup>in thy magic, mighty in thy strength. Thou shalt be powerful in the Two Lands; thou shalt seize the rebellious; <sup>10</sup>thou shalt appear in the palace, thy forehead shall be adorned with the double diadem, resting upon the head of the heiress of Horus, whom I begat, <sup>11</sup>daughter of the white crown, beloved of Buto. The diadems are given to thee by him who presides over the thrones of the gods.

Thutmose I Summons the Court

236. <sup>1</sup>My majesty caused that there be brought to him the dignitaries of the king, the nobles, the companions, <sup>2</sup>the officers of the court,<sup>i</sup> and the chief of the people,<sup>j</sup> that they may do homage,<sup>k</sup> to set the maj-

<sup>a</sup>They are in vertical lines, divided into three groups by the king’s throne and the group of courtiers. The language is in many respects unusual, the whole is difficult and sometimes uncertain.

<sup>b</sup>Hatshepsut.

<sup>c</sup>Meaning King Thutmose I, to whom all the following epithets are applied.

<sup>d</sup>Referring to the court spectators.

<sup>e</sup>Of course, read: ḥ c-f-n-ys’t as in l. 10.

<sup>f</sup>Addressed to his daughter, the queen.

<sup>g</sup>She has already seen it in the land at large on the northern journey (§ 224, l. 8).

<sup>h</sup>That which the ka does, is to reign; the phrase is not uncommon.

<sup>i</sup>Of course, correct to ḥny’t.

<sup>j</sup>Rḥy’t, a class of people not yet closely defined.

<sup>k</sup>Nḏ’t-ḥr.

esty of <sup>10</sup>the daughter of this Horus<sup>a</sup> before him in his palace of <sup>11</sup>—<sup>12</sup>,<sup>b</sup> There was a sitting<sup>c</sup> of the king himself, <sup>13</sup>in the audience-hall of the right of the <sup>14</sup>court<sup>d</sup>, while these people prostrated themselves<sup>e</sup> in the court.

Thutmose I's Address to the Court

237. Said<sup>e</sup> his majesty before them: "This my daughter, Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut, who liveth, I have appointed [her] — —; she is my successor<sup>f</sup> <sup>13</sup>upon my throne, she it assuredly is who shall sit upon my wonderful seat.<sup>14</sup> She shall command the people<sup>g</sup> in every place of the palace; she it is who shall lead you; <sup>15</sup>ye shall proclaim her word, ye shall be united at her command. He who shall do her homage shall live, he who shall speak evil in <sup>16</sup>blasphemy of her majesty shall die. Whosoever proclaims with unanimity the name of her majesty (fem.), <sup>17</sup>shall enter immediately into the royal chamber, just as it was done by the name of this Horus (viz., by my name).<sup>h</sup> For <sup>18</sup>thou art divine, O daughter of a god, for whom even the gods fight; behind whom they exert their protection every day according to the command of her father, the lord of the gods.<sup>i</sup>

The Court and People Acknowledge the New Queen

238. <sup>19</sup>The dignitaries of the king, the nobles and the chief of the people<sup>j</sup> hear <sup>20</sup>this command for the advancement of the dignity of

<sup>a</sup>Meaning the king, Thutmose I.

<sup>b</sup>See l. 3 (note). Possibly referring to the tomb-temple of Der el-Bahri, where the scene is engraved. In this case, the events narrated took place in the Der el-Bahri temple itself.

<sup>c</sup>See sitting of year 9, Punt relief (§ 292, l. 1).

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "were upon their bellies."

<sup>e</sup>At this point the inscription is interrupted by the scene representing the king seated in a pavilion, etc.

<sup>f</sup>This word (ys'ty) is very important; for it indicates, not association as coregent, but accession as successor. It is used in the same sense, precisely, by the nomarch Key (I, 692).

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "She shall command matters to the people (rhy't)."

<sup>h</sup>That is, the name of the new queen is to be as effective in securing entrance as had been that of the king, her father.

<sup>i</sup>Here the text is interrupted by the bas-relief of the three rows of officials named in ll. 8, 9.

<sup>j</sup>See § 236, l. 9, n. f.

his daughter, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut) living forever. They kissed the earth at his feet, when the <sup>21</sup>royal word fell among them; they praised all the gods for the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), living forever. They went forth, their mouths <sup>22</sup>rejoiced, they published his proclamation [to] them. All the people<sup>a</sup> of all the dwellings <sup>23</sup>of the court heard; they came, their mouths rejoicing, they proclaimed (it) beyond everything, dwelling on dwelling <sup>24</sup>therein was announcing (it) in his name; soldiers on soldiers [—],<sup>b</sup> they leaped and they danced <sup>25</sup>for the double joy of their hearts. They [proclaimed], they [proclaimed]<sup>c</sup> the name of her majesty (fem.) as king; while her majesty (fem.) was a youth, while the great god was <sup>26</sup>turning<sup>1</sup> their hearts to his daughter, Makere (Hatshepsut), living forever, when they recognized that it was the fa[ther] of the divine daughter, and <sup>27</sup>thus they were excellent in her great soul beyond everything. As for any man who shall love her in his heart, and shall do her homage every day, <sup>28</sup>he shall shine, and he shall flourish exceedingly; [but] as for any man who shall speak against the name of her majesty, the god shall determine his death immediately, <sup>29</sup>even by the gods who exercise protection behind her every day. The majesty of this her father hath published this, all the people<sup>d</sup> have united upon <sup>30</sup>the name of this his daughter for king. While her majesty was a youth, the heart of his majesty inclined to [her] exceedingly.

Proclamation of the Queen's Names

239. <sup>31</sup>His majesty commanded that the ritual priests be brought to [proclaim] her great names that belonged to the assumption of the dignities of her royal crown and for insertion in (every) work and every seal of the <sup>32</sup>Favorite of the Two Goddesses, who makes the circuit north of the wall,<sup>e</sup> who clothes all the gods of the Favorite of the Two Goddesses. <sup>33</sup>He has recognized the auspiciousness of the coronation on New Year's Day as the beginning of the peaceful years and of the

<sup>a</sup>See § 236, l. 9, n. f.

<sup>b</sup>A verb of shouting is lacking, as it is construed with hr.

<sup>c</sup>Written twice, cf. note a.

<sup>d</sup>See § 236, n.

<sup>e</sup>Some ceremony unknown to us. The whole line refers to ceremonies in which the official name of the monarch must be used (see § 57).

spending of myriads (of years) of <sup>34</sup>very many jubilees. They proclaimed her royal names, for <sup>35</sup>the god caused that it should be in their hearts to make her names according to the form with which he had made them before:<sup>a</sup>

<sup>36</sup>Her great name, Horus: [Wosretkew (wsr·t-k>w)],<sup>b</sup> forever;

<sup>37</sup>Her great name, Favorite of the Two Goddesses: "Fresh in Years,"<sup>c</sup> good goddess, mistress of offering;

<sup>38</sup>Her great name, Golden Horus: "Divine of diadems;"<sup>d</sup>

<sup>39</sup>Her great name of King of Upper and Lower Egypt: "Makere, who liveth forever."<sup>e</sup>

It is her real name which the god made beforehand.

VIII. SECOND PURIFICATION<sup>f</sup>

240. After the public coronation, further ceremonies of the gods follow.

First Scene

The queen is led away by the god Kheseti. α . C . L .

Inscriptions

<sup>g</sup>The first (day) of the first season, New Year's Day, the first of the peaceful years of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Favorite of the Two Goddesses, who makes the circuit north of the wall, the Feast of Shed . . . . .<sup>h</sup>

<sup>i</sup>The leading away to enter the "Great House" (ʔbyʔ) the "Pillar of his Mother,"<sup>j</sup> of the "Great House" (ʔfor theʔ) purification of the "Great House."

<sup>a</sup>They were inspired to announce the same names which the god had already conferred upon her before (§ 230). This is to explain how the officials knew the same names already conferred by the god.

<sup>b</sup>"Mighty of doubles."

<sup>c</sup>W> q't rnp' wt.      <sup>d</sup>Ntr·t-k>w.

<sup>e</sup>The complete titulary should contain five names of which the last is here lacking. This last fifth name was her personal name, Hatshepsut, which she had already received in childhood.

<sup>f</sup>Naviile, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 63.

<sup>g</sup>Over the queen.

<sup>i</sup>Over the god.

<sup>h</sup>Cf. I, 150. Titulary of the queen.      <sup>j</sup>A priestly title.

Second Scene

241. The god Kheseti, standing at the right, holds over the queen, who stands at the left, a vessel in the form of the sign of life.

Inscription

Over the queen, merely her name with epitheta; over the god, the following:

I have purified thee with these waters of all satisfying life, all stability, all health, all joy of heart, to celebrate very many jubilees, like Re, forever.

IX. CONCLUDING CEREMONIES<sup>a</sup>

242. The queen is now led away by Horus, and several ceremonies follow, which are too nearly destroyed to be clear, but one of them was the "making of the circuit north of the wall," in accordance with the title of the queen used above.<sup>b</sup> The coronation is now regarded as complete, for Horus says: "Thou hast established thy dignity as king, and appeared upon the Horus-throne."

SOUTHERN PYLON INSCRIPTION AT KARNAK<sup>c</sup>

243. There is a distinct tendency on the part of Hatshepsut to show especial respect to her father, Thutmose I. The evident purpose of the following inscription is to make clear that her father recognizes her right to rule as king. It represents him shortly after her accession, as praying for the blessing and favor of the gods upon her reign,<sup>a</sup> and the entire document is of course, the work of the queen herself.

<sup>a</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 63, 64.

<sup>b</sup>In § 240, and elsewhere.

<sup>c</sup>On the north side of the third southern pylon, left wing, below; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 18; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 113, 114; translated by de Rougé, Mélanges d'archéologie égyptienne, I, 46 f.; Sethe, ibid., I, 27, 28 (cf. also p. 1). The inscription is very mutilated, and some omissions have been necessary.

244. The accompanying scene shows Thutmose I standing on the right before Amon, Mut, and Khonsu, the Theban triad on the left; the inscription of twenty lines occupies the space between. Over half of it is occupied with the names, titles, and fulsome epithets of Thutmose I, and the translation omits these, beginning in the middle of l. 11, with the king's address to the three divinities.

245. <sup>11</sup>. . . . . I come to thee, lord of gods; I do obeisance<sup>b</sup> [before] thee, in return for this that [thou hast put]<sup>c</sup> <sup>12</sup>the Black and the Red Land<sup>d</sup> under (the dominion of) my daughter, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere<sup>e</sup> (Hatshepsut), who lives forever, just as thou didst put (it) under (the dominion of) my majesty . . . . . <sup>13</sup>. . . Thou hast given to me the kingdom of every land in the presence of the Two Lands, exalting my beauty while I was a youth . . . [the Black Land] <sup>14</sup>and the Red Land are under my dominion. I am satisfied with victories, thou hast placed every rebellious land under my sandals which thy serpent-diadem has bound, bearing their gifts; thou hast strengthened the fear [of me] ———— <sup>15</sup>their limbs tremble, I have seized them in victory according to thy command; they are made my subjects; [they come to me] doing obeisance, and all countries with bowed head. Tribute ———— <sup>16</sup>. . . . . <sup>17</sup>. . . . the heart of my majesty is glad because of her . . . . . <sup>18</sup>[the petition] concerning my daughter Wosretkew,<sup>g</sup> King of Upper and Lower Egypt, of whom thou hast desired, that she be associated with [thee]<sup>h</sup> — 'that' thou mightest

<sup>a</sup>Sethé has shown (Untersuchungen, I, 28) that it does not record the installation of Hatshepsut as coregent.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "smell the ground."

<sup>c</sup>Sethé's emendation, Untersuchungen, I, 113.

<sup>d</sup>The black land of the valley and the red of the desert hills.

<sup>e</sup>The name has been changed to that of Thutmose II, but the queen's name can still be read.

<sup>f</sup>The conventional praise of the king; in the following lines which are very fragmentary, only the references to the queen are translated.

<sup>g</sup>Horus-name of Hatshepsut.

<sup>h</sup>Apparently a play on her name, "Associate of Amon" (Khnetmet-Amon).

assign [this] land [to] her grasp. Make her prosperous as King ——— <sup>19</sup>mayest thou [grant] for me the prayer of the first time, my petitions concerning [my] beloved (fem.) ——— <sup>20</sup>. . . . . under her majesty (fem.).

THE PUNT RELIEFS<sup>a</sup>

246. These are undoubtedly the most interesting series of reliefs in Egypt, and form almost our only early source of information for the land of Punt. They are as beautiful in execution as they are important in content. They record an important expedition of the queen thither, which was successfully concluded just before her ninth year (§ 292, l. 1).

247. The only earlier evidences of intercourse with Punt are as follows: In the Fourth Dynasty a Puntite negro appears as the slave of one of the sons of King Khufu,<sup>b</sup> in the Fifth, King Sahure sent an expedition thither (I, 161, 8), <sup>a</sup>In the Der el-Bahri temple, occupying the south half of the middle terrace (corresponding to the Birth and Youth on the north half, §§ 187 ff.). See accompanying plan (p. 105). First copied by Dümichen and published by Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 8-20, and Fleet, 1-3, and 18, a; then by Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 5-10. The excavations of the Egypt Exploration Fund since 1894 have for the first time uncovered all the Punt reliefs, and they have all now appeared in the superb publication of the Egypt Exploration Fund (Naville, The Temple of Deir-el-Bahari, Introductory Memoir, Pls. 7-10, and Vol. III, Pls. 69-86). Unfortunately, the old publications have not been collated and the portions since lost, added. It is therefore still necessary to collate Mariette and Dümichen; I have placed all copies in parallel columns as a basis for the present translation. The inscriptions and reliefs have suffered, not merely from the hand of time and modern vandalism, but the inscriptions and figures of Hatshepsut were hacked out by her political enemies after her fall, and the figure and neighboring inscriptions of Amon, wherever occurring, were later erased by Amenhotep IV. The faint traces remaining on the wall are difficult to read; hence the numerous errors in the old publications. The most useful treatments are Erman (Life in Ancient Egypt, 505 ff.), Maspero (Struggle of the Nations, 247-53, with very full citation of the older bibliography); and for Punt especially see Müller (Mitteilungen der Vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft, III, 42; also Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, II, 416) and Krall (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Blemyer und Nubier, "Denkschriften der Wiener Akademie," Philologisch-historische Classe, Vol. XLVI, 4te Abhandlung) to which is added an excursus on Punt).

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, II, 23; see Erman, Aegypten, 670.

and King Isesi sent another, which brought back a dancing dwarf (I, 351); in the Sixth, an officer of Pepi II, named Enenkhet, was killed by the Sand-dwellers on the coast, while building a ship for the Punt voyage (I, 360), and another expedition thither under the same king was led by the assistant treasurer, Thethy (I, 361); in the Eleventh Dynasty, Henu, chief treasurer of King Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III, dispatched an expedition to Punt, which he accompanied only to the coast of the Red Sea (I, 430); in the Twelfth Dynasty, an officer of Amenemhet II, named Khentkhetwer, records his safe return from Punt (I, 604-6);<sup>a</sup> and finally there was also an expedition under Sesostris II (I, 618). None of these sources contains more than the meagerest reference to the fact of the expedition.

248. The reliefs illustrating her expedition, which Hatshepsut had carved in her beautiful Der el-Bahri temple, are therefore, as stated, the first and only full source for a study of ancient Punt and the voyage thither. The expedition, like those of Henu<sup>b</sup> and of Khentkhetwer, may have left the Nile at Koptos, and proceeded by caravan to Wadi Gasûs on the Red Sea, where the ships may have been built.<sup>c</sup> But as no shift of cargo is mentioned, and the same ships depicted as sailing the Red Sea are afterward shown on the Nile, it is possible that the canal through the Wadi Tumulât connecting the Nile and the Red Sea had existed from the Twelfth Dynasty, having been made by one of the Sesostrises.<sup>d</sup> The question of the location of Punt is too large for dis-

---

<sup>a</sup>A fairy-tale in a St. Petersburg papyrus of the Middle Kingdom, in possession of M. Golénischeff, narrates the adventures of a shipwrecked sailor on a voyage to Punt.

<sup>b</sup>As Henu returned by way of Hammamat, he must have sent his expedition from the Red Sea terminus of the Koptos-Hammamat road.

<sup>c</sup>Cf. the ship of Enenkhet (I, 360).

<sup>d</sup>Strabo, XVII, 1, 26.

cussion here, but it was certainly in Africa, and probably was the Somali coast.

249. The successive scenes and the accompanying inscriptions tell the story of the expedition so clearly that no introductory outline is necessary.

250. Historically, it is important to note that Thutmose III appears only once in the Punt reliefs, and that in a subordinate position, so that, as far as this source is concerned, the queen is the author of the expedition, which she undertakes in accordance with an oracle of Amon (§ 284).

251. The arrangement of the reliefs on the wall is interesting; Punt is at the extreme south (left) on the end wall of the colonnade (see plan), and the fleet bound thither is placed by the artist with prows literally toward the south, while the returning fleet is correspondingly represented with stern toward Punt in the south and bows to the north. The successive scenes then proceed northward (to the right) and conclude on the north end-wall.

I. DEPARTURE OF THE FLEET<sup>a</sup>

Scene

252. Five vessels, two of which are still moored, the rest already under sail. The last vessel bearing over its stern the pilot's command, "Steer<sup>b</sup> to port." A small boat lashed to a tree has above it the words: "(An offering) for the life, prosperity, and health of her majesty (fem.), to Hathor, mistress of Punt [————] that she may bring wind;"

<sup>a</sup>First scene on the west wall, lower row; Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 6 below; Mariette, Voyage dans la haute Egypte, II, 63; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 11; Dümichen, Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, 1; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 72, 73.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "make."

PLAN OF THE PUNT RELIEFS AT DER EL-BAHARI

They begin at the left with Scene I, and the vessels face southward, as they should for the voyage out. On the return voyage, however (Scene V), they have bows to the north, that is, toward Egypt. The scenes are numbered with Roman numerals, corresponding to the Roman numerals in the text (pp. 104 ff.); the Arabic numerals indicate the plates of the Egypt Exploration Fund Publication.

showing that a propitiatory offering is being made ashore as they leave.<sup>a</sup>

Inscriptions

253. <sup>1</sup>Sailing in the sea, <sup>2</sup>beginning<sup>b</sup> the goodly way toward God's-Land, journeying <sup>3</sup>in peace to the land of Punt, by <sup>4</sup>the army of the Lord of the Two Lands, according to the command<sup>c</sup> <sup>5</sup>of the Lord of Gods, Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak, <sup>6</sup>in order to bring for him the marvels of <sup>7</sup>every country, because he so much loves <sup>8</sup>the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, [Makere (Hatshepsut)],<sup>d</sup> <sup>9</sup>for his father Amon-Re, lord of heaven, lord of earth, <sup>10</sup>more than the other kings <sup>11</sup>who have been <sup>12</sup>in this land <sup>13</sup>forever.

II. RECEPTION IN PUNT<sup>e</sup>

254. The voyage has been safely made, and the expedition has landed.

Scene<sup>f</sup>

On the right the "king's-messenger" advances at the head of his soldiers. A pile of necklaces, hatchets, daggers, etc., before him, ostensibly an offering to Hathor, are for trade with the Puntites, whose chief, "Perehu," advances from the left to meet the Egyptians. Behind him follow his abnormally fleshy wife,<sup>g</sup> "Eti," their children—two sons<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Cf. Erman, Aegypten, 675. Henu in the Eleventh Dynasty made a similar offering as he dispatched his Punt expedition (I, 432; see also III, 423).

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "taking the head of the way."

<sup>c</sup>See Oracle, § 285.

<sup>d</sup>The queen's name has been cut out; later Ramses II inserted his name over the old erasure; the following clause, to the word "earth," is also due to him; hence "his father" and the entire loss of connection with l. 10.

<sup>e</sup>On the south wall, lowest two rows; Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 5; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 8 and 10; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 69. As Naville has unfortunately not added the now lacking portions contained in the old publications, it is necessary here to employ them also.

<sup>f</sup>Lowest row.

<sup>g</sup>Only in the old publications, as this block has been stolen from the wall; see Dümichen, Resultate, LVII; photograph in Mariette, Voyage dans la haute Egypte, II, 62.

and a daughter<sup>a</sup>—and three Puntites<sup>a</sup> driving the “ass which bears his wife.” Behind these is a landscape in Punt, showing among the trees the houses of the Puntites set on poles (Pfahlbauten). Below the whole is a line of water, showing that the scene is near the sea or the haven in which the Egyptians have landed. The inscriptions are these:

Over the Egyptians

255. [The arrival] of the king’s-messenger in God’s-Land, together with the army which is behind him, before the chiefs of Punt; dispatched with every good thing from the court, L. P. H., for Hathor, mistress of Punt; for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of her majesty.

Before the Puntites

256. The coming of<sup>b</sup> the chiefs of Punt, doing obeisance, with bowed head, to receive this army of the king; they give praise to the lord of gods, Amon-Re ———.<sup>c</sup>

Over the Puntites

257. They say, as they pray for peace: “Why have ye come thither<sup>d</sup> unto this land, which the people<sup>e</sup> know not? Did ye come down upon the ways of heaven, or did ye sail upon the waters, upon the sea of God’s-Land? Have ye trodden (†the way of†)<sup>f</sup> Re? Lo, as for the King of Egypt, is there no way to his majesty, that we may live by the breath which he gives?”

Before the Leader of the Puntites

258. The chief of Punt, Perehu (P<sup>3</sup>-r<sup>3</sup>-hw).

<sup>a</sup>Only in the old publications.

<sup>b</sup>Egyptian “by.”

<sup>c</sup>Here evidently the name of the queen originally stood; it was then erased by Thutmose III, and in the time of Ramses II the blank was mistaken for an erasure of Amon’s name by Amenhotep IV, which name was then inserted. Traces of the old inscription are visible at the end.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., “Why have ye reached this?”

<sup>e</sup>The people of Egypt (rm). See the oracle, § 285, l. 10.

<sup>f</sup>The text has “Re” as the direct object of “trodden;” something must be supplied.

Before His Wife

His wife, Eti (ꜥ ty).<sup>a</sup>

Over the Ass

The ass which bears his wife.

III. THE TRAFFIC<sup>b</sup>Scene<sup>c</sup>

259. At the right is the tent of the “king’s-messenger,” who stands before it. Before him are the products of Punt, and approaching from the left is a long line of Puntites, bearing similar products; at their head, as before, the chief and his enormous wife. At the extreme left the Puntite landscape, as in II.

In the Tent

260. Pitching the tent of the king’s-messenger and his army, in the myrrh-terraces of Punt on the side<sup>d</sup> of the sea, in order to receive the chiefs of this country. There are offered to them bread, beer, wine, meat, fruit, everything found in Egypt, according to that which was commanded in the court, L. P. H.

Before the Egyptian

261. Reception of the tribute of the chief of Punt, by the king’s-messenger.

Before the Puntites

262. The coming of<sup>e</sup> the chief of Punt bearing tribute at the side of <sup>f</sup>the sea before the king’s-[messenger]<sup>f</sup> —————.

<sup>a</sup>Before the two sons who follow her: “His son,” before the daughter: “His daughter.”

<sup>b</sup>South wall; references as for II. <sup>c</sup>Second row from below.

<sup>d</sup>The Egyptian has a dual, “on the two sides of,” from which Dümichen (Geschichte, 120) would locate Punt on both sides of the Red Sea, but this dual is a common idiom, meaning no more than a singular. See § 262, where it is absurd to suppose that the chief of Punt is bringing his gifts “at both sides of the sea!” Dümichen’s translation “von beiden Seiten” is, moreover, impossible, for the text has “upon,” not “von.”

<sup>e</sup>Egyptian “by.”

<sup>f</sup>These words extend over the Puntites; it is uncertain how much has been lost at the end.

IV. LOADING THE VESSELS<sup>a</sup>Scene

263. Two vessels heavily laden with myrrh trees, sacks of myrrh, ivory, woods, apes; on shore<sup>b</sup> and ascending the gang-planks, men carrying sacks and trees.

Over Men with Trees on Shore

264. (Look to<sup>1</sup>)<sup>c</sup> your feet, ye people! Behold! the load is very heavy!

<sup>d</sup>Prosperity [be<sup>1</sup>] with [us,<sup>1</sup>] for the sake of the myrrh tree in the midst of God's-Land, for the house of Amon; there is the place [where<sup>1</sup>] it shall be made to grow for Makere, in his temple, according to command.

Over the Vessels

265. <sup>1</sup>The loading of the ships very heavily with marvels of <sup>2</sup>the country of Punt; all goodly fragrant woods of God's-Land, heaps of <sup>3</sup>myrrh-resin, with fresh myrrh trees, <sup>4</sup>with ebony<sup>e</sup> and pure ivory, with green gold <sup>5</sup>of Emu, (<sup>c</sup> mw), with cinnamon wood, <sup>6</sup>khesyt wood,<sup>f</sup> with ihmut-incense, <sup>7</sup>sonter-incense, eye-cosmetic, <sup>8</sup>with apes, <sup>9</sup>monkeys, <sup>10</sup>dogs, <sup>11</sup>and <sup>12</sup>with skins <sup>13</sup>of the southern panther, <sup>14</sup>with natives and <sup>15</sup>their children. Never was brought <sup>16</sup>the like of this for any king who has been since the beginning.

<sup>a</sup>South wall, uppermost row; first scene on the west wall, upper row; Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 5 and 6; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 9 and 12; Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, 2; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 69 above, and 74 below.

<sup>b</sup>At the left, over the scene of the traffic.

<sup>c</sup>A guess; the words are broken away, and some similar exclamation on the part of the men carrying the trees is to be expected. Note the Puntites represented as speaking Egyptian!

<sup>d</sup>Words of a second man.

<sup>e</sup>Fragments of the Punt wall show the felling of the ebony trees, with the inscription: "Cutting the ebony in great quantities" (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 70).

<sup>f</sup>Sweet wood, used in making incense.

V. THE RETURN VOYAGE<sup>a</sup>Scene<sup>b</sup>

266. Three vessels under full sail, with the cargo enumerated in § 265.

Inscriptions<sup>c</sup> over the Vessel

Sailing, arriving in peace, journeying to Thebes<sup>d</sup> with joy of heart, by the army of the Lord of the Two Lands, with the chiefs of this country<sup>e</sup> behind them. They have brought that, the like of which was not brought for other kings, being marvels of Punt, because of the greatness of the fame of this <sup>f</sup>revered god, Amon-Re, Lord of Thebes.<sup>f</sup>

VI. PRESENTATION OF THE TRIBUTE TO THE QUEEN BY THE CHIEFS OF PUNT, IREM, AND NEMYEW<sup>g</sup>Scene<sup>h</sup>

267. At the right the cartouches of the queen, badly defaced; approaching from the left, two lines of men with gifts, led by four lines of kneeling chiefs, being the chiefs of Punt (two lower lines), “the chiefs of Irem”<sup>i</sup> (upper middle line) and “the chiefs of Nemyew”<sup>i</sup> (Nm<sup>2</sup>yw, upper line, negroes). Behind them approach Egyptians and Puntites with myrrh trees and other products of Punt.

<sup>a</sup>Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 6; Voyage dans la haute Egypte, II, 63; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, 13; Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, 3; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 75.

<sup>b</sup>At the right of the vessels loading. <sup>c</sup>Beginning at the right.

<sup>d</sup>This scene is therefore upon the Nile, not upon the Red Sea.

<sup>e</sup>Punt.

<sup>f</sup>Restored by Ramses II, supposing that the name of Amon had been here erased by Amenhotep IV. In reality, it was the name of Hatshepsut which had been erased.

<sup>g</sup>Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 6; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, 14, 15; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 74 and 76.

<sup>h</sup>Over the loading of the ships and the return voyage.

<sup>i</sup>The location of these two countries is uncertain; Nemyew is entirely unknown, and it is a question whether Irem is one of the inland Nubian countries or on the Red Sea coast north of Punt.

Inscriptions<sup>a</sup>

268. <sup>1</sup>———— [Kis]sing the earth to Wosretkew<sup>b</sup> (Hatshepsut) by the chiefs of Punt <sup>2</sup>———— the Nubian Troglodytes of Khenthenofer, every country — of <sup>3</sup>———— doing obeisance with bowed head, bearing their tribute to the place where her majesty (fem.) is <sup>4</sup>———— ways not trodden by others <sup>5</sup>———— every country is dominion of her majesty and counted <sup>6</sup>———— lord of Thebes, as tribute each year <sup>7</sup>which her father Amon [appointed] for her, <sup>d</sup>who hath set all the lands beneath her sandals, living forever.

Over the Chiefs of Punt<sup>c</sup>

269. They say as they pray for peace from her majesty (fem.): "Hail to thee, king (sic) of Egypt, Re (fem.),<sup>f</sup> who shines like the sun, your sovereign, mistress of heaven ————. Thy name reaches as far as the circuit of heaven, the fame of [Makere (Hatshepsut)]<sup>g</sup> encircles the [sea]<sup>h</sup> ————.

VII. THE QUEEN OFFERS THE GIFTS TO AMON<sup>h</sup>Scene

270. The queen stands at the left; before her the products of Punt and Irem (lower row), brought back by the expedition, mingled with those of Nubia (upper row).

Before the Queen

271. The King himself, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut); presentation<sup>i</sup> of the marvels of Punt, the treasures

<sup>a</sup>By the queen's cartouches.

<sup>b</sup>The queen's Horus-name: "Mighty in ka's."

<sup>c</sup>More probably a short lacuna here. <sup>d</sup>Referring to Amon.

<sup>e</sup>The remains of a similar inscription are visible over the chiefs of Nemyew.

<sup>f</sup>Feminine; cf. the similar "female Horus" (obelisk-base, south, l. 1, § 314; Senmut statue, § 354; etc.).

<sup>g</sup>Traces of the cartouche in Naville, (Pl. 74); the determinative for "sea" is also probable, and suits the context admirably.

<sup>h</sup>Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 7, 8; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 16, 17; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 77, 78, and 80.

<sup>i</sup>An absolute infinitive used as the title of the scene, the preceding royal name being the date.

of God's-Land, together with the gifts of the countries of the South, with the impost of the wretched Kush,<sup>a</sup> the baskets of the Negro-land, to<sup>b</sup> Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), that she may live, abide, and her heart be joyful; that she may rule the Two Lands like Re, forever.

By the Trees<sup>c</sup>

272. Thirty-one fresh myrrh trees, brought as marvels of Punt for the majesty of this god, Amon, lord of Thebes; never was seen the like since the beginning.

Under the Trees<sup>c</sup>

Electrum; eye-cosmetic; throw-sticks of the Puntites; ebony; ivory, shells<sup>1</sup> (k 3 §).

With Panther<sup>d</sup>

A southern panther alive, captured<sup>e</sup> for her majesty (fem.) in the [south] countries.

Miscellaneous Objects

Electrum;<sup>f</sup> many panther-skins; 3,300 (small cattle).<sup>g</sup>

VIII. WEIGHING AND MEASURING THE OFFERINGS<sup>h</sup>

273. This scene is closely connected with the preceding presentation scene, of which it forms the unbroken continuation. It is accompanied by the following descriptive text:<sup>i</sup>

<sup>a</sup>By an evident emendation.

<sup>c</sup>Lower row.

<sup>b</sup>Construe with "presentation."

<sup>d</sup>Upper row.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "brought" (ynty); it is regularly used of prisoners and apparently also of wild beasts, e. g., also the lions captured by Amenhotep III (§ 865). Two more panthers show fragments of a similar inscription.

<sup>f</sup>With four chests, probably made by Thutiy (§ 376, l. 31).

<sup>g</sup>Over a gap among these offerings is the inscription recording the Asiatic campaign of Thutmose II (§ 125).

<sup>h</sup>On the right of the preceding scene in two rows; Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 8; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 18, 19; Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 79, 81, 82.

<sup>i</sup>At the extreme right in five columns, behind the figure of Thutmose III offering incense (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 82).

274. <sup>1</sup>The king himself, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut).<sup>a</sup> Taking the measure (hk't) of the electrum, laying the hand on the <sup>1</sup>— of the heaps, first instance of doing the good things. Measuring of the fresh myrrh unto Amon, lord of Thebes, lord of heaven, the first of the harvest <sup>2</sup>— — — of the marvels of the countries of Punt. The lord of Khmunu (Thoth) records them in writing; Sefkhet counts the numbers. Her<sup>b</sup> majesty (fem.) <sup>3</sup>herself, is acting with her two hands, the best of myrrh is upon all her limbs, her fragrance is divine dew, her odor is mingled with Punt, her skin is gilded<sup>c</sup> with electrum, <sup>4</sup>shining as do the stars<sup>d</sup> in the midst of the festival-hall, before the whole land. There is rejoicing by all the people; they give praise to the lord of gods, <sup>5</sup>they laud Makere (Hatshepsut) in her divine qualities, because of the greatness of the marvels which have happened for her. Never did the like happen under any gods<sup>e</sup> who were before, since the beginning. May she be given life, like Re, forever.

Measuring Scene<sup>f</sup>

275. Two huge heaps of myrrh are being scooped into measures by four men; a fifth, whose figure has been carefully erased, is Hatshepsut's favorite, "the scribe and steward, Thutiy" (§§ 369 ff.), who is keeping record of the measure for the queen; while the god Thoth at the extreme right performs a similar office for Amon.

Over the Myrrh Heaps

276. Heaps of myrrh in great quantities.

Over the Men Measuring

277. Measuring the fresh myrrh, in great quantities, for Amon, lord of Thebes; marvels of the countries of Punt, treasures of God's-Land, for the sake of the life, prosperity and health ———.<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The date.

<sup>b</sup>Read -s for -j.

<sup>c</sup>A bold figure referring to the yellow hue of the women of ancient Egypt.

<sup>d</sup>Yellow stars painted on a blue field form a common ceiling decoration. For comparison of the king with a star, not so common as with the sun, see I, 510 ff., l. 2.

<sup>e</sup>That is, "kings."

<sup>f</sup>Lower row (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 79).

<sup>g</sup>The queen's name has been erased.

Before Thoth

278. Recording in writing, reckoning the numbers, summing up in millions, hundreds of thousands, tens of thousands, thousands and hundreds; reception of the marvels of Punt, <sup>a</sup>for Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, lord of heaven.<sup>a</sup>

Weighing Scene<sup>b</sup>

279. A huge pair of balances piled on one side with commercial gold in large rings, against weights in the form of cows on the other side, is presided over by the gods Horus and Dedun of Nubia,<sup>c</sup> standing at the left. At the right is Sefkhet, the goddess of letters, keeping record. Round and cow "weights," and quantities of "electrum" in bars and rings, are piled up beside the balances.

Over the Balances

280. The balances, accurate and true, of Thoth, which the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, [Make]re (Hatshepsut), made for her father, Amon, lord of Thebes, in order to weigh the silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, and every splendid costly stone, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of her majesty (fem.) ———.<sup>d</sup>

Under the Balances

281. Weighing the gold and electrum, — the impost of the southern countries, for Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, ———, presider over Karnak ———.<sup>d</sup>

Before Sejkhet

282. Recording in writing, reckoning the numbers, summing up in millions, hundreds of thousands, tens of thousands, thousands, and hundreds. Reception of the marvels of the South countries, for Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak.

<sup>a</sup>Amon is here not properly restored by Ramses II; see end of 9.

<sup>b</sup>Upper row (Naviile, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 81).

<sup>c</sup>Because the gold comes from Nubia.

<sup>d</sup>The name of the queen has been erased.

IX. FORMAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE SUCCESS OF THE EXPEDITION BEFORE AMON<sup>a</sup>Scene

283. The queen stands at the extreme left, staff in hand, before Amon, enthroned at the extreme right. Behind the queen is the sacred barque of Amon borne by priests,<sup>b</sup> before which Thutmose III<sup>c</sup> offers “of the best of fresh myrrh.”

Inscription

284. This long text in vertical lines between the queen and Amon falls into two parts. The first contains the titulary and encomium of the queen (ll. 1-4), followed by the oracle of Amon (ll. 4-6), in accordance with which the expedition was made. It is here repeated, in order to enforce the statement that all that was commanded has been done (l. 6). To this favorable statement Amon replies with praise (ll. 7-9), and reverts to a description of former times when the “myrrh-terraces” were not visited by Egyptians, but their products were obtained only through intermediaries (ll. 10-12). The success of future expeditions is promised, and his guidance of the expedition just successfully carried out is mentioned. The inscription closes with further praise of the queen, which gradually becomes too mutilated for translation.

<sup>a</sup>At the extreme right; Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 10; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 20; through some confusion in Dümichen's papers his l. 10 and l. 11 have exchanged places, and Mariette has the same mistake! It is clear, therefore, that Mariette's text is drawn from Dümichen, an astonishing number of errors having crept in during the process. From these sources Sethe constructed a skilfully emended text (Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 103, 104), which is sustained in almost all cases by the last and best text (Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 84), which is undoubtedly very nearly correct. The entire inscription has been carefully hacked away; hence the numerous errors in the old publications, a collation of which demonstrates the superiority of Navelle's texts.

<sup>b</sup>Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 83.

<sup>c</sup>Ibid., 82.

Titles and Encomium of Hatshepsut

285. <sup>a1</sup>Horus: Mighty in Ka's; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Fresh in Years; Golden Horus: Divine in Diadems; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Makere (Hatshepsut), — of Amon, whom he loves, who is upon his throne, for whom he has made to flourish the inheritance of the Two Lands, the kingdom of the South and North, <sup>2</sup>to whom he hath given that which the sun encompasses, that which Keb and Nut inclose. She hath no enemies among the Southern, she hath no foes among the Northern; the heavens and every country which the god hath created, they all labor for her. <sup>3</sup>They come to her with fearful heart, their chiefs with bowed head, their gifts upon their back. They present to her their children that there may be<sup>b</sup> <sup>4</sup>given to them the breath of life, because of the greatness of the fame of her father, Amon, who hath set all lands beneath her sandals.

The Oracle

The king himself, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut). The majesty of the court made supplication at the steps<sup>c</sup> of the <sup>5</sup>lord of [gods]; a command was heard from the great throne, an oracle of the god himself, that the ways to Punt should be searched out, that the highways to the Myrrh-terraces should be penetrated: <sup>6</sup>“I<sup>d</sup> will lead the army on water and on land, to bring marvels from God's-Land for this god, for the fashioner of her beauty.” It was done, according to all that the majesty of this revered god commanded, according to the desire of her majesty (fem.), in order that she might be given life, stability, and satisfaction, like Re, forever.

Promises of Amon

286. <sup>7</sup>Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes: “Welcome!<sup>e</sup> my sweet daughter, my favorite, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>a</sup>The first line at the left before the queen. This first part comprises six lines.

<sup>b</sup>Read [m] yswt? Compare § 804, l. 3.

<sup>c</sup>The steps leading up to his throne, which have been hacked away in the relief, but are shown to have existed by the lower ends of the lines of text which shorten by steps in front of the throne (Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 84).

<sup>d</sup>The first person in the same sentence where the god occurs in the third person is of course very strange.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., “Come! Come! in peace.”

Makere (Hatshepsut), who makes my beautiful monuments, who purifies the seat of the great ennead of gods for my dwelling, as a memorial of her love. <sup>8</sup>Thou art the king, taking possession of the Two Lands, Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut, great in oblations, pure in food-offerings. Thou satisfiest my heart at all times; I have given thee all life and satisfaction from me, all stability from me, all health from me, all joy from me, I have given to thee all lands and all countries, wherein thy heart is glad. I have long intended them for thee, and the æons shall behold them until those myriads of years of usefulness which I have thought to spend<sup>1</sup>. <sup>10</sup>I have given to thee all Punt as far as the lands of the gods of God's-Land."

Punt in Former Time

287. "No one trod the Myrrh-terraces, which the people (rmṯ) knew not; it was heard of from mouth to mouth <sup>11</sup>by hearsay of the ancestors —. The marvels brought thence under thy fathers, the Kings of Lower Egypt, were brought from one to another, and since the time of <sup>12</sup>the ancestors of the Kings of Upper Egypt, who were of old, as a return for many payments;<sup>a</sup> none reaching them<sup>b</sup> except thy carriers."

Punt under the Queen

288. "But I will cause thy army to tread them,<sup>b</sup> <sup>13</sup>I have led them on water and on land, to explore<sup>c</sup> the waters of inaccessible channels, and I have reached the Myrrh-terraces."

"It is a glorious region of God's-Land; it is indeed my place of delight. I have made it for myself, in order to<sup>d</sup> <sup>14</sup>divert<sup>1</sup> my heart, together with Mut, Hathor, Wereret, mistress of Punt, the mistress, 'Great in Sorcery,'<sup>e</sup> mistress of all gods. They<sup>f</sup> took myrrh as they wished, they loaded the vessels to their hearts' content, <sup>15</sup>with fresh myrrh trees, every good gift of this country, Puntites whom the people (rmṯ) know not, Southernns of God's-Land. I conciliated them by<sup>g</sup> love

<sup>a</sup>Meaning that in going from hand to hand many successive prices were paid.

<sup>b</sup>The Myrrh-terraces.

<sup>c</sup>This is the word (wb >) used long before of exploring unknown countries in the Old Kingdom by Harkhuf (I, 333, 334) and employed again by the queen in her speech (§ 294, l. 11).

<sup>d</sup>Read r for yr.

<sup>f</sup>Hatshepsut's people.

<sup>e</sup>Isis.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "because of."

that they might give <sup>16</sup>to thee praise, because thou art a god, because of thy fame in the countries. I know [them], I am their wise lord, [—] I am the begetter, Amon-Re; my daughter, who binds the lords, is the king [Makere] (Hatshepsut). I have begotten her for myself. I am thy father, who sets thy fear <sup>17</sup>among the Nine Bows, while they come in peace to all gods. They have brought all the marvels, every beautiful thing of God's-Land, for which thy majesty<sup>a</sup> sent them: heaps of <sup>18</sup>gum of myrrh, and enduring trees bearing fresh myrrh, united in the festival-hall, to be seen of the lord of the gods. May thy majesty cause them to grow.<sup>b</sup> ——— my temple, <sup>19</sup>in order to delight my heart among them. My name is before the gods, thy name<sup>c</sup> is before all the living, forever. Heaven and earth are flooded with incense; odors are in the Great House. Mayest thou offer them to me, pure <sup>20</sup>and cleansed, in order to express the ointment for the divine limbs, to offer myrrh, to make ointment, to make festive my statue with necklaces, while I am making <sup>21</sup>libations for thee. My heart is glad because of seeing thee." . . . . .<sup>d</sup>

X. FORMAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE SUCCESS OF THE EXPEDITION TO THE COURT<sup>e</sup>

Scene

289. The queen is enthroned at the left in a splendid kiosk, and before her are the figures of three noblemen (see § 348). All the figures have been hacked out.

<sup>a</sup>Feminine! The ḫ of the second feminine singular suffix is visible under the scourge; the ḫ of "majesty" (ḫn'ḫ) should be over the scourge, as in l. 18.

<sup>b</sup>The verb is s'rwḏ'k with nominal subject (sḏm'k form, Sethe, Verbum, II, § 434).

<sup>c</sup>Read: rn'ḫ pw. That this is the proper emendation is shown by the Semneh inscription of Thutmose III (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 52, b, line before goddess).

<sup>d</sup>The remainder, consisting of four short and two long lines, is very fragmentary and contains only the conventional promises of the gods.

<sup>e</sup>On the south side of the causeway which ascends through the center of the middle terrace. The date and a few random words were published by Dümichen (Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, 18, a); but the first complete text by Naville (Recueil, 18, Pl. III, corrections, ibid., 19, 212, 213; much better, Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 85, 86.

Inscriptions

290. The texts with the noblemen are as follows:

With the First Man

Behold, it was commanded, as follows: "They shall give the court,<sup>a</sup> L. P. H., to the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, chief treasurer, Nehsi,<sup>b</sup> to dispatch the army [to] Punt."

With the Two Other Men

Over both are the words: "The king's-dignitaries, the companions of the court, L. P. H.," and over the man in the middle: "Steward of Amon, Senmut," the well-known favorite of the queen (see §§ 345 ff.). The third man bears no individual inscription.<sup>c</sup> All three figures have been hacked out by political enemies after the triumph of Thutmose III.

The Long Inscription<sup>d</sup>

291. This is perhaps the most interesting inscription in the Punt series. It furnishes the date ("year 9") when the expedition had already safely returned. The queen, having publicly exhibited the results of the expedition (VIII), and having announced its success to Amon himself (IX), now holds ceremonious court, to announce in a speech from the

<sup>a</sup>The meaning of the phrase is not clear, but it seems as if "court" were here used for "decree of the court."

<sup>b</sup>This man has therefore been identified as "the king's-messenger" (§§ 260, 261) who commanded the Punt expedition. But this conclusion does not follow; the word "dispatch" (sby) does not mean to conduct, as we may see in the exactly parallel case of Henu (I, 427 ff.; especially § 432, ll. 13, 14), who conducted the expedition only to the sea and then dispatched (sby) it to Punt, returning then, not from Punt, but merely "from the sea." Hence we have no evidence that Nehsi did more than accompany the expedition to the sea, and the "king's-messenger" is probably a different man.

<sup>c</sup>He is supposed by Spiegelberg (Recueil, 22, 115-25) to be Thutiy (§§ 369 ff.).

<sup>d</sup>In 22 columns before the queen; it has all been more or less hacked out, the last six lines (excluding one phrase) and the upper fourth of lines 6-16 completely so.

throne to her nobles the unprecedented success of the expedition. She glorifies herself as having made a Punt for Amon in Egypt<sup>a</sup> (ll. 14 and 16), and exhorts them to maintain in the future the increased offerings which she has established (ll. 8 and 15). This last was apparently the practical purpose of the session.

Introduction

292. <sup>1</sup>Year 9, occurred the sitting in the audience-hall,<sup>b</sup> the king's-appearance with the etef-crown, upon the great throne of electrum, in the midst of the splendors of his<sup>c</sup> palace. The grandees, the companions of the court, came to hear; a command was brought, a <sup>2</sup>royal edict to his<sup>c</sup> dignitaries, the divine fathers, the companions of the king, the grandees:

Queen's Speech

293. "I shine forever in your faces through that which my father hath desired.<sup>d</sup> Truly, it was greatly my desire in doing, that I should make <sup>3</sup>great him that begat me; and in assigning to my father, that I should make splendid for him all his offerings; that which my fathers, the ancestors knew not, I am doing as the Great One<sup>e</sup> (did) <sup>4</sup>to the Lord of Eternity; I am adding increase to that which was formerly done. I will cause it to be said to posterity: 'How beautiful is she,

---

<sup>a</sup>In the weighing and measuring scene the trees, of which there were three, appear planted in tubs; and again they appear planted in the ground, and thus a "Punt" was made for the god. It is possible that not only the trees, but also the terraces of the temple are a part of this "Punt," and that the terraced structure of the temple planted with myrrh trees thus reproduced the "myrrh-terraces." This could not be better described in the text than by calling it "a Punt." The fact that the temple is a reproduction of the small terraced temple of Mentuhotep III does not prohibit us from supposing that the queen was conscious of the resemblance above noted. The service and equipment of the temple receive some light from the mention of its High Priest, with twelve subordinate priests in four orders (see note, § 679).

<sup>b</sup>See I, 239, and note.

<sup>c</sup>These masculine pronouns simply represent the word "king" here, (ḥꜥ-stny and šps'w-stny is what is meant), and do not refer personally to the queen.

<sup>d</sup>"I shine as king, because my father Amon willed it so."

<sup>e</sup>"Great One" is feminine and means Isis, referring to that which Isis did for the deceased Osiris, "the Lord of Eternity."

through whom this has happened,' because I have been so very excellent to him, and the heart<sup>a</sup> <sup>5</sup>of my heart<sup>a</sup> has been replete with that which is due to him. I am his splendor 'on high, and in the nether world'. I have entered into the qualities of the august god, he hath opened <sup>6</sup>———. He hath recognized my excellence, that I speak a great thing 'which' I set among you; it shall shine for you upon the land of the living <sup>7</sup>——— ye may grasp my virtues. I am the god, the beginning of being, nothing fails that goes out of my mouth, beloved <sup>8</sup>——— that which he desired. Ye shall fulfil according to that which I have exacted. Your lifetime is the life 'that is' in my mouth<sup>b</sup> '— —' <sup>9</sup>——— for the future. I have given a command of my majesty that the offerings of him who begat me should be made splendid, that the ointment should be increased <sup>10</sup>——— of prime ointment of the pure ox, in order to supply with offerings <sup>11</sup>———."

Punt Expedition Commanded

294. "——— [a decree of] my majesty commanding to send to the Myrrh-terraces, to explore his ways 'for him,' to learn his circuit, to open his highways, according to the command of my father, Amon. <sup>12</sup>——— for choice ointment, in order to express ointment for the divine limbs, which I owed to the lord of gods, in order to establish the laws of his house. Trees were taken up in God's-Land, and set in the ground in <sup>13</sup>[Egypt]<sup>c</sup> ——— for the king of the gods. They were brought<sup>d</sup> bearing myrrh therein for expressing ointment for the divine limbs, which I owed to the lord of Gods."

Punt in Egypt

295. Said my majesty (fem.): "I will cause you to know that which is commanded me, I have hearkened to my father <sup>14</sup>——— that which he hath — commanding me to establish for him a Punt in his

<sup>a</sup>Two different words in Egyptian, but the distinction between them, if any, is not clear; see the thirtieth chapter of the "Book of the Dead." One expects "for his heart."

<sup>b</sup>My words control your lives?

<sup>c</sup>The pits in which certain trees had been planted were found by the Fund excavations before the lower terrace at the inner end of the dromos. They contained earth and tree stumps which proved to be of the Mimusops, that is, the Persea (Naville, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 52).

<sup>d</sup>Read: yn' tw.

house, to plant the trees of God's-Land beside his temple, in his garden, according as he commanded. It was done, in order to endow the offerings which I owed. <sup>15</sup>—— I was [not] neglectful of that which he needed. Ye shall fulfil according to my regulations without transgression of that which my mouth hath given. He hath desired me as his favorite; I know all that he loveth; he is a god <sup>16</sup>—— his desire and that which he loveth [—]. I have made for him a Punt in his garden, just as he commanded me, for Thebes. It is large for him, he walks abroad in it."<sup>a</sup> <sup>17</sup>——<sup>b</sup> . . . . . <sup>22</sup>—— Hathor, mistress of myrrh; she hath opened to thee (fem.) her two arms with resin — — — —.

INSCRIPTION OF THE SPEOS ARTEMIDOS<sup>c</sup>

296. In this remarkable document the energetic queen has left a record of her systematic restorations in the temples which had been desolated by the barbarities of the Hyksos, and had remained so down to her reign. There is a reference to the Punt expedition (l. 13), so that the inscription dates from some time after the ninth year. Its references to the Hyksos coincide remarkably with the account of their treatment of the temples as recorded by Manetho. The Hyksos are called "Asiatics" (<sup>c</sup> mw), and their city is "Avaris (h·t-w<sup>c</sup> r·t) of the Northland." The building of the cliff-temple of Pakht, on whose front the inscription is cut, is mentioned only incidentally with the queen's other pious works. The language is often unusual, and the whole is so badly preserved that there are necessarily many omissions in the translation.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "under it," referring to the trees.

<sup>b</sup>Ll. 17-21 are so completely hacked out that not a sign can be read.

<sup>c</sup>Cut high up on the front of the cliff-temple of Pakht, excavated at Benihasan by Hatshepsut and Thutmose III, called Speos Artemidos by the Greeks, Stabl Antar by the modern natives. The inscription was discovered and published by Golénischeff (Recueil, VI, 20; see also ibid., III, 1-7). It is in a bad state of preservation, and the copy is evidently a hurried one.

The Queen's Power

297. <sup>1</sup>. . . . . <sup>2</sup>He hath established her great name like the heavens. She hath made excellent the <sup>1</sup>records<sup>1</sup> of her might over the Red Land of the Goddess of the Mountain<sup>a</sup> as far as the rising <sup>3</sup>— — —<sup>1</sup> set his flame behind the two hill-countries.

Restoration of the Temples

298. The altars are opened, the sanctuaries <sup>4</sup>are enlarged — the desire of all gods; every one is in possession of the dwelling which he has loved, his ka rests upon his throne . . . <sup>5</sup>. . . . . their colonnades . . . . . <sup>6</sup>. . . . .<sup>b</sup> Every [statue] is overlaid on its body with electrum of Emu.<sup>c</sup> Their feasts are permanent at the division of the time, <sup>7</sup>the festival offering [is made] at its time by the <sup>1</sup>authority<sup>1</sup> of the command of my<sup>d</sup> maker; the regulations of the commandant are perpetuated, which he made in this <sup>8</sup>— —. My divine heart searches for the sake of the future; [my] heart — that which it had not known forever, because of the command which the hidden persea tree, lord of myriads (of years), communicates.

The Queen's Piety and Power

299. <sup>9</sup>I have made bright the truth which he loved, [I] know that he liveth by it (the truth);<sup>e</sup> it is my bread, I eat of its brightness,<sup>f</sup> I am <sup>10</sup>a likeness from [his] limbs, one with him. He hath begotten me, to make strong his might in this land. — <sup>1</sup>lord<sup>1</sup> — Atum <sup>11</sup>in —; Khepri doing that which Re exacted at the foundation (of the world). The lands together are under my authority, the Black and the Red are under my authority. <sup>12</sup>My fame makes the great ones of the countries to bow down, while the uraeus upon my forehead —<sup>g</sup> all lands. The

---

<sup>a</sup>See Sinuhe, I, 493, l. 15.
<sup>b</sup>The passage refers to rebuilding the temples.
<sup>c</sup>Written here 'm > mw; cf. Müller, Asien und Europa, 119.
<sup>d</sup>Beginning with l. 7, the first person appears and continues to the end of the inscription, the queen being the speaker.
<sup>e</sup>In the sun-hymn of Sute and Hor (British Museum, 826, l. 16), Sute says to the sun-god, "I acted as an effective leader among thy monuments, performing the truth of thy heart, I know thou restest in truth."
<sup>f</sup>An extraordinary idea, but clearly in the text.
<sup>g</sup>Doubtless a verb of subjugating or the like.

land of <sup>13</sup>Reshu<sup>a</sup> and the land of Yu,<sup>b</sup> they cannot 'hide' from my majesty; Punt is mine, and the fields of <sup>14</sup>sycamore bearing fresh myrrh, the highways which were closed up, and the two ways. <sup>15</sup>My soldiers smote that which was '— — —' since my appearance as king.

Restoration of the Temple of Cusae

300. The temple of the Mistress of Cusae<sup>c</sup> which had begun to fall to ruin, the ground had swallowed up its august sanctuary, so that the children played upon its house; <sup>17</sup>the serpent,<sup>d</sup> it caused no fear; the poor counted the '—' in the 'covering',<sup>e</sup> <sup>18</sup>no processions 'marched'. I adorned it, having been built anew, I overlaid its image with gold; <sup>19</sup>in order to protect its city . . . . .

Building of the Temple of Pakht

301. Pakht the great, who traverses the valleys in the midst of the eastland, <sup>20</sup>whose ways are 'storm-beaten' . . . . . I made her temple with that which was due <sup>21</sup>to her ennead of gods. The doors were of acacia wood, fitted with:bronze. ————<sup>f</sup> <sup>22</sup>at the seasons. The priests knew this; her city '— — —' ————<sup>f</sup> <sup>23</sup>I made divine their temples, furnished with that which comes forth '—' ————<sup>f</sup> . . . <sup>24</sup>. . . . . ———— the offering-table [was wrought] with <sup>25</sup>silver, and gold, chests of linen, every vessel that abides in the place. . . . .

Restoration of an Unknown Temple<sup>g</sup>

302. . . . . . <sup>26</sup>. . . . . in whose house there was no understanding; the divine fathers . . . . . <sup>27</sup>. . . . . He gave readiness to the arms of the god.<sup>h</sup> I built his great temple of limestone of Ayan, its '—' were <sup>28</sup>of alabaster of Hatnub, the doors were of copper, the '—'

<sup>a</sup>R 2-3 2 w probably for R 2-3 2-4 y; see Müller, Asien und Europa, 133.

<sup>b</sup>Y w w.

<sup>c</sup>Fourteenth nome of Upper Egypt, whose goddess was a local Hathor.

<sup>d</sup>Perhaps referring to the serpent of the goddess.

<sup>e</sup>Possibly: "The poor counted the breaches in the wall;" but this is a mere guess.

<sup>f</sup>Nearly one-half line.

<sup>g</sup>The paragraph deals with another divinity and his temple; it is not clear who he may be.

<sup>h</sup>This must refer to the queen herself.

thereon were of electrum, splendid with "Him-of-the-Two-Lofty-Feathers."<sup>a</sup> [— —] ————. I [honor]ed <sup>29</sup>the majesty of this god with feasts [— —] the feast of Thoth; I added to him [offerings] anew <sup>30</sup>. . . . . I doubled for him the offerings, an <sup>31</sup>increase upon that which had been previously; as I did for the Eight, for Khnum in [all] his forms, for Heket, Reneret and <sup>32</sup>Meskhene together, in order to build ———— [Neh]emewi and Nehebkew, . . . . . <sup>33</sup>. . . . . great in <sup>34</sup>walls, and in foundation. I equipped it; I made it festive, I gave houses to the lord . . . . . <sup>35</sup>whom Amon has made to appear as king himself upon the throne of Horus.

Restoration of the Desolation of the Hyksos

303. Hear ye, all persons! ye people as many as ye are! I have done this according to the design of my <sup>36</sup>heart.<sup>b</sup> . . . . . I have restored that which was ruins, I have raised up that which was unfinished<sup>c</sup> <sup>37</sup>since the Asiatics (<sup>c</sup> mw) were in the midst of Avaris of the Northland, and the barbarians<sup>d</sup> were in the midst of them, <sup>38</sup>overthrow-

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "the lofty of two feathers," a title of Min, a figure of whom was therefore on the door. The "shadow," which was often put on the door, has the determinative of Min's figure; hence there is no doubt that it is such a "shadow," which is meant here.

<sup>b</sup>This rare phrase (m kꜣꜣ ybꜣy) occurs also on the statue of Senmut (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 25, i, correct nb to k), and in a clear passage over vases "of costly stone, which his majesty made according to the design (kꜣꜣ) of his own heart" (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1187) among offerings of Thutmose III. See Breasted, Proceedings of the Biblical Society of Archaeology, May, 1901, 237.

<sup>c</sup>štp-hꜣ ty-c, lit., "begun;" cf. use of štp in beginning a journey.

<sup>d</sup>The same term is applied by Thutmose III to his foes in Lebanon (II, 548). W. M. Müller (Mittheilungen der Vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft, 1898, Heft 3, p. 7), would recognize in this term (šmꜣ mw or šꜣ mw) a class or nationality different from the Hyksos; but if the word means simply strangers (Coptic "shemmo"), as Müller thinks, it indicates no distinction at all, for the Hyksos were also "strangers." The construction of the whole context shows that it is one of those poetic passages common in such inscriptions, the parallelism is evident:

"I have restored that which was ruins,
I have raised up that which was unfinished,
Since the Asiatics were in the midst of Avaris of the Northland,
And the barbarians were in the midst of them."

"Them" is therefore parallel with the "Northland," and does not refer to the "Asiatics." That a land or a part of it should be resumed by a plural pronoun is very common in the inscriptions of Egypt.

ing that which was made, while they ruled in ignorance<sup>a</sup> of Re. He<sup>b</sup> did not do according to the divine command until my majesty (fem.). When I was <sup>39</sup>firm upon the throne of Re, I was ennobled until the two periods of years<sup>c</sup> [— — —] I came as Hor-watit<sup>d</sup> <sup>40</sup>flaming against my enemies. I removed the abomination of the great god, [I] captured the land of their sandals.<sup>e</sup> It is a regulation of the <sup>42</sup>fathers . . . . . I have commanded that my [titulary] abide like the mountains; when the sun <sup>42</sup>shines, (its) rays are bright upon the titulary of my majesty; my Horus is high upon the standard [—] forever.

THE KARNAK OBELISKS<sup>f</sup>

304. Of the queen's four obelisks at Karnak, one pair has entirely disappeared from the temple; their position is unknown, and only the summit of one is now preserved in Cairo (§ 320 and Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 30, Pl. II); of the surviving pair one still stands behind the great Nineteenth Dynasty hypostyle hall, and the summit of its fallen companion lies near by.

Standing Obelisk

The standing survivor is now the largest obelisk in Egypt, being 97½ feet high.<sup>g</sup> The history of these two important monuments can be followed for a long period. Work upon them was begun on the first of Mechir (sixth month) in the

<sup>a</sup>M hm, or it may mean "without."

<sup>b</sup>A sudden change of number; the individual ruler of the Hyksos is meant.

<sup>c</sup>Each sixty years long.

<sup>d</sup>Meaning: "the only Horus," and of the feminine gender.

<sup>e</sup>The land which they trod.

<sup>f</sup>Inscriptions on standing obelisk: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 22-24, d; Champollion, Monuments, IV, 314; Notices descriptives, II, 133 ff.; Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, I, 31 ff. Fallen obelisk: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 24, a-c; Recueil, X, 142; 23, 195 f.; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 136.

<sup>g</sup>Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 131 (Neville's statement that they are the largest known (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 52) is an error; the obelisk of Thutmose III, before the Lateran in Rome, is the highest known; see § 626).

queen's fifteenth year<sup>a</sup> by Senmut, the queen's favorite (§§ 345 ff.). The quarry work of clearing the enormous shafts from the granite at Assuan was completed on the last of Mesore (twelfth month) of the queen's sixteenth year, seven months after beginning. Transported to Thebes on a huge barge, drawn by a large fleet of galleys (see §§ 322 ff.), they were destined for erection, not before a temple, as is customary, but in the historic hall built between his two Karnak pylons,<sup>b</sup> by the queen's father, Thutmose I, the hall where, fifteen years before, her father had been supplanted by Thutmose III. Whether this fact influenced her in the following procedure is, of course, purely conjectural, but in order to introduce her obelisks into this hall, she broke away the southern wall, removed all the cedar columns of Thutmose I on the southern side and four on the northern, of course unroofing all but the northern quarter of the hall,<sup>c</sup> and thus totally dismantling the place, which could no longer be employed for religious ceremonial.

305. A relief<sup>d</sup> on a few fragmentary blocks at Karnak shows the queen presenting two obelisks to Amon of Karnak; these may be the pair with which we are now dealing. Before the queen is the following inscription:

The king himself;<sup>e</sup> erection of two great obelisks for her (sic!) father, Amon-Re, in front of the august colonnade, wrought with exceedingly plentiful electrum. Their height pierces to heaven, illuminating the Two Lands like the sun-disk. Never was done the like since the beginning; that she might be given life.

<sup>a</sup>Base, north side, § 318, l. 8.

<sup>b</sup>IV and V. See § 317, ll. 7-8.

<sup>c</sup>Thutmose III restored the northern half (§§ 600-2), and Amenhotep II, the southern (§§ 803 ff.).

<sup>d</sup>Found by Legrain, and reported by Naville at the Congress at Rome (see Revue égyptologique, IX, 108-10); partially published by Naville (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 53) and fully by Naville and Legrain (Annales du Musée Guimet, XXX, Pl. XII, A).

<sup>e</sup>The relation of this phrase to the following is difficult.

306. On erection, the obelisks were supplied with the usual single, central column of inscription on each face. Later, side columns were added. Some time before the completion of the side-column inscriptions, the obelisks were surrounded by masonry up to the fifth scene from the top, and the inscriptions never were finished (see Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 54, 55). During the extermination of the Amon cult by Amenhotep IV, he had the name of Amon erased from them,<sup>a</sup> and two or three generations afterward the name of the dishonored god was recut by Seti I.<sup>b</sup>

307. The inscriptions on the shaft will be clear from the translation below; those of the base are of unusual interest. They furnish the date of the obelisks, viz., the end of the fifteenth and the beginning of the sixteenth year of the queen's reign. Their erection celebrates "the first occurrence" of the queen's jubilee, a feast marking the thirtieth anniversary of the sovereign's appointment as crown prince. This would place the queen's appointment fifteen years before her accession to the throne.

I. SHAFT INSCRIPTIONS; MIDDLE COLUMNS

South Side

308. Horus: Wosretkew, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Makere, brilliant emanation of Amon, whom he has caused to appear as king upon the throne of Horus before the splendors<sup>c</sup> of the Great House, whom the great ennead of gods have brought up to be mistress of the circuit of the sun. They have united her with life, satisfaction, and joy of heart before the living; Son of Re, Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut, beloved of Amon-Re, king of gods, who is given life, like Re, forever.

<sup>a</sup>Only down to the surrounding masonry on the standing obelisk (see Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 21 f.).

<sup>b</sup>Side columns of the shaft inscriptions, south and west sides (§ 312).

<sup>c</sup>The meaning of this phrase is clear from the last scene in the Punt reliefs (§ 292, l. 1).

West Side

309. Horus: Wosretkew; Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Fresh in Years; Golden Horus; Divine of Diadems; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Lord of the Two Lands, Makere. She made (it<sup>a</sup>) as her monument for her father Amon, lord of Thebes, erecting for him two great obelisks at the august gate (named): "Amon-is-Great-in-Terror,"<sup>b</sup> wrought with very much electrum; which illuminate the Two Lands like the sun; never was the like made since the beginning. May the Son of Re, Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut, be given life through him, like Re, forever.

North Side

310. Like the west side as far as Makere, then:

Her father Amon hath established her great name; Makere upon the august Ished tree; her annals are myriads of years, possessing life, stability, and satisfaction. Son of Re, Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut, beloved of Amon-Re, king of gods— — — — —. (¶When<sup>1</sup>) she celebrated [¶for<sup>1</sup>] him the first occurrence of the royal jubilee, in order that she may be given life forever.

East Side

311. Like the south side as far as Makere, then:

Beloved of Amon. Her majesty (fem.) made the name of her father established upon this monument, and abiding, when favor was shown to the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, the Lord of the Two Lands, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), by the majesty of this god,<sup>c</sup> when the two great obelisks were erected by her majesty (fem.) on the first occurrence;<sup>d</sup> the lord of the gods said: "Thy father, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, gave command to erect obelisks,<sup>e</sup> and thy majesty (fem.) will repeat<sup>f</sup> the monuments, in order that thou mayest live forever."

<sup>a</sup>The obelisk.

<sup>b</sup>This is the gate of Pylon V.

<sup>c</sup>The "favor" shown to her father consisted in the honor paid him in that the following oracle of Amon came to the queen regarding her father.

<sup>d</sup>Of the jubilee.

<sup>e</sup>These are the two obelisks before the Karnak pylon of Thutmose I (see §§ 86 ff.).

<sup>f</sup>That is, she will build obelisks as her father had done.

II. SHAFT INSCRIPTIONS; SIDE COLUMNS<sup>a</sup>

312. These represent thirty-two oblation scenes, eight on each side of the shaft; of each eight (beginning at the top), the second and seventh represent Thutmose III, the fourth Thutmose I, and the rest the queen, all offering to Amon, with the exception that on the west and south sides Seti I has cut out the queen's name in the fifth scene and inserted the inscription: "Son of Re, Seti-Merneptah, who restored the monument of his father Amon-Re, lord of heaven."<sup>b</sup>

313. The pyramidion at the top contains a fourfold representation of Amon blessing and crowning the queen.<sup>c</sup>

III. BASE INSCRIPTION

Titulary and Encomium of the Queen

314. <sup>d1</sup>Live the female Horus . . . . .<sup>e</sup> daughter of Amon-Re, his favorite, <sup>2</sup>his only one, who exists by him, the splendid part of the All-Lord, whose beauty the spirits of Heliopolis fashioned; who hath taken the land like Irsu,<sup>f</sup> whom he hath created to wear his diadem, <sup>3</sup>who exists like Khepri<sup>g</sup> (Hpry), who shines with crowns like "Him-of-the-Horizon," the pure egg, the excellent seed, whom the two Sorceresses<sup>h</sup> reared, whom Amon himself caused to appear <sup>4</sup>upon his

<sup>a</sup>These are later additions.

<sup>b</sup>This is on the south side; the west side has: "Renewal of the monument, which the lord of diadems, Seti-Merneptah, made." This is the restoration by Seti I of the name of Amon, erased by Amenhotep IV. This erasure is found only in the five upper scenes, showing that the obelisk was surrounded by masonry up to that point; cf. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 54, 55. Cf. similar restoration by Seti I, § 878.

<sup>c</sup>See Sethe's plate (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, Pl. II).

<sup>d</sup>South side.

<sup>e</sup>Here follows the full titulary of the queen; cf. coronation inscription (§ 239).

<sup>f</sup>A god's name, lit., "He who made him" (yr-sw), a common term for "his father." See also § 985.

<sup>g</sup>God of continued existence; this and the following phrase show threefold paronomasia: hpr i hprw my hpry, h c i h c w my y c h wty.

<sup>h</sup>A divine name, lit., "two great in sorcery," here referring to Isis and Nephthys; it is more often applied to Isis alone; the reference is to their similar rearing of Horus in the mythology.

throne in Hermonthis, whom he chose to protect Egypt, to 'defend' the people; the female Horus, avengeress of her father, the oldest (daughter)<sup>a</sup> of the "Bull-of-his-Mother,"<sup>b</sup> whom Re<sup>c</sup> begat to make for himself excellent seed upon earth for the well-being of the people; his living portrait, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), the electrum of kings.<sup>d</sup>

Queen's Dedication

315. <sup>e</sup>She made (them)<sup>e</sup> as her monument for her father, Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak, making for him two great obelisks of enduring granite of the South,<sup>f</sup> (their) summit[s] being of electrum of the best of every country, which are seen on both [sides] of the river. Their rays flood the Two Lands when the sun rises between them,<sup>g</sup> as he dawns in the horizon of heaven.

Speech of the Queen

316. <sup>h</sup>"I have done this from a loving heart<sup>i</sup> for my father Amon; I have entered upon his [project] of the first occurrence,<sup>j</sup> I was wise by his excellent spirit, I did not forget anything of that which he exacted. <sup>k</sup>My majesty (fem.) knoweth that he is divine. I did (it) under his command, he it was who led me; I conceived not any works without his do[ing], <sup>l</sup>he it was who gave the directions. I slept not because of his temple, I erred not from that which he commanded, my heart was

<sup>a</sup>Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 46.

<sup>b</sup>An old title of the self-begetting sun-god, Kamephis.

<sup>c</sup>These are old conventional phrases; of course, Amon is the father of the queen (see §§ 187 ff.), but he has gradually been identified with Re.

<sup>d</sup>See a similar epithet applied to the queen in the Punt reliefs (§ 274, l. 3). The long list of epitheta is here ended, and the real matter now begins.

<sup>e</sup>The obelisks; this is the usual form of dedication in which the object dedicated is not represented by a pronoun, being regarded as a matter of course; cf. "fecit."

<sup>f</sup>The quarries at Assuan.

<sup>g</sup>This simply shows that the obelisks stood in a general north-and-south line.

<sup>h</sup>The queen herself begins to speak, and continues to l. 4, west side.

<sup>i</sup>See similar phrase in Speos Artemidos inscription (§ 303, l. 35).

<sup>j</sup>The first occurrence of the jubilee; or the beginning of time, the primeval plan.

<sup>k</sup>West side begins.

wise<sup>a</sup> before my father, I entered <sup>3</sup>upon<sup>b</sup> the affairs of his heart, I did not turn my back upon the city of the All-Lord, but turned to it the face. I know that Karnak is the horizon<sup>c</sup> on earth, <sup>4</sup>the August Ascent of the beginning, the sacred eye of the All-Lord, the place of his heart, which wears his beauty,<sup>d</sup> and encompasses those who follow him.”

Origin of the Obelisks

317. The king himself, he saith, <sup>5</sup>“I set (it) before the people, who shall be <sup>1</sup>after<sup>1</sup> two æons,<sup>e</sup> those whose heart shall consider<sup>f</sup> this monument, and that which I have made for my father, <sup>6</sup>those who shall speak <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> and who shall look to the future.<sup>g</sup> I sat in the palace, I remembered him who fashioned me, <sup>7</sup>my heart led me to make for him two obelisks of electrum, whose point[s]<sup>h</sup> mingled with heaven, in the august colonnade between <sup>8</sup>the two great pylons<sup>i</sup> of the king, the mighty bull, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I), the deceased Horus. Now, my heart took — — — — — words.”

Oath to Posterity

318. “O ye people, <sup>1</sup>who shall see my monument after years, those who shall speak of that which I have made, beware (lest) ye say, ‘I know not, I know not <sup>2</sup>why this was made, (and) a mountain fashioned entirely from gold like anything <sup>1</sup>which happens<sup>1,k</sup> I swear<sup>1</sup> as Re

<sup>a</sup>Lit., “my heart was the god Esye (Sy);” a divinity whose name means the “wise one.”

<sup>b</sup>Same construction as in § 316, l. 8.

<sup>c</sup>The word (y > hw-t) usually translated “horizon” is not yet fully understood. It indicates the abiding-place of the solar gods, a region of light or something similar.

<sup>d</sup>This phrase, “Bearer of his beauty” (wts t-nrw), is usually the appellation of the sacred barque, in which the image of the god was borne.

<sup>e</sup>Two periods of sixty years each are meant.

<sup>f</sup>Lit., “whose heart shall be behind this monument.”

<sup>g</sup>Rather the opposite, the past is to be expected here.

<sup>h</sup>The word indicates the pyramidal top of the shaft, the pyramidion.

<sup>i</sup>These are Pylons IV and V, between the ruins of which the obelisk stands, surrounded by the fallen columns of the colonnade.

<sup>j</sup>North side begins.

<sup>k</sup>As if it were an everyday occurrence.

<sup>1</sup>Compare the same royal oath in the Assuan inscription of Thutmose II (§ 121, l. 10), or Megiddo campaign of Thutmose III (§ 422, l. 40).

loves me, as <sup>3</sup>my father Amon favors me, as my nostrils are filled with satisfying life, as I wear the white crown, as I appear in the red crown, as Horus<sup>a</sup> and Set have united for me <sup>4</sup>their halves, as I rule this land like the son of Isis,<sup>b</sup> as I have become strong like the son of Nut,<sup>c</sup> as Re sets in the evening-barque, as he rises<sup>d</sup> in <sup>5</sup>the morning-barque, as he joins his two mothers<sup>e</sup> in the divine barque, as heaven abides, as that which he hath made endures, as I shall be unto eternity like an 'Imperishable,'<sup>f</sup> as I shall go down <sup>6</sup>in the west like Atum,<sup>g</sup> <sup>h</sup>(so surely) these two great obelisks which my majesty hath wrought with electrum for my father, Amon, in order that <sup>7</sup>my name may abide, enduring in this temple forever and ever, (so surely) they are of one block of enduring granite without seam or <sup>8</sup>joining <sup>i</sup>—<sup>1</sup>. My majesty exacted work<sup>i</sup> thereon from the year 15, the first of Mechir (sixth month), until<sup>j</sup> the year 16, the last of Mesore (twelfth month) making seven months of exaction in the mountain.

History

319. <sup>k1</sup>" I did (it) for him in <sup>1</sup>fidelity<sup>1</sup> of heart, <sup>2</sup>as<sup>1</sup> a king to every god. It was my desire to make them for him, gilded with electrum; I laid <sup>2</sup>their side upon their <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>; I thought how the people would say my mouth was excellent by reason of that which issued from it, (for) I did not turn back from that which I had said. <sup>3</sup>Hear ye! I gave for them of the finest electrum, which I had measured by the heket<sup>1</sup> like sacks (of grain). My majesty appointed the numbers<sup>m</sup> more than <sup>4</sup>the entire Two Lands had (ever) seen. The ignorant like the wise knoweth it."

<sup>a</sup>The text has two Horus birds; the reference is explained in the note on l. 2 of the Tombo's inscription of Thutmose I (§ 70, l. 2).

<sup>b</sup>Horus.

<sup>c</sup>Osiris.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "visit or approach" (s'w>h). See Papyrus Prisse, 9, 7.

<sup>e</sup>Isis and Nephthys, by a confusion and mingling of the solar and Osirian myths.

<sup>f</sup>Name of a star.

<sup>g</sup>Sun-god.

<sup>h</sup>Here the long introduction to the oath closes and the real asseveration begins.

<sup>i</sup>See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 92.

<sup>j</sup>Meaning it continued "until," etc.

<sup>k</sup>East side begins.

<sup>1</sup>A grain measure (nearly 5 liters); this is literally true, for Thutiy records the measurement of electrum by the heket under his supervision, and gives the total between 13 and 14 bushels! (§ 377, l. 38).

<sup>m</sup>The quantity of precious metals, but cf. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 48.

Conclusion

“Let not him who shall hear this say it is a lie which I have said, but say, ‘How like her it is! [who is] truth[ful] in the sight of her father!’ The god knew it in me,<sup>a</sup> Amon, lord of Thebes; he caused that I should reign over the Black and the Red Land as a requital therefor. I have no enemy in any land, all countries are my subjects, he has made my boundary to the extremities of heaven, the circuit of the sun has labored for me, which he has given to the one who is with him<sup>b</sup> (for) he knew that I would offer it to him. I am his daughter of a truth, who glorifies him, — that which he exacted; my [—] is with my father; life, stability, and satisfaction, upon the Horus-throne of all the living, like Re, forever.

320. The shaft of the fallen obelisk, of which only the uppermost section has survived,<sup>c</sup> bears only fragments of the queen’s titulary,<sup>d</sup> which has been altered into that of Thutmose III. The base, however, carried an interesting inscription, of which the following fragments<sup>e</sup> are still visible:

321. 1— — — — —<sup>f</sup> excellent —, beloved of his majesty.<sup>g</sup> He hath made my kingdom, the Black Land, and the Red Lands are united under my feet. My southern boundary is as far as the lands of Punt, and — — — — —; my eastern boundary is as far as the marshes of Asia, and the Asiatics are in my grasp; my western boundary is as far as the mountain of Manu, and I rule — — — — —; [my northern boundary is as far as —], and my fame is among the Sand-dwellers altogether.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Viz., knew that I would erect these obelisks.

<sup>b</sup>Meaning the queen herself.

<sup>c</sup>A fragment has been found at Abutig (Recueil, X, 142; see Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 30, Pl. II).

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 24, a-c; Recueil, X, 142; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 136.

<sup>e</sup>Recueil, 23, 195 f.

<sup>f</sup>The amount of loss at the beginning of each line varies from one-fifth to one-eighth of the total length of the line, increasing gradually from beginning to end.

<sup>g</sup>Amon?

<sup>h</sup>It looks as if the scribe had here confused the northern and eastern boundaries.

The myrrh of Punt has been brought to me 1— — — 4———— all the luxurious marvels of this country were brought to my palace in one collection, which the Asiatics presented 5———— malachite in the country of Reshet. They have brought to me the choicest products of 1—<sup>a</sup> consisting of cedar, of juniper, and of meru wood. 6———— all the good sweet woods of God's-Land. I brought the tribute of Tehenu, consisting of ivory and 700 tusks 1which were there1. 7———— numerous panther-skins of 5 cubits along the back and 4 cubits in his girth,<sup>b</sup> of the southern panther; besides all the tribute of this country 8———— . . . . .<sup>c</sup>

RELIEFS OF TRANSPORTATION OF OBELISKS<sup>d</sup>

322. The queen had reliefs representing the transportation and dedication of two obelisks carved on the wall of the lower colonnade; and, as in the Punt reliefs, the vessels of the transport are actually represented with bows to the north, as they should be in sailing from Assuan; while farther northward is the dedication in Thebes. The identity of these obelisks is uncertain; Wilkinson<sup>e</sup> says that he saw the bases of two obelisks at the termination of the long avenue of sphinxes leading to the temple door, and one would think that the representation in Der el-Bahri

<sup>a</sup>A country.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., circumference = the girth of the beast before the skin was removed?

<sup>c</sup>The usual wishes for the monarch's welfare follow, with all pronouns and endings in the feminine.

<sup>d</sup>Scenes and inscriptions in the Der el-Bahri temple on the west wall of the lower colonnade, in the south half; the transportation published by Naville (in Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1895-96, Pl. and pp. 6-13).

<sup>e</sup>Thebes and General View, 90, published in 1831. Naville denies the existence of obelisks at Der el-Bahri; but he once unreservedly accepted their existence. (Deir-el-Bahari, Introductory Memoir, 10) on Wilkinson's testimony. It is difficult to suppose that so good an observer as Wilkinson mistook the pits in which trees were planted for obelisk-bases, as Naville states (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 52). It is possible that they have either been broken up since Wilkinson's day, or that Naville's search has missed them. The map of the French expedition in the Description shows a block of granite on the very spot where the right-hand obelisk would have stood.

would concern the obelisks of that temple. But Naville's excavations on the spot failed to turn up the bases seen by Wilkinson; and the transport inscriptions speak of landing on the east side (§ 329). This last datum would indicate Karnak as the destination of the transports, and in this case it is impossible to say which of the queen's two pairs in Karnak is meant (§§ 304 ff.).<sup>a</sup>

I. TRANSPORT

Scene<sup>b</sup>

323. A large tow-boat with the obelisks<sup>c</sup> lying trussed upon it, is being towed by three rows of oared barges,<sup>d</sup> nine in a row; each row headed by a pilot-boat. The tow-boat is accompanied by an escort of three boats, in which religious ceremonies are being performed.

Inscriptions<sup>e</sup>

324. The following is the long text in the upper row; it contains:

- a) Titulary and encomium of the queen (ll. 1-?).
- b) The command to gather material and build the vessel needed in the transport (three lines).
- c) The command to muster men and troops for the transport (four lines).
- d) The transport (ten lines).

<sup>a</sup>It is difficult to understand how Naville can maintain that the queen erected only two obelisks at Karnak (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 52), when three obelisk-summits of hers are still in existence.

<sup>b</sup>The whole scene is very fragmentary, and as it was put together from squeezes, there is no doubt that some blocks are put together in questionable places.

<sup>c</sup>Only one can be seen, but the inscription refers to two.

<sup>d</sup>Of these three rows of barges the lowest is still in situ (cf. Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 11, Dümichen, Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, IV); below this in one long row are the marines (on the right) and the offering scene (on the left), with priests and officials approaching (§§ 333-35).

<sup>e</sup>The texts are badly mutilated.

Titulary and Encomium of Queen

325. [Live] the Horus: Wosretkew; Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Fresh in Years; Golden Horus: Divine of Diadems; <sup>2</sup>splendid part of [her] father, Amon-Re, lord of [heaven], who has not been far removed from the father of all gods, <sup>3</sup>shining in brightness like "The-Horizon-God" (Y<sup>2</sup> hwty); Rayet (R<sup>c</sup> y<sup>t</sup>)<sup>a</sup> she illuminates <sup>4</sup>like the sun, vivifying the hearts of the people, who is exalted in name (so that) it hath reached <sup>5</sup>heaven. Her fame has encompassed the 'Great Circle' (Okeanos) ————— <sup>b6</sup>their tribute presented to the palace ————— <sup>7</sup>chief —————<sup>c</sup>.

Building the Tow-Boat

326. Give ye ————— | sycamores from the whole land ————— | the work of building a very great boat,<sup>d</sup> finished —————.

Muster of Men<sup>e</sup> and Troops

327. ————— | orders the whole army before ————— |, in order to load the two obelisks in Elephantine<sup>f</sup> ————— | the people in Aphroditopolis and the entire Two Lands were gathered in [one] place ————— | in every way; the young men were mustered —————.

The Transport

328. ————— | sailed down-stream with gladness of heart ————— | took the [tow-rope]<sup>1</sup>, rejoicing ————— | [rejoiced]<sup>1</sup> the marines and the crew ————— | — — jubilee, the Two Lands | ————— in peace.

<sup>a</sup>Feminine of Re, the sun-god.

<sup>b</sup>Half a line is lost.

<sup>c</sup>An uncertain number of lines is now lacking, and numbering is impossible from this point. Lines are separated by |, the second half of each line being gone.

<sup>d</sup>The wanting end of the line is not long enough for the dimensions of the boat; but we find Ineni (§ 105) giving the size of the boat on which he moved the Karnak obelisks of Thutmose I. His boat was 206.6 feet long and 68.86 feet wide for an obelisk about 75 feet (Murray) high; hence the boat of the queen (if these are the large Karnak pair) on the same proportion would have been about 268½ feet long and 89½ feet wide. The proportion between width and length is 1 to 3. See Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1895-96, 9, 10.

<sup>e</sup>Confer the muster of men for the el-Bersheh colossus (I, 697 ff.).

<sup>f</sup>Referring to the embarkation of the obelisks at the granite quarries of Assuan. They were dragged on board the barges on sledges. The sledge is still under the obelisk on the barge—a fact which has been overlooked in the explanation of the reliefs (ibid.).

The king himself, he took the lead<sup>a</sup> ————| Amon-Re with praise, Khnum. ————| of Amon ————| in this monument, which they have established<sup>b</sup> ————| they have increased years at the jubilee of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt ————| . . . . .

Over the Pilot-Boats<sup>c</sup>

329. Landing in peace at "Victorious Thebes,"<sup>d</sup> heaven is in festival, earth in rejoicing; — 'they' receive joy of heart (when) they behold this monument which [Makere] has established for her father [Amon].<sup>e</sup>

II. RECEPTION IN THEBES

Scene<sup>f</sup>

330. On shore appear the marines and the recruits (on the right), mustered to unload the obelisks. At the opposite end (the left) is an offering scene in celebration of the arrival of the obelisks, with priests and officials approaching.

<sup>a</sup>This may also be "the bow-rope," but the determinative is broken off.

<sup>b</sup>Possibly: "[Her name is established], in this monument, and fixed; which she has given to thee." Cf. east side, middle line (§ 311).

<sup>c</sup>The lowermost boat; the other two bore similar inscriptions, but they have now perished.

<sup>d</sup>Thebes on the east bank.

<sup>e</sup>Over the three escort-boats in the lower right-hand corner is a fragment of text, mentioning the bow and stern cables (as in Ineni, l. 17, § 341) and "sailing from Elephantine to ————." Other fragments of interest are: over the three men in the bow of the obelisk-barge, three names: "Steward of the King's-Wife, the scribe, Telem-Re (Tty-m-R); overseer of the granary, Minnose (Mn-ms); count of Thinis (Tny), Sitepeh (S<sup>2</sup>-tp-yh)." The last person, Sitepeh, is known on a tablet of Abydos, where he appears with the same titles; cf. Mariette, Catalogue général d'Abydos, 393. These names are not original, but are cut over others now illegible. The original names are very likely to have been those of Senmut, the queen's favorite, in charge of the obelisks (§§ 345 ff.), and the other two partisans of the queen, Thutiy and Nehsi, who already appear in Der el-Bahri (§§ 275, 289), and have been erased in the Punt reliefs.

<sup>f</sup>In one long row immediately below the transport scene; published by Mariette, Deir-el-Bahari, 11; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 21, and Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, 4, 7, 8; see also Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 104, 105, where both the texts are combined.

Inscriptions

331. They record the rejoicing of the troops mustered from the North, South, and Upper Nubia, to assist in the work of the obelisks.<sup>a</sup> It is important to note that their acclamations also mention Thutmose III, but after the queen.

Rejoicing of Marines and Recruits

332. The rejoicing by the royal marines of the ship of the king —.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>c</sup>They say, "Hark the acclamation! Heaven is in [joy, the earth] hath rejoicing. [Amon] <sup>d</sup>increased the years of his daughter who maketh his monuments, upon the Horus-throne of the living, like Re, forever.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>e</sup>The acclamation by the recruits of the South and North, the young men of Thebes, the youths of Khenthennofer (Hnt-hn-njr), for the sake of the life, prosperity and health of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt ———.<sup>f</sup> (and) for the sake of the life, prosperity and health of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), who giveth life; that their heart may be glad, like Re, forever."

With the Offering

333. An offering for thy ka, O lord of gods, that thou mayest make healthy ———.<sup>g</sup> at this (feast) of "Myriad-of-Years"<sup>h</sup> of her who liveth forever.<sup>i</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See the mustering at Elephantine, to load the obelisks (§ 327).

<sup>b</sup>Cartouche cut out; undoubtedly that of the queen.

<sup>c</sup>Over the troops marching toward the left.

<sup>d</sup>The same phrase occurs on the Berlin block (No. 1636, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 17, a; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 21; and Fleet of an Egyptian Queen, IV, top row). Its inscriptions are as follows: (over the forward ship) "Landing at 'The West' with joy of heart, the whole land is in rejoicing at this beautiful feast of this god; they acclaim, they give praise, they celebrate the king, the Lord of the Two Lands." The titles have been inserted in place of the queen's name. Then follows: "Rejoicing by the marines of the ship of the king, Okhepernere (Thutmose II), 'Star-of-the-Two-Lands;' they say: 'This beautiful feast of — (queen's cartouche cut out) whereon Amon appears, increasing the years of his son, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), upon the Horus-throne of the living, like Re, forever.'" It is possible that all this belongs to the same feast, at the landing of the obelisks. The block was found on the upper terrace.

<sup>e</sup>Over the soldiers marching toward the right.

<sup>f</sup>Cartouche of the queen cut out.

<sup>g</sup>A name is cut out, undoubtedly that of Hatshepsut.

<sup>h</sup>Name of royal jubilee or feast.

<sup>i</sup>Words of two other priests in the same place are too mutilated for translation.

Rejoicing of the Priests

334. That which the priests of Karnak say: "O king, beautiful<sup>a</sup> of monuments —. As she is, so they are for eternity."

Rejoicing of the Court

335. The companions, the dignitaries, the officials, the soldiers of the whole land, say: "Happy is thy heart ——— thy heart; this thy desire, it has come to pass."

III. DEDICATION OF THE OBELISKS<sup>b</sup>

336. "On the corresponding wall of the northeast side<sup>c</sup> two obelisks are dedicated to Amunre, by the monarch who founded this building and who erected the great obelisks of Karnak; but from the following translation of the little that remains of their hieroglyphics, it is evident they differ widely from those of the great temple of Diospolis<sup>d</sup> and will probably have stood on the pedestals of the dromos above alluded to.<sup>e</sup> The inscription after the name of Pharaoh Amunneitgori<sup>f</sup> continues: "— She has made (this) her work for her father Amunre, lord of the regions, (and) erected to him two fine obelisks of granite . . . . she did this (who is) the giver of life, like the sun."<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Should be feminine to suit the context.

<sup>b</sup>Not yet published, and probably partially lost since seen by Wilkinson. Hence I can only offer Wilkinson's remarks (Thebes and General View, 92).

<sup>c</sup>The right-hand end of the colonnade on the northeast (practically north) side of the ascent to the next terrace.

<sup>d</sup>The Karnak temple. So good an observer as Wilkinson is to be trusted in a remark like this; there must have been some striking difference in the inscription, distinguishing it from those of Hatshepsut's standing obelisk at Karnak; it is therefore improbable that these obelisk reliefs refer to the said Karnak pair.

<sup>e</sup>The obelisk-pedestals which he saw before the temple portal.

<sup>f</sup>This is Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut; Wilkinson adds the following note: "I am uncertain as to the precise reading of this name, but cannot adopt the Amen-the of M. Champollion. I suppose her to have been a queen." This was written seventy-five years ago.

<sup>g</sup>This old translation is without a flaw, except in the last sentence, which should be "that she may be given life, etc.," and even this change, with the exception of the "final" construction, was suspected by Wilkinson (p. 94, n. 1).

ROCK INSCRIPTION IN WADI MAGHARA<sup>a</sup>

337. Above is a bas-relief in which Thutmose III worships Hathor, and Hatshepsut worships Soped; over this is the inscription: "Year 16 under the majesty of," which is to be connected with the names in the relief. Below is a much-mutilated inscription of three short lines:

[Came]<sup>b</sup> the king's[messenger] at the head of his army, to traverse the [inaccessible<sup>c</sup>] valley[s,] [to please<sup>d</sup>] Horus who is in the palace, by bringing that which exists to his majesty ———, <sup>e</sup> living again, revered.

BUILDING INSCRIPTION OF WESTERN THEBES<sup>f</sup>

338. Above is a relief showing Hatshepsut worshipping before Amon-Re, with Thutmose III standing behind her. An inscription of five lines below records repairs in the fortress of the necropolis by Hatshepsut. Hence the goddess of western Thebes, Khafet-hir-nebes, stands behind Thutmose.

339. <sup>1</sup>Live the Horus: Wosretkew; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Fresh in Years; Golden Horus: Divine of Diadems, Ruler of South and North; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere; <sup>2</sup>Son of Re, of his body, his beloved Khnemet-Amon, Hatshepsut. She made (it) as her monument for her father, Amon, lord of Thebes; erecting for him <sup>3</sup>the fortress of Khafet-hir-nebes anew as a work for eternity. Its

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 28, 2; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 122; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1491; Laborde, Voyage de l'Arabie Pétrée, Pl. 8, No. 4; Laval, La Péninsule Arabique, Pl. 2, No. 4; Weill, Sinai, 152.

<sup>b</sup>Restored from Senmut's Assuan inscription, see § 362.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from I, 728.

<sup>d</sup>Cf. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 122 and 51.

<sup>e</sup>Fragments, among them the determinative belonging to the lost name of the messenger.

<sup>f</sup>Stela in the Vatican (No. 130); published by Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 700, 701; Piehl, Recueil, II, 129; Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 110. I had also my own copy of the original, a collation of which furnished some corrections.

1—<sup>1a</sup> was 1built1 4of beautiful stone of Ayan (c nw).<sup>b</sup> It was according to the ancient plan; never was done the like since the beginning. 5Her majesty (fem.) did this, because she loved her father Amon so much more than all gods, in order that she might be given life, like Re, forever.

BIOGRAPHY OF INENI<sup>c</sup>

[Concluded from § 118]

IV. CAREER UNDER THUTMOSE III AND HATSHEPSUT

340. After outliving three kings, Ineni himself dies under the joint reign of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut. His account of their accession upon the death of Thutmose II unfortunately does not refer to Thutmose III by name, although there can be no doubt that he is meant by “his son” (l. 16). The position of Hatshepsut is described in such a way as to give the impression that she is really the ruling power, and “his son” merely a figurehead.

Accession of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut

341. His<sup>d</sup> son stood in his place as king of the Two Lands, having become ruler upon the throne of the one who begat him. 17His sister the Divine Consort, Hatshepsut, settled the 1affairs<sup>1e</sup> of the Two Lands by reason of her plans. Egypt was made to labor with bowed head for <sup>a</sup>Original has c hm' t, with wedge determinative of land, a rare word occurring also in similar connection in Piehl, Inscriptions, I, cxxix, Q B; it doubtless designates some inclosure or wall.

<sup>b</sup>The original shows ynr nfr n c nw (heretofore misread), though it is very faint and confused with the paint of a modern incorrect restoration.

<sup>c</sup>Bibliography on p. 18, note c.

<sup>d</sup>Thutmose II's son; this passage would prove that Thutmose III was the son (and not the brother) of Thutmose II, but see Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 7 ff. Cf. also Maspero, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 178, and Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 78, and Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 42, 43.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., “made the land-affairs (mhr) of the Two Lands.” This rare phrase occurs in the Annals on the eve before the battle of Megiddo: “the affairs (mhr-w) of the chiefs were settled (yr-tw).” (§ 429, l. 2). The “mhr-w of the Two Lands” is also found in Rekhmire's tomb (Newberry, Pl. VII, l. 13) applied to Thutmose III. Ramses II also “made the mhr of the land” (Blessing of Ptah, III, 411, l. 31).

her, the excellent seed of the god, which came forth from him. The bow-rope<sup>a</sup> of the South, the mooring-stake of the Southerners; the excellent stern-rope<sup>a</sup> of the Northland is she; the mistress of command, whose plans are excellent, who satisfies the Two Regions, when she speaks.

Ineni's Favor and Rewards

342. Her majesty praised me, she loved me, she recognized my worth at the court, she presented me with things, she magnified me, she filled my house with silver and gold, with all beautiful stuffs of the royal house.

Ineni's Good Character

343. I (can) not tell (it), I increased beyond everything, I will tell you, ye people; hear ye, do ye the good that I did; <sup>19</sup>do ye likewise. I continued powerful in peace, I met no misfortune,<sup>b</sup> my years were (passed) in gladness of heart, I showed no treachery, I did not inform against, I did no evil, I did no wrong. I was the foreman of the foremen, I did not fail; an excellent one for the heart of his lord, devoid of hesitancy, I was one who hearkened to that which his superior said. My heart was not deceitful toward the great ones in the palace. I did that which the god of the city loved. I was devoid of blasphemy toward sacred things. As for the one who <sup>1</sup>passes<sup>1</sup> the years as a favorite, his soul shall live <sup>1</sup>with<sup>1</sup> the All-Lord, his good name shall be in the mouth of the living, his memory and his excellence shall be forever. The revered dignitary, the overseer of the granary of Amon, the scribe, Ineni (Y<sup>o</sup> nn(y)), triumphant.

BIOGRAPHY OF AHMOSE-PEN-NEKHBET<sup>c</sup>

[Concluded from § 25]

Conclusion of Summary

344. <sup>18</sup>The Divine Consort, the Great King's-Wife, Makere (M<sup>o</sup> c<sup>o</sup> t-k<sup>o</sup> R<sup>c</sup>, Hatshepsut), triumphant, repeated honors to me. <sup>19</sup>I

<sup>a</sup>These strange epithets will be quite clear to one who has seen a Nile boat, moored at bow and stern, with a fierce current holding both ropes taut. The ship is of course the state, of which the queen is the mooring-lines. Note that the vessel faces southward, the usual position in determining directions.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "my misfortune was not;" all the following negative clauses show the same construction.

<sup>c</sup>Bibliography on p. 10, note c.

reared her eldest daughter, the Royal Daughter, Nefrure (Nfrw-R), triumphant, while she was a <sup>20</sup>child upon the breast. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

INSCRIPTIONS OF SENMUT

345. Senmut was the most powerful noble among the group of influential state officials who supported Hatshepsut. He was her architect in Karnak, Luxor, Der el-Bahri, and Hermonthis; and in Karnak<sup>b</sup> and Der el-Bahri statues of him have been found. In the latter temple, also, he appears in an adoration scene on the wall of the Southern Speos,<sup>c</sup> with the inscription: "Giving praise to Hathor, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of Makere (Hatshepsut), by the steward of Amon, Senmut."<sup>d</sup> This is a remarkable evidence of his power. Among his works in Karnak he erected the queen's great obelisks (§§ 304 ff.), the largest now in Egypt, and went personally to the granite quarries at Assuan to secure the two vast blocks, leaving on the rocks a record of his visit there (§§ 359 ff.).

346. He was prominent in the Punt expedition; being overseer of the storehouse of Amon, he would naturally have much to do with the products of that expedition, which were

<sup>a</sup>The remainder of the line, and of several lines now broken away, contained titles of Ahmose, § 25, note.

<sup>b</sup>The base of a black granite statue, as yet unpublished (Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, "Preliminary Report," 19).

<sup>c</sup>Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 310. The building inscriptions or dedications of this temple have not survived. The fragmentary end of such an inscription was seen by Brugsch (Recueil de monuments, 69, 6), which is as follows: "_____ of fine white (lime)stone of Ayan; its splendid seat of the first time, which (former) kings knew not _____." Still another, where the name of Thutmose II has been inserted over that of the queen, is preserved toward the end: "_____ making for him a great temple of myriads of years (named) 'House-of-Amon-Most-Splendid;' of fine white limestone of Ayan, in his seat, etc.," Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 93.

<sup>d</sup>Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 34 = Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 109.

for the most part devoted to Amon. He therefore appears with Nehsi (§ 289), the commander of the expedition in the presence of the queen, praising her on the success of the enterprise.

347. He was selected by the queen to rear her daughter and heiress to the throne, the princess, Nefrure, sharing this honor with Ahmose-Pen-Nekhbet (§ 344). His statue, now in Berlin, shows him with the infant princess (§§ 363 ff.).

348. Judging from the titles on the Karnak statue (§§ 349 ff.), he controlled many of the functions of the vizier himself, and all but held that office. There is no doubt that the queen's remarkable career as king in opposition to Thutmose III was in some measure due to him, and in great measure to the coterie of legitimists, of which he was the most powerful member. It is only on this supposition that we can explain the fact that both he and they were exposed to the same persecution suffered by their queen. On Senmut's Berlin statue, on his Karnak statue, in his tomb,<sup>a</sup> on his tombstone,<sup>b</sup> and in the Punt reliefs, his name is everywhere chiseled out. In the Punt relief his entire figure, and those of his two companions, Nehsi and Thutiy (? see § 289), likewise ardent supporters of the queen, are chiseled out. The same persistent persecution is evident in the tomb of Thutiy (§§ 369 ff.), who was hardly second in power to Senmut; in that of Senmen,<sup>c</sup> Senmut's brother; in that of an unknown man,<sup>c</sup> next to the tomb of Senmut; and in that of a "chief steward"<sup>d</sup> of the queen at Silsileh. In all these the

<sup>a</sup>Discovered by Steindorff and Newberry at Thebes (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 310).

<sup>b</sup>Now in Berlin (No. 2066; Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 160); published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 25 bis a; see also Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 111.

<sup>c</sup>Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 128 f.

<sup>d</sup>Ibid., 84, § 11, e. His name cannot be read.

name of the owner is chiseled out, and this common persecution is quite sufficient to show that these men formed the queen's party of legitimists opposed to Thutmose III, who has therefore treated their monuments and their memory as he did hers.<sup>a</sup>

1. INSCRIPTIONS ON THE KARNAK STATUE<sup>b</sup>

349. This statue was presented to Senmut by Hatshepsut and Thutmose III (§ 350) as a token of honor, for the special purpose of being set up in the temple of Mut at Karnak. The inscriptions contain chiefly his many titles, and epithets of honor, showing clearly that he was little, if any, below the vizier himself in power.

Statue was Presented by Queen<sup>c</sup>

350. 4[Given as a favor of the king's-presence, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), who is given [life, to 2the hereditary prince, count], wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, steward of Amon, Senmut, triumphant; in order to be in the temple<sup>d</sup> of 3[I]shru; in order to receive the plenty that comes forth from before the presence of this great goddess.

4[Given] as a favor of the king's-presence, extending the period of life to eternity, with a goodly memory among 5the people after the years that shall come; to<sup>e</sup> the prince and count, overseer of the granary of Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

<sup>a</sup>Small objects from Senmut's tomb, see Spiegelberg, Recueil, 19, 91; and Newberry, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 63, 64; full list by Newberry, Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 310.

<sup>b</sup>Discovered by Misses Benson and Gourlay in 1896 in the Temple of Mut at Karnak (M. 852). The inscriptions are published by Benson and Gourlay in The Temple of Mut in Asher (London, 1899), 299-309. I had also an excellent copy made for the Berlin Lexicon by Borchardt, the corrections and additions from this copy are inserted without remark in the translation below.

<sup>c</sup>On the back, Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 301-3.

<sup>d</sup>The statue was found in this temple, and its purpose is here noted. The lacuna in Borchardt's copy is not large enough for "Mut, mistress of," which we would expect.

<sup>e</sup>Construe with "given."

His Duties as Architect

351. <sup>6</sup>[It was]<sup>a</sup> the chief steward, Senmut, who conducted all the works of the king: in Karnak, in Hermonthis, [in] <sup>7</sup>Der el-Bahri, of Amon, in the temple of Mut, in Ishru, in southern Opet of Amon (Luxor), in [the presence] <sup>8</sup>of this august god, while maintaining the monuments of the Lord of the Two Lands, enlarging, restoring — <sup>9</sup>works, without deafness, (but) according to all that was commanded at the court, L. P. H. It was commanded him that [the] should be — <sup>10</sup>because he was so excellent for the heart (of the king). It came to pass in every respect,<sup>b</sup> as was commanded by doing according to the desire of his majesty concerning it. <sup>11</sup>His true servant, without his like;<sup>c</sup> strong-hearted, not lax concerning the monuments of the lord of gods; wearer of the royal seal, prophet of Amon, <sup>12</sup>[Se]nmut.

His Praise of Himself; His Offices

352. He says: "I was the greatest of the great in the whole land; one who heard the hearing alone in the privy council, steward of [Amon], <sup>13</sup>Senmut, triumphant."

"I was the real favorite of the king, acting as one praised of his lord every day, the overseer of the cattle of Amon, Senmut."

"I was <sup>14</sup>— of truth, not showing partiality; with whose injunctions the Lord of the Two Lands was satisfied; attached to Nekhen, prophet of Mat, Senmut."

"I was one who entered in [love], <sup>15</sup>and came forth in favor, making glad the heart of the king every day, the companion, and master of the palace, Senmut."

"I commanded <sup>16</sup>in the storehouse of divine offerings of Amon every tenth day; the overseer of the storehouse of Amon, Senmut."

"I conducted — <sup>17</sup>—<sup>d</sup> of the gods every day, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of the king; overseer of the <sup>18</sup>— of Amon, Senmut."

"I was a foreman of foremen, superior of the great, <sup>18</sup>[overseer] of all [works] of the house of silver, conductor of every handicraft, chief of the prophets of Montu in Hermonthis, Senmut."

<sup>a</sup>Read yn (Sethe).

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "very, very much" (wr wr mnḥ).

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "without one possessed of his qualities."

<sup>d</sup>The first word shows traces of the sign for "feast."

“I was one <sup>19</sup>to whom the affairs of the Two Lands were [repor]ted; that which South and North contributed was on my seal, the labor of all countries <sup>20</sup>was [under] my charge.”

“I was one, whose steps were known in the palace; a real confidant of the king, his beloved: overseer of the gardens of Amon, Senmut.”

Address to the Living, and Prayer

353. <sup>21</sup>“O ye living upon earth, lay priests of the temple, <sup>a</sup> who shall see my statue, which I have formed as a likeness, <sup>b</sup> <sup>22</sup>that I may be remembered in the nether world; may your great goddess (Mut) praise you, because ye say: ‘A royal offering, which Mut of I[shru] gives! <sup>c23</sup>May she give the going in and out in the nether world [in] the following of the just; for the ka of Senmut, <sup>d</sup> who repeats the utterance of the king to the “companions;” the one useful to the king, <sup>e24</sup>faithful to the god, without his [blemish] before the people; steward of Amon, Senmut. May he (Amon) grant to come forth <sup>25</sup>as a living soul; to breathe the sweet north wind, to the [ka of] the steward of Amon, [Senmut]; <sup>26</sup>to receive loaves (sn·w) from the table of Amon, at every feast of heaven and earth, <sup>f27</sup>for the ka of the citizen, mighty in his arm; who followed the king in the South, North, East, and West countries, [— — — —], <sup>g</sup> to whom was given the gold of praise, <sup>h28</sup>— Senmut. May he come forth as a living soul; may he follow the god, lord of gods; may he be presented with the two regions of Horus; may his name not perish forever; breath for the mouth, splendor for the dead; this is not a thing under which one should [be lax].”

<sup>a</sup>The temple of Mut, in which the statue was set up.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., “which I have likened.”

<sup>c</sup>Newberry begins a new numbering here (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 309) as the inscription proceeds at this point to the left side of the top of the base, but there is no break.

<sup>d</sup>Title omitted.

<sup>e</sup>Goes to the front of the top of the base (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 308).

<sup>f</sup>Goes to the right side of the top of the base (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 309).

<sup>g</sup>“Pure of limb between the two bows” (?), Sethe.

<sup>h</sup>Goes to the front and sides of the base (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 309).

"I was a noble, to whom one hearkened; moreover, I had access to all the writings of the prophets; there was nothing which I did not know of that which had happened since the beginning.<sup>a</sup> [—————].

Statue was Presented by Queen and King

354. <sup>b1</sup>[Given] as a favor of the king's-presence [to] the hereditary prince, count, steward of Amon, Sen[mut], triumphant, <sup>2</sup>steward of the female Horus: Wosretkew,<sup>c</sup> favorite of Horus: "Shining-in-Thebes,"<sup>d</sup> when maintaining their monuments <sup>3</sup>forever, firm in favor with them every day.

<sup>4</sup>Overseer of the fields of Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

<sup>5</sup>Overseer of the gardens of Amon, Senmut.

<sup>6</sup>Overseer of the cattle of <sup>7</sup>Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

<sup>8</sup>Chief steward of <sup>9</sup>Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

<sup>10</sup>Chief steward of the king, Senmut, triumphant.

<sup>11</sup>Chief of the peasant-serfs of Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

Prayers for Food-Offerings

355. <sup>e1</sup>The oblations in the South for the ka of the magnate of the South and North, Senmut. May she (Mut) give <sup>2</sup>the food-offerings in the Northland to the ka of the greatest of the great, the noblest of the noble, <sup>3</sup>[Se]nmut. May she (Mut) give all that comes forth from her table in Karnak, <sup>4</sup>[in] the temples of the gods of the South and North, to the ka of the master of secret things in the temple, <sup>5</sup>Senmut.

Prayers for Food-Offerings

356. May she (Mut) give the mortuary offering of bread, beer, oxen, geese; and to drink <sup>6</sup>water at the living stream; to the ka of the

<sup>a</sup>In this connection it is interesting to note that on his tombstone Senmut placed an archaic text long forgotten, and no longer used in his day (Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 160).

<sup>b</sup>Above the knees and arms on the sistrum; Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 300.

<sup>c</sup>Horus-name of Hatshepsut (read Hr' t, not t), as published.

<sup>d</sup>Horus-name of Thutmose III (read h s, not t, as published). This important correction is due to Sethe, who made it in Borchardt's manuscript (containing the same mistake), and it was afterward verified by Borchardt from the original.

<sup>e</sup>Left side of sistrum (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 305 f.); it is evidently to be connected with one of the verbs "to give" in the other texts.

chief steward of Amon, <sup>7</sup>[Se]nmut, triumphant; <sup>8</sup>overseer of the cattle of <sup>9</sup>Amon, Senmut; <sup>10</sup>filling the magazines, <sup>11</sup>supplying<sup>1</sup> the storehouses, <sup>12</sup>overseer of the storehouse of <sup>13</sup>Amon, <sup>14</sup>Senmut, <sup>15</sup>triumphant; <sup>16</sup>overseer of the gardens of Amon, Senmut, triumphant.

He Carries the Goddess in Processions

357. <sup>a1</sup>[Master<sup>1</sup>] of all people, chief of the whole land, steward of Amon, Senmut, triumphant, <sup>2</sup>chief [steward] of the king, Senmut; revered by the great god. When he carries Hathor, <sup>3</sup>sovereign of Thebes, and Mut, mistress of Ishru, he causes her to appear,<sup>b</sup> <sup>4</sup>he bears her beauty, for the life, prosperity, and health of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), living forever.

Prayer for Goodly Burial

358. <sup>5</sup>May he (Osiris) give: goodly burial in the western highland, <sup>6</sup>[as one revere]d by the great god; to the ka of the privy councilor of the right hand, Senmut; <sup>7</sup>splendor in heaven, <sup>8</sup>power on earth; <sup>9</sup>to the ka of the overseer of the <sup>1</sup>temples<sup>1</sup> (h·wt) <sup>10</sup>of Neit, Senmut, <sup>11</sup>begotten of Ramose, <sup>12</sup>born of <sup>13</sup>Henofer (H<sup>2</sup>·n/r).

II. ASSUAN INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

359. Engraved on the rocks at Assuan by Senmut, to commemorate his commission by Queen Hatshepsut to cut out the two Karnak obelisks erected by her (§§ 304 ff.). He appears in relief doing reverence to the queen, with the following inscriptions:

Titles Accompanying the Queen

360. Hereditary princess, great in favor and kindness, great in love — — Re, the kingdom of heaven, who is true in the midst of the divine ennead, the King's-Daughter, the King's-Sister, the Divine Consort, the

<sup>a</sup>Right side of the sistrum (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 307).

<sup>b</sup>The idiom for "bring out in procession."

<sup>c</sup>Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 25 bis q; better, Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 116; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 41, No. 181 bis (copied from Lepsius, Denkmäler, with all mistakes!); corrected by Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 82.

Great King's-Wife,<sup>a</sup> Hatshepsut, who liveth, the beloved of Satet, mistress of Elephantine, the beloved of Khnum, lord of the Cataract.

Accompanying Senmut

361. Ascription of [honor] to the Divine Consort, Sovereign of the entire Two Lands, by the wearer of the royal seal, companion, great in love, chief steward, Senmut (Sn-Mw' t).

Record beneath the Two Figures<sup>b</sup>

362. Came the hereditary prince,<sup>c</sup> count, who [greatly] satisfies the heart of the Divine Consort, who pleases the Mistress of the Two Lands by his injunction, chief steward of the Princess, Nefrure (Nfrw-R<sup>c</sup>), who liveth, Senmut, in order to 'conduct' the work of two great obelisks<sup>d</sup> of a "Myriad-(of-Years)".<sup>e</sup> It took place according to that which was commanded; everything was done; it took place because of the fame of her majesty (fem.).

III. INSCRIPTIONS ON THE BERLIN STATUE<sup>f</sup>

363. This statue, like the Karnak statue, was a royal gift (§ 350, l. 2). It represents Senmut in a squatting posture, holding between his knees the daughter and heir of the queen, the infant princess Nefrure, whom he reared. The inscriptions contain a most important reference to the death of Thutmose II (§ 368, ll. 7, 8).

<sup>a</sup>The same titles on an alabaster vase in Alnwick Castle, Birch catalogue 176, corrected by Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 122 and 25.

<sup>b</sup>With corrections from M. Weidenbach's copy as given by Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 82.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "The coming by the hereditary prince, etc."

<sup>d</sup>It is not entirely certain that these are the two Karnak obelisks, between Pylons IV and V.

<sup>e</sup>The name of a feast, see above, § 333.

<sup>f</sup>Certainly from Thebes, but probably not from his tomb; now in Berlin (No. 2296, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 137-39); published by Sharpe (Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 107) and Lepsius (Denkmäler, III, 25); corrections by Sethe (Untersuchungen, I, 111); partial translation (ibid., 50, 51).

Senmut, Tutor of the Princess

364. <sup>a</sup>Senmut, triumphant, not found [among the writings] of the ancestors, <sup>b</sup> great father-tutor of the king's-daughter, Sovereign of the Two Lands, Divine Consort, Nefrure, <sup>c</sup> [— —] which I did according to the thought<sup>d</sup> of my heart [— — —].

Mortuary Prayer

365. <sup>e</sup>A royal offering, which Amon-Re and the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere, give; may they<sup>f</sup> grant the mortuary oblation of bread, beer, oxen, geese, linen, incense, ointment.

A Royal Gift

366. <sup>2</sup>Given as a favor of the king's-presence [to] the hereditary prince, count, companion, great in love, steward of Amon, Senmut.

Mortuary Prayer

367. <sup>3</sup>A royal offering which Osiris, lord of Abydos gives; may he grant all that cometh forth from his table every day <sup>4</sup>for the ka of the hereditary prince — [—], who greatly satisfies the heart of the Lord of the Two Lands, the favorite of the Good God, the overseer of the granary of Amon, Senmut.

Senmut's Favor with King and Queen

368. <sup>5</sup>He says, "I was a noble, beloved of his lord, who entered<sup>g</sup> upon the wonderful plans of the Mistress of the Two Lands. He<sup>h</sup> exalted me before the Two Lands, he appointed me <sup>6</sup>to be chief of his

<sup>a</sup>Beside the princess.

<sup>b</sup>This very ambiguous phrase has been rendered: "[whose] ancestors were not found in writing," a rendering not at all certain; possibly the word "like" has been omitted, and we should translate: "Whose like was not found among, etc.," more nearly parallel to the common statement.

<sup>c</sup>The daughter of the queen, whom Senmut is holding between his knees.

<sup>d</sup>See Speos Artemidos Inscription, l. 35, § 303 and note.

<sup>e</sup>On the front.

<sup>f</sup>Corrected from my own copy.

<sup>g</sup>An idiom meaning "to support, be in sympathy with;" cf. obelisk of Hatshepsut, base, south, § 316, l. 8.

<sup>h</sup>According to Sethe, the masculine pronoun refers to Thutmose III. Cf. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 50; this supposition is rendered very probable by the Karnak statue (§§ 349 ff.).

estate 'throughout' the entire land. I was the superior of superiors, the chief of 'chiefs of works. I was in this land under his command since the occurrence of the death of his <sup>8</sup>predecessor.<sup>a</sup> I was in life under the Mistress of the Two Lands, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), who liveth forever."<sup>b</sup>

---

INSCRIPTION OF THUTIY<sup>c</sup>

369. Thutiy was a loyal supporter of Queen Hatshepsut (see § 348), and hence throughout his tomb his name and that of the queen have been entirely erased. He was the successor of Ineni (§§ 340 ff.) as "overseer of the double gold- and silver-houses," and this brought him many monumental enterprises, for which he furnished the metals, at the same time having the construction of a large number of such monuments under his charge. He was probably the builder of the queen's ebony shrine (l. 24 and § 126 ff.); he furnished the metal-work on two great obelisks (l. 28), superintended many other monuments, and was charged with the measuring of the splendid returns in precious metal from the queen's southern expeditions, particularly the famous one to Punt (ll. 33-38). That Thutiy is strictly veracious in this statement is most strikingly shown by the scene of weighing and measuring in the Punt reliefs (§ 275), where the traces of his figure, busily engaged in taking his notes, is identifiable by means of his name and title, "Scribe and

---

<sup>a</sup>This probably refers to the death of Thutmose II, the predecessor of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut. See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 50.

<sup>b</sup>On the feet are engraved the titles of Senmut, and the two sides contain the one hundred and sixth and fifty-fourth chapters of the "Book of the Dead."

<sup>c</sup>Stela on the façade of Thutiy's tomb, in the southern part of Drah-abu-'n-Neggah on the west shore at Thebes. First seen by Lepsius, who published two lines (Denkmäler, III, 27, 10); later lost and rediscovered by the Marquis of Northampton, Newberry, and Spiegelberg, in 1898; published by Spiegelberg in Recueil, 22, 115-25, with translation.

steward, Thutiy," which accompany his figure.<sup>a</sup> Both figure and inscription have been carefully obliterated as in the tomb.

Prayer for the King and Queen

370. <sup>1</sup>Giving praise to Amon-[Re, king of] gods; adoring his majesty every day at his rising in the eastern heavens, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of King Makere (Hatshepsut), given life forever, and King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life, stability, satisfaction, health, like Re, forever.

Titles of Thutiy

371. <sup>2</sup>Hereditary prince, count, overseer of the double silver-house, overseer of the double gold-house, great favorite of the Lord of the Two Lands, Thutiy.

<sup>3</sup>Hereditary prince, count, chief of prophets in Hermopolis, Thutiy.

<sup>4</sup>Hereditary prince, count, sealing the treasures in the king's-house, Thutiy.

<sup>5</sup>Hereditary prince, count, who gives instruction to<sup>b</sup> the craftsmen how to work, Thutiy.

<sup>6</sup>Hereditary prince, count, who reveals [to]<sup>c</sup> him who is skilled in work, Thutiy.

<sup>7</sup>[Hereditary prince, count] — — who gives regulations, Thutiy.

<sup>8</sup>[Hereditary prince, count], — — the head in indolence, Thutiy.

<sup>9</sup>Hereditary prince, count, [vigilant<sup>1</sup> when] commissions are commanded him, Thutiy.

<sup>10</sup>[Hereditary prince, count], executing the plans that are commanded him, Thutiy.

<sup>11</sup>[Hereditary prince, count], not forgetful of that which is commanded him, Thutiy.

<sup>a</sup>Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 79.

<sup>b</sup>Spiegelberg "anleitet;" lit., "who opens the face to, etc."

<sup>c</sup>The parallelism clearly demands "to" (n), thus:

(l. 5) . . . . . sb > hr n wb > w r yr t

(l. 6) . . . . . wn [hr n] sš > m yrw t

Spiegelberg has supplied the hr ("face") in the lacuna, but overlooks the n ("to"), necessarily common to both lines: "who opens the face to (two different words for "open," sb > and wn). Compare wb > -yb on Lateran obelisk (side lines, § 836).

<sup>12</sup>Hereditary prince, count, knowing the useful things that are established forever, Thutiy.

<sup>13</sup>Hereditary prince, count, favorite of Horus, lord of the palace, Thutiy.

<sup>14</sup>Hereditary prince, count, of sweeping step<sup>a</sup> in the court, Thutiy.

<sup>15</sup>Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, overseer of every handicraft of the king, Thutiy.

<sup>16</sup>Hereditary prince, count, great companion of the Lord of the Two Lands, the excellent scribe, active with his hands, Thutiy.

List of Works

372. <sup>17</sup>He says: "I acted as chief (r<sup>2</sup>-hr), giving the directions; I led the craftsmen to work in<sup>b</sup> the works, in:<sup>c</sup>

Second Nile-Barge

373. <sup>18</sup>the great barge of the "Beginning-of-the-River" (named): "Userhet-Amon,"<sup>d</sup> wrought with gold of the best of the highlands; it illuminated the Two Lands with its rays.

Unknown Shrine

374. <sup>19a</sup>a shrine, the horizon of the god, his great seat, of electrum of the best of the highlands, in work established for eternity.

<sup>20</sup>Seret-mat<sup>e</sup> (s<sup>c</sup> r<sup>c</sup> t-m<sup>2</sup> c<sup>c</sup> t); its august façade of electrum, great — — [Amon].

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "jar of foot."
<sup>b</sup>That this is the proper rendering is shown by the words of Amenhotep, son of Hapi (§ 917, l. 38). Spiegelberg's rendering: "nach dem Vorbild der Arbeiten," demands a word ("Vorbild") not in the original, and makes Thutiy represent himself as merely working after the patterns of someone else.

<sup>c</sup>This line (17) is vertical, extending along the ends of ll. 18-32 like an embracing bracket, thus:

Before each of the fifteen works enumerated in ll. 18-32 we are to understand the last sentence of l. 17: "I led the craftsmen to work, etc., on" —. The preposition "on" must be changed to "in" according as a small monument or a temple follows, a difference not necessary in Egyptian.

<sup>d</sup>See § 32.
<sup>e</sup>Lit., "sending up (exhibiting) truth," probably the name of a shrine.

Works in Der el-Bahri

375. <sup>21</sup>“Most Splendid”<sup>a</sup> the temple of myriads of years; its great doors fashioned of black copper,<sup>b</sup> the inlaid figures of electrum.

<sup>22</sup>Khikhet,<sup>c</sup> the great seat of Amon, his horizon in the west; all its doors of real cedar, wrought with bronze.

<sup>23</sup>the house<sup>d</sup> of Amon, his enduring horizon of eternity; its floor wrought with gold and silver; its beauty was like the horizon of heaven.

<sup>24</sup>a great shrine<sup>e</sup> of ebony of Nubia (T ʿ-pd' t); the stairs beneath it, high and wide, of pure alabaster of Hatnub.

<sup>25</sup>a palace<sup>f</sup> of the god, wrought with gold and silver<sup>g</sup>; it illuminated the faces (of people) with its brightness.

Works in Karnak

376. <sup>26</sup>great doors, high and wide in Karnak; wrought with copper and bronze; the inlaid figures<sup>h</sup> of electrum.

<sup>27</sup>magnificent necklaces, large amulets of the great seat, of electrum and every costly stone.

<sup>28</sup>two great obelisks;<sup>i</sup> their height was 108 cubits; wrought throughout with electrum; which filled the Two Lands with their brightness.

<sup>29</sup>an august gate (named): “Terror-of-Amon,”<sup>i</sup> fashioned of copper in one sheet; its likenesses likewise.

<sup>a</sup>Name of Der el-Bahri temple.

<sup>b</sup>The making of metal doors may be seen in the tomb of Rekhmire, ed. Newberry, Pl. XVIII.

<sup>c</sup>Meaning “Shining of the horizon” (H c -y ʿ hwt). According to Spiegelberg, this is another name for Der el-Bahri; it is, however, strange that the doors of this temple should be mentioned twice. Possibly the “great doors” of l. 21 are the huge entrance doors, and those of l. 22 the inner doors.

<sup>d</sup>Possibly some part of the Der el-Bahri temple.

<sup>e</sup>This is very probably the ebony shrine found in the Der el-Bahri temple (see § 126).

<sup>f</sup>A structure not met with elsewhere in the inscriptions. Its purpose and character are unknown.

<sup>g</sup>Read: h'pw.

<sup>h</sup>There is no doubt that these obelisks were in Karnak, but the height given far exceeds that of Hatshepsut's surviving obelisk in Karnak. The theory that the height of the pair has been combined in one datum receives some confirmation from the discovery that the two obelisks on the barge in Hatshepsut's relief lie end to end; but the total is 10 feet less than twice the height of the Karnak obelisk.

<sup>i</sup>There is a Karnak gate called “Amon-Great-in-Terror” (Mariette, Karnak, 38, a, 8); but none is known of the above name.

<sup>30</sup>many offering-tables of Amon in Karnak, of electrum without limit; of every costly stone —.

<sup>31</sup>magnificent chests,<sup>a</sup> wrought with copper and electrum; every vessel; linen; of every precious stone of the divine members.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>32</sup>a great seat, a shrine, built of granite; its durability is like the pillars of heaven; its work is a thing of eternity.

Measuring of the Punt Tribute, Etc.

377. <sup>33</sup>Behold, all the marvels and all the tribute of all countries, the best of the marvels of Punt, were offered<sup>c</sup> to Amon, lord of Karnak [for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of the King Makere (Hatshepsut), 'given life, stability, health.'] He (Amon) hath given the Two Lands, <sup>34</sup>(for) he knew that he (the king) would offer them to him. Now, I was the one who counted them, because I was so excellent in his heart; my praise was — with him; — — — — me more than his suite <sup>35</sup>— my 'integrity' of heart for him. He recognized me, as one doing that which is spoken, concealing my speech concerning the affairs of his palace. He appointed me to be leader of the palace, knowing that I was instructed in work. <sup>36</sup>— — — the double silver-house; every splendid costly stone in the temple of Amon in Karnak, filled with his tribute to their roof. The like has not happened since the time of the ancestors. His majesty commanded to make <sup>37</sup>—<sup>d</sup> of electrum of the best of the highlands, in the midst of the festival-hall; measured<sup>e</sup> by the heket for Amon in the presence of the whole land.

<sup>a</sup>A number of such chests are shown in the Punt reliefs (Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 80).

<sup>b</sup>The line has been cut wrong, was filled with stucco, and cut again; the stucco has fallen out, revealing the old mistakes and producing confusion.

<sup>c</sup>This is the offering scene in the Punt reliefs (Navelle, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 77), in which the inscription (§ 289) agrees strikingly with this. The official offering is "for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of the king," and is usually conducted by someone else (see § 57); hence the impersonal passive here.

<sup>d</sup>It is possible that the word "balance" should be supplied here, for the inscription over the balance in the scene of the weighing in the Punt reliefs (§ 280, although it does not mention electrum particularly) would indicate that the balance had been made especially for the purpose. In Papyrus Harris (IV, 256) the balance is also of electrum. Spiegelberg conjectures "eine grosse Haufe," but it is only the myrrh which appears in "heaps" in the Punt reliefs.

<sup>e</sup>One of the frequent pseudo-participles in building and similar inscriptions, referring back to nouns mentioned long before; it refers here to the tribute in l. 33.

Statement thereof: of electrum  $88\frac{1}{2}$  heket,<sup>a</sup> making: <sup>38</sup>— ( $x+$ )  $57\frac{1}{2}$  deben; for the life, prosperity, and health of the king [Makere (Hatshepsut), who is given] life forever.

Conclusion

378. I received (snw-) loaves from that which comes forth before Amon, lord of Karnak. All these things happened in truth; no deceitful utterance [came from my mouth]. <sup>39</sup>I — them; I was vigilant, my heart was excellent for my lord; that I might rest in the highland of the blessed who are in the necropolis; that my memory might abide on earth; that my soul might live with the lord of eternity; that he<sup>b</sup> may not be repelled <sup>40</sup>[by] the porters who guard the gates of the nether world; that he may come forth at the cry of the offerer<sup>c</sup> in my tomb of the necropolis; that he may [abound] in bread; that he may overflow with beer, that he may drink at the living water of the river. <sup>41</sup>May I go in and out like the glorious ones, who do that which their gods praise; may my name be goodly among the people who shall come<sup>d</sup> after years; may they give to me praise at the two seasons with the praise [— —].

INSCRIPTIONS OF PUEMRE

379. One of the important architects under Hatshepsut, and later under Thutmose III, was Puemre, who has left some references to his building activity, in his tomb inscriptions and on his statue.

I. STATUE INSCRIPTION<sup>e</sup>

Construction of Ebony Shrine

380. I inspected the erection of a great shrine of ebony, wrought with electrum, by the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Makere (Hatshepsut), for her mother Mut, mistress of Ishru.

<sup>a</sup>Eleven four-fifths bushels.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "the one who places the things."

<sup>b</sup>His soul.

<sup>d</sup>Read: yw' ty' sn.

<sup>e</sup>On a statue discovered in the temple of Mut, at Karnak; published by Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 315, 316.

Uncertain Building

381. I inspected the erection of a —<sup>a</sup> of fine white (lime)stone of Ayan by . . . . .<sup>b</sup>

II. TOMB INSCRIPTIONS<sup>c</sup>Relief Scene

382. 1. At the left sits Puemre receiving reports from six “overseers of workmen,” behind whom are two obelisks (see § 624). The inscriptions are as follows:

Over Puemre

383. 2. Inspection of the great and excellent monuments, which the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Menkheperre (Thutmose III) made for his father Amon, in Karnak,<sup>d</sup> of silver, gold, and every splendid, costly stone; by the hereditary prince, count, divine father, Puem[re].

Before the Overseers

384. 3. The approach of the officials, the chiefs of works; they say before this official, “Thy heart is glad because all the works have reached their positions for thee.”

On the Obelisk<sup>e</sup>

4. . . . .<sup>f</sup> Thutmose (III); [he] made (it) [as] his monument for his father, Amon-Re, that he might be given life forever.

Relief Scene<sup>g</sup>

385. 5. Puemre stands at the left, staff and baton in hand, receiving three lines of chiefs bringing tribute, which three scribes are recording.

<sup>a</sup>Possibly a doorway.

<sup>b</sup>Continued as in preceding paragraph.

<sup>c</sup>From his tomb at Abd el-Kurna; partially published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 39, c, and Denkmäler, Text, III, 243, 244. It is stated by Newberry (Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 315, note) to be a peculiarly fine tomb, and he promises its full publication, which has not yet appeared.

<sup>d</sup>This shows that the obelisks were erected in Karnak.

<sup>e</sup>Only the base of the second obelisk has survived, and its inscription is of course lost.

<sup>f</sup>Horus-, throne-, and S<sup>2</sup>-R<sup>c</sup>-names.

<sup>g</sup>On the left wall; published by Dümichen, Die Oasen der Libyschen Wüste, Pl. I; see also pp. 22 f.

Inscription before Puemre

6. Reception of the tribute of the [products]<sup>1</sup> of the marshes of Asia, of Watet-Hor<sup>a</sup> and the tribute of the southern and northern oases; presentation for the king, to the temple — — — — — by the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion ————— Puemre, triumphant.

Upper Row

386. 7. <sup>b</sup>— the tribute of the ends of Asia.

Middle Row

8. <sup>b</sup>Recording the tribute of Watet-Hor.

9. <sup>c</sup>The chief of the vineyards of this god, Amon —.

Lower Row

10. <sup>b</sup>Recording the tribute of the oasis-region.

11. <sup>c</sup>The chiefs of the southern and northern oases.

Fragment<sup>d</sup>

387. 12. Inspection of the weighing of great heaps of myrrh —————, <sup>e</sup> ivory, ebony, electrum of Emu (<sup>c</sup> m<sup>o</sup>w), all sweet woods ————— <sup>e</sup> living captives, which his majesty brought from his victories ————— <sup>e</sup> Menkheperre (Thutmose III).

INSCRIPTIONS OF HAPUSENEB<sup>f</sup>

388. Hapuseneb, vizier under Hatshepsut, was architect of a royal tomb, probably that of Hatshepsut,<sup>g</sup> and super-

<sup>a</sup>W<sup>o</sup>-tt-Hr, "way of Horus" (in Sinuhe, it is written w<sup>o</sup>-wt Hr, "ways of Horus," but other texts write as above; read W<sup>o</sup>ty't?). As used in Sinuhe it must be on or near the Asiatic frontier of the Delta; but as it sends tribute, it must be in Asia. There was an Egyptian governor there in the Eighteenth Dynasty. His title was ymy-r<sup>o</sup> ys't m W<sup>o</sup>-tt-Hr (Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, I, 56, statue of <sup>o</sup> nbny).

<sup>b</sup>With the scribe.

<sup>c</sup>With the man (lower row, men) before the scribe.

<sup>d</sup>Accompanying a weighing scene not given by Dümichen.

<sup>e</sup>Unknown amount lost.

<sup>f</sup>Statue in the Louvre, published by Newberry (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 31-36). I had also my own copy of the original, which added a few readings. Another statue, with unimportant inscriptions, Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 312-15. A further record of his services on a statue in Bologna has been hacked out by Hapuseneb's enemies. I was unable to secure any important data from a study of the original.

<sup>g</sup>Against my own former opinion (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXII, 94).

vised the construction of other royal monuments. His works are recorded on his Louvre statue, but the inscriptions are in a sadly fragmentary state, and the name of Thutmose II has been inserted over that of Hatshepsut, as the feminine endings show.<sup>a</sup>

Hapuseneb was the most powerful man in Hatshepsut's party, being not merely vizier, but also "High Priest of Amon, and chief of the prophets of South and North,"<sup>b</sup> besides a number of positions which he held in the treasury. He thus united in his person all the power of the administrative government with that of the strong sacerdotal party. The formation of the priesthood of the whole land into a coherent organization, with a single individual at its head, appears here for the first time. This new and great organization was thus through Hapuseneb enlisted on the side of Hatshepsut.

Introduction

389. <sup>1</sup>Made as a favor of the king's presence, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Okheperne]re ——— (Thutmose II), beloved of Amon-Re, king of all gods.

<sup>2</sup>The majesty (fem.!) of the King Okhepernere, given life, commanded ——— sandstone and with every splendid costly stone, <sup>3</sup>. . . . ——— for the hereditary prince, count, <sup>4</sup>great lord in the South, (sm-) priest of [Heliopolis], governor of the city, vizier, overseer of the tem[ples]. <sup>5</sup>Lo, his majesty was in his palace [— — —] of the king's-house, ———<sup>d</sup> [whom] <sup>6</sup>her (sic!) majesty — before millions; whom she magnified among the people, because of the greatness of the excellence of — over ———.

Cliff-Tomb

<sup>7</sup>He saith: "The good god, King Okhepernere, praised me [—] in the temple. [He appointed me] <sup>8</sup>to conduct the work upon his cliff-

<sup>a</sup>I found the cartouches also sunken, showing the effect of cutting out the first name.

<sup>b</sup>Louvre statue.

<sup>c</sup>Down the front of the legs.

<sup>d</sup>Here the name of Hapuseneb, of course, occurred, to which belong the following two relative clauses.

tomb (hr t), because of the great excellence of my plans. <sup>1</sup>My lord appointed me, — <sup>2</sup>King Okhepernere, and I was made chief (Hry) in Karnak, in the house of Amon, <sup>3</sup>in every <sup>1</sup>of Amon, <sup>4</sup>of gold. . . . .
<sup>1</sup>I made <sup>11</sup>the mortuary offerings of Amon-Re, king of gods, before his temple in Karnak, in Hermonthis ——— <sup>12</sup>——— . . . . . He commanded that I should be ——— <sup>13</sup>——— should be appointed at the going out of ———.

Various Works

390. <sup>b14</sup>By the majesty (fem.) of the king, the Lord of the Two Lands, Okhepernere, the living.<sup>c</sup> Lo, I was leader (hr p) of the works [on] <sup>15</sup>——— [in Kar]nak, wrought with gold; <sup>16</sup>———chief, of silver, gold, and black copper; <sup>17</sup>———<sup>d</sup>wrought of <sup>1</sup>copper<sup>1</sup>, the great name upon it was of electrum;<sup>e</sup>

<sup>18</sup>—— [a shrine] of —<sup>f</sup> and ebony, wrought with gold; <sup>19</sup>—— a <sup>1</sup>chamber for<sup>1</sup> everything and that which is in its inclosure; <sup>20</sup>—— many offering-tables of gold, silver, and lapis lazuli, vessels, and necklaces; <sup>21</sup>the making of two doors of copper, of a single stone; the great name upon them being of electrum; <sup>22</sup>the erection of a temple of fine limestone of Ayan (named): “Thutmose II-is-Divine-of-Monuments;” <sup>23</sup>———<sup>g</sup> of gold, silver, lapis lazuli, malachite, every splendid, costly stone, and every sweet wood.<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Amon has been restored, and perhaps where it does not belong.

<sup>b</sup>Right side; the arrangement of this and the following lines is the same as in the stela of Thutiy (§ 372, ll. 17 ff.; see note); l. 14 above is numbered 26 in the publication, and is to be understood before all the works enumerated, one in each of the following lines.

<sup>c</sup>Feminine participle!

<sup>e</sup>Not silver, as in the publication.

<sup>d</sup>This monument is a door.

<sup>f</sup>A kind of wood is broken out.

<sup>g</sup>The last three words are lost.

<sup>h</sup>Ll. 24 and 25 are broken off, and possibly still a third line.

REIGN OF THUTMOSE III

THE ANNALS<sup>a</sup>

391. This document, containing no less than 223 lines, is the longest and most important historical inscription in Egypt, and forms the most complete account of the military achievements of any Egyptian king. It demonstrates the injustice of the criticism that the Egyptians were incapable of giving a clear and succinct account of a military campaign, for it shows plainly that at least in this reign careful, systematic records were made and preserved in the royal archives,

---

<sup>a</sup>They occupy the inside of the walls inclosing the corridor which surrounds the granite holy of holies of the great Karnak temple of Amon. These walls were built by Thutmose III, forming a large sandstone chamber (into which the granite holy of holies was finally inserted by Phillip Arrhidæus) about 25 meters in length from east to west, and 12 meters wide. The east end was left bare. The Annals, beginning at the northeast corner, read westward along the north wall, and southward along the west wall, terminating at the door in the center of this wall. At the other side of this door terminate also the presentation scenes and inscriptions (§§ 541 ff.) which read from east to west along the south wall, and northward along the west wall to the said door. Or, as Mariette says: “. . . . après avoir enjambé sur la paroi dans laquelle se trouve la porte d'entrée (in middle of east wall) vont se rejoindre en se terminant aux deux scènes d'adoration qui forment l'encadrement de cette porte” (in middle of west wall; scene, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a. See Mariette, Revue archéologique, 1860<sup>2</sup>, I, N. S., 30). Of the Annals walls, he further says: “Elle se décompose en trois parties qui sont les suivantes:

“1<sup>o</sup>. Un texte de 19 lignes qui se termine par: comme le soleil à toujours, ce qui prouve que l'inscription n'allait pas plus loin. (voy. Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, b; M. Lepsius n'a connu que 11 lignes; voy. aussi Birch, The Annals of Thothmes III, dans les Archæologia, Vol. XXXV, 121).

“2<sup>o</sup>. Un seconde chapitre de 110 lignes qu'une porte latérale (la porte nommée Ra-men-Kheper Amen (ouer biou) coupe en deux en laissant 67 lignes d'un côté (voy. Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, 6, b; . . . . .), et 43 de l'autre côté (M. Lepsius n'en donne que 39; voy. ibid., 32; . . . . .).

“3<sup>o</sup>. Un troisième chapitre de 94 lignes, dont 74 occupent la moitié ouest de la paroi nord à la suite des 110 lignes précédentes, et les 20 dernières sont gravées sur la paroi à gauche de la porte d'entrée. Ces 20 lignes sont publiées dans Lepsius, Abth., III, Bl. 30, a. . . . . Quant aux 74 premières lignes, elles se décomposent en 54 lignes qui sont à Paris et qui commencent le chapitre (Lepsius, Auswahl, taf. XII; . . . . .), en 6 lignes qui suivent celles-ci et qui sont perdues, et enfin en giving a detailed account of each invasion in language indicating the strategic operations of the army in each of its many campaigns.

392. The existence of such records is indicated in the account of the first campaign (ll. 11, 12, § 433):

Now, all that his majesty did to this city, to that wretched foe and his wretched army, was recorded each day by its (the day's) name under the title of: [—] recorded upon a roll of leather<sup>a</sup> in the temple of Amon to this day.

Elsewhere the king also speaks of “recording for the future” (§ 568, l. 22). We even know the official, named Thaneni, who kept these records. His tomb, on the west shore at Thebes, first noticed by Champollion, contains, among others, biographical inscriptions in which he states:<sup>b</sup>

14 autres lignes que M. Lepsius a publiées imparfaitement (Lepsius, Denkmäler III, 31, a; . . . .).”

Mariette then appends the following table summarizing the above:

1 <sup>er</sup> chapitre:	19 lignes	.	.	.	.	Lepsius, Denkmäler , III, 31, b
2 <sup>e</sup> chapitre:	110 lignes	{	67 lignes	.	.	Lepsius, Denkmäler , III, 31, b
			43 lignes	.	.	Lepsius, Denkmäler , III, 32
			6 lignes perdues
3 <sup>e</sup> chapitre:	94 lignes	{	14 lignes	.	.	Lepsius, Denkmäler , III, 31, a
			20 lignes	.	.	Lepsius, Denkmäler , III, 30, a
Total:	223 lignes

Mariette gives 233 as the total, but refers to 223 (loc. cit., 32).

They are in a very bad state of preservation, the upper courses having mostly disappeared, and with them the upper parts of the vertical lines of the inscription. The translation begins at the extreme northeast corner on the north wall and proceeds to the left.

The complete text of the Annals has never been edited together; being scattered through several publications (see conspectus below) none of which is accurate except Bissing. These texts must be supplemented and corrected by fragments in Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 154-58; Young, Hieroglyphics, 41-44; Description de l'Égypte, Pl. 38 (No. 26, 27, 29); Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, Pl. 56, Nos. 5-7; de Rougé, Revue archéologique, N. S., II, Pl. 16; Griffith, Corrections from an early copy (about 1825) by James Burton, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXXIII, 125.

<sup>a</sup>On the use of leather, which was very common, see Birch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1871, 104 and 117; and Pietschmann, Leder und Holz als Schreibmaterialien bei den Aegyptern (from Beiträge zur Theorie und Praxis des Buch- und Bibliothekswesens, Heft 2).

<sup>b</sup>See Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 487, 831, 832; Brugsch, Thesaurus V, 1151.

"I followed <sup>12</sup>the Good God, Sovereign of Truth, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III); I beheld the victories of the king which he won in every country. He brought the chiefs of Zahi as living prisoners to Egypt; he captured all their cities; he cut down their groves; no country remained — — —. I recorded the victories which he won in every land, putting (them) into writing according to the facts.

There is no doubt that we have here the author of some of the ephemerides referred to in the Annals.<sup>a</sup>

393. The character of these ephemerides space will not permit us to discuss here, further than to note that in the account of the first, or Megiddo, campaign (§§ 408 ff.) we have a somewhat full excerpt from them, in which the strategic details, like the line of march, the dispositions in battle, etc., are given with such clearness that it is possible to draw a plan of the field of battle. Unfortunately, this fulness in excerpting is confined to the Megiddo campaign, and even toward its end the abbreviation and omission<sup>b</sup> already begin. That the excerpts are much abbreviated is distinctly stated in the account of the seventh expedition (l. 13, § 472), with reference to the supplies furnished to the "harbors:"

<sup>a</sup>A comparison of the phrases and words used by Thaneni, above, with those of the accounts in the Annals makes this certain. This is evident even in the English. It is a question whether Thaneni could have been the author of the earliest campaign records, for he is still in active service under Thutmose IV (see Recueil, IV, 130), so that, supposing he began with the Megiddo campaign at twenty-five years of age, he would have been over eighty years old at the accession of Thutmose IV, under whom he completed a census of the people and live-stock in all Egypt (see Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 487), which is recorded as follows: "Mustering of the whole land before his majesty, making an inspection of everybody, knowing the soldiers, priests, royal serfs, and all the craftsmen of the whole land, all the cattle, fowl, and small cattle, by the military scribe, beloved of his lord, Thaneni." On his wide powers, see also the inscription in Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, 66, 2, a. On his tomb, see Bouriant, Recueil, XI, 156-59; Champollion, ibid., I, 484-87, 831, 832; further inscriptions also by Piehl, Inscriptions, I, CVII, D-CVIII, E.

<sup>b</sup>The omission in the later campaigns, evident anyway, may be clearly seen by a comparison with the narrative of Amenemhab (§§ 574 ff.).

“They (the supplies) remain in the daily register of the palace, the statements of them not being given in this inscription, in order not to multiply words.<sup>a</sup>

394. The excerpting scribe, being a priest, is more interested in the booty than the strategic operations which led to its capture, because this booty was largely given to his temples; hence he pares down his extracts to the meagerest statement of the king's whereabouts, adding a tolerably full summary of the booty and tribute. Indeed, it may be said that, although the king did command that this permanent record of his campaigns should be made on the temple wall, yet the entire record which we call the Annals serves as little more than an introduction to the list of feasts and offerings (§§ 541 ff.) by which the Annals are continued. They merely explain whence came the magnificent offerings to Amon.<sup>b</sup> It is therefore frequently impossible to distinguish between a serious campaign<sup>c</sup> like that of Megiddo and mere expeditions for inspection.

395. The conquests recorded in the Annals involved the most serious military projects undertaken by any Egyptian king—projects so successfully carried out by Thutmose III that he is to be regarded as unquestionably the greatest military leader of ancient Egypt. Thutmose I had been able to march to the Euphrates without meeting any serious coalition of his foes, so far as we know. The results of his conquest had not been permanent; that is, they could not endure indefinitely without further campaigning, especially in the extreme north. This Hatshepsut had not done, although the Lebanon or a part of it was still held in the year 15. Then the kingdom and city of Kadesh, on the upper Orontes, quietly organized a formidable revolt, which united all Egypt's Asiatic enemies from Sharuhén on the south to the Euphrates on the north. It is clear also that the powerful kingdom of Mitanni assisted this general revolt with men and means. For the Mitannian king naturally feared to see the armies of the Pharaoh in Naharin at his very threshold. Early in the year 23, Thutmose III met and overthrew the allied Syrians at Megiddo, which he besieged and captured, and although he marched northward to the southern end of Lebanon, he was far from able to reach and punish Kadesh. But he established a fortress in the southern Lebanon, to prevent another southward advance by the king of Kadesh, and then returned home.

<sup>a</sup>This register of daily supplies is, of course, not the ephemerides of Thaneni; but the fact of excerpting is equally clear, nevertheless. This interesting statement finds a parallel in the tomb of Hui, where it is said concerning his praises: “One mentions them (one) time (each) by its name, (for) they are too numerous to put them in writing” (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 117 = Denkmäler, Text, III, 302).

<sup>b</sup>There is on this same wall a relief showing Thutmose III presenting to Amon a magnificent array of costly gifts in gold and silver. Many of the objects mentioned in the Annals may be seen here (Champollion, Monuments, IV, 316, 317; and Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1185 ff.). The whole scene is of the greatest interest (§§ 543 ff.); it also contains the two obelisks of § 624.

<sup>c</sup>The word regularly used (wḏy' t) really means “expedition.”

396. Of the next eighteen years the summers of sixteen were spent campaigning in Syria, making a total of seventeen campaigns. The next three campaigns (2, 3, and 4) are meagerly recorded,<sup>b</sup> but in the year 29, on the fifth campaign, we find the king plainly making preparations for the conquest of Kadesh, by first securing the coast and getting possession of the harbors of Phœnicia. He then returned to Egypt for the first time by water, and hereafter the army is regularly transported to Syria by the fleet.

397. The next year, therefore, the king disembarked his army in some Phœnician harbor, and marched upon Kadesh, which he captured and chastised, returning then to the coast at Simyra, and going north to punish Arvad again. The foothold in north Syria necessary for an advance into the Euphrates country had now been gained, and Kadesh, the dangerous enemy who would have threatened his rear on such a march, had been subdued. The next year (31) was therefore spent in equipping the Phœnician harbors with supplies and quelling any smouldering embers of rebellion there.

---

<sup>a</sup>The decree of Harmhab incidentally shows that Thutmose III was back in Egypt each year by the time of the feast of Opet (I, 58, ll. 29-31), early in October. See Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 60, 61.

<sup>b</sup>The record of the fourth is lost.

398. It was not until the second year (33) after these preparations that the great king landed in Phœnicia for his march into the heart of Naharin. Already in the year 24, as a result of the great Megiddo victory, the king of Assur had sent presents, but now the Egyptians were again to plunder the Euphrates countries—a feat which had not been repeated since Thutmose I. The long and arduous march<sup>a</sup> was successfully made, the king of Mitanni, who had, with Kadesh, been the heart and soul of the Syrian resistance, was totally defeated, Carchemish<sup>b</sup> was reached and taken, the Euphrates was crossed, and at last Thutmose III sets up his boundary tablet, marking the northern limits of his empire, beside that of his father, Thutmose I. Before he has left the region the envoys from the king of Babylon and the king of the Hittites, having doubtless started at the news of his invasion, appear with their gifts. On his return to the coast the king arranges that the princes of Lebanon shall keep the harbors supplied with all provisions.

399. The conquest of all Syria has consumed exactly ten years, but revolt has still to be reckoned with. Only a voyage of inspection along the Phœnician coast was required in the next year (34), but the revolt of the king of Mitanni called Thutmose into Naharin in the following year, and after a decisive defeat the people of Naharin were again brought under the Egyptian yoke. The records of the next two years (36 and 37) are lost, but in the year 38 we find the king punishing the princes of the southern Lebanon region, in order to protect the road north between the Lebanons. On this occasion, for the first time, he receives gifts from the prince of Cyprus, and also Arrapachitis, the later Assyrian province.

---

<sup>a</sup>On the arrangements of Thutmose III's herald Intef, to provide the king with a dwelling, supplies, etc., on such marches, see the Stela of Intef (§§ 771, ll. 24-27).

<sup>b</sup>Amenemhab, § 583.

400. The punishment of the raiding Bedwin of southern Palestine forms a preliminary to the usual journey of inspection in the next year (39), and the record of the next two years (39 and 40) is too fragmentary to show more than that the tribute was paid as usual.

401. Finally, the long series of revolts in Syria culminates in a last desperate rebellion, in which Thutmose's arch-enemy, the source of most of his trouble in Syria, Kadesh, is the leader. Naharin sends allies, and Tunip likewise, so that the whole of north Syria, at least inland, is again combined against Thutmose. In the year 42 he proceeded first against Tunip, and after its subjugation besieged Kadesh, which was finally captured. Thus the nearly twenty years of Syrian campaigning was concluded, as it had begun, by the humiliation of Kadesh, which during all that time had been Egypt's thorn in the flesh. This last downfall was final; Kadesh no longer stirred revolt in Syria,<sup>a</sup> and Thutmose III could relax his ceaseless efforts continued during seventeen campaigns.

---

<sup>a</sup>When the campaigns of the Nineteenth Dynasty begin in northern Syria, it is Tunip, the old ally of Kadesh, that plays the leading rôle.

402. The extent of these campaigns is further indicated by two lists of conquered Asiatic cities left by Thutmose III in the great Karnak temple. Those belonging to the first campaign, preserved in triplicate,<sup>a</sup> are 119 in number, and embrace, in general, the region from the northern limits of Palestine southward an uncertain distance into Judea (southern Judea being at that time already under Egyptian control; cf. Müller, Asien und Europa, 144, 154, 155), as well as Damascus and its district. Many Old Testament names have been recognized in it. It is introduced by the superscription:

List of the countries of Upper Retenu which his majesty shut up in the city of Megiddo (My-k-ty) the wretched, whose children his majesty brought as living prisoners to the city of Suhen-em-Opet,<sup>b</sup> on his first victorious campaign, according to the command of his father Amon, who led him to excellent ways.

The third copy of the list (Mariette, Karnak, 19) has the same superscription, with the variant:

to the city of Thebes, in order to fill the storehouse<sup>c</sup> of his father Amon, [presider over] Karnak, on his first, etc.

The second copy of the list has a different superscription:

<sup>a</sup>The first copy is on the west side of the Pylon VI, north end; the other two are, one on the north side and the other on the south side of the Pylon VIII, Baedeker's Karnak, or the VIIth, Mariette, Karnak). Text: ibid., 17-20; important corrections by Golénischeff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XX, Pls. V and VI, and more fully by Maspero, Recueil, VII, 94-97. Treatments by Maspero, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXIX, 119-31, and Müller, Asien und Europa, 156-64, 144, and 154 f.; less critical Tomkins, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IX, 257-80 (with text).

<sup>b</sup>Swhn m Yp't means "Castle (or Prison) in Thebes," a place of confinement or dwelling for the foreign princes residing in Thebes as hostages. In the sixth campaign (§ 467) the purpose of thus keeping them is given.

<sup>c</sup>It is not infrequently distinctly stated that such disposal was made of these children; cf. Building Stela of Amenhotep III, front, ll. 6, 7 (§ 884), and Papyrus of Capture of Joppa, III, ll. 11, 12, where, after the fall of the city, Thutiy says to Thutmose III: "Let people come, to take them as captives; fill thou the house of thy father Amon-Re, . . . . with male and female slaves."

All inaccessible lands of the marshes of Asia,<sup>a</sup> which his majesty brought as living captives — — — they had never been trodden by the other kings, beside his majesty —, a title which would indicate that some of the places belong farther north than the limits above indicated.

403. The second list<sup>b</sup> embraced 248 names (of which many are lost) of cities in northern Syria and also perhaps as far east as the Chaboras River,<sup>c</sup> but our geographical knowledge of this region is too meager as yet to identify any number of the places included.

404. In addition to these materials the great list of "Feasts and Offerings from the Conquests" (§§ 547 ff.), the Building Inscription of the Karnak Ptah-Temple (§§ 609 ff.), the king's obelisks (§§ 629 ff.), and his "Hymn of Victory" (§§ 655 ff.), furnish important references to the campaigns. The great portal of Pylon VII at Karnak also bore a long recital of his wars, of which only scanty fragments have survived (§§ 593 ff.).

405. The tombs of the contemporary officials in the Theban cemetery also contain very valuable supplementary material. The career of Amenemhab, the most important of these, is translated below (§§ 574 ff.). Next to these are the representations in the tomb of Rekhmire (§§ 760 ff.), which show many of the objects mentioned in the tribute lists of the Annals, besides a reference to Thutmose III's campaigns (§ 755). The tomb of Menkheperreseneb shows

---

<sup>a</sup>See also the "Hymn of Victory" (§§ 655 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>On the Pylon VIII at Karnak as an appendix to the third copy of the first list (Baedeker's Karnak; seventh in Mariette, Karnak; cf. B, 252, Mariette). Text: Mariette, Karnak, 20, 21; Tomkins, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IX, Pls. III, IV; the best treatment, Müller, Asien und Europa, 286-92; Tomkins, ibid., IX, 227-54, depends too much on modern names for his identifications.

<sup>c</sup>See Müller, Asien und Europa, 287.

the tribute of Asia (§§ 772 ff.). The tomb of Puemere contains a relief showing the reception of tribute from “the ends of Asia” (§ 385), and that of Imnezeh<sup>a</sup> (Y ʿ m-ndḥ) a similar scene of tribute from “Retenu the wretched.” Finally, among the most interesting of these contemporaries is the court herald, Intef, who tells how he preceded Thutmose III on the march and prepared the Syrian palaces for his reception (§§ 771, ll. 24-27).

---

CONSPECTUS OF CAMPAIGNS

406. FIRST CAMPAIGN, YEARS 22 AND 23 (§§ 408-43, 593 ff., 616)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, b, ll. 1-67; ibid., III, 32, ll. 1-32=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1153-66, ll. 1-79, and 1-21; Bissing's unpublished collation.<sup>b</sup>)

Battle of Megiddo; captured: Megiddo, Yenoam, Nuges, Herenkeru; built fort in Lebanon; tribute and booty of these.

[SECOND CAMPAIGN] YEAR 24 (§§ 444-49)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 32, ll. 32-39=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1166-68, ll. 21-28; Bissing's unpublished collation.)

Tribute of Assur and Retenu.

[THIRD CAMPAIGN] YEAR 25 (§§ 450-52)

(Mariette, Karnak, Pls. 28 and 31.)

Plants of Retenu.

[FOURTH CAMPAIGN, YEARS 26-28] (§ 453)

Lost.

---

<sup>a</sup>Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 356 f.

<sup>b</sup>This is incorporated in the Berlin Dictionary, and I owe to von Bissing my sincere thanks for permission to use it.

FIFTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 29 (§§ 454-62)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 1-7; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 1-6=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1168-70, ll. 1-7=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 1-7.)

Second caption; campaign in Zahi; capture of "W<sup>o</sup> r——1"; sacrifice to Amon; spoil of city; capture of Arvad; list of tribute received "on this expedition;" sailed home.

SIXTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 30 (§§ 463-67)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 7-9; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 7, 8=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1170, 1171, ll. 7-9=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 7-9.)

Capture of Kadesh; tribute of Retenu; punishment of Arvad.

[SEVENTH CAMPAIGN], YEAR 31 (§§ 468-75)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 9-17; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 9-16=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1171-73, ll. 9-17=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 9-17.)

Capture of Ullaza; tribute of Retenu; supplies for the harbors; harvest of Retenu; tribute of Genebteyew; impost of Wawat.

[EIGHTH CAMPAIGN], YEAR 33 (§§ 476-87)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 17-29; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 17-28=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1173-75, ll. 17-29=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 17-29.)

Conquest of Naharin; battle in Naharin; the booty (capture of Carchemish); crossing of Euphrates; boundary tablets; tribute of Naharin, supplies for the harbors; tribute of Babylon; tribute of Hittites; Punt expedition; impost of Wawat.

[NINTH CAMPAIGN], YEAR 34 (§§ 488-95)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 29-37; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 29-35=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1175-77, ll. 29-37=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 29-37.)

Surrender of Zahi towns; tribute of Retenu; supplies for the harbors; tribute of Cyprus; impost of Kush and Wawat.

TENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 35 (§§ 496-503)

(Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 37-41; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a, ll. 1-3=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1177, 1178, ll. 37-44, and l. 2=Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 37-44.)

Revolt of Naharin; battle in Naharin, king's booty; army's booty; impost of Kush and Wawat.

[ELEVENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 36] (§ 504)

Lost.

[TWELFTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 37] (§ 505)

Lost.

[THIRTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 38] (§§ 506-15)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a, ll. 3-10=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1178-81, ll. 2-9.)

Capture of Nuges; booty of same; tribute of Syria; harbor supplies; tribute of Cyprus and Arrapakhitis; products of Punt; impost of Kush and Wawat.

FOURTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 39 (§§ 516-19)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a, ll. 10-14=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1181-1182, ll. 9-13.)

Defeat of Shasu; Syrian tribute; harbor supplies.

[FIFTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 40] (§§ 520-23)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a, ll. 1-4=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1182, ll. 1-4; photograph by Borchardt.)

Tribute of Cyprus; impost of Kush and Wawat.

[SIXTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 41] (§§ 524-27)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a, ll. 4-10=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1182, 1183, ll. 4-10; photograph by Borchardt.)

Tribute of Retenu; tribute of Hittites; impost of Kush and Wawat.

[SEVENTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 42] (§§ 528-39)

(Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a, ll. 10-20=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1183-85, ll. 10-20; photograph by Borchardt.)

Campaign against Kadesh; overthrow of Erkatu, Tunip, Kadesh; booty of these; harbor supplies; tribute of unknown country; of Tinay; impost of Kush and Wawat.

I. INTRODUCTION

407. <sup>1</sup>Horus: "Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes; ————.

<sup>2</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt, <sup>3</sup>Lord of the the Two Lands:<sup>a</sup> Menkheperre; Son of Re: [Thutmose (III)] ————. <sup>b</sup> <sup>3</sup>His majesty commanded to cause to be recorded [his victories which his father, Amon, gave to him, upon<sup>c</sup>] <sup>4</sup>a tablet<sup>d</sup> in the temple which his majesty made for [his father, Amon, <sup>1</sup>setting forth each<sup>1</sup>] <sup>e</sup>expedition by its name, together with the plunder which [his majesty]<sup>f</sup> carried away [therein. It was done according to]<sup>f</sup> <sup>6</sup>all [<sup>1</sup>the command<sup>1</sup>] which his father, Re, gave to him.

II. FIRST CAMPAIGN (YEAR 23)<sup>g</sup>

408. This, the most important of Thutmose III's campaigns in Asia, is fortunately the most fully recorded. The

<sup>a</sup>Omitted by Brugsch's text.

<sup>b</sup>The lacking portion of the conventional fivefold titulary may be found passim.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, second horizontal line (§ 455).

<sup>d</sup>Really temple wall; more often this word (wḏ) means a stela or slab of stone set up by itself.

<sup>e</sup>This line is unfortunately also broken away in Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII; the restoration is probable, but conjectured.

<sup>f</sup>Restored from Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, second horizontal line.

<sup>g</sup>Seventy-nine short and 21 long vertical lines, beginning at the northeast corner of the passage. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, b, ll. 167, and ibid., III, 32, ll. 1-32=Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1153-166, ll. 1-79 and 1-21. The short lines being next the base have almost all lost a portion of the lower ends, while a large part of the long lines lacks the upper ends and frequently the lower ends, also.

occasion of the campaign was a general revolt among his father's Syrian conquests from Sharuhén to the Euphrates. Fighting had already developed in Sharuhén, which was, of course, too near the Egyptian frontier to venture to make common cause with the revolt; and hence conflict resulted there. We are taken with the king and clearly shown his operations day by day till he overthrows a coalition of practically all Syria at Megiddo, headed by the king of Kadesh. He then besieges and captures Megiddo, but from the surrender of Megiddo on, the record degenerates, as in all the other campaigns, to little more than a list of spoils. Fortunately, this latter part of the campaign is supplemented and really continued by the introduction to the list of feasts and offerings<sup>a</sup> established on the king's return to Thebes from this campaign. The close of the campaign is there narrated, mentioning a fortress established in the Lebanon, whither the king had marched after the fall of Megiddo, capturing there the three cities at the seaward bend of the Litány River, which we may call the Lebanon Tripolis:<sup>b</sup> Yenoam, Nuges, and Herenkeru, commanding the thoroughfare northward between the Lebanons. All this serves merely as an introduction to the splendid feasts of victory celebrated by the king, as is distinctly stated "on his return from the first victorious campaign." The date of these celebrations is preserved, and enables us for the first and only time to determine the length of an Egyptian campaign in Syria.

409. The entire calendar of the campaign, as far as can be determined, is as follows:

---

<sup>a</sup>§§ 541 ff.

<sup>b</sup>Only the spoil of these cities is enumerated in the Annals, the march thither being entirely ignored. The record of feasts and offerings only mentions them later to say that they were given to Amon.

EVENT	APPROXIMATE DISTANCE (English Miles)	EGYPTIAN CALENDAR			MODERN CALENDAR
		Year of Reign	Calen- dar Month	Day	Approximate Date
In Tharu .....	160	22d	8th	25th	April 19
In Gaza; Feast of Coronation ..		23d	9th	4th	" 28
Departure from Gaza.....	c. 80 to 90	"	"	5th	" 29
In Yehem.....		"	"	16th	May 10
In Aruna .....	?	"	"	19th	" 13
Departure from Aruna .....	c. 4 or 5	"	"	20th	" 14
Arrival before Megiddo.....		"	"	20th	" 14
Battle of Megiddo.....	} at least 75	"	"	21st	" 15
Beginning of siege of Megiddo...		"	"	21st	" 15
Capture of Megiddo.....		"	"	?	? ?
March to Lebanon.....		"	?	?	? ?
Capture of Yenoam, Nuges, Herenkeru .....		"	?	?	? ?
Construction of fort in Lebanon..	} over 900	"	?	?	? ?
Return to Thebes, not later than		"	2d	14th	Oct. 11

410. In less than 148 days, roughly five months, Thutmose III fought the Battle of Megiddo, completely invested with a wall the powerful fortress of Megiddo itself, and captured it; marched northward seventy-five miles to the Lebanon region, captured three cities, and built a fortress there; completed the return to the Delta coast and the voyage up-river to Thebes; and celebrated his first feast of victory there. The entire campaign from the departure from Tharu to the arrival in Thebes lasted a maximum of 175 days; that is, in five months and twenty-five days from the day on which he left Tharu he was celebrating his great Feast of Amon at Thebes. Fortunately, we are able to locate this period approximately in the astronomical calendar and tell in what month he went and returned.<sup>a</sup> (See § 409,

<sup>a</sup>For this purpose we have first the Elephantine calendar fragment, which gives the heliacal rising of Sothis in the reign of Thutmose III as the 28th of Epiphi (Young, Hieroglyphics, 59 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, II, 363 = Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 43, e = de Morgan, Catalogue des Monuments, I, 121). Doubt has been cast upon this date, but I have examined the Berlin squeezes, and there is not a shadow of doubt that it belongs to the series of blocks from the reign of Thutmose III. In last column). It is thus evident that the campaign falls exactly within the limits of the dry season in Palestine.<sup>a</sup>

411. Beside the celebration in Thebes, the victory was celebrated and recorded in a poetic inscription by the viceroy of Kush, Nehi (§§ 412, 413), at Wadi Halfa.<sup>b</sup> It refers to the first campaign, as follows:

412. ——— who (a god) stationed <sup>10</sup>his majesty at the Horns of the Earth, in order to overthrow the Asiatics (Mnt-w-Stt). I am the Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes, Son of Atum, beloved of Montu, <sup>11</sup>fighting for his army himself, that the Two Lands may see it; it is no lie. I came forth from the house of my father, the king of gods, Amon, who decrees me victory.

413. <sup>12</sup>The king himself, he led the way of his army, mighty at its head, like a flame of fire, the king who wrought with his sword. He went forth, none <sup>13</sup>like him, slaying the barbarians, smiting Retenu (Rtnw-t, sic!), bringing their princes as living captives, their chariots wrought <sup>14</sup>with gold, bound to their horses. The countries of Tehenu do obeisance because of the fame of his majesty, with their tribute upon width of column and height of corresponding signs it is identical with a block bearing the name of Thutmose III. Erman, with whom I examined it, was of the same opinion. Unfortunately, the regnal year is not given; but since my attempt to determine the season of the campaign (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 127 f.) on the basis of the Sothis date, the new moon dates have been finally established by Meyer, which modify my series of dates by two days, but corroborate entirely the season as I established it (Meyer, Abhandlungen der Berliner Akademie, 1904, Ägyptische Chronologie, 49 f.).

---

<sup>a</sup>Also shown by the fact that the army reaped the grain harvest about Megiddo, after having foraged upon it. From the king's Karnak building inscription (§ 608) we see that he was at home in February after the campaign of the year 24; and the Harmhab decree (III, 58) shows that Thutmose III was accustomed to be at home each year at the feast of Opet early in October after the summer's campaigning. The campaign of the year 31 also began in April (§ 469, l. 9); the Syrian campaign of Amenhotep II (§§ 780 ff.) and the Kadesh campaign of Ramses II (III, 298 ff.) also fell in the dry season (see Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 129).

<sup>b</sup>On a pillar of the Empire temple. It is dated "year 23." I am indebted for it to a photograph, kindly loaned me by Professor Steindorff, as it is still unpublished. There is in Cairo a fragment of a stela (unpublished, no number) recording the erection of this temple by Thutmose III ("building for him a temple of white sandstone"), and its endowment with offerings; but only the extreme ends of eight lines are preserved. I am indebted to Schaefer for a copy of it.

their backs, <sup>15</sup>— — as do the dogs, that there might be given to them the breath of life.

414. There is here further reference to the king's personal leading of his army through the mountains and in the Megiddo battle. Furthermore, we see that Libyans came with tribute on the king's return from the campaign. The Annals narrate the campaign as follows:

At the Frontier in Tharu

415. Year 22, fourth month of the second season (eighth month), on the twenty-fifth<sup>a</sup> day [his majesty was in] 7Tharu (T<sup>2</sup>-rw) on the first victorious expedition to [extend] <sup>8</sup>the boundaries of Egypt with might

Revolt in Asia

416. <sup>9</sup>Now, (at) that period<sup>b</sup> [the Asiatics had fallen into] <sup>10</sup>dis-agreement,<sup>1</sup> each man [fighting<sup>c</sup>] against [This neighbor] ————. <sup>11</sup>Now, it happened [that the tribes<sup>1</sup> — — the people, who were there <sup>12</sup>in the city of Sharuhen (S<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>-h<sup>2</sup>-n); behold, from Yeraza<sup>d</sup> (Y-r<sup>2</sup>-d<sup>2</sup>) <sup>13</sup>to the marshes of the earth,<sup>d</sup> (they) had begun to revolt against his majesty.

Arrival in Gaza, Feast of Coronation

417. Year 23, first (month) of the third season (ninth month), on the fourth day,<sup>e</sup> the day of the feast of the king's coronation, (he arrived) <sup>14</sup>at the city, <sup>f</sup>the possession of the ruler,<sup>f</sup> Gaza<sup>g</sup> (G<sup>2</sup>-d<sup>2</sup>-tw).

<sup>a</sup>The day is lacking in Lepsius and Brugsch, but is preserved by Champollion's early copy (Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 154).

<sup>b</sup>Or: "Now, at the time of these [events, during years]," there are traces of the last two words (m rnp' wt) at the end, before the lacuna.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from the determinative.

<sup>d</sup>That is, from northwestern Judea to beyond the Euphrates.

<sup>e</sup>Maspero (Recueil, II, 50, and Struggle of the Nations, 255 f.) has third day, but the text of Brugsch has fourth; moreover, the table of feasts on the south wall at Karnak (Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 14, b; Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 164) has (l. 7): "The first month of the third season, fourth day, the feast of the coronation of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III)." Pylon VII (§ 594) gives the same date.

<sup>f</sup>This is possibly a proper name, made up of a verb (in relative form) and a noun, meaning: "Which the ruler seized" (mh' n p<sup>2</sup> hk<sup>2</sup> ?).

<sup>g</sup>About 125 miles from the starting-point in nine days.

Departure from Gaza

418. [Year 23] <sup>15</sup>first month of the third season (ninth month), on the fifth day; departure from this place in might, — — <sup>16</sup>in power, and in triumph, to overthrow that wretched foe,<sup>a</sup> to extend <sup>17</sup>the boundaries of Egypt, according as his father, Amon-Re, <sup>18</sup>had commanded — — ] that he seize.

Arrival at Yehem

419. Year 23, first month of the third season (ninth month), on the sixteenth day, (he arrived) at the city of Yehem (Y-hm).

Council of War

420. [His majesty] ordered <sup>19a</sup>a consultation with his valiant troops, saying as follows: "That [wretched] enemy, [the chief] <sup>20</sup>of Kadesh (Kd-šw), has come and entered into Megiddo (My-k-ty); he [is there] <sup>21</sup>at this moment. He has gathered to himself the chiefs of [all] the countries [which are] <sup>22</sup>on the water of Egypt,<sup>b</sup> and as far as Naharin (N-h-ry-n), consisting of [the countries] of <sup>23</sup>the Kharu (H<sup>2</sup>-rw), the Kode (Kdw), their horses, their troops, ————— <sup>24</sup>thus he speaks, 'I have arisen to [fight against his majesty] <sup>25</sup>in Megiddo (My-k-ty).<sup>c</sup> Tell ye me —————.'<sup>c</sup>

Advice of the Officers

421. They spoke in the presence of his majesty, "How is it, that [we] should go upon this road, <sup>27</sup>which threatens to be narrow? While they [come] <sup>28</sup>and say that the enemy is there waiting, [hold]ing the <sup>29</sup>way against a multitude. Will not horse come behind [horse<sup>d</sup> and man behind<sup>e</sup>] <sup>30</sup>man likewise? Shall our [advance-guard] <sup>31</sup>be fighting while our [rear-guard]<sup>f</sup> is yet standing yonder <sup>32</sup>in Aruna (c<sup>2</sup>-rw-n<sup>2</sup>) not having fought? There are yet two (other) roads: <sup>33</sup>one road, behold, it [will] — us, for it comes forth at <sup>34</sup>Taanach

<sup>a</sup>The king of Kadesh.

<sup>b</sup>An idiom for "dependent upon" or "subject to."

<sup>c</sup>The king's demand upon his officers is for information concerning the road, as the subsequent developments show.

<sup>d</sup>See § 424, l. 55.

<sup>e</sup>The end is the restoration of Maspero (Recueil, II, 52) suggested probably by that of Brugsch (Egypt under the Pharaohs, 155).

<sup>f</sup>Maspero, Recueil, II, 52; the determinative of men is still preserved after "rear-guard."

(T<sup>2-c-2-n-2-k</sup>), the other, [behold], it will [bring us upon] <sup>35</sup>the way north of Zefiti (Dj-ty), so that we shall come out to the north of Megiddo (My-k-ty). <sup>36</sup>Let our victorious lord proceed upon [the road] he desires; (but) cause us not to go by a difficult<sup>a</sup> road.”

Decision of the King

422. Then —<sup>b</sup> <sup>38</sup>messengers<sup>1</sup> concerning [this] design <sup>39</sup>which they had uttered, in view of what had been said <sup>1</sup>by<sup>1</sup> the majesty of the Court, L. P. H.: “I [swear], as Re loves me, as my father Amon, favors me, as my [nostrils] are rejuvenated with satisfying life, my majesty will proceed upon this road of <sup>42</sup>Aruna (c-2-rw-n). Let him who will among you, go upon those <sup>43</sup>roads ye have mentioned, and let him who will <sup>44</sup>among you, come in the following of my majesty. Shall they think among those <sup>45</sup>enemies whom Re detests: ‘Does his majesty proceed upon <sup>46</sup>another road? He begins to be fearful of us,’ so will they think.”

Submission of the Officers

423. <sup>47</sup>They spoke before his majesty: “May thy father Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak, <sup>1</sup>grant thee life<sup>1</sup>. <sup>48</sup>Behold, we are the following of thy majesty in every place, whither [thy majesty] proceedeth; <sup>49</sup>as the servant is behind [his] master.”

Departure from Yehem

424. <sup>50</sup>[Then his majesty] commanded the entire army [to march] ——— [upon] <sup>51</sup>that road<sup>c</sup> which threatened to be [narrow].<sup>d</sup> His majesty <sup>52</sup>swore, saying: “None shall go forth [in the way] <sup>53</sup>before my majesty, in ———.” <sup>54</sup>He went forth at the head of his army himself, <sup>1</sup>showing [the way] <sup>55</sup>by his (own) footsteps;<sup>e</sup> horse behind<sup>f</sup> [horse], [This majesty]<sup>g</sup> being <sup>56</sup>at the head of his army.

<sup>a</sup>The same word (st) is applied to the road upon which the great block for the el-Bersheh colossus (I, 696, l. 1) was brought. It means “inaccessible” or “difficult;” it is also used by Thutmose III of the celestial road of the sun (§ 141).

<sup>b</sup>Verb lost.

<sup>c</sup>Text has an Amon wrongly restored here.

<sup>d</sup>Cf. l. 27, above.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., “steps of marching.”

<sup>f</sup>The army here enters the mountain pass.

<sup>g</sup>Or possibly: “[the vanguard,] being of the best of his army.”

Arrival at Aruna

425. Year 23, first month of the third season (ninth month), on the nineteenth day; the watch in [safety]<sup>a</sup> <sup>57</sup>in the royal tent was at the city of Aruna (ꜥꜣ-rw-n).<sup>b</sup> <sup>58</sup>“My majesty proceeded northward under (the protection of my) father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, [who went] <sup>59</sup>before me, while Harakhte [strengthened my arms]<sup>c</sup> ———— <sup>60</sup>(my) father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, victorious of the sword ———— <sup>61</sup>over my majesty.”

Battle in the Mountains

426. [The enemy] went forth ———— <sup>62</sup>in numerous battle array ————. <sup>63</sup>The southern wing was in Taa[nach] (Tꜣꜥꜣ [-n ꜣ-k ꜣ]), <sup>64</sup>the northern wing was on the ground south of ————. <sup>d</sup> <sup>65</sup>His majesty cried out to them before ———— <sup>66</sup>they fell; behold, that wretched foe<sup>e</sup> ———— <sup>67</sup>——— <sup>68</sup>——— of [the city of]<sup>f</sup> <sup>69</sup>Aruna (ꜥꜣ-rw-n).

<sup>a</sup>Perhaps we should supply: “life, prosperity, and health,” as in Ramses II’s march to Kadesh (l. 1); but above, the said phrase is used after “tent,” to express the adjective “royal,” and would hardly appear twice in the same phrase.

<sup>b</sup>Three days after the arrival at Yehem, Aruna, lying in the midst of the mountains, is reached. Here they spent the night of the nineteenth and marched on the twentieth (l. 58).

<sup>c</sup>Restored from § 430, l. 3.

<sup>d</sup>Maspero (Recueil, II, 56) following Brugsch, supplies Megiddo here. This is quite possible, but only on a different supposition from that of Maspero and Brugsch, viz., that the position described here is that of the Asiatic forces, not of the Egyptians, for the latter do not arrive “south of Megiddo” until long after this (§ 428). Furthermore, it is quite impossible for the Egyptians to have had their southern wing at Taanach, while defiling through the Megiddo road. This seems to have been the view in the translation in Petrie’s History (II, 106), but no mention is made of an encounter with the enemy in the mountains in the summary, p. 101. The passage is important, for it decisively determines (even without supplying Megiddo above) the location of Megiddo against Conder’s identification with Mujedda<sup>c</sup>. An Asiatic army which, we know, fought before Megiddo, has its southern wing at Taanach, which is known to be Tannuk of today; it must follow that Megiddo is northward from Tannuk. See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 22, 96.

<sup>e</sup>There was some encounter with the enemy here in the mountains, and this moves the officers to urge calling in the straggling rear as soon as possible. This encounter has escaped all the historians except Meyer (Geschichte, 239); cf. Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 257; Wiedemann, Aegyptische Geschichte, 347; Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 101; etc.

<sup>f</sup>There is a loss of five lines here, before l. 69, but it is not indicated in the publications.

Danger of the Rear

427. Now, the rear of the victorious army of his majesty was at the city of <sup>70</sup>Aruna (<sup>c</sup><sup>2</sup>-rw-n<sup>2</sup>), the front was going forth to the valley of —;<sup>a</sup> <sup>71</sup>they filled the opening of this valley. Then [they] said in the presence of his majesty, L. P. H.: <sup>72</sup>“Behold, his majesty goeth forth with his victorious army, and it has filled <sup>73</sup>the hollow of the valley; let our victorious lord hearken to us this time<sup>b</sup> and <sup>74</sup>let our lord protect for us the rear of his army and his people. <sup>75</sup>Let the rear of this army come forth to us behind; then shall they (also) fight against <sup>76</sup>these barbarians; then we shall not (need to) take thought for the rear of our <sup>77</sup>army.” His majesty halted outside and waited <sup>78</sup>there, protecting the rear of his victorious army.

Exit from the Mountains

428. Behold, when the front had reached the exit upon this road, the shadow had turned,<sup>c</sup> and when <sup>d1</sup>his majesty arrived at the south of Megiddo (My-k-ty) on<sup>e</sup> the bank of the brook of Kina (Ky-n<sup>2</sup>), the seventh hour<sup>f</sup> was turning, (measured) by the sun.

Camp in Plain of Megiddo

429. Then was set up the camp of his majesty, and command was given to the whole army, saying: “Equip yourselves! Prepare your weapons! for we<sup>g</sup> shall advance to fight with that wretched foe in the morning.” <sup>1</sup>Therefore<sup>1</sup> the king <sup>2</sup>rested in the royal tent, the <sup>1a</sup>affairs<sup>1a</sup> of the chiefs were arranged, and the provisions of the attendants. The watch of the army went about, saying, “Steady of heart! Steady of heart! Watchful! Watchful!<sup>1b</sup> Watch for life at the tent of the king.” One came to say to his majesty, “The land is well, and the infantry of the South and North likewise.”

<sup>a</sup>Proper name ending in n.

<sup>b</sup>Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 106. <sup>c</sup>It was past midday.

<sup>d</sup>A new enumeration of twenty-eight longer lines begins here.

<sup>e</sup>The army here emerges in safety upon the plain in the afternoon of the twentieth, and camps unmolested that night, to go forth to battle in the morning of the twenty-first.

<sup>f</sup>About one o'clock P. M. <sup>g</sup>The text has the impersonal “one.”

<sup>h</sup>See § 341, l. 17, for the same rare phrase.

<sup>i</sup>Lit., “Watchful of head,” meaning “to be vigilant,” e. g., of the king (Amenhotep III) on the architrave at Luxor: “the Good God who is very vigilant (lit., watchful of head) over the house of his father, Amon” (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 73, b; again ibid., e); and often of the vigilance of a faithful official.

Battle of Megiddo

430. Year 23, first (month) of the third season (ninth month), on the twenty-first day, the day of the feast of the new moon, <sup>1</sup>corresponding to<sup>1</sup> the royal coronation, early in the morning, behold, command was given to the entire army to move — —. <sup>3</sup>His majesty went forth in a chariot of electrum, arrayed in his weapons of war, like Horus, the Smiter, lord of power; like Montu of Thebes, while his father, Amon, strengthened his arms. The southern wing of this army of his majesty was on a hill south of the [brook of]<sup>a</sup> Kina (Ky-n),<sup>b</sup> the northern wing was at the northwest of Megiddo (My-k-ty),<sup>b</sup> while his majesty was in their center, with Amon as the protection of his members, <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> the valor — <sup>4</sup>of his limbs. Then his majesty prevailed against them at the head of his army, and when they saw his majesty prevailing against them they fled headlong to Megiddo (My-k-ty) in fear,<sup>c</sup> abandoning their horses and their chariots of gold and silver. The people<sup>d</sup> hauled them (up), pulling (them) by their clothing, into this city; the people of this city having closed (it) against them [and <sup>1</sup>lowered<sup>1</sup>] <sup>5</sup>clothing to pull them up into this city. Now, if only the army of his majesty had not given their heart to plundering the things of the enemy, they would have [captured] Megiddo (My-k-ty) at this moment, when the wretched foe of (Kd-š) Kadesh and the wretched foe of this city<sup>e</sup> were hauled up in haste to bring them into this city.<sup>e</sup> The fear of his majesty had entered <sup>6</sup>[their hearts<sup>1</sup>], their arms were powerless, his serpent diadem was <sup>1</sup>victorious<sup>1</sup> among them.

The Spoil

431. Then were captured their horses, their chariots of gold and silver were made spoil;<sup>f</sup> their champions lay stretched out like fishes

<sup>a</sup>Restored from § 428, l. 1.

<sup>b</sup>This shows that Thutmose has gone around Megiddo toward the west and, having his army partially on the north of the city, has intercepted the enemy's northern line of retreat; at the same time probably securing his own line of retreat along the Zefi road (see § 421, l. 35). This position corroborates the position of the Asiatics with their southern wing at Taanach on the day before the battle (see § 426, especially note). This move must have been made by Thutmose in the afternoon or during the night before the battle.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "with or in the faces of fear."

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "one."

<sup>e</sup>Megiddo. The two kings of Kadesh and Megiddo are meant.

<sup>f</sup>Read m ys-h > k (Sethe, Verbum, II, § 700), and compare the same phrase year 31, l. 10 (§ 470).

on the ground. The victorious army of his majesty went around counting their portions. Behold, there was captured the tent of that wretched foe [in] which was [his] son — — 7———. <sup>a</sup> The whole army made jubilee, giving praise to Amon for the victory which he had granted to his son on [this day, <sup>b</sup>giving praise<sup>b</sup>] to his majesty, exalting his victories. They brought up the booty which they had taken, consisting of hands, <sup>c</sup> of living prisoners, of horses, chariots of gold and silver, of — — 8———. <sup>d</sup>

The Rebuke

432. [Then spake his majesty <sup>1</sup>on hearing<sup>1</sup> the words of his army, saying: “Had ye captured [this city] afterward, behold, I would have given ———— <sup>e</sup> Re this day; because every chief of every country that has revolted is within it; and because it is the capture of a thousand cities, this capture of Megiddo (My-k-ty). Capture ye <sup>1</sup>mightily, mightily<sup>f</sup> — — 9———.”

Siege of Megiddo

433. [His majesty commanded<sup>1</sup>] the <sup>1</sup>officers<sup>1</sup> of the troops to go — —, [<sup>1</sup>assigning to<sup>1</sup>] each his place. They measured this city, [<sup>1</sup>surrounding it<sup>1</sup>] with an inclosure, walled about with green timber of all their pleasant trees.<sup>h</sup> His majesty himself was upon the fortification east of this city, [<sup>1</sup>inspect]ing<sup>1</sup> <sup>10</sup>———. <sup>i</sup>

It was [wa]lled about with a thick wall — — — <sup>j</sup> with its thick wall.<sup>k</sup> Its name was made: “Menkheperre (Thutmose III)-is-the-Surrounder-

<sup>a</sup>About a quarter of l. 7 is lacking.

<sup>b</sup>Or: “the — of his majesty were exalting, etc.”

<sup>c</sup>Cut off from the slain.

<sup>d</sup>About one-fourth of l. 8 is lacking.

<sup>e</sup>Three or four words are lacking, probably: “[very many offerings to] Re this day,” or something similar.

<sup>f</sup>The lacuna doubtless contained the exhortation to begin the siege.

<sup>g</sup>Ll. 9–19 generally lack about one-third their length at the beginning.

<sup>h</sup>Thutmose III describes the trees in his own garden of Amon, in the same way (§ 567). Possibly fruit trees are meant, as the word rendered “pleasant” (bnr) literally means “sweet.”

<sup>i</sup>About one-third line lacking.

<sup>j</sup>Five or six words are lacking.

<sup>k</sup>The same thick wall is also referred to in the building inscription of the Ptah-temple (§ 616, l. 11) and the fragment on this campaign (§ 596, l. 7).

of-the-Asiatics." People were stationed to watch over the tent of his majesty; to whom it was said: "Steady of heart! Watch ———." <sup>a</sup> His majesty <sup>11</sup>[commanded, saying: "Let not <sup>b</sup>one among them [come forth] outside, beyond this wall, except to come out in order to <sup>1</sup>knock at the door of their fortification." <sup>c</sup>

Now, all that his majesty did to this city, to that wretched foe <sup>d</sup> and his wretched army, was recorded on (each) day by its (the day's) name, under the title of: "1 — — — e" <sup>12</sup> ———. <sup>f</sup> Then it was recorded upon a roll of leather in the temple of Amon this day. <sup>g</sup>

Surrender of Megiddo

434. Behold, the chiefs of this country came to render their portions, to do obeisance <sup>h</sup> to the fame of his majesty, to crave breath for their nostrils, because of the greatness of his power, because of the might of the fame of his majesty — — <sup>13</sup>the country <sup>i</sup> ——— came to his fame, bearing their gifts, consisting of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite; bringing clean grain, wine, large cattle, and small cattle — for the army of his majesty. <sup>1</sup>Each of the Kode <sup>1</sup>(Kd-(w)) among them bore the tribute southward. Behold, his majesty appointed the chiefs anew for <sup>14</sup> ———. <sup>k</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Cf. § 429, l. 2; but there is not room here to restore as there indicated. So Maspero, Recueil, II, 145.

<sup>b</sup>The lacuna is slightly longer than this.

<sup>c</sup>Probably meaning to offer themselves as prisoners (Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 108).

<sup>d</sup>The king of Kadesh.

<sup>e</sup>The first word without the following connection seems doubtful; it means "to sail, travel" and possibly refers to the fact that the king sailed each year to Syria in the later campaigns; hence the title may have been: "Voyages, etc." The whole reminds one of the statement concluding the reign of each king in the Book of Kings (e. g., 1 Kings 15:23).

<sup>f</sup>Almost one-third line lacking.

<sup>g</sup>The royal secretary Thaneni was apparently the one who kept this record (see § 392).

<sup>h</sup>Lit., "to smell the earth."

<sup>i</sup>Almost one-third line lacking.

<sup>j</sup>Cf. l. 23, § 420. The sentence is uncertain in the original, both as to text and meaning. As the Kode are coast-people, it may possibly refer to their shipping the spoil to Egypt for the soldiers.

<sup>k</sup>Almost one-third line lacking.

Spoil of Megiddo

435. ———<sup>a</sup> 340 living prisoners; 83 hands; 2,041 mares;<sup>b</sup> 191 foals; 6 stallions; — young —; a chariot, wrought with gold, (its) [pole<sup>1</sup> of gold, belonging to that foe;<sup>c</sup> a beautiful chariot, wrought with gold, belonging to the chief of <sup>15</sup>[Megiddo];<sup>d</sup> ———<sup>e</sup> 892 chariot[s] of his wretched army; total, 924<sup>f</sup> (chariots); a beautiful [suit<sup>1</sup> of bronze armor, belonging to that foe;<sup>g</sup> a beautiful [suit<sup>1</sup> of bronze armor, belonging to the chief of Megiddo (M-k-ty); ———<sup>h</sup> 200 suits of armor, belonging to his wretched army; 502 bows; 7 poles of (mry) wood, wrought with silver, belonging to the tent of that foe. Behold, the army of [his majesty] took <sup>16</sup>———<sup>i</sup> 297 —, 1,929 large cattle, 2,000 small cattle,<sup>j</sup> 20,500 white small cattle.<sup>k</sup>

Plunder of the Lebanon Tripolis, Megiddo, Etc.

436. List of that which was afterward taken by the king, of the household goods of that foe who was in [the city of] Yenoam (Y-nw-c<sup>2</sup>-mw), in Nuges (Yn-yw-g-s<sup>2</sup>), and in Herenkeru (Hw-r-n-k<sup>2</sup>-rw),<sup>1</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The determinative sign of a foreign country is the first sign at the end of the lacuna before the list.

<sup>b</sup>This word (ssmw<sup>1</sup>t) I have elsewhere translated "horses" for what seem to me sufficient reasons, but in this context we have a clear distinction between mares and stallions.

<sup>c</sup>The king of Kadesh.

<sup>d</sup>Restored from the list of armor following.

<sup>e</sup>About one-third line lacking.

<sup>f</sup>There must be 30 chariots therefore, mentioned in the lacuna, which would probably be those of the officers or other chiefs.

<sup>g</sup>The king of Kadesh.

<sup>h</sup>Here followed the armor of the officers, as in the case of the chariots above.

<sup>i</sup>Almost one-third line lacking.

<sup>j</sup>Sheep?

<sup>k</sup>Goats?

<sup>1</sup>These three cities lay close together at the southern end of Lebanon. That Thutmose III marched to Lebanon after the fall of Megiddo is shown by the fact that he built a fortress there (§ 548, l. 1) just before returning to Thebes. The three cities formed a political whole under a single ruler ("that foe"), and were given as a whole to Amon by Thutmose III (§ 557). The location of these cities in the plain of Megiddo (Petrie, Syria and Egypt, 14) is plainly due to overlooking the other evidence (see Müller, Asien und Europa, 200-3); though Petrie is undoubtedly right in denying the identity of Nuges and Nukhasse, already opposed by Müller (ibid., 394). If "that foe" refers to the king of Kadesh here, as it does elsewhere throughout this inscription, we have an important indication of the extent southward of the territory of that king.

together with all the goods of those cities which submitted themselves, which were brought to <sup>17</sup>[his majesty: 474] —; <sup>a</sup> 38<sup>b</sup> lords ([m-r-y-n]) of theirs, 87 children of that foe and of the chiefs who were with him, 5 lords of theirs, 1,796 male and female slaves with their children, non-combatants who surrendered because of famine with that foe, 103 men; total, 2,503.<sup>c</sup> Besides flat dishes of costly stone and gold, various vessels, <sup>18</sup>———, <sup>d</sup> a large (two-handled) vase<sup>e</sup> (ʔ-k-ʔ-n) of the work of Kharu (H<sup>2</sup>-rw), (— b-) vases, flat dishes, (hntw-) dishes, various drinking-vessels, 3 large kettles (rhdt), [8]7 knives,<sup>f</sup> amounting to 784 deben.<sup>g</sup> Gold in rings found in the hands of the artificers, and silver in many rings, 966 deben and 1 kidet.<sup>h</sup> A silver statue in beaten work <sup>19</sup>———<sup>i</sup> the head of gold, the staff with human faces; 6 chairs<sup>j</sup> of that foe, of ivory, ebony and carob wood, wrought with gold; 6 footstools<sup>k</sup> belonging to them; 6 large tables of ivory and carob wood, a staff of carob wood, wrought with gold and all costly stones in the fashion of a scepter, belonging to that foe, all of it wrought with gold; <sup>120</sup>a statue of that foe, of ebony wrought with gold, the head of which [was inlaid] with lapis lazuli ———; <sup>m</sup> vessels of bronze, much clothing of that foe.

Harvest of the Plain of Megiddo

437. Behold, the cultivable land was divided into fields, which the inspectors of the royal house, L. P. H., calculated, in order to reap their

<sup>a</sup>About one-third line lacking.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch, 39.

<sup>c</sup>The prisoners enumerated foot up to 2,029; hence 474 must have been mentioned in the lacuna at the head of l. 17. These must have included "that foe and the chiefs who were with him," and probably others whom we cannot identify.

<sup>d</sup>About one-third line lacking; the numeral belonging to the preceding objects is lost in this lacuna.

<sup>e</sup>Hebrew, כֶּלֶח.

<sup>f</sup>Restored from the 87 in l. 17.

<sup>g</sup>191.1 pounds, total of gold in the preceding list of articles.

<sup>h</sup>235.46 pounds.

<sup>i</sup>About one-third line lacking.

<sup>j</sup>In Egyptian the word (kny) often means a kind of open sedan chair.

<sup>k</sup>Hdmw, Hebrew, חֲמֹשׁ.

<sup>l</sup>From this point on, four lines are again nearly complete.

<sup>m</sup>About one-fifth of the line is lacking.

harvest. Statement of the harvest which was brought to his majesty from the fields of Megiddo (My-k t): 208,200(+x)<sup>a</sup> fourfold heket of grain, <sup>21</sup>besides that which was cut as forage by the army of his majesty _____.<sup>b</sup>

FRAGMENT ON THE SIEGE OF MEGIDDO<sup>c</sup>

438. The inscription to which this fragment belonged contained an account of the first campaign and apparently no more, so that it was doubtless recorded at the close of this campaign before the others took place. It is probably therefore, the oldest of Thutmose III's war records, and introduces an offering-list.

The Insurrection

439. <sup>1</sup>_____ Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, at the overthrow<sup>d</sup> of Retenu, the wretched <sup>2</sup>_____ anew for my father, Amon _____ <sup>3</sup>_____ the lands of the Fenkhu, who had begun to invade my boundaries.<sup>e</sup> _____ <sup>4</sup>arrayed, in<sup>1</sup> hatred of my majesty. They fell upon their faces <sup>5</sup>_____ of Megiddo.

<sup>a</sup>The possible uncertainty is not more than 200 more. This makes about 112,632 imperial bushels (of 2,218.19 cubic inches). It is impossible to say how much an acre would yield at this time, but at twenty bushels to the acre, this harvest covered a territory of nearly nine square miles. (Mr. Petrie's reckoning of 150,000 bushels is based on an error in the original number of fourfold heket; he has 280,500 (History of Egypt, II, 112), while the text gives only 208,200, or possibly 208,400.

<sup>b</sup>About one-fifth line lacking. For the continuation of the campaign, see the record of "Feasts and Offerings," §§ 541 ff.

<sup>c</sup>South (?) wall in the Eighteenth Dynasty Karnak temple. It has been partially published by Brugsch (Recueil de monuments, I, XXVII, and again, Thesaurus, V, 1187), and more fully by Dümichen (Historische Inschriften, II, 38). I had also a photograph by Borchardt. The inscription is in vertical lines, which have been numbered backward by Dümichen and Brugsch (in Brugsch, Recueil de monuments; Thesaurus, without numbers). An unknown amount is lost at the top, ll. 17-21 are entirely lost, and only a few words are preserved at the bottoms of ll. 13-16 and 22-24.

<sup>d</sup>This dates the offering to Amon as occurring after the defeat of Retenu, and as the following shows, on the first campaign.

<sup>e</sup>This is the insurrection referred to in § 416. The battle of Megiddo is then rapidly passed over, and l. 5 begins the siege of Megiddo.

Siege of Megiddo

440. Then my majesty surrounded it with a wall, made thick 6———— they tasted not the breath of life, surrounded in front of their 'wall' 7———— the Asiatics of all countries came with bowed head, doing obeisance to the fame of my majesty. 8————.

Surrender of Megiddo

441. These Asiatics who were in the wretched Megiddo 9————
[came forth] to the fame of Menkheperre (Thutmose III), [given life, saying]: "Give us a chance,<sup>a</sup> that we may present to thy majesty [our] impost." 10———— all that my majesty did in this land forever.

The Inhabitants Shown Mercy

442. Then my majesty commanded to give to them the breath of life 11———— all their goods, bearing 12————.

Further March

443. ————— led me to a goodly way 13———— inclosed in 14———— [Tyre]<sup>b</sup> 15———— c 16———— these 17———— d 22———— with every fragrant wood 23———— I did this 24————. I was 25———— victorious in all lands, shining upon the Horus-throne of the living — like Re, forever.

III. SECOND CAMPAIGN (YEAR 24)<sup>c</sup>

444. This campaign seems to have been only a circuitous march through Palestine and southern Syria (l. 25), to receive the submission and tribute of the dynasts. Far-off Assyria also, which had now heard of the great victory of the preceding year, sent gifts, which the scribe calls "tribute" (ynw) like that of Syria.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "Give our occasion."

<sup>b</sup>The line is broken just above this word; hence, although it spells Tyre (D 3-r 3), it may be the end of a longer word terminating in d 3-r 3, like Sn-d 3-r 3 (Amenemhab, l. 11, § 584). But see Müller, Asien und Europa, 185.

<sup>c</sup>End shows determinative of foreigners.

<sup>d</sup>Ll. 17-21 are entirely lost.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 32, ll. 32-39 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1166-68, ll. 21-28.

445. [List of the tribute of Assur and of] the chiefs of Retenu in the year 24.<sup>a</sup>

Tribute of Assur

446. The tribute<sup>b</sup> of the chief of Assur (Ys-sw-r): genuine lapis lazuli, a large block, making 20 deben, 9 kidet; genuine lapis lazuli, 2 blocks; total, 3;<sup>c</sup> and pieces, [making] 30 deben; total, 50 deben and 9 kidet;<sup>d</sup> fine lapis lazuli from Babylon (Bb-r); vessels of Assur (ys-sw-r) of (hrtl-) stone in colors,<sup>e</sup> — — — — <sup>22</sup>very many.

Tribute of Retenu

447. The tribute of the chiefs of Retenu: the daughter of a chief, (with) ornaments of — gold, lapis lazuli of t[his] country;<sup>f</sup> 30 [‘slaves’] belonging [‘to her’]; 65<sup>g</sup> male and female slaves of his tribute; 103 horses; 5 chariots, wrought with gold, (with) [‘poles’] of gold; 5 chariots, wrought with electrum, (with) [‘poles’] of <sup>c</sup> g·t; total, 10; 45 bullocks<sup>h</sup> (‘and’) calves; 749 bulls; 5,703 small cattle; flat dishes of gold<sup>i</sup> <sup>23</sup>which could not be weighed; flat dishes of silver, and fragments, (making) 104 deben, 5 kidet;<sup>j</sup> a gold [‘horn’] (mk-r<sup>2</sup>-dy-n), inlaid with lapis lazuli; a bronze corselet (h<sup>2</sup>-n-rrw), inlaid with gold, [‘ornamented’] ———<sup>k</sup> many — of silver — in battle ———<sup>k</sup> <sup>24</sup>823 (mn-) jars of incense; 1,718 (mn-) jars of honeyed wine;<sup>l</sup> [—] <sup>c</sup> g·t<sup>m</sup> and much two-colored

<sup>a</sup>Brugsch (with sic!), Champollion, Lepsius, and Bissing, all have 40, in which 4 units have unquestionably been miswritten by the ancient copyist, for 2 tens — an easy error. Griffith does not give Burton’s reading. The emendation to 24 is certain from l. 25, dated year 24.

<sup>b</sup>These are, of course, only gifts, but the text uses the same word as in the case of the chiefs of Retenu. It is at the head of the list, for it reached him early as a result of the Megiddo victory in the preceding year.

<sup>c</sup>This total of “blocks” is thrust in between as a parenthesis.

<sup>d</sup>12.40 pounds.

<sup>e</sup>So the texts of Champollion and Bissing.

<sup>f</sup>Or: “of the foreigners” (h<sup>2</sup> styw).

<sup>g</sup>These 65 slaves are not among the tribute of Assur, as Müller indicates, being misled by Champollion Notices descriptives, 158 (Müller, Asien und Europa, 278).

<sup>h</sup>So Lepsius, Champollion, and Bissing; Brugsch, 55.

<sup>i</sup>There is possibly a lost word or even two at the end of the line (22).

<sup>j</sup>25.47 pounds.

<sup>l</sup>Or: “wine and honey.”

<sup>k</sup>About one-third of the line.

<sup>m</sup>Two sorts of <sup>c</sup> g·t.

<sup>c</sup> g't,<sup>a</sup> ivory, carob wood, mrw wood,<sup>b</sup> psgw wood, many 'bundles' of fire wood, all the luxuries of this country ————<sup>c</sup> <sup>25</sup>to every place of his majesty's circuit, (where) the tent was pitched.<sup>d</sup>

Appendix

448. YEAR 24. List of the tribute brought to the fame of his majesty in the country of Retenu.

Second Tribute of Assur

449. Tribute of the chief of Assur (Ys-sw-r): h[<sup>f</sup>orses<sup>g</sup>] ————.<sup>e</sup>
<sup>26</sup>A <sup>f</sup>—<sup>f</sup> of skin of the M-h<sup>2</sup>-w<sup>g</sup> as the 'protection' of a chariot, of the finest<sup>h</sup> of — wood; 190(+x) wagons ————<sup>e</sup> <sup>27</sup>— wood, nhb<sup>i</sup> wood, 343 pieces; carob wood, 50 pieces; mrw wood, 190 pieces; nby and k<sup>2</sup> nk wood, 206 pieces; 'olive wood', ————<sup>e</sup> <sup>28</sup>———.j

IV. THIRD CAMPAIGN (YEAR 25)<sup>k</sup>

450. The Annals contain no account of the third campaign, which was evidently a peaceful tour of inspection. The record of its results required more room than the wall of the Annals afforded, hence it was transferred to a chamber in the rear of the temple, and recorded in a long series of reliefs representing the flora and fauna of Syria, brought

<sup>a</sup>Two sorts of g't.

<sup>b</sup>Same as "mery wood."

<sup>c</sup>Ll. 24-28 lack considerably over half their length below.

<sup>d</sup>The statement undoubtedly was that the tribute was brought to the king wherever he was in his circuit.

<sup>e</sup>Over half the line is wanting.

<sup>f</sup>Mšwy, perhaps the leathern front of a chariot. See also Müller, Asien und Europa, 278, n. 3.

<sup>g</sup>An unknown animal.

<sup>h</sup>Or: "<sup>f</sup>with<sup>l</sup> heads of — wood."

<sup>i</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, neheb; unknown.

<sup>j</sup>A few numerals and fragments of words are visible, in which "3,000 various 'trees'" (or objects of wood) appear.

<sup>k</sup>Reliefs and inscriptions on the walls of the first chamber north of the second (rear) sanctuary of Karnak (marked Y' on Mariette's plan, Pl. 5); published by Mariette, Karnak, 28-31.

back from this campaign. They are accompanied by the following inscriptions:<sup>a</sup>

451. <sup>b</sup>YEAR 25, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), living, forever. Plants which his majesty found in the land of Retenu.

<sup>c</sup>All plants that 'grow', all flowers that are in God's-Land<sup>d</sup> [which were found by] <sup>2</sup>his majesty when his majesty proceeded to Upper Retenu, to subdue [all] the countrie[s,] <sup>3</sup>according to the command of his father, Amon, who put them beneath his sandals, from [the year 1] <sup>4</sup>to myriads of years.

452. His majesty said: "I swear, as Re [loves me] <sup>5</sup>as my father, Amon, favors me, all these things happened in truth —. <sup>6</sup>I have not written fiction as that which really happened to my majesty;<sup>e</sup> I have 'engraved' the excellent [deeds] <sup>7</sup>—1. My majesty hath done this from desire to put them <sup>8</sup>before my father Amon, in this great temple of Amon, (as) a memorial forever and ever."

V. FOURTH CAMPAIGN

453. The account of this campaign, if any existed, is lost; it was not recorded on the wall of the Annals, and may have been put elsewhere, like the third.

<sup>a</sup>The only other inscription of year 25 is a stela cut on the rocks of the Sarbût el-Khadem, and dated in the "year 25." Above is a relief showing Thutmose III offering a libation to "Hathor, mistress of malachite," behind the king stands the "chief treasurer, Ray" (R > y), who conducted the expedition hither. An inscription of eight horizontal lines contains only titular and praise of Thutmose III. Below stands Ray again with an inscription in eight vertical lines, which has almost wholly disappeared. The following may be discerned: "He appointed him at the head of his army, to bring that which his majesty desired, of products of the lands of the gods, malachite without number, . . . . he exceeded that which was commanded him, and that which was exacted. . . . ." A reference to "the sea" (w > q-wr) at the end doubtless indicates the way in which the journey was made.

<sup>b</sup>Vertical line on the east wall; text, Mariette, Karnak, 31.

<sup>c</sup>Eight vertical lines on the north wall, left of the door; numbered from right to left; text, Mariette, Karnak, 28.

<sup>d</sup>Showing that T > *nt*r ("God's-Land") is sometimes applied to Asia; same in inscription of Thaneni (§ 820), and in § 888.

<sup>e</sup>Text has: "the souls of my majesty."

VI. FIFTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 29)<sup>a</sup>

454. The first campaign extended no farther northward than the Tripolis of the southern Lebanon, and this was inland. The second and third campaigns were not aggressive, and apparently did not push far north; the record of the fourth campaign is lost, and it is not until the fifth, in the year 29, that we have certain information of an advance beyond the northern limits of the first campaign, and along the coast. This fifth campaign begins with a new caption, as if a new period of the wars had begun here, and it is clear that the revolt suppressed in the south in the year 23 was after six years not yet subdued in the cities of Zahi, which the king had not yet visited. The wars in the Annals are thus divided into two great groups, the first group being in the south, and the second group, beginning in the year 29, being the wars in the north.

After the capture of a city the name of which is lost (W<sup>2</sup>—), which was supported by troops from Tunip, contained a sanctuary of Amon, and yielded rich plunder, the king proceeded southward and captured Arvad. The rich gardens and fields, now in the season of fruitage, were plundered, and the army spent the days in rioting and feasting. The king seized some Phœnician ships, and the expedition returned by water. This had perhaps been done by earlier expeditions, but the fifth is the first in which it is certain.

<sup>a</sup>The text here returns to the main sanctuary, where the annals are resumed, beginning at the jog in the north wall (see Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 13). Only the lower ends of the lines are still in situ, the rest having been barbarously quarried out by Salt; this section is now in the Louvre. Text of Louvre section and part of lines in situ, Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 1-7; lower ends of same lines, Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 1-6; both, Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1168-70, ll. 1-7 = Bissing, Statistische Tafel, xxvii f., ll. 1-7.

Introduction

455. <sup>a</sup>His majesty commanded to cause that the victories which his father [Amon] had given him should be recorded upon the stone wall in the temple which his majesty made anew [for his father Amon, setting forth each<sup>1</sup> expedition]<sup>b</sup> by its name,<sup>c</sup> together with the plunder which his majesty brought therefrom. It was done according to [all the command which his father, Re, gave to him<sup>d</sup>] ———.

Campaign in Zahi

456. <sup>1</sup>YEAR 29. Behold, [his] majesty was [in Za]hi subduing the countries revolting against him, on the fifth victorious campaign.

Capture of Unknown City

457. Behold, his majesty captured the city of Wa — (W<sup>2</sup>——)<sup>e</sup> ———. This army offered acclamations to his majesty,<sup>f</sup> giving praise to <sup>2</sup>[Amon] for the victories which [he gave to] his son. They were pleasing to the heart of his majesty above everything.

Sacrifices to Amon

458. After this his majesty proceeded to the storehouse of offering[s], to give a sacrifice to Amon and to Harakhte<sup>g</sup> consisting of oxen, calves, fowl, [for the life, prosperity, and health of<sup>h</sup>] Menkheperre (Thutmose III), who giveth life forever.

<sup>a</sup>Horizontal line at the top; cf. same beginning in the introduction to the Megiddo campaign, § 407, l. 3 (=Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, b, 3 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>Excepting the word "expedition," this part is also broken out in the Introduction (l. 5, § 407).

<sup>c</sup>Apparently this means by its number, for from now on the expeditions are numbered: see year 29.

<sup>d</sup>Restored from § 407, l. 6 (=Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, b, l. 6).

<sup>e</sup>Young shows that the name ended in t. About five or six words are lacking.

<sup>f</sup>As after the battle of Megiddo.

<sup>g</sup>Bissing (Statistische Tafel, XV) makes the obvious comparison with the mention of the presence of the gods of Egypt in "Dunip" (Amarna Letters, ed. Winckler, 41, 9, 10) in the Amarna letters.

<sup>h</sup>Seven or eight words are lacking.

Spoil of the City

459. List of the plunder taken out of this city, from <sup>3</sup>the infantry of that foe of Tunip (Tw-np), the chief of this city, 1; (T-h-r)<sup>a</sup> warriors, 329; silver, 100 deben;<sup>b</sup> gold, 100 deben;<sup>b</sup> lapis lazuli, malachite, vessels of bronze and copper.

The Return Voyage

460. Behold, ships were taken — — — laden with everything, with slaves, male and female; copper, lead, emery<sup>1</sup>, (and) <sup>4</sup>everything good. Afterward his majesty proceeded southward<sup>c</sup> to Egypt, to his father. Amon-Re, with joy of heart.

Capture of Arvad

461. Behold, his majesty overthrew the city of Arvad (ʔ-rʔ-ty-wt), with its grain, cutting down all its pleasant trees.<sup>d</sup> Behold, there were found [the products<sup>1</sup>] of all Zahi. Their gardens were filled with their fruit, <sup>5</sup>their wines were found remaining in their presses as water flows,<sup>e</sup> their grain on the terraces<sup>f</sup> upon —; it was more plentiful than the sand of the shore. The army were overwhelmed with their portions.

Tribute on This Expedition

462. List of the tribute brought to his majesty on this expedition: 51 slaves, male and female; 30 horses; 10 flat dishes of silver; <sup>6</sup>incense, oil, 470 (mn-) jars of honey, 6,428 (mn-) jars of wine, copper, lead, lapis lazuli, green felspar, 616 large cattle, 3,636 small cattle, loaves, various <sup>a</sup>Text has only “— hr,” I am indebted for the restoration to Erman; see also Müller (Asien und Europa, 360, n. 5).

<sup>b</sup>24.37 pounds.

<sup>c</sup>The return of the king is here prematurely narrated. It was, of course, by water, as the preceding context shows that Phœnician ships were seized for the purpose.

<sup>d</sup>See § 433 (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 32, l. 20) where the same was done for Megiddo.

<sup>e</sup>Cf. Bissing, Statistische Tafel, 16 ff., who makes the passage too difficult; and Piehl, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 1889-90, 376, whose emendation is not necessary. Precisely the same figure, with the same grammatical construction occurs in Papyrus Harris (IV, 213 and 216=7, 11 and 8, 6).

<sup>f</sup>The sloping fields of the mountain side.

(njr' t-) loaves, clean grain in kernel and ground — —. All good fruit of this country. Behold, the army of his majesty was drunk and anointed with oil every day as at a feast in Egypt.

VII. SIXTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 30)<sup>a</sup>

463. This year the expedition went by water and landed at Simyra,<sup>b</sup> the most convenient port for reaching Kadesh. This city had been the leader in the great coalition of revolters, defeated at Megiddo in the first campaign seven years before. It was doubtless also constantly supporting revolt in the Phœnician coast cities, as Tunip had done in the preceding year (29), causing the king to direct his forces thither in that year. Finally in the year 30 the king succeeded in reaching the source of the disturbance, capturing and severely punishing Kadesh,<sup>c</sup> a feat in which Amenemhab assisted. He returned to his fleet at Simyra, proceeded to Arvad and punished it as in the preceding year. On his return to Egypt he took with him the children of the native princes to be educated in friendship toward Egypt, that they might be sent back gradually to replace the old hostile generation of Syrian princes.

464. YEAR 30. Behold, his majesty was in the land of Retenu on the sixth victorious expedition<sup>d</sup> of his majesty.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 7-9, and Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 7, 8; Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1170, 1171, ll. 7-9; Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 7-9.

<sup>b</sup>This is not stated in the Annals, but as he returned to the coast at Simyra, and as Simyra was the port nearest Kadesh, the objective of his campaign, there can be little doubt about the place of landing.

<sup>c</sup>Although it still remained the center of Syrian rebellion and revolted again in year 42 (§§ 531, 532). Amenemhab refers to both conquests (§ 585 and §§ 589 f.).

<sup>d</sup>The word is in this case determined with a ship indicating the manner in which the king proceeded to Syria (cf. Wiedemann, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 32, 128; also Bissing, Statistische Tafel, 19).

Punishment of Kadesh and Arvad

465. (He) arrived at the city of Kadesh (Kd-šw), overthrew it,<sup>a</sup> cut down its groves, harvested its grain. (He) came to the land of Š—y—wt,<sup>b</sup> arrived at the city of Simyra (ḏ<sup>2</sup>-my-r<sup>2</sup>), arrived at the city of Arvad (ṛ<sup>2</sup>-ṛ<sup>2</sup>-t-wt), doing likewise<sup>c</sup> to it.

Tribute

466. List of the tribute <sup>8</sup>brought to the souls of his majesty by the chiefs of Retenu in this year.

Capture of Children of Chiefs

467. Behold, the children of the chiefs (and) their brothers were brought to be in strongholds in Egypt.<sup>d</sup> Now, whosoever died among these chiefs, his majesty would cause his son to stand in his place. List of the children of chiefs brought in this year: (x+)<sup>2</sup><sup>e</sup> persons; 181 slaves, male and female; 188 horses; 40 chariots, <sup>9</sup>wrought with gold and silver (and) painted.

VIII. SEVENTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 31)<sup>f</sup>

468. The king again directs his attention to the coast cities of Phoenicia, and it is clear that he proceeds thither by water, first capturing Ullaza, a coast city in the vicinity of Simyra, when he receives the tribute and homage of the submissive Syrian kinglets. He then sailed along the coast from harbor to harbor, forcing submission, and laying up

<sup>a</sup>The language does not unequivocally state the capture of the city, but its capture is clearly stated by Amenemhab (§ 585, ll. 13, 14).

<sup>b</sup>This fragmentary name must indicate the country north of Kadesh, for, according to Amenemhab (§ 584), Thutmose went to Senzar on this Kadesh campaign.

<sup>c</sup>As he had done to Kadesh.

<sup>d</sup>They were kept in a special place of confinement or dwelling at Thebes, explained in § 402; cf. also Müller, Asien und Europa, 268.

<sup>e</sup>The first part of the number is broken out.

<sup>f</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 9-17, and Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 9-16 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1171-73, ll. 9-17 = Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 9-17.

in each the necessary supplies for his garrisons and his future operations. After receiving reports on the harvest of Retenu, he returned to Egypt, where he found messengers bringing tribute from the southern tribe of the Genebteyew. The record here appends the annual taxes of the Nubian Wawat.

469. YEAR 31, first (month) of the third season, day 3. List of that which his majesty captured in this year.

Capture of Ullaza

470. Booty brought from the city of Ullaza (<sup>2</sup>n-r<sup>2</sup>-tw), which is upon the shore of Zeren (<sup>1</sup>D<sup>1</sup>r-n<sup>2</sup>),<sup>a</sup> 490 living captives; [3] <sup>1</sup>—<sup>b</sup> of the son of that foe of Tunip (<sup>1</sup>*T<sup>1</sup>w-n[p]*); chief of the <sup>1</sup>—, who was there, 1; total, 494 persons. Twenty-six horses; 13 chariots,<sup>10</sup> and their equipment of all the weapons of war. Verily, his majesty captured this city in a short hour, and all its property was spoil.<sup>c</sup>

Tribute of Submissive Princes

471. Tribute of the princes of Retenu, who came to do obeisance to the [souls] of his majesty in this year: — <sup>d</sup>slaves, male and female; 72 — — — of this country; silver, 761 deben, 2 kidet;<sup>e</sup> 19 chariots, wrought with silver; <sup>11</sup>the equipment of their weapons of war; 104 oxen with bullocks;<sup>f</sup> 172 calves and cows; total, 276; 4,622 small cattle; native copper, 40 blocks; lead, ————<sup>g</sup> 41 golden bracelets, figured with <sup>1</sup>—; together with all their produce and all the fine fragrant <sup>12</sup>woods of this country.

<sup>a</sup>As corrected by Bissing, Statistische Tafel, 22. It has the determinative of a body of water.

<sup>b</sup>Hnty.

<sup>c</sup>Compare a similar phrase in year 23, l. 6 (§ 431), and "Hymn of Victory," l. 9 (§ 657); the identical phrase in Ahmose-si-Ebana, l. 21 (§ 15). Cf. Sethe, Verbum, II, § 70.

<sup>d</sup>Numeral lost.

<sup>e</sup>185.5 pounds.

<sup>f</sup>Cf. Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 32, l. 33.

<sup>g</sup>Not more than five words lacking, and about the same in l. 12.

The Harbors

472. Now, every harbor<sup>a</sup> at which his majesty arrived was supplied with (njr-) loaves and with assorted loaves, with oil, incense, wine, honey, f[ruit] — — — — abundant were they beyond everything, beyond the knowledge of his majesty's army; (it) is no fiction, <sup>13</sup>they remain in the daily register<sup>b</sup> of the palace, L. P. H., the list of them not being given in this inscription, in order not to multiply words, and in order to furnish <sup>1</sup>their circumstances<sup>1</sup> in this place<sup>c</sup> —————<sup>d</sup>

Harvest of Retenu

473. The harvest of the land of Retenu was reported, consisting of much clean grain, <sup>14</sup>grain in the kernel,<sup>c</sup> barley, incense, green oil, wine, fruit, every pleasing thing of the country; they shall<sup>f</sup> apportion it to the treasury, according as the impost of the — is counted ———— 33 various —, together with green <sup>1</sup>stone<sup>1</sup>, every costly stone of this country, and many stones <sup>15</sup>of <sup>1</sup>sparkle<sup>1</sup>;<sup>g</sup> [all the] good [things] of this country.

<sup>a</sup>That these are the harbors on the Phœnician coast, there is no doubt. The word is a feminine noun (mny'wt) from mny, "to land," and sometimes has a ship as determinative (Papyrus Anast., IV, 15, 4). Some of the supplies with which these mny'wt were equipped were ships and spars (§ 492). These cannot apply to inland stations! When we notice that it is always Lebanon chiefs who furnish the supplies, the conclusion is clear. A new meaning is thus given the words of Abdkhiba of Jerusalem: "As long as ships were upon the sea, the strong arm of the king occupied Nahrima (Naharin) and Kas" (Babylonia) (Amarna Letters, ed. Winckler, 182, 32 f.). This observation throws a flood of light on Thutmose III's campaigns, and shows that his military operations were later regularly conducted from some harbor as a base. He therefore employed his navy in these campaigns to a far greater extent than we had supposed, regularly transporting his army to Syria by water, and even probably conducting the above campaign by water, sailing from harbor to harbor. See note, § 483, l. 24.

<sup>b</sup>Hrwyt. The word is rare, but occurs also in the Decree of Harmhab (III, 63, l. 4), indicating a writing containing laws.

<sup>c</sup>Meaning, perhaps, that there is room on the wall only for offering the circumstances under which the spoil was taken, without enumerating the same.

<sup>d</sup>Over one-third of the line is broken out, and this is the case with each line as far as l. 35.

<sup>e</sup>Not ground.

<sup>f</sup>The tense shows that we have here the very words of the government scribe's books.

<sup>g</sup>The word has the fire determinative; same word in forty-second year, l. 14, § 533; and Papyrus Harris three times (not four, as given in Piehl's Dictionnaire, 21, 22), each time referring to costly stones. Hence Bissing's conjecture that it means a founder's mould of stone is impossible (Bissing, Statistische Tafel, 28).

Tribute of the Genebteyew

474. When his majesty arrived in Egypt, the messengers of the Genebteyew (Gnb'tyw) came bearing their tribute, consisting of myrrh, [gum<sup>1</sup> ——— 6 —; 10 male negroes for attendants; 113 oxen <sup>16</sup>(and) calves; 230 bulls; total, 343; besides vessels laden with ivory, ebony, skins of the panther, products ———.

Impost of Wawat

475. [List of the impost of Wawat (W<sup>2-w 3-t</sup>): 5 — of Wawat; 31 oxen and calves; 61 bulls; total, 92; <sup>17</sup>besides vessels laden with all things of this country; the harvest of Wawat, likewise.

IX. EIGHTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 33)<sup>a</sup>

476. In this year the king carries out the greatest campaign of his Asiatic wars, viz., the conquest of the Euphrates country. He has been long preparing for it, in the preceding campaigns, overthrowing Kadesh in the Orontes valley, subduing the coast cities, and filling them with provisions for his garrisons and his future operations. The story is unfortunately briefly told, and not always chronological. The voyage to Simyra,<sup>b</sup> and the long march thence down the Orontes and to the Euphrates, are entirely omitted. The crowning act of the campaign, the erection of his boundary tablet east of the Euphrates, and another in the vicinity beside that of his father, Thutmose I, is immediately narrated. The operations which led to this culmination are then recorded in the meagerest words. While marching northward, plundering as he went, probably not far from the Euphrates, he meets the king of Mitanni, defeats and

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 17-29; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 17-28 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1173-75, ll. 17-29 = Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 17-29.

<sup>b</sup>He must have landed at Simyra, for, according to the fragment of Pylon VII (§ 598) he conquered Ketne on this campaign. Ketne was in the Orontes valley behind Simyra (Meyer, Aegyptiaca, 68; Petrie's location of it by Damascus seems to me impossible. See Syria and Egypt, s. v.).

drives him in flight, capturing a great booty on the battlefield. Amenemhab mentions three battles on this campaign, of which the last, that at Carchemish, is probably, the one here mentioned in the Annals. Probably Carchemish marks the northern limit of the advance in this campaign, and the two other battles mentioned by Amenemhab occurred on the march thither (§§ 581, 582). The king then crossed the Euphrates, set up his boundary tablets, and, as he marched southward to Niy on his return, he was met by the subordinate princes, who immediately submitted and brought their tribute. Even far-off Babylon sends gifts, which, of course, the king calls tribute, and also the Hittites, who here make their first appearance in history. It is now arranged that the Lebanon princes shall keep the king's harbors supplied with provisions <sup>a</sup>

On the king's return, an expedition of his to Punt arrives with magnificent returns from "God's-Land." The impost of Wawat is paid as usual.

477. YEAR 33. Behold, his majesty was in the land of Retenu; [he] arrived ———.

Boundary Tablet on the Euphrates

478. [He set up a tablet] east of this water;<sup>b</sup> he set up another beside the tablet of his father, <sup>18</sup>the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheperkere (Thutmose I).

Battle in Naharin

479. Behold, his majesty went north<sup>c</sup> capturing the towns and laying waste the settlements of that foe<sup>d</sup> of wretched Naharin (N-h-ry-n ?)

---

<sup>a</sup>This is narrated out of its place before the tribute of Babylon and the Hittites.

<sup>b</sup>This is the Euphrates; see also note on pursuit, ll. 18, 19.

<sup>c</sup>See Amenemhab, § 583, ll. 8, 9.

<sup>d</sup>The king of Mitanni.

———— he [pursu]ed after them an iter (ytr)<sup>a</sup> of sailing; not one looked <sup>19</sup>behind him, but (they) fled, <sup>b</sup>forsooth, <sup>b</sup>like a [herd] of mountain goats; yea, the horses fled ———.

The Booty

480. [List of the booty taken] among the whole army, consisting of: princes, 3; <sup>20</sup>their wives, 30; men taken, 80; 606 slaves, male and female, with their children; those who surrendered (and) their wives, ——— (he) harvested their grain.

Arrival at Niy

481. His majesty arrived at the city <sup>21</sup>of Niy (Nyy), going southward, when his majesty returned, having set up his tablet in Naharin (N-h-ry-n)<sup>c</sup>, extending the boundaries of Egypt.<sup>d</sup> ———.

Tribute of Naharin

482. [List] of the tribute brought to his majesty by the chiefs of this country: <sup>22</sup>513 slaves, male and female; 260 horses; gold, 45 deben,  $\frac{1}{3}$  kidet;<sup>e</sup> silver vessels of the workmanship of Zahi (D<sup>2</sup>-hy) ——— [chariots] with all their weapons of war; 28 oxen, <sup>23</sup>calves, and bullocks; 564 bulls; 5,323 small cattle; incense, 828 (mn-) jars; sweet oil and [green oil] ——— every pleasing [thing] of this country; all fruits in quantity.

<sup>a</sup>In view of the parallel passage in the Semneh stela of Amenhotep III, where the words, "ytr of sailing," are followed by a numeral, the word must be the linear measure, ytr, and not the word ytr, "river." Hence the rendering of Müller (Asien und Europa, 254): "er (überschritt) den Fluss des Rundfahrens (?)" must be given up. There is no statement of a crossing of the Euphrates here, but that Thutmose III really crossed this river is stated on his Constantinople obelisk (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 60, W.): "Thutmose (III) who crossed the Great Bend of Naharin (N-h-r-n) with might and with victory at the head of his army" (§ 631). That this crossing of the river was on this campaign is not to be doubted, and the second tablet of l. 17 was therefore set up on the "east" of the Euphrates. A further striking corroboration of the crossing is in the "Hymn of Victory" (§ 656, ll. 7, 8).

<sup>b</sup>A rare New Egyptian particle, m-dwn; cf. Erman, Neuägyptische Grammatik (§ 94, 2).

<sup>c</sup>As above narrated.

<sup>d</sup>The remainder of the campaign must have been very brief, as it occupied only the lacuna (about one-third of the line).

<sup>e</sup>Nearly eleven pounds, troy.

The Harbors

483. Behold, <sup>24</sup>these harbors were supplied with everything according to their dues, according to their contract of each year, together with the impost of Lebanon<sup>a</sup> (R<sup>2</sup>-mn-n) according to their contract of each year with the chiefs of Lebanon (R<sup>2</sup>-mn-n) ——— 2 unknown [birds]; 4 wild fowl <sup>25</sup>of this country, which [—] every day.

Tribute of Babylon

484. The tribute of the chief of Shinar (S<sup>2</sup>-n-g-r<sup>2</sup>);<sup>b</sup> real lapis lazuli, 4(+x) deben; artificial lapis lazuli, 24 deben; lapis lazuli of Babylon (B-b-r<sup>2</sup>) ——— of real lapis lazuli; a ram's head<sup>c</sup> of real lapis lazuli; <sup>26</sup>15 kidet; and vessels ———.

Tribute of the Hittites

485. The tribute of Kheta (H-t<sup>2</sup>) the Great, in this year: 8 silver rings, making 401 deben;<sup>d</sup> of white precious stone, a great block; (t<sup>2</sup>-gw-) wood ——— [returning] to Egypt, at his coming from <sup>27</sup>Naharin (N-h-ry-n<sup>2</sup>), extending the boundaries of Egypt.

Products of Punt

486. Marvels brought to his majesty in<sup>e</sup> the land of Punt in this year: dried myrrh, 1,685 heket;<sup>f</sup> gold ——— gold, 155 deben, 2 kidet; 134 slaves, male and female; 114 oxen, <sup>28</sup>and calves; 305 bulls; total, 419 cattle; beside vessels laden with ivory, ebony, (skins) of the panther; every good thing of [this] country ———.

<sup>a</sup>The harbors lying at the foot of the Lebanon along the Phœnician coast would naturally be supplied by the Lebanon princes. It is to be noted that these supplies were collected as "impost" (not "tribute"), and probably by an Egyptian officer, as was the "impost" of Nubia.

<sup>b</sup>Identified long ago by Brugsch (Gr. Oase, 91) with the biblical Shinar (Šn c r), an identification which was overlooked in favor of Meyer's identification with Singara. Meyer (Aegyptiaca, 63) now sees in S<sup>2</sup>-n-g-r<sup>2</sup> the Sanhar of the Amarna letters (Amarna Letters, ed. Winckler, 25, 49), which also leads him to recognize Shinar in both, although Brugsch's identification of S<sup>2</sup>-n-g-r<sup>2</sup> with Shinar seems not to have been noticed.

<sup>c</sup>Text really has "face," but the wall paintings show complete heads in such cases.

<sup>d</sup>97.74 pounds.

<sup>e</sup>Or possibly "from" (hr); it is noticeable that in the year 38 (§ 513) the preposition is m, "from." Hence perhaps an expedition here; but see § 616, l. 9.

<sup>f</sup>About 223 $\frac{2}{3}$  bushels.

Impost of Wawat

487. [Impost of Wawat]: ——— 13 male [negro] slaves; total, 20;<sup>a</sup> 44 oxen and calves; 2060 bulls; total, 104; beside vessels laden with every good thing of this country; the harvest of this place likewise.

X. NINTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 34)<sup>b</sup>

488. The king confines himself this year to little more than a voyage of inspection to Zahi, receiving the surrender of submissive towns, and the tribute of Retenu, and Cyprus. The harbors are stocked with supplies as usual, including a fleet of foreign vessels laden with timber.

The annual impost of Kush and Wawat is recorded as usual.

489. YEAR 34. Behold, his majesty was in the land of Zahi (D<sup>2</sup>-hy).

Surrender of Zahi Towns

490. ——— he surrendered fully to his majesty with 'fear'. List of <sup>30</sup>the towns captured in this year: 2 towns, (and) a town which surrendered in the district of Nuges (2 n-yw-g-s 2); total, 3. Captives brought to his majesty ——— taken captive 90, those who surrendered, their wives <sup>31</sup>and their children ———; <sup>c</sup> 40 horses; 15 chariots, wrought with silver and gold; golden vessels and gold in rings, 50<sup>d</sup> deben, 8 kidet; <sup>d</sup> 'silver' vessels of this country and rings, 153 deben; <sup>e</sup> copper ———; <sup>f</sup> 326 heifers; 40 white goats; 50 small goats; 70 asses; a quantity of (2-gw-) wood; <sup>32f</sup>many<sup>32g</sup> chairs of black wood (and) carob wood; together with 6 tent-poles, wrought with bronze and set with costly stones; together with every fine wood of this country.

<sup>a</sup>Seven other persons therefore were mentioned in the lacuna.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, 29-37; Mariette, Karnak, 13, ll. 29-35 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1175-77, ll. 29-27 = Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 29-37.

<sup>c</sup>Only the number is lost; von Bissing gives no lacuna.

<sup>d</sup>About twelve and one-quarter pounds, troy.

<sup>e</sup>About thirty-seven and three-tenths pounds.

<sup>f</sup>The fragment marked ll. 55-62 (in Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII) nearly fills out completely the gap between Lepsius' text and Mariette's (see Mariette, Karnak, 13).

<sup>g</sup>Possibly "many" belongs here, which might then give "many tree-trunks."

Tribute of Retenu

491. Tribute of the chiefs of Retenu in this year: —<sup>a</sup> horses; 31 (+x) [chariots,] wrought with silver and gold, and painted; 70†+3‡ slaves, male and female; gold, 55 deben, 8 kidet; various silver vessels<sup>33</sup> of the workmanship of the country, — deben, 6 kidet; gold and silver; (mnw-) stone; vessels of every costly stone; native copper, 80 blocks; lead, 11 blocks; colors, 100 deben; dry myrrh, †feldspar†; green †stone† †— 13 oxen and calves; 530 bulls; 84 asses; bronze —; a quantity of wood; numerous vessels of copper; incense, 693 (mn-) jars; <sup>34</sup>sweet oil and green oil, 2,080 (mn-) jars; wine, 608 (mn-) jars; 3<sup>b</sup> chariots of (†g-w-) wood, carob wood, †logs† of every wood of this country.

The Harbors Supplied

492. Behold, all the harbors of his majesty were supplied with every good thing of that †which† [his] majesty received [in] Zahi (D<sup>2</sup>-hy), consisting of Keftiyew ships, Byblos ships, and Sektu (Sk-tw) ships<sup>c</sup> of cedar laden with poles, and masts, together <sup>35</sup>with great trees for the †—<sup>d</sup> of his majesty.

Tribute of Cyprus

493. Tribute of the chief of Isy (Ysy) in [this year]: 108 blocks of pure copper (or) 2,040 deben;<sup>e</sup> 5(+x) blocks of lead; 1,200 †pigs† of lead; lapis lazuli, 110 deben; ivory, 1 tusk; 2 staves of — wood.

Impost of Kush

494. Impost of Kush the wretched: gold, 300 (+x) deben; 60 negroes;<sup>g</sup> the son<sup>h</sup> of the chief of Irem (Yrm) <sup>i</sup>— — <sup>36</sup>total, 64; oxen,

<sup>a</sup>Only the number is lacking.

<sup>b</sup>The three strokes may, of course, be the plural strokes.

<sup>c</sup>W. M. Müller (Asien und Europa, 339) inserts a lacuna between the initial S of this word and the end; but a glance at the neighboring lines (Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII; and Mariette, Karnak, 13), especially 56 (= 32), will show that there is room for only the sk-sign in the lacuna. The place is unknown. See also Bissing, Statistische Tafel, l. 34.

<sup>d</sup>Some construction of wood. †Nws; see Papyrus Harris, passim.

<sup>e</sup>About 408 pounds. <sup>g</sup>Persons of some sort.

<sup>h</sup>Maspero has daughter (Struggle of the Nations, 267; so also Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 118).

<sup>i</sup>Three persons must have been mentioned in this lacuna; but Bissing, Statistische Tafel, has no lacuna.

[95; calves,] 180; total, 275; besides [vessels] laden with ivory, ebony and all products of this country; the harvest of Kush likewise.

Impost of Wawat

495. The [impost] of Wawat; gold, 254<sup>a</sup> deben; 10 negro slaves, male and female; — oxen, and calves [besides vessels laden with] <sup>37</sup>every good thing of [this country].

XI. TENTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 35)<sup>b</sup>

496. It was now the second year since the invasion of Naharin, and the kings of that region had revolted. Thutmose marched thither from the Phœnician coast, defeated the rebels who had united under some prince who is called the “foe of Naharin.” This may have been the king of Aleppo. The allies were defeated in a battle at Araina, possibly in the land of Tikhsi, as mentioned by Amenemhab (§ 587, l. 19), and Thutmose took great spoil. The tribute of the Syrian princes is not mentioned; it was doubtless paid as usual; the impost of Kush and Wawat are noted.

497. YEAR 35. Behold, his majesty was in the land of Zahi (D<sup>2</sup>-hy) on the tenth victorious expedition.

Revolt in Naharin

498. When his majesty arrived at the city of Araina (2-r 2-y 2-n),<sup>c</sup> behold, that wretched foe [of Naharjin ([N-h-r]y-n)] had collected horses and people; [his] majesty — — — <sup>38</sup>of the ends<sup>d</sup> of the earth. They were numerous — — they were about to fight with his majesty.

<sup>a</sup>The numeral may have contained more hundreds; as it is, it amounts to 61.91 pounds.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, ll. 37-41; Denkmäler, III, 31, a, ll. 1-3 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1177-79, ll. 37-44, and l. 2 = Bissing, Statistische Tafel, ll. 37-44.

<sup>c</sup>Not Aruna, as sometimes supposed; it is an unidentified city, but was perhaps situated in the land of Tikhsi, where Amenemhab (§ 587) mentions a battle.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., “hinder parts;” see Thutmose III’s “Hymn of Victory” (§ 661, l. 20).

Battle in Naharin

499. Then his majesty advanced [to fight]<sup>a</sup> with them; then the army of his majesty furnished an example of attack,<sup>b</sup> in the matter<sup>c</sup> of seizing and taking.<sup>b</sup> Then his majesty prevailed against [these] barbarians by the souls of [his] f[ather] A[mon] ———— <sup>39</sup>of Naharin (N-h-r-n). They fled headlong, falling one over another, before his majesty.

Booty of the King

500. List of booty which his majesty himself brought away from these barbarians of Naharin (N-h-ry-n): ———— 2 [suits of] armor; bronze —<sup>d</sup> deben —.

Booty of the Army

501. List of booty which the army of his majesty brought away from [these foreigner]s: 10 living prisoners; 180 horses; 60 chariots; ———— <sup>41</sup>——— 13 inlaid corselets; 13 bronze [suits] of armor —; 5 bronze helmets for the head; 5 bows of Kharu (Palestine); captures made in other [countries] ———— <sup>e42</sup>———<sup>f</sup> 226 —; a chariot, wrought with gold; 20(+x) chariots, wrought with gold and silver, ———— together with ———— <sup>43</sup>——— 21 (mn-) jars ————; sweet oil, 954[+x] (mn-) jars ———— <sup>44</sup>——— work of ————<sup>g</sup> <sup>h1</sup>——— gold ———— <sup>a</sup>[rings], bracelets, (ybht y-) stone, eye cosmetic — wild goats, fire wood.

Impost of Kush

502. Impost of the wretched Kush: gold, 70 deben, 1 kidet; slaves, male and female, — — — — — oxen, calves, ———— [besides vessels

<sup>a</sup>This seems to have been omitted here. Cf. the Megiddo battle (l. 1, § 429).

<sup>b</sup>Piehl suggests: "pendant une suspension du pillage" (Sphinx, II, 109).

<sup>c</sup>Hn as in hn-n-mdw.t.

<sup>d</sup>Numeral lost.

<sup>e</sup>The block containing the tops of ll. 42-54 in Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XII, should be pushed to the left at least the width of three lines. This is evident from the text in Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1178-84, with which we begin a new numbering of the above block.

<sup>f</sup>After the transfer of above block as above noted, the tops of ll. 42-44 are of course wanting.

<sup>g</sup>Probably several lines are wanting here.

<sup>h</sup>Numbered according to Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a.

laden] <sup>3</sup>with ebony, ivory, all the good products of this country, together with the harvest of [Kush, likewise].<sup>a</sup>

Impost of Wawat

503. [Impost of Wawat] ——— 34 negro slaves, male and female; 94 oxen, calves, and bulls; besides ships laden with every good thing; the harvest of Wawat, [likewise].

XII. ELEVENTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 36)

504. Lost.

XIII. TWELFTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 37)

505. Lost.

XIV. THIRTEENTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 38)<sup>b</sup>

506. The king directs his attention to the southern Lebanon region of Nuges again, where he is obliged to subjugate the local princes, who controlled the road northward between the two Lebanons at the seaward bend of the Litâny River. The regular Syrian tribute and the supplying of the harbors are mentioned, as usual; followed for the first time by the tribute of Cyprus and Arrapachitis, later known as an Assyrian province. The products of Punt are then followed by the usual impost of Kush and Wawat.

507. [YEAR 38. Behold, his majesty was in ———] <sup>4</sup>on the thirteenth victorious expedition. Behold, his majesty was overthrowing ———<sup>c</sup> [in] the district of Nuges (<sup>2</sup> n-yw-g-s <sup>2</sup>).

Booty of Nuges District

508. List of booty which the army of his majesty brought away from the district of Nuges: 50 living captives; — horses; — 3 chariots; — — — with [their weapons] <sup>5</sup>of war; — people who surrendered of the region of Nuges — — — —.

<sup>a</sup>Brugsch's restoration (Thesaurus, 1179) to Wawat is an error, as the harvest of Wawat is mentioned in the next paragraph.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 31, a, ll. 3-10 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1178-81, ll. 2-9.

<sup>c</sup>Nearly one-quarter line lacking.

Syrian Tribute

509. Tribute which was brought to the fame of his majesty in this year: 328 horses; 522 slaves, male and female; 9 chariots, wrought with silver and gold; 61 painted (chariots); total, 70; a necklace of real lapis lazuli — — — — a (two-handled  $\text{ʔ-k}^{\text{ʔ-n}^{\text{ʔ-}}$ ) — vase; 3 flat dishes; heads<sup>a</sup> of goats, head of a lion, vessels of all the work of Zahi — — — — copper, 2,821 [deben],  $3\frac{1}{2}$  kidet; of crude copper, 276 blocks; lead, 26 blocks; incense, 656 (hbn-t)-jars; sweet oil and green oil, (sj-t) oil, 1,752 (mn-) jars; wine, 156 (jars);<sup>b</sup> 12 oxen; — — — 46 asses; 5 heads of 7tooth ivory; tables of ivory (and) of carob wood; white (mmw-) stone, 68 deben — — — — bronze spears, shields, bows, — all weapons of war; sweet wood of this country, all the good product(s) of this country.

The Harbors Supplied

510. Behold, every harbor was supplied with every good thing according to their agreement of each year, in going [northward or]<sup>c</sup> southward; the impost of Lebanon (Rʔ-mn-n)<sup>d</sup> <sup>8</sup>likewise; the harvest of Zahi, consisting of clean grain, green oil, incense, [win]e.

Tribute of Cyprus

511. Tribute of the prince of Isy (Ysy): crude copper —; horses.<sup>e</sup>

Tribute of Arrapachitis

512. Tribute of the country of Arrapachitis ( $\text{ʔ-r}^{\text{ʔ-r}^{\text{h}}}$ )<sup>f</sup> in this year: slaves, male and female; crude copper, 2 blocks; carob trees, 65 logs; and all sweet woods of his country.

Product of Punt

513. [Marvels] brought<sup>g</sup> to the fame of his majesty from Punt: <sup>9</sup>dried myrrh, 240 heket.

<sup>a</sup>The word hnn (written out phonetically at end of l. 6) means "head," not "face," as the graphic writing might indicate.

<sup>b</sup>Text has omitted the word.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from l. 13, fourteenth expedition.

<sup>d</sup>From which the harbors were supplied.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "spans."

<sup>f</sup>Probably  $\text{ʔ-r}^{\text{ʔ-r-p-h}}$  = Arrapachitis, is meant. See Müller, Asien und Europa, 279.

<sup>g</sup>In the year 33 the gifts of Punt are introduced by the words: "Marvels brought to his majesty, etc., (see § 486); hence restoration. There is no expedition this time, as the preposition is "from," not "in," as in § 486.

Impost of Kush

514. Impost of the wretched Kush: gold, 100 [+x]<sup>a</sup> deben, 6 kidet; 36 negro slaves, male and female; 111 oxen, and calves; 185 bulls; total, 306 (sic!),<sup>b</sup> besides vessels laden with ivory, ebony, all the good products of this country, together with the harvest of this country.

Impost of Wawat

515. Impost of Wawat: [gold], 2,844 [deben, — kidet]; 16 negro slaves, male and female; 1077 oxen and calves; besides [vessels] laden with every good product of this country.

XV. FOURTEENTH CAMPAIGN (YEAR 39)<sup>c</sup>

516. This campaign was introduced by an excursion to punish the raiding Bedwin on the northeastern frontier of Egypt, also referred to by Amenemhab (§ 580), after which the king proceeded northward, to receive the usual Syrian tribute and ensure supplies for the harbors.

Defeat of Shasu

517. YEAR 39. Behold, his majesty was in the land of Retenu on the fourteenth victorious expedition, after [his] going [to defeat] the fallen ones of Shasu (Š<sup>2-sw</sup>).

Syrian Tribute

518. List of [the tribute of] — — — 197 slaves, male and female; 11229 horses; 2 flat dishes of gold; together with rings (of gold), 12 deben, 1 kidet; — real lapis lazuli, 30 deben; a flat dish of silver; a (two-handled) vase (ʔ-k ʔ-n ʔ) of silver; a vessel with the head of an ox; 325 various vessels (of silver): together with silver in rings, making 1,495 deben, 1 kidet;<sup>d</sup> a chariot ——— made [with] 12 white costly stone, white (mnw-) stone; natron, (mnw-) stone, all the various costly stones of [this] country; incense, sweet oil, green oil, (sf t-) oil, honey 264<sup>e</sup> [+x jars]; wine, 1,405 (mn-) jars; 84 bulls; 1,183 small cattle;<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>There is room for several hundreds more.

<sup>b</sup>The total should be 296, the scribe has made an error of 10.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 31, a, ll. 10-14 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1181, 1182, ll. 9-13.

<sup>d</sup>364.43 pounds.

<sup>e</sup>The hundreds may be increased indefinitely.

<sup>f</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, 1193.

bronze ———;<sup>a</sup> <sup>13</sup>the pleasant — and the perfume of this country, together with all good products of this country.

The Harbors Supplied

519. Behold, every harbor was supplied with every good thing according to their agreement of each [year];<sup>b</sup> in going northward [or southward]<sup>c</sup> — — likewise; the harvest of [Lebanon]<sup>d</sup> ———<sup>a</sup> [the harvest] <sup>14</sup>of Zahi, consisting of clean grain, incense, oil, — w[in]e] ———.<sup>e</sup>

XVI. FIFTEENTH CAMPAIGN<sup>f</sup>

520. The fragments of the wall at this place show only the tribute-list of Cyprus and the impost of Kush and Wawat.

<sup>1</sup>[YEAR 40] ———.<sup>g</sup>

Tribute of Cyprus

521. [Tribute of the chief] of Isy (Ysy): ivory, 2 tusks; copper, 40 bricks; lead, 1 brick.

<sup>a</sup>Nearly half a line is wanting.

<sup>b</sup>The scribe has omitted the word "year;" restored from l. 7, p. 210.

<sup>c</sup>Restored from l. 7, thirteenth expedition.

<sup>d</sup>Lebanon and Zahi are regularly mentioned together in connection with the harbors.

<sup>e</sup>All the rest (about nine-tenths) of the line is wanting; it is the last line on the north wall, and the inscription here turns to the left, to follow the west wall (the back of Pylon VI) southward to the door. It doubtless concluded with the impost of Kush and Wawat, which could not have occupied more than the rest of this line.

<sup>f</sup>The Annals are now continued on the back of Pylon VI. The visitor on the spot will notice that only the lower third (or less) of these twenty vertical lines on the pylon (north of door) is preserved; hence the first date is lost, and unfortunately also all the others on this wall section. The text in Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a = Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1182-85. The fragment certainly contains data from three different expeditions; it must remain somewhat uncertain whether the first of the three is the conclusion of the fourteenth expedition in year 39 or part of a fifteenth in year 40. It seems probable that the long lacuna (nearly the whole l. 1, west wall) contains the conclusion of the fourteenth expedition, which must otherwise have occupied more space than either of the campaigns before or after it. Line 1 of the west wall, therefore, begins the fifteenth expedition. Müller (Asien und Europa, 54) sees difficulties in this arrangement, which are not apparent to me. See further notes on text.

<sup>g</sup>Contained the tribute of some unknown country, probably Retenu; the restored date is almost certain.

Impost of Kush

522. Tribute of <sup>2</sup>———. <sup>a</sup> [Impost of the wretched Kush in] this year: gold, 144 deben, 3 kidet; 101 negro slaves, male and female; oxen <sup>3</sup>———. <sup>b</sup>

Impost of Wawat

523. [Impost of Wawat]: —— 35 calves; 54 bulls; total, 89; besides vessels laden <sup>4</sup>[with ebony, ivory, and all the good products of this country<sup>c</sup>] ———. <sup>b</sup>

XVII. SIXTEENTH CAMPAIGN

524. The record contains only tribute-lists.

[YEAR 41. <sup>d</sup> Tribute of] —— <sup>e</sup> rings.

Tribute of Retenu

525. List of the tribute of the chiefs of Retenu, brought to the fame of his majesty in <sup>5</sup>[this year]<sup>f</sup> —— 40[+x] blocks —— a sword of flint<sup>1</sup>, bronze spears — <sup>6</sup>———. <sup>b</sup>

[Tribute of — in] this [yea]r: ivory, 18<sup>g</sup> tusks; carob wood, 242 logs; 184 large cattle; — small cattle <sup>7</sup>———. <sup>b</sup> <sup>h</sup>incense likewise.

Tribute of the Hittites

Tribute of the chief of Kheta (H-t<sup>2</sup>) the Great, in this year: gold — <sup>8</sup>———.

<sup>a</sup>Contained the tribute of some unknown country followed by the impost of Kush, for "tribute of" at end of l. 1 cannot refer to Kush, for which bk'w, "impost," is always used. Kush is certain from the negroes in the list.

<sup>b</sup>See note f, p. 212.

<sup>c</sup>At least this is the usual continuation. Possibly, the tribute of some other country intervenes in the following lacuna.

<sup>d</sup>As the impost of Kush and Wawat usually concludes the year's list, it is evident that we should begin another year at this point, as usual, with Retenu; probably year 41.

<sup>e</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch has "second time."

<sup>f</sup>Brugsch's restoration, "this land," is not according to the parallels.

<sup>g</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, 26.

<sup>h</sup>Probably the tribute of another country, also, is lost in the lacuna.

Impost of Kush

526. [Impost of Kush<sup>a</sup> the wretched in this year; gold,  $x+$ ] 94<sup>b</sup> deben, 2 kidet; 8 negro slaves, male and female; 13 male (negroes), brought for following;<sup>c</sup> total, 21; oxen, 9—————.<sup>d</sup>

Impost of Wawat

527. [Impost of Wawat]:<sup>e</sup> gold, 3,144<sup>f</sup> deben, 3 kidet; 35 oxen and calves; 79 bulls; total, 114; besides vessels laden with ivory 10—————.<sup>d</sup>

XVIII. SEVENTEENTH CAMPAIGN<sup>g</sup>

528. The last campaign, which happened not later than the year 42, shows the old king, now probably over seventy years of age, suppressing a revolt of Tunip and Kadesh, who are supported by auxiliaries from Naharin. He marched from the northern coast of Syria, after capturing the coast city of Erkatu,<sup>h</sup> directly against Tunip. Having subjugated it, he then marched up the Orontes against his old enemy, Kadesh, whose prince led the allied forces, which Thutmose III had routed at Megiddo on the first campaign, nearly twenty years before. There was a stubborn defense, but, according to the narrative of Amenemhab, the walls of the city were breached, and it was taken by storm (§ 590). From it and surrounding towns great plunder was secured, among which were the Naharin auxiliaries and their horses.

<sup>a</sup>Restored from the character of the tribute.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, 83. Brugsch, 86; the photograph indicates 94 as probable.

<sup>c</sup>As pedessequii.

<sup>e</sup>Restored after § 539.

<sup>d</sup>See note f, p. 212.

<sup>f</sup>766.35 pounds.

<sup>g</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 30, a, ll. 10-20 = Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1183-85, ll. 10-20.

<sup>h</sup>Erkatu (ḥ-r-ḫ-tw) must have been on the coast somewhere between the mouth of the Orontes and the Nahr el-Kebir. As it is the same as Irkata of the Amarna Letters (see § 529, note), it was not far from Simyra. Thutmose may have landed at Simyra, as he had evidently often done before, and hence he marched upon the "coast road" against Erkatu.

Long tribute-lists, the harbor supplies, and the impost of Kush and Wawat conclude the Annals.

Overthrow of Erkatu

529. [YEAR 42.]<sup>a</sup> ——— the Fenkhu ([F]nḥw). Behold,<sup>b</sup> his majesty was upon the coast road, in order to overthrow the city of Erkatu<sup>c</sup> (r-ḫ<sup>2</sup>-tw) and the cities of <sup>11</sup>d———— Kana (K<sup>2</sup>-n<sup>2</sup>) ———; this city was overthrown, together with its districts.

Overthrow of Tunip

530. (His majesty) arrived at Tunip (Tw-np<sup>e</sup>), overthrew that city, harvested its grain, and cut down its groves <sup>12</sup>———— the citizens of the army.

Overthrow of Cities of Kadesh District

531. Behold, (he) came in safety, arrived at the district of Kadesh (Kd-šw),<sup>f</sup> captured the cities<sup>g</sup> therein.

Booty of Kadesh District

532. List of the booty brought from there — <sup>13</sup>————<sup>d</sup> of the wretched Naharin (N-h-ry-n<sup>2</sup>) who were as auxiliaries among them, <sup>a</sup>Here a new year should begin for the same reason as in l. 4; see note. That its number should be 42 is clear from the date in the last line of this section; see note, § 540.

<sup>b</sup>Read yst instead of “Amon,” incorrectly restored by Harmhab.

<sup>c</sup>This important name is given by Lepsius as r-ḫ<sup>2</sup>-n-tw, inserting an n before tw; in this he is followed by Brugsch, who evidently published (Thesaurus, V, 1183) an old copy of his made from Lepsius; for the original (in the photograph) shows no trace of n and no room for it. The signs are perfectly preserved, and the feet of the eagle in ḫ<sup>2</sup> practically touch the head of the w-bird in tw, leaving absolutely no room for n in the vertical column between ḫ<sup>2</sup> and tw. Neither is there any trace on the back of the eagle of n (horizontal). This makes the identity of our word, with Irkata of the Amarna Letters a certainty. See also Eduard Meyer, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 69, n. 2; and compare above § 528, note.

<sup>d</sup>See note f, p. 212.

<sup>e</sup>To strike Tunip on turning inland, Erkatu must have been well to the north of Arvad, unless, of course, Thutmose's northward march is lost in the lacuna.

<sup>f</sup>He is therefore marching up the Orontes.

<sup>g</sup>Including, of course, Kadesh itself.

together with their horses; 691 people;<sup>a</sup> 29 hands;<sup>b</sup> 44 horses;<sup>c</sup>
 14_____d

Tribute of Unknown Country

533. [List of the tribute of —] in this year: 295 slaves, male and female;<sup>e</sup> 68 horses; 3 golden flat dishes;<sup>f</sup> 3 silver flat dishes;<sup>f</sup> (two-handled ʔ-kʔ-nʔ-) vases, 3;<sup>f</sup> ʔsparklingʔ stones,<sup>g</sup> together with silver
 15_____d

Tribute of Tunip?

534. [List of the tribute (or booty) of ʔTunipʔ<sup>h</sup>]: ———— lead, 47 bricks; lead, 1,100 deben; colors, ʔemeryʔ, all beautiful costly stones of this country; bronze ʔsuitsʔ of armor; weapons of war 16_____i
 [all the] pleasant [things] of this country.

The Harbors Supplied

535. Behold, every harbor was supplied with every good thing according to their agreement of each year; the harvest of this country 17[likewise] _____d

Tribute of Unknown Country

536. [The tribute of —] ———— together with flat dishes, heads of bulls,<sup>j</sup> making 341 deben, 2 kidet; genuine lapis lazuli, 1 block, making 33<sup>k</sup> kidet, a fine (tʔ-gw-) wood staff, native copper 18_____.

<sup>a</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, 690; photograph, 691.

<sup>b</sup>Of the slain, as usual.

<sup>c</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, 48; photo shows room for a much larger number.

<sup>d</sup>See note f, p. 212.

<sup>e</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, 195.

<sup>f</sup>It is possible that these are simply plurals without numerals.

<sup>g</sup>Same word (wḏḥ) in § 473, l. 15, q. v. and note.

<sup>h</sup>Above (l. 12) some captives were taken from Tunip, but the spoil of Tunip is perhaps not yet enumerated. Among the following list the rare emery occurs, which is found in the spoil taken from the Tunip auxiliaries in the unknown city of “Wa_____” (year 29, § 461); hence this list may here belong to Tunip.

<sup>i</sup>Possibly another nation has been introduced in the lacuna; see note f, p. 212.

<sup>j</sup>Meaning that the bulls' heads were a decoration upon the vessels, as depicted in the reliefs.

<sup>k</sup>Lepsius, 41; Brugsch, 33; he is sustained by the photograph.

Tribute of Tinay

537. [The tribute of the chief] of Tinay (Ty-n<sup>2</sup>-y):<sup>a</sup> a silver (§<sup>2</sup>-w<sup>2</sup>-b-ty)<sup>b</sup> vessel of the work of Keftiyew (Kf-tyw), together with vessels of iron,<sup>c</sup> 4 hands of silver, making 56 deben, 1 kidet; ———.

Impost of Kush

538. [The impost of the wretched Kush in this year]: ———
[besides vessels laden] with every good thing of this country; the harvest of the wretched Kush, likewise.

Impost of Wawat

539. The impost of Wawat<sup>d</sup> in this year: gold, 2,374 deben,<sup>e</sup> 1 kidet, <sup>20</sup> ———<sup>f</sup> [the harvest of Wa]wat.

XIX. CONCLUSION

540. Behold, his majesty commanded to record the victories which he won from the year 23<sup>g</sup> until the year 42, when this inscription was recorded upon this sanctuary;<sup>h</sup> that he might be given life forever.

<sup>a</sup>So Lepsius; Brugsch, Ty-n-my.

<sup>b</sup>See Bissing, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 34, 166, who identifies this vessel with the suibdu (of stone) mentioned in an Amarna letter (Winckler, Amarna Letters, 393, l. 61).

<sup>c</sup>By<sup>2</sup>.

<sup>e</sup>Over 578 pounds.

<sup>d</sup>One wa has been omitted in Lepsius' text.

<sup>f</sup>See note f, p. 212.

<sup>g</sup>Of course, 22 or 23 is to be read, the reading is based on: (1) our knowledge of the date when the campaigns began; (2) the fact that 22 is clear and there is only room in the possible lacuna for one unit more; (3) the fact that the list of offerings from the Asiatic wars (§§ 541 ff.) also begins in the year 23. This date, as well as the terminal date "year 42" (for which both Lepsius and Brugsch give 32), has been the subject of much discussion. The following remarks of Mariette in a letter to de Rougé which have been mostly overlooked, should settle the question (Revue archéologique, 1860<sup>2</sup>, N. S., I, 32):

"La première de ces deux dates, à la vérité, est un peu détruite; mais la planche de M. Lepsius rapporte fidèlement l'arrangement des chiffres, et vous voyez qu'il n'y a place là que pour l'an 22, ou l'an 23; . . . . Quant à la date donnée pour la dernière de ces campagnes, elle est celle de la quarante-deuxième année du règne de Thouthmès. Comme cela arrive fréquemment pour les textes gravés en relief très-mince sur le grès, l'un des chiffres *di*x a presque disparu par une sorte de dissolution spontanée de la pierre et il est évident que si M. Lepsius a fait sa publication sur un estampe, il a dû lire 32. Mais le chiffre qui tend à s'effacer est encore parfaitement clair, et c'est sans contredit l'an 42 qu'il faut voir. . . . ." These statements are confirmed by the photograph, although the space for the fourth ten (in 42) is absolutely smooth.

<sup>h</sup>Sh-ntr, with masculine demonstrative.

FEASTS AND OFFERINGS FROM THE CONQUESTS<sup>a</sup>

541. In this inscription Thutmose III records the new feasts and additional offerings which he established during the period of his splendid conquests in Asia. The record, therefore, begins with his return from the first campaign in the year 23, and continues till the year 42, when his campaigning ceased.<sup>b</sup> In order to connect the record with the occurrence of the first campaign, it goes back to the march to Lebanon after the fall of Megiddo, refers to a fortress which he built there, and proceeds then to his return and landing at Thebes. All this leads up to the establishment of three great "Feasts of Victory," for which it furnishes the motive. After fixing the calendar of these three feasts, with the lists of oblations to be offered at their celebration, the king proceeds to the gifts which he made to Amon at the feast of his voyage to southern Opet, which are exceedingly rich and numerous, including the three cities just captured in the Lebanon, fields and gardens, slaves, precious metals and stones, and the doubling of some of the old offerings (ll. 5-14). It would seem as if this feast was the first celebrated by the king after his return from the first campaign, for it is among its gifts that the acquisitions of that campaign appear.

<sup>a</sup>Wall inscription in the Karnak temple on the back of the south half of Pylon VI (Baedeker, plan opp. p. 239). It therefore by its position (as well as by its content) shows that it is really a continuation of the Annals, which are concluded at the door on the back of the north half of the same pylon. It is in vertical lines, and as a considerable amount of the pylon is lost at the top clear across, the tops of all the lines are lacking. Published by Lepsius, (Denkmäler, III, 30, b) and Brugsch (Recueil des monuments, I, 43, 44; last five lines omitted). Lepsius offers a more accurate text, but not so full in indistinct places. I collated the Berlin squeeze for the important historical portion (ll. 1-6) and a photograph by Borchardt for the whole.

<sup>b</sup>The date of the beginning is clearly shown in several places; that of the end by the list of Asiatic and Nubian slaves, which continues "till the recording of this tablet," which is stated at the end of the Annals (§ 540) to be "year 42."

542. The other offerings due to Amon, now richly increased, are then successively enumerated (ll. 14-25), and the long inscription closes with the king's exhortation to the priests, like that to the priests of Abydos (§§ 97 ff.) to be true to their duties and to offer the mortuary oblations due him, a list of which follows.

543. A splendid array of these gifts is depicted in a wall relief<sup>a</sup> in the corridor of the Annals. Chief among them are the two Karnak obelisks, one of which is now at Constantinople (§§ 629 ff.),<sup>b</sup> and two pairs of flagstaves for the temple façade, of course of cedar, tipped with electrum. But the relief shows the widest range of temple furniture: chests, a varied array of exquisite vessels; altars, and temple doors; besides ornaments for the divine statue, chiefly elaborate necklaces; the whole series being of gold, silver, bronze, and costly stones, especially lapis lazuli. The vessels bear the general inscription:

Very numerous; from the yearly dues (htr).

544. The purpose of the gifts is indicated by such accompanying inscriptions as the following:

Over a jar:

(Of) alabaster; filled with pure ointment of the divine things.

By rich necklaces:

Ornaments of the "Appearance Festival;"<sup>c</sup> amulets upon the divine limbs.

<sup>a</sup>On the south wall of the passage south of the sanctuary; published by Champollion, Monuments, IV, 316, 317; partially by Rosellini, Monumenti, Text, III, 1, plate opp. p. 125; and Rosellini, Monumenti Civili, 57; partially by Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, 29; and Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1185 ff.; and see Birch, Archaeologia, XXXV, 155.

<sup>b</sup>In the relief, this obelisk bears the complete dedication, of which only the first half is preserved on the original in Constantinople. See Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 55 ff., and infra, § 630, where the entire dedication will be found.

<sup>c</sup>When the god appears in procession.

545. The source of the gifts also appears thus:

Over armlet, necklace, etc.:

(Of) gold, and much costly stone; ornaments of his majesty.

Over a vase:

(Of) costly stone, which his majesty made according to the design of his own heart.<sup>a</sup>

546. Before these gifts, on the right, Amon sits enthroned, receiving them from Thutmose III on the left, before whom are the words:

Presentation of monuments by the king — — —, that he may be given life like Re, forever.<sup>b</sup>

547. It is clear from this and the following document that the beginning of Thutmose III's conquests in Asia marks a sudden and profound change in the cultus of Amon, occasioned by the enormous and entirely disproportionate wealth which from now on is poured into his treasury. We see here the beginning of that power and wealth to which the most remarkable witness is the Papyrus Harris (IV, 182-412).

Fortress in Lebanon

548. '———— in the land of Retenu (Rtnw) as a fortress which his<sup>c</sup> majesty built in his victories<sup>d</sup> among the chiefs of Lebanon (R-mn-n), the name of which is: "Menkheperre (Thutmose III)-is-the-Binder-of-the-Barbarians."

<sup>a</sup>The making of these vessels is depicted in the tomb of Menkheperreseneb, accompanied by the same remark (§ 775), showing that they were really designed by Thutmose III himself, and that the fact was thought worthy of remark there as well as here. He says the same thing in § 164, l. 43.

<sup>b</sup>There are other such short inscriptions of a single word or more, but they are as yet inadequately published. One is of especial interest. Over an offering-table made of four hsp-signs, precisely like the great alabaster altar recently found at Abusir, are the words: "(Of) 'shining' alabaster of Hatnub."

<sup>c</sup>The text has "my."

<sup>d</sup>These victories in the Lebanon must have been won on first the expedition after the Megiddo victory, for they are here referred to as preceding the king's return to Egypt from that expedition (l. 2). The three cities which he captured in the Lebanon are enumerated in the First Campaign, l. 16 (§ 436). Of the historians only Brugsch (Geschichte, 328) and Meyer (240) have noted this march to Lebanon.

Arrival in Thebes

549. Behold, he landed at Thebes,<sup>a</sup> his father, Amon, being <sup>2</sup>———. My majesty established for him a "Feast of Victory"<sup>b</sup> for the first time, when my majesty arrived from the first victorious expedition,<sup>c</sup> overthrowing wretched Retenu (Rtṇw) and widening the borders of Egypt in the year 23,<sup>d</sup> by the victories which he<sup>e</sup> decreed to me, leading — <sup>3</sup>———.

First Feast of Victory

550. [The first "Feast of Victory" was celebrated at (the feast)
 ———<sup>f</sup>] the first feast of Amon, in order to make it of five days' duration.<sup>g</sup>

Second Feast of Victory

551. The second "Feast of Victory" was celebrated at (the feast):
 "Day-of-Bringing-in-the-God,"<sup>h</sup> the second feast of Amon, in order to make it of five days' duration.

Third Feast of Victory

552. The third "Feast of Victory" was celebrated at the fifth feast of Amon in (the temple): "Gift-of-Life,"<sup>i</sup> the day of j— <sup>4</sup>——— [in order to make it of 'five days'<sup>1</sup> duration].

<sup>a</sup>Squeeze and photograph.

<sup>b</sup>As the next line shows, there were three "Feasts of Victory," but the first is here referred to as celebrated on his arrival. On these feasts, see Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 123 ff.

<sup>c</sup>§§ 408 ff.

<sup>d</sup>Brugsch has "22," which is, of course, an error.

<sup>e</sup>Amon.

<sup>f</sup>The restoration is certain from the other feasts; only the name of the Feast of Amon, with which the first feast of victory coincided, being unknown.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "in order to cause that it take place during (m) 5 days."

<sup>h</sup>This is the feast mentioned by Piankhi (IV, 836, l. 26), who gives the date as the second of Hathor, which thus determines the date of the second Feast of Victory.

<sup>i</sup>This is the name (ḥnk-t-ṇb) of the mortuary temple (Memnonium) of Thutmose III on the west shore at Thebes (cf. Recueil, XIX, 86-89). It stood at the northeast end of the line of temples (see Baedeker, "Necropolis of Thebes," opp. p. 254); as the earliest known reference to this building, it is particularly interesting, because it shows that already in his twenty-third year, Thutmose III's mortuary temple was complete and in use (see also Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 139).

<sup>j</sup>The name of the Amon Feast here followed, the order being different from that in the first two feasts.

Offerings for the Feasts of Victory

553. [My<sup>a</sup> majesty established] a great oblation for the "Feast of Victory," which my majesty made for the first time, consisting of bread, beer, bull-calves, bulls, fowl, antelopes, gazelles, ibexes, incense, wine, fruit, white bread, offerings of everything good <sup>5</sup>————.

Amon's Voyage to Luxor

554. [Year 23, second<sup>b</sup> month] of the first season, (day) 14, when the majesty of this august god proceeded, to make his voyage<sup>c</sup> in his southern Opet (Luxor); my majesty established for him a great oblation for this day at the entrance into Luxor, consisting of bread, bull-calves, bulls, fowl, incense, wine, <sup>6</sup>————<sup>d</sup> from the first of the victories which he (Amon) gave me, in order to fill his storehouse, [—] peasant-serfs, in order to make for him royal linen (šs), white (pk'-t-) linen, (šhr'-w-) linen, (wm'-t-) linen; — peasants performed the work of the fields, in order to make the harvest, to fill the storehouse of my father [Amon] <sup>7</sup>———— to the goodly way.

Gifts of Slaves

555. Statement of the Asiatics, male and female, the negroes and negresses, which my majesty gave to my father Amon, from the year 23 until the recording of this tablet upon this sanctuary:<sup>e</sup> 1,578 Syrians (H'-rw) <sup>8</sup>————.

<sup>a</sup>Having enumerated the three feasts, with their dates, he now proceeds to the celebration and the oblations to be offered.

<sup>b</sup>The numeral is partially broken out; but it can be clearly proven to be two. See Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 125 f. This date is very important, as it shows at what time Thutmose III was already in Thebes on his return from the first campaign, the length of which is thus determined. See the calendar of the campaign in § 409.

<sup>c</sup>This is the beautiful ceremony of the god's voyage in his sacred barge, called at Thebes "Userhetamon" (for a description of the barge made for this purpose by Ramses III, see IV, 209). It was probably on the above occasion that the officer Amenemhab officiated (see his inscription, § 809, ll. 33, 34). It was on the day of the return to Karnak from this voyage, called the "Day-of-Bringing-in-the-God," that the Second "Feast of Victory" began. It therefore continued for five days after the return, during which the Second Amon Feast also continued (see Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 126).

<sup>d</sup>The "[spoil] from the first, etc.," was probably mentioned as part of the oblation.

<sup>e</sup>The concluding words of the annals are: "from the year XXI[II] until the year [X]XXXII, when this tablet was recorded upon this sanctuary;" hence the year 42 was probably also the year when the feast inscription was recorded.

Gifts of Cattle

556. ——— of the south and north: 3 loan-cows of the cattle of Zahi; 1 loan-cow of the cattle of Kush; total, 4 loan-cows; in order to draw the milk thereof into jars of electrum each day, and to cause (it) to be offered [to] my father 9[Amon].

Gift of Three Cities

557. My majesty gave to him<sup>a</sup> three cities in Retenu the Upper: Nuges (<sup>2</sup>n-yw-g-s<sup>2</sup>) was the name of one, Yenoam (Y-nw-c<sup>2</sup> -mw) was the name of another, Herenkeru (Hw-r-n-k<sup>2</sup> -rw) was the name of another. The dues consisting of the <sup>b</sup>impost of the fiscal year,<sup>b</sup> the divine offerings, [of] my father Amon —.

Gifts of Precious Metals and Stones

558. <sup>10</sup>——— all [‘things’] of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite. My majesty presented to him gold, silver, lapis lazuli, malachite, copper, bronze, lead, colors, <sup>1</sup>emery,<sup>1</sup> in great quantity, in order to make every monument of my father, Amon. — <sup>11</sup>———.

Gifts of Poultry

559. My majesty formed for him flocks of geese to fill the (sacred) pool, for the offerings of every day. Behold, my majesty gave to him <sup>2</sup>c fattened geese each day, as fixed dues forever, for my father, Amon. — <sup>12</sup>——— [‘the former offering to Amon consisted’] of various loaves, 1,000.

Ancient Offerings Increased

560. My majesty commanded to multiply this offering of 1,000 various loaves after the arrival of my majesty from smiting Retenu on the first victorious expedition, in order to gain favor<sup>d</sup> in the great house (called): “Menkheperre<sup>e</sup> (Thutmose III)-is-Glorious-in-Monuments.” <sup>13</sup>——— various —; 632 — from the daily income of every day, as an increase of that which was formerly.

<sup>a</sup>Amon.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., “the work (impost) of the affairs of the year.”

<sup>c</sup>Brugsch, 3; photograph, 2.

<sup>d</sup>Of the god.

<sup>e</sup>This is the name of Thutmose III's Karnak halls; see § 599, note, and IV, 754, note.

Gifts of Lands

561. I took for him numerous fields, gardens, and plowed lands, of the choicest of the South and North,<sup>a</sup> to make fields, in order to offer him clean grain<sup>b</sup> — 14————.

Further Offerings

562. ——— yearly; consisting of loaves, bull-calves, bulls, fowl, incense, wine, fruit, every good thing of the dues of each year. My majesty established divine offerings, in order to gain the favor of (my) father, Harakhte, when he rises <sup>15</sup>———— my majesty [established for] him a divine offering of barley, in order to perform the ceremonies therewith, at the feast of the new moon, at the feast of the sixth day (of the month); and as a daily (income) of each day, according to that which was done in Heliopolis. Behold, my majesty found it very good to plow the barley in — — 16————.

Offerings for Obelisks

563. ——— divine offerings for four great obelisks<sup>c</sup> which my majesty made for the first time, for my father [Amon], consisting of various loaves, and 4 (ds-) jars of beer, which were for each one of these obelisks; 25 (loaves) of bread, 1 (ds-) jar of beer.

Offerings for Statues

564. My majesty added divine offerings for the statues<sup>d</sup> of 17———— the opening<sup>e</sup> of this portal.

Evening Offering

565. My majesty founded for him an evening offering of bread, beer, fowl, incense, wine, loaves, white loaves, offerings of every good thing each day. My majesty added for him increase of things in 18————.

<sup>a</sup>Sinuhe's land in Palestine is described in the same words (I, 496, l. 80).

<sup>b</sup>The gifts connected with the Southern Opet festival continue to this point. The gifts of slaves (ll. 7, 8) are brought down to the end of the campaigns (year 42), but he goes back again after that to the return from the first campaign, mentioning the three cities in Lebanon captured on that campaign (l. 9) and mentioning the return (l. 12).

<sup>c</sup>See §§ 623 ff.; also Legrain, Annales, V, which arrived too late for use here.

<sup>d</sup>In l. 27 it is written phonetically. These are the statues of the older Pharaohs, preserved in the temple (see § 604).

<sup>e</sup>Tph'it?

Feast of Peret-Min

566. My majesty founded an offering for the feast of the "Going-Forth-of-Min" consisting of oxen, fowl, incense, wine, loaves, everything good; 120 "heaps<sup>a</sup> of offerings supplied with everything;" for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of my majesty. I commanded the addition of 6 great jars (hbn' t) of wine <sup>19</sup>———— [each] year as an increase of that which was formerly.

A New Garden

567. My majesty made for him a garden for the first time, planted with every pleasant tree, in order to offer vegetables therefrom for divine offerings of every day, which my majesty founded anew as increase of that which was formerly <sup>20</sup>———— with maidens<sup>b</sup> of the whole land.

Wise Administration

568. Behold, my majesty made every monument, every law, (and) every regulation which I made, for my father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak, because I so well knew his fame. I was wise in his excellence, resting in the midst of the body;<sup>c</sup> while I knew <sup>21</sup>———— that which he commanded to do, of the things which he desired should be, of all things which his ka desired that I do them for him, according as he commanded. My heart led me, my hand performed (it) for my father, who fashioned me, performing every excellent thing for my father <sup>22</sup>[Amon] ————. My majesty found all excellent things, while enlarging monuments, as a record for the future; by enactments,<sup>d</sup> by purifying, by regulations, by supplying with offerings this house of my father, Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak; [when] passing by <sup>23</sup>———— his desire every day.

Feasts of the Seasons

569. Behold, my majesty supplied with offerings the feasts of the beginning of the seasons yearly, and of the appearance (of the god)

<sup>a</sup>These are the heaps so often seen in the reliefs. See I, 785 and note h.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "beauties" (nfr' wt).

<sup>c</sup>Meaning where the most secret affairs of the god were, as it is frequently said of the king, "he knows the bodies," or that which is in the bodies of men, that is, their thoughts.

<sup>d</sup>Or possibly: "by recording for the future in documents."

therein in the midst of the house of my father, Amon, presider over Karnak, after<sup>a</sup> my majesty found that offerings were made there, consisting of libation, incense, <sup>24</sup>———— the dues of each year.

Truth of the Record

570. I have not uttered exaggeration, in order to boast of that which I did, saying: "I have done something," although my majesty had not done it. I have not done (anything) to people, against which contradiction might be uttered. I have done this for my father <sup>25</sup>[Amon] ——— saying something which was not done; because he<sup>b</sup> knoweth heaven, and knoweth earth, he seeth the whole earth hourly. I swear<sup>c</sup> as Re loves me, as my father [Amon] praises me, as my nostrils are filled with satisfying life, I have done this — <sup>26</sup>————.

Instructions to Priests

571. ———<sup>d</sup> Be ye vigilant concerning your duty, be ye not careless concerning any of your rules; be ye pure, be ye clean concerning divine things, [take heed] concerning matters of transgression, guard your heart lest your speech [—], every man [looking to his own steps therein]. <sup>27</sup>———— to my statues, for the [well-being] of the monuments which I have made. Bring ye up for me that which came forth<sup>e</sup> before, for I made festive his house; put on the garments of my statues, consisting of (šs-) linen, for I filled the mortuary oblations of (p̄k' t-) linen — <sup>28</sup>———— offer ye to me of all fruit, for I consecrated a garden anew; give ye me — shoulders of beef, for I endowed the beginning of the seasons with bulls; fill ye for me the altar with milk, let incense be <sup>29</sup>———— tables of silver and gold —; give ye to my statues according as I supplied those who were before me;<sup>f</sup> bring forth my statues on the day when your hands row,<sup>g</sup> giving praise [to] my father.

<sup>a</sup>In addition to that which he found already being offered.

<sup>b</sup>This must be Amon, who, says the king, sees and knows everything and would detect a lie.

<sup>c</sup>Compare the oath on Hatshepsut's obelisk (§ 318).

<sup>d</sup>Compare similar instructions to the priests of Abydos (§§ 97 ff.). The lists which follow are the mortuary offerings for the king, to which he exhorts the priests.

<sup>e</sup>The offerings.

<sup>f</sup>The statues of the earlier kings, set up in the temple.

<sup>g</sup>In the periodic voyage of the god upon the Nile or sacred lake.

He will count it for the 'well-being' of that which I have made in —<sup>a</sup> <sup>30</sup>———— anew daily as an increase of that which was before: 3,305<sup>b</sup> various loaves of the divine offering; 132 (ds-) jars of beer; of grain, two white loaves; 2 nd<sup>30</sup> of (<sup>2</sup> h-) herb; 2 nd<sup>30</sup> of dates; — fattened (ht-c<sup>31</sup>-) fowl <sup>31</sup>———— many<sup>d</sup> (ht-c<sup>31</sup>-) fowl; 5 vesselfuls of incense;
 2 (mn-) jars of wine; 4 (pg-) vessels of honey; 2 (mn-) jars of '—'; 1
 (<sup>c</sup> h c-) jar of beer; 2 white loaves of dk, 15 white loaves in oblations; — roasts of fresh fat; <sup>32</sup>———— 2 —; 6 ibexes; 9 gazelles; 125 fattened (ht-c<sup>31</sup>-) fowl; 1,100 'mated' (ht-c<sup>31</sup>-) fowl; 258 flocks of (sd-) birds; 5,237 flocks of 'mated' birds; 1,440 (jars) of wine; incense.

Offerings for Four Obelisks

572. (For the) four obelisks: incense, 318 white loaves; — incense
<sup>33</sup>———— 104 heket of [in]cense, making 334 pd·t of incense; 21
 (mn-) jars of green incense; 5 heket of myrrh; 236 bull-cakes; 258 dressed-geese cakes; 24 obelisk-cakes;<sup>e</sup> 562 white-loaf cakes; <sup>34</sup>————.

573. Restoration<sup>f</sup> which the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Zeserkheperure, Setepnere (Harmhab) made, for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, that he might be granted life through him like Re, forever.

BIOGRAPHY OF AMENEMHAB<sup>g</sup>

574. This inscription is an account of the services and adventures of an officer named Amenemhab on the Asiatic

<sup>a</sup>Brusch's text stops here.

<sup>b</sup>These lists contain many uncertain things which require special investigation;
 the following version is merely given for the sake of completeness.

<sup>c</sup>Apparently an unknown measure of bulk (see also § 159, l. 37).

<sup>d</sup>There is a "two" after "fowl" which is not clear, possibly "pairs."

<sup>e</sup>These are cakes in the shape of the top of an obelisk; in the Berlin Kahun papyri occur pyramidion (bmbn) loaves of white bread. The other two varieties were doubtless also made in the shape indicated by the name.

<sup>f</sup>This refers to the re-insertion of Amon's name throughout the inscription by Harmhab, after its erasure by Amenhotep IV.

<sup>g</sup>Engraved upon the walls of his tomb in the necropolis of Thebes, which was noted by Champollion (Notices descriptives, I, 505, Tomb 12; hence not "discovered" by Ebers, as he stated (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 30, p. 391). Ebers, however, did discover and publish the text: first in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1873, 3-9 (corrections by Ebers and campaigns of Thutmose III (ll. 3-32), and his subsequent favor and service under Amenhotep II (§§ 807 ff., ll. 32-46). It forms a very important supplement to the Annals of Thutmose III, but unfortunately does not insert the dates of the campaigns nor follow a chronological order.

The old soldier seems to have narrated to some scribe, who recorded them, the more important incidents and adventures of his career as they occurred to him, without attempt at order, beyond the involuntary association of events that belong to the same campaign. This narrative he had engraved beside his own figure on the wall of his tomb, as he is represented standing in the presence of Amenhotep II, to whom this recital of his life is evidently directed.

575. Beginning with a battle in the Negeb (year 39), he proceeds to three battles in Naharin, and the capture of Senzar (year 33), followed by the capture of Kadesh (year 30). The name of the next country (—h<sup>2</sup>) is mutilated, and this is followed by a battle in Tikhsi (probably year 35), and the elephant hunt at Niy (year 33); while the whole series concludes, as it should, with the siege of Kadesh on the last campaign of Thutmose III in the year 42. Arranged in chronological order, Amenemhab records the following campaigns:

SIXTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 30—

Capture of Kadesh (§ 585).

Stern, ibid., 63, 64); again by Chabas, Mélanges égyptologiques, III, Pls. XVI-XVII (from Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, corrections by Stern, ibid., 1875, 174). Again by Ebers more accurately in Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 30, 391-416 and 3 plates; ibid., 31, 439 ff.; very incorrectly also by Virey, "Sept tombeaux Thebains de la XVIII<sup>e</sup> dynastie," in Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 238-40; corrections by Sjöberg, Sphinx, I, 18-20. See also Pichl, Inscriptions, I, CIX, F-CXIII, G, and Pls. CXXV, O-CXXVII, P and pp. 87-92. I am indebted to the kindness of Mr. Newberry for a careful scale copy of the inscription, which adds some new readings.

EIGHTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 33—

Capture of Senzar; three battles in Naharin (§§ 581-84, and 588), and elephant hunt at Niy (§ 588).

TENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 35—

Battle in Tikhsi (§ 587).

FOURTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 39—

Battle in the Negeb (§ 580).

SEVENTEENTH CAMPAIGN, YEAR 42—

Siege of Kadesh (§ 589).

Following the campaigning is a feast at Thebes, possibly that of the fourteenth of Pakhons, on Thutmose III's return from his first campaign (§ 550). The death of the old king is then narrated with the date, from which we may compute the exact length of his reign—fifty-three years, ten months, and twenty-six days.

576. This biography affords us fleeting glimpses of the arduous tasks which beset the remarkable campaigns of Thutmose III, of which the Annals offer us little or nothing. The first campaign in Naharin (year 33) brought three successive battles in which Amenemhab distinguished himself; of these the Annals mention only one, without referring to the place where it occurred.

577. These adventures of Amenemhab are, of course, typical of a host of others, which fell to the lot of the Egyptian soldier in Syria. Some of them found place in folk-tales, and one has survived in the story of the capture of Joppa by Thutiy, one of Thutmose III's generals,<sup>a</sup> whose reality is vouched for by his tomb and other contemporaneous monuments of his.<sup>a</sup> The manuscript of the story is about 200 years later.

---

<sup>a</sup>Part of the reverse (the first three pages) of the British Museum papyrus, known as Harris 500. Text first published by Maspero, Études égyptologiques, I, Pls. I-III, with transliteration and notes, pp. 53-66; it had already been translated by Goodwin, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, III, 340-48; then by Maspero, ibid., I, 53-66; paraphrase based on Maspero by Petrie, Egyptian Tales, II, 1-7.

578. Besides his biography, Amenemhab's tomb contained a series of scenes showing him in the exercise of certain of his functions as a deputy of the army, especially introducing the officers of the commissariat to the king to report (?) on the maintenance of the army.<sup>b</sup> His tomb also contains other references to his career, like those inserted among his titles:

Attendant of his lord on his expeditions in the countries of the south and north, not separated from the Lord of the Two Lands on the battlefield in the hour of repelling millions of men.<sup>c</sup>

He was evidently a favorite of Thutmose III, and may have owed his favor to his wife, who was the royal nurse, possibly of Thutmose III himself.

Introduction

579. The officer, Amenemhab; he says:

<sup>1</sup>"I was the very faithful one of the sovereign, L. P. H., the wise-hearted of the King of Upper Egypt, the excellent-hearted of the King of Lower Egypt. I followed <sup>2</sup>my lord on his expeditions in the northern and the southern country. He desired that I should be the companion of his feet, while he was <sup>3</sup>upon the battlefield<sup>d</sup> of his victories, while his valor fortified the heart."

<sup>a</sup>A list of them in Maspero, Études égyptologiques, I, 68 f. See also Devéria, Bibliothèque égyptologique, IV, 35 ff. The tomb is now unknown, but must have been known to the natives early in the last century, when it was plundered.

<sup>b</sup>This scene is repeated in the tomb of Pehsukher, whose office was similar to that of Amenemhab (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 289).

<sup>c</sup>Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 245.

<sup>d</sup>Restored from text in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1876, 100, l. 2. Piehl has preceded me in this restoration, ibid., 1885, 61, where the particle ty, "while," introducing a nominal clause, was not yet understood (it has nothing to do with mn, "remain").

Battle in Negeb

580. "I fought hand to hand in the land of <sup>4</sup>Negeb (N-g-b).<sup>a</sup> I brought off three men, Asiatics, as living prisoners."

Battle in Naharin

581. "When his majesty came to Naharin (N-h-r-n)<sup>b</sup> <sup>5</sup>I brought off three men from the fight there; I set them before thy majesty as living prisoners."

Battle in Wan

582. "Again I fought hand to hand (on) that expedition in the land of 'The-Height-of-Wan' (W-c-n)<sup>c</sup> on the west of Aleppo (H<sup>o</sup>-r<sup>o</sup>-bw). I brought off <sup>7</sup>13 Asiatics as living prisoners, 13 men; 70 living asses; 13 bronze 'spears';<sup>d</sup> the bronze was wrought with gold — 8—."

Battle of Carchemish

583. "Again I fought (on) that expedition in the land of Carchemish (K<sup>o</sup>-ry-k<sup>o</sup>-my-c-š<sup>o</sup>).<sup>e</sup> I brought off — 9— as living prisoners. I

<sup>a</sup>This is clearly the Hebrew Negeb="south country," the fourteenth campaign of the Annals was against the Bedwin (Shasu) of this region.

<sup>b</sup>The following three battles all took place on a campaign in Naharin, probably that of year 33 (§§ 476-87), as he later mentions another in Naharin, which would correspond with that of year 35.

<sup>c</sup>Identified by Müller (Asien und Europa, 259 f.), with the heights (Mons Casius) on the south shore of the seaward stretch of the Orontes by Antioch. But št ("height") does not mean "Ufer," and Mons Casius could have been much more easily identified by the scribe by mentioning the Orontes, rather than the distant Aleppo. Evidently some height not far from Aleppo is meant, for which Gebel Sim<sup>c</sup>an (2,700 feet high) answers admirably. It is but slightly north of west of Aleppo, but the Egyptian did not carry a compass, and any traveler of today would speak of it as west of Aleppo, and refer to his table of bearings for the exact direction. But there is a ruin by Dâna directly west of Aleppo, on a height of nearly 1,100 feet, which will do equally well.

<sup>d</sup>The rendering of Brugsch (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1873, 144): "13 Wurfspiesse von Eisen und mit Gold ausgelegt," is entirely unjustifiable. The material (hsmn) precedes as usual; then follows the object made of it, viz., ynb, which is some article of which each of the thirteen captured men carried one. Bronze helmets are mentioned in Annals (year 35, l. 41), and perhaps it is not an accident that "13 inlaid corselets and 13 bronze suits of armor" are also mentioned in the Naharin campaign of year 35, l. 41 (§ 501).

<sup>e</sup>This was on the northern march described in the Annals (§ 479, l. 18).

crossed over the water of Naharin (N-h-r-n), while they were in my hand, to <sup>a</sup>—<sup>10</sup>—; I [set] them before my lord. He rewarded me with a great reward; list thereof:<sup>b</sup> —<sup>11</sup>—.”

Battle in Senzar

584. “I beheld the royal victories of the King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life, in the country of Senzar (Sn-ḏ<sup>3</sup>-r<sup>3</sup>),<sup>c</sup> when he made a [great] sl[ughter] <sup>12</sup>[among] them. I fought hand to hand before the king, I brought off a hand there. He gave to me the gold of honor; list thereof: —<sup>13</sup>— two silver rings.”

Capture of Kadesh

585. “Again I beheld his bravery, while I was among his followers. [He] captured [the city of] <sup>14</sup>Kadesh (Kd-šw);<sup>d</sup> I was not absent from the place where he was; I brought off two men,<sup>e</sup> lords (m-r<sup>2</sup>-y-n<sup>2</sup>), as [living prisoners; I set them] <sup>15</sup>before the king, the Lord of the Two Lands, Thutmose (III), living forever. He gave to me gold because of bravery, before the whole people — — —; <sup>16</sup>list thereof: of the finest gold: a lion; 2 necklaces, 2 flies,<sup>f</sup> 4 arm rings.”

Campaign in Unknown Country

586. “I saw my lord in — — — <sup>17</sup>— — — in all his forms in the country of the ends<sup>g</sup> of [the earth] — — — <sup>18</sup>Ha — (H<sup>2</sup> —). Then I was raised to be the — — —<sup>1</sup> of the army, like — — .”

<sup>a</sup>Ahmose, son of Ebana, had a similar adventure, see § 11.

<sup>b</sup>Restored from l. 16.

<sup>c</sup>Zinzar of the Amarna Letters, it is the modern Kal<sup>c</sup> at Seidjar on the Orontes below Hamath; see Meyer (Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 71), Müller (Asien und Europa, 185, n. 3), and Maspero (Struggle of the Nations, 264). It was taken in the year 33, on the Naharin campaign.

<sup>d</sup>This occurred in the year 30 (see Annals, § 465).

<sup>e</sup>Apposition with “lords.”

<sup>f</sup>See Breasted, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, March, 1900, 7 f. Ebers' corrected text (in Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 30, Taf. II, l. 16) has <sup>c</sup>dj, an error for <sup>c</sup>ff, as in l. 21.

<sup>g</sup>See Annals, year 35, l. 38 (§ 498), and “Hymn of Victory” (§ 661, l. 20). This was probably on the march from the coast to Naharin, on the second campaign against that country.

Battle in Tikhsi

587. <sup>19</sup>“Again I beheld his victory in the country of Tikhsi (Ty-h-sy) the wretched, in the city of Mero— (Mr-yw —). <sup>20</sup>I fought hand to hand therein before the king. I brought off Asiatics, 3 men, as living prisoners. <sup>21</sup>Then my lord gave to me the gold of honor; list thereof: 2 golden necklaces, 4 arm rings, 2 flies, a lion, a female slave, and a male slave.”

Elephant Hunt in Niy

588. <sup>22</sup>“Again [I beheld] another excellent deed which the Lord of the Two Lands did in Niy (Nyy). He hunted 120 elephants, for the sake of their tusks and <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>. <sup>23</sup>I engaged the largest which was among them, which fought against his majesty; I cut off his hand<sup>a</sup> while he was alive <sup>24</sup>[before] his majesty, while I stood in the water between two rocks.<sup>b</sup> Then my lord rewarded me with gold; <sup>25</sup>[he] gave — — and 3 changes of clothing.”

Siege of Kadesh

589. “The prince of Kadesh<sup>c</sup> sent forth a mare<sup>d</sup> <sup>26</sup>before [the army]; in order to — <sup>1</sup>them,<sup>1</sup> she entered among the army. I pursued after her <sup>27</sup>on foot, with my sword, and I ripped open her belly; I cut off her tail, I set <sup>28</sup>it before<sup>e</sup> the king; while there was thanksgiving to god for it!<sup>f</sup> He gave (me) joy, it filled my body, (<sup>1</sup>with<sup>1</sup>) rejoicing, he ended my limbs.”

Assault on Kadesh

590. <sup>29</sup>“His majesty sent forth every valiant man of his army, in order to pierce the wall for the first time, which Kadesh had made.

<sup>a</sup>Doubtless the trunk is meant.

<sup>b</sup>He was perhaps pursued by the wounded elephant, and took refuge between the rocks.

<sup>c</sup>On the last campaign of Thutmose III in year 42 (§ 531) and the last mentioned by Amenemhab.

<sup>d</sup>For the purpose of exciting the stallions of the Egyptian chariotry and thus confusing their line of battle; but Amenemhab leaps down from his chariot, and, pursuing her “on foot,” slays her. See Borchardt, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 31, 62 f.

<sup>e</sup>The preposition is incomplete.

<sup>f</sup>The phrase occurs not infrequently, denoting the thanks of a king for the faithfulness of a servant; e. g., Amenemhet (I, 520, l. 14) The impersonal form merely indicates that it was the king who gave thanks.

I <sup>30</sup>was the one who pierced it, being the first of all the valiant; no other before me did (it). I went forth, I brought off <sup>31</sup>2 men,<sup>a</sup> (m-r - y-n?) lords, as living prisoners. Again my lord rewarded me because of it, with <sup>32</sup>every good thing for satisfying the heart, of the king's-presence."

Feast at Thebes

591. "I made this capture while [I] was an officer of the navy ———
<sup>33</sup>I was the commander of [—] [his vessel] — I was the chief of his associates <sup>34</sup>on the voyage — — — at his beautiful Feast<sup>b</sup> of Opet, when all the land was in acclamation."

Death of Thutmose III

592. <sup>35</sup>"Lo, the king completed his lifetime of many years, splendid in valor, in [migh]t, <sup>36</sup>and in triumph; from year 1 to year 54, third month of the second season, the last day<sup>c</sup> (of the month) under [the majesty of] <sup>37</sup>King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), triumphant. He mounted to heaven, [he] <sup>d</sup>joined the sun; the divine limbs mingling with him who begat him."

[Concluded §§ 807-809]

FRAGMENTS OF KARNAK PYLON VII<sup>e</sup>

593. From the data thus far given by Legrain, it is impossible to put together all the fragments heretofore found;

<sup>a</sup>Apposition.

<sup>b</sup>This is perhaps the celebration of the Feast of Southern Opet on the fourteenth of Paophi, after the return from the first campaign (§ 550), which Amenemhab here relates after the campaigns exactly as the inscription of Feasts and Offerings continues the Annals.

<sup>c</sup>That is the thirtieth of the seventh month (Phamenoth); as he was crowned on the fourth of the ninth month (Pakhons), he lacked one month and four days of concluding his fifty-fourth year, dying on the seventeenth of March, while his fifty-fourth year would have been completed on the nineteenth of the following April (his coronation day coming over thirteen days earlier than when he was crowned fifty-four years earlier). If born before his father's accession, as seems probable, he was at least eighty-four years old at his death.

<sup>d</sup>This phrase is rendered by Brugsch (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1873, 134): "es ging unter die Sonnenscheibe," for which he gives excellent reasons; but in Ineni (§ 46, l. 4), the pronoun "he" is expressed, rendering B's translation impossible. See also IV, 988 E and 988 G.

<sup>e</sup>Fragments of a great granite doorway some forty feet high through the center of Pylon VII (Baedeker's plan), the northernmost of the southern pylons, were but even from the fragments the great historical value of the monument is evident. It contained a record of Thutmose III's military career as an explanation of the sources of the costly materials used on this pylon and other good works in the Karnak temple. It begins with his coronation, passes to the reign of Thutmose II, and furnishes our most important proof of Thutmose III's coregency with Thutmose II,<sup>a</sup> whom, as his predecessor, he officially calls his "father," as was customary on the monuments in referring to deceased Pharaohs. The record then proceeds to the first campaign, the battle of Megiddo, the siege of Megiddo, its capture, the prisoners, and the disposal of the prisoners and plunder in Karnak. Whether the succeeding campaigns were now taken up is uncertain. In any case, the record now included some account of the important eighth campaign, of the year 33, when Thutmose III first conquered the Euphrates country.

With some omissions of mutilated portions, necessitated by the exceedingly fragmentary character of some of the material, the fragments are as follows:

First Fragment<sup>b</sup>

594. Year 1, first month of the third season (ninth month), the fourth day,<sup>c</sup> occurred the coronation of the king's-son ———.

Second Fragment<sup>d</sup>

595. ———<sup>e</sup> before me into the —. There was assigned to me the sovereignty of the Two Lands upon the throne of Keb, the office found by Legrain in September-October, 1901, and published by him in the Annales du Service, II, 272-79, IV, Pl. III. The inscription is in vertical lines, of which there were at least fourteen, computed by Legrain to have had a combined length (if set end to end) of 200 meters. Of all this the surviving fragments contain but a small fraction.

<sup>a</sup>A lintel block, found by Petrie at Abydos in 1902 (Abydos, I, Pl. LXI, 2; LXIV, and p. 30), shows their two names together, as having been coregent during work on the Eighteenth Dynasty Abydos temple.

<sup>b</sup>Legrain's E. 279.

<sup>c</sup>See Annals, § 417.

<sup>d</sup>Legrain's combination of several fragments, 276, 277.

of Khepri by the side of my father, the Good God, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okhepernere (Thutmose II), given life forever . . . . .
4. . . . .

Spoil of First Campaign

596. His majesty commanded to build stone ——— 5— it with electrum. The divine shadow was the likeness of a ram, whose name was made: “Menkheperre — — Monuments.” It is the favorite place of the lord of the gods. . . . . All its vessels were of electrum, gold, [every] costly stone, ——— 6 [‘‘captured when his majesty went to<sup>1</sup>] Retenu, to repel the northern countries, on his first victorious campaign, which Amon decreed to him. . . . . 7— put in front of their wall, surrounding it with a firm rampart. My majesty besieged it<sup>a</sup> like a terrible lion. As for him who [‘‘came’] upon it by night, ——— 8— . Lo, my majesty carried off the wives of that vanquished one, together with [‘‘his’] children, and the wives of the chiefs who were [there, together with their] children. My majesty placed these women ——— 9— the name of another. Their impost was brought into the temple of my father, Amon, as the dues of Retenu — — — — these wives of the vanquished chief of Kadesh ——— 10— of Egypt, extending the boundaries, forever. — — — My majesty made this equipment to overlay — — [a barge] of the “Beginning-of-the-River” (named): “Userhet,”<sup>b</sup> hewn [of cedar] ——— 11. . . . . 12— with all [products] of the northern countries, when my majesty returned from these countries.

Third Fragment<sup>c</sup>

597. ——— their horses ——— the great chiefs of this country who came to fight ——— their — into the temple of Amon. Then my majesty commanded ——— my [father] Amon dues as yearly impost. Lo, ——— Lo, my majesty furnished an example of might,

<sup>a</sup>Meaning, of course, Megiddo; the preceding being a reference to his siege works; compare Annals, § 433, ll. 9-11.

<sup>b</sup>For “Userhetamon.” Of course, we are to read h 3 t instead of Legrain’s c t; see Lateran Obelisk (§§ 838).

<sup>c</sup>Legrain’s, I, 274. According to Legrain, these sections of seven lines belong to ll. 8-14, presumably referring to his numbering of the second fragment; but they are too far separated from that fragment to be here placed in connection with it. They evidently refer to the king’s prowess in some battle.

with my own sword, in the midst of ——— Bekhu (Bhw).<sup>a</sup> None stood before [me] ——— anew for my father, Amon.

Fourth Fragment<sup>b</sup>

598. ——— of Ketne (Kd-n) on the eighth victorious campaign, to repel ———.<sup>c</sup>

GREAT KARNAK BUILDING INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

599. This inscription contained the record of Thutmose III's buildings, erected after the beginning of his wars.<sup>e</sup> In particular, it recounts the erection of one of his extensive additions to the east end of the great Karnak temple. The inscription is unfortunately badly mutilated, only the introductory lines being preserved, but we see that it recorded the erection of Thutmose III's splendid colonnaded halls and sanctuary, which form the eastern extension of the Karnak temple;<sup>f</sup> for it was a building so extensive that an old shrine of Nun had to be removed farther eastward.

600. There was a reason, hitherto overlooked, for the erection of these eastern halls by Thutmose III, which

<sup>a</sup>With a foreign determinative.

<sup>b</sup>Legrain's G, 279.

<sup>c</sup>There are two more lines, of which the first seems to contain some reference to making bows.

<sup>d</sup>A large granite stela, found by Mariette in the great Karnak temple, now in Cairo; fragments of only seventeen lines are preserved; text: Mariette, Karnak, 12.

<sup>e</sup>The record of his Theban buildings before his wars is contained in the great coronation inscription (§§ 131 ff.). Of his buildings elsewhere, he has left but slight record: a fragmentary dedication at El Kab (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 37); a similar fragment at Erment (ibid., IV, 1); and a record of his share in the Pasht speos at Benihasan (Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 149), which is chiefly of religious character. Further building records also in §§ 609-22; 637-43.

<sup>f</sup>According to an altar found at Karnak, this building was called: "Menkheperre-is-Glorious-in-Monuments" (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1870, 137). An altar with the same inscription was reported at Salonichi (ibid., 1868, 78 ff.), and is possibly identical with the first. See also § 560 for the only other occurrence of the name in Thutmose III's time. This name of Thutmose III's sanctuary was still in use in the reign of Takelot II, 650 years later (IV, 753).

must be noted here. The colonnaded hall built by Thutmose I between his two pylons (IV and V) formed the entrance-hall to the Karnak temple, and at this time was the largest hall in the building, the only one sufficiently large for a procession of the god, such as that which took place there when Thutmose III was installed as king by the priests. Now, this hall had been rendered unfit for use by Hatshepsut's strange insertion of her obelisks there (§ 304); it now stood roofless, with a small group of six columns at its northern end. Of these, four were the original cedar columns of Thutmose I, which Thutmose III now renews, recording the renewal on one of them, as follows:<sup>a</sup>

601. <sup>1</sup>He (Thutmose III) made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, erecting for him [4 columns] of sandstone set up<sup>b</sup> [in] the hypostyle, as [a renewal of that which<sup>1</sup>] his [father had made<sup>1</sup>], the Good God, Lord of Offering (viz., Thutmose I), shaped of cedar.<sup>c</sup> My majesty [added<sup>1</sup>]<sup>d</sup> 4 columns to the two columns<sup>e</sup> in the north side, together 6; wrought with —, established with — — <sup>2</sup>and that which was brought because of the fame of my majesty, being impost of all countries, which my father, Amon-Re, assigned to me, shaped<sup>f</sup> of sandstone. The height thereof was made 30 cubits,<sup>g</sup> on both sides of the great august portal,<sup>h</sup> — — throughout. They illuminated Karnak

<sup>a</sup>Published by Piehl, Actes du 6<sup>me</sup> congrès international des orientalistes tenu en 1883 à Leide, IV<sup>me</sup> partie, section 3, pp. 203-19. The text is badly broken, and unessential fragments have been omitted.

<sup>b</sup>Read: smn.

<sup>c</sup>This reference is the first mention of wooden columns in an Egyptian temple, and shows that Thutmose I built his hall with cedar columns. (See my New Chapter, 31, note b).

<sup>d</sup>Piehl.

<sup>e</sup>That is, the two columns of stone already inserted by Thutmose I (§ 100 and note).

<sup>f</sup>Three passive participles agree with "4 columns," viz., "wrought," "established," and "shaped." This mention of the material is in contrast with "shaped of cedar" (l. 1), referring to the wooden predecessors of the four new stone-columns.

<sup>g</sup>Over fifty-one feet.

<sup>h</sup>Northern portal; see plan, New Chapter, 13.

like — — — of sandstone, painted with figures of my father Amon, together with figures of my majesty, and figures of my father, the Good God (viz., Thutmose I). Behold, as for that which was found<sup>a</sup> going to ruin among them, my majesty established it with sandstone, in order that this temple might be established — <sup>3</sup>— like the heavens, abiding upon their four pillars, as a monument, great, excellent and useful for the lord of eternity; of granite, ivory, of sandstone, — — — silver, of the Beautiful-faced (Ptah). I swear as [Re] loves me, [as my father, Amon, favors me,<sup>b</sup> I made it] anew in the north side, being an increase of that which my father had made.

602. Thus the north end of the hall, the end where Thutmose III had been stationed when he was proclaimed king, was repaired by him, but the south end was still without columns and roofless, and the obelisk-bases had usurped the room of eight columns, over a third of the entire colonnade. The hall could not be made fit for great ceremonies, with the obelisks preventing the replacement of over a third of the roof. Thutmose III therefore built a masonry sheathing around each of the obelisks, covering the inscriptions of Hatshepsut, and desisted<sup>c</sup> from any further attempt to restore the hall where he had been raised to the throne. But as such a great ceremonial hypostyle was of course indispensable, he built the splendid colonnaded halls still standing at the other or east end of the temple. On his return from the second<sup>d</sup> campaign, in the year 24, the building was begun, and on the thirtieth of Mekhir, that is, in the latter part of February, some two months before his departure for Syria on the third campaign, the brilliant

<sup>a</sup>Read: gmy'it?

<sup>b</sup>Restored from the common form of royal oath, e. g., Hatshepsut's obelisk inscription, § 318, l. 2.

<sup>c</sup>This is clear from the fact that his son Amenhotep II, erected the columns of the south end (§ 805).

<sup>d</sup>Not the first campaign, as I have incorrectly stated in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 61.

celebration of the foundation ceremonies took place. On his return from the third campaign, in the year 25, the building was sufficiently far advanced to record on the walls of one of its chambers, the plants and flowers which he brought from Syria<sup>a</sup> in that year (§§ 450 f.).

603. The architraves of the building bear the following dedications:<sup>b</sup>

<sup>c</sup>He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, erecting for him an august central hypostyle<sup>d</sup> anew, of fine white sandstone (variant, fine limestone of Ayan).

Another form of this dedication is an epitheton attached to Thutmose III's name:

Establishing the house of his father, Amon-Re, of fine white limestone of Ayan.

604. Another dedication designates the hall<sup>e</sup> in the temple which was set apart by Thutmose III for the mortuary service of his ancestors. It is as follows:

f. . . . . making for them a great dwelling of myriads of years, anew<sup>g</sup> of fine limestone of Ayan, shining like the horizon of heaven, established as an eternal work. His majesty commanded to record the names of his fathers, to increase their offerings, and to fashion statues [— —]<sup>h</sup> to establish for them divine offerings anew, as increase of [what was formerly].

605. In one of the chambers to which this hall gave access, Thutmose had recorded on the walls a list<sup>i</sup> of the <sup>a</sup>This is the earliest extract from his annals; the extracts around the sanctuary were, of course, made after the conclusion of his campaigns.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 31; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 159 f., 162; and Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1313.

<sup>c</sup>Preceded by the titulary of Thutmose III.

<sup>d</sup>Hry' t-yb.

<sup>e</sup>Z in Mariette's Plan (Karnak, Pl. V).

<sup>f</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1313; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 168; Mariette, Karnak, 32, h; titulary and usual introduction are omitted.

<sup>g</sup>Or: "for the first time."

<sup>h</sup>"Of their bodies?"

<sup>i</sup>Removed by Prisse to Paris, where it now is, in the Bibliothèque Nationale. This is the famous Karnak list of kings. See I, p. 197, note a.

Pharaohs, his ancestors who were worshiped in this temple, and whose statues were set up in it. It is to this list that the dedication inscription refers.

This ancestral character of the temple is also referred to in another inscription<sup>a</sup> of Thutmose III, which designates the temple as “a monument for his father, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Thutmose I, and a monument of his fathers, the kings of Upper and Lower Egypt.”

The architect in charge of these great additions was the first prophet of Amon, Menkheperreseneb, who briefly recounts his connection with them in his tomb inscriptions (§§ 772 ff.).

The great building inscription on our granite stela is as follows:

The Oracle

606. ¹ . . . . .<sup>b</sup> The king himself commanded to put in ²writing, according to the statement of the oracle,<sup>c</sup> to execute monuments before those who are on earth —. My majesty desired to make a monument to my father, Amon-Re, in Karnak, erecting a dwelling, beautifying the horizon, adorning for him Khaftet-hir-nebes, the favorite place of my father ³from the beginning, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes. I made it for him upon this block of enduring stone,<sup>d</sup> exalting and magnifying greatly, since — — — water to the shrine<sup>e</sup> of Nun, on arriving at his seasons.

Old Buildings Removed

607. I built it for him according to (his) desire, I satisfied him by that which I made for him (as) at first, building ⁴a shrine at the east of

<sup>a</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1315.

<sup>b</sup>The usual titulary of Thutmose III complete.

<sup>c</sup>This is doubtless the same as the oracle in the Punt inscriptions (§ 285, l. 5, nd·t-r ²) commanding the expedition. So also Thutmose III is building in response to an oracle.

<sup>d</sup>Mariette states that this tablet is of “granite gris” (Mariette, Karnak, Texte, 47); so that rwd·t cannot mean “sandstone” here.

<sup>e</sup>As Brugsch has supposed (Egypt under the Pharaohs, p. 180), this temple, or shrine of Nun, was in the way of enlarging the Amon-temple. It seems, therefore, to have been taken down and rebuilt farther eastward.

this temple. Behold, my majesty found the encircling wall of mud brick, — — [I removed the wall of] mud [brick,] in order to extend <sup>a</sup>this temple.<sup>a</sup> I cleansed it, I overthrew its ruinous (parts), and removed the inclosure, which was by its side, which went up <sup>s</sup>[to] the house. I built this place where the encircling wall was, in order to erect this monument upon it — — — — Karnak. I made (it) anew,<sup>b</sup> I fulfilled that which was prescribed, I did not appropriate the monument of another. My majesty spake this in truth for the information of <sup>6</sup>every one, my great abomination is to speak lies, there is no fiction in — — — — really. I know that he is pleased therewith.<sup>c</sup>

Foundation Ceremonies

608. My majesty ordered that the <sup>d</sup>foundation ceremony<sup>d</sup> should be prepared [at the approach of] the day of the Feast of the New Moon,<sup>e</sup> <sup>7</sup>to extend the measuring-line upon this monument. In the year 24, second month of the second season, the last day (of the month), on the day of the tenth feast of Amon in —————<sup>f</sup> the god rested (on) his great throne. After this, I proceeded [after] (my) father, <sup>8</sup>Amon; the god proceeded at his going to celebrate this his beautiful feast. The majesty of this god marveled —————;<sup>g</sup> this god [assum]ed the station [for] the extension of the [measuring-line]. He set his majesty before him at this monument, which his majesty had exacted. <sup>9</sup>The majesty of this god rejoiced in this monument —————<sup>f</sup> [the majesty] of this god proceeded; the beautiful feast was celebrated [for] my lord. Then I went to do the extending of the measuring-line upon that which —————<sup>h</sup> <sup>10</sup>before him. He led <sup>i</sup>[ — — — ]<sup>i</sup> the first feast of extending the line. Behold, the majesty of this revered god desired to do the extending of the line himself <sup>11</sup>—————<sup>j</sup> [ ————— ]<sup>k</sup> <sup>12</sup>————— all that he made.

<sup>a</sup>By a slight emendation of the text.

<sup>b</sup>Or: "for the first time."

<sup>c</sup>Viz., with the truth; a common idea.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "the line extension," as in l. 7, following.

<sup>e</sup>See Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1290 f.).

<sup>f</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>g</sup>Less than one-third line.

<sup>h</sup>Over one-half line. The remaining short ends of eight lines still have to do with this building, but offer nothing decisive by which to identify it.

<sup>i</sup>Partially broken.

<sup>j</sup>Nearly two-thirds line.

<sup>k</sup>See Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1291); I do not understand the passage, and his explanation does not seem to me probable.

His majesty rejoiced exceedingly when he saw the great marvels which his father [Amon] had performed for him. <sup>13</sup>————<sup>a</sup> My heart dilated at every beautiful approach to begin this monument, enduring <sup>14</sup>————<sup>b</sup> all the names of the great gods who are in Karnak and of the gods and goddesses <sup>15</sup>————<sup>a</sup> All the people made jubilee. After this <sup>16</sup>————<sup>c</sup> electrum, which [my majesty] made for him <sup>17</sup>————<sup>d</sup>

BUILDING INSCRIPTION OF THE KARNAK PTAH-TEMPLE<sup>e</sup>

609. This inscription records how Thutmose III found the Ptah-temple, just north of the great hypostyle in Karnak, built of brick, with wooden columns and doorposts, falling to ruin. The occasion of rebuilding, or at least of new offerings, was the return from the first campaign, and the inscription contains interesting references (§ 616) to the investment and capture of Megiddo on that campaign. From the plunder thus obtained the temple was also newly and richly furnished. As this temple was one of the stopping-places of Amon, when his processions moved out from the Karnak temple, on all feast days, offerings are provided for Amon on such occasions (§§ 615, 617). At such times also the lay priesthood was to receive an offering, as well as the royal statue which was carried in procession (§ 618); and the usual daily offering was made to Ptah (§ 619), increased by certain new offerings now established for the first time

<sup>a</sup>Over two-thirds line.

<sup>b</sup>About three-fourths line.

<sup>c</sup>About four-fifths line.

<sup>d</sup>The remainder of the tablet must have contained at least as many more lines as the above.

<sup>e</sup>Large granite stela 1.50 m. high, 0.74 m. wide, and 0.32 m. thick, found in the Ptah-temple at Thebes; now in Cairo, thus far without number. It was published and translated by Maspero, Comptes rendus de l'académie des inscriptions et belles-lettres, 1900, Tome I, 113-23, with facsimile plate; and again by Legrain, Annales, III, 107-11. I had also a copy of the original, kindly loaned me by Schaefer.

(§ 620). These were further increased on the king's return from a subsequent campaign late in September (§ 621). With offerings for Mut-Hathor (§ 622), the inscription closes.

These offerings are all "for the sake of life, prosperity, and health" of the Pharaoh; that is, they are the official sacrifices in his behalf, which were begun as soon as a king was crowned (cf. § 57).

610. The stela was badly defaced, when the persecution of Ikhnaton caused the chiseling out of the entire relief and every occurrence of the names of other gods. This defacement is important as showing that the persecution of Ikhnaton was not confined to Amon. The restorers of Seti I at Thebes were so accustomed to inserting the name of Amon that they have here inserted it where the titles clearly show that Ptah was original.

611. The dedication inscription on the wall of the Ptah-temple also attributes the building to Thutmose III, of whom it says:<sup>a</sup>

[He made (it) as his monument]<sup>b</sup> for his father, Ptah, the beautiful of face, lord of "Life of the Two Lands," presiding over the great seat; erecting for him the house of Ptah anew [of] fine white sandstone, doors of new cedar of the best of the terraces. It is more beautiful than it was before. Lo, my majesty found this house of brick — — — of the ancestors. His majesty commanded to make for him this temple of sandstone, established as an eternal work, made to flourish, an abiding monument — —,<sup>c</sup> which the Son of Re, Thutmose (III), makes for him.

612. Our stela inscription is surmounted by a relief,<sup>d</sup> down the middle of which is the following record of Seti I's restoration:

<sup>a</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1188=Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 7=Legrain, Annales, III, 98, 99.

<sup>b</sup>The restoration in Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, is not correct; and that of Legrain is impossible.

<sup>c</sup>Name of Ptah erased by Ikhnaton; see Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 8.

<sup>d</sup>This entire relief was chiseled out by Ikhnaton.

Restoration of the monument, which King Menmare (Seti I) made, in the house of his father, Ptah.

On the right, Thutmose III offers wine to Ptah. Behind the king is the divine wife (hm·t ntr) Sityoh (S<sup>ḥ</sup>·t y<sup>c</sup> h),<sup>a</sup> offering ointment. On the left, before the same god, Thutmose III, offering a libation of water, is followed by the same princess,<sup>b</sup> again offering ointment.

The inscription below the relief is as follows:

Introduction

613. <sup>1</sup>Live Horus . . . . . Thutmose III, beloved of Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, in Thebes, given life forever.

Building the New Temple

614. <sup>2</sup>My<sup>c</sup> majesty commands that there be built the temple of Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, in Thebes, which is a station (w<sup>ḥ</sup>·t) of my father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, wherein he [—]<sup>d</sup> on the day of "Bringing-in-the-God," and all his feasts <sup>3</sup>during the year, when he proceeds to the treasury of the south (tp rsy). Lo, my majesty found this temple built of brick and wooden columns,<sup>e</sup> and its doorway of wood, beginning to go to ruin. <sup>4</sup>My majesty commands to stretch the cord upon this temple anew, erected of fine white sandstone, and the walls around it<sup>f</sup> of brick, as a work enduring for eternity. <sup>5</sup>My majesty erected for it doors of new cedar of the best of the terraces, mounted with Asiatic copper, <sup>1</sup>corresponding to<sup>1</sup> (h/t) the house of Ptah anew, in the name of my majesty. <sup>6</sup>Never was done for him the like, before my majesty.

New Equipment of the Temple

615. My majesty made him rich, and I made him greater than before. I overlaid for him his great seat with electrum of the best of <sup>a</sup>The name is perhaps wrongly restored, and Maspero affirms he has seen traces of the name Merytre; but of this Schaefer saw nothing.

<sup>b</sup>Her name is here original.

<sup>c</sup>The text has a Horus-hawk on the standard, used for the first person when the king speaks, in the rest of the inscription.

<sup>d</sup>We expect some verb like "rests" or "turns aside," but the text shows only the verb "give" and a very small lacuna.

<sup>e</sup>On wooden columns in a temple, see § 100.

<sup>f</sup>That is, the walls of the temple inclosure.

the countries. <sup>7</sup>All vessels were of gold and silver, and every splendid, costly stone, clothing of fine linen, white linen, ointments of divine ingredients, to perform his pleasing ceremonies at the feasts of <sup>8</sup>the beginnings of the seasons, which occur in this temple, when my majesty caused him to proceed, to assume his throne.

Offerings on Return from First Campaign

616. I filled his temple with every good thing, with oxen, geese, incense, wine, offerings of <sup>9</sup>all sorts of fruit, at the return of my majesty from (hr) the country of Retenu (Rtnw), on the first victorious campaign, which<sup>a</sup> my father, Amon, gave to me, when he gave to me all the allied countries of Zahi<sup>b</sup> (D<sup>3</sup>-hy), <sup>10</sup>shut up in one city. The fear of my majesty entered their hearts, (they) fell,<sup>c</sup> (they) slunk back; when I reached them, there was not one left <sup>11</sup>who stirred (wtwt) among them. I snared them in one city, I built around them with a rampart of thick wall, to —<sup>d</sup> their nostrils of the breath of life, by the fame of <sup>12</sup>my father, Amon, who guides me into a prosperous way by all his good designs, which he has wrought for my majesty. He has made great the victories of my majesty above (those of) any king who has been before.

New Offerings for Amon

617. <sup>13</sup>My majesty commanded that his altar should be supplied with every good thing. My majesty commanded that offerings be added anew for my father, Amon, in Karnak, <sup>14</sup>when he rested there: <sup>12</sup> <sup>e</sup>“heaps of offerings<sup>e</sup> supplied with everything,” for the day of “Bringing-in-the-God” and every feast of Amon, being<sup>f</sup> an increase of what was before, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of my majesty —<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>This relative clause (rdyn ny yt'y) is common. Maspero's rendering, “Je fis en effet ces dons à mon père, etc.,” is possible only by overlooking one of the n's.

<sup>b</sup>This shows the wide extent of Zahi, evidently far beyond the limits of Phoenicia.

<sup>c</sup>The text has been restored here, and may be corrupt; “fell” (hr) may be the particle “then, so.”

<sup>d</sup>Some verb like “deprive.”

<sup>e</sup>This is a cultus term for a kind of oblation. See § 566.

<sup>f</sup>Emend after l. 19.

<sup>g</sup>Amon is here wrongly restored in an erasure extending over from the next line. The ancient restoration “my majesty” (hn-y) is quite right, as is shown by l. 19; Maspero (Comptes rendus, 1900, I, 115) corrects the restoration, and appeals to l. 19 as supporting his correction; but his quotation of l. 19 overlooks hn.

Offerings for the Priesthood and Royal Statue

618. Now, <sup>15</sup>when the majesty of this august god is satisfied with his offering (yh' t), let one cause a "heap of offerings, supplied with everything" to be issued to the lay priests of the temple of my father, Amon, in Karnak; <sup>16</sup>and 6 "heaps of offerings, supplied with everything"<sup>a</sup> and with bread of<sup>b</sup> the "Coming Forth" (to be issued) before the statue of millions of years of my majesty, which follows to this temple, which is in the domain of the majesty of <sup>17</sup>this august god, for the sake of this offering, <sup>c</sup>the name of which is: "Menkheperre-is-Great-in-Offerings."

Offerings for Ptah

619. Now, when this statue is satisfied with this offering, there shall be issued for the temple of <sup>18</sup>Ptah, lord of truth, South-of-His-Wall, in Thebes, according to the measure of the customary<sup>d</sup> offering, which is in this temple.

New Offerings for Ptah

620. My majesty has moreover commanded to found divine offerings anew for my father, <sup>19e</sup>Ptah-South-of-His-Wall in Thebes, consisting of 60 various loaves, 2 jars (ds) of beer, — — vegetables, bread of the daily offering of every day, as an increase of that which was before, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of my majesty.

<sup>20</sup>Now, when the god is satisfied with his offerings, let this [offering] be placed before [this] statue of my majesty, when the lay priesthood of the temple of Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, in Thebes, go forth. My majesty [commands]<sup>f</sup> <sup>21</sup>to have executed every contract of the court, for his father, Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, in Thebes ——— Amon in Karnak.

<sup>a</sup>This is interpreting the loaf as determinative of the whole group; it is possible to separate it, as Maspero does, and read "six loaves from the bread of, etc."

<sup>b</sup>Or: "for the Coming Forth;" in which case the parenthesis must be inserted after "bread," thus: ". . . bread (to be issued) for the Coming Forth, etc."

<sup>c</sup>This relative clause, as the gender shows, does not belong to "offering," but to "temple!" The order of words above is as in the original, which is very confused. Such royal statues are depicted in reliefs "following" in procession to the temple.

<sup>d</sup>For another example of this use of this word (mit), see § 798; and the Treaty, III, § 377, l. 14.

<sup>e</sup>The restorer has absurdly inserted Amon here before Ptah!

<sup>f</sup>The restoration has probably omitted this word.

Further Addition to Ptah's Offerings

621. First (month) of the first season (first month), twenty-sixth day.<sup>a</sup> My majesty hath founded for him: <sup>22</sup>a bull, —<sup>b</sup> jars (mnw) of wine, 2 geese, 4 great ᵀ—, 5 measures (ḏny' t) of fruit, grain for 6 white loaves, 2 [bundles of vegetables],<sup>c</sup> 20 (t' b-) jars and 10 (ds-) jars of beer, 5 table fowl, <sup>23</sup>200 various loaves of the divine offerings from the house (pr) of Amon, 4 measures of incense, — cakes, 20 white loaves, <sup>d</sup>for the sake of<sup>d</sup> the life, prosperity, and health of Pharaoh, fixed as annual dues, burned in the presence of this god <sup>24</sup>every day.

Offerings for Mut-Hathor

622. My [majesty commands] to have executed every contract of the court for Mut-Hathor, mistress of Thebes, on the day of the "Altar-of-the-Feast," which takes place<sup>e</sup> on the last day of the third month of the third season (eleventh month). <sup>25</sup>[My majesty] has [founded ᵀdivine offerings of] — jars of wine, 1 goose, 2 great ᵀ—, 4 measures (ḏny' t) of fruit, grain for four white loaves, 2 bundles of vegetables, 2 (t' b-) jars of beer. <sup>26</sup>5 table-fowl, 25 [various loaves of the divine]<sup>f</sup> offerings, ᵀ— of the garden, and every plant, burned<sup>g</sup> in the presence of this goddess, every day.

<sup>27</sup>[It is] my [majesty] who does all the things to be done in this house in this good hour ᵀexactly<sup>l</sup>, in which is the burning. It is my majesty who makes anew ———.

<sup>a</sup>This is about the twenty-third of September and was, of course, the time of the king's return with the plunder from some campaign of the preceding summer (see §§ 409 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>The numeral has been corrupted in the restoration.

<sup>c</sup>To be restored from l. 25.

<sup>d</sup>Maspero restores: nw = "of;" but the context demands the usual connection, viz., "for the sake of (hr-ḏ' ḏ'?), etc.," which Schaefer read; and this is shown by the photograph to be correct.

<sup>e</sup>Maspero has "fête de faire être;" but the phrase "cause to be" is usual for the taking place of a feast. See Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 124 f., where it occurs three times, and the Elephantine appendix to the Amāda stela, § 798.

<sup>f</sup>Restored from l. 23.

<sup>g</sup>A participle referring to the entire preceding series of offerings; the same above in l. 23.

OBELISKS

623. In celebration of the usual jubilee on the thirtieth anniversary of his being proclaimed crown prince, and on recurrences<sup>a</sup> of the same feast, Thutmose III erected a series of at least seven<sup>b</sup> obelisks, of which five were in Thebes and two in Heliopolis. The first of these feasts must have taken place in his thirtieth year as king, because his proclamation as crown prince was coincident with his coronation. He had no prospect of succeeding until he was crowned. These obelisks are chronologically important, and bear inscriptions, some of which possess great historical value.

I. KARNAK OBELISKS

624. If we exclude those of Hatshepsut, there are now no obelisks erected by Thutmose III remaining in Karnak; for that of Thutmose I which he appropriated was not erected by Thutmose III (see §§ 105, 86 ff.), but only inscribed by him. In the year 42, however, he had already erected in Karnak four obelisks, for which he decreed offerings (§§ 563, 572). Whether he later erected more, we cannot tell, but it can hardly be an accident that other sources also refer to four at Karnak, two being recorded by the king

<sup>a</sup>A record of the celebration of a jubilee on the second of Pauni in year 33 is found in a tablet at el-Bersheh (Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 47; again less accurately, II, 33). The monument is now destroyed.

<sup>b</sup>That is:

Mentioned in texts at Karnak	4
(Includes Constantinople obelisk)
Lateran obelisk	1
Heliopolis obelisks	2
Total	7

The Lateran obelisk was, of course, not completed by Thutmose III. There is a small obelisk of his at Sion house; see Birch, History, 102. A new obelisk of "Thotmes" (not stated which one) is mentioned in Egypt Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 98, 99, 22. See Breasted, "The Obelisks of Thutmose III and His Building Season in Egypt" (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 55-61). Legrain's recent discoveries at Karnak (Annales, V) arrived too late for use here.

himself and two mentioned in the tomb of Puemre (§§ 382 ff.) The former two are represented in a relief<sup>a</sup> where Thutmose III is presenting to Amon a magnificent array of costly gifts in gold and silver and the like. Among these appear two obelisks each inscribed with titles, etc., of Thutmose III, followed on the one by the words:

He made (it) as his monument [for his father, Amon, lord of Thebes],<sup>b</sup> erecting for him two great and mighty obelisks of granite; the pyramidions (being) of electrum;<sup>c</sup> at the double façade of the temple.

As the inscription is different from that upon the obelisks in the tomb of Puemre, they must be a different pair.<sup>d</sup> The inscriptions in the tomb of Menkheperreseneb also refer to “many obelisks and flagstaves”<sup>e</sup> erected by him for Thutmose III at Thebes.

625. A scarab,<sup>f</sup> issued in celebration of the erection of obelisks in Karnak, bears the words:

Thutmose III, whose obelisks abide in the house of Amon.

In addition to these four, for which we have chiefly inscrip-tional evidence, Thutmose III had at least one more <sup>a</sup>In the corridor of the Annals in the great Karnak temple; published by Champollion, Monuments, IV, 316, 317; partially by Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, Text, III, 1, plate opposite p. 125; partially by Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, 29, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1185 ff.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch and Rosellini represent this as erased, but Champollion has it in full, having doubtless inserted it from similar dedications.

<sup>c</sup>See Ineni (§ 103, l. 8); Lepsius says of the obelisk in tomb of Puemre: “das pyramidion ist gelb gemalt,” of course representing electrum (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 244). On the other obelisk the same inscription with the variant “obelisks” (for the dual).

<sup>d</sup>None of these can be the Lateran obelisk, for it was not one of a pair; but the Constantinople obelisk is one of the first pair above mentioned, for the position, of the representations and the wording of the inscriptions tally exactly (the only difference is the omission of ḡsr-ḥ w in the Golden Horus name in the Karnak relief). See Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, Tafel III, 1 and 2 (opp. p. 56), and p. 57.

<sup>e</sup>Virey, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 209, l. 15.

<sup>f</sup>Berlin, No 3530, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 417.

obelisk in Karnak, which has itself survived, though far from its original site, viz., the Lateran Obelisk.

II. LATERAN OBELISK<sup>a</sup>

626. This obelisk has had an interesting history. It was intended by Thutmose III probably for the forecourt before his southern pylon (VIII) in Karnak.<sup>b</sup> But he apparently died after it had reached its site, but before it was erected or inscribed. There it lay for thirty-five years in "the hands of the craftsmen" until it was piously erected and properly inscribed with Thutmose III's dedication, etc., by his grandson, Thutmose IV, who adds also his own inscription with an account of the monument's history thus far. It is herein distinctly stated that this is the first time that a single obelisk was erected.<sup>c</sup> The next date of its history is that of its erection by Constantius in the Circus Maximus at Rome in 357 A. D. In 1587 it was discovered there broken into three pieces, and was set up on its present site in the next year by Pope Sixtus V.

The inscriptions of Thutmose III occupy the middle <sup>a</sup>In the piazza of the Lateran in Rome; published in Interpretatio Obeliscorum Urbis . . . digesta per A. M. Ungarellium, Romæ, MDCCCXLII, Tab. I; Birch, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 2d ser., II, 228; de Horrack, Revue Archéologique, N. S., 1864, IX, 45 (incomplete); Marucchi, Gli obelischi egiziani di Roma, Tav. I and II.

<sup>b</sup>Thutmose III says it was set "in the forecourt of the temple over against Karnak;" Thutmose IV refers three times to its location: (1) when found it was lying "on the south side of Karnak;" (2) it was erected "in Karnak;" (3) it was erected "at the upper portal of Karnak." Taken altogether, these data show that in No. 3 the southern entrance through Pylon VIII is meant, and there the obelisk stood. There is a reference to the same portal in the inscription of Beknekhonsu (III, 567, l. 5), where it is also called the "upper portal." In both cases the same word (hr) is used for "upper." It is unusual in this sense, viz., referring to the river, but occurs twice in the same way in the inscription of Zoser (Sehel, ll. 16 and 30).

<sup>c</sup>Hence it was not paired with the Constantinople obelisk, as Wiedemann states (Aegyptische Geschichte, 365).

lines, those of Thutmose IV the side lines.<sup>a</sup> All have suffered much from restoration by the papal architect at the last erection.

Dedication (South Side)

627. . . . .<sup>b</sup> Thutmose (III). He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, erecting for him a single obelisk in the forecourt (wb<sup>2</sup>) of the temple over against (r-h<sup>2</sup> w) Karnak, as the first beginning of erecting a single obelisk in Thebes; that he might be given life.

North Side

. . . . . (Thutmose III), son of Amon, of his body, whom Mut bore to him in Ishru, of the same limbs as he who fashioned him, Son of Re, Thutmose, Beautiful of Form, beloved of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, given life, like Re.

East Side

628. . . . . (Thutmose III), rich in monuments in the house of Amon; making his monuments greater than that which the ancestors made, who were before; exceeding that which ever was, not resembling the likeness of anything that was made in the house of his father, Amon, that the son of Re, Thutmose, Ruler of Heliopolis, may be given life through him (ni).

West Side

. . . . . (Thutmose III), who praises Amon, when he rises in Karnak. He sends Amon to rest in the house, "Bearer-of-Diadems," while his (Amon's) heart is glad at the monuments of his beloved son, "Enduring in Kingship."<sup>c</sup> Cause him to endure and to repeat for thee the celebration of this million of jubilees; Son of Re, Thutmose, Beautiful of Form, given life.

III. CONSTANTINOPLE OBELISK<sup>d</sup>

629. This obelisk was removed by the emperor Theodosius from Egypt to Constantinople.<sup>e</sup> It originally stood <sup>a</sup>These latter will be found under his reign (§§ 830 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>Full five-name titulary, as in §§ 143 ff.

<sup>c</sup>Second name of Thutmose III.

<sup>d</sup>In Constantinople, published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 60; Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 65. Only the upper portion is preserved.

<sup>e</sup>Wiedemann, Aegyptische Geschichte, 365.

somewhere in Karnak,<sup>a</sup> and is shown with its fellow in a relief there, in which the king offers the pair to Amon. The exact location of these obelisks, or of the pair erected by Puemre, is doubtless indicated by an inscription on a fragment of a sphinx found near Thutmose III's southern pylon (VII) at Karnak, which reads: "He presented two obelisks of stone, one on each side of it" (Annales, IV, 9), evidently meaning the door of the pylon. The inscriptions on the Constantinople obelisk<sup>b</sup> are as follows:

Dedication (South Side)

630. . . . . .<sup>c</sup>(Thutmose III); he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes; erecting <sup>d</sup>[for him very great obelisks of red granite, the pyramidions of electrum; that he may be given life, like Re, forever].

North Side

. . . . . (Thutmose III), whom Atum reared as a child, in the arms of Neit, Divine Mother, to be king; who has taken all lands, the extent of time; lord of jubilees (hb-sd) ———.

East Side

631. . . . . . (Thutmose III), lord of victory, binder of every land, who makes his boundary as far as the Horns of the Earth, the marshes as far as Naharin (N-h-r-n) ———.

West Side

. . . . . (Thutmose III), who crossed the "Great Bend" of Naharin (N-h-r-n)<sup>e</sup> with might and with victory at the head of his army, making a great slaughter [among them] ———.

<sup>a</sup>See § 624 and note.

<sup>b</sup>Petrie (History of Egypt, II, 131 ff.) has shown that this obelisk must have been very high. He would for this reason identify it with the great obelisks of Thutiy's inscription (§ 376), but those obelisks belonged to Hatshepsut, and, as we have seen, the Constantinople obelisk is certainly one of those shown in the Karnak relief (§ 624 and note).

<sup>c</sup>Full titulary except last fifth name.

<sup>d</sup>The Karnak relief (§ 543) furnishes the lost conclusion of this dedication.

<sup>e</sup>This is the campaign of the thirty-third year. See §§ 477 ff.

IV. LONDON OBELISK<sup>a</sup>

632. This obelisk, with its fellow, now in New York, stood in the temple of Heliopolis. Removed to Alexandria, they were erected before the temple of the Cæsars there, in 13-12 B. C.,<sup>b</sup> by the Roman<sup>c</sup> (?) architect Pontius, while Barbarus was prefect. The London obelisk, which had fallen early in the fourteenth century, was removed<sup>d</sup> thither in 1877 and landed in England in January, 1878. It is 68½ feet high (Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 127).

633. Its inscriptions<sup>e</sup> are not of great historical importance; the dedication is as follows:

. . . . . Thutmose (III); he made (it) as his monument for his father, Harakhte, erecting for him two great obelisks; with pyramidion of electrum, at the fourth<sup>f</sup> occurrence of the jubilee (hb-sd), because he so much loved 'his father.' May the Son of Re, Thutmose (III), be [given life] through him (nf).

<sup>a</sup>Stands on the Thames embankment in London; published in Description, Antiquités, V, 32, 33 (partially and badly); Champollion, Monuments, IV, 445, 446; Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, 51; phototype, Gorringer, Egyptian Obelisks; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 11, 30 (dedication only); King, Cleopatra's Needle (London, 1886).

<sup>b</sup>The current date, 22 B. C., is an error, to be corrected from the revised text of Merriam (The Greek and Latin Inscriptions on the Obelisk-Crab, by A. C. Merriam, New York, 1883) on the bronze crabs which were inserted under the obelisks at their re-erection. Those under the fallen London obelisk had, of course, disappeared; on a claw found under the other (New York) obelisk, and now in the Metropolitan Museum (New York), both the Greek and Latin versions are preserved. Merriam's copy reads:

L IH KAIΞAPΞ	A[N]NO XVIII CAESARIS
BAPBAPOΞ ANEΘHKKE	BARBARUS PRAEF
APXITEKTONOYNTOΞ	AEGYPTI POSUIT
ΠONTIOY	ARCHITCTANTE PONTIO

(Ligatures and missing portions of broken letters I have not indicated).

<sup>c</sup>If he be the same as the "Pontios" of the fountain in the garden of Mæcenas (Merriam, Obelisk-Crab, 47), he was an Athenian.

<sup>d</sup>See Gorringer.

<sup>e</sup>The middle lines are by Thutmose III; the side lines by Ramses II.

<sup>f</sup>On the Thames embankment, in 1901, I could see only three strokes of the numeral; nor (with an opera-glass) could I discern room for a fourth; but Brugsch read it when it was prostrate (Thesaurus, V, 1130) as four.

V. NEW YORK OBELISK<sup>a</sup>

634. It was removed to New York<sup>b</sup> with admirable skill and success by Lieutenant-Commander Goringe,<sup>c</sup> landing in July, 1880. Unfortunately, the dedication inscription<sup>d</sup> is illegible, and the others contain only the conventional praise of the king. They are as follows:

East Side

635. Horus: Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes; Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Enduring in Kingship like Re in Heaven; <sup>e</sup>Born of Atum, Lord of Heliopolis, Son of his body, whom Thoth fashioned;<sup>e</sup> whom they fashioned in the Great House in the beauty of their limbs, knowing that he would exercise a kingship enduring forever, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), beloved of Atum, the great god, and the divine ennead; given life, stability, and satisfaction, like Re, forever.

North Side

636. Horus: 'Taking' the white crown; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre; Golden Horus: satisfied in smiting the rulers of the countries 'approaching' him, according as his father, Re, has decreed for him victory<sup>f</sup> against every land, and might of the sword by his arms, in order to widen the boundaries of Egypt; Son of Re, Thutmose (III) — —.

<sup>a</sup>Central Park, New York. See introduction to London Obelisk; published in Description, Antiquités, V, 32, 33 (incomplete); Champollion, Monuments, IV, 444; Burton, Excerpta hieroglyphica, 52; Goringe, Egyptian Obelisks; Moldenke, The New York Obelisk (New York, 1891).

<sup>b</sup>For its earlier history, see § 632.

<sup>c</sup>See his excellent account of the achievement in Egyptian Obelisks, by H. Goringe (New York, 1882). It contains useful descriptions of the transport of the London, Paris, and other obelisks.

<sup>d</sup>The inscriptions of Thutmose III occupy the middle lines; the side lines are by Ramses II, as in London.

<sup>e</sup>This is all in one cartouche, and the words ms and Thoth, appearing together below, are perhaps intended to be joined as "Thutmose," although they belong to the two separate lines, "Born . . . . . fashioned," above.

<sup>f</sup>See Lateran Obelisk, north side, right line (§ 831).

MEDINET HABU BUILDING INSCRIPTIONS<sup>a</sup>

637. The small Eighteenth Dynasty temple of Medinet Habu, on the west shore at Thebes, is so shut in by the larger buildings later erected around it that it is little noticed by the modern visitor. It was begun by Thutmose I. Although Hatshepsut certainly had a share in it, the dedication inscriptions attribute its erection to Thutmose III, but refer to an earlier temple on the spot, meaning the work of Thutmose I. They are as follows:

638. <sup>b</sup>. . . . . He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re,<sup>c</sup> king of gods, making for him a great temple upon the [—] district of the West of Thutmose III (called): “Splendid-is-the-Seat-of-Amon;”<sup>d</sup> of fine white sandstone; that he might therefore be given life, forever.

639. . . . . He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over “Splendor-of-the-West,” erecting for him a splendid adytum of fine white sandstone, (<sup>e</sup>in<sup>f</sup>) his accustomed place of the first beginning. My majesty established it anew, that he might therefore be given life forever.

640. <sup>e</sup>. . . . . erecting for him his splendid seat of the first beginning, establishing it as an eternal work, his majesty having found it beginning to fall to ruin; that he might be given life like Re, forever.

641. <sup>f</sup>. . . . . making for him “Splendor-of-the-West,” to shelter its lord and these lords of the district of Thamut (T<sup>3</sup>-mw<sup>3</sup>t) . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>See Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1304–6.

<sup>b</sup>The following three texts are from Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 38, c, and d. I have omitted in all the full fivefold titulary of Thutmose III.

<sup>c</sup>Chiseled out and restored.

<sup>d</sup>Or: “Amon-is-Splendid-in-Throne” (as to his throne), Ymn-ḏsr-ys<sup>3</sup>t. It is abbreviated as ḏsr-ys<sup>3</sup>t, and probably also as Ymn-ḏsr on a set of foundation deposit tools (Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1298, 1299). Another name of the temple or district is “Splendor-of-the-West.”

<sup>e</sup>Titulary and introduction are omitted. On this form see Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 156, as Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 38, d, is wrongly reconstructed.

<sup>f</sup>Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 130, and Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, xxxvi; titulary and introduction omitted as above. The other two are also from the same sources.

He made "Chamber-of-the-Cemetery" for his fathers, the lords of the splendid region. . . . .

He made "Possessed-of-Eternity" for his father Ptah-Tatenen of "Lord-of-Life". . . . .<sup>a</sup>

---

HELIOPOLIS BUILDING INSCRIPTIONS

642. A round-topped stela<sup>b</sup> bears in the upper two-thirds a relief showing Thutmose III, offering an oblation to Harakhte. Below the relief is the following inscription:

Year 47, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menkheperre; Son of Re: Thutmose (III), [living] forever.

His majesty commanded to encircle this temple with a thick wall of stone-work, for his father Re-Harakhte forever, when he cleansed Heliopolis, the house of Re — — — — —.<sup>c</sup>

643. A doorpost<sup>d</sup> in Cairo bears a dedication of Thutmose III, as follows:

He made (it) as his monument for his father Atum, lord of Heliopolis, making for him a doorway of benut (bnw' t) stone, (called): "Pure-are-the-Offerings-of-Menkheperre-Beloved-of-the-Gods-of-Heliopolis."

---

NUBIAN WARS

644. The records of Thutmose III's conquests in Nubia are very meager; although he had evidently been early active there, as is shown by his building of the Semneh temple (§§ 167 ff.), yet the first mention of a Nubian campaign is in his fiftieth year, when in passing through the canal at the first cataract he was obliged to clear it of stones, as recorded in his inscription, cut there at the time (§§ 649 ff.).

---

<sup>a</sup>Two others add: "for the father of his fathers, all the gods of the splendid region;" and "for his father, Amon-Re."

<sup>b</sup>Stela found by Lepsius at Heliopolis; limestone, 96 cm. high, now in Berlin, No. 1634. Published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 29, b; I had also my own photograph of the original, and the copy for the Berlin dictionary.

<sup>c</sup>One line, and perhaps more, lacking.

<sup>d</sup>Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 34.

645. Besides this, the king commemorated his victories in Nubia by having engraved upon the front of each tower of one of his pylons<sup>a</sup> at Karnak a list<sup>b</sup> of seventeen names of towns and districts captured there. Over one list is a relief,<sup>c</sup> now in a very fragmentary state, representing the king sacrificing his Nubian foes before Amon. The scene is accompanied by the words:

————— 'bringing<sup>1</sup> the living prisoners to Egypt, all their herds being led to Egypt. He has filled the storehouse of his father, the lord of gods with — — — of the chiefs 'whom<sup>1</sup> he has 'conquered<sup>1</sup>. The kings have not done it (before) in this land. His name shall abide forever and ever.

Over the other list was a similar inscription, now too fragmentary for translation.

646. A further and much fuller list was placed by the king in duplicate, one on each of the two towers of the sixth Karnak pylon, a list which contains no less than 115<sup>d</sup> names of the towns and districts of the Nubian regions conquered.<sup>e</sup> One of these lists was surmounted by a relief showing the Nubian god Dedun leading and presenting to Thutmose III the towns, etc., enumerated in the list. Over both the lists is the following inscription:

List of these south<sup>f</sup> countries, the Nubian Troglodytes of Khenthenofer, whom his majesty overthrew, making a great<sup>g</sup> slaughter among them, (whose) number is unknown, and carrying away all their subjects as living captives to Thebes, in order to fill the storehouse of his father, <sup>a</sup>Bouriant does not indicate clearly which pylon is meant, but says it is in front of the sanctuary.

<sup>b</sup>Daressy, Recueil, XI, 154, 155.

<sup>c</sup>South of door.

<sup>d</sup>Mariette's 116 is an error.

<sup>e</sup>Mariette, Karnak, 22, 23; Maspero, Recueil, VII, 99, 100; Golénischeff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 145-48, and Taf. VI; Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 37; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1544-53.

<sup>f</sup>The duplicate has "south and north!" but as the two lists are duplicates, and the Nubian god Dedun presents them to the king, "north" is certainly an error.

<sup>g</sup>"Great" is from the duplicate.

Amon-Re, lord of Thebes. Lo, all lands are the subjects of his majesty, according as his father, Amon, has commanded.

647. Finally, on his southern pylon (VII) at Karnak, the king recorded a table of nearly, and possibly more than, 400 names of towns, districts, countries, etc., conquered in Nubia.<sup>a</sup> It was accompanied by the same inscription as that over the lists on Pylon VI. The geography of Nubia is too little known to determine the limits of the territory included in these lists, and it is uncertain how far up the Nile Thutmose III's conquests extended. As his son Amenhotep II reached the extreme southern limit at Napata, it is probable that Thutmose III's wars at least prepared the way thither, if they did not include Napata.

648. A short inscription<sup>b</sup> in the tomb of Ineni refers to captives and spoil from Nubia:

———— among the negroes, given from chiefs and living captives, [—] for divine offerings of Amon, when Kush, the wretched, was overthrown; together with the tribute of all countries, which his majesty gave to the temple of Amon as yearly dues, for the sake of the life, prosperity, and health of King Thutmose III.<sup>c</sup>

The above document is corroborated by a record of such offerings placed by the king in the Karnak temple (§§ 541 ff.).

I. CANAL INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

649. On this expedition into Nubia, the king found the old Middle Kingdom canal of Sesostris III (I, 642 ff.)

<sup>a</sup>Mariette, Karnak, 24-26; Maspero, Recueil, VII, 97-99; Golénischeff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 145-48, and Taf. VI; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1544-53 (where material from this list is combined with others, especially the 115 names of Pylon VI).

<sup>b</sup>Piehl, Inscriptions, I, 129, Q-130, and p. 105.

<sup>c</sup>Piehl's copy has Hpr-k >R<sup>c</sup>, which would be Sesostris I; but mn of Mn-hpr-k >R<sup>c</sup> has certainly fallen out, as offerings "for the sake of the life, etc." were made only for living kings.

<sup>d</sup>Cut on the rock of the island of Sehel, at the first cataract. It was discovered by Mr. E. C. Wilbour in 1889, and published in Recueil, XIII, 202 f.; again, inaccurately, in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 85, No. 18.

stopped up, although it had been cleared by his father, Thutmose I (§§ 74 ff.). He ordered it cleared, and was able to sail through without trouble on his return. He put up a record of the clearance, beside that of his father and in the identical language;<sup>a</sup> he also made the fishermen of Elephantine responsible for the yearly clearance of the passage in the future.

650. Year 50, first (month) of the third season (ninth month), day 22, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life.

His majesty commanded to dig this canal, after he had found it<sup>b</sup> stopped up with stones, (so that) no ship sailed upon it. He sailed down-stream upon it, his heart glad, having slain his enemies.

The name of this canal is: "Opening-of-This-Way-in-the-Beauty<sup>c</sup>-of-Menkheperre-Living-Forever." The fishermen of Elephantine shall clear this canal each year.

II. INSCRIPTIONS OF NEHI, VICEROY OF KUSH

651. Nehi held the office of "King's-son," or viceroy of Kush, in the second half of the reign of Thutmose III (see § 61), beginning not later than the year 23, when he erected Thutmose III's record of victory at Wadi Halfa (§§ 411 ff.). He was evidently in charge of the alterations in the Semneh temple, later undertaken by Thutmose III. A mutilated inscription<sup>d</sup> of his in this temple speaks of "bringing stone . . . . . in restoring the monument — of eternity —"

<sup>a</sup>This probably indicates that we are not to understand literally the identical statements made by his father as to his actually sailing on the canal. Thutmose III was now an old man of eighty years at least, and it is impossible that he should have accompanied the expedition himself.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "after his finding (infinitive) it."

<sup>c</sup>It is, of course, the same as the Middle Kingdom canal, but is given a new name by each king.

<sup>d</sup>Outside, south wall, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 47, a, below, at the right of the door; the "governor of the south countries," whose name is lost on the left of the door, belongs to the Ramsessid period, as he is adoring Ramses III.

— — [Governor of the] south [countries], Nehi (Nhy).” Another record<sup>a</sup> of his on the latest portion of the building, the northern addition,<sup>b</sup> is too fragmentary for translation.

652. The grotto at Ellesiyeh<sup>c</sup> dates from the fifty-second year<sup>d</sup> of Thutmose III, and contains the following inscription<sup>e</sup> of Nehi:

Bringing<sup>f</sup> the tribute of the south countries, consisting of gold, ivory, and ebony, [by] the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, satisfying the heart of the king at the Horns of the Earth,<sup>g</sup> having access to the king, pleasant to the divine limbs; companion, approaching the mighty sovereign, vigilant for the lord of the palace, king's-son, governor of the south countries, Nehi.

He saith: “I am a servant useful to his lord, filling his house with gold, giving tribute to —, consisting of the impost of the south countries; [whose] praise comes forth in the presence of his lord;<sup>h</sup> the king's-son, governor of the south countries, Nehi.”<sup>i</sup>

Another inscription<sup>j</sup> of Nehi, containing only his name and titles, is on the island of Sai, one hundred miles above Semneh.

III. OFFERINGS FROM THE SOUTH COUNTRIES<sup>k</sup>

653. A relief shows Amon enthroned, and receiving from Thutmose III, who stands before him, a great array of offer-

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 56, a.

<sup>b</sup>See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 21 f.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 45, e.

<sup>d</sup>See Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 23, n. 1.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 46, c = Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 80.

<sup>f</sup>The inscription of course accompanied a representation of the Nubians bringing the tribute before Nehi.

<sup>g</sup>See Index.

<sup>h</sup>Read: nb'f.

<sup>i</sup>This inscription has been understood by Wiedemann as belonging to the tomb of Nehi; for he refers (Aegyptische Geschichte, 362) to this inscription to prove the statement that the Tomb of Nehi was at Silsileh (confusion with Ellesiyeh?). The tomb of Nehi is unknown, as far as I have been able to find.

<sup>j</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 59, b.

<sup>k</sup>A relief with inscription in one of the rear rooms in Thutmose III's portion of the Karnak temple; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 165 f.

ings, including cattle, fowl, flowers, bread, all sorts of fruit, together with metal libation-vessels, necklaces, amulets, and pendants. The whole is accompanied by the following inscription:

654. Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, [making] for him divine possessions, presenting to him all divine offerings, and very great feasts, which his majesty made for the first time as an increase of that which was before: giving an oblation of vessels of very plentiful [fullness]; necklaces, amulets, and pendants of real<sup>a</sup> electrum, brought to his majesty from the south countries as their yearly impost; that he may live forever.

HYMN OF VICTORY<sup>b</sup>

655. At the top, occupying over one-fourth of the stela, are two scenes of worship, in each of which Thutmose III, accompanied by the goddess of the Theban necropolis, Khafet-hir-nebes (ḥjt t-ḥr-nbs), offers to Amon, with the usual superscriptions.<sup>c</sup>

The hymn itself in twenty-five lines occupying the remainder of the stela, is the best specimen of its class, and was later partly copied by scribes of Seti I for the wall of the great Karnak temple<sup>d</sup> in which this tablet was set up. The hymn is of sufficient historical importance to be included here; although due allowance must be made for its rhetorical style, it is a very helpful supplement to the Annals.

<sup>a</sup>Text has m, "new."

<sup>b</sup>A black granite tablet 180 cm. in height, discovered by Mariette in a chamber northwest of the main sanctuary room of Karnak, now in Cairo. Text: Rougé, from a copy by Devéria, Revue archéologique, N. S., IV, 1861, opposite p. 196; Mariette, Album photographique, Pl. 32; Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 11. Mariette's text is very incorrect and must be compared with the photograph.

<sup>c</sup>The whole of both scenes was hammered out by Amenhotep IV, and has then been restored.

<sup>d</sup>Copied by Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 96, republished by Maspero, Du genre épistolaire, 90, and Guicysse, Recueil, XI, 64, 65. See III, 117.

656. <sup>1</sup>Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes:

Thou comest to me, thou exultest, seeing my beauty,
O my son, my avenger, Menkheperre, living forever.

I shine for love of thee,

My heart <sup>2</sup>is glad at thy beautiful comings into my temple;

(My) two hands furnish thy limbs with protection and life.

How pleasing is thy pleasantness toward my body.<sup>a</sup>

I have established <sup>3</sup>thee in my dwelling,

I have worked a marvel for thee;

I have given to thee might and victory against all countries,

I have set thy fame (even) the fear of thee in all lands.

Thy terror as far as the <sup>4</sup>four pillars of heaven;

I have magnified the dread of thee in all bodies,

I have put the roaring of thy majesty among the Nine Bows.

The chiefs of all countries are gathered in thy grasp,

<sup>5</sup>I myself have stretched out my two hands,

I have bound them for thee.

I have bound together the Nubian Troglodytes by tens of thousands and thousandš,

The Northerners by hundreds of thousands as captives.

<sup>6</sup>I have felled thine enemies beneath thy sandals,

Thou hast smitten the <sup>7</sup>hordes<sup>1</sup> of rebels according as I commanded thee.

The earth in its length and breadth, Westerners and Easterners are subject<sup>b</sup> to thee,

<sup>7</sup>Thou tramplest all countries, thy heart glad;

None presents himself<sup>c</sup> before thy majesty,

While I am thy leader, so that thou mayest reach them.

Thou hast crossed the water of the Great Bend<sup>d</sup> of <sup>8</sup>Naharin (N-h-r-n)
r-n) with victory, with might.

<sup>a</sup>Referring to the king's adornment of the divine image as prescribed by the ritual.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "are under the place of thy face," an idiom for "subject."

<sup>c</sup>Exactly the same phrase is found in Seti I's Syrian campaign (Recueil, XI, 59), III, 86; it is explained by the Tombos tablet, ll. 11, 12, § 73.

<sup>d</sup>Euphrates. On the obelisk of Thutmose III in Constantinople the same phrase is applied to him: "who crossed the Great Bend of Naharin (N-h-r-n) with might and with victory" (§ 631). This statement is therefore not merely poetic hyperbole, and coincides with the Annals, §§ 477 ff.

657. I have decreed for thee that they hear thy roarings and enter into caves;

I have deprived their nostrils of the breath of life.

<sup>9</sup>I have set the terrors of thy majesty in their hearts,

My serpent-diadem upon thy brow, it consumes them,

It makes<sup>a</sup> captive by the hair<sup>b</sup> the Kode-folk,

<sup>10</sup>It devours those who are in their marshes with its flame.

Cut down are the heads of the Asiatics (<sup>c</sup> mw), there is not a remnant of them;<sup>c</sup>

Fallen are the children of their mighty ones.

<sup>11</sup>I have caused thy victories to circulate among all lands,

My serpent-diadem gives light to thy dominion.

There is no rebel of thine as far as the circuit of heaven;

They come, bearing tribute upon their backs,

<sup>12</sup>Bowing down to thy majesty according to my command.

I have made powerless the invaders who came before thee;

Their hearts burned, their limbs trembling.

658. <sup>13</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the princes of Zahi (D<sup>3</sup> h);

I have hurled them beneath thy feet among their highlands.

I have caused them to see thy majesty as lord of radiance,

So that thou hast shone in their faces like my image.

<sup>14</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the Asiatics,<sup>d</sup>

Thou hast made captive the heads of the Asiatics<sup>e</sup> of Retenu.

I have caused them to see thy majesty equipped with thy adornment,

When thou takest the weapons of war in the chariot.

<sup>15</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the eastern land,

Thou hast trampled those who are in the districts of God's-Land.

I have caused them to see thy majesty like a circling star,<sup>f</sup>

When it scatters its flame in fire, and gives forth its dew.

659. <sup>16</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the western land,

Keftiyew (Kf-tyw) and Cyprus (Ysy) are in terror.

I have caused them to see thy majesty as a young bull,

<sup>a</sup>This phrase is explained in Annals, year 31, l. 10, § 470, note; for ys-h<sup>3</sup> k, see Sethe, Verbum, II, § 700.

<sup>b</sup>"Hair" is without determinative; it occurs with determinative on Tombos tablet, ll. 6, 7, § 71, q. v.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "their remnant is not."

<sup>d</sup>Ymyw-si-t.

<sup>e</sup>mw.

<sup>f</sup>See I, 511, l. 2.

Firm of heart,<sup>a</sup> ready-horned, irresistible.

<sup>17</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite those who are in their marshes,
The lands of Mitanni (My-t-n) tremble under fear of thee.

I have caused them to see thy majesty as a crocodile,
Lord of fear in the water, unapproachable.

660. <sup>18</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite those who are in the isles;
Those who are in the midst of the Great Green (Sea) hear<sup>b</sup> thy roarings.

I have caused them to see thy majesty as an avenger (nd·ty)
Who rises upon the back of his slain victim.

<sup>19</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the Tehenu (Libyans),
The isles of the Utentyew<sup>c</sup> are (fsubject<sup>l</sup>) to the might of thy prowess.
I have caused them to see thy majesty as a fierce-eyed lion,
Thou makest them corpses in their valleys.

661. <sup>20</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the uttermost ends of the lands,

The circuit<sup>d</sup> of the Great Circle (Okeanos) is inclosed in thy grasp.
I have caused them to see thy majesty as a lord of the wing,<sup>e</sup>
Who seizeth upon that which he seeth, as much as he desires.

<sup>21</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite those who are in front<sup>f</sup> of their land.

Thou hast smitten the Sand-dwellers as living captives.
I have caused them to see thy majesty as a southern jackal,
Lord of running, stealthy-going, who roves the Two Lands.

<sup>22</sup>I have come, causing thee to smite the Nubian Troglodytes,
As far as r—<sup>g</sup> (they) are in thy grasp.

<sup>a</sup>See a bead of Amenhotep II, bearing a bull, with the words: "Firm of heart" (Petrie, Historical Scarabs, XVIII, No. 1119); not uncommon.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "are under thy roarings."

<sup>c</sup>Wtntyw; unknown.

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "That which the Great Circle encircles."

<sup>e</sup>A designation of the hawk.

<sup>f</sup>This is in contrast with the "back-lands" of l. 20; Maspero's rendering, "duars" = protected inclosures, is a conjecture which ignores the word "land," written here with a single stroke, very easily to be overlooked. The text thus contrasts the nearest and the remotest Asiatic enemies of Egypt. Chabas (Etudes sur l'antiquité historique, 183) emends to read the same as the word for river- and harbor-mouths (h > wt) under Ramses III.

<sup>g</sup>Š > t, name of an uncertain Nubian country.

I have caused them to see thy majesty as thy two brothers,<sup>a</sup>
 I have united their two arms for thee in ṛv[ictory]
662. <sup>23</sup>Thy two sisters,<sup>b</sup> I have set them as protection behind thee,
 The arms of my majesty are above, warding off evil.
 I have caused thee to reign, my beloved son,
 Horus, Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes, whom I have begotten, in [uprightness of heart]<sup>c</sup>.
<sup>24</sup>Thutmose, living forever, who hast done for me all that my ka desired;
 Thou hast erected my dwelling as an everlasting work,
 Enlarging and extending (it) more than the past which had been.
 The great doorway — — —.
<sup>25</sup>Thou hast fêted the beauty of Amon-Re,
 Thy monuments are greater than (those of) any king who has been.
 When I commanded thee to do it, I was satisfied therewith;
 I established thee upon the Horus-throne of millions of years;
 Thou shalt continue life — — —.

TOMB OF REKHMIRE<sup>d</sup>

663. This tomb is the most important private monument of the Empire. The scenes and inscriptions on its walls depict and narrate the career of Rekhmire, who was prime minister, or vizier, of Egypt and governor of the residence

<sup>a</sup>Horus and Set.

<sup>b</sup>Isis and Nephthys.

<sup>c</sup>See § 138, l. 1.

<sup>d</sup>A cliff-tomb in the hill of Shekh Abd el-Kurna, on the west shore at Thebes; it attracted attention as early as 1819, when some scenes were copied by Cailliaud, and later published in "Recherches sur les arts et métiers, les usages de la vie civile et domestique des anciens peuples de l'Égypte, de la Nubie et de l'Éthiopie," par F. Cailliaud (Paris, 1831-37). Later various scenes were published by Wilkinson, Manners, I, Pl. IV, etc.; Champollion, Monuments, 161, 164 ff.; Rosellini, Monumenti Civili, 52-54; Hoskins, Travels in Ethiopia (London, 1835), 328; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 40, 41, and Text, III, 270 f.; Prisse, Histoire de l'art égyptien, 1863 (plates not numbered); Piehl, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 113, 114, pp. 92, 93. The first attempt to publish the entire tomb was made by M. Ph. Virey. It was published by him in 1889 (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, "Le Tombeau de Rekhmara"), but his work is so incomplete and incorrect, both in the drawings and the texts, that it is unusable; indeed, Virey himself translated from it the great inscription on the duties of the vizier backward! Thus this priceless monument steadily deteriorated during the last century, without a serious effort being made to preserve it in its entirety, until it was finally rescued by Mr.

during the latter half of the reign of Thutmose III, the period of Egypt's greatest power. He came of eminent family, having succeeded his uncle Woser in the vizierate,<sup>a</sup> and as his career brought him the highest post in the state during the most stirring years of Thutmose III's great conquests, he has put much of it in his tomb. We find in it the fullest known source for the study of the constitution of the state and the administration of the Pharaoh's government under the Empire, beside the best known representations in color of the peoples and products of Punt, Keftiyew, Retenu, and Nubia.

664. Incidentally, Rekhmire also throws light upon the character of Thutmose III. After modestly remarking of himself that "there was nothing of which he was ignorant in heaven, in earth, (or) in any quarter of the nether world;"<sup>b</sup> and again: "I was a noble, second to the king;" he says of the king: "Lo, his majesty knew that which occurred; there was nothing which he did not know —, he was Thoth in everything, there was no affair which he did not complete."

I. APPOINTMENT OF REKHMIRE AS VIZIER<sup>c</sup>

665. The following inscription narrates Rekhmire's appointment to the highest office in the kingdom. The Newberry, who published the first instalment of his complete copies in 1900 (The Life of Rekhmara, by Percy E. Newberry, London, 1900). From this careful work, for which we are much indebted, the following translations have been made; the plate numbers referred to are always those of Newberry's work.

---

<sup>a</sup>For a full account of his life, see Newberry, 13-20.

<sup>b</sup>He is, of course, referring to the affairs of his office, and to political matters. These extracts are all taken from a long inscription, too fragmentary for full translation (Pls. VII and VIII).

<sup>c</sup>Pls. IX and X. I had also the fragmentary copies of the same text in the tombs of Woser and Amenhotep (Newberry, 34), for which I am indebted to the kindness of Mr. Alan H. Gardiner. They fill up some lacunæ and furnish some corrections, cited as "Dupl.," but I have not added this remark merely to indicate the filling up of a lacuna. [Later: Mr. Gardiner has now published the text and duplicates, with an excellent rendering and commentary (Recueil, XXVI), from which I have incorporated a number of valuable points in the above.]

relief shows Thutmose III enthroned, before whom, in accordance with the statement of the inscription, Rekhmire appears for appointment.<sup>a</sup> The king then gives him instructions regarding the administration of his office. Unfortunately, these instructions, which occupy twenty long lines, are very fragmentary, and at the same time extremely obscure. The following version omits a number of passages which may not be safely rendered, and even so translates much more than can be understood, without a longer commentary than it is possible to offer here. It will be seen that the vizier is exhorted: to legal (l. 8), just (l. 8), and impartial (l. 15) decisions; not to be excessively forbidding, but still to keep himself aloof from the people (ll. 18, 19); finally, that his office is really to be administered according to the instructions given (l. 22). The instructions are remarkably humane in temper and show a surprisingly high appreciation of justice. As they present the fundamentals of Egyptian government, it is greatly to be regretted that they are so fragmentary and difficult. These were apparently the conventional instructions customarily delivered at the appointment of every vizier, for they were delivered to Woser, the uncle of Rekhmire, at his appointment, and also to Hapu, vizier under Thutmose IV.<sup>b</sup>

666. <sup>1</sup>Regulation laid upon the vizier, Rekhmire. <sup>2</sup>The officials were brought to the audience-hall, [his majesty] commanded that <sup>3</sup>the vizier, Rekhmire,<sup>c</sup> be presented [for] appointment for the first time.

<sup>4</sup>His majesty spake before him: [“Take heed”] to thyself for the hall of the vizier; <sup>5</sup>be watchful over all that is done therein. Behold, it is a support<sup>d</sup> of the whole land; behold, as for the vizier, behold, he is not sweet, behold, bitter<sup>d</sup> is he, when he addresses — — <sup>6</sup>of copper is

<sup>a</sup>His figure has been intentionally erased.

<sup>b</sup>Newberry, Rekhmara, p. 34.

<sup>c</sup>Name intentionally erased from the wall.

<sup>d</sup>See Gardiner.

he, a wall of gold for the house of his —. Behold, he is not one setting his face toward the officials and councilors, neither one making [brethren] of all the people. Behold, — — — <sup>7</sup>a man is in the dwelling of his lord, he [does] good for him; behold [he] does not — — for another.

667. Behold, the petitioner of the South, [the North] and the whole land, shall come, supplied — — — —. <sup>8</sup>Mayest thou see to it for thyself,<sup>a</sup> to do everything after that which is in accordance with law; to do everything according to the right thereof. Do not — — — that he may be just. Behold, as for an official, when he has reported <sup>9</sup>water and wind of all his doings, behold, his deeds shall not be unknown — — — [ — — — ] — — —; he is not brought in because of the speech of the responsible officer, [but] it is known <sup>10</sup>by the speech of his messenger<sup>b</sup> as the one stating it;<sup>b</sup> he is by the side of the responsible officer as the speaker; he is not one lifting up the voice, a messenger petitioning — — — — <sup>11</sup>or an official. Then one shall not be ignorant of his deeds; lo, it is the safety<sup>c</sup> of an official to do things according to the regulation, by doing that which is spoken by the petitioner. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

668. <sup>15</sup>It is an abomination of the god to show partiality. This is the teaching: thou shalt do the like, shalt regard him who is known to thee like him who is unknown to thee, and him who is near to — like him who is far <sup>e</sup> — — — — <sup>16</sup>an official who does like this, then shall he flourish greatly in the place. Do not [avoid] a petitioner, nor nod thy head when he speaks. As for him who draws near, who will approach to thee, do not — — — — <sup>17</sup>the things which he saith in speaking. Thou shalt punish him when thou hast let him hear that on account of which thou punishest him. Lo, they will say, the petitioner loves him who nods the head [ — — — ] — — —.

669. <sup>18</sup>Be not enraged toward a man unjustly, but be thou enraged concerning that about which one should be enraged; show forth the fear of thee; let one be afraid of thee, (for) a prince is a prince of whom one is afraid. Lo, the true dread of a prince is to do <sup>19</sup>justice. Behold, if a man show forth the fear of him a myriad of times, there is some-

<sup>a</sup>An ethical dative which might be omitted in the translation. Dupl. has m<sup>3</sup> k nk.

<sup>b</sup>Or: "Tell it not, (for) he is, etc." <sup>c</sup>Lit., "refuge."

<sup>d</sup>In l. 13 there is a reference to an unjust vizier Khety, but in what connection is uncertain.

<sup>e</sup>For a similar antithesis of tkn, "be near," and w<sup>3</sup> y, "be far," see Hierat. Papyrus aus den königlichen Museen zu Berlin, II, 36, l. 8.

thing of violence in him. Be not known to the people; and they shall not say: "He is (only) a man."<sup>a</sup>

670. <sup>20</sup>He who speaks a lie shall go forth according to his docket,<sup>b</sup> Lo, [—] thou shalt do thy office, as thou doest justice. Lo, one shall desire to do justice . . . . .<sup>21</sup>. . . . . Lo, one shall say of the chief scribe of the vizier: "A scribe of justice," shall one say of him. Now, as for the hall, wherein thou holdest hearings there shall be a broad-hall therein ———. [He who dispenses<sup>1</sup> <sup>22</sup>justice before all the people, he is the vizier. Behold, a man shall be in his office, (as long as) he shall do things according to that which is given to him. Lo, a man is [—] when he shall act according to that which has been told him. Do not — thy — in — — <sup>23</sup>that thou knowest the law thereof. Lo, let one [—] to the proud-hearted;<sup>c</sup> the king loves the fearful more than the proud-hearted. Do thou according to [that which is given<sup>1</sup> to thee; lo, ——— <sup>24</sup>. . . . . ———.

II. DUTIES OF THE VIZIER<sup>d</sup>

671. This, the most important inscription known on the organization of the state under the Eighteenth Dynasty, is unfortunately incomplete. Two duplicates<sup>e</sup> found by Newberry fill out many of the lacunæ, but the last fifth of the text is very fragmentary. This is especially unfortunate, as the latter part of the inscription is by far the most intelligible and deals with functions easily understood.

672. The inscription is an outline of the duties of the vizier, of the greatest interest. After prescribing the external arrangements for the vizier's daily sitting in his "hall," as his office is termed, the document proceeds to the daily conference of the vizier with the king, and, immediately

<sup>a</sup>This is the same advice given by Amenemhet I to his son Sesostris I (I, 479, ll. 3-5).

<sup>b</sup>See Duties of Vizier, § 683, l. 14.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "mighty-hearted."

<sup>d</sup>Pls. II and III.

<sup>e</sup>From the tomb of Woser, belonging to the early part of Thutmose III's reign; and the tomb of Amenemopet, belonging to Amenhotep II's reign (see Newberry, 25 f.).

subsequent to this, the daily reports of the chief treasurer and the vizier to each other, and of the chief officials to the vizier. These daily duties are now followed by a long list of exceedingly varied functions to be discharged by the vizier, making in all at least thirty. There seems to be no logical order in the enumeration, and the varied character of the list will be evident from a reading of the marginal heads, which may serve in lieu of a table of content here. It will be seen that the vizier is grand steward of all Egypt, and that all the activities of the state are under his control. He has general oversight of the treasury, and the chief treasurer reports to him; he is chief justice, or head of the judiciary; he is chief of police, both for the residence city and the kingdom; he is minister of war, both for army and navy; he is secretary of the interior and of agriculture, while all general executive functions of state, with many that may not be classified, are incumbent upon him. There is, indeed, no prime function of the state which does not operate through his office. He is a veritable Joseph, and it must be this office which the Hebrew writer has in mind in the story of Joseph. The only person other than the king to whom he owes any respect is the chief treasurer, to whom he seems to offer a daily statement that all is well with the royal possessions. Such power is, of course, possible only in a highly centralized state, and Egypt is shown by this inscription to be in the Empire simply a vast estate of the Pharaoh, of which the vizier is chief steward. The vizier's functions are distributed promiscuously throughout the document, as follows:

- I. Judiciary (§§ 675, 681, 685-6, 688-91, 700, 704, 705).
- II. Treasury (§§ 676, 680, 706, 708).
- III. War  $\left\{ \begin{array}{l} \text{Army (§§ 693-95, 702).} \\ \text{Navy (§§ 710, 687).} \end{array} \right.$

- IV. Interior (§§ 677, 687, 697, 707).
- V. Agriculture (§§ 698, 699).
- VI. General Executive (§§ 692, 701, 703).
- VII. Advisory and Unclassified (§§ 678, 679, 682, 684, 696, 709, 711).

673. It is impossible to discuss this inscription without raising the question of its origin and exact character. The fact that it is known to exist in two other tombs also, would suggest that it was not an informal enumeration of the vizier's duties drawn up by himself especially for his tomb, but a close examination of the document itself shows that it could not possibly have been a state document to the decrees of which the vizier was amenable. It was evidently no more than we have suggested, viz., a list of the vizier's duties, compiled by himself, for recording in his tomb. It must, of course, have been based upon the existent laws, from which it may, in places, contain extracts. In any case, it contains the purport of certain of the laws in force at the time, some of which, like those regulating the criminal docket, are very interesting and important. The only other surviving example of the laws of Egypt are in the Decree of Harmhab (III, 45 ff.), for of the "40 skins," undoubtedly rolls containing "this law which is in his hand" mentioned by our inscription, nothing has ever been found. Such law was, of course, the codified fiat of the Pharaoh, as is evident in the Decree of Harmhab.

674. The language of the document is very difficult, and demonstrates how helpless our incomplete knowledge of the Egyptian dictionary leaves us as soon as we pass from the conventional language of the few classes of monuments familiar to us, to some untrodden path. Especially the legal enactments of the first half of the inscription abound in technical terms, most of which are totally unknown to us. These render a final translation impossible, in many places.

External Arrangement of the Sitting

675. <sup>1</sup>Arrangement of the sitting<sup>a</sup> of the governor of the (residence) city, and vizier of the Southern City, (and) of the court, in the hall of the vizier. As for every act<sup>b</sup> of this official, the vizier while hearing in the hall of the vizier, he shall sit upon a chair,<sup>c</sup> with a rug upon the floor, and a dais upon it, a cushion<sup>d</sup> under his back, a cushion under his feet, a — upon it, <sup>2</sup>and a baton at his hand; the 40 skins<sup>e</sup> shall be open before him. Then the magnates of the South<sup>f</sup> (shall stand) in the two aisles before him, while the master of the privy chamber is on his right, the [receiver of income] on his left, the scribes of the vizier at his (either) hand; one<sup>g</sup> [corresponding] to another, with each man at his proper place. One shall be heard after another, without allowing one who is behind to be heard before <sup>3</sup>one who is in front. If one in front says: "There is none being heard at my hand," then he shall be taken by the messenger of the vizier.<sup>h</sup>

Intercourse of Palace with Outside World

676. There shall be reported to him the sealing of the sealed chambers up to (that) hour and the opening of them up to (that) hour. There shall be reported to him the affairs of the fortresses of the South and

<sup>a</sup>This is not the title of the entire document, but refers only to the opening paragraph.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "every doing" (inf.!).

<sup>c</sup>Evidently a particular kind of chair called phdw, a word not occurring elsewhere.

<sup>d</sup>Erman; original has šd, "a skin," evidently meaning a leathern cushion so common on Egyptian furniture. "Back" is, of course, a euphemism.

<sup>e</sup>This word (šsm) is new; it has the determinative of leather. The 40 šsm are depicted in the accompanying scene lying on the floor before the vizier (§ 712). Erman suggests they may have been the leather cases in which the rolls of the papyrus were preserved; but such state documents were written on leather, e. g., the records of Thutmose III (§ 433).

<sup>f</sup>Only the magnates of the South, as the vizier with whom we are dealing is the southern vizier.

<sup>g</sup>"One" refers to the entire company before him; each shall occupy his proper place with reference to the other.

<sup>h</sup>Meaning that as soon as a petitioner in front sees no one before him ("at his hand"), he may say so, and be taken to the vizier by his messenger.

North. The going out of all that goes out of the king's-house shall be reported to him; and the coming in of all that comes into the king's-house shall be reported to him.<sup>a</sup> Now, as for everything going in (and) everything going out on the floor of the court, they shall go out (and) they shall go in through his messenger, who shall cause (them) to go in (and) go out.

Reports of Overseers

677. The overseers of hundreds and the overseers of [—]<sup>b</sup> shall report to him their affairs.

Daily Report to Pharaoh

678. <sup>5</sup>Furthermore, he shall go in to take counsel on the affairs of the king, L. P. H., and there shall be reported to him the affairs of the Two Lands in his house every day. He shall go in to Pharaoh, before the chief treasurer; he<sup>c</sup> shall wait at the northern flagstaff. Then the vizier shall come, proceeding from the gate of the great double façade.

Report of Treasurer and Vizier to Each Other

679. Then <sup>6</sup>the chief treasurer, he shall come to meet him (the vizier) and shall report to him, saying: "All thy affairs are sound and prosperous; every responsible incumbent has reported to me, saying: 'All thy affairs are sound and prosperous, the king's-house is sound and prosperous.'" Then the vizier, he shall report to the chief treasurer, saying: "All thy affairs are sound and prosperous; every seat of the court is sound and prosperous."<sup>d</sup> There have been reported to me

<sup>a</sup>The "king's-house" is a whole, of which the "court" is but one part, in which the king lived. Entrance to the "king's-house" was only reported to the vizier, while entrance to the "court" could be gained only under conduct of his "messenger."

<sup>b</sup>Mr-hrp.

<sup>c</sup>The chief treasurer; the front of the palace was decorated, like the temple façades, with flagstaves, and near one of these the treasurer is to wait.

<sup>d</sup>On a fragment in the Louvre (without a number) is a relief showing a line of twelve priests: three of the "first order," three of the "second order," three of the "third order," and three of the "fourth order." Over their heads are fragments of two lines, as follows: "———— in the temple of Amon, in 'Most-Splendid-of-Splendors' (name of Der el-Bahri temple), by the High Priest of Amon in 'Most-Splendid-of-Splendors,' Senu (Snw), triumphant ————— of Amon and of Hathor, Mistress of Thebes. They praise thee, they love thee, for all thy affairs are sound and prosperous in this temple." The High Priest of Hatshepsut's temple of Der el-Bahri is thus eulogized in the formal terms for a faithful officer's report. See the same words in the report of the lay priests at Illahun, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 97.

the sealing of the sealed chambers to this hour (and) the opening of them to (this) hour, by every responsible incumbent.”<sup>a</sup>

Daily Opening of the King's-House

680. Now, after each has reported to the other, of the two officials, then the vizier shall send <sup>8</sup>to open every gate of the king's-house, to cause to go in all that goes in, (and) [to go out]<sup>b</sup> all that goes out likewise, by his messenger, who shall cause it to be put in writing.

Irregularities among the Princes

681. Let not any official be empowered to judge †against a superior‡ in his hall. If there be any assailant<sup>c</sup> against <sup>9</sup>any of these officials in his hall, then he shall cause that he<sup>d</sup> be brought to the judgment-hall. It is the vizier who shall punish him, in order to expiate his fault. Let not any official have power to punish in his hall. There shall be reported [to†] him every judgment which is against the hall, †when he repairs thereto.<sup>1</sup>

Duties and Treatment of the Vizier's Messengers

682. As for every messenger <sup>10</sup>whom the vizier sends with a message for an official, from the first official to the last, let him not be †swerved†, and let him not be conducted; the official shall repeat his vizierial message while he<sup>e</sup> stands before <sup>11</sup>the official, repeating his message and going forth to wait for him. His messenger shall seize the mayors and village sheiks for the judgment-hall; his messenger shall give the [regulation†] ——— his messenger gives answer, saying: “I have been sent <sup>12</sup>with a message for the official so and so; he caused that I be conducted, and

<sup>a</sup>It will be seen that the vizier reports on the “court,” while the treasurer reports on the “king's-house.” Now, the vizier possesses the reports concerning the “king's-house” (mentioned in ll. 3 and 4), by which he is enabled to control the report of the treasurer on the “king's-house.” Similarly, if we possessed a list of the treasurer's duties, we should doubtless find that he received daily reports on the matters of the “court,” by means of which he was enabled to control the vizier's report on the “court,” which the vizier conducted directly by means of his messenger.

<sup>b</sup>The publication shows no lacuna, but the sense demands the inserted phrase.

<sup>c</sup>Sk.

<sup>d</sup>The confusion of pronouns is also in the original.

<sup>e</sup>The messenger.

he caused that something be entrusted to me.<sup>a</sup> Hear [the affair<sup>1</sup>] of this official ——— expiate those things, about which there has been litigation by the vizier in <sup>13</sup>his hall, in every [crime<sup>1</sup>], with greater<sup>b</sup> punishment than by cutting off a limb.

Criminals

683. Now, as for every act of the vizier, while hearing in his hall; and as for every one who shall — — — — [He shall record<sup>1</sup>] everything concerning which he hears him. He who has not disproved the charge<sup>c</sup> at <sup>14</sup>his hearing, which takes place [—], then it shall be entered in the criminal docket. He who is in the great prison,<sup>d</sup> not able to disprove the charge of his<sup>e</sup> messenger, likewise; when their case comes on another time, then one shall report and determine whether it is in the criminal docket, <sup>15</sup>and there shall be [executed<sup>1</sup>] the things concerning which entry was made, in order to expiate their offense.

Loan of Vizier's Records

684. As for any writing sent [by the vizier<sup>1</sup>] to any hall, being those which are not confidential,<sup>f</sup> it shall be taken to him<sup>g</sup> together with the documents of the keepers <sup>16</sup>thereof under seal of the (sḏm·w-) officers, and the scribes thereof after them; then he shall open it; then after he has seen it, it shall return to its place, sealed with the seal of the vizier. (But) if he furthermore ask for <sup>17</sup>a confidential writing, then let it not be taken by the keepers thereof.

Summons of Petitioner

685. Now,<sup>h</sup> as for every messenger whom the vizier sends on account of any petitioner, he shall cause that he go to him.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "put upon my neck." This message evidently furnishes the formula to be used by the messenger in reporting the replies of the officials to whom he has been sent.

<sup>b</sup>Ermann; lit., "with an increase upon punishment by, etc."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "warded off the evil."

<sup>d</sup>On our scanty knowledge of the prisons, see Spiegelberg, Studien, 64 ff.

<sup>e</sup>Of the vizier.

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "wrapped up."

<sup>g</sup>The official desiring to consult the document.

<sup>h</sup>On this and the following paragraph, see Gardiner, Inscription of Mes. 37, 38.

Real Estate Cases

686. Now, as for every petitioner to the vizier concerning lands, he shall dispatch him (the messenger) to him, in addition to a hearing of <sup>18</sup>the land-overseer and the local council<sup>a</sup> of the <sup>19</sup>district.<sup>b</sup> He shall decree a stay for him of two months for his lands in the South or North. As for his lands, however, which are near to the Southern City and to the court, he shall decree a stay for him of three days, being <sup>19</sup>that which is according to law; (for) he shall<sup>c</sup> hear every petitioner according to this law which is in his hand.

Reports of District Officials

687. It is he who brings in the officials of the district; it is he who sends them out; they report [to] him the affairs of their districts.

Wills, Etc.

688. Every property-list<sup>d</sup> is brought to him; it is he who seals it.

Settlement of Registered Boundaries

689. <sup>20</sup>It is he who administers the <sup>21</sup>gift<sup>1</sup>-lands<sup>e</sup> in all regions. As for every petitioner who shall say: "Our boundary is unsettled;" one shall examine whether it is under the seal of the official thereof; then he shall seize the seizures<sup>f</sup> of the local council who unsettled it.

Treatment of Unregistered Boundaries

690. Now, as for every remarkable case,<sup>g</sup> and everything pertaining thereto; do not look <sup>22</sup>at anything therein.

<sup>a</sup> D> d> t. Whether this is a hearing before the vizier or a local hearing under the charge of "messenger," is not clear.

<sup>b</sup> Tm >

<sup>c</sup> The verbal form (sdmt) seems to be incorrect.

<sup>d</sup> Such a property-list is frequently a will. A will, with the registration docket of the vizier's office upon it, is preserved to us; it reads: "(Date); Done in the office (lit., hall) of the vizier in the presence of the governor of the city and vizier Khety, by the seal-scribe of the people's-bureau, Amenemhet-Ameny." A remark, probably indicating the payment of the tax on the transfer, follows (Griffith, Kahun Papyri, Pl. XIII, ll. 9-12). The document is from the Middle Kingdom.

<sup>e</sup> These lands (šd) are thought by Moret to be the divisible lands held by tenantry as distinguished from indivisible tracts held by nobles (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 36).

<sup>f</sup> Meaning ?

<sup>g</sup> Unregistered land? Erman.

Manner of Petition

691. One shall put every petition<sup>a</sup> in writing, not permitting that he petition orally.<sup>b</sup> Every petitioner to the king shall be reported to him,<sup>c</sup> after he puts (it) in writing.

Intercourse between Court and Local Authorities

692. It is he who dispatches every messenger of the king's-house, L. P. H., who is sent to the mayors and village sheiks. It is he who dispatches <sup>22</sup>every circuit messenger, every expedition of the king's-house. It is he who acts as the one who — — [in] the South and North, the Southern Frontier (tp rsy) and Abydos (T<sup>2</sup> -wr). They shall report to him all that happens among them, on the first day of every four-month season; they shall bring to him the writing thereof, in their hands, together with their local council.

Mustering King's Escort

693. <sup>23</sup>It is he who gathers the troops, moving in attendance upon the king, in journeying northward or southward.

Garrison of Residence City

694. It is he who stations the rest who remain in the Southern City, (and) in the court, according to the decision in the king's-house, L. P. H.

General Army Orders

695. The commandant of the ruler's table<sup>d</sup> is brought to him, to his hall, together with <sup>24</sup>the council of the army, in order to give to them the regulation of the army.

Advisory Functions

696. Let every office, from first to last,<sup>e</sup> proceed<sup>f</sup> to the hall of the vizier, to take counsel with him.

Felling Timber

697. It is he who dispatches to cut down trees according to the decision in the king's-house.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "petitioner," strange as it seems; hence "he" in the next clause.

<sup>b</sup>Egyptian: "by hearing." <sup>c</sup>The vizier.

<sup>d</sup>A district commandant who delivered game and supplies for the prince's table. In the Middle Kingdom the nomarchs also had such officers.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "every first office to every last office."

<sup>f</sup>Only the determination of a verb of motion occupies the place where the verb should be.

Water-Supply

698. It is he who dispatches <sup>25</sup>the official staff, to attend to the water-supply<sup>a</sup> in the whole land.

Annual Plowing

699. It is he who dispatches the mayors and village sheiks to plow for harvest time.

Overseers of Labor?

700. It is he who [appoints] the overseers of hundreds in the hall of the king's-house.

Audience for Town Authorities

701. It is he who [arranges] the hearing of the mayors and village sheiks who go forth in his name, of South and North.

Administration of Fortresses

702. <sup>26</sup>Every matter is reported to him; there are reported to him the affairs of the southern fortress; and every arrest which is for seizing

Nome Administration, Boundaries, Etc.

703. It is he who makes the [—] of every nome; it is he who "hears" it. It is he who dispatches the [district] soldiers and scribes to carry out the [administration] of the king. <sup>27</sup>The records of the nome are in his hall. It is he who hears concerning all lands. It is he who makes the boundary of every nome, the field [—], all divine offerings<sup>b</sup> and every contract.

Record of Depositions, Etc.

704. It is he who takes every deposition; it is he who hears the rejoinder when a man comes for argument with his opponent.<sup>c</sup>

Appointment of Courts for Special Cases, Etc.

705. It is he who appoints every appointee <sup>28</sup>to the hall of judgment, when any litigant comes to him from the king's-house.<sup>d</sup> It is he who hears every edict.

<sup>a</sup>See I, 407, l. 6.

<sup>b</sup>Temple income.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "comes to words with his second." This evidently refers to argument of plaintiff and defendant before the vizier. See Gardiner, Inscription of Mes, 36, 37.

<sup>d</sup>He appoints members of special courts for cases where a member of the king's household is concerned.

Sacred and Royal Revenues in Residence City and Court

706. It is he who hears concerning the "Great Beauty" of every divine offering. It is he<sup>a</sup> who levies all taxes of the income, and who gives it to him [—] ——— every — in the Southern City, (and) in the court. It is he who seals <sup>29</sup>it under his seal. It is he who hears every matter; it is he who makes the distribution of the tribute to the crown possessions. The great council shall report to him their dues ——— every — that is brought to <sup>30</sup>the judgment-hall, and every offering to the judgment-hall, he shall hear concerning it. It is he who opens the gold-house, together with the chief treasurer. It is he who inspects the tribute of [all] lands<sup>b</sup> ——— <sup>31</sup>chief steward, together with the great council (d' d' t wr t). It is he who makes the [lists of] all bulls, [of] which a [list] is made.

Canal Inspection (?) in Residence City

707. It is he who inspects the [water-supply] (swr t)<sup>c</sup> on the first of every ten-day period [—] ——— <sup>32</sup>concerning every matter of the judgment-hall.

Revenues from Local Authorities

708. The mayors, village sheiks, and every man shall report to him, all their tribute. Every district supervisor, and every [overseer of] hundreds, they shall report to him every litigation [—] ——— <sup>33</sup>they shall report to him furthermore, monthly, in order to control the tribute. The treasurers and the (k' yb-) officials shall ———.

Observation of Sirius and High Nile

709. ——— the rising of Sirius, and the [—] of the Nile. There shall be reported to him the high (Nile)<sup>d</sup> ——— [— — —] <sup>34</sup>—.

Administration of Navy

710. It is he who exacts the ships for every requisition made upon him. It is he who dispatches every messenger of the king's-house to ———. When the king is with the army, it is he who makes report

<sup>a</sup>Read: ntf.

<sup>b</sup>This function of the vizier is depicted with great detail in a splendid series of wall scenes in this tomb (§§ 760 ff.).

<sup>c</sup>See Florence Stela, No. 1774.

<sup>d</sup>Similar duties are referred to in the tomb of Min (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 368), but the context is unfortunately broken. The following is visible: "——— concerning the affairs of the king's-house, conducting the work — — — of the high Nile."

———. <sup>35</sup>Report is made to him by all the officials of the head of the navy, from the highest to the lowest. It is he<sup>a</sup> who seals the edicts —— [—] of the keeper of [—] who is dispatched with a message of the king's-house.

Method of Reporting to Vizier

711. Every report shall be reported to him by <sup>36</sup>the doorkeeper of the judgment-hall, who reports [on his part] all that he (the vizier) does while hearing in the hall of the vizier.

III. THE SITTING OF THE VIZIER<sup>b</sup>

Scene

712. The vizier sits enthroned at one end of the hall; before him are the "Magnates of the South" and the "scribes of the vizier," in two rows on each side of the central aisle; in this aisle, directly in front of the vizier, are the forty rolls of the law (see § 675, l. 2). Two deputies are leading petitioners down the aisle, and outside are other deputies or door-keepers receiving the petitioners as they arrive.

Inscription

713. Sitting, in order to hear the petitioners, in the hall of the vizier; by the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, (mr t-ntr-) priest, chief of the six courts of justice, a mouth giving satisfaction in the whole land; (sm-) priest, [master of every wardrobe], judging justly, not showing partiality, sending two men forth satisfied, judging the weak and the powerful, not [bringing sorrow] to the one who petitioned him; satisfying the heart of the king before the Two Lands, prince before the people, companion approaching the sovereign, favorite of him who is in the palace.

IV. RECEPTION OF PETITIONS<sup>c</sup>

714. The following scene has unfortunately almost entirely disappeared; it portrayed the reception of petitions, from the people, regulated in the "Duties of the Vizier" (§§ 685 and 691).

<sup>a</sup>Text has nj; I emend to ntj.

<sup>b</sup>Pl. IV. See the description of the sitting in the first three lines of the preceding inscription (§ 675).

<sup>c</sup>Pl. XV.

Scene

Rekhmire stands leaning upon his staff, while scribes pass out among the people, where they receive and register complaints and petitions. Over Rekhmire is the following:

Inscription

715. Going forth over the land every morning to do the daily favors, to hear the matters of the people, the petitions of the South and the North; not preferring the great above the humble, rewarding the oppressed [— —], bringing the evil to him who committed it; by ——— [Rekhmire].

V. INSPECTION OF TAXES OF UPPER EGYPT

716. These important scenes,<sup>a</sup> representing the only tax-lists we possess, show the local officials of Upper Egypt paying their dues (yp·w) to the vizier. Just what part of the total revenues of Upper Egypt these dues formed, it is impossible to state; but that they were only a part is certain. For the inscription clearly indicates that they are only the dues exacted from the local officials (as a tax upon their offices), and not the taxes paid by the people, for which we find a different designation (bk·w), from that employed here. This tax (yp·w) upon the officials is the one remitted by Harmhab (III, 63). It was collected by the vizier, while the tax (bk·w) upon the people was, of course, collected by the chief treasurer. It is noticeable that the vizier has charge of these revenues (yp·w) only in Upper Egypt, showing clearly the extent of his fiscal jurisdiction. There was, of course, another vizier for Lower Egypt from below Assiut to the sea.<sup>b</sup>

Owing to the loss of a large portion of the lower rows, it is impossible to summarize and determine the total income of the crown from this source in Upper Egypt. Gold, silver, cattle, and linen form the most valuable items; of the others many are uncertain, and have therefore only been transliterated. The list begins with the fortresses of Bigeh and Elephantine at the first cataract, and extends as far north as Assiut. Some of the place-names are unknown, and have been merely transliterated below. The list is divided into two parts: the first from the cataract to Thebes, and the second from Thebes to Assiut; that is, the first above, the second below Thebes.

<sup>a</sup>Pls. V and VI. They are published for the first time by Newberry, having been passed over by all previous students of the tomb. We are therefore much indebted to him for their rescue.

<sup>b</sup>A relief at Berlin, for example, shows the two viziers (No. 12411); see additional references, Newberry, 17, n. 3, and a full statement, Gardiner, Inscription of Mes, 33. It is probable that the office was not divided before the Empire, and probably not before Thutmose III.

A. ABOVE THEBES

Scene

717. Rekhmire, at the right, receives the local officials, who advance in four lines, bringing their dues.<sup>a</sup> Over their heads are inscribed their titles, the names of the towns or localities to which they belong, and the amounts of their dues.

Over Rekhmire

Inspection of the taxes (yp w) counted to<sup>b</sup> (the credit of) the hall of the vizier of the Southern City, and counted against the mayors, the town-rulers, the district officials, the recorders of the districts, their scribes, and their field-scribes, who are in the South (Tp-ršy); beginning with Elephantine and the fortress of Bigeh; made according to the writings of ancient time, by the hereditary prince. . . . .<sup>c</sup> [Rekhmire].

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
718.	Commandant of the fortress of Bigeh ( Sn-mw t )	20 deben of gold 5 good hides apes; 10 bows 20 large staves of [cedar] wood

<sup>a</sup>There are thirty-one officials still preserved; of five of these the inscriptions with names and dues are lost. Besides this, at least three more, with their inscriptions, have been lost in the lower row; that is, nearly one-fourth of the officials with their dues are lost. How many names of localities are lost is uncertain.

<sup>b</sup>The two prepositions "to" or "for" (n) and "against" (r) are correlative, and antithetic, the first being the preposition of advantage, the second of disadvantage. This is precisely as in Arabic, where li and ‘alā(y) have the same relation; thus: li dāyūn = "A debt is (owing) to me" (lit., "to me is a debt") is opposed to: ‘alāyyā dāyūn = "I owe a debt" (lit., "against me is a debt"). See Uni, l. 36 (I, 320) for the same use of yp n, "count to."

<sup>c</sup>Omitted titles.

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
719.	Commandant of the fortress of Elephantine	40 deben of gold, tribute weight 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen ——— 6 deben of gold, in tribute weight a pedet of raiment a large 'bolt' <sup>1</sup> 2 deben of gold; 2 pedet of raiment; a large 'bolt' <sup>1</sup> ; 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen 1 deben of gold; 2 oxen ( ng<sup>2</sup>·w )
	Scribe of the recorder of Elephantine
	Kenbeti of Elephantine
	Scribe of Elephantine
720.	Recorder of Ombos	2 deben of gold; ——— 1 deben of gold, in tribute weight 3 large bolts; ——— — deben of silver, in tribute weight 4 deben of gold, in tribute weight 1 ox; 1 two-year-old
	Scribe of the Recorder of Ombos
	Kenbeti of Ombos
721.	Mayor of Edfu	8 deben of gold, tribute weight a great 'bolt' <sup>1</sup> gold (amount ?) 1 ox
	His scribe
	Recorder of Edfu
	Town-Ruler of Pr-mr-yw <sup>a</sup>	1 deben of gold 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen; 2 oxen
722.	Mayor of Nekhen	4 deben of gold 3 deben of silver 1 ox 1 two-year-old 3 deben of gold, in tribute weight 1 bead necklace ['of' gold] 2 oxen 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen; 1 chest of ( d<sup>2</sup>w- ) linen
	Kenbeti of Nekhen
	(Name lost, top row)	Garments, 2 ( pdt- ) bolts (Linen) 1 great ( sm<sup>2</sup>·t- ) 'bolt' <sup>1</sup> gold (amount ?)
	(Name lost, top row)	1 ( wn-dw- ) ox, 2 yearlings Gold, linen

<sup>a</sup>An uncertain town.

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
723.	Town-Ruler of Esneh	— of silver 8 of gold 2 oxen; grain, linen
	Scribe of the Islands of Esneh	2 deben of gold $\frac{1}{2}$ deben of silver 1 bead necklace <sup>of</sup> gold 1 ( wn-dw -) ox, 1 yearling; linen ( d'w -) linen
	Kenbeti of Esneh <sup>a</sup>	2 chests of ( mt -) linen grain 2 calves, 2 oxen ( s' )
724.	Recorder of Gebelen	1 deben of gold; $\frac{1}{2}$ deben of silver
725.	Scribe of the District of <sup>1</sup> —	Gold, bead necklace, linen, yearlings; two-year-olds; (numbers lost)
726.	Scribe of the Islands which are in the South ( tp-rsy )	2 deben of gold 30 pigeons <sup>c</sup> nb-tm't 2 oxen, 5 yearlings 1 chest of ( mt -) linen
727.	Recorder of Hermonthis	3 deben of gold 10 <sup>c</sup> nb-tm't 1 chest of ( mt -) linen
	Scribe of the Recorder of Hermonthis	Gold (amount lost) ( d'w -) linen
	Scribe of — the District of Hermonthis	2 deben of gold 1 chest of ( mt -) linen 40 pigeons 5 firstlings of the year 2 oxen, 5 yearlings Grain, honey
	Kenbeti of the District of Hermonthis	4 deben <sup>of</sup> gold 1 deben of silver 1 bead necklace <sup>of</sup> gold 1 chest of ( mt -) linen ( d'w -) linen
728.	Recorder of House of Hathor ( Pr-Hthr )	(Lost)

<sup>a</sup>Only the end of the name is preserved. In the second row next to Esneh there is another Kenbeti, whose place-name is lost. He brings gold (amount?), 1 chest of (mt-) linen, 2 heket of grain, and 1 heket of grain (sic!).

B. BELOW THEBES

729. The scene is the same as before.<sup>a</sup>Over Rekhmire

Inspection of the taxes (yp'w) counted to (the credit of) the hall of the vizier of the Southern City (and) counted against the mayors, the town-rulers, the district officials, the recorders of the districts, their scribes and the — of their fields, from above Koptos to below S[ut], by the hereditary prince . . . . . [Rekhmire].

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
730.	— in the midst of the City (Thebes)	1 deben of silver 3 deben of gold 1 chest of ( mt -) linen 2 two-year-olds 3 yearlings
731.	Scribe of the District of Rs-nj't	1 chest of ( mt -) linen Honey 3 heket of grain 3 yearlings 3 two-year-olds 2 full-grown (oxen) gold (amount lost); bead necklace
732.	— of Cusae	3 deben of gold 1 bead necklace [of] gold _____ _____ _____
	— of Cusae	— deben of gold — deben of silver _____ _____ _____

<sup>a</sup>The two lower rows have mostly disappeared; twenty-four figures of officials are visible, and the tribute of two more is partially preserved. Of these twenty-six, the dues of one are totally lost, while five more figures (at least) with their dues have also disappeared; thus the dues of about one-fifth of the officials have been lost; the number of place-names lost (if any) is uncertain.

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
733.	Kenbeti of the District of of Coptos	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1 deben of silver</li> <li><math>\frac{1}{2}</math> deben of gold</li> <li>10 measures of (<math>y^c h</math>-) grain</li> <li>1 heket of grain</li> <li>1 (<math>hbn' t</math>-) jar of honey; calves</li> </ul>
734.	Kenbeti of the District of Dendera	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1 deben of gold</li> <li>— — of silver</li> <li>(<math>y^c h</math>-) grain</li> <li>10 heket of grain</li> <li>1 (<math>hbn' t</math>-) jar of honey</li> <li>5 calves</li> <li>— two-year-olds</li> <li>1 ox</li> </ul>
735.	Mayor of Haturt-Amen- emhet ( $Ht-wr' t-Ymn-$ $m-h' t$ )	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>5 deben of gold</li> <li>1 deben of silver, tribute weight</li> <li>200 (<math>kw</math>-) loaves</li> <li>1,000 (<math>shl</math>-) loaves</li> <li>-3 <math>wdn</math></li> <li>10 sacks of [—]</li> <li>3 <math>tm</math></li> <li>5 calves</li> <li>3 yearlings</li> <li>3 two-year-olds</li> <li>2 (full-grown) oxen</li> <li>500 pigeons</li> </ul>
736.	Recorder of $W^3 h-ys' t$  Scribe of the Recorder of $W^3 h-ys' t$	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li><math>\frac{1}{2}</math> deben of gold</li> <li>1 chest of (<math>mt</math>-) linen</li> <li>1 (<math>hbn' t</math>-) jar of honey</li> <li>1 two-year-old</li> <li>1 bolt of (<math>d^3 -w</math>-) linen</li> <li>cattle</li> </ul>
737.	Recorder of Diospolis Parva ( $Ht-shm$ )  Scribe of the Recorder of Diospolis Parva	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>5 deben of gold</li> <li>1 heket of (<math>tb</math>-) grain</li> <li>(<math>\$^c</math>-) grain</li> <li>1 measure of (<math>y^c h</math>-) grain</li> <li>1 measure of (<math>sw' t</math>-) grain</li> <li>3 measures of southern grain</li> <li>1 measure of southern grain</li> <li>pigeons, linen (many items lost)</li> <li>3 deben of gold</li> </ul>

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
738.	Recorder of Abydos His scribe Scribe of the District of Abydos Kenbeti of Abydos	1 deben of gold ( mt- ) linen ( ḡ<sup>w</sup>- ) linen 1 ( hbn t- ) jar of honey 1 two-year-old 1 deben of gold 3 two-year-olds 1 deben of gold 1 bead necklace [of] gold 1 heket of grain 2 heket of southern grain oxen
739.	Mayor of Thinis	6 deben of gold $\frac{1}{2}$ deben of silver ( y<sup>c</sup> h- ) bread, 20 ( ḡw- ) loaves 10 sacks of [—] 10 <sup>c</sup> nb-ḡm<sup>c</sup> t 2 heket of grain 50 heket 10 heket of grain 1 ( hbn t- ) jar of honey 5 calves 6 yearlings 3 two-year-olds 2 (full-grown) oxen
740.	Scribe <sup>a</sup> of the District of the city of Min (Akhmim)	2 deben of gold 1 deben of silver 2 bead necklaces [of] [gold] 200 [—] 2 heket of grain —1 calves — two-year-olds 1 (full-grown) ox
741.	Recorder of Itfit His scribe	3 heket of southern grain 1 measure of grain 1 ( hbn t ) jar of honey 2 (full-grown) oxen
742.	Mayor of Pr-Ḥr	1 heket of southern grain 10 measures of ( sw t- ) grain 1 ( wn-dw ) ox 1 two-year-old ( šw- ) rolls

<sup>a</sup>Behind him was a figure now lost, with considerable tribute of grain, bread and cattle; the gold, if any, is lost. This may also belong to Akhmim.

	OFFICIAL AND PLACE	TAX
743.	Mayor —	1,000 ( sht- ) loaves ( sw t- ) grain 3 measures of grain southern grain 2 heket of grain 10 ( kw- ) loaves 1 ( hbn t- ) jar of honey im c t 1 yearling 1 (full-grown) ox
744.	Scribe of the District of c nt —	5 deben of gold 2 heket of grain 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen 1 chest of ( d w- ) linen — [deben] of gold 1 chest of ( mt- ) linen 1 chest of ( d w- ) linen
745.	Scribe of the Recorder of Siut <sup>a</sup>  Kenbeti of Siut	Grain 1 ( hbn t- ) jar of honey _____ _____ _____

VI. RECEPTION OF DUES TO THE AMON-TEMPLE<sup>b</sup>

746. In this scene is represented the reception of the products of the field, including honey, due to the temple of Amon. The products of a Punt expedition and the annual tribute of North and South, so often recorded in the Annals, are mentioned.

Scene

747. Rekhmire, with his suite behind him, is enthroned at the right. Before him, in three registers, are officials and servants, presenting, storing, recording, and preparing for use the products of Egypt and her tributary countries. Throughout this scene are distributed the following inscriptions:

<sup>a</sup>There are two scribes, the name occurring with each.

<sup>b</sup>Pls. XII-XIV.

Over Rekhmire

748. Reception of grain ( $y^c h$ ) and honey in the White House of the temple; sealing of all treasures in the [temple of Amon], by virtue of his office of master of secret things; by the hereditary prince, . . . . . the vizier, Rekhmire.

Over Grain Scene

749. Reception of grain ( $y^c h$ ) in the [temple of Amon].

Over Trituration of Grain

Pounding grain ( $y^c h$ ) in the White House of the [temple of Amon], in order to make an oblation [at] every feast, which his majesty established anew.

Over Flour-Sifting

Servants of the date-storeroom. "Haste thee every matter . . . . . thou shalt cause that we be praised."

Over Bakers

Making [loaves] for the oblation of the divine offerings. Doing safely and well the baking of the cake.

Over Men Doing Reverence

750. Speech of the fleet-captains: "According to the desire of thy heart, O prince! [Thy] every matter is very good; the treasuries are overflowing with the tribute of all countries: oil, incense, wine, . . . . . everything, all the products of Punt; bags and sacks bearing every good thing — — — in a myriad of hundred thousands, for King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life. May thy favor with his ka be every day.

Over Men Carrying Tribute

751. Introduction of wine into the storehouses ( $w\bar{d}$ ) by the vizier, Rekhmire. Reception of the tribute of the South country, together with the tribute of the Northland before . . . . . Rekhmire.

On the Storehouses

Gold-houses of the temple. Storehouse ( $w\bar{d}$ ) of the temple. Double gold-house.

VII. INSPECTION OF DAILY OFFERINGS AND OF MONUMENTS<sup>a</sup>Scene

752. Rekhmire, (figure erased) stands inspecting two lines of men with food-offerings, and two rows of statues of the king, behind which are weapons, temple furniture, and utensils.

Inscription over Rekhmire

Inspection of food of the divine offerings of every day; inspection of his —, and the beautiful monuments, which he executed for the Sovereign, the Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life forever, for the temple of Amon, and the temples which are in his —; by . . . . . [Rekhmire].

VIII. INSPECTION OF CRAFTSMEN<sup>b</sup>

753. We here see Rekhmire inspecting the artificers, who are making for the temple of Amon various vessels, doors, furniture, etc., from the precious metals and other costly materials captured in Thutmose III's wars in Asia.

Scene

Rekhmire stands leaning on his staff; behind him are his suite, and before him are long lines of craftsmen in leather, wood, stone, and various metals, busily engaged at their work. Over them are the following inscriptions:

Over Rekhmire

754. Inspection of every craft ————,<sup>c</sup> in order to cause every man to know his duty according to the stipulation of every affair, by the hereditary prince, count, who gives the regulation to the prophets, who directs the priests to their duty, governor of the (residence) city, chief of the six courts of justice, Rekhmire.

<sup>a</sup>Pl. XXII.<sup>b</sup>Pls. XVI-XVIII.<sup>c</sup>The lacuna here and at the beginning of the following inscription would indicate that the name of Amon had been erased in both places.

Over Gold Weighing

ᵀReckoningᵀ of the gold ———, in order to fulfil all business of the daily stipulation. Their number is myriads of hundred-thousands; before the vizier . . . . . Rekhmire.

Over Goldsmiths and Silversmiths

Making all vessels for the divine limbs; multiplying vases of gold and silver in every (style of) workmanship that endures forever.

Over Coppermiths

755. Bringing the Asiatic copper which his majesty captured in the victories in Retenu, in order to ᵀcastᵀ the [two doors<sup>a</sup>] of the temple of Amon in Karnak. Its pavement was overlaid with gold like<sup>b</sup> the horizon of heaven; by the governor of the (residence) city, and vizier.

They say: "The king, beautiful in monuments, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life forever; (as) he is (so) they are forever. . . . . He repeats monuments in the house of his father."

Over Cabinet-makers

Making chests of ivory, ebony, carob wood, meru wood, and of cedar of the best of the terraces; by this official who gives the regulation, guiding the hands of his craftsmen.

IX. INSPECTION OF SCULPTORS AND BUILDERS<sup>c</sup>

756. The heavier works of the Amon-temple are here under inspection by Rekhmire. Of particular interest are the Semitic foreigners, who appear among the brickmakers, of the "captivity which his majesty brought for the works of the temple of Amon." This is, of course, precisely what was afterward exacted of the Hebrews.

<sup>a</sup>These words are in Virey's copy (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, Pl. XV), but had been lost before Newberry's was made.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "in likeness to" (m sn't r), a circumlocution not uncommonly used for the simple "like" (my).

<sup>c</sup>Pls. XX and XXI.

Scene

Rekmire stands leaning on his staff, his suite behind him; and before him, at work, are stonemasons, sculptors, brickmakers, and builders. The inscriptions are as follows:

Over Rekmire

757. Inspection of all works of divine offerings of Amon in Karnak; causing every man to know his way, by virtue of his office as chief of works; by the hereditary prince, count, who establishes laws in the temples of the gods of the South and North . . . . ——— [Rekmire].

By Bricklayers<sup>a</sup>

758. The layer of brick who brings the field,<sup>b</sup> the very numerous [—]; building with ready fingers, skilled<sup>c</sup> in his duty, causing vigilance among the [conquered],<sup>d</sup> who hear the sayings of this official, skilful<sup>e</sup> in bui[lding] of works, giving regulation to their chiefs. [They say]: "He [supplies] us with bread, beer, and every good sort; he leads us, with a loving heart for the king, amiable — — King Menkheperre (Thutmose III), who builds the sanctuary of [the gods]; may they grant to him a reward therefor with myriads of years.

The taskmaster,<sup>f</sup> he says to the builders: "The rod is in my hand; be not idle."

By Brickmakers<sup>g</sup>

759. Captivity which his majesty brought, for the works of the temple of Amon.

By Bricklayer

Laying the brick, in order to build the storehouse anew, [in the temple of Amon] of Karnak.

<sup>a</sup>Pl. XX. The beginning of the inscription is very difficult and a little doubtful.

<sup>b</sup>A similar reference to a "clay-field" in Ineni (§ 106, l. 12).

<sup>c</sup>Wn-hr, wb 3-hr, and šs 3-hr are not uncommon, meaning "experienced, instructed, skilful."

<sup>d</sup>The captives of war shown in the same scene?

<sup>e</sup>The adjectives now refer to the prince.

<sup>f</sup>Dy-rs-ḏ 3 ḏ 3 = lit., "he who causes to be vigilant."

<sup>g</sup>Some of these are clearly Semitic foreigners.

By Builders

Let your hands build, ye people. Let us do the pleasure of this official in restoring the monuments of his lord in the house of his father Amon. His name is upon them, abiding, permanent, for both æons of years. The overseer of works, he saith to those bringing stone: "Strengthen your hands, ye people. Let us lay [the foundation] of stone, of work [—] — —."

X. RECEPTION OF FOREIGN TRIBUTE<sup>a</sup>

760. This is one of the most important scenes preserved in ancient Egypt. Similar scenes will be found in other Theban tombs, but none contains so elaborate, detailed, and extensive representations of the wealth of the Asiatic peoples, which was now flowing as tribute into the treasury of the Pharaohs. The pride of the Egyptian vizier, which led him to depict these official incidents in his career, has thus been the means of preserving to us much of the early civilization of Asia, which on its native soil has perished utterly.

Scene

761. At the right stands Rekhmire, while the foreigners, carrying their tribute, approach in five long lines from the left. At the head of each line is a scribe, who records their tribute as it is deposited in splendid profusion before him.

Inscription

Reception of the tribute of the south country, besides the tribute of Punt, the tribute of Retenu (Rṯnw), the tribute of Keftiyew, besides the booty of all countries which the fame of his majesty, King

---

<sup>a</sup>This scene has not yet been published by Newberry; I had only Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 505-10; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1110-1113 (whose description is taken bodily from Champollion); and the two plates in Wilkinson, Manners and Customs, I, Pl. II A and II B.

Menkheperre (Thutmose III), brought; by the hereditary prince . . . . .<sup>a</sup> Rekhmire.<sup>b</sup>

A weighing scene<sup>c</sup> shows the reckoning of “this great heap of electrum, which is (measured) by the heket, making 36,692<sup>d</sup> deben.”

XI. ACCESSION OF AMENHOTEP II

762. This scene is not yet published, but Newberry describes it (op. cit., 20) as showing Rekhmire after having sailed down-river to Hatsekhem to meet his new sovereign, presenting to him “the royal insignia.”

STELA OF INTEF THE HERALD<sup>e</sup>

763. This splendid stela was erected by the “royal herald” of Thutmose III, whose important offices were the following:

Hereditary prince and count, companion, great in love, count of Thinis of the Thinite nome, lord of the entire oasis region, great herald of the king.

<sup>a</sup>Titles, etc., of Rekhmire.

<sup>b</sup>An inscription over each of the five rows begins in each case: “Arrival in peace, of the chiefs of X” (Punt, Retenu, etc., as the case may be). To Keftiyew is added “and of the isles in the midst of the sea,” and to Retenu: “all the northern countries of the ends of the earth.” This introductory formula is followed by the conventional acclamations of the foreigners; but these inscriptions are not readable in Wilkinson’s plates. Champollion gives only the introductory formula of each row, and Newberry’s second volume containing these scenes has not yet appeared.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 39, d.

<sup>d</sup>About 8,943 pounds (troy).

<sup>e</sup>Now in the Louvre (C. 26), being doubtless the finest stela in that great collection. It is nearly 6 feet high by nearly 4 feet in width, and of the finest workmanship (see de Rougé, Notices des monuments, 84–89). It was published by Gayet, Stèles de la XII<sup>e</sup> dynastie, Pl. XIX, and the long inscription (partially) by Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1479–85). Owing simply to the name of its owner, “Intef,” it has always been attributed to the early Middle Kingdom. It has long been evident, both from its language and content, however, that it belongs to the Eighteenth Dynasty. The discovery of Intef’s tomb at Thebes by Newberry shows that this conclusion is correct, and that Intef lived in the reign of Thutmose III. The important conclusions regarding the oases in the Middle Kingdom, often drawn from this inscription (e. g., Maspero, Dawn, 432, n. 3, and ibid., 459, n. 3), are therefore to be given up.

Or again:

Hereditary prince and count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, favorite of the Good God, excellent scribe of computation, first herald of the king.

Again:

First herald of the judgment-hall (<sup>c</sup> rry' t).<sup>a</sup>

It would thus appear that the Oases, at least those of the Theban region, were dependents of the Thinite princes,<sup>b</sup> who have survived into the Eighteenth Dynasty and taken office at the court of the Pharaoh.

764. The stela contains, in a less formal list than the "Duties of the Vizier" (§§ 675 ff.), a similar statement of the duties of the "royal herald" (whm-stny<sup>c</sup> = lit., "royal reporter or repeater"). This statement, far from being an extract from the government archives, is but a random rehearsal, in a boastful style, of the powers of the court herald. It is evident that his office is only partially expressed by our word herald, for the duties of the Egyptian herald show him to have been of ministerial power and importance; they were the following:

1. The management of the formalities and ceremonies of court and palace (ll. 4-7, only part of l. 5).
2. Communication of the messages of the people and affairs of the land to the king<sup>d</sup> (l. 5).

<sup>a</sup>All the above titles are from the head of the stela; others will be found in the following translation.

<sup>b</sup>For another Thinite prince, who was also lord of the oasis, see Recueil, X, 141.

<sup>c</sup>So in Ahmose-pen-Nekhbet (ll. 10 and 13), but in Intef's inscription "whm-n-stny."

<sup>d</sup>Here he seems to cover the same ground as the vizier (Duties, 4, l. 5); but the vizier evidently reported larger affairs of state, while the herald communicated personal matters, of which we have an example in the brave deeds of Ahmose, which are regularly reported to the king by the "royal herald" (§§ 9 ff.).

3. Messenger of the judgment-hall (ʿry·t), or general administrative office of the Pharaoh (l. 6).

4. The communication to the people of all commissions laid on them by the Pharaoh (l. 7).

5. The communication, both to Egyptians and foreign countries, of the amount of their taxes, and verification of same (l. 8, and l. 27 end). This is but a specialization of 4.

6. To be in general the mouthpiece of the palace (l. 9).

7. To exercise a kind of police control, wherever the Pharaoh proceeded (ll. 10-12).

765. This unsystematic list of powers is followed by an enumeration of Intef's good qualities (ll. 13-20), to which is added, after an asseveration of its truth (ll. 20-22), a remarkable statement of the source of his success (ll. 22-24).

Finally, a rapid statement of the herald's duties abroad while accompanying the Pharaoh on his Syrian campaigns, completes the inscription (ll. 24-27). As the Pharaoh, in this instance, was Thutmose III, these brief references are of the greatest interest, showing the herald, as they do, preceding the great commander from town to town, and preparing his residence in the palaces of the Syrian princes.

Intef's Address to Passers-by

766. <sup>2</sup>He says: "O ye that live upon earth, all people (ʿrhy·t), every priest, every scribe, every ritual priest, who shall enter into this tomb of the necropolis; if ye love life, and think not on death, if your native gods shall favor you, if ye would not taste the fear of another land, <sup>3</sup>if ye would be buried in your tombs, if ye would bequeath your offices to your children; whether (ye be) one that readeth these words upon this stela, being a scribe; or one that heareth them, so shall ye say: 'An offering which the king gives, etc. . . . .'"

Intef's Duties

767. <sup>4</sup>For the ka of the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, favorite of the king, as leader of his army, who levies the official staffs and the soldiers, who counts the companions, who conducts the nobles, who makes the king's-confidants approach their places, leader of leaders, <sup>5</sup>guide of millions of men, superior of advanced offices, advanced in place, excellent in the (royal) presence, who sends up the words of the people (rhy' t), who reports the affairs of the Two Lands, who discourses concerning matters in the secret place, who enters with good things and comes out with favor, <sup>6</sup>who places every man upon his father's seat, who makes glad the heart and favors the favorites, at whose words the great arise, who does the errands of the judgment-hall (ry' t), who originates the regulations in the palace, L. P. H., who makes every man to know his duties, who gives the administration in the —, [great] <sup>7</sup>in power in the great seat (i. e., the palace), who silences the voice, and originates honors, who guards the foot from the place of silence, the counterpoise of the balances of the Good God, who conducts the people to that which they do, who says: "Let it be done," and it is done on [the instant], <sup>8</sup>like that which comes out of the mouth of a god; who lays commands on the people (hnm' t), to number their work (impost) for the king, who fixes the [reckoning] of every country, who furnishes the [supplies] of their princes, great in affairs at the counting of the numbers, prepared — <sup>9</sup>— — to do, knowing that which is in the heart of the king, L. P. H., the speaking tongue of him who is in the palace (i. e., the king), the eyes of the king, the heart of the lord of the palace, the instruction of the whole land, who binds the rebellious, who quiets the —, <sup>10</sup>— — from the hostile, strong-armed toward robbers, applying violence to them that apply violence, mighty-hearted against the mighty-hearted, who brings down the arm <sup>11</sup>of him whose — is high, who [shortens] the hour of the [cruel-hearted], who causes the evil-hearted to perform the regulation of the laws, although his heart is unwilling, great in terror among criminals, lord of fear among rebellious-<sup>12</sup>hearted, who binds the adversary, and repels the violent, the safety of the palace, the establisher of its laws, who quiets the multitude for their lord, the chief herald of the judgment-hall, count of Thinis of the Thinite nome, chief of all the oasis country, excellent scribe, solving writings, Intef, triumphant.

Intef's Qualities

768. <sup>13</sup>The only wise, equipped with knowledge, the really safe one, distinguishing the simple from the wise, exalting the craftsman, turning his back upon the ignorant, [—] in mind, very [complete] in mind, giving attention to hear the man of truth, <sup>14</sup>void of deceit, useful to his lords, accurate-minded, with no lie in him, experienced in every way, protector of the seemingly, hearer of his prayer, gentle toward the cold-hot one, interceding for him, who does according to his plans, not — <sup>15</sup>the truthful, understanding the heart,<sup>a</sup> knowing the thoughts, when nothing has come forth from the lips, speaking to wit: according to his thought; there is none, whom he hath not known, turning his face to him that speaks the truth, disregarding him that speaketh lies, who does [—] to — — ,<sup>16</sup>not mild toward the [loquacious], but opposing him by doing the truth, content with giving satisfaction, not exalting him that knew not above him that knew, going about after the truth, giving attention to hear petitions, judging — <sup>17</sup>for him who is without offense and for the liar, free from partiality, justifying the just, chastising the guilty for his guilt, servant of the poor, father of the fatherless, — — <sup>18</sup>of the orphan, mother of the fearful, [dungeon] of the turbulent, protector of the weak, advocate of him who has been deprived of his possessions by one stronger than he, husband of the widow, shelter of the orphan [making] the weep<sup>19</sup>er rejoice, [— — —], who is praised on account of his character, for whom the worthy thank god, because of the greatness of his worth, for whom health and life are besought by all people (rhy t), great herald of the judgment-hall, <sup>20</sup>chief steward, overseer of the double granary, leader of all works of the king's L. P. H. estate, to whom all offices report, who counts the impost of the leaders, the mayors and the village sheiks of the South and the North excellent scribe, Intef, triumphant.

Intef's Asseveration

769. He says: "Those were my qualities, of which <sup>21</sup>I have testified; there is no deceit therein; these were my excellencies in very truth, there is no exception therein. Nor was there any likening of words to boast for myself with lies, but that was my color, <sup>22</sup>which I showed; that was my office in the king's L. H. P. estate, that was my service at the court L. P. H., that was my [duty] in the judgment-hall.

Intef's Explanation of His Success

770. <sup>b</sup>It was my heart which caused that I should do it, by its leading of my affairs; it is — — <sup>23</sup>an excellent witness, I did not violate its speech, I feared to transgress its leading; I prospered on account of it exceedingly. I was excellent by reason of that which it caused that I should do, I was valuable by reason of its leading. 'Lo, — — —,'<sup>24</sup> said the people, 'it is an oracle of the gods, which is in every body. He is a counsellor, whom it has led to the goodly way of achievement.' Lo, thus I was.

<sup>a</sup>On this passage, cf. my article, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 47.

<sup>b</sup>On this remarkable passage, see my article, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 47.

Intef's Duties Abroad

771. I followed the King of the Two Lands, I struck into his tracks in the countries, — —<sup>25</sup> — the earth, I arrived at its end, being at the heels of his majesty, L. P. H., my valor was like the lords of strength, and I captured like his brave ones. Every palace in a country — —<sup>26</sup> — before the troops, at the head of the army. When my lord arrived in safety where I was, I had prepared it (the palace), I had equipped it with everything that is desired in a foreign country, made better than the palaces of Egypt, <sup>27</sup>purified, cleansed, set apart, their mansions adorned, (each) chamber for its proper purpose, I made the king's heart satisfied with that which I did, — — —. I numbered the tribute of the rulers dwelling in every country, consisting of silver, gold, oil, incense, wine."

TOMB OF MENKHEPPERSENEB<sup>a</sup>

772. This tomb is one of the most interesting and important at Thebes. Menkheperreseneb, besides being High Priest<sup>b</sup> of Amon under Thutmose III, was also "overseer of the gold-house and overseer of the silver-house," as well as chief architect in the temple of Amon, and "chief of the overseers of craftsmen." As treasurer, he is depicted in his tomb receiving the tribute of Asia, and the treasure from the mines of Africa; while as architect and chief of the master-craftsmen, we find him in charge of Thutmose

<sup>a</sup>In the cliff of Shekh Abd-el-Kurna at Thebes, published by Piehl, Inscriptions, I, Pl. 127 P-129 and 102-5; Virey, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 197 ff. I had also a copy of the building inscription, kindly furnished me by Mr. Newberry.

<sup>b</sup>See his statue (Annales, IV, 8, 9) found at Karnak, according to which he was a son of Rekhmire.

III's great works in the Karnak temple, recounted in this king's building inscriptions (§§ 599 ff.).

Scene of Asiatic Tribute

773. Two lines of Asiatics bring forward splendid and richly chased vessels of gold, silver, etc. The Asiatics are designated as "the chief of Keftiyew, the chief of Kheta, the chief of Tunip (Tnḫw), the chief of Kadesh." Before them is an inscription:

Giving praise to the Lord of the Two Lands, obeisance to the Good God, by the chiefs of every land. They acclaim the victories of his majesty; their tribute is upon their backs, being every [product] of God's-Land: silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, every splendid, costly stone . . . . .

A line of superscription contains the acclamations of the Asiatics; the bulk of it is lost:

——— the sea; thy fear is in all lands. Thou hast overthrown the lands of Mitanni (My-tn —); thou hast hacked up their cities, their chiefs are in caves — —.

Reception of Gold

774. Another scene shows the deceased receiving shipments of gold, from the "captain of the gendarmes of Coptos" and the "governor of the gold-country of Coptos."

Reception of gold of the highland of Coptos, besides gold of Kush the wretched, being the yearly dues — —; by Menkheperreseneb.

Inspection of Workmen

775. Again we see the deceased inspecting the work of the craftsmen, accompanied by the words:

Viewing the workshop of the temple of [Amon], the work of the craftsmen, in real lapis lazuli, and in real malachite, which his majesty made after the design of his heart,<sup>a</sup> to be [monuments] for his father, <sup>a</sup>These very works are shown in the great relief depicting the presentation of monuments to Amon by Thutmose III at Karnak (§ 545), accompanied by the same words, showing that Thutmose III himself furnished the design to the craftsmen.

Amon, in [the house of Amon], abiding, flourishing as eternal works; by the hereditary prince, count, pleasing the king as the establisher of his monuments, chief of the overseers of craftsmen, chief of works in the [house of] Amon, first prophet of [Amon], Menkheperreseneb. He says:

A Shrine

"I inspected when the lord, King Thutmose III, erected [a shrine,] called 'Thutmose-III-is-the-Wearer-of-the-Diadem-of-Amon,' of enduring granite, in one block,<sup>a</sup> upon the [canal] —————<sup>b</sup>wrought with electrum, the [hall] being of sandstone, wrought with gold of the best of the hills ————— wrought with gold."

A Second Shrine

776. "I inspected, when his majesty erected a great<sup>c</sup> shrine of electrum (called): 'Thutmose-III-is-Great-in-Love-in-the-House-of-Amon.'"

Colonnade

"I inspected when his majesty made a great colonnade,<sup>d</sup> [wrought] with electrum — — —."

Obelisks and Flagstaves

"I inspected when his majesty erected obelisks and numerous flagstaves for his father, Amon. I pleased his majesty while conducting the work on his monuments. I did these things, without being unpleasant to the heart of —————."

STELA OF NIBAMON<sup>e</sup>

777. This official lived at Thebes under the early Thutmoseids, and finally became steward of Nebetu, one of <sup>a</sup>A monolithic chapel of granite, such as still exists, for example, at Edfu.

<sup>b</sup>The following is either a different building, the account of which began in the preceding lacuna, or the hall in which the shrine stood.

<sup>c</sup>So Piehl; Newberry, "beautiful."

<sup>d</sup>This is doubtless the building at the east end of the Karnak temple; but may be the attempted restoration of the hall dismantled for Hatshepsut's obelisks.

<sup>e</sup>Stela in his tomb in the hill of Drah-abu-'n-Neggah, at Thebes; published by Bouriant, Recueil, IX, 95-97.

Thutmose III's wives, and chief captain of the king's fleet. His tomb stela is chiefly devoted to the usual mortuary prayers, in the midst of which he refers to his favor under the first three Thutmoseids. The name of Thutmose I is evidently lost in one of the numerous lacunæ; but Nibamon seems to have received gifts of land and cattle from this king. He then says:

Favor under Thutmose II

778. <sup>17</sup>My lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okhepernere (Thutmose II), triumphant, repeated favors to me; he appointed me overseer of the hall (h<sup>3</sup>) of the king.

Favor under Thutmose III

779. My lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), given life, repeated favors to me; he magnified <sup>18</sup>me until I was at the front; he appointed me as steward of the king's-wife, Nebetu (Nb<sup>3</sup> t-w), triumphant. My lord, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre, <sup>19</sup>given life, repeated favors to me; he appointed me to be captain of all the ships of the king. There happened no oversight of mine, nor was there found any neglect of mine. I <sup>1</sup>was not associated with <sup>20</sup>evil, but I attained a revered old age, being in the favor of the king's presence.

Then follows a final prayer, addressed to the living.

REIGN OF AMENHOTEP II

ASIATIC CAMPAIGN

780. Syria, of course, revolted on the death of Thutmose III, and already in his second year we find his energetic son, Amenhotep II, on the march into northern Syria to quell the rebellion. Doubtless the harbor cities had also rebelled, and hence the young king is forced to proceed by land. Leaving Egypt in April, as his father had done on the first campaign thirty-three years before, he had already in early May won a battle at Shemesh-Edom in northern Palestine. On the twelfth of May he crossed the Orontes, and gained a skirmish near the river. He celebrated a feast of thanksgiving to Amon there, and fourteen days later (May 26) he arrived at Niy, which opened its gates to him and received him with acclamation. June 5 he reached and punished the rebellious city of Ikathi, which was plotting against its Egyptian garrison. Somewhere in Naharin he set up his tablet of victory,<sup>a</sup> as his father and grandfather had done before him. Here the sources fail, and the further course of the campaign is unknown until the king's return to Egypt; but it is clear that the coalition against Egypt was crushed in Tikhsi, probably at the battle on the Orontes, for on his return in the autumn the king brought back with him to Thebes "the seven princes who were in the district of Tikhsi," and sacrificed them himself before Amon. Early in the following July we find the king in Nubia, arranging the completion of his father's temples at Elephantine and Amâda. In both he set up a tablet bearing the same inscription, recording the building and mentioning the seven princes, six of whom he says he hanged on the walls of Thebes, and the seventh on the walls of Napata. At Napata or above it he set up a tablet marking his southern boundary (§ 800). It is perhaps on his return from this last errand that he stops at Amâda for the foundation ceremonies of the temple.

---

<sup>a</sup>Turra inscription of Minhotep (§ 800).

The said Amâda and Elephantine stelæ, another at Karnak, and a Karnak chapel are the only sources for this campaign.<sup>a</sup>

I. KARNAK STELA<sup>b</sup>

781. Above is a relief in two parts, each showing the king offering to Amon-Re. Between the two parts is a vertical line of text recording the restoration of the monument by Seti I, just as on the Building Inscription of Amenhotep III.

Date and Introduction

782. 1[Year 2]° ——— under the majesty of:

°Horus: Mighty Bull, Great of Strength; ——— Part of Atum;

<sup>a</sup>An inscription from a tomb at Shekh Abd-el-Kurna probably refers to his campaigns in calling the deceased "a follower of the king on his journeys on water, on land, and in every country; to whom has been given favors of the king's-presence, consisting of rings of electrum" (Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 135).

<sup>b</sup>A pink granite stela, found by Champollion against the second of the southern pylons at Karnak, in a deplorably fragmentary condition. Text: Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 185, 186 (only ll. 1-10; l. 9 is not omitted as indicated); Maspero, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XVII, 56, 57 (only ll. 3-10, copying Champollion); Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 175, 176; Bouriant, Recueil, XIII, 160, 161; Wiedemann, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 422, 423; a new fragment by Legrain, Annales, IV. The text is corrupt, being full of errors, like the omission of the determinative (important emendations by Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1889, 39-41). The reason for these errors is the careless restoration of the text after its erasure by the emissaries of Ikhnaton. See Legrain, Annales, IV.

<sup>c</sup>The tablet of Amâda below (§§ 791 ff.), dated in year 3, speaks of an Asiatic campaign already completed; it can hardly refer to any other than this campaign to Niy. Hence the latter would have taken place in the year 1 or 2, more probably the latter. The lacuna at the beginning of each line is four or five words long.

<sup>d</sup>The complete titulary of Amenhotep II.

Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Mighty in Opulence, Who is Crowned in Thebes;

Golden Horus: Who Seizes by His Might in all Lands;

<sup>2</sup>[King of Upper and Lower Egypt] ——— Opet: Okheperure, Lord — of the Sword, Who Binds the Nine Bows;

Son of Re, of his Body, Lord of All Countries: Amenhotep (II), Divine Ruler of Heliopolis, Giver of Life, Forever, like Re.<sup>a</sup>

Battle of Shemesh-Edom

783. <sup>3</sup>[His majesty was] in the city of Shemesh-Edom (Š-m-šw-y-tw-my);<sup>b</sup> his majesty furnished an example of bravery there; his majesty himself fought hand to hand. Behold, he was like a fierce-eyed lion, smiting the countries of Lebanon ([R-m]-n-n)<sup>c</sup> <sup>4f</sup> — — — — — -s-ḥw<sup>d</sup> was his name.

Booty

List of that which his majesty himself captured on this day: Asiatics, 18 living persons; 16 horses.<sup>e</sup>

Battle on the Orontes

784. First month of the third season (ninth month), day 26; his majesty crossed over the ford of the Orontes<sup>f</sup> on this day, caused to cross šf — — — — — ḥ — — — — — like the might of Montu of Thebes. His majesty raised his arm, in order to see the end of the

<sup>a</sup>The complete titulary of Amenhotep II.

<sup>b</sup>A town of northern Palestine, which occurs in the first of Thutmose III's town-lists as: Š ḏ-my-š ḏ-y-t ḏ-my (No. 51).

<sup>c</sup>The undoubtedly correct restoration of Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1889, 39. Wiedemann's variants only show the decay of the stone since Champollion.

<sup>d</sup>Remnant of the name of a chief or a country.

<sup>e</sup>All the texts but de Rougé have "oxen," but "horses" is certainly confirmed by the context.

<sup>f</sup>Texts all have y-r ḏ-s-ḥ, but Brugsch read "Arinath," hence the wavy-lined n, which is straight in hieratic, has been transferred to the stone straight; it has been read as an s by all modern copyists but Brugsch. There is no question, therefore, concerning the emendation to n first made by Maspero. Geographically, the emendation is also convincing. From a northern Palestinian city the king marches northward to Lebanon; this course continued would bring him to the Orontes. Moreover, the identical phrase, "crossed over the channel of the Orontes," with the same rare word (mšd' t) for "channel" (or "ford?") occurs in Ramses II's Kadesh campaign (III, 308, l. 12). The objections of Bissing (Statistische Tafel, 34) are not convincing. Petrie's identification with Harosheth on the earth;<sup>a</sup> his majesty descried a few Asiatics (Sṭtyw) coming on horses ḫr—<sup>1</sup> coming at a ḫgallop<sup>1</sup> (rkrk). Behold, his majesty was equipped with his weapons of battle, his majesty conquered with<sup>b</sup> the might ḫof Set<sup>1</sup> in his hour. They retreated when his majesty looked at one ḫof<sup>c</sup> them. Then his majesty himself overthrew their ḫ—<sup>1d</sup>, with his spear ḫ— — —<sup>1</sup>. Behold, he carried away this Asiatic ḫ—<sup>1</sup>, <sup>8</sup>his horses,<sup>e</sup> his chariot, and all his weapons of battle. His majesty returned with joy of heart [to]<sup>f</sup> his father, Amon; he (his majesty) gave to him a feast ḫ—<sup>1</sup>.

Booty

785. List of that which his majesty captured on this day:<sup>g</sup> ḫhis horses, 2; chariots, 1; a coat of mail; 2 bows; a quiver, full of arrows; a corselet; and ḫ—<sup>1h</sup>.

Arrival at Niy

786. Second month of the third season<sup>i</sup> (tenth month), day 10; passing <sup>10</sup>southward toward Egypt, his majesty proceeded by horse to Kishon (Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 155) is impossible, for the king is already in the Lebanon, and has left the Kishon far behind. The route by which Amenhotep advanced northward from Shemesh-Edom is not certain, but the crossing of the Orontes is doubtless the last one as he turned toward the Euphrates. This would be most naturally at Senzar. He would then march by way of Aleppo to Niy, which was about 175 miles from Senzar. That he reached Senzar is shown by his list in § 798A. This suits his marching speed also, as he would have made about 12½ miles a day from Senzar to Niy.

<sup>a</sup>There may be a reference here to the common designation of this remote region as the "end of the earth," but it more probably refers merely to the king's shading his eyes that he might scan the horizon.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "behind."

<sup>c</sup>Legrain's lacuna of 24 cm. is of course impossible; it is improbable also at the head of the next two lines.

<sup>d</sup>ḫntw. <sup>e</sup>Lit., "his span" (ḫtry).

<sup>f</sup>Restore n, "to," according to Amāda tablet, ll. 16, 17 (§ 797).

<sup>g</sup>There is no line omitted here, as Champollion indicates.

<sup>h</sup>The same word (ḫntw) applied to the corselet (ḫḫ nr) is found in Thutmose III's first campaign, l. 23 (ḫntw-ty?).

<sup>i</sup>The texts of de Rougé, Bouriant, Wiedemann, and Brugsch's translations show "month II," not III, as usually read from Champollion. That Shemu (not 'akhet) is to be read here is clear from the determinative and the other dates (ll. 4 and 13; note, l. 13). Maspero now accepts this (Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 291), although he formerly read 'akhet. Petrie's date (Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 155) is therefore about five months too late; for had this date been in another year, the year must have been added. The arrival at Niy is therefore fourteen days after the crossing of the Orontes.

the city of Niy. Behold, these Asiatics of this city, men as well as women, were upon their walls praising his majesty, <sup>11</sup>— — — to the Good God.

Revolt of Ikathi

787. Behold, his majesty heard saying, that some of those Asiatics (Sṯ tyw) who were in the city of Ikathi (Y-kʷ-ty) had [plotted<sup>1</sup> (ngm gm) to make a plan for casting out the infantry<sup>a</sup> of his majesty <sup>12</sup>[who were]] in the city, in order to overturn — — — who were loyal to his majesty. Then [his] majesty put them in [— — —] in this city <sup>13</sup>— — he —<sup>b</sup> them immediately, and he pacified [this] city ——— against the entire country —.<sup>c</sup> Second month<sup>d</sup> of the third season (tenth month),<sup>d</sup> day 20 (+x). <sup>14</sup>— [—————], made the city of Ikathi [Y-kʷ]-ṯ<sup>2</sup> ————— <sup>15</sup>————— <sup>16</sup>—————.

788. The remainder as far as l. 29 shows but a few scattered traces, of which the following are significant: “of his children. Statement of that which [his majesty] captured” (l. 21); “his chariot” (l. 26); “list of captives” (l. 27); “[weapon]s of war without number” (l. 28); “his majesty was adorned with [his] regalia” (l. 29). The record then becomes more connected:

Overthrow of Khatithana

789. <sup>30</sup>————— His majesty —<sup>e</sup> the tribe of Khatithana (Hʷ-ty-ṯ<sup>2</sup>-nʷ) united <sup>31</sup>— —. Behold, the chief<sup>f</sup> — — — — the city, for fear of his majesty. His chiefs, his wives, his children were carried captive, <sup>32</sup>and all his people likewise. Statement of that which his majesty himself captured — — — — his horses.

<sup>a</sup>Probably the Egyptian garrison of the town.

<sup>b</sup>Verb.

<sup>c</sup>Possibly the name of the country, containing kh.

<sup>d</sup>This date is very important, showing (1) that we must read Shemu (the third season, not ḥt, the first season) in l. 10 above, and (2) that we must read second month (in l. 10) with all the copies (except Champollion).

<sup>e</sup>Verb.

<sup>f</sup>The position of the introductory words (before the lacunæ) in ll. 31 and 32 is not certain.

Return to Egypt

790. <sup>33</sup>— — day 27; his majesty went forth from the house of the Beautiful-of-Face (Ptah)<sup>a</sup> and proceeded [to] — Memphis, bearing the plunder which he had taken in the country of Retenu. List of that which was taken:

Nobles ( my-r 2-y-n ) <sup>2</sup> alive	34550 (+x)
Their [wiv]es	240
[Vessels wrought] of gold	6,800 <sup>b</sup> deben
Copper	500,000 <sup>c</sup> deben
<hr/>
Horses	210
Chariots	300

The whole land beheld the victories of his majesty.

<sup>35</sup>By the Good God, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offerings — — — —<sup>d</sup> beloved of Amon, protector of him who is in Thebes, celebrator of the feasts of the house of Amon, lord of Thebes, [— —], Son of Re, Thutmose (IV),<sup>e</sup> given life [forever] and ever.

II. AMÂDA<sup>f</sup> AND ELEPHANTINE<sup>g</sup> STELÆ

791. Both are dedication tablets, the upper half of which is occupied by an oblation scene: at Amâda, Amenhotep II offering wine to Harakhte and Amon-Re, all in a sacred boat; at Elephantine, the king once with Amon and

<sup>a</sup>Or: "the beautiful house, proceeding" (hr wd), etc.

<sup>b</sup>1,657½ pounds, troy.                      Nearly 100,000 pounds.

<sup>d</sup>Royal name is lost.

<sup>e</sup>If this is correct, the stela was erected by Thutmose IV, son of Amenhotep II.

<sup>f</sup>On the interior of the back wall of the sanctuary of the temple of Amâda. Text: Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 105-7 (very imperfectly and incorrectly copied); Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 65, a; Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1280 (only ll. 12-20). I had also the Berlin lexicon copy, collated by Erman with the squeeze of Lepsius, and a collation of the original by Steindorff.

<sup>g</sup>From a similar position in the Elephantine temple (now perished); the upper part with the relief and parts of thirteen lines of text is in Vienna (No. 141); the lower portion is in Cairo (No. 158). I had: my own photograph and von Bergmann's publication (Recueil, IV, 33 ff.) of the Vienna fragment; two copies of the Cairo fragment, one by Steindorff and one by Schaefer, which they kindly loaned me; and a photograph by Borchardt.

Anuket and once before Khnum, receiving “life and stability.” Both tablets were intended to mark the “station of the king,” both record similar buildings in the year 3 (material at Elephantine is better), and the same facts regarding the Asiatic princes. The differences in wording are almost nil. The Elephantine stela has an interesting addition from the year 4.

Date and Introduction

792. <sup>1</sup>Year 3, third month of the third season (eleventh month), day 15,<sup>a</sup> under the majesty of . . . . .<sup>b</sup> Amenhotep<sup>c</sup> (II), beloved of Harakhte and Amon, lord of Thebes, <sup>2</sup>Good God, creation of Re, sovereign who came forth from the body, mighty; likeness of Horus upon the throne of his father; great in strength, whose like does not exist; of whom a second is not found. He is a king very weighty of arm; there is not one who can draw his bow<sup>d</sup> among his army <sup>3</sup>among the hill-country sheiks (or) among the princes of Retenu, because his strength is so much greater than (that of) any king who has ever existed; raging like a panther, when he courses through the battlefield; there is none fighting before him; an archer mighty in smiting; <sup>4</sup>a wall protecting Egypt; firm of heart, [—] in the hour of [conflict]; trampling down those who rebel against him; [instantly] prevailing against all the barbarians with people and horses,<sup>e</sup> when they came with myriads of men, while they knew not that Amon-Re was <sup>5</sup>his ally, (nor) that he would be seen to [approach] instantly, strength in his limbs;<sup>f</sup> likeness of Min

<sup>a</sup>The date of the Elephantine tablet is lost; but it was earlier than the “year 4,” in which an addition was made to it.

<sup>b</sup>Full five-name titulary.

<sup>c</sup>Chiseled away and reinserted (Steindorff).

<sup>d</sup>This is the basis for the well-known legend of Herodotus (III, 21), which represents Cambyses as unable to draw the bow of the king of Ethiopia (Schaefer, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 38, 66 f.). It is a not uncommon statement. Curiously enough, the bow of Amenhotep II was found in his tomb; it bears an inscription designating him as “smiter of the Troglodytes, overthrower of Kush, hacking up [their] cities . . . . . the great wall of Egypt, protector of his soldiers” (Cairo, Catalogue, 24120).

<sup>e</sup>This is not a generality, but doubtless specifically refers to a battle with the Asiatics in the campaign of the previous year.

<sup>f</sup>The god's strength in the king's limbs.

in the year of terror. There is not one that saves himself from him; he makes a [slaughter] among his enemies, the Nine Bows likewise. All lands and all rebellious countries pay him impost, <sup>6</sup>for he is a king [————]. There is not one who makes a boundary with him;<sup>a</sup> (but) they live by his breath. King of kings, ruler of rulers, who captures the boundaries <sup>7</sup>of [— —]; the only mighty one, whose fame is exalted<sup>b</sup> until Re in heaven knows it, (and) the one who faces him<sup>1</sup> in the day of smiting. There is no boundary made for him toward all countries united, (or) toward all lands together; (but) they fall instantly because of his flaming crest, like ———— <sup>8</sup>—————. There is none among them that escapes from the overthrow, like the foes of Bastet on the road of Ir-Amon.<sup>c</sup> It is a happy chance for all those who know that he is his real son, who came forth from (his) limbs, one <sup>9</sup>with him, in order to rule that which the sun encircles, all the lands, and countries which he knew, that he might seize them immediately with victory and power.

Buildings and Offerings

793. He is a king with heart favorable to the buildings of all gods, being one who builds their temples (and) fashions their statues. The divine offerings <sup>10</sup>are established for the first time, loaves and beer in plenty and (ht-c) fowl in multitude as a daily offering every day, forever; large cattle and small cattle at their seasons, without [—].<sup>d</sup> He gave the house to its lord, supplied with everything, with oxen,<sup>11</sup> calves, young cattle, fowl [without] limit, this temple being supplied throughout with loaves and wine. He established [revenues] for the first time [for] (his) fathers, the gods,<sup>e</sup> to be seen of the people, <sup>12</sup>to be known of all.

Completion of Temple

794. Behold, his majesty beautified<sup>f</sup> the temple which his father, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III), had <sup>a</sup>It is all his own matter where a boundary shall be.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "of exalting his fame."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "begotten of Amon" = the king (Erman).

<sup>d</sup>See long Khnumhotep inscription (I, 637, l. 201).

<sup>e</sup>Elephantine: "Khnum."

<sup>f</sup>"Beautified" means here (as on the Lateran and Popolo obelisks) "to supply with inscriptions," the monument having been left uninscribed by Thutmose III.

made for (his) fathers, all the gods,<sup>a</sup> built of stone as an everlasting work. The walls around it are of brick,<sup>b</sup> the doors of [cedar of the best<sup>c</sup>] <sup>13</sup>of the Terraces; the doorways are of sandstone,<sup>b</sup> in order that the great name of his father, the Son of Re, Thutmose (III), may remain in this temple forever and ever.

Foundation Ceremony

795. The majesty of this Good God, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Okheprure (Amenhotep II) extended the line and loosened the [—] for all the fathers,<sup>d</sup> [the gods] <sup>14</sup>making for it<sup>e</sup> a great pylon of sandstone opposite<sup>f</sup> the hall of the <sup>15</sup>sacred chamber<sup>1</sup> in the august dwelling;<sup>g</sup> surrounded by columns of sandstone as an everlasting work; many tables<sup>h</sup> with vessels of silver and bronze, oblation-standards, <sup>16</sup>altars, fire-pans, <sup>17</sup>oblation-vessels<sup>1</sup>, oblation-tablets, [—].

Erection of the Tablet

796. Then his majesty caused that this tablet should be made and set up in this temple in the place of the Station of the King,<sup>i</sup> and engraved with the great name of the Lord of the Two Lands, <sup>16</sup>the Son of Re, Amenhotep (II), Divine Ruler of Heliopolis in the house of the fathers, the gods,<sup>j</sup> after the return<sup>k</sup> of his majesty from Retenu the Upper, having overthrown all his enemies, extending the boundaries of Egypt, on the first victorious campaign.

<sup>a</sup>Elephantine: "Khnum, lord of the cataract, his mother, Satet, mistress of Elephantine, and Anuket, presider over Nubia (T> pd·t)."

<sup>b</sup>Elephantine: "the doors of cedar, wrought with copper, the portals of enduring granite."

<sup>c</sup>Restored from Ineni, l. 8. (§ 103).

<sup>d</sup>Elephantine: "Khnum."

<sup>e</sup>The temple.

<sup>f</sup>Elephantine: Hjt-hr. The first pylon and the colonnaded hall behind it are referred to; but these, with the exception of the back row of columns, were all inscribed by Thutmose IV, and must have been left unfinished by Amenhotep II.

<sup>g</sup>Elephantine: "in the august colonnade."

<sup>h</sup>The account merges into a list of temple furniture given by the king without any syntactical connection with the preceding.

<sup>i</sup>His ceremonial position. See § 140, l. 7, and note.

<sup>j</sup>Elephantine: "Khnum, lord of the cataract."

<sup>k</sup>If he arrived at about the time of Thutmose III's return from the first campaign (§ 409), the Amâda stela is then dated about nine and a half months later than his arrival; for it is impossible to suppose that this Shemu of the Asiatic campaign is the same as the Shemu of the Amâda stela, which would then be only twenty-five days later than the last date readable in the Asiatic campaign.

Sacrifice of Asiatic Princes

797. When his majesty returned <sup>17</sup>with joy of heart to his father, Amon, he slew with his own weapon the seven princes,<sup>a</sup> who had been in the district of Tikhsi (Ty-k-sy), and had been placed head downward at the prow of his majesty's barge, the name of which was: "Okheprure (Amenhotep II)-<sup>18</sup>is-the-Establisher-of-the-Two-Lands." One hanged the six men of those fallen ones, before the wall of Thebes; those hands likewise. Then the other fallen one was taken up-river to Nubia and hanged <sup>1</sup>on the wall of <sup>19</sup>Napata (Npt), in order to cause to be manifest the victories of his majesty, forever and ever in all lands and countries of the land of the Negro; since he had taken the South-erners and bound the Northerners, the back-lands of <sup>20</sup>the whole earth, upon which Re shines; that he might make his boundary as far as he desired, none opposing his hands, according to the command of his father Re, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes; in order that the Son of Re, of his body, his beloved, Amenhotep<sup>b</sup> (II), divine ruler of Heliopolis, might be given life, stability, satisfaction, joy of heart, through him, like Re, forever and ever.

798. The Elephantine stela<sup>c</sup> here adds enactments for the sacred feasts there, as follows:

Year 4. His majesty commanded to have the sails<sup>d</sup> made for the voyages of these gods dwelling in Elephantine; large sails, each one of 10 cubits, while they were (formerly) small sails of 3 cubits.

His majesty commanded to add one day for his mother, Anuket, to her feast of Nubia (Pd-ut), at her voyage of the "Beginning-of-the-River." The supplies are: bread, beer, oxen, geese, wine, incense, fruit, every good and pure thing, as dues each year, as an increase upon <sup>a</sup>These unfortunate kings were sacrificed by the Pharaoh himself before the god, as so often represented in the temple reliefs.

<sup>b</sup>Chiseled away and reinserted (Steindorff).

<sup>c</sup>An obelisk of Amenhotep II was also found at Elephantine; it is now in the collection at Alnwick Castle, England. It bears the inscription: "Amenhotep II; he made (it) as his monument for his father Khnum, making for him two obelisks of the altar of Re; that he might be given life forever." The pyramidion shows the king worshipping before "Khnum, residing in Elephantine" (Birch, Catalogue Alnwick, 345; Bonomi, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, New Ser., 1843, I, 170).

<sup>d</sup>The usual sign for linen fabric is used, so that anything of linen may be meant.

the 3 days of her customary<sup>a</sup> feast, in order to make her great feast of the first (month) of the third season (ninth month) of 4 days<sup>b</sup> duration, to abide and to endure; that he may be given life forever.

III. KARNAK CHAPEL<sup>c</sup>

798A. This monument, of which only a few fragments have survived, bears a relief showing Amenhotep II leading seventy Asiatic prisoners to Amon. They are accompanied by the words:

List of those countries which his majesty smote in their valleys, overthrown in [their] blood ——— that he might be given life forever.

Twenty-four prisoners in two rows bear the names of the countries they represent. The following are still legible:

1. Retenu [the Upper]; 2. Retenu [the Low]er; 3. Kharu; 12. Kadesh; 13. Aleppo; 14. Niy; 15. Sezar<sup>d</sup> ( $\text{S}^{\text{2}}-\text{g}^{\text{2}}-\text{r}^{\text{2}}$ ); 16. Thenew (Tnw); 17. Ketne.

TURRA INSCRIPTION<sup>e</sup>

799. Above is a relief showing the king before two rows of divinities, thirteen in number, for whose buildings the quarry-chambers have been opened. A dedication at the left side is as follows:

He made (it) as his monument for the gods and goddesses, for whose temples of a [million of years] the quarry-chamber was opened, in order to quarry fine limestone of Ayan.

<sup>a</sup>For a similar use of this rather rare word (nty), see § 619, l. 18, and III, 377, note.

<sup>b</sup>That is, one day has been added. Cf. the same formula in the feasts of victory (§§ 550-52).

<sup>c</sup>Found by Legrain near Pylon V at Karnak; published by him, Annales, V, 34, 35.

<sup>d</sup>The same as Senzar of § 584; see § 784, note, where it is shown that Senzar was a natural point of departure from the Orontes for Niy.

<sup>e</sup>Cut in the rock walls of the limestone quarry of Turra, south of Cairo. Published by Vyse, Pyramids, III, 95; less fully by Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, I, 20.

800. Below the relief is the following record:

<sup>1</sup>Year 4, under the majesty of the king, Okheprure, Son of Re [Amenhotep II], given life.

His majesty commanded [to open] the quarry-chambers anew, <sup>2</sup>in order to quarry fine limestone of Ayan, in order to build his temples of a million of years; after his majesty found [the quarry-chambers which are in Troja]<sup>a</sup> <sup>3</sup>beginning to go to ruin since the times that were before. It was my majesty who made (them) anew, that he might be given satisfying life, like Re, forever.

<sup>4</sup>Made under the hand of the hereditary prince, count, satisfying the king by maintaining his monuments; vigilant for the temples; who erected tablets <sup>5</sup>in the land of Naharin (N-h-r-n)<sup>b</sup> and in the land of Karoy (K-r-y),<sup>c</sup> overseer of works in the temples of the gods of the South and North, king's-scribe, Min[hotep].

TOMB OF AMENKEN<sup>d</sup>

801. The tomb of Amenken,<sup>e</sup> a treasurer of Amenhotep II, whose name is everywhere erased, shows a remarkable scene representing the production before the king of the New Year's gifts intended for his favorites.<sup>f</sup> He sits enthroned at the right, and the gifts are brought before him in magnificent array for his inspection.

<sup>a</sup>Restored from the inscription of Amenhotep III (§ 875).

<sup>b</sup>This was on the Asiatic campaign (§§ 780 ff.); and makes at least four such tablets in Naharin, one of Thutmose I, two of Thutmose III, and one of Amenhotep II.

<sup>c</sup>Region around Napata; see § 1020.

<sup>d</sup>Relief scenes and inscriptions in a Theban tomb, at Shekh Abd-el-Kurna; published, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 63, 64, and Text, III, 274; Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 500 f.; Rosellini, Monumenti Civili, 121; Mond, Annales, V, 97 ff.

<sup>e</sup>The name is not found in Lepsius, Denkmäler, but is given by Newberry, Benson and Gourlay, The Temple of Mut in Asher, 328, and Mond, Annales, V, 97 ff.

<sup>f</sup>They are not presents from the noblemen to the king, as Erman supposed (Aegypten, 177); one of the statues bears the words: "Given as a favor of the king's-presence," the usual formula upon gifts from the king, e. g., Nebwawi (§ 186, l. 10) received as a gift from this same king, Amenhotep II, a statue of the king's father, Thutmose III, it being customary for the king to present such royal statues to his favorites.

Inscription before the King

<sup>1</sup>First occasion of doing the pleasant deed in the great palace — —.
<sup>2</sup>Production of the New Year's gifts: <sup>3</sup>chariots of silver <sup>4</sup>and gold;
 statues of ivory <sup>5</sup>and ebony; necklaces of every costly stone; weapons <sup>6</sup>of warfare, works of all craftsmen . . . . .<sup>9</sup>. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

802 The following are the gifts ranged before the king: 13 statues of the king;<sup>b</sup> 7 sphinx portraits of the king; 1 standing statue of his mother, Hatshepsut-Meretre; 8 necklaces; 7 shields, over the last three are the words: "Leather of [—] 680;" 10 quivers, the last three bearing the words: "Leather — — 230;" 6 battle axes, 2 coats scale armor; 6 (ḥpš-) swords, bearing the words: "360 bronze (ḥpš-) swords;" "140 bronze daggers;" 3 ebony staves tipped with silver and gold, marked: "30 staves;" 6 whips, bearing the words: "220 gold, ivory, and ebony whips;" 7 elaborate chests; sun shades, chairs, vases, and numerous small objects. Except in the case of the statues, it is not the number of times that an object is represented that is significant, but the accompanying numeral. Before the accompanying inscriptions the name of Amenhotep II appears.<sup>c</sup>

KARNAK BUILDING INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

803. After interesting references in the introduction to his conquests in Asia, particularly Mitanni, the king narrates the erection of the columns in the southern half of the

<sup>a</sup>Titles of the noblemen.

<sup>b</sup>One marked "Thutmose I;" eight standing, two sitting, three kneeling; for description, see Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 276 f.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 277.

<sup>d</sup>On a column in the hypostyle of Thutmose I between pylons IV and V at Karnak; published Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 157, 158; Piehl, Actes du Congrès à Leyde, 1883, IV<sup>me</sup> partie, section 3, 203-19; and Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, 38.

hypostyle of Thutmose I, pulled down by his mother Hatshepsut to introduce her obelisks (§ 304). The northern colonnade had already been restored by Thutmose III (§§ 600 ff.). A description of the king's wealth from his wars follows.<sup>a</sup>

Universal Sway

804. Live the Horus: Mighty Bull, Great in Strength; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Mighty in Opulence; Made to Shine in Thebes; Golden Horus: Seizing by his Might in all Lands, Good God, Likeness of Re, Splendid Emanation of Atum, —<sup>b</sup> Son, whom he begat, whom he made to shine in Karnak. He appointed him to be king of the living, to do that which his ka did; his avenger, seeking excellent things; great in marvels, <sup>2</sup>creative in knowledge, wise in execution, skilful-hearted like Ptah; king of kings, ruler of rulers, valiant, without his equal, lord of terror among the southern lands, great in fear at the end of the north. Every land comes to him bowing down; their chiefs bearing their offerings; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Okheprure (Amenhotep II), given life; victorious lord, who takes every land, whom [Horus] has magnified because of his strength. The chiefs of Mitanni (My-tn) come to him, their tribute <sup>3</sup>upon their backs, to beseech his majesty that there may [be given to them]<sup>c</sup> his sweet breath of life. A mighty occurrence, it has never been heard since the times of the gods. This country which knew not Egypt beseeches the Good God. <sup>d</sup>“It is my father Re who commands that I do it; [he] is the fashioner of my beauty. He appointed me to be protector of this land, (for) he knew that I would offer it to him. He assigned to me that which is with him, which the eye of his uraeus illuminates, <sup>4</sup>all lands, all countries, every circuit, the Great Circle (Okeanos); they come to me in submission like every subject of my majesty; Son of Re, Amenhotep (II), Divine Ruler of Thebes, living forever, only vigilant one, begotten of the gods.”

<sup>a</sup>Of his other buildings the king has left us no narrative. His small temple between the two southernmost pylons at Karnak is without building inscription. His mortuary temple on the west shore at Thebes was just north of the Ramesseum and alongside that of his father, Thutmose III (see Baedeker, Map, 260), but it has utterly perished. See Spiegelberg, Recueil, XVI, 30, and XIX, 88, 89; also Petrie, Six Temples.

<sup>b</sup>Probably the name of Amon is cut out here.

<sup>c</sup>Restored after Naville, Deir-el-Bahari, III, 84, ll. 3, 4; infra, § 285, ll. 3, 4.

<sup>d</sup>The king speaks.

Dedication

805. He made (it) as his monument for his father [Amon], making for him the august columns of the southern hypostyle, wrought with electrum very plentifully, as an eternal work. I made for him a monument in st—1. It was more beautiful than that which had been; I increased that which was before; I surpassed that which the ancestors made. He appointed me to be<sup>a</sup> lord of the people (rhyt), while I was a youth in the nest; he gave to me the two halves; he caused that my majesty should assume the throne, as one does a useful thing for his father. I rested upon his throne; he gave to me the land <sup>r</sup>— —1. I have no enemies <sup>6</sup>in all lands.

Temple Equipment

806. I made for him an adytum (shn) of gold; its floor was of silver. I made for him many vessels; they were more beautiful than the bodies of the stars. His silver-house, it inclosed treasures of the tribute of every country. His granaries were bursting with clean grain, rising upon the walls. I founded for him divine offerings. I restored the things of him that begat me, that the Son of Re [Amenhotep II], Divine Ruler of Heliopolis, might be given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

BIOGRAPHY OF AMENEMHAB

[Concluded from § 592]

807. A scene<sup>b</sup> in the tomb shows Amenhotep II standing before the deceased Thutmose III enthroned as Osiris. This is in accord with the copy of the "Book of the Dead" found with Thutmose III's body, which also testifies to Amenhotep's piety; for it bears the title:<sup>c</sup> "Amenhotep II,<sup>d</sup> he made (it) as his monument for his father, Thutmose III,<sup>d</sup> making for him a book of glorifying the soul." Behind

<sup>a</sup>Read: dhn n j wy r nb.

<sup>b</sup>Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 245.

<sup>c</sup>Maspero, Momies royales, 548.

<sup>d</sup>Double name.

Amenhotep II appear Amenemhab and his wife bearing flowers and food. The biography continues, after the death of Thutmose III, as follows:

Accession of Amenhotep II

808. "When the morning brightened, <sup>38</sup>the sun arose, and the heavens shone, King Okheprure, Son of Re, Amenhotep (II), given life, <sup>39</sup>was established upon the throne of his father, he assumed the royal titulary. He [— —] all, he mingled with [—]<sup>a</sup> in —, <sup>40</sup>the Red Land; he cut off the heads of their chiefs.<sup>b</sup> Diademed as Horus, son of Isis, [he] took ——— <sup>41</sup>——— [—]<sup>c</sup> the Kenemetyew (Knm tyw), every land, bowed down because of his fame; with their tribute upon their backs, <sup>42</sup>[that he might grant] to them the breath of life."

Favor Shown Amenemhab

809. <sup>42</sup>"His majesty noticed me rowing won[derfully] with him in <sup>43</sup>[his] vessel; 'Khammat' was its name. I was rowing [with] both hands at his beautiful feast of Luxor, likewise to the splendors <sup>44</sup>———. I was brought to the midst of the palace, one caused that I should stand before [the king, O]khepru[re] (Amenhotep II), — <sup>45</sup>———. I bowed down immediately before his majesty; he said to me, 'I know thy character; I was abiding in the nest, while thou wert in <sup>46</sup>the following of my father. I commission thee with office that thou shalt be deputy of the army as I have said, watch thou the élite troops<sup>d</sup> of the king.' The deputy, Mahu, executed (all) that his lord said."<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup> $\overline{K}^{\prime}t$ , with plural strokes and determinative of a prisoner or enemy. It is not Kehek with whom it was identified as formerly restored (Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 290).

<sup>b</sup>See Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 115, n. 3. Amenemhab doubtless refers to the sacrifice of the seven kings of Tikhsi.

<sup>c</sup> $p^{\prime}n wntyw$ , Newberry; he also has nb instead of k, as the first sign of the following word.

<sup>d</sup>The élite troops as in l. 29; k is to be corrected to nb in Eber's copy, as in l. 29.

<sup>e</sup>So, after Newberry's copy, which unfortunately does not support Piehl's excellent suggestion (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1885, 61, 62).

REIGN OF THUTMOSE IV

SPHINX STELA<sup>a</sup>

810. This remarkable document purports to be a votive stela of Thutmose IV, recording how he had been raised to the throne by Harmakhis, the Sphinx, in recognition of his clearance of the great image from the encumbering sands, in response to the god's appeal to him as a young prince, to whom he appeared in a vision as the youth, weary with the chase, slept at noonday in his shadow. The form and content of the document are strikingly unlike the official or royal records of the Pharaohs. It is besides filled with errors and striking irregularities in orthography, and exhibits a number of suspicious peculiarities not to be expected in a monument of this class. It is therefore to be regarded as a late restoration,<sup>b</sup> and it is a great question to what extent it reproduces the content of the monument of which

---

<sup>a</sup>A huge red granite tablet, standing between the paws of the Great Sphinx, made from one of the architraves of the neighboring (so-called) Temple of the Sphinx. It is 11 feet 10 inches high, and 7 feet 2 inches wide. The lower third of the face has flaked off, so that over half the inscription is lost. It was uncovered by Caviglia in 1818, copied by Salt in 1820; his manuscript text is in the British Museum, Memoirs on the Pyramids and the Great Sphinx, fol. 1820; it was published from this manuscript in Young's Hieroglyphics (London, 1823), Pl. 80; again from the same manuscript inaccurately in Vyse Appendix to Operations Carried on at the Pyramids of Gizeh (London, 1842), III, 115; more accurately than any of these, but with further lacunæ, in Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 68; repeated partially by Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1876, 89-92. Finally a collation of all texts by Erman, Sitzungsberichte Königlichen Akademie, Berlin, VI, 428-37. I had collated all old publications and Berlin squeeze, and my readings have now been confirmed by Erman's text.

<sup>b</sup>Erman has now put together the reasons for the same conclusion, which he also has reached. He would date the document between the Twenty-first and Twenty-second Dynasty and Saitic times. Spiegelberg's objections to this conclusion (Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, 1904) would explain the mistakes and peculiarities in the orthography as due to the erasure of the inscription under Ikhnaton it is a restoration. Some such current incident during the youth of Thutmose IV may possibly have prompted it; but the form of the narrative as now on the monument is that of a folk-tale.

811. Moreover, a similar incident was narrated of a prince named Amenmose, son of Thutmose I. It was on a monument<sup>a</sup> by the Sphinx, of which the following fragments are preserved:

Year 4, under the majesty of Thutmose I, beloved of Harmakhis<sup>b</sup> [given life] like Re, forever.

—————<sup>c</sup> There went forth the eldest king's-son, commander in chief of the army of his father, Amenmose, living forever, to take a pleasure walk<sup>d</sup> —————.

Evidently the priests were striving by such tales as these to enhance the reputation of the Sphinx.

The upper third of the Sphinx stela is occupied by an adoration scene in which Thutmose IV offers to Harmakhis in form of a sphinx. Below is the inscription, as follows:

Introduction

812. <sup>1</sup>Year 1, third month of the first season, day 19, under the majesty of Horus: Mighty - Bull - <sup>1</sup>Begetting<sup>1</sup> - Radiance; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Enduring - in - Kingship - like - Atum; Golden Horus: Mighty-of-Sword, Repelling-the-Nine-Bows; King of Upper and Lower Egypt; Menkheprure (Mn - hpr [w] - R<sup>c</sup>), Son of Re: [Thutmose IV, Shining] in Diadems; beloved of —, given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever. <sup>2</sup>Live the Good God, son of Atum, Pro-

and the subsequent careless restoration, as in the Theban stelæ (e. g., §§ 878 ff.). That this objection cannot hold is evident; for the Sphinx is a sun-god, and the monuments of the sun-gods, especially of the Horuses, were respected by Ikhnaton, and not erased. It is impossible to conceive that Ikhnaton would erase the inscription to a god called "Harmakhis-Khepri-Re-Atum" (l. 9) in said inscription.

<sup>a</sup>A stone vessel in the Louvre, of which only a fragment, inscribed on two faces, survives. From my own copy of the original. See Erman, ibid., 1063.

<sup>b</sup>The Sphinx. <sup>c</sup>Other face.

<sup>d</sup>R swtwt hr šd > hr, as on Sphinx stela.

tector of Harakhte, living image of the All-Lord; sovereign, begotten of Re; excellent heir of Khepri; beautiful of face like<sup>a</sup> his father; who came forth [—] equipped with the form of Horus upon him;<sup>b</sup> a king who — the gods; who — favor with the ennead of gods; who purifies Heliopolis, <sup>3</sup>who satisfies Re; who beautifies Memphis; who presents truth to Atum, who offers it to Him-Who-is-South-of-His-Wall (Ptah); who makes a monument by daily offering to Horus; who does all things, seeking benefits for the gods of South and North; who builds their houses of limestone; who endows all their offerings; son of Atum, of his body, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, like Re;<sup>c</sup> <sup>4</sup>heir of Horus upon his throne, Menkheprure, given life.<sup>c</sup>

Youth of Thutmose

813. When his majesty was a stripling like Horus, the youth in Khemmis, his beauty was like the <sup>d</sup>protector of his father,<sup>d</sup> he seemed<sup>e</sup> like the god himself. The army rejoiced because of love for him, the king's-children and all the nobles. Then his strength overflowed him, and he <sup>5</sup>repeated the circuit of his might like the son of Nut.<sup>f</sup>

Hunting Expedition

Behold, he did a thing that gave him pleasure<sup>g</sup> upon the highlands of the Memphite nome, upon its southern and northern road,<sup>h</sup> shooting at a target with copper<sup>i</sup> bolts, hunting lions and wild goats, coursing in his chariot, his horses being swifter <sup>6</sup>than the wind; together with two of his followers, while not a soul knew it.

Midday Rest

814. Now, when his hour came on for giving rest to his followers, (it was always) at the <sup>7</sup>shoulder<sup>7</sup> of Harmakhis, beside Sokar in Rosta, <sup>a</sup>Read my for my hk ?.

<sup>b</sup>He was born with the royal insignia upon him, as in Papyrus Westcar.

<sup>c</sup>The usual predicate is here cut in two, with half of it after each name; the two names are in inverted order also. This could only have happened from the scribe's use of an original in which the two names were in two vertical lines, with the predicate under them (Erman).

<sup>d</sup>Harendotes, a title of Horus.

<sup>e</sup>Passive of "see;" cf. videri.

<sup>f</sup>So also Erman.

<sup>g</sup>Sg occurs also in the hunting inscription of Imunzeh (Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 355).

<sup>h</sup>Or: "side."

<sup>i</sup>Not bronze, as in all the versions.

Renutet in ʿ— —<sup>a</sup> in heaven, Mut — — of the northern — the mistress of the Wall of the South, Sekhmet ʿpresider (fem.) over Khas ( $\overline{H}^{\circ} s$ ) ʿ— —<sup>1</sup> the splendid place of the <sup>b</sup>beginning of time, over against the lords of Khreha ( $\overline{H}r^{\circ} \overline{h}^{\circ}$ ), the sacred road of the gods to the necropolis<sup>c</sup> west of On (Heliopolis). Now, the very great statue<sup>d</sup> of Khepri, rests in this place;<sup>e</sup> the great in prowess, the splendid in strength; upon which the shadow of Re tarries. The quarters of Memphis and all the cities which are by him come to him, (raising)<sup>f</sup> their hands for him in praise to his face, <sup>g</sup>bearing great oblations for his ka.

The Vision

815. One of those days<sup>g</sup> it came to pass that the king's-son, Thutmose, came, coursing at the time of midday, and he rested in the shadow of this great god.<sup>h</sup> A ʿvision<sup>1</sup> of sleep seized him at the hour (when) the sun was in the zenith, <sup>2</sup>and he found the majesty of this revered god speaking with his own mouth, as a father speaks with his son, saying: "Behold thou me! See thou me! my son Thutmose. I am thy father, Harmakhis-Khepri-Re-Atum, who will give to thee my kingdom <sup>3</sup>on earth at the head of the living.<sup>i</sup> Thou shalt wear the white crown and the red crown upon the throne of Keb, the hereditary prince. The land shall be thine in its length and breadth, that which the eye of the All-Lord shines upon. The food of the Two Lands shall be thine, the great tribute of all countries, the duration of a long period of years. My face is thine, my desire is toward thee. Thou shalt be to me a protector <sup>4</sup>(for) my manner is as I were ailing in all my limbs ʿ—<sup>1</sup>. The sand of this desert upon which I am, has reached me; turn to me, to <sup>a</sup>The first two words indicate grains, a meaning which suits Renutet, a harvest goddess.  $\overline{T}^{\circ} mwt$  is also the name of a Theban region (Djéme); it occurs e. g., Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, I, 11, 1).

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "the first time."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "horizon." If Giseh was the necropolis of Heliopolis, it is probable that the Fourth Dynasty kings may have actually resided in Heliopolis.

<sup>d</sup>The Great Sphinx.

<sup>e</sup>This is a resumption of the object, which preceded in the foregoing clauses.

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "give."

<sup>g</sup>It would seem that the preceding lines narrate the hunting expedition(s?) as customary, and on "one of those days" the following incident of the dream occurred.

<sup>h</sup>The Sphinx.

<sup>i</sup>Young:  $\overline{tp} \overline{t}^{\circ} \overline{hnt}^{\circ} \overline{nh}^{\circ} w$ .

have that done which I have desired, knowing that thou art my son, my protector; <sup>1</sup>come hither, behold, I am with thee, I am <sup>2</sup>thy leader." When he had finished this speech, this king's-son <sup>3</sup>awoke hearing this — —; he understood the words of this god, and he kept silent in his heart. <sup>4</sup>He said: <sup>5</sup>"Come, let us hasten to our house in the city; they shall protect the oblations for this god <sup>6</sup>which we bring for him: oxen <sup>7</sup>— and all young vegetables; and we shall give praise [to] Wennofer, <sup>8</sup> — — — Khaf[re], <sup>9</sup> the statue made for Atum-Harmakhis <sup>10</sup>—————, <sup>11</sup>

ASIATIC CAMPAIGN

816. The records of Thutmose IV's Asiatic war or wars are scanty and scattered. It is clear, however, that he still maintained the empire at its former northern limits. Naharin paid tribute, although a campaign thither had been necessary.

817. The king left a record referring to the first war in Asia in a list of offerings from his victories, which he had made in Karnak, <sup>1</sup> in which nothing more concerning the campaign can be seen than that there were among these offerings, things "which his majesty captured in Naharin<sup>2</sup> (—————<sup>3</sup>) the wretched, on his first victorious campaign."

<sup>a</sup>All from Young.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch's text.

<sup>c</sup>Or: "we?" "that we may protect . . . and that we may bring" (so Erman).

<sup>d</sup>All from Young.

<sup>e</sup>This mention of King Khafre has been understood to indicate that the Sphinx was the work of this king—a conclusion which does not follow; Young has no trace of a cartouche.

<sup>f</sup>Young shows two fragments, each bearing a few words (from the middle of ll. 16 and 17 and ll. 18 and 19) which probably refer to further offerings.

<sup>g</sup>Fragmentary lower ends of ten vertical lines east side of the wall surrounding Hatshepsut's obelisk; published Mariette, Karnak, 33=Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 164; photograph by Borchardt.

<sup>h</sup>Mariette read only the final '(aleph), but Rougé read n<sup>3</sup> at the end. This reading is also perfectly clear on the photograph. Brugsch's "Kheta" (Geschichte, 393) must therefore be given up. See also Müller, Asien und Europa, 321, n. 2.

818. This is corroborated by the inscription of Amenhotep, a bodyguardsman of Thutmose IV, whose tomb stela<sup>a</sup> calls him:

Attendant of the king on his expeditions in the south and north countries; going from Naharin (N-h-ry-n) to Karoy (K<sup>3</sup>-r-y) behind his majesty, while he was upon the battlefield; companion of the feet of the Lord of the Two Lands, chief of the stable of his majesty, high priest of Onouris, Amenhotep, triumphant.

819. In harmony with these data, we find depicted on the two following monuments the tribute of Naharin and Retenu; the first is in the tomb of Khamhet,<sup>b</sup> who was a powerful noble, and served as chief treasurer under Thutmose IV and Amenhotep III.<sup>c</sup> His tomb contains three scenes of historical importance, of which one<sup>d</sup> belongs to the reign of Thutmose IV. It shows the king seated in a "naos" at the left; before him are magnificent vessels of Asiatic workmanship in gold and silver, and quantities of these metals in large rings. Behind these are Asiatic princes bowing to the earth, over whom is the inscription:<sup>e</sup>

Bringing in the tribute of Naharin (N-h-ry-n<sup>3</sup>) by the princes of this country, in order to crave that the breath of life be granted to them. Obeisance to the great Lord of the Two Lands, when they come, bearing their tribute to the Lord of the Two Lands, (saying:) "Grant us breath, which thou givest, O mighty king."

<sup>a</sup>Sharpe, Inscriptions, I, 93.

<sup>b</sup>In the cliff of Abd el-Kurna (No. 120) at Thebes; published entire by Loret, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, I, 113-32; partially, Prisse, Histoire de l'Art; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 76, 77; Champollion, Monuments, 160, 1; Champollion, Notices descriptives, 498 f., 839 f. The entire tomb is now being broken up by natives, part of the reliefs having reached Berlin (1899). A useful summary in Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 282, where the tomb is inadvertently placed in the reign of Amenhotep IV.

<sup>c</sup>See §§ 870 ff.

<sup>d</sup>Champollion, Monuments, 160, 1; Champollion, Notices descriptives, 498 f., 839 f. It has been incorrectly attributed to Amenhotep III by Wiedemann (Aegyptische Geschichte, 381).

<sup>e</sup>Champollion, Monuments, 160, 1; the remainder from Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 839 f.

820. A similar scene in the tomb of Thaneni is accompanied by the following inscription:<sup>a</sup>

Bringing in the tribute of Retenu, presentation of the northern countries; silver, gold, malachite, every costly stone of God's-Land; by the princes of all countries. They come, to [make gifts] to the Good God, to ask for breath for their nostrils; by the real king's-scribe, his beloved, commander of troops, scribe of recruits, Thaneni.

821. A tablet<sup>b</sup> of the king, erected in his mortuary temple at Thebes, records the settlement of Syrians in the temple inclosure:

Settlement of the "Fortress of Menkheprure," with Syrians (H<sup>3</sup> -rw), which his majesty captured in the city of K<sup>3</sup> -d<sup>3</sup> — ('Gezer').

822. Finally, on the Lateran Obelisk (§ 838), the king refers to the cedar which he cut in the land of Retenu; and on the stela of Semen (Smm) in the Louvre (C 202),<sup>c</sup> he is twice called the "conqueror of Syria" (sksk h<sup>3</sup> rw), a title which must have been won in successful Syrian wars.

KONOSSO INSCRIPTION<sup>d</sup>

823. This inscription contained perhaps the most interesting record of all the many Nubian wars, and its content has never been historically employed; but it is so incorrectly published that it is difficult to follow. While engaged in the ceremonies of the Theban temple, on the second of Phamenoth, in the year 8, Thutmose IV receives a message

<sup>a</sup>Scheil, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 601.

<sup>b</sup>Petrie, Six Temples, I, 7.

<sup>c</sup>De Rougé, Notice des monuments, 153; and text, Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1461, No. 113.

<sup>d</sup>Cut on the rocks of the peninsula (high-water island) of Konosso by Philæ. It was first very incorrectly published by Bouriant (Recueil, XV, 178, 179); again, still worse, in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 66, 67. The inscription contained 40 lines, of which the latter portion is much destroyed; only 23 lines are published.

reporting a revolt in Wawat. The next morning the king solemnly proceeds to the temple to consult the god, and is granted an oracle promising success. The expedition now embarks and moves southward, stopping on the way at all the great temples, where the divinities come forth to meet the king, and gird him for battle.<sup>a</sup> The result of the battle,<sup>b</sup> fought doubtless somewhere in Wawat, is of course a foregone conclusion, and the enumeration of the spoil begins, as the published portion comes to an end.

824. The prisoners whom the king brought back on his return were settled in his mortuary temple at Thebes, and the quarter was marked with a tablet<sup>c</sup> bearing the words:

Colony of Kush the wretched, which his majesty brought back from his victories.

The Konosso inscription is as follows:

Introduction

825. <sup>1</sup>Live Horus: . . . . .<sup>d</sup> the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menkheperure (Thutmose IV), who is given life, forever. <sup>2</sup>Year 8, third month of the second season, day 2.

Announcement of Nubian Rebellion

826. Behold, his majesty was in the Southern City, at the town of Karnak. His two hands were pure with the purity<sup>e</sup> of <sup>3</sup>a king, and he

<sup>a</sup>A tablet (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 69 e = Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 164) on Konosso, dated year 7, on the eighth of the same month, shows the king before the god Dedun, smiting his enemies.

<sup>b</sup>There is a reference to the victory in the king's architrave inscription at Amâda (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 69, f. 5), and campaigning in Nubia (Karo) is mentioned by the king's bodyguardsman, Amenhotep (§ 818).

<sup>c</sup>Found by Petrie in the temple inclosure; it is now in Haskell Oriental Museum, of the University of Chicago (Six Temples, I).

<sup>d</sup>Full titulary, lacking only s' - R' c - name.

<sup>e</sup>He was ceremonially pure, for carrying out the temple ritual; the emendation is certain, cf. "His majesty was pure with the purity of a god," on the construction, see Sethe, Verbum, II, § 725.

performed the pleasing ceremonies of his father Amon, because he had given to [him]<sup>a</sup> eternity as king, everlastingness while abiding upon the Horus-throne. One came to say to his majesty: "The Negro descends <sup>4</sup>from above Wawat; he hath planned revolt against Egypt. He gathers to himself <sup>5</sup>all the barbarians and the revolvers of other countries."

Oracle of Amon

827. The king proceeded in peace to the temple at the time <sup>6</sup>of morning, to cause that a great oblation be offered to his father, the fashioner of his beauty. <sup>7</sup>Behold, his majesty, he himself petitioned in the presence of <sup>7</sup>the ruler of the gods (Amon), that he might counsel him concerning the <sup>8</sup>affair of his going<sup>1</sup> — and inform concerning that which should happen to him; leading for him upon a goodly road <sup>9</sup>to do that which his ka desired, as a father speaks to his son,<sup>b</sup> <sup>10</sup>— — —. He went forth from him, his heart <sup>11</sup>rejoicing <sup>12</sup>— — — (for) he sent him with might and victory.

Voyage Southward

828. After these things his majesty <sup>13</sup>proceeded to overthrow the <sup>14</sup>Negro<sup>1</sup> in Nubia (T<sup>2</sup> -p<sup>d</sup> t); mighty in his barge of <sup>15</sup>— like Re when he shows himself<sup>c</sup> in the celestial barque <sup>16</sup>.....<sup>d</sup> His army <sup>17</sup>of his victories, was with (him) on both banks, while the recruits were upon its (one) shore, and the ship was equipped with his attendants,<sup>e</sup> <sup>18</sup>as the king proceeded up-stream like <sup>19</sup>Orion.<sup>1</sup> He illuminated the South with his beauty; <sup>20</sup>men shouted because of his kindness, <sup>21</sup>women

<sup>a</sup>Of course omitted by the copyist.

<sup>b</sup>The same phrase is used of the god's speaking to Thutmose IV, on the Sphinx Stela (l. 9, § 815).

<sup>c</sup>A common phrase of the sun-hymns, e. g., Berlin Stela, No. 7316, Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 108.

<sup>d</sup>About one-half line mere fragments. The other half is very uncertain. The subject is the embarkation, with the same obscure phrases used in the transportation of the el-Bersheh colossus (§ 698, ll. 7, 8), but "horses" appear here in the place of "the youth" there.

<sup>e</sup>Apparently we have here the disposition of troops as the king embarked; the veterans ("of his victories") on either bank, the young recruits on one bank, and the bodyguard in the royal barge.

<sup>f</sup>Compare the southward advance of Sesostris I (I, 511, l. 2), also compared with a star in the same way.

danced at the message. Montu<sup>a</sup> was in Erment as the protection of [his] every limb; Irerti (Yrrty)<sup>b</sup> led before; every god of the South <sup>15</sup>bore the [—] before him; Nekbet, the White, of El Kab, she<sup>c</sup> fastened the adornments of my majesty,<sup>d</sup> her two hands were behind [me], she bound for me the Nine Bows together <sup>16</sup>. . . . .<sup>e</sup> I stopped in the city of Edfu, the beautiful god come forth<sup>f</sup> like Montu in all his forms, <sup>17</sup>girded with his arms and weapons, [raging]<sup>g</sup> like Set of Kom Ombo . . . . .<sup>18</sup>. . . . .

The Battle

829. His army came to him, <sup>19</sup>numerous — with his mighty sword. The fear of him entered into every body; Re put the fear of him among the lands, like Sekhmet in the year of <sup>20</sup>the dew. . . . . He coursed through the eastern highland, he traversed the ways like <sup>21</sup>a jackal . . . . . He found all [his] foes [scattered] in inaccessible valleys. . . . .

The remainder is published too badly for translation; one can make out a reference to “their cattle [their tribute]<sup>h</sup> upon their backs.”

LATERAN OBELISK<sup>i</sup>

830. Although this obelisk belongs to Thutmose III (§§ 626 ff.), the inscriptions added by Thutmose IV as side columns are more interesting and important than the dedication in Thutmose III's name. They state that after <sup>a</sup>There is no doubt of the emendation. The advance up-river is marked by references to the gods of the larger places passed. Hermonthis (Erment) is the first place south of Thebes; then follow El Kab, Edfu, and Kom Ombo in the proper order.

<sup>b</sup>Apparently a goddess.

<sup>d</sup>An abrupt change to the first person.

<sup>c</sup>Read smn'n's.

<sup>e</sup>A reference to some feast.

<sup>f</sup>To meet the king; cf. the same occurrence at Abydos (I, 763).

<sup>g</sup>Read nšn?

<sup>h</sup>Of course, some such word is omitted in the publication.

<sup>i</sup>For bibliography, see § 626.

lying neglected and unfinished for thirty-five<sup>a</sup> years, the obelisk was found by Thutmose IV, erected and inscribed by him.

North Right

831. . . . . .<sup>b</sup> (Thutmose IV) who seizes by his might, like the lord of Thebes; great in strength, like Montu; whom his father, Amon, has made victorious against all countries; to whom unknown lands come, his fear being in their bodies; Son of Re, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, beloved of Amon, Kamephis, given life.

North Left

832. King of Upper and Lower Egypt, beloved of the gods; whose excellence the ennead of gods praise; who sends Re to rest in the evening-barque; who praises Atum in the morning-barque; Lord of the Two Lands, Menkheprure (Thutmose IV), who beautifies Thebes, forever; who makes monuments in Karnak. The ennead of gods of the house of Amon is satisfied with that which he has done; Son of Atum, of his body, his heir upon his throne, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, beloved of Amon-Re.

South Left

833. . . . . . Thutmose (IV), Begotten of Re, beloved of Amon. It was his majesty who beautified<sup>c</sup> the single, very great obelisk, being one which his father,<sup>d</sup> the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheperre (Thutmose III) had brought, after his majesty had found this obelisk, it having spent 35 years lying upon its side in the hands of the craftsmen, on the south side of Karnak. My father commanded that I should erect it for him, I, his son, his savior.

South Right

834. Son of Re, Thutmose (IV), Shining of Diadems. He erected it in Karnak, making its pyramidion of electrum, (so that) its beauty illu-

<sup>a</sup>Accepting Thutmose III's death as the probable cause of the unfinished condition of the monument, we should have an important chronological datum, if only Thutmose IV had given us the year of his own reign in which he found it. But as it is, the datum indicates only that Amenhotep II and Thutmose IV together reigned at least thirty-five years.

<sup>b</sup>Full titulary except last name, which comes at the end of this line.

<sup>c</sup>That is, finished and inscribed it.

<sup>d</sup>Really his grandfather, but any ancestor of a king may be called his father.

minated Thebes. It was graven with the name of his father, the Good God, Menkheperre (Thutmose III). The King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Menkheprure (Thutmose IV), Beloved of Re, did this, in order to cause that the name of his father might abide and endure in the house of Amon-Re, that the Son of Re, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, may be given life through him (n).

West Right

835. . . . . (Thutmose IV), whom Amon has chosen before the people [whom Mut] bore [to him], [whom] he [loves] more than any king, to see whose beauty he rejoices, because he has so fully set him in his heart; under whose authority he has placed the Southerners and the Northerners, doing obeisance to his fame. He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, erecting for him a very great obelisk at the upper portal<sup>a</sup> of Karnak, over against Thebes, that the Son of Re, his beloved Thutmose (IV), Shining of Diadems, may be given life through him (n).

West Left

836. . . . . Menkheprure, eldest son, useful to him who begat him; doing that which satisfies the lord of gods; (since) he knows the excellence of his plans. It is he who has led him to pleasant ways, and who hath bound for him the Nine Bows beneath his feet. Behold, his majesty was vigilant in beautifying the monument of his father. The king himself was the one who gave direction, being skilfully-minded like "Him-Who-is-South-of-His-Wall" (Ptah). He erected it [at the completion of time]. He rejoiced the heart of the one who fashioned him; Son of Re, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, — —.

East Right

837. Good God, Mighty in Strength, Sovereign, seizing by his victories, who sets his terror among the Asiatics, and his roaring among the Nubian Troglodytes, whom his father, Amon, reared to exercise an enduring kingship, while the princes of all countries do obeisance to the fame of his majesty; who spoke with his mouth and executed with his hands. All that he commanded happened; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menkheprure (Thutmose IV), of abiding name in Karnak, given life.

<sup>a</sup>The entrance to the Karnak temenos on the south side, to which the four southern pylons lead. It is mentioned on the statue of Beknekhonsu (III, 567, l. 5), where it is also called "upper portal" (sb 3-hry).

East Left

838. . . . . Menkheprure, who multiplied monuments in Karnak, of gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, every splendid costly stone; the great barge of the "Beginning-of-the-River"<sup>a</sup> (named): Userhet-Amon, shaped of new cedar, which his majesty cut<sup>b</sup> in the land of Retenu, wrought with gold throughout; all its adornments were fashioned for the first time, to receive the beauty of his father, Amon, on his voyage of the "Beginning-of-the-River." May the Son of Re, Thutmose (IV), Shining in Diadems, be given life through him.

STELA OF PE'AOKE<sup>c</sup>

839. The mortuary stela of the standard-bearer (t<sup>3</sup>-sr t) of the royal barge, Pe'aoke (P<sup>3</sup>-c<sup>2</sup>-c<sup>2</sup> k), after the usual prayers, records the arrival of a royal messenger at Abydos, to attend to the conveyance to Osiris of certain property of the people. The nature of these payments is not at all clear, and the purpose of their record is only incidental, being doubtless to explain the occasion on which Pe'aoke visited Abydos and executed his stela there. His reference to Ahmose shows that Thutmose IV increased his ancestor's mortuary endowment. A stela in the British Museum<sup>d</sup> mentions a "palace (h t) of Thutmose IV, given life, in Abydos," which would indicate that he occasionally resided

<sup>a</sup>The same in Thutiy (l. 18, § 373). It was some feast on the river, perhaps that of the fourteenth of Paophi.

<sup>b</sup>The same statement by Amenhotep III (§ 888, ll. 16, 17).

<sup>c</sup>Stela in the Louvre, C 53; see de Rougé, Notices des monuments, 100. I had my own copy of the original.

<sup>d</sup>No. 148; it is the mortuary stela of Neferhet (Nfr-h t), the chief of works in the palace (from my own copy of the original).

there, and Pe'aoke's record of the gifts of cattle and lands would indicate great interest in Abydos on the part of Thutmose IV.

840. There came a royal messenger of King Menkheprure (Thutmose IV), who is given life, to his father, Osiris, lord of Abydos, to give to him all his property which was with all the people (rḥy' t), being bulls, oxen, wild cattle, fowl, and all his 'property' which was therein.

Again one came to give the lands of Osiris to him,<sup>a</sup> which were [with] all the people (rḥy' t); the stat (st' t) being 1,200.

Again came the like for the Good God, Nebpehtire (Ahmose I),<sup>b</sup> in order to give [to] him all the lands [— —].

---

<sup>a</sup>The order of words is unusual; the dative should precede the direct object.

<sup>b</sup>Referring to a mortuary endowment; but the form of expression is unusual for this idea.

REIGN OF AMENHOTEP III

BIRTH AND CORONATION<sup>a</sup>

841. The scenes and inscriptions representing Amenhotep III's supernatural birth and his coronation by the gods, which he had placed upon the walls in one of the chambers of his Amon-temple at Luxor, are taken from the same sources as those of Hatshepsut, and have already been treated under her reign (§§ 187-212, 215-42). For Ahmose, the mother of Hatshepsut there, one must here substitute Mutemuya, the mother of Amenhotep III; and for Hatshepsut, Amenhotep III.

---

NUBIAN WAR

842. In his fifth and sixth years, Amenhotep III found it necessary to invade Nubia as far as Karoy,<sup>b</sup> the district conquered by his grandfather, Amenhotep II (§§ 797), and his great-grandfather, Thutmose III, and probably much farther. He has left us a list of the Nubian regions

---

<sup>a</sup>In the Luxor temple of Amon in the first chamber on the east of the holy of holies, on the west wall. Partially published by Champollion, Monuments, IV, 339, No. 2-341; Rosellini (Monumenti Storici, 38-41), and Lepsius (Denkmäler, III, 74, c-75). First completely by Gayet, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, XV, Pl. 62-68 and 75. Besides errors innumerable in the texts, every plate bears two numbers, and on these plates every figure bears two numbers; in each case only one is correct! The errors in the texts, evident everywhere, can be demonstrated easily by a comparison with the texts of the queen's interview with Amon, which have also been published by Bouriant (Recueil, IX, 84, 85).

<sup>b</sup>Karoy is not mentioned in the records of the campaign, but is referred to, as reached on the first campaign, in the building inscription (§ 889, l. 23).

subjugated, presumably on this campaign, on a colossal granite statue, now in the Louvre.<sup>a</sup>

I. STELA AT FIRST CATARACT<sup>b</sup>

843. The upper third of the stela is occupied with a scene showing the king trampling down an Asiatic and smiting two Negroes; before him are Amon and Khnum; behind him, Ptah. The inscription of twelve lines is very fragmentary (having been mutilated by Amenhotep IV in erasing the name of Amon, which has afterward been restored), but shows clearly that, owing to a revolt in Nubia, Amenhotep III was obliged to invade the country, and crush the rebels in his fifth year.<sup>c</sup>

844. <sup>1</sup>Year 5, third month of the first season (third month), day 2, the coronation (day)<sup>d</sup> under the majesty of

Horus: Mighty Bull, Shining in Truth;

Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Establisher of Laws, <sup>2</sup>Quieter of the Two Lands;

Golden Horus: Great in Strength, Smiter of the Asiatics, Good God, Ruler of Thebes, Lord of Strength, Mighty of Valor;

<sup>3</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Nibmare (Nb-m <sup>3</sup>c <sup>1</sup>t-R <sup>3</sup>c).

<sup>a</sup>This statue (A 18) was usurped by Amenhotep III; it belonged perhaps to a king of the Twelfth Dynasty. See Maspero, Dawn, 491, n. 6. I have verified this usurpation on the original. The list is published by Sharpe (Inscriptions, II, 26).

<sup>b</sup>Cut in the rock on the road from Assuan to Philæ. Text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 81, g; de Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 254; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 4.

<sup>c</sup>A second stela in the same locality, also relating to this war, is too fragmentary for translation (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 81, h; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 5).

<sup>d</sup>Based on an ostrakon in London (No. 5637, Birch, Inscriptions in the Hieratic and Demotic Character, Pl. 15). His coronation is usually dated on the thirteenth of the eleventh month, see Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, 213. Sethe, however, has shown (Untersuchungen, I, 12, n. 1) that this ostrakon does not specify which Amenhotep is meant, and rightly refers it to some one of the three other Amenhoteps.

Son of Re: Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes; beloved of Amon-Re, King of Gods, and Khnum, Lord of the Cataract (Kbh), who giveth life.

<sup>4</sup>One came<sup>a</sup> to tell his majesty: "The foe of Kush the wretched, <sup>5</sup>has planned<sup>1</sup> rebellion in his heart."

<sup>5</sup>His majesty led on unto his victory, he completed it on his first victorious campaign.<sup>b</sup> His majesty went forth <sup>6</sup>— like — Horus, like Montu (Mntw) [— — —] — [—————] 7. . . . .<sup>c</sup> <sup>9</sup>He knew not this lion which was before him; Nibmare (Amenhotep III) was a <sup>10</sup>fierce-eyed lion, he seized [—] Kush. [All<sup>1</sup> the chiefs were overthrown <sup>11</sup>in their valleys, cast down in their blood, one upon another — <sup>12</sup>. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

II. STELA OF KONOSSO<sup>e</sup>

845. A scene above shows Amon presenting four southern regions<sup>f</sup> to Amenhotep III. The inscription commemorates the same Nubian campaign as the preceding stela.

<sup>1</sup>. . . . .<sup>g</sup> <sup>5</sup>Year 5; his majesty returned, having triumphed on his first victorious campaign in the land <sup>6</sup>of Kush the wretched; having made his boundary as far as he desired, as far as the four pillars which bear the heaven. He set up <sup>7a</sup> tablet of victory as far as "Pool of Horus" (Kbhwt-Hr); there was no king of Egypt <sup>8</sup>who did the like beside his majesty, the mighty, satisfied with victory, Nibmare (Nb-m <sup>9</sup>t-R <sup>c</sup>, Amenhotep III) is he. . . . .<sup>9</sup>. . . . .<sup>14</sup>. . . . .<sup>h</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Compare a similar announcement of a revolt in Nubia, to Thutmose II on the Assuan stela (§ 121, ll. 9-11), and to Thutmose IV on the Konosso stela (§ 826).

<sup>b</sup>A rock inscription near Assuan shows an official doing homage to the names of Amenhotep III, and dates the event as occurring "on his first victorious campaign in Kush" (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 119; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 28, No. 8).

<sup>c</sup>These two lines are very obscure and fragmentary, but refer to the king's valor and the overthrow of Kush.

<sup>d</sup>Titles and usual epitheta of the king.

<sup>e</sup>Cut on the rocks of the little island of Konosso at the north end of Philæ; text: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 82, a; Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 164, 165; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1218, 1219; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 67, 68.

<sup>f</sup>These are: Kush (Kš), Irem (Yr-m), Wrm (?) and rk.

<sup>g</sup>Full titulary of Amenhotep II.

<sup>h</sup>Contains only the usual conventional epithets; ll. 10-11 have: "He (Amon) hath given to him the south <sup>11</sup>as well as north, west, and east."

III. BUBASTIS INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

846. The fragment preserved to us belonged to an historical inscription of unusual interest, containing the account of an advance into Nubia, with descriptions of the battles and the stages of the advance in the same style as that of the Annals of Thutmose III. Indeed, it is not unlikely that the walls of the Bubastis temple contained annals of the wars of the Empire in Nubia, like those of the conquest of Syria on the walls of Karnak.

The fragment unfortunately contains no royal name, and has been conjecturally assigned to Sesostris III.<sup>b</sup> This is impossible, for the orthography<sup>c</sup> shows beyond doubt that the inscription dates from the Empire. Moreover, its content indicates a time when the Egyptian conquest extended far into the upper regions of Nubia, that is, from Amenhotep II on. A hitherto unnoticed reference to the coronation anniversary is here of great service. It is mentioned (l. 6) as occurring just after the first battle and before the advance to "the height of Hua" began. They reached this point in the third month of the first season (l. 11); the coronation anniversary therefore occurred not long before. Now, the coronation of Amenhotep III occurred in the third month of the first season on the second day; and the above inscriptions (§§ 844 ff.) show that he also celebrated a coronation festival on his Nubian campaign.<sup>d</sup> It is

<sup>a</sup>On a block of granite found at Bubastis; published by Naville (Bubastis, XXXIV, A). The block is from the middle of an inscription in vertical lines; not merely the beginning and end of the inscription are lost, but also the upper and lower portions of the lines, of which this block bears the middle portions.

<sup>b</sup>By Naville (Bubastis, 9).

<sup>c</sup>It contains the horizontal m which never occurs before the Eighteenth Dynasty; see Calice, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 35, 170.

<sup>d</sup>Thutmose II also mentions a coronation festival in an inscription narrating his Nubian campaign, but this merely dates the arrival of the news of the revolt, extremely probable, therefore, that this Bubastis fragment belongs to Amenhotep III, and describes the advance into Karoy, or the distant country beyond.

847. The expedition is very difficult to follow in the scanty fragment preserved to us, but its course was probably as follows:

Early in October, when the river is high, the army is already far up in Nubia. Before a battle the king makes a speech to his troops, after which the battle occurs, the king personally taking part in it (ll. 1-5). The expedition then started southward for the "height of Hua" on the coronation anniversary; reference is made to the first camp (l. 6). The king commanded that people (Nubians?) furnish certain things for the expedition<sup>a</sup> (l. 7), and reference is made to former troops; his majesty held a council (l. 8). A branch expedition of 124 men was sent out from the river to a certain well (l. 9); whether to destroy the well or attack the villages which would naturally be found near a well<sup>b</sup> is uncertain, but it was evidently the customary procedure to go out to these outlying wells, for in his expedition of the sixteenth year, Sesostris III "went forth to their wells"<sup>b</sup> (I, 658, l. 15); here also the purpose is not stated. The expedition then proceeded southward for "the height of Hua" (l. 10), taking captives and spoil on the way (l. 11). They were favored by a high north wind, and not more than a month after the coronation feast the desired "height whereas Amenhotep III apparently actually celebrated the feast in Nubia (§ 844, l. 5). The question arises whether the cataract stela (§§ 843 ff.) represents the party as having actually arrived at the first cataract on the return from the campaign, on coronation day. If so, we then have two different expeditions of Amenhotep III. In attributing both inscriptions to the same expedition, I am assuming that the cataract inscription gives the date of the battle, which is coronation day in both.

---

<sup>a</sup>Compare the muster of Nubian troops by the viceroy Mermose (§ 852, ll. 1-4).

<sup>b</sup>Many villages in Nubia are unreached by the water of the Nile, and are supported by wells.

of Hua . . . . came forth," that is, rose from the horizon (l. 12). They passed to the southward of "the height of Hua," and, having reached the land of Uneshk (W<sup>1</sup> nšk), they rested in a camp there (l. 13).

848. It would be of great importance to identify the countries mentioned and determine the southern limit of this expedition. Both Hua (hw<sup>c</sup>) and the land of Khesekhet (h<sup>2</sup> sh<sup>2</sup> t) occur close together in the lists of the regions of Khenthennofor, placed on the Karnak walls by Thutmose III (see §§ 645 ff);<sup>a</sup> the occurrence of Punt along with these names, and the narrative of the expedition, would indicate that they denote localities in the extreme south beyond Karoy on the Nile (above the Atbara?).

849. <sup>1</sup>———— Negroes ————— <sup>2</sup>———— this army, while their hearts were [eager] to fight quickly, beyond anything — came ————— <sup>3</sup>———— Ye [see] nothing has been done to you. Now, behold, as for your affair [which my majesty mentions] ————— <sup>4</sup>———— [—] of the Negroes who fell, in order that my [majesty]<sup>b</sup> might know, because ye do [this] ————— <sup>5</sup>———— it was not commanded for them. His majesty smote them himself with the baton which was in [his] hand ————— <sup>6</sup>———— the height of Hua (Hw<sup>c</sup>) on the coronation day of the king, behind western Khesekhet.<sup>c</sup> Behold, the army was made to camp ————— <sup>7</sup>———— all — very numerous beyond anything. His majesty issued a command to these people, to make them.<sup>d</sup> They

<sup>a</sup>W<sup>1</sup>nšk (l. 13) I have not found in any of the lists. Hw<sup>c</sup> occurs in the Karnak list as Hw<sup>c</sup> t (Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 22, No. 89); H<sup>2</sup> sh<sup>2</sup> t (ibid., No. 95). Hw<sup>c</sup> t also occurs with Punt in the list of Ramses III (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 209).

<sup>b</sup>That which Naville has read as t with a lacuna over it is possibly the sign for hn, "majesty;" but the book-roll?

<sup>c</sup>The preceding last context perhaps contained some statement like: "[The army departed for] the height of Hua," etc. It cannot be the arrival, for that does not occur until l. 12. The unknown land of Khesekhet (H<sup>2</sup> sh<sup>2</sup> t) occurs in the southern lists of Thutmose III (Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 22, No. 95, and Pl. 25, No. 95), and is usually rendered simply "barbarians." It is however a proper name, having nothing to do with h<sup>2</sup> s<sup>2</sup> ty, "barbarian."

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "a command of making them." Such a use of the genitive is common, especially in Papyrus Ebers receipts.

gave pra[ise 'to his majesty'] —————<sup>8</sup>————— infantry of the army which was of old, 'when' they were brought up from the court. His majesty took counsel, —————<sup>9</sup>————— [the place] in which they were, doing everything.

850. His majesty commanded, that 124<sup>a</sup> men of the army be dispatched, going forth to the well which is in<sup>b</sup> —————<sup>10</sup>—————<sup>c</sup> southward to see the height of Hua, to make known the ways of sailing —————<sup>11</sup>————— living captives which they found among them: negroes, 113<sup>d</sup> cattle, male and female; 11 asses, male and female. Third month of the first season —————<sup>12</sup>————— the north wind, was very high for the coming forth of the height of Hua; the coming forth of this height was in safety, sailing —————<sup>13</sup>————— Uneshk (W<sup>1</sup>mšk)<sup>e</sup> was its name, south of the height of Hua, resting in the camp made there —————.

IV. SEMNEH INSCRIPTION<sup>f</sup>

851. The date of this inscription is lost, but it doubtless refers to the campaign in Nubia. A revolt having occurred in Ibhet, the viceroy, Mermose, levies an army in lower Nubia, marches into Ibhet, and quells the rebellion. The beginning of the inscription is lacking, but it apparently contained the announcement of the revolt.

<sup>a</sup>The rendering (Bubastis, 10) "123" is incorrect.

<sup>b</sup>The name of some land followed. See § 847.

<sup>c</sup>This lacuna probably contained some further remark that the expedition advanced "southward," etc. Evidently "the height of Hua" is the point by which the course of the ship was governed! The "coming forth" of the height indicates its rise into view on the horizon. The whole description sounds so much like a sea-voyage that, were it not for the mention of "western Khesekhet" (l. 6), one might see in it a voyage along the Red Sea coast to Punt.

<sup>d</sup>Naville's "203" (ibid.) is incorrect.

<sup>e</sup>Has the determinative of a foreign country, and of course indicates some region visited.

<sup>f</sup>Stela in British Museum, published by Birch, Archæologia, XXXIV, facing p. 388; see also Archæological Journal, VIII, 399. I collated Birch's text with the Berlin squeeze (No. 1097), and afterward with the original in the British Museum, and found a number of important corrections were necessary.

Muster of the Army

852. <sup>1</sup>—————<sup>a</sup> <sup>2</sup>— — — occurred the reaping of the harvests of the <sup>3</sup>foe<sup>1</sup> of Ibhet (Ybh·t). Every man <sup>4</sup>reported<sup>b</sup> and one mustered <sup>5</sup>[an army of] Pharaoh, L. P. H., which was under command of this king's-son. He made troops, commanded by commanders, each man with<sup>c</sup> his village; <sup>6</sup>from the fortress of Beki (Bky)<sup>d</sup> to the fortress of Taroy (T<sup>3</sup>-r<sup>3</sup>-y), making 52 iters (ytr·w) of sailing.

Defeat of Ibhet

853. <sup>5</sup>The might of Nibmare took them in one day, in one hour, making a great slaughter ——— <sup>6</sup>their cattle; not one of them escaped; each one of them was brought — — — fear. The might of Amenhotep took them; <sup>7</sup>the barbarians among them, male as well as female, were not separated; by the plan of Horus, Lord of the Two Lands, King Nibmare, mighty bull, strong in might. Ibhet had been haughty,<sup>e</sup> <sup>8</sup>great things were in their hearts, (but<sup>1</sup>) the fierce-eyed lion, this ruler,<sup>f</sup> he slew them by command of Amon-Atum, his august father; it was he who led him <sup>9</sup>in might and victory.

List of Prisoners and Killed

854. List of the captivity which his majesty took in the land of Ibbet, the wretched:

Living negroes	150 heads
Archers ( mygy )	110 heads
Negresses	250 heads
<sup>10</sup> Servants ( sḏm-ꜥꜥ ) of the negroes	55 heads
Their children	175 heads
Total	740 living heads
Hands thereof	312
United <sup>11</sup> with the living heads	1,052

<sup>a</sup>A few fragmentary words and signs can be discerned. Several lines before this have probably been lost.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "went down to his opposite, or opposite him," which, in view of the connection, is perhaps a technical term for "report for duty."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "opposite his village," as above in preceding note.

<sup>d</sup>Near Kubbân; Taroy is uncertain. See Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XIV, 408 f.; but accepting an iter as about 1.4 miles, the distance, some 75 miles, would put Taroy in the vicinity of Ibrim.

<sup>e</sup>Lit., "was high-voiced."

<sup>f</sup>In a cartouche.

Words of the Viceroy

855. The king's-son, vigilant for his lord, favorite of the Good God, governor of the entire land of Kush, king's-scribe, Mermose. He saith: "Praise to thee! <sup>12</sup>O Good God! Great is thy might against him that fronts<sup>a</sup> thee; thou causest them that are rebellious against thee to say: 'The fire that we have made rages against us.' Thou hast slain all thy enemies, overthrown beneath thy feet."

TABLET OF VICTORY<sup>b</sup>

856. This tablet was set up by Amenhotep III in his mortuary temple at Thebes, to commemorate his victories in the north and south. Above is a relief twice showing Amenhotep III before Amon. Both figures of Amon were cut out by Ikhnaton and restored by Seti I, with the usual legend:

Restoration of the monument, which the Son of Re, Seti-Merneptah, made for his father, Amon.

857. Below is a second relief, in which Amenhotep III appears twice in his chariot. On the right he drives over the fallen of Kush, with the chiefs bound upon his horses, over which is the legend:

The Good God ———<sup>c</sup> lord of the sword, mighty in dragging them (at his chariot), annihilating the heir of the wretched Kush, bringing their princes as living prisoners.

858. In the same way he drives over the Syrians on the left; above the princes bound on the horses, are the words:

The Good God, Golden [Horus], Shining in the chariot,<sup>d</sup> like the

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "reaches thee," meaning in battle.

<sup>b</sup>Limestone stela discovered by Petrie in the mortuary temple of Merneptah at Thebes, whither it had been carried by this king from the mortuary temple of Amenhotep III; text: Petrie, Six Temples, X.

<sup>c</sup>Traces of the cartouche.

<sup>d</sup>Text seems to show chariot and horses; possibly only horses!

rising of the sun; great in strength, strong in might, mighty-hearted like him who dwells in Thebes (Montu); smiting Naharin (N-h-r-ny, sic!) with his mighty sword.

A line of inscription runs across the bottom, as follows:

———— [every] country, all people (rhyt'), all populations (hnm̄t), Naharin (N-h-r-ny, sic!), the wretched Kush, Retenu the Upper and Retenu the Lower are at the feet of this Good God, like Re, forever.

859. A scarab published by Frazer (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXI, Pl. III, facing p. 155), gives to Amenhotep III the epithet: "Captor of Shinar" (S<sup>2</sup>-n-g-r). The Amarna Letters show that no significance is to be attached to this epithet. The decorations on the columns at Soleb show captive figures representing Shinar, Naharin, Hittites, Kadesh, Tunip, Ugarit, Keftiyew, Carchemish, Asur, and Arrapachitis.<sup>a</sup> But such decorations are far from showing that Amenhotep III had conquered or maintained his conquest in these far-off regions.

THE COMMEMORATIVE SCARABS

860. On five different occasions, in commemoration of events in his personal history, Amenhotep IV issued a series of scarabs inscribed on the under side, recording the following matters:

- I. Marriage with Tiy;
- II. Wild Cattle Hunt;
- III. Ten Years' Lion-Hunting;
- IV. Marriage with Kirgipa;
- V. Construction of Pleasure Lake.

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 88. The above are all that can safely be identified. See also fragment of a list at Karnak (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 9), containing also Naharin (?) and Shinar.

As far as we know, he was the only king who did this, although small scarabs referring in two or three words to great events were issued by other kings; e. g., Thutmose III thus refers to the erection of obelisks (§ 625) and the capture of Kadesh.

I. MARRIAGE WITH TIY<sup>a</sup>

861. This marriage took place before the year 2 when Tiy is already queen (see next scarab). The origin of the powerful Tiy is obscure; Maspero thinks her a native Egyptian,<sup>b</sup> and this is the most probable conclusion, but the persistent publication of the names of her untitled parents<sup>c</sup> on these and other scarabs is in that case remarkable, although paralleled by scarabs of the Thirteenth Dynasty. This difficulty is, however, not relieved by supposing her of foreign birth. It is incredible that anyone could identify her with Kirgipa,<sup>d</sup> on whose marriage scarab she already appears in the titulary as queen. She is the first queen who is thus recognized by the regular insertion of her name in the titulary. The innovation was continued by Amenhotep IV, who inserted his queen's name in the same way. His ephemeral successors show the same inclination, and the whole period from the time of Amenhotep III to the close of the Eighteenth Dynasty is characterized by the

<sup>a</sup>At least twelve of these scarabs are in the different collections of Europe; see list, Wiedemann, Aegyptische Geschichte, 393, n. 6; text: Mariette, Album de Boulaq, Pl. 36; Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, 44; Budge, The Mummy, 242, 234; Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 315; translated from the last three.

<sup>b</sup>Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 315, n. 1, where full bibliography is given.

<sup>c</sup>The tomb of these two people, Yuya and Thuya, was discovered this year (1905) in the Valley of the Kings' Tombs at Thebes by Mr. Theodore M. Davis of Newport. It was filled with the most magnificent mortuary furniture, and still contained the bodies of Yuya and Thuya.

<sup>d</sup>The absurd story of the king's meeting and falling in love with Tiy on a hunting expedition in Mesopotamia, which has been added to the English edition of Brugsch's Egypt under the Pharaohs (214), it is hardly necessary to say is totally without documentary foundation.

mention and prominent representation of the queens on all state occasions, in such a manner as is never found later.

862. Live . . . .<sup>a</sup> King Amenhotep (III), who is given life, (and) the Great King's-Wife Tiy (Tyy), who liveth. The name of her father is Yuya (Ywy), the name of her mother is Thuya (Twy). She is the wife of a mighty king whose southern boundary is as far as Karoy (K-r-y) (and) northern as far as Naharin (N-h-ry-n).

II. WILD CATTLE HUNT<sup>b</sup>

863. This scarab records the first hunting achievements of the chase-loving Amenhotep III. Unfortunately, the region<sup>c</sup> where the hunt took place cannot be identified with certainty, but as it was reached in a night's voyage on the king's Nile barge, it was not some remote district like the scene of Thutmose III's elephant hunt in Naharin. As the voyage was northward, it is likely to have been some district in the Delta which could be reached in a night from Memphis. The method of hunting consisted in surrounding and driving the wild cattle into a huge encircling inclosure.<sup>d</sup> They thus inclosed 170 animals, of which the king killed not less than 75 on two different days.

864. Year 2 under the majesty of King Amenhotep (III)<sup>e</sup> given life, and the great king's-wife Tiy, living like Re.

<sup>a</sup>Full titulary.

<sup>b</sup>Only one specimen of this scarab is published; it is in the collection of Mr. G. W. Frazer, and was published by him (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXI, Pl. III, opp. p. 155), with a good translation by Mr. Griffith (ibid., 156); and again, A Catalogue of the Scarabs Belonging to George Frazer (London, 1900), frontispiece, Pl. XVI, and p. 56. Another specimen is said to be in the collection of Rev. W. MacGregor of Tamworth.

<sup>c</sup>It may be read either Štꜣ or Štꜣ. The first determinative indicates a body of water, and the second the desert highlands. This would suit some spot in the Delta with its network of canals, near the margin of the desert.

<sup>d</sup>Such an inclosure, made with a net, may be seen at Benihasan (Newberry, Beni Hasan).

<sup>e</sup>Full titulary.

Marvel which happened to his majesty. One came to say to his majesty: "There are wild cattle upon the highlands, as far as the region<sup>a</sup> of 'Sheta' (𓆎𓆏𓆑)." His majesty sailed down-stream in the royal barge, Khammat (𓆎𓆏𓆑𓆒𓆓) at the time of evening, beginning the goodly way, and arriving in safety at the region of 'Sheta' (𓆎𓆏𓆑) at the time of morning.

His majesty appeared upon<sup>b</sup> a horse, his whole army being behind him. The commanders and the citizens<sup>c</sup> of all the army in its entirety and the children with them were commanded<sup>d</sup> to keep watch over the wild cattle. Behold, his majesty commanded to cause that these wild cattle be surrounded<sup>d</sup> by a wall with an inclosure.<sup>d</sup> His majesty commanded to count<sup>e</sup> all these wild cattle. Statement thereof: 170 wild cattle. Statement of [that which] his majesty [captured]<sup>f</sup> in the hunt on this day: 56 wild cattle.

His majesty tarried 4 days — — to give fire<sup>g</sup> to his horses. His majesty appeared upon a horse [a second time]. Statement of these wild cattle, which he captured in the hunt: 20 (+x) wild cattle. [Total]<sup>h</sup> 75 (+x) wild cattle.

III. TEN YEARS' LION-HUNTING<sup>i</sup>

865. In his tenth year, the king issued a large number of these scarabs, to commemorate his success in lion-hunting.

<sup>a</sup>Read rwn, as in l. 7; the t probably belongs to the sm·t in the preceding line.

<sup>b</sup>This is the strange preposition used when the king is in his chariot, for he did not ride horseback. See the Amarna Landmark Stelæ (§ 960, ll. 5-6). The hunting reliefs at Medinet Habu show that wild cattle were hunted from the chariot.

<sup>c</sup>See I, 681, ll. 3, 4, and note.

<sup>d</sup>The same words for "surround" (ynk), "wall" (sbty), and "inclosure" (šdy) are used together in the same way in Thutmose III's description of the investiture of Megiddo (§ 433).

<sup>e</sup>Read hsb instead of r, which has customarily been read heretofore.

<sup>f</sup>Restored from lion-hunt scarab.

<sup>g</sup>This is literal; it perhaps means "spirit," as Griffith has rendered.

<sup>h</sup>This is the total from the two hunts; the sum of the two days is not less than 75, nor more than 85.

<sup>i</sup>At least thirty of these scarabs are in European museums, and three in the Art Institute of Chicago; they have been often published; e. g., Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 298; Biblical World, June, 1896, 449 (with translation), Pierret, Recueil d'Inscriptions, I, 88; a list of them is in Wiedemann, Aegyptische Geschichte, 381, n. 6. The above translation is based on a comparison of several originals.

Live . . . . .<sup>a</sup> Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, Given life, (and) the Great King's-Wife: Tiy, who liveth.

Statement of lions which his majesty brought down with his own arrows from year 1 to year 10: fierce lions, 102.<sup>b</sup>

IV. MARRIAGE WITH KIRGIPA<sup>c</sup>

866. This scarab records the marriage of the princess Kirgipa, daughter of Satirna, a king of Naharin, to Amenhotep III. When Brugsch published this scarab for the first time, in 1880, he expressed the hope<sup>d</sup> that the cuneiform literature might some time be able to throw some light on the origin of this princess. Curiously enough, the discovery of the Amarna correspondence in 1887 has done so.<sup>e</sup> In a letter<sup>f</sup> from Dushratta, king of Mitanni, she appears as his sister Gilukhipa; their father<sup>g</sup> was Shuttarna, king of Mitanni.<sup>h</sup> A mistranslation of Birch (Records of the Past,

<sup>a</sup>Full titular.

<sup>b</sup>Some have 110 (e. g., Louvre, No. 580), an easy error for 102; Maspero's 112 (Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 298) is not corroborated by his accompanying text.

<sup>c</sup>The specimens are in private hands. Mr. Frazer (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXI, 155) speaks of "two or three;" first published by Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1880, 81-87; then by Maspero, Recueil, XV, 200; finally Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1413; another specimen, Recueil, XVI, 62.

<sup>d</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1880, 86.

<sup>e</sup>Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1890, 112; Evetts, ibid., 113; Jensen and Winckler, ibid., 114.

<sup>f</sup>Winckler, Amarna Letters, 16, 5, and 41, 42. <sup>g</sup>Ibid., 21, 18, 19.

<sup>h</sup>The marriages between this Asiatic family and the Pharaohs, as shown in the Amarna letters, are as follows:

See Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 281.

1st Series, XII, 39) has resulted in confusing Kirgipa with Tiy, who is quite another person (see § 861).

867. <sup>1</sup>Year 10 under the majesty of <sup>2</sup>. . . . <sup>5</sup>. . . . <sup>a</sup>the Son of Re, Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, who is granted life; (and) the Great King's-Wife, Tiy, who liveth; the name of whose father was Yuya (Ywy), the name of whose mother was Thuya (Twy).

Marvels brought to his majesty, L. P. H.:<sup>b</sup> Kirgipa (Ky-r-gy-p), the daughter of the chief of Naharin (N-h-r-n), Satirna (S<sup>2</sup>-ty-r-n); (and) the chief of her harem-ladies, (viz.,) 317 persons.

V. CONSTRUCTION OF A PLEASURE LAKE<sup>c</sup>

868. This scarab records the construction of a pleasure lake by Amenhotep III, for his queen Tiy, in a town or a city quarter (dmy), called Zerukha (d<sup>c</sup>r-wh), otherwise unknown. It is not unlikely that this is the lake of which the remains, called Birket Habu, are clearly visible south of Medinet Habu, beside the palace of Amenhotep III,<sup>d</sup> an exceedingly probable situation. But this lake varies considerably in dimensions from those given on the scarab.

The opening of the lake was doubtless in connection with the coronation anniversary, which fell on the next day<sup>e</sup> after orders for constructing the lake were given.

<sup>a</sup>The usual full titulary.

<sup>b</sup>This heads the list; we should expect the usual word "statement," as, e. g., in the lion-hunt scarabs.

<sup>c</sup>Four copies of this scarab are known: (1) in the Vatican (Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, 44, No. 2 = Stern, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1877, 87, n. 2 = Marucchi, Bessarione, 1899, 122); (2) private collection of W. Golénischeff (privately distributed photographs); (3) collection in Alnwick Castle (Birch, Catalogue, No. 1030, 137); (4) fragment in University College, London (not published). The first three of the above were collated and published by Steindorff (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1901, 63).

<sup>d</sup>Cf. Steindorff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1901, 64.

<sup>e</sup>§ 844, l. 1; Lieblein (Sphinx, VI, 113 ff.) has calculated the date of this opening in terms of our calendar as September 26, Julian, or November 5, Gregorian.

869. Year 11, third month of the first season, day 1, under the majesty of . . . . .<sup>a</sup> Amenhotep III, given life; and the Great King's-Wife, Tiy, who liveth.

His majesty commanded to make a lake for the Great King's-Wife, Tiy, in her city of Zerukha (D<sup>c</sup> r-wḥ).<sup>b</sup> Its length is 3,700 cubits; its width, 700<sup>c</sup> cubits. His majesty celebrated the feast of the opening of the 'lake', in the third month of the first season, day 16,<sup>d</sup> when his majesty sailed thereon in the royal barge: "Aton-Gleams."<sup>e</sup>

JUBILEE CELEBRATIONS

870. Amenhotep III celebrated at least three royal jubilees: the first in the year 30; the second, although not recorded, probably like that of Ramses II, in the year 34; and the third in the year 36. The celebration of the first jubilee is recorded in the tomb of Khamhet,<sup>f</sup> in two remarkable reliefs.

871. The first shows the king enthroned in state at the right; before him is the inscription:<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Full fivefold titulary.

<sup>b</sup>This name was long misread "Zaru," with which it has nothing to do (cf. Steindorff, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1901, 64; and Breasted, ibid., 65, 66). The statements regarding the presentation of "Zaru" to Tiy, current in the histories, are all to be rejected.

<sup>c</sup>Vatican copy has 600, the others 700. Steindorff reads here "upper arms" (rmn) instead of "cubits" (mḥy). This distinction, although evident on the surviving cubit rods, is not carried through on the monuments. At Benihasan, the rmn-sign occurs in door dimensions, where it is clear that the cubit is meant; see my remarks (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, March, 1900, 88-90).

<sup>d</sup>Thus the lake must have been completed in fifteen days!

<sup>e</sup>Cf. further examples by Spiegelberg (Rechnungen, Text, 81-86), who has compiled a very useful list of these barges, also Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1901, 66.

<sup>f</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 76, 77, and Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1121-23; for full bibliography, see § 819, where also the inscriptions under the reign of Thutmose IV are given. For a scarab referring to the jubilees, see Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1456).

<sup>g</sup>Among his titles both inscriptions add that of: "Lord of the Jubilee."

Appearance of the king upon the great throne, to receive the report of the harvest of the South and North.

Before the king stands Khamhet reading to him a document; over Khamhet's head the following inscription in five vertical lines:

Communication of the report of the harvest of the year 30<sup>a</sup> in the presence of the king, consisting of the harvest of the great inundation of the jubilee [which] his majesty [celebrated]; by<sup>b</sup> the stewards of the estates<sup>c</sup> of Pharaoh, L. P. H., together with the chiefs of the South and North, from this land of Kush the wretched, as far as the boundary of Naharin (N-h-ry-n).

Under the document are the words: "Total: 33,333,300."<sup>d</sup>

872. As a consequence of this favorable report, the treasury officials are now rewarded, as shown in the following scene.<sup>e</sup>

The king is seated in state in a splendid pavilion at the left; before him, the inscription:

Appearance of the king upon the great throne, to reward the chiefs of the South and North.

Before the king stands Khamhet with the inscription:

Hereditary prince, count, who satisfies the heart of the king in the whole land, the two eyes of the king in the cities of the South, his two ears in the nomes of the Northland, king's-scribe ——— (named), Khamhet.<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>So Brugsch, but Lepsius has a lacuna.

<sup>b</sup>To be connected with "communication."

<sup>c</sup>Or possibly better "income," see Spiegelberg, Studien, 55 and note 227, who, however, does not refer to our passage.

<sup>d</sup>These are probably only plurals of the numeral signs.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 76.

<sup>f</sup>His titles are written more fully in Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 840; "Hereditary prince, count, who fills the heart of his lord, favorite of the Good God, to whom are told all the affairs of the palace — — companion of the feet of the Lord of the Two Lands in every place which he treads, chief of the archers of the Good God"

Behind Khamhet are three lines of officials praising the king; the upper line is receiving rich gifts; inscription:

Reward of the stewards of the [estates]<sup>1</sup> of Pharaoh, L. P. H., together with the chiefs of the South and the North after the statement<sup>a</sup> of the overseer of the granary concerning them: "They have increased the harvest of year 30."

873. The records of the second Jubilee have perished, but the third is mentioned in the tomb of Kheruf,<sup>b</sup> in the following heading:

"Year 36. Conducting the companions for presentation in the (royal) presence at the third (hb-sd) jubilee of his majesty.<sup>c</sup>

874. The ceremony of erecting the symbol of Osiris, the curious column, which is also the symbol of stability, was performed on the morning of the traditional royal jubilee feast day (first of Tybi). Amenhotep III is shown personally erecting this column on the morning of one of his jubilee days, in the reliefs in a Theban tomb.<sup>d</sup>

---

QUARRY AND MINE INSCRIPTIONS

875. New chambers in the Turra quarry were opened by the king in his first year,<sup>e</sup> and recorded in an inscription<sup>f</sup> identical in content with another<sup>g</sup> recording similar work

---

<sup>a</sup>Read dd with Brugsch; not jd as in Lepsius, Denkmäler.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, 1120.

<sup>c</sup>That this is Amenhotep III is shown by the mention of Queen Tiy in the titulary.

<sup>d</sup>Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1190-96.

<sup>e</sup>The quarries at el-Bersheh were also opened in the "year 1," as recorded there in a mutilated inscription (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, IX, 195); much better, Spiegelberg, Recueil, 26, 151, 152). It records the erection of a monument of uncertain character in the Thoth temple at Hermopolis.

<sup>f</sup>Cut on the walls of the limestone quarry at Turra; published Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 71, a-d, and Vyse, Pyramids, III, 96, Nos. 3 and 4.

<sup>g</sup>This second inscription of the same content, Lepsius, Denkmäler, 71, b. Compare the similar inscription of Ahmose in the same quarry (§§ 26-28).

in the second year. The latter is surmounted by an offering scene, and is as follows:

<sup>1</sup>Year 2, under the majesty of . . . . <sup>2</sup>. . . . <sup>a</sup>Amenhotep (III) . . . . .; his majesty commanded to open the quarry-chambers anew, in order to quarry fine limestone of Ayan (<sup>c</sup>n), in order to build his temples <sup>3</sup>of a million of years, after his majesty found the quarry-chambers which are in Troja (R<sup>3</sup>-<sup>3</sup>wy), beginning to be very ruinous since the <sup>4</sup>times which were before. It was my majesty who made (them) anew, in order that he might be given life, stability, satisfaction, health, like Re, forever.

876. The granite quarry at Assuan was visited by an official of this king, for the purpose of cutting out a colossal statue of his lord. This officer has had carved in relief<sup>b</sup> on the rock his own figure standing in homage before the names of Amenhotep III. Below are the words:

[Homage] to the Good God, when was made the great statue of his majesty (called): "Sun-of-Rulers."

Near by is an overturned, unfinished, colossal statue, to which the inscription doubtless refers.

877. A stela<sup>c</sup> of the year 36 in Sarbût-el-Khadem in Sinai, records an expedition thither in that year, in which the commanding official refers to the "sea (the Great Green)" in a connection<sup>d</sup> which would indicate that he crossed to Sinai by the sea route, but the inscription is too fragmentary for translation.

<sup>a</sup>The full titulary, but omitting the Golden Horus-name.

<sup>b</sup>Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 39; de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 63.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 71, c=Ordnance Survey, III, Pl. 14.

<sup>d</sup>The connection is broken by an interfering fragment of rock which the photographer of the Ordnance Survey failed to remove. Another stela of the year 36 shows Amenhotep III offering to Amon and Hathor (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 71, d; not in Ordnance Survey).

BUILDING INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

878. This monument has had an interesting career. Erected by Amenhotep III in his temple behind the Memnon colossi, to record his buildings in honor of Amon, its inscription was almost totally obliterated by the reforming zeal of his son, Amenhotep IV.<sup>b</sup> It was restored by Seti I, who recorded his restoration thus: "Restoration of the monument which the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menmare (Seti I), made for his father Amon-Re, King of all Gods."<sup>c</sup> In restoring the monument, the sculptor of Seti found the old lines sufficiently traceable to be recut with tolerable certainty, not without some glaring errors, which cannot always be corrected. Four or five generations later, Merneptah demolished the splendid temple of Amenhotep III, containing this stela, and used the material, including the stela<sup>d</sup> in a building of his own, where it fell down and remained until taken out by Petrie in February, 1896.

879. The upper third is occupied by a scene twice showing Amenhotep III with the usual legends, offering a libation to Amon. The inscription of thirty-one lines records Amen-

<sup>a</sup>Discovered by Petrie in February, 1896, on a black granite stela lying in the ruins of the Theban mortuary temple of Merneptah; this stela is 10 feet 3 inches by 5 feet 4 inches, and 13 inches thick. See Contemporary Review, May, 1896, 619; Century Magazine, August, 1896, 501 (view of stela in situ). Text: Photographic reproduction and transcription with translation and excellent commentary by Spiegelberg, Recueil, XX, 37-54; finally in Petrie, Six Temples, Pl. XI, XII. I have used a photograph, kindly sent me by E. Brugsch-Bey shortly after the discovery of the monument, at which time I made the translation; later notes drawn from Spiegelberg I have carefully credited to him. Important suggestions in Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, 1898, No. 5, 156, 157.

<sup>b</sup>One can clearly see in the photograph that the inscription has been hammered out, as far as the end of l. 22, including also parts of lines 23-28, leaving the last three lines untouched (see, e. g., photographs in Recueil, XX, and Century Magazine, August, 1896, 501). Excepting the two figures of the king, the scene at the top was also erased.

<sup>c</sup>Cut between the two figures of Amon at the top of the monument; similar restorations by Seti often, e. g., on the obelisk of Hatshepsut.

<sup>d</sup>He cut on the back of it the hymn of victory, mentioning Israel: see III, 602 ff.

hotep III's chief buildings and other pious works in honor of Amon:

1. Introduction, ll. 1-2 (§ 882).
2. Temple of the (Memnon) Colossi, ll. 2-10 (§§ 883-85).
3. Luxor Temple and Connected Buildings (§§ 886, 887).
4. Sacred Barge of Amon, ll. 16-20 (§ 888).
5. Third Pylon of Karnak, ll. 20-23 (§ 889).
6. Temple of Soleb, ll. 23-26 (§ 890).
7. Hymn of Amon to the King, ll. 26-31 (§§ 891, 892).

880. The architectural data given by the scribe are very important, but are as usual, very general and vague, showing great, if not total, lack of technical knowledge of the subject. The treatment of temple floors with silver (ll. 3, 11, and 22) and the walls with gold or electrum (ll. 3, 11), although very vaguely described, is important. The settlement of Syrians around the temple of the (Memnon) Colossi is historically of importance also. The king's selection of his Soleb temple in Nubia, to be mentioned in preference to his Egyptian temples outside of Thebes,<sup>a</sup> shows his strong interest in the region above the second cataract, where he was so active, and where he caused himself to be worshiped. It is furthermore noticeable that the king makes no reference to his other Theban buildings, the temple of Mut and the temple at the northern gate of the Karnak inclosure, of either of which very little now remains.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Thus he omits all reference to his Memphis temple, where he was evidently worshiped, for he appears with Ptah as one of the gods of Memphis (Papyrus Sallier, IV; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 961, No. 23); and his temple there was called "House of Nibmare" (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 963). A cultus statuette which he dedicated to himself as a god in this Memphis temple is in Alnwick collection; it bears the dedication: "Nibmare (Amenhotep III); he made it as his monument for his living image in 'The House of Nibmare'" (Birch, Catalogue Alnwick Castle, 56-58). The El Kab temple, which he is often stated to have built, was erected by Thutmose IV, his father, for whom he only decorated it, as the inscription states: "Lo, the majesty of King Nibmare decorated this monument of his father, Thutmose IV, forever and ever" (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 80, b = J. J. Tylor, The Temple of Amenhotep III, Pl. 10; again Pl. 8 = Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 43).

<sup>b</sup>This is to be explained by the fact that the stela records only buildings of Amon.

Part of the dedicatory inscription of the latter is still preserved,<sup>a</sup> and contains data of importance. It is introduced by the king's titulary, to which is appended:

881. Who raises a monument in Karnak, a marvelous thing, unlimited in — of gold, plentiful in gold, unlimited in malachite and lazuli; a place of rest for the lord of gods, made like his throne that is in heaven, that he (the king) might be thereby given satisfying life like Re forever. —<sup>b</sup> an inclosure made to flourish with monuments, made to shine with all flowers, filled with slaves (mr't) due from the (hshb-) officials, being children of the chiefs of all countries, coming in obeisance to his fame. The Son of Re, Amenhotep, ruler of Thebes, made it for the chosen of Re, because he loved his father, Amon, lord of Thebes, so much more than all the gods. He has been given life, stability, satisfaction, like Re, forever.

Of all this the great building stela makes no mention. It is as follows:

Introduction

882. <sup>1</sup>Live . . . . .<sup>c</sup> Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes; beloved of Amon, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak; given life, joy of his heart, that he may rule the Two Lands like Re, forever; <sup>2</sup>the Good God, possessor of joy, who is very vigilant for him that begat him, Amon, king of gods; who hath made great his (Amon's) house,<sup>d</sup> who hath satisfied his beauty<sup>d</sup> by doing that which his ka desires.

Temple of the Memnon Colossi<sup>e</sup>

883. Behold, the heart of his majesty was satisfied with making a very great<sup>f</sup> monument; never has happened the like since the beginning.

<sup>a</sup>Published by Bouriant, Recueil, XIII, 171-73.

<sup>b</sup>This section is covered by a Roman wall.

<sup>c</sup>Full five-name titulary.

<sup>d</sup>Not in Spiegelberg's transcription, Recueil, XX, 40.

<sup>e</sup>The colossi known as the Memnon colossi (cf. ll. 4, 5) still stand, but the temple, the entrance of which they flanked, has disappeared; see above, § 878. It was the mortuary temple of Amenhotep III, of which there is a further account inscribed on a huge stela now lying in the scanty ruins behind the colossi (§§ 904 ff.). For an account of the excavation around this temple, see Petrie, Six Temples in Thebes; the temple itself has never been excavated. View of the colossi, Mariette, Voyage dans la haute Egypte, II, 57, or my Egypt through the Stereoscope, No. 64.

<sup>f</sup>Although the adjective is plural, I translate singular, for in l. 4 it is also plural where it clearly should be singular.

He made (it) as <sup>3</sup>his monument for his father, Amon, lord of Thebes, making for him an august temple<sup>a</sup> on the west of Thebes, an eternal, everlasting fortress<sup>b</sup> of fine white sandstone, wrought with gold throughout; its floor is adorned with silver, <sup>4</sup>all its portals with electrum;<sup>c</sup> it is made very wide and large, and established forever; and adorned with this very great monument.<sup>d</sup> It is numerous in royal statues, of Elephantine granite, of costly gritstone, of every splendid costly stone, <sup>5</sup>established as everlasting works.<sup>e</sup> Their stature shines more than the heavens, their rays are in the faces (of men) like the sun, when he shines early in the morning. It is supplied with a "Station of the King,"<sup>f</sup> wrought with gold and many costly stones. <sup>6</sup>Flagstaves<sup>g</sup> are set up before it, wrought with electrum; it resembles the horizon in heaven when Re rises therein. Its lake is filled with the great Nile, lord of fish and fowl, pure in [—]

Its Wealth

884. Its storehouse is filled with male and female slaves, <sup>7</sup>with children of the princes of all the countries of the captivity of his majesty.

<sup>a</sup>Called "House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes" in the inscription on a black granite statue of Amenhotep III at Erment, published by Daressy, Recueil, XIX, 14, and Spiegelberg, Recueil, XX, 49.

<sup>b</sup>The temple regarded as a stronghold; cf. remarks of Spiegelberg, Recueil, XX, 48.

<sup>c</sup>Just how the metals were used on floor, walls, and doorways is not clear from these vague data, but they materially augment our ideas of the splendor of the Egyptian temple.

<sup>d</sup>Probably the stela on which this text is cut.

<sup>e</sup>Spiegelberg (Recueil, XX, 49) calls attention to the fact that the French expedition found eighteen of these statues on the west shore still in situ, some of which are now in the museums: in the British Museum one of black granite (Arundale and Bonomi, Gallery, Pl. 35); two heads (ibid., 107); also a black granite statue at Erment, first published by Daressy (Recueil, XIX, 14). Spiegelberg thinks it strange that the two Memnon colossi are not given separate mention, but they are clearly mentioned in the reference to "costly gritstone," which is the material of the colossi. Moreover, they are distinctly mentioned in the Dedication Inscription (l. 4, § 906). In further corroboration of the inscription, note the statement: "there were many of these statues which stood fronting the great colossi in the intervals of the front columns of the propylon" (Arundale and Bonomi, Gallery, 107), noted by Spiegelberg.

<sup>f</sup>The enormous stela lying overthrown behind the Memnon colossi (§ 904 ff.). The word "station" is here determined with a stela, showing that, as at Amada (§ 796, l. 15), the "station of the king" was marked by the stela against the back wall of the holy of holies.

<sup>g</sup>Cf. similar staves in the inscription of Ineni, § 103.

Its storehouses contain all good things, whose number is not known. It is surrounded with settlements of Syrians ( $\text{H}^{\text{p}}-rw$ ), colonized with children of princes, its cattle <sup>8</sup>are like the sand of the shore, they make up millions.

Western Pylon

885. The bow-rope of the Southland [in it] and the stern-rope of the Northland,<sup>a</sup> even his majesty revealed<sup>b</sup> himself like Ptah, was skilful-minded like Him-South-of-His-Wall (Ptah), searching out excellent things for his father, Amon-Re, King of Gods, making for him <sup>9</sup>a very great pylon<sup>c</sup> over against Amon. Its beautiful name which his majesty made was: "Amon-Has-Received-His-Divine-Barque,"<sup>d</sup> a place of rest for the lord of the gods at his "Feast of the Valley" on the western voyage of Amon to behold the western gods, in order that he may endow <sup>10</sup>his majesty with satisfying life.

Luxor Temple<sup>e</sup>

886. King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands: Nibmare, Heir of Re; Son of Re, Lord of Diadems: Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, is satisfied with a building for his father Amon-Re, <sup>a</sup>Inscription of Ineni (l. 17, § 341) has: "the bow-rope of the South . . . . the stern-rope of the North is she," as epithets of Hatshepsut. It seems to me that Spiegelberg (Recueil, XX, 50) has overlooked the determinative (a rope) in his rendering "Bug" and "Spiegel," "bow" and "stern." (Cf. Sethe, Untersuchungen, I, 52). In view of the Ineni passage, his rejection of the genitive signs seems to me impossible.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "opened himself;" cf.  $wb^{\text{p}}sw$ , a synonymous phrase (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 18, l. 3), which Müller renders "sich zeigen" (Recueil, IX, 162).

<sup>c</sup>This is probably the pylon which flanked the Memnon Colossi, but is now entirely gone.

<sup>d</sup>The literal meaning of the phrase used for the barque is: "Bearer of his beauty;" it was a portable shrine.

<sup>e</sup>The well-known temple at modern Luxor, of which the southern portion is due to Amenhotep III. The architrave inscriptions (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 73, and Text, III, 80, 81) offer a short account of the building: "He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, king of gods, again erecting for him Luxor anew, of fine white sandstone, made very, very high and wide, adorned with electrum throughout, and all splendid, costly stones; a rest for Amon, a place of rest for the lord of gods, made like unto his horizon in heaven. That he might be given life." Statements like: "who built temples — — sculptured their statues; that which was of brick was (re)built of stone;" or: "who again erected Luxor anew," of course refer to the older Middle Empire temple which Amenhotep III enlarged or rebuilt. On the entire history of the Luxor temple, see Borchardt, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1896, 122-38.

lord of Thebes, in Southern Opet (Luxor), of fine white sandstone, made very wide and large <sup>11</sup>and its beauty increased. Its walls are of electrum, its floor<sup>a</sup> is of silver, all the portals are wrought with [—], its towers reach<sup>b</sup> heaven, and mingle with the stars. When the people see it, <sup>12</sup>they give praise to his majesty.

It is the king Nibmare who hath satisfied<sup>c</sup> the heart of his father, Amon, lord of Thebes, who hath assigned to him every country, the Son of Re, Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, Brilliance of Re [—]

Buildings Near Luxor

887. His majesty made another monument, for his father, Amon; making for him an [inclosure] as a divine offering over against Southern Opet; <sup>13</sup>a salubrious place for my<sup>d</sup> father at his beautiful feast. I erected a great temple<sup>e</sup> in its midst<sup>f</sup> like Re when he rises in the horizon. It is planted with all flowers; how beautiful is Nun in his pool at every season; <sup>14</sup>more is its wine<sup>g</sup> than water, like a full Nile, born of the lord of eternity. Many are the goods of the place, the impost of all countries is received, numerous tribute is brought before my father, being the offerings of all lands. He hath assigned to me the princes of the south countries; <sup>15</sup>the Southerners are like the Northerners, and each one is<sup>h</sup> like his neighbor; their silver, their gold, their cattle, every splendid costly stone of their countries, by millions, hundred thousands, ten thousands, and thousands. I have done (it) for the one who begat me, in the uprightness<sup>i</sup> of my heart, according as <sup>16</sup>he appointed me to be the sun of the Nine Bows.

<sup>a</sup>Corrected from l. 3, at the end.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., “washed.”

<sup>b</sup>Restored from l. 22.

<sup>d</sup>A sudden change to the first person.

<sup>e</sup>The only “great temple” of Amenhotep III which is “over against” Luxor is the temple of Mut, which could hardly be referred to here without some reference to the goddess. Hence there may be some undiscovered building of Amenhotep III in the unexplored ground between Luxor and Karnak, to which reference is here made.

<sup>f</sup>Spiegelberg, p. 41, n. 6.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., “more to it is wine,” a common phrase; text is corrupt, read: “wr nj yr p.”

<sup>h</sup>By an emendation drawn from a repetition of the very same phrase on the Luxor architrave (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 73, d, l. 3). This renders invalid the objections of Spiegelberg to the emendation (Recueil, XX, 51).

<sup>i</sup>Lit., “correctness,” Erman has treated the phrase (Gespräch eines Lebensmüden, 62).

Sacred Barge of Amon<sup>b</sup>

888. King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Nibmare, Part of Re; Son of Re: Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes. I made another monument for him who begat me, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, who established <sup>1</sup>me upon his throne, making for him a great barge<sup>a</sup> for the "Beginning-of-the-River" (named): "Amon-Re-in-the-Sacred-Barge,"<sup>b</sup> of new cedar <sup>17</sup>which his majesty cut in the countries<sup>c</sup> of God's-Land. It was dragged over the mountains of Retenu (Rtww) by the princes of all countries. It was made very wide and large, there is no instance of doing the like. Its <sup>18</sup>— is adorned with silver, wrought <sup>18</sup>with gold throughout, the great shrine is of electrum so that it fills the land with its <sup>19</sup>brightness;<sup>d</sup> its bows,<sup>e</sup> they repeat the <sup>19</sup>brightness<sup>1</sup>; they bear great crowns, whose serpents twine along its two sides; <sup>20</sup>they exercise protection behind them.<sup>1</sup> <sup>19</sup>Flagstaves are set up before it<sup>f</sup> wrought with electrum, two great obelisks are between them; it is beautiful everywhere. The gods of Pe make jubilee to it; the gods of Nekhen praise it; the two Nile-gods of the South and the North, <sup>20</sup>they embrace its beauty, its bows<sup>e</sup> make Nun to shine<sup>g</sup> as when the sun rises in heaven, to make his beautiful voyage at his feast of Opet on his western voyage of a million of millions of years.

Third Karnak Pylon<sup>h</sup>

889. King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Nibmare, Son of Re: Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, <sup>21</sup>who is vigilant to seek that which is

<sup>a</sup>A similar barge with details of measurements in the Harris Papyrus (infra, IV, 209).

<sup>b</sup>Egyptian Userhet, "wsw-h 3 1."

<sup>c</sup>The same statement by Thutmose IV on Lateran obelisk (§ 838).

<sup>d</sup>As it stands, the text is certainly corrupt; the rendering of Spiegelberg ("die ganze Erde") seems impossible, in view of the m for r. This m indicates the above rendering, which is a common idea in respect of monuments of electrum; cf. e. g., obelisk of Hatshepsut, base inscription, south side, l. 7 (§ 315). Since making the above remark, I find the same suggestion (by Müller?) in Orientalistische Literaturzeitung, May, 1898, 158, n. 2, where I also find a good suggestion for the conclusion of the phrase.

<sup>e</sup>Plural, as often in English.

<sup>f</sup>The shrine, which was set up amidships; it is here regarded as a temple, and equipped therefore with flagstaves and obelisks.

<sup>g</sup>Referring to the reflection in the water, here called Nun, as above in l. 13; the same in the Abydos Stela of Thutmose I (§ 94) and Papyrus Harris (IV, § 189, Pl. 4, l. 3).

<sup>h</sup>This is the ruined pylon behind the great hall of columns, known as Pylon III.

useful, the king, who has erected another monument for Amon, making for him a very great portal over against Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, wrought with gold throughout. The Divine Shadow,<sup>a</sup> as a ram, is inlaid with real lazuli wrought with gold and many costly stones; there is no instance of doing the like. <sup>22</sup>Its floor is adorned with silver; <sup>1</sup>towers<sup>1</sup> (sbhꜣ t) are over against it. Stelæ of lazuli are set up, one on each side. Its pylons reach heaven like the four pillars of heaven; its flagstaves shine more than the heavens, wrought <sup>23</sup>with electrum. His majesty brought gold for it in the land of Karoy (Kꜣ-rꜣ-y) on the first victorious campaign,<sup>b</sup> slaying<sup>c</sup> the wretched Kush.<sup>d</sup>

Temple of Soleb

890. King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Nibmare, beloved of Amon-Re; Son of Re: Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes. I made other monuments for Amon, <sup>24</sup>whose like hath not been. I built for thee thy<sup>e</sup> house of millions of years in the <sup>1</sup>—<sup>f</sup> of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes (named): Khammat (Hꜣ-c-m-mꜣ-cꜣ t),<sup>g</sup> august in electrum, a resting-place for my father at all his feasts. It is finished with fine white sandstone; it is wrought <sup>25</sup>with gold throughout; its floor is adorned with <sup>a</sup>The immaterial or intangible part of a god conceived as a shadow, a common conception both for gods and men (see Birch, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, VIII, 386-97; Maspero, Dawn of Civilisation, 108). The hieroglyph and symbol for this shadow is a sunshade, often figured in mortuary vignettes; it is this which is thus referred to in Ineni (§ 104, l. 9): "its huge door was of Asiatic bronze, whereon was the Divine Shadow (det. with ithyphallic Min) inlaid with gold." In the above it is also connected with a door, but seems to be in the form of a ram; cf. also Spiegelberg, Recueil, XX, 53. Another similar reference to the "shadow" of the god is on one of the Soleb rams (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 89, e), but the context is broken off. A similar reference to the divine figure in connection with the door is found on the shrine of Saft: "The doors upon it (the shrine) are of black copper, inlaid with gold, the image upon it is of —" (Navielle, The Shrine of Saft-el-Henneh, Pl. 6, l. 1).

<sup>b</sup>See the two stelæ of the Nubian War, §§ 844, 845, l. 5 in each; and scarab of marriage with Tiy, § 862.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "campaign . . . of slaying."

<sup>d</sup>Text has Kny, which is, of course, an error.

<sup>e</sup>Emended.

<sup>f</sup>Same word (sꜣ h) in I, § 503, l. 16.

<sup>g</sup>This is the name of the Soleb temple in Nubia; it means: "Shining (or rising) in (or as) Truth," which is also one of Amenhotep III's names, either in the full titulary, or alone, e. g., "which his son Khammat made for him" [east side of south tower, third pylon, Karnak (Mariette, Karnak, 34, l. 29)].

silver, all its portals are of gold. Two great obelisks<sup>a</sup> are erected, one on each side. When my father rises between them, I <sup>b</sup>am among his following. I have offered <sup>26</sup>to him thousands of oxen, <sup>1</sup>limbs<sup>1</sup> for the choicest of hind quarters.

Hymn of Amon

891. Utterance of Amon, king of gods:

My son, of my body, my beloved, Nibmare,
My living image, whom my limbs created,
Whom Mut, mistress of Ishru in Thebes, bore to me,
Mistress of the Nine Bows who brought thee up <sup>27</sup>as sole lord of the people.

My heart greatly rejoices when I see thy beauty,
I work a wonder for thy majesty, and thou renewest youth,
According as I have set thee as the Sun of the Two Lands.

When I turn my face to the south, I work a wonder for thee
I cause <sup>28</sup>the chiefs of Kush, the wretched, to turn to thee,
Bearing all their tribute upon their backs.

When I turn my face to the north, I work a wonder for thee;
I cause the countries of the ends of Asia to come to thee,
Bearing all their tribute upon their backs.
They present themselves to thee <sup>29</sup>with their children,
In order that thou mayest give to them the breath of life.

892. When I turn my face to the west, I work a wonder for thee;
I cause thee to seize the Tehenu (Tyhnw), (so that) there is no remnant of them.

(<sup>1</sup>They<sup>1</sup>) are building<sup>c</sup> in this fortress in the name of <sup>30</sup>my majesty;
Surrounded with a great wall reaching to heaven,
Settled with children of the chiefs of the Nubian Troglodytes.

When I turn my face to the orient,<sup>d</sup> I work a wonder for thee;
I cause to come to thee the countries of Punt,

<sup>a</sup>These obelisks are not shown on Lepsius' plan (Lepsius, Denkmäler, I, 117), but they are also mentioned in the ram inscriptions, § 894.

<sup>b</sup>The particle ty, introducing a nominal sentence; cf. Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 36, p. 71, n. 3.

<sup>c</sup>As slaves?

<sup>d</sup>The usual word for east is not employed, but a term meaning "sunrise."

Bearing all the pleasant sweet woods <sup>31</sup>of their countries,
To crave peace with him (sic!), and breath of thy giving.

King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Ruler of the Nine Bows, Lord of the Two Lands, Nibmare, Son of Re, his beloved Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, with whose monuments the heart of the gods is satisfied; that he may be given life, stability, satisfaction, health; that his heart may be joyful, like Re, forever.

---

BUILDING INSCRIPTIONS OF THE SOLEB TEMPLE

893. This Nubian temple, dedicated by Amenhotep III to the worship of himself, as well as of Amon, contains a number of building records. Among other things, they preserve the interesting name of the temple, which is not found in the account of the building given by the king in his great Theban building inscription (§ 890). The architrave dedications are not preserved, but only those upon the sculptures adorning the temple, the rams lining the avenue of approach, and the famous lions in the British Museum.

894. The inscriptions on the rams<sup>a</sup> are these:

<sup>b</sup>Live the Good God, Nibmare, Son of Re, Amenhotep (III). [He made] (it) as his monument for his image,<sup>c</sup> Nibmare, Lord of Nubia (T<sup>3</sup> -pd<sup>3</sup> t), great god, lord of heaven; making for him an excellent fortress, surrounded with a great wall, whose battlements shine more than the heavens, like the great obelisks, which the king, Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, made for a million of million of years, forever and ever. Live the Good God . . . .<sup>d</sup> He made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon, lord of Thebes; making for him an august temple, made very wide and large, and its beauty increased. Its pylons reach heaven, and the flagstaves, the stars of heaven; it is seen (on) both sides of the river, illuminating the Two Lands.

---

<sup>a</sup>One now in Berlin (Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 23, 24). They were found by Lepsius at Gebel Barkal, whither they had been removed from Soleb by the Ethiopians; published, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 89, 90.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 89, a.

<sup>c</sup>See below.

<sup>d</sup>Continued as above.

895. On another ram,<sup>a</sup> the temple is said to be “in the fortress Khammat ( $h^c-m-^{\circ}c-t$ ),”<sup>b</sup> and is dedicated to Amon (as in the great Building Inscription, § 890), and the king’s ka. Another ram inscription<sup>c</sup> thus describes the building:

Making for him an august temple of fine white sandstone; all its portals are of electrum, their radiance is in the faces (of men), the Divine Shadow — — — — .”

896. The famous lions<sup>d</sup> contribute important historical data, from the state of their inscriptions. The dedications of Amenhotep III were cut out during the religious revolution of Ikhnaton, showing that the persecution of that king extended as far south as Soleb, and included even his own father as a god. They were restored by Tutenkhamon, who prefixed to the restored dedications a record of the restoration thus:

———— rest the gods, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering [Nebkheprure],<sup>e</sup> Son of Re, Lord of Diadems, Tutenkhamon, restorer of the monument of his father, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Nibmare, Son of Re, Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes. He made (it) as his

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 89, c.

<sup>b</sup>On this name, see note, § 890. (Great Building Inscription, l. 24).

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 89, e.

<sup>d</sup>These two magnificent animal figures were later carried away from Soleb and erected in Gebel Barkal (Napata) by the Ethiopians. That there should ever have been any doubt about this, especially in the minds of the British Museum authorities, (see Budge, History, IV, 112; VI, 100) is, to say the least, surprising. Not only do the above dedications show that the lions were originally erected at Soleb (Khammat), but the breast of one bears the inscription of the Ethiopian, stating that he removed it, as follows: “Good God, Lion of Rulers, fierce-eyed Lion when he spies his foes treading his path — (cartouche, name lost), who brought it.” Below this, is the double name: “King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Enekhneferibre ( $^c n h - n j r - y b - R ^ c$ ), Son of Re, Amenisru ( $Y m n - y s - r - w ^ c$ ).” (Published Lepsius, Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XIII; I had also my own copies of the originals.) See a similar removal record, IV, 649.

<sup>e</sup>Cartouche with name erased. The name has been inserted by Lepsius (Auswahl der wichtigsten Urkunden, XIII), but is not discernible on the original.

monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, Atum, lord of Heliopolis, and Yoh<sup>a</sup> (Y<sup>c</sup> h), that he might be given life, like Re, forever.

897. On the other lion, the original inscription of Amenhotep III is better preserved,<sup>b</sup> as only the name of the king (containing Amon) has been expunged, and later incorrectly restored, thus:

Horus, Mighty Bull ——— Nibmare, Son of Re, Nibmare<sup>c</sup> (sic!). He made (it) as his monument for "His Living Image on Earth, Nibmare, Lord of Nubia in the Fortress of Khammat."<sup>d</sup>

898. Finally, a doorpost of the temple bears the following dedication:<sup>e</sup>

He made (it) as his monument for "His Living Image upon Earth, Nibmare, Lord of [Khenthen]nofer;"<sup>d</sup> making for him temples of fine white sandstone. All its portals are of electrum — — — — —.

---

GREAT INSCRIPTION OF THE THIRD KARNAK PYLON<sup>f</sup>

899. This pylon, now the rear wall of the great Karnak hypostyle, was erected by Amenhotep III before the obelisks of Thutmose I as the front of the temple, which it continued to be until the famous hypostyle hall was built in front of it by the Nineteenth Dynasty kings. It is referred to in

---

<sup>a</sup>Thoth, the moon-god.

<sup>b</sup>The inscription occurs twice on this lion, once in front and again behind. In front (facing the avenue) it has been completely hacked out, but behind the iconoclasts of Ikhnaton have hastily cut out only the royal names.

<sup>c</sup>Incorrect restoration by Tutenkhamon; it should be, of course, "Amenhotep."

<sup>d</sup>Cultus-name of the deified Amenhotep III. <sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 87, a.

<sup>f</sup>On the east face of the southern tower of the third pylon, in 71 vertical lines, of which only the lower ends have survived, the ends of the last 23 lines containing but two or three words each. It was seen and excerpted by Champollion (Notices descriptives, II, 126). The text was published by Mariette (Karnak, 34, 35) and by Dümichen (Historische Inschriften, II, 39); both number the lines backward, and are also excessively inaccurate; Dümichen even mixes up the lines, and evidently his papers were in confusion. I had excellent photographs of the original by Borchardt.

Amenhotep III's Building Inscription (§ 889), and its southern tower still bears the remnant of a long and magnificently cut inscription referring to the erection of the pylon. This inscription has the following content:

1. Laudation of the king (§ 900, ll. 1-24);
2. Offerings to Amon (§ 901, ll. 24-34).
3. Presents and Buildings (§ 902, ll. 24-39).
4. Third Pylon and Connected Monuments (§ 903, ll. 39-71).

The inscription is so fragmentary that much of it is unintelligible, but enough remains to show that the third pylon must have been a monument of the greatest richness and beauty.

Laudation of the King

900. <sup>1a</sup>———— luxuries and benefactions of the lord of eternity which he levied in God's-Land, abiding like the heavens, shining [—] <sup>2</sup>———— . . . . . <sup>b</sup> Amenhotep III <sup>3</sup>———— in his beauty like him who created him; the hearts rejoice in the bodies at beholding him. <sup>4</sup>———— their — with one <sup>c</sup>accord<sup>d</sup>. He whom he hath chosen is prepared, exalted above millions to lead on the people forever. <sup>5</sup>———— His eye is the sun, making brightness for all men. How prosperous is he who beholds him, his sun, rising <sup>6</sup>———— of the sun forever. His two hands hold<sup>e</sup> might, his word bears victory, in order to present to him (Amon) the whole earth, with the impost thereof <sup>7</sup>———— whose path <sup>f</sup>sends away<sup>g</sup>, whose name repels, whose <sup>f</sup>word<sup>h</sup> created him, [—] with his form to be the Sole Lord, whose doing hath led <sup>8</sup>———— satisfied with victory, the leader of his soldiers, the first of millions. He is one who taketh thought, who maketh wise with knowledge <sup>9</sup>———— his stride is swift, a star of electrum when he circles upon his horse, a victorious archer, shooting the <sup>f</sup>target<sup>i</sup> <sup>10</sup>———— living captives, without his like, the good shepherd, vigilant for all people, whom the maker thereof has placed under his authority, lord of plenty, <sup>11</sup>—— beholding benefactions is his satisfaction, 'doing that which occurs is' his thriving forever; loving examples of truth, rejoicing in plans <sup>12</sup>—— searching bodies, knowing that which is in the heart, whose fame apprehends the 'evil' —, protector of the fearful, whose decree is the breath of life, prosperity, and health <sup>13</sup>—— [—] in his body all his 'brightness' to the form of the majesty of Re; his divine and beautiful emanation which he made for — <sup>14</sup>—— like Thoth, who gives the Two Lands to the balances.<sup>a</sup> There are no rebels, (for) his strength is like the might of the son of Nut; there are no millions — <sup>15</sup>—— protecting them, in order to do all that their ka's desire and to make Egypt flourish as in the beginning, by the plans of Truth, because she does <sup>16</sup>—— adorning the splendid Great House of him who begat him, with monuments of beauty and splendor forever, which he decreed for his son <sup>17</sup>—— the wealth of Ptah,<sup>b</sup> great in his form. He created him as his son, endowed with his beauty <sup>18</sup>——. He gave to him the thought of every day as a benefaction, in 'magnifying' the wonders of — — He rejoices in remembering <sup>19</sup>—— joy of heart. He created me before him, while I was a youth therein. How beautiful is the [—] before the throne <sup>20</sup>—— it in the beginning. His accustomed splendid seat, wherein he alighted [—] <sup>21</sup>—— him in his form in Thebes, they made rejoicing for love of him <sup>22</sup>—— [— —]. I am his first born son [— —] <sup>23</sup>—— I — under his authority, I was endowed with his might, I was endued with his power <sup>24</sup>—— 'bringing' all works 'from' his temple.

<sup>a</sup>This is l. 71 in Mariette's publication, as he numbered the lines backward, and this translation proceeds from l. 71 to l. 1, as numbered in his publication.

<sup>b</sup>Full titulary of Amenhotep III.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "are in might."

Offerings to Amon

901. My majesty founded for him (Amon) very great divine offerings anew <sup>25</sup>—— in the land, true and pure in the (divine) presence in the great seat, which I have supplied with food <sup>26</sup>—— that he might multiply my years in joy of heart. I produced fulness of food and provision from my presence <sup>27</sup>—— my subjects under my feet by the might and victory which he decreed for me <sup>28</sup>—— food in thy house filled with supplies, which the [—] established in the horizon, the vessels of him who made the things that are <sup>29</sup>—— to him to be mighty in gifts to him, 'assigning' them to him; the king, the unique one of the gods<sup>a</sup> so that they are satisfied every day <sup>30</sup>—— true, pure and flourishing with divine offerings of every day, abiding and fixed in his house forever. <sup>31</sup>—— with millions, as a fierce-eyed lion, sated in the place [—] of the morning, taking captive <sup>32</sup>—— My face works terror — — [when it fronts] those who rebel against me, every time that occurs in <sup>33</sup>—— [— — —] my grasp. I reported my message to him that sent me; I presented it in the presence of my august father <sup>34</sup>—— him that begat him.

<sup>a</sup>To be weighed as tribute.

<sup>b</sup>Read rsy ynb' f.

Presents and Buildings

902. He is divine in my heart at all times, that I may present flowers <sup>35</sup>—— according as he creates them, I bring to him silver, gold, genuine lapis lazuli, malachite <sup>36</sup>—— every costly stone, every splendid vessel of electrum without limit of number. <sup>37</sup>—— in his seat of truth. He hath made for himself splendid things which the maker made. He made me <sup>38</sup>—— his — in every august land, the good things of every land and the impost thereof together, that I may present <sup>39</sup>——

Third Pylon and Connected Monuments

903. —— in the splendid place, in which he loves to be, wrought of sandstone <sup>40</sup>—— all flowers which he gathered, all food at all times. If there be the like <sup>41</sup>—— all — in [pleasing] him, restored and established as he desires it. The weight of this monument:

<sup>42b</sup> ——	——
Malachite:	4,820 deben.
[—] ( hnt ) <sup>c</sup>	3,623 deben.
<sup>43</sup> ——	——

—— flourishing and established, which his son, Khammat (Amenhotep III) made for him. The number of these things is: <sup>44</sup>—— flourishing in every garden, sweet in fragrance of all flowers, [— — —] <sup>45</sup>—— a great [pylon] over against the temple, [its door] made high and wide, of cedar of <sup>46</sup>—— it illuminates this whole land, its beauty seems like the horizon of heaven <sup>47</sup>———. He [made] wide for him its extent, an august judgment-hall of <sup>48</sup>——— an august — for this portal [of the maker of his majesty as my father] <sup>49</sup>——— desires them — — — monument for him who raised

<sup>a</sup>The word "gods" was chiseled out in the time of Ikhnaton.
<sup>b</sup>Here follows a statement of the weight of some monument, above mentioned.
<sup>c</sup>This unknown substance appears as a basket of red kernels in the tomb of Rekhmire (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1111, and Wilkinson, Manners, I, Pl. IIA).

<sup>50</sup>——— real lapis lazuli, 3,000 (+x) deben <sup>51</sup>——— 3,631½ — <sup>52</sup>——— chiefs of all countries, monuments <sup>53</sup>——— great doorway of electrum <sup>54</sup>——— of the land that sees it, every land [— —] <sup>55</sup>——— as leader of them in <sup>56</sup>——— of new cedar of the royal domain <sup>57</sup>——— august — of electrum, obelisk[s]<sup>a</sup> <sup>58</sup>———
 .....<sup>b</sup>

DEDICATION STELA<sup>c</sup>

904. This stela contained the dedication of the mortuary temple of Amenhotep III, which stood behind the (Memnon) Colossi at Thebes. It stood in the usual place, the “Station of the King,” which it marked, being erected, like the similar stelæ of Amenhotep II at Elephantine and Amâda (§ 791 ff.), against the inside of the rear wall of the holy of holies.<sup>d</sup> Here it proclaimed the king’s gift of the temple to the god, on the spot where the king stood in officially absolving the ceremonies of the ritual.

The upper third of the stela is occupied by two conventional scenes, showing the king, Amenhotep III, and his <sup>a</sup>These obelisks probably stood in front of this pylon (III); they must have been removed to build the great hypostyle; the only obelisks of Amenhotep III now known at Karnak are in the northern temple, but only fragments have survived (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 2). Perhaps they stood on the two bases referred to in Baedeker’s Egypt, 1902, 253.

<sup>b</sup>Ll. 59–71 contain only an incoherent word or two at the end; indeed, ll. 62 and 69–71 are entirely gone.

<sup>c</sup>An enormous sandstone stela about 30 feet high and 14 feet wide, still lying a few hundred feet behind the colossi of Amenhotep III at Thebes; text, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 72.

<sup>d</sup>The stela is directly referred to in another building inscription of Amenhotep III in this same temple (§ 883, l. 5), where it is called “a station of the king, wrought with gold and many costly stones.” The word “station” is here determined with a stela, and the text would indicate that it was overlaid and incrustated.

queen, Tiy, before “Sokar-Osiris” (on the left) and “Amon-Re” (on the right).

The text of twenty-four lines represents: (1) the king delivering the temple which stood behind the Colossi to Amon in a presentation address<sup>a</sup> (ll. 2-13); (2) Amon accepting it with words of praise to the king (ll. 14-20); (3) the “Divine Ennead” calling upon the god to enter his temple, while they praise him and the king (ll. 20-24).<sup>b</sup> The text is badly broken and certainly corrupt in a number of places.

I. SPEECH OF THE KING (LL. 1-13)

Temple

905. <sup>1</sup>Live . . . . .<sup>c</sup> King Amenhotep (III). <sup>2</sup>He saith: “Come thou, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak; thou hast seen thy house which I have made for thee in <sup>d</sup>the west of Thebes.<sup>d</sup> Its beauty mingles with Manu (M<sup>2</sup> -nw), when thou sailest over the heavens to set therein. <sup>3</sup>When thou risest in the horizon of heaven, it shines<sup>e</sup> with the gold of thy face, (for) its face is toward the east [—————]<sup>f</sup> thou shinest in the morning every day; thy beauty is in its midst without ceasing. I made it <sup>4</sup>in excellent work, of fine white sandstone.

Colossal Statues

906. My majesty filled it with monuments, with my [statues]<sup>g</sup> from the mountain of gritstone. When they are seen (‘in’) their place, <sup>a</sup>The erection of the same temple is recorded in ll. 2-10 in the preceding building inscription, §§ 883, 884.

<sup>b</sup>It is therefore not merely a dialogue between the god and the king, as stated by Brugsch, Egypt under the Pharaohs, 207.

<sup>c</sup>The usual full titulary.

<sup>d</sup>dys’t wr’t nt W<sup>2</sup> s’t probably designates “the west of Thebes,” found in l. 3 of the preceding building inscription (ymy-wr’t nt w<sup>2</sup> s’t).

<sup>e</sup>Though causative, this verb may be used intransitively, e. g., l. 24 below.

<sup>f</sup>The parallelism of “because thou risest” and “because thou sellest” is all that can be made of this phrase.

<sup>g</sup>This restoration is probable, for the (Memnon) colossi before this temple are of gritstone.

there is great rejoicing because of their size.<sup>a</sup> I made <sup>5</sup>likewise a [—]<sup>b</sup> upon the stone; it is of alabaster, pink and black granite; my majesty made a double pylon,<sup>c</sup> seeking excellent things for my father; statues coming forth [— —] they were shaped, <sup>6</sup>— throughout. Great was that which I made, of gold, stone, and every splendid costly stone without end. I gave to them the directions to do that which pleases thy ka, [—] satisfied with<sup>d</sup> an august dwelling like 7— — — —.

Offerings

907. I made for them<sup>e</sup> offerings — — — — —. My majesty hath done<sup>f</sup> these things for millions (of years), and I know that they will abide in the earth for my father <sup>8</sup>— — — all that was due him; I made for thee a shadow<sup>g</sup> for thy voyage across the heavens as Atum, coming forth with all the [gods], while the divine ennead who are behind thee and the Sacred Apes praise thy rising and thy appearing in <sup>9</sup>— the horizon. The divine ennead rejoice, they give exaltation to Khepri; the Sacred Apes give praise to thee<sup>h</sup> when thou settest in Enekh<sup>i</sup> in the west.

Obelisks

908. I made <sup>10</sup>obelisks there [— — —]. Thou hast shown favor for<sup>j</sup> all that my majesty made there in the likeness of a chapel of thy majesty [— — — — —]<sup>k</sup> <sup>11</sup>Again I made for thee monuments on the

<sup>a</sup>The so-called Memnon colossi are about 58 feet high (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 141 ff.), but this height is reduced nearly 5 feet by the accumulated Nile mud. They bear, or at least the southern statue bears, the dedication (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 144): “He made (it) as his monument for his father Amon; making for him a great statue of costly gritstone . . . . .” There is among the titles of the king also a reference to the monument as “brought from Northern Heliopolis to Southern Heliopolis.” The quarry of red gritstone, whence the statues were taken, is at the Gebel el-Ahmar near Cairo (see I, 493, l. 15, note) and Heliopolis; Southern Heliopolis is modern Erment, south of Thebes.

<sup>b</sup>Read ky, “form;” the b as determinative?

<sup>d</sup>Or: “resting in.”

<sup>c</sup>Translated from the determinative only.

<sup>e</sup>For the statues.

<sup>f</sup>There is a superfluous personal ending here.

<sup>g</sup>This is probably not the “Divine Shadow,” but a sunshade to protect the god on festival processions, or, as the text has it, when he crosses the heavens.

<sup>h</sup>Lit., “to thy face,” or before thee.

<sup>i</sup>Meaning “life,” a euphemism for the place of the dead.

<sup>j</sup>Lit., “of.”

<sup>k</sup>A little over one-third line.

west of the Great [Sea]t<sup>1</sup>;<sup>a</sup> I exacted all works [—————]<sup>b</sup> in order to furnish my impost by the [hand] of my army. I rejoiced <sup>12</sup>when I had done (it) for my father.

I [foun]ded for thee offerings every day at the beginning of the seasons and oblations at their times, d[ues for] thy temple; its prophets, its priests from the greatest and choicest of <sup>13</sup>the whole land. . . . . Accept that which I have made, revered father, Amon, of the beginning of the world.”

II. SPEECH OF AMON (LL. 14-20)

909. <sup>14</sup>Utterance by Amon-Re, . . . . .<sup>c</sup> “Come, my son Amenhotep,<sup>d</sup> <sup>15</sup>I hear what thou sayest; I have seen thy monument, I am thy [fath]er, creator of thy beauty . . . . .<sup>20</sup>. . . .<sup>e</sup> I accept the [monument] which thou hast made for me.”

III. SPEECH OF THE DIVINE ENNEAD (LL. 20-24)

910. Utterance by the Divine Ennead: f. . . . .<sup>f</sup>: <sup>21</sup>“Come — — — into thy eternal temple. It is Nibmare, thy son, who has done this for thee.<sup>g</sup> . . . . .<sup>23</sup>. . . .<sup>g</sup> Thou art in heaven, <sup>24</sup>thou shinest for the earth; he (the king) is on earth, administering thy kingdom <sup>g</sup>. . . . .<sup>g</sup>

INSCRIPTIONS OF AMENHOTEP, SON OF HAPI

911. This famous official, who lived under Amenhotep III, was a descendant of an old noble family, the ancient nomarchs of Athribis, and still maintained the office of chief of the prophets of the temple at that place, which went with his ancient rank. He acquired a great reputation for <sup>a</sup>The name of this temple was “House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes,” see § 883, note.

<sup>b</sup>Five or six words.

<sup>c</sup>Half a line of titles.

<sup>d</sup>Both names.

<sup>e</sup>About one-fourth of the omitted portion is broken out, the remainder contains only the conventional praise of the king by the god.

<sup>f</sup>One-third line.

<sup>g</sup>Much broken, and contains only the conventional phrases of praise to Amon or the king.

wisdom. On the temple of Der el-Medineh at Thebes an inscription says of him: "His name shall abide forever, his sayings shall not perish." These sayings were thought to be referred to in the papyrus of Heter at Gizeh,<sup>a</sup> but this has been clearly shown to be an error.<sup>b</sup> The attribution of a mortuary papyrus<sup>c</sup> to him is also very questionable.<sup>d</sup> The only wisdom unquestionably assigned to him, though it is probably a pseudepigraphon, is found in an eighteen-line Greek scrawl of the third century B. C., on a limestone ostrakon belonging to the Egypt Exploration Fund.<sup>e</sup> It contains nine fragmentary sayings, of which Wilcken has found three also among the "Proverbs of the Seven Wise Men."<sup>f</sup> Amenhotep was long supposed to have built the original temple on the site of the present Der el-Medineh temple;<sup>g</sup> Sethe has shown the error of this supposition.<sup>h</sup> He was long ago pointed out by Brugsch, on the basis of his statue inscription, as the architect<sup>i</sup> of the Memnon colossi on the Theban plain—an error which a careful translation of the inscription immediately exposes.<sup>j</sup>

912. He lived to be at least eighty years old, when the king granted him a statue<sup>k</sup> in the Karnak temple of Amon with the following dedication:

<sup>a</sup>By Maspero, Mémoire sur quelques papyri du Louvre, 23.

<sup>b</sup>By Sethe, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 113, 114.

<sup>c</sup>Mariette, Papyri de Boulaq, No. 5.

<sup>d</sup>Sethe, ibid.

<sup>e</sup>Published by Wilcken, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 142-46. For other material which may be his, see Daressy, Annales, III, 43, 61, 62, where he appears as a god in the Ptah-temple of Karnak in the time of Tiberius.

<sup>f</sup>Wilcken, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 144, 145.

<sup>g</sup>By Brugsch (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1875, 125-27) on the basis of the Mortuary Temple Edict below, §§ 921 ff.

<sup>h</sup>Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 110-12.

<sup>i</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1876, 96 ff.

<sup>j</sup>See § 917.

<sup>k</sup>Annales, II, 272, 281-84; IV, Pl. V, IV. The long inscription has nothing of historical value. See another Karnak statue of him, Recueil, 19, 13, 14.

[Given as a favo]r of the king's-presence to the temple of Amon in Karnak, for the hereditary prince, count, sole companion, fan-bearer on the king's right hand, chief of the king's works even all the great monuments which are brought, of every excellent costly stone; steward of the king's-daughter of the king's-wife, Sitamon, who liveth; overseer of the cattle of Amon in the South and North, chief of the prophets of Horus, lord of Athribis, festival leader of Amon, Amenhotep, son of Hapi, born of the lady Yatu (Y<sup>ḏ</sup> tw), triumphant.

Having thus attained the age of eighty years, he prays (on this statue) for the usual 110 years. In later ages he gradually gained recognition as a god, for the first time probably under Ptolemy Euergetes II;<sup>a</sup> so that already in Manetho's time, this historian could say of him that he seemed to partake of the divine nature.<sup>b</sup>

I. STATUE INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

913. This inscription is very difficult and obscure. The introduction (ll. 1-26) consists solely of eulogistic epithets and phrases applied to the deceased, and of mortuary texts, of no historical value. The remainder (ll. 26-43) contains his official career through three promotions, as follows:

Introduction, § 914, ll. 26-27.

First Promotion, to be Inferior Royal Scribe, § 915, ll. 27-29.

Second Promotion, to be Superior Royal Scribe, § 916, ll. 29-37.

Third Promotion, to be Minister of all Public Works, § 917, ll. 37-43.

<sup>a</sup>Sethe, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 116.

<sup>b</sup>Josephus, Contra Apion, I, 26.

<sup>c</sup>The third statue of Amenhotep at Karnak; discovered there by Mariette. Published by Mariette, Karnak, 36, 37; Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, XXIII-XXVIII; Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1292-98. I had also a copy of the original by Borchardt for the Berlin dictionary.

Introduction

914. <sup>26</sup> . . . . . The king's-scribe, Amenhotep, triumphant; he saith: "I was great, at the head of the great, skillful in the divine words<sup>a</sup> in <sup>27</sup>the [council] of understanding, following the plans of the king; one whose ka the sovereign, L. P. H., advanced.

First Promotion

915. The Good God, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nibmare (Amenhotep III), firstborn son of Harakhte, praised me. I was appointed to be inferior king's-scribe; <sup>28</sup>I was introduced into the divine book, I beheld the excellent things of Thoth; I was equipped with their secrets; I opened<sup>c</sup> all their [passages]; one took counsel with me <sup>29</sup>on all their matters.

Second Promotion

916. My lord again showed favor to me; the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Nibmare, he put all the people subject to me, and the listing of their number under my control, as superior king's-scribe<sup>d</sup> over recruits. <sup>30</sup>I levied the (military) classes of my lord, my pen reckoned the numbers of millions; I put them in [classes] in the place of their [elders]; the staff of old age<sup>e</sup> as his beloved son. <sup>31</sup>I taxed the houses with the numbers belonging thereto, I divided the troops (of workmen) and their houses, I filled out the subjects<sup>f</sup> with the best of the captivity, which his majesty had captured <sup>32</sup>on the battlefield. I appointed all their troops (ts' t), I levied — — — I placed troops at the heads of the way(s) to turn back the foreigners in their places. <sup>33</sup>The two regions were surrounded<sup>g</sup> with a watch scouting for the Sand-rangers. I did likewise at the heads of the river-mouths,<sup>h</sup> which were

<sup>a</sup>Term for hieroglyphics. <sup>b</sup>Sꜣ-stny-hry q > q.

<sup>c</sup>The same phrase (pg > ny) for opening sacred books in Neferhotep (I, 758).

<sup>d</sup>Sꜣ-stny-hry-q > q.

<sup>e</sup>Same phrase, I, 692. There is a reference here to the replacement of old by new levies, but the technical terms are not yet fully understood.

<sup>f</sup>The native-born Egyptians.

<sup>g</sup>Or: "which surrounded the Two Lands."

<sup>h</sup>Lit., "at the head(s) of the shore of the front mouths;" the mouths of the Nile are indicated. The meaning "river-mouths" or "harbor-mouths" is clearly determined by the use of the word (r-h'wt) in the wars of Ramses III (year 5, closed under <sup>34</sup>my troops except to the troops of royal marines. I was the guide of their ways, they depended upon my command.

I was the chief at the head of <sup>35</sup>the mighty men, to smite the Nubians and the Asiatics<sup>1</sup>,<sup>a</sup> the plans of my lord were a refuge behind me; when I wandered<sup>1</sup> his command surrounded me; his plans embraced all lands <sup>36</sup>and all foreigners who were by his side. I reckoned up the captives<sup>b</sup> of the victories of his majesty, being in charge of them. I did according to that which he (the king) said, I followed according to the things which he commanded <sup>37</sup>me, I found them excellent things for the future.

Third Promotion

917. My lord a third time showed favor<sup>c</sup> to me; Son of Re, Amenhotep (III), Ruler of Thebes, the sun-god is he, to whom hath been given an eternity of his jubilees without end. <sup>38</sup>My lord made me chief of all works. I established the name of the king forever, I did not imitate that which had been done before. I fashioned for him a mountain of gritstone, for he is the heir of Atum.<sup>d</sup> <sup>39</sup>I did according to my desire, executing his likeness in this his great house,<sup>e</sup> with every precious stone, enduring like the heavens; there was not one<sup>f</sup> who had done it (the like) since the time of the founding of his Two Lands. <sup>40</sup>I con-

l. 53, IV, 44; year 8, l. 20, IV, 65). Maspero's "custom-houses erected at the mouths of the Nile" (Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 299), while hardly derivable from this passage alone, are amply corroborated by the Amarna Letters, which show that there were custom-houses on the coast of the Delta (Amarna Letters, 29; 32 and 33).

<sup>a</sup>Possibly "the Nubians of the cataract region."

<sup>b</sup>Ys-h > k't.

<sup>c</sup>Text has "my favor."

<sup>d</sup>See note on l. 40, where the mountain is again connected with Atum, in whose district it was.

<sup>e</sup>The temple of Karnak where our nobleman's statue was found; hence the statue of the king here referred to must be in this temple, and cannot have been one of the Memnon colossi, as Piehl thinks possible (Petites études, 37). [Later: Since making the above note, I notice that Sethe has published the same remark (Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 109).] It is therefore clear that Brugsch is wrong in concluding from this inscription that Amenhotep, the son of Hapi, necessarily erected the Memnon colossi; as the passage refers clearly to a statue in the Karnak temple, where there actually still is a statue of Amenhotep III of the stone of Gebel el-Ahmar (cf. Sethe, ibid., 109).

<sup>f</sup>The rendering, "there was not a king, etc.," of Brugsch (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1876, 98) and Piehl (Petites études, 37), is due to the misreading of the particle swt as stn(y), "king;" cf. Erman, Aegyptische Grammatik, § 320.

ducted the work of his statue,<sup>a</sup> immense in width, taller than his column, its beauty marred the pylon. Its length was 40<sup>b</sup> cubits in the august mountain<sup>c</sup> of gritstone at the side of Re-Atum. <sup>4</sup>I built an eight-vessel, I brought it (the statue) up-river;<sup>d</sup> it was set up in [this] great house, enduring as heaven. My witnesses are ye, ye who shall come <sup>4</sup>after us; the entire army was as one under my control, they wrought with joy, their hearts were glad, rejoicing and praising the Good God; <sup>4</sup>they landed at Thebes with rejoicing, the monuments rested in their places forever ————.<sup>e</sup>

Service with the King

918. <sup>3</sup>f ———— I [saw] him<sup>g</sup> fighting hand to hand upon the battlefield, while he was like Min in the year of [—]. I recorded the [numbers] of his [captives] as subjects of the temples ———— <sup>4</sup> ———— while I was apportioner of ointment. I was versed in her art [— — —] and she knew (it), while I was in front with my lord, and I was great before him. I did that which men loved and gods praised ———— <sup>5</sup> ————.

Benefits for Athribis

919. Behold ye, I did excellent things; do (so) to me, and it shall be done (likewise) to you; for I am an heir who furnished his city, and expelled its [—] (tw<sup>2</sup>) from every place. My lord<sup>g</sup> did benefactions for my god<sup>h</sup> [—] ———— <sup>6</sup> ————. My lord [dug] his southern lake

<sup>a</sup>Text has plural, but the singular pronouns show the error.

<sup>b</sup>A statue of Amenhotep III of the Gebel el-Ahmar stone before Harmhab's pylon at Karnak was about 15 meters high, and is probably the one referred to; for it is not stated that the statue was 40 cubits high, but the block in the quarry was 40 cubits "long." A similar reference to the block in the mountain in I, 698, l. 6.

<sup>c</sup>The same as the "Red Mountain" of Mariette, Karnak, 15, 24 (I, 493, l. 15, note) near Cairo, and still called Red Mountain (Gebel el-Ahmar) cf. Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 74. The phrase "at the side of Re-Atum" refers to its location near the Heliopolis sanctuary of Re. Sethe notes similar phrases on the Sphinx tablet, ll. 6 and 7 (§ 814).

<sup>d</sup>From the quarry near Cairo to Thebes.

<sup>e</sup>About one-half line.

<sup>f</sup>Another, shorter inscription on the same statue, Mariette, Karnak, 37, b. Ll. 1 and 2 have almost entirely disappeared.

<sup>g</sup>The king.

<sup>h</sup>The god of his city, Athribis. He calls on the people of the place to pray for him because he had used his influence with the king, to secure royal benefits for the local god and temple of Athribis.

and his northern lake, brightened with flowers upon their shores. I — their —, and led them, because I was one [— —] his city. He made the house of my god, and my [city]. How beautiful is ——— 7 ——— because of his daily offerings. My lord magnified my city greatly, and my family [— —] on earth.

Royal Favor

920. I buried my father, doing again that which “The-Son-Whom-He-Loves” did. I interred my mother ———<sup>8</sup>———. My lord — my necessities, causing me to receive bread [after] the feasts. Men said to me : “[—] it hath come to thee through the Lord of the Two Lands. There is no citizen ($w$) to whom the like has been done.” I executed truth ———<sup>9</sup>———. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

II. MORTUARY TEMPLE EDICT<sup>b</sup>

921. This document legally establishes in perpetuity an endowment for the maintenance of Amenhotep’s mortuary cult. It was publicly read in his mortuary temple at Thebes to the more important officers of state assembled there in the king’s presence, who are adjured to respect it, or suffer under the most dreadful curses. The surviving original is a late copy of the original of Amenhotep’s day.

Date

922. <sup>1</sup>Year 31,<sup>c</sup> fourth month of the first season, sixth day, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, the Lord of the Two Lands, Nibmare, L. P. H.; Son of Re, of his body, Lord of Diadems, Amenhotep (III), L. P. H.

<sup>a</sup>Two lines of self-praise.

<sup>b</sup>Hieratic text, being a copy of very late date, on a limestone stela in the British Museum, No. 138, published in transliteration by Birch (Chabas, Mélanges égyptologiques, II sér., 324-43); again by the same author in facsimile (Inscriptions in the Hieratic and Demotic Character, XXIX). I collated the original exhaustively and found the latter publication very inaccurate. It was translated by Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1875, 125-27; Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 148 (Aegypten, 214, 215); the present translation is much indebted to Erman’s version.

<sup>c</sup>Not 11, as Brugsch has it; even 41 is possible.

The Assembly

923. On this day, one (=the king) was in the ka-chapel<sup>a</sup> of the hereditary prince, count, king's-scribe, Amenhotep. There were brought in: the governor of the city, and vizier, Amenhotep; the overseer of the treasury, Meriptah, and the king's-scribes of the army.

Establishment of Chapel

924. One said to them in the presence of his majesty, L. P. H.: "Hear the command which is given, to furnish the ka-chapel of the hereditary prince, the royal scribe, Amenhotep, called Huy, Son of Hapu, whose excellence is extolled<sup>b</sup> in order to perpetuate his ka-chapel with slaves, male and female, forever; son to son, heir to heir; in order that none trespass upon it forever. It is commended to Amon-Re, king of gods, as long as it is upon earth; he is the king of eternity, he is the protector of the dead.

Curses on Violators

925. As for the general and scribe of the army who shall follow after me and shall find the ka-chapel beginning to decay, together with the male and female slaves who are cultivating (the field) for my endowment, and shall take away a man therefrom in order to put him (to) any business of Pharaoh, L. P. H., or any commission, may his body be accursed<sup>c</sup>. Then if another trespasses upon them, and does not answer in their behalf, he shall suffer the destruction of Amon, lord of Thebes, he (the god) shall not permit them to be satisfied with the office of king's-scribe of the army, which they have received for me. He (Amon) shall deliver them into the flaming wrath of the king on the day of his anger; his serpent-diadem shall spit fire upon their heads, shall consume their limbs, shall devour their bodies, they shall become like Apophis on the morning of New Year's Day. They shall be engulfed in the sea, it shall hide their corpses. They shall not receive the mortuary ceremonies of the righteous; they shall not eat the food of them that dwell in Keret; the waters by the flood of the river shall not be poured out for them. Their sons shall not be put into their places,

<sup>a</sup>Not the "temple of Kak," as usually rendered; see Sethe, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 111.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch: "dessen Tugenden wohlbekannt sind;" but this is very doubtful.

<sup>c</sup>It is possible that this is the case of those who do respect the endowment; while the case of those who do not respect it begins with l. 7.

<sup>10</sup>their wives shall be violated while their eyes see it. The nobles shall not set foot in their houses as long as they are upon earth; the leaders of the two sides<sup>a</sup> shall not introduce them, nor shall they hear the words of the king in the hour of gladness. <sup>11</sup>They shall belong to the sword on the day of destruction, they shall be called enemies; when their bodies be consumed, they shall hunger, without bread, and their bodies shall die. If the vizier, overseer of the treasury, chief overseer of the estate, superintendent of the granary, <sup>12</sup>high priests, divine fathers, and priests of Amon, to whom has been read this edict, issued for the ka-chapel of the hereditary prince, the king's-scribe, Amenhotep, son of Hapu, shall not show solicitude <sup>13</sup>for his ka-chapel, the edict shall touch them, and them especially.

Blessings on Preservers of Chapel

926. But if they shall show solicitude for the ka-chapel, with the male and female slaves who are cultivating (the field) for my <sup>14</sup>endowment, then all favor shall be shown them. Amon-Re, king of gods, shall reward them<sup>b</sup> with prosperous life.<sup>c</sup> The king of your day, shall <sup>15</sup>reward<sup>1</sup> you <sup>15</sup>as he <sup>15</sup>rewards<sup>1</sup> —.<sup>d</sup> There shall be doubled for you office upon office, ye shall receive from son to son and heir to heir. They shall be sent on as messengers, and the king of their day will reward them. <sup>16</sup>Their<sup>1</sup> bodies shall (rest) <sup>16</sup>in the West after (a life of) 110 years, doubled to you shall be the mortuary oblations likewise.

Warning to Gendarmes

927. As for the officers of the gendarmes, <sup>17</sup>belonging to<sup>1</sup> the district of the mayor of the west side, in Khaft(et)-hir-nebes, who <sup>17</sup>shall not protect my endowment each day, and on my feast-days on the first of the month, the edict shall touch them, and their bodies shall not <sup>18</sup>escape<sup>1</sup>. <sup>18</sup>But if they shall hear all the edict, issued as a command, and they shall obey and shall not forsake it, good shall happen to them as (to) the just. <sup>19</sup>They shall rest in the cemetery after years of old age.

Codicil. The mayor of the west side is he who <sup>19</sup>—<sup>1</sup> my servants during a single day.

<sup>a</sup>The people on the two sides of the central aisle in formal assemblies; the leaders (sšm 'w) or ushers of such assemblies were the heralds (whm 'w).

<sup>b</sup>Original shows a correction from "you" to "them."

<sup>c</sup>There is no lacuna here nor in the next line, as indicated in the publication.

<sup>d</sup>The text has omitted the object.

STATUE OF NEBNEFER<sup>a</sup>

928. This statue was probably dedicated in the chapel of Prince Wazmose; at least, there is a reference to this prince among the inscriptions which it bears. On the back, however, there is an historical inscription apparently recording the promotion of Nebnefer and the appointment of one Hui to his old place. The promotion was by special message of the king, which Nebnefer himself brought, and it was confirmed by a special formulary pronounced by the High Priest and witnessed by all four "prophets" for the temple, and one witness for the incumbent beside himself. The document thus furnishes us with interesting and important procedure in such temple appointments, which are as yet unknown in any other source.

Date

929. <sup>1</sup>Year 20, second month of the first season, under the majesty of King Amenhotep III, beloved of Amon <sup>2</sup>. . . . .<sup>b</sup>

Royal Message

On this day, behold [his majesty <sup>3</sup>was in the temple]<sup>c</sup> of Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, lord of Life-of-the-Two-Lands. Message, concerning which the king's-scribe, the steward, Khampet, came to the chief treasurer, the High Priest of Amon, <sup>4</sup>[Meriptah]<sup>d</sup> ——— from the Pharaoh, L. P. H., (saying): "Let the chief measurer of the storehouse of divine offerings be <sup>1</sup>brought —<sup>1</sup> before his fathers; <sup>5</sup>——— Hui being put into his place in the storehouse of divine offerings of Amon."

<sup>a</sup>Fragment of limestone sitting statue, now in the Museum of Brussels; published by Capart and Spiegelberg in Annales de la Société d'Archéologie de Bruxelles, Tome XVII, 1<sup>re</sup> et 2<sup>me</sup> liv., 1903, 19-28.

<sup>b</sup>Double name of the king and conventional epithets.

<sup>c</sup>This was probably not Memphis, but the temple of Ptah at Karnak, which bore the same names as the Ptah-temple at Memphis.

<sup>d</sup>Supplied from l. 8; the middle three lines evidently extended higher up the plinth than the others, and were an uncertain amount longer.

Installation

930. Then it was done according to [all] that [his majesty] said
 6———— [the High Priest of Amon, Meriptah, triumphant, to the king's-scribe, the steward Khampet: <sup>a</sup>“As for that which is done of thy father Amon, lord of Thebes, <sup>7</sup>in all his commands, as heaven endures,<sup>b</sup> so shall that which he does endure, enduring and permanent forever.”

Witnesses

931. Done in the presence of the chief treasurer, the High Priest of <sup>8</sup>Amon, Meriptah; the second prophet, Enen (<sup>c</sup> nn); the third prophet, Amenemhet; the fourth prophet,<sup>c</sup> Simut; the king's-scribe, Kham-pet; the steward, Sebeknakht.

---

<sup>a</sup>The following is evidently the formulary of confirmation in office, pronounced by the High Priest to the incumbent.

<sup>b</sup>The phrase is common; hence the remark of the authors, “Le passage semble être fautif,” is strange.

<sup>c</sup>The four prophets (the High Priest's title really reads “first prophet”) represent the temple, and for the incumbent there are only himself and one more.

REIGN OF IKHNATON

QUARRY INSCRIPTION AT SILSILEH<sup>a</sup>

932. This inscription is among the earliest surviving documents of the great revolution under Ikhnaton. It records the opening of quarry-chambers at Silsileh to obtain stone for the king's first temple<sup>b</sup> to his new god, whose cult already seems to be in full development. Although Amon is not yet banished, Aton has his formal name, but not yet in the cartouches, in which it later always appears. The king is however, "High Priest" of his new god, whose sanctuary he is about to erect. Of this temple not one stone was left upon another by the king's enemies at his death. The materials have been found at Thebes, but scattered in various structures from Karnak to Erment, chiefly, however, in the Karnak pylons of Harmhab.<sup>c</sup> The name of this temple was: "Aton-Is-Found<sup>1</sup>-in-the-House-of-Aton,"<sup>d</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Tablet fourteen feet high, cut on the quarry wall at Silsileh; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 110, i; Legrain, Annales, III, 263.

<sup>b</sup>On the Aton-temples at Akhetaton (Amarna), see tomb of Hui (§§ 1016 ff.); and on the ones at Heliopolis, Hermonthis, and elsewhere, ibid. On the Aton-temples in general, see my remarks in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 110 ff.

<sup>c</sup>See Nestor l'Hôte, Papiers inédits, III, 80, 96, 97, 101, 104, 105 (not seen); Prisse, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 2d Ser., I., 76-92, and again Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, V and XI; following Prisse, J. S. Perring, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 2d Ser., I, 140 ff.; Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, Pl. 57, 2, a-k; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 110, c and g; Bouriant, Recueil, VI, 51 ff.; and a letter by Piehl (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1884, 41), which also refers to the names of Tutenkhamon and Eye as occurring in blocks rebuilt into this pylon. Blocks reused in repairs on the temple of Amenhotep II (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 50); in Karnak (ibid., 52); in town of Luxor (ibid., 89).

<sup>d</sup>See tomb of Ramose, § 941, note.

and it must have been a large and imposing sanctuary.<sup>a</sup> It was erected early in the Aton schism, for the surviving fragments show a reference to Horus and Set. The name of Aton occurs without the cartouches,<sup>b</sup> and the king still bears his old name.<sup>c</sup> This last fact shows that the temple was built before the sixth year. It is also referred to in the tomb of Hatey (h<sup>3</sup> t-y<sup>3</sup> y) at Thebes (Kurna), who was "scribe, overseer of the granary in the house (h·t) of the Aton,"<sup>d</sup> at a time when the Amon cult was still unrepressed. Thebes as a whole was now apparently called "City (nw·t)-of-the-Brightness-of-Aton," and the temple quarter was known as "Brightness-of-Aton-the-Great."<sup>e</sup>

933. <sup>f</sup>The quarry inscription informs us that the highest officials of the court served in superintending the work of transportation. The date of the inscription must be very early in the king's reign, because the materials taken from the quarry were built into the temple, completed, and inscribed before the sixth year. The work in the quarry was therefore probably done in the first or second year. Over the inscrip-

<sup>a</sup>In the heart of Harmhab's pylon I found blocks of Ikhnaton's masonry of considerable dimensions; one cornice was 32 inches high. The king's leg, in a fragmentary relief, was 20 inches across at the lower edge of the apron; the k-vessel was 13 inches long; the dy-loaf was 12 inches high. The names of Aton and the king had been expunged before the destruction of the building.

<sup>b</sup>From my own copies of blocks deep in Harmhab's pylon. I found there also a date which might have settled this question, but unfortunately the year is lost, and only the season and the day remain. [Later: This date is now published in Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 52.]

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 110, d. The old name, "Amenhotep," continued until the fifth year of his reign (Griffith, Kahun Papyri, Pl. 38 and pp. 91 and 92). In the sixth year we find the new name, "Ikhnaton," on the boundary stelæ at Amarna (§§ 949 ff.). The Theban temple must, therefore, have been built and sculptured before the sixth year.

<sup>d</sup>Daressy, Annales, II, 2-4; Legrain, ibid., III, 265.

<sup>e</sup>On Canopics published by Legrain (Annales, IV, 17-19).

<sup>f</sup>Legrain's arguments for dating the temple, or a temple of Aton at Thebes, before Ikhnaton's reign are inconclusive (Annales, III, 265).

tion was a relief<sup>a</sup> showing the king worshiping before Amon, but it has been erased, probably by Ikhnaton himself. The inscription below is as follows:

934. <sup>1</sup>Live the Horus: Mighty Bull, Lofty of Plumes; Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Great in Kingship in [Karnak];<sup>b</sup> Golden Horus: Wearer of Diadems <sup>2</sup>in the Southern Heliopolis; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, High Priest of Harakhte-Rejoicing-in-the-Horizon, in His Name: "Heat-Which-is-in-Aton:" Neferkhepure<sup>c</sup>-Wanre; <sup>3</sup>Son of Re [Amenhotep,<sup>d</sup> Divine Ruler of Thebes], great in his duration, living forever and ever; [Amon]-<sup>e</sup> Re, lord of heaven, ruler of eternity.<sup>f</sup>

935. First occurrence of his majesty's giving command to — — <sup>4</sup>— — — to muster all the workmen<sup>g</sup> from Elephantine to Samhudet<sup>h</sup> (Sm <sup>2</sup> -Hwd <sup>1</sup> t), and the leaders of the army, <sup>5</sup>in order to make a great breach for cutting out sandstone, in order to make the great sanctuary (bnn)<sup>i</sup> of Harakhte in his name: "Heat-Which-is-in-<sup>6</sup>Aton," in Karnak.

<sup>a</sup>Not shown on Lepsius' plate, but given by him in his notes (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 96, 97).

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius has incorrectly restored Akhetaton in this lacuna. This mention of the city in the first or second year had caused me much difficulty; but the publication of this stela by Legrain (Annales, III, 263) shows that "Akhetaton" is an error. We should restore "Karnak" as in the contemporaneous Zernik stela (ibid., 260 f.). This fragmentary stela recorded similar quarry-work in the cliffs opposite and above Esneh. The king bears his old name, and the god's name also is as in the Silsileh stela; it is undated, but is clearly from the same time as the Silsileh stela, and the expedition recorded was carried out by Eye, afterward king. There is another stela beside Eye's, showing the "chief of quarrymen, Neferonpet," worshiping Amon (ibid., 261 f.).

<sup>c</sup>This is the Napkhourya of the Amarna Letters; it means: "Beautiful is the Being of Re." Wanre, the second part of the name, means, "Unique One of Re."

<sup>d</sup>This old form of the king's name has been erased because it contained the name of Amon.

<sup>e</sup>Erased.

<sup>f</sup>The connection of the god's name is uncertain, but probably "beloved of" has been omitted before it (after it in original).

<sup>g</sup>The text has "works," but Brugsch has a similar example (Hieroglyphisch-demotisches Wörterbuch, Supplement, 1337), with "the people" as object of the verb, showing clearly what is meant here.

<sup>h</sup>Like the Hebrew "from Dan to Beersheba." On Samhudet, see Brugsch, Dictionnaire géographique, 704-6. Elephantine was, of course, at the first cataract, and Samhudet was in the Delta.

<sup>i</sup>Determined with an obelisk.

Behold, the officials, the companions, and the chiefs of the fan-bearers, were the chiefs of the quarry-service,<sup>a</sup> for the transportation of stone.

TOMB OF THE VIZIER RAMOSE<sup>b</sup>

936. This tomb contains reliefs and inscriptions which are among the most important documents of this reign, because among other facts they furnish contemporary and conclusive evidence of the identity of Amenhotep IV and Ikhnaton, the great religious revolutionary.

Ramose, the owner of the tomb, was an official high in the favor of the king and of exalted rank. He was:

“Governor of the (residence) city, vizier;” “hereditary prince, count ——— of Horus in his house; a doer of truth, a hater of deceit, ——— wearer of the royal seal, chief of works among the great monuments, chief of prophets of North and South, vizier, just judge; sole companion, approaching his lord, whom the Lord of the Two Lands loved because of his remarkable traits, who enters the palace, and comes forth with favor, with the utterances of whose mouth one (= the king) is satisfied;” “(mr t-ntr-) priest, the mouth that makes content in the whole land, (sm-) priest, master of all wardrobes, entering into the secrets of heaven, of earth [and of the nether world];” “master of secret things of the palace;” “attached to Nekhen, prophet of Mat, chief justice.”<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>See Hammamat Stela of Ramses IV, l. 14 (IV, 466); also Brugsch (Aegyptologie, 216 f., note). In Papyrus Hood there is a “chief of the quarry-service of the whole land” (p. 216).

<sup>b</sup>A cliff-tomb in the hill of Shekh Abd-el-Kurna on the west shore at Thebes, known as Stuart’s Tomb, No. 108. It was discovered by one “Mustapha Noak” in 1860, and opened successively by Ebers in 1872 and Villiers Stuart in 1879 (see Wiedemann, Recueil, XVII, 9). It was inadequately published by Stuart in The Funeral Tent of an Egyptian Queen, 89 ff.; and Egypt after the War, Pl. 27, and pp. 386–88. Bouriant has some notes on the tomb in Revue archéologique, 1882, N. S., XXIII, 279–84. and Recueil, VI, 55, 56. Nearly all the inscriptions were published by Piehl with great accuracy in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1883, 127–30; 1887, 37–39. I excavated the unpublished inscriptions and recopied the whole in December, 1894. Some signs had been lost since Piehl made his copies. The accompanying translations are based upon a collation with Piehl, and upon my own copies alone, where Piehl had not copied.

<sup>c</sup>These are all the titles in the tomb, as found in my copies.

937. Ramose, as head of the religious, judicial, and administrative organization, must have been the most powerful official at the court of Ikhnaton. He had been vizier under the king's father, Amenhotep III;<sup>a</sup> he was early won over to the Aton faith, and the particular value of his tomb lies in the fact that we may trace in it this conversion of Ramose at a time when Ikhnaton still called himself Amenhotep, and still permitted references to Amon and "the gods." This last term, as well as the name of Amon, has been expunged<sup>b</sup> at a later date. The materials in the tomb are as follows:

Relief Scene<sup>c</sup>

938. A king sits enthroned on the right, his face and figure executed in the usual conventional style; behind him the goddess Mat; before him, with upraised arms, Ramose.

<sup>a</sup>It must be the same Ramose who, in an inscription on the island of Sehel, is called: "Hereditary prince, the two eyes of the king in the whole land, governor of the (residence) city and vizier, Ramose" (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1216, gg = de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 90, No. 79). See also Wiedemann, Recueil, 17, 9; Mariette, Monuments divers, 70, No. 21; ibid., 72, No. 50; and Petrie, Season in Egypt, 13, No. 334.

<sup>b</sup>This expungement is very significant; for it is not the name of a particular god, but the word "gods." which is expunged. I have found this same erasure of the word "gods." at Karnak in the long offering inscription of Amenhotep III on Pylon III, and in the Coronation Inscription of Thutmose III; also on a number of Eighteenth Dynasty monuments in European museums. With this fact compare the erasure of the gods' names at Karnak as noted by Lepsius: "Auch hier [Temple of Ptah, northern Karnak] waren die Namen des Ptah und Amon wie auch der Hathor und ihre Figuren alle ausgekratzt; so auch auf dem Architrav der Thüre die Namen des Ptah. Ebenso sind sämtliche Götter im Tempel zu Med. Habu und in dem hinteren Theile des grossen Tempels von Karnak ausgekratzt; die Götterverfolgung muss also nicht nur dem Amon gegolten haben, sondern viel allgemeiner gewesen sein."—Lepsius (Denkmäler, Text, III, 8; read also end of section), and see ibid., 31. By comparing Leyden Stela, V, 26, and Vienna Stela, 53, it will be seen that the wife of a certain "overseer of the cattle of Amon" was a "musician of Upwarwet." but when her husband became "overseer of the cattle of the house of Aton." she was obliged to drop her title (see Baillet, Notice sur la collection égyptienne de l'Abbé Desnayers, 40, and Recueil, 23, 144; also Bergmann, Recueil, IX, 42). The persecution therefore included all the gods. See Breasted, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 108–10.

<sup>c</sup>Inner wall, first chamber, left of door.

939. The accompanying inscriptions are:

Over the King<sup>a</sup>

King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, — re, given life, Son of Re, his beloved, Amenhotep, God, Ruler of Thebes, great in his duration.

Over Mat

Mat, daughter of Re, presider over the palace, mistress of heaven, ruler of the gods. She gives myriads of years.

Over Ramose<sup>b</sup>

940. Utterance of the governor of the (residence) city, the vizier, Ramose, triumphant, for the benefit of thy ka: "An adjuration to thy father, 'Harakhte-Rejoicing-in-the-Horizon, in his name: Heat-Which-is-[in]-Aton,'<sup>c</sup> that he may praise thee, that he may love thee, that he may establish thee, that he may give to thee myriads of years (so that) thy annals may be jubilees; that all lands may be under thy feet, that he may fell thy foes, dead or alive; that all joy may be with thee, all health with thee, all life with thee, and that thou mayest abide upon the throne of Re forever."

Relief Scene<sup>d</sup>

941. Under the radiating sun-disk stand a king and<sup>e</sup> queen, worshipping, all in the peculiar Amarna style. They are in a building, doubtless a part of the Theban Aton-temple. Outside are groups of bowing officials.

942. The inscriptions are these:

---

<sup>a</sup>In two lines; a third mutilated line is omitted above. Over the king's head is also the winged sun-disk, with its usual inscription: "The Edjuan (Horus) great god, etc." This disappears entirely during the later Aton movement.

<sup>b</sup>This entire speech of Ramose to the king appears twice over his head, with slight variants.

<sup>c</sup>This and the mention in the Silsileh inscription are the earliest occurrences of Aton's name; it is not yet in the cartouche.

<sup>d</sup>Inner wall, first chamber, right of door.

<sup>e</sup>There are no children present as usual in such scenes so common at Amarna. This is perhaps another indication of the early date of this tomb in the reign.

By the Sun-Disk

<sup>a</sup>“Harakhte-Rejoicing-in-the-Horizon; in his name: Heat-Which-is-in-Aton,” residing in “Aton-fis-Found<sup>l</sup>-in-the-House-of-Aton.”<sup>b</sup>

By the King

Lord of the Two Lands, Nefer[khepru]re —, given life, Lord of Diadems, Amenhotep, God, Ruler of Thebes, great in his duration.

Over the Queen

Great King's-wife, his beloved, Mistress of the Two Lands, — — living, flourishing.

943. These two reliefs show, first: that the Aton faith was in full swing under an Amenhotep whose prenomen begins like that of Ikhnaton; second, a king with the unmistakable features of Ikhnaton, worshiping the latter's peculiar god, appearing in public with his queen, as only Ikhnaton did, bears the name “Amenhotep.” This is proof positive of the identity of Ikhnaton and Amenhotep IV.

944. The remaining reliefs illustrate the high favor of Ramose with the king.

Scene

The king stands at the left holding audience; before him in successive moments appears Ramose, kissing the earth, kneeling, standing decorated with gold, departing with servants bearing the gold collars just received from the king, and finally issuing from the palace, when he is met by congratulating friends, rejoicing and carrying flowers.

<sup>a</sup>The god's two names are here in cartouches.

<sup>b</sup>This is the name of the Aton-temple at Thebes, in which the reliefs represent the king and queen as standing. The phrase “red image of Aton” (Bouriant, Le Tombeau de Ramsès à Chêikh-abd-el-Gournah, p. 7) is due to reading the bird here as the “red” bird (dšr), but even then the translation is impossible, for the word “image” is lacking. “Gem-Aton” is of uncertain meaning, but the name was also applied by Ikhnaton to a new city founded by him for the Aton-worship in Nubia, in the central cataract region. This Nubian city survived a thousand years under the name “Gem-Aton,” and is mentioned several times on the Nastesen Stela (see my remarks, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 106 ff.).

Inscriptions

945. The inscriptions were very brief, and are now mostly too fragmentary for translation, but the speech of the king to Ramose contains interesting references to the origin of the Aton faith, unfortunately much broken. It is as follows:

“<sup>a</sup>The words of Re are before thee, ——— of my august father, who taught me their ‘essence’, — — them to me. All that is, his — since he equipped the land ——— in order to ‘exalt’ me since the time of the god. It was known in my heart, opened to my face, I understood — — — —.”

946. The king is evidently referring to the revelation of the Aton faith directly to himself. To this Ramose makes the following remarkable reply:

“Thy monuments shall endure like the heavens, for thy duration is like Aton therein. The existence of thy monuments is like the existence of the heavens; thou art the Only One of [Aton], in possession of his designs. Thou hast led the mountains; their secret chambers, the terror of thee is in the midst of them, as the terror of thee is in the hearts of the people; they hearken to thee as the people hearken.”<sup>b</sup>

947. An inscription in the doorway might indicate that Ramose was later buried in this tomb; it runs thus:

“I have arrived in peace at my tomb, possessed of the favor of the Good God. I did the pleasure of the king in my time; I did not disregard a regulation which he commanded, I practiced no deceit against the people, in order that I might gain my tomb (hr' t), upon the great West of Thebes.”

---

<sup>a</sup>These accompanying inscriptions are directly below the upper row, depicting the decoration, and belong with a lower band connected with the same incident. They are only in ink and very faded; I believe my copy of them is the first made. They have never been published.

<sup>b</sup>See similar idea, Kubbân Stela, l. 6 (III, 285).

But doubtless this language is only conventional, for the tomb was never finished, and there is at Amarna the tomb<sup>a</sup> of a Ramose, perhaps the same man who has followed his king to the new capital.

948. This tomb at Thebes is in arrangement, style, and subject of reliefs exactly like those of Amarna, for which it doubtless served as a model. The rich gifts to Ramose which it depicts show how Ikhnaton gained his officials to his cause, while similar scenes upon the walls of almost every Amarna tomb show how he kept them faithful.

---

THE TELL EL-AMARNA LANDMARKS<sup>b</sup>

949. Having finally broken with the Theban priesthood of Amon, Ikhnaton abandoned Thebes as capital and royal residence, and determined to found a new city devoted exclusively to the service of Aton, the new solar god. The site selected for the new residence and holy city was about one hundred and sixty miles above modern Cairo, on the east bank of

---

<sup>a</sup>No. 11 in Daressy's list (Recueil, XV, 50); I copied the inscriptions in the tomb (doorway, thickness, right hand), and they give this Ramose the titles: "Commander of the army of the Lord of the Two Lands, 'overseer of the White House' of Amenhotep III," which do not correspond with those of the Theban Ramose; but the rapid and sudden changes of the time may have transferred him to the head of the army. See also Wiedemann (Recueil, XVII, 9, 10) who opposes the identity.

<sup>b</sup>These fourteen landmarks are huge stelæ varying in size from K, which "is 5 feet wide and 8 feet 3 inches high," to U, which is "14½ feet wide and about 26 feet high." They are cut into the limestone cliffs, and the quality of the stone is such that they have suffered extremely from wind and weather. No one stela contains a completely preserved text, but by combining all those thus far published, a complete text of the second class of stelæ (the original six) was obtained. Professor Petrie has lettered all these stelæ on his map (Tell el-Amarna, Pl. XXXIV), and furnished the first complete account of them. I have followed his lettering. Of the fourteen stelæ (one more discovered since Petrie's map was made) I was able to secure copies of eight, as follows:

1. A (northwest corner); Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, XIV, ll. 20-25 (end); Daressy, Recueil, XV, 61.
2. B (middle, west side, Gebel Tûne); Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 91, a-f (only the Nile, at a point where the cliffs, suddenly retreating some three miles from the river, and as suddenly approaching it again, over five miles lower down, thus with the river inclose a roughly semicircular plain about three miles wide by five miles long. In this plain he built his new city,<sup>a</sup> called Akhetaton, "Horizon of Aton," but it was his design from the first to consecrate and devote to the city and its god's service a large domain around it.

950. For this purpose he established, above and below the two points where the cliffs leave the river, a northern and southern boundary line, the two being about eight miles apart, and running from cliff to cliff clear across the Nile valley, which here varies from twelve to seventeen and a half miles in width. The boundaries were then marked by fourteen splendid stelæ cut into the cliffs, some of them being as high as twenty-six feet. As the cliffs formed a natural boundary on the east and west, the northern and southern lines were of chief importance; hence the east and west ends of these two lines, where they struck the cliffs, were marked by four large stelæ cut in the rocks. But, probably owing to the irregularity of the cliff lines, another pair were placed opposite each other in the eastern and western cliffs, midway between the northern and south-reliefs and accompanying names, date, etc.); Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 321 f.

---

3. F (southwest corner); hand copy by Petrie.
4. J (southernmost on river front, east side); hand copy by Petrie.
5. K (just north of J); Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 110, b.
6. S (southeast corner); best preserved of all; photograph and copy by Daressy, Recueil, XV, 52; Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, XIII.
7. U (middle east side); Prisse, ibid., XII, and hand copy by Petrie.
8. X (close by Shekh Sa'îd, matching K on the south); recently discovered by Mr. N. de G. Davies, to whose kindness I am indebted for a squeeze. Professor Petrie kindly placed his copies of F, J, and U at my disposal.

<sup>a</sup>The modern name, "Tell el-Amarna," now universally applied to the locality, is a corruption of "El Amarieh;" see Petrie, Tell el-Amarna, 2.

ern lines<sup>a</sup> (U and B). Finally, the irregularity of the cliffs forced the erection of no less than eight more, all on the east side, chiefly where the cliffs are broken by incoming valleys, across which the new stelæ carry the line (total, fourteen). It is not improbable that there are others yet undiscovered.

951. In form these stelæ are practically all of one design, showing at the top a relief scene in which appear the king, queen, and either two or three daughters, standing before an altar and adoring Aton, whose rays, terminating in hands, extend to them the symbol of life. All, including the god, are accompanied by their names in cartouches, and their titles. The inscription, beginning in the relief-field with a few vertical lines, continues below in horizontal lines. On either side of the stelæ were often altars with statues of the king and his family.

The stelæ (called "landmarks" in the translation) fall, according to content, into two classes.

952. The first class is represented by two stelæ,<sup>b</sup> containing a detailed endowment of the god, probably not confined to the gift of Akhetaton. They were of great length, containing nearly eighty lines each, but are so fragmentary that only a few detached phrases in the first half can be discerned.

953. After the date,<sup>c</sup> the introduction, the account of the king's first visit to Akhetaton, and the oblation, all being identical with the beginning of the stelæ of the second class

<sup>a</sup>See conclusion of Stela A (§ 971), which is different from that of the others, and clearly defines the position of the original six stelæ.

<sup>b</sup>These two stelæ (K and X) occupy important positions: one at the north and the other at the south end of the semicircle, where the cliffs approach to the river-bank above and below the city on the east bank.

<sup>c</sup>The date is lost on X; in K, Lepsius, Denkmäler, has "year 4," with signs of weathering; but the month, which is the same as on all the second class of stelæ (which are all of year 4), shows that Lepsius, Denkmäler, has misread 6 as 4.

(§§ 959 ff.), these two stelæ proceed with a glorification of the king:

All [lands], all countries, the Haunebu [come to him] bearing their impost, their tribute upon their backs, [for] him who makes their life.

954. Then follows apparently the king's solemn asseveration, in which he proclaims the gift of Akhetaton to Aton:

His majesty raised his hand to heaven, to him who made him, even Aton, [saying: "This is my testimony], forever, and this is my witness forever, this landmark . . . . . I have made Akhetaton for my father as a dwelling for —. I have [demarcated] Akhetaton on its south, on its north, on its west, on its east. I shall not pass beyond the southern landmark of Akhetaton toward the south, nor shall I pass beyond the northern landmark of [Akhetaton toward the north],<sup>a</sup> . . . . . He has made its circuit for his own —; he hath made his [altar] in its midst, whereon I make offering to him; this is it."

955. Then follows the statement that Akhetaton shall be a new capital, where he will hold audience for all the land (cf. III, 63, Harmhab):

"The whole land [shall come hither] for the beautiful seat of Akhetaton shall be another seat, and I will give them audience,<sup>b</sup> whether they be north, or south, or west, or east. . . . ."

956. After a short break, the text proceeds with the building of the temple:

"I have made Akhetaton in this [place] — — — — that he may be satisfied therewith, forever and ever. I have made a temple of Aton for Aton, my father, in Akhetaton in this [place]. I have made — — [for Aton], my father, in Akhetaton in this place. I have made the 'Shadow-of-Re,' [for Aton, my father, in Akhetaton in this place] . . . . ."<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The only two stelæ bearing this text stand at the extreme north and south.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "hearing."

<sup>c</sup>Still another of these phrases follows here, but the object made is lost; possibly each refers to a different temple at Akhetaton, of which there were at least three called "Shadow of Re" (see §§ 1017 ff.).

957. From here on the text is in such fragmentary condition that little can be made out. It is probable that these thirty-seven lines contained the decree endowing Aton with lands and revenues outside of Akhetaton. This is practically certain in the following fragment:

“As for my [ground] in every town (ṛdmꜣ) of the north, of the south, of the west, or of the east, it is my — —; it shall be brought — my — for Akhetaton.”

In l. 45 “Kush” is mentioned, and it may be that the decree here passes from the gift of lands in Egypt to those in Kush.

958. The second class of stelæ, of which there are twelve,<sup>a</sup> are not so long, but to them belong the original six, three on each side of the river, which were later increased to twelve. After the date and titulary they record the king's presence in Akhetaton on that day, on his first visit there (ll. 1-4), his exploration of the city, and oblation to Aton (ll. 5-8) in celebration of the foundation of the city, exactly as in the first class of stelæ (§§ 952 ff.). The king then proceeds to the southeastern stela (S), where, after a few words in praise of his queen and the princesses, his daughters, he declares the boundaries of his new city, marked by six stelæ, four at the eastern and western ends of the northern and southern boundary lines (§ 962 and § 964), and two more (§ 963), one in the eastern and one in the western cliffs, midway between the northern and southern boundary lines. The size of the inclosure is then indicated (§ 965),

<sup>a</sup>They occupy both sides of the river, three on the west and nine on the east bank. The three on the west are the three original stelæ, matching three original stelæ on the east side, which were later increased to nine on the east side. The northernmost of the original eastern three has never been found; X, at present the northernmost on the east side, belongs to the first class, and not to the second class, to which the original six belong. The six are: (1) on the west side: A, B, and F; (2) on the east side: S, U, and the northeast stela still undiscovered. A differs in its conclusion from the others (see §§ 970-72).

and the whole is solemnly conveyed as a permanent gift to Aton (§ 966), the other landmarks being appealed to as containing a similar record (§ 967), which will in all cases be renewed in case it has suffered defacement or erasure from any cause (§ 968). A later note (§ 969) in conclusion records an inspection by the king in the year 8.

Introduction

959. Year 6, fourth month of the second season, thirteenth day.

<sup>1</sup>Live the Good God, satisfied with truth, lord of heaven, lord of Aton; live the great one who illuminates the Two Lands; live my father; live "Harakhte-Rejoicing-in-the-Horizon, in his name: Heat-Which-is-in-Aton," who is given life forever and ever.

Live Horus: Mighty-Bull, Beloved-of-Aton; Favorite of the Two Goddesses:<sup>a</sup> Great-in-Kingship-in-Akhetaton; Golden Horus: Bearer-of-the-Name-of-Aton; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Living in Truth, Lord of the Two Lands: [Neferkhepru]re-Wanre;<sup>b</sup> Son of Re, Living in Truth, Lord of Diadems: Ikhnaton (Y<sup>3</sup> ḥ-n-Yin), great in duration, <sup>2</sup>given life forever and ever; Good God — whose beauty Aton created, the really good-hearted toward Irsu,<sup>c</sup> satisfying him with that which pleases his ka, doing that which is useful for him that begat him; <sup>3</sup>offering the earth to him that placed him upon his throne, supplying his eternal house with millions and hundred-thousands of things, exalter of Aton, magnifier of his name; who causes that the earth should belong to Irsu, <sup>4</sup>Ikhnaton.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup>In Egyptian one word nb'ty, a feminine dual noun, with an adjectival ending, so that the whole means "he who belongs to, or is protégé of, the two goddesses," but the word for the latter is not as prominent as in English; hence Ikhnaton retained the old royal titulary without change, even including this somewhat compromising title, to preserve the old titulary complete. This is one of the few compromises with a traditional form by Ikhnaton. That he no longer retained a belief in the two goddesses is shown by the fact that the vulture, which regularly appears with wings outspread in protection over the heads of the other kings, is never found with Ikhnaton, but it is replaced by the sun-disk enveloping Ikhnaton in its rays.

<sup>b</sup>The first part is the Napkhurīya of the Amarna Letters; the whole means: "Beautiful is the Being of Re; the Unique One of Re."

<sup>c</sup>Yr-sw = "He that made him."

<sup>d</sup>Last two names of the titulary are repeated in full, as in l. 1.

Hereditary princess, great in the palace, lovely of face, beautiful in the double plume, lady of joy, abounding in favor, at the sound of whose voice there is rejoicing;<sup>a</sup> the Great King's-Wife, his beloved, the Mistress of the Two Lands, Nefernefruaton-Nofretete.

Founding of the City

960. <sup>5</sup>On this day one was in Akhetaton in the pavilion of <sup>1</sup>woven stuff<sup>1</sup> which his majesty, L. P. H., made in Akhetaton, the name of which is: "Aton-is-Satisfied." His majesty, L. P. H., appeared upon a great chariot<sup>b</sup> <sup>6</sup>of electrum, like Aton, when he rises in the horizon; he filled the Two Lands with his loveliness. On beginning the goodly way to Akhetaton, at the first exploration of it<sup>c</sup> which his majesty, L. P. H., made, in order to found it as a monument to Aton, according to the command <sup>7</sup>of his father Aton,<sup>d</sup> who is given life forever and ever; in order to make for him a monument in its midst. One caused that a great oblation should be offered, consisting of bread, beer, oxen, calves, cattle, fowl, wine, <sup>1</sup>gold<sup>1</sup>, incense, all beautiful flowers. On this day <sup>8</sup>was founded Akhetaton for the living Aton, that favor and love might be received, on behalf of King Ikhnaton.<sup>e</sup>

King Goes to Southeastern Landmark

961. As one proceeded <sup>9</sup>southward, his majesty halted in his chariot in the presence of his father Aton, upon the southeastern<sup>f</sup> mountain of Akhetaton, while the rays of <sup>10</sup>Aton were upon him in satisfying life, making youthful his limbs every day. Vivat<sup>g</sup> which the king, Ikhnaton, <sup>a</sup>Compare the description of Mutemuya (British Museum Boat, No. 43), "Filling the hall with the fragrance of her dew." See also § 995.

<sup>b</sup>S has: "upon a span of horses (and) upon a chariot, etc."

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "at the first time of finding it."

<sup>d</sup>The full double name is used here and later.

<sup>e</sup>Under the orthodox régime offerings were officially made "on behalf of" (hr d>d) the king (see § 57). We see here that their specific object was "favor and love;" of course, those of the god. It is this which is referred to in the stereotyped form of the royal oath: "As Re loves me, as Amon favors me." Cf. IV, 958D.

<sup>f</sup>This stela (S), from which this translation is made, is at the southeast corner. The other stelæ vary the text to suit their respective locations.

<sup>g</sup>This rendering of the word nh here is made certain by the introduction to the second date (l. 25): "Repetition of the vivat (nh)," followed by the date. The full vivat is the nh, followed by the entire titulary of the god, as we have it at the beginning of the inscription; but to save space the second date is introduced merely by the words: "Repetition of the vivat," which are thus a kind of abbreviation of the full introduction.

spake: "Live my father, <sup>11</sup>Aton, who is given life forever! My heart is joyous over the king's-wife and over her children, who bring long life for<sup>a</sup> the Great King's-Wife, Nofretete, living forever and ever, <sup>12</sup>with the myriad of years. She is under the hand of the Pharaoh, L. P. H., who brings long life; the king's-daughter, Meretaton; the king's-daughter, Meketaton, her children, being under the hand of the King's-Wife, <sup>13</sup>their mother, forever and ever. It is my oath by the truth, (namely), that which my heart shall speak; (and) that which I do not speak is falsity; forever and ever.<sup>b</sup>

East and West Ends of Southern Boundary Lines

962. <sup>14</sup>As for the southern landmark, which is upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, it is the landmark of Akhetaton, as far as which I make a stand;<sup>c</sup> I shall not pass beyond it toward the south, forever and ever.<sup>d</sup> <sup>15</sup>The southwestern landmark is made over against it, upon the [western] mountain of Akhetaton, opposite.

Middle of Eastern and Western Boundary Lines

963. As for the middle landmark which is upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, it is the landmark of Akhetaton, <sup>16</sup>as far as which I make a stand,<sup>c</sup> upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton; I shall not pass beyond it toward the east, forever and ever. The middle landmark which is upon the western mountain of Akhetaton is made over against it, opposite.

East and West Ends of Northern Boundary Line

964. As for the northeastern landmark of Akhetaton, as far as which I make a stand;<sup>c</sup> it is the northern landmark <sup>17</sup>of Akhetaton;<sup>e</sup> I shall not pass beyond it toward the north, forever and ever. The northern landmark, which is upon the western mountain of Akhetaton is over against it, opposite.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "who cause that the great king's-wife N. should grow old," in a good sense, meaning attain old age.

<sup>b</sup>The divergent conclusion of Stela A begins here (see § 970).

<sup>c</sup>Or a "halt."

<sup>d</sup>This formula, repeated on all the stelæ of the second class (except A), may be either a traditional one taken from the legal form used in establishing boundaries; or it may be an extraordinary statement peculiar to this remarkable king, asserting that he will never pass beyond the boundaries of Akhetaton, but remain within his god's domain all his life.

<sup>e</sup>The order of phrases differs slightly from that in the preceding two clauses.

Area Contained

965. <sup>18</sup>Now, as for Akhetaton, from the southern landmarks to the northern landmarks measured between landmark and landmark upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, it makes 6 iter, <sup>19</sup>1 khet, 1 half-khet, 1 quarter-khet,<sup>a</sup> and 4 cubits. Likewise, from the southwestern landmark of Akhetaton to the [north]western landmark upon the western mountain of Akhetaton, it makes 6 iter, 1 khet, 1 half-khet, 1 quarter-khet, and 4 cubits; being the same on both sides.

Deed of Gift to Aton

966. <sup>20</sup>Now, as for the area within the four landmarks, from the [eastern] mountain [to the western mountain of<sup>b</sup>] Akhetaton opposite, it belongs to my father, Aton, who is given life, forever and ever; whether mountains, <sup>21</sup>or cliffs, or marshes, or <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1c</sup> or uplands, or fields, or waters, or towns, or shores, or people, or cattle, or trees, or anything <sup>22</sup>which Aton, my father, has made, . . . . . I have made it for Aton, my father, forever and ever.

Citation of the Other Landmarks

967. Moreover, <sup>23</sup>it is recorded upon the landmark of stone, at the southeastern limit, and at the northeastern limit of Akhetaton likewise. It is recorded upon the western landmark of stone, at the southwestern limit likewise — — <sup>24</sup>of Akhetaton.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup>The khet (kt) contained 100 cubits, but the iter varies in different localities; here it can be computed, for it is clear that these measurements concern only the original six stelæ, the only ones known to the maker of this text. There is no doubt regarding which stelæ are meant, as some have averred. The discovery of the northeastern stela, high above the river at Shekh Sa'îd, by Mr. Davies, gives us the northern terminus on the east side for the first time. Previous calculations, starting at the next stela southward (V), have been based on too short a total measurement. The discovery of the Shekh Sa'îd stela makes the east and west sides of Akhetaton of about the same length as the stela states they were, viz., some 45,830 feet, roughly, over 8 $\frac{2}{3}$  miles. This makes the iter here used equal some 4,400 cubits, or 7,587 feet = roughly, 1 $\frac{1}{3}$  miles. This is longer than the iter as given by Griffith (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 303-6), and Sethe (Untersuchungen, II, 3, 11) could now strike out his minimum of 1 $\frac{1}{3}$  km. But these calculations antedate the discovery of the northeast stela, which was also unknown to Levy, Recueil, XVI, 162-72. See also Loret, Sphinx, VII, and Sethe, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 41, 58-60.

<sup>b</sup>The word "opposite" renders the restoration practically certain.

<sup>c</sup>M ʿ wt, a kind of land.

<sup>d</sup>For some reason, perhaps by oversight, the northwestern corner is omitted.

Permanence of the Record

968. It shall not be erased, it shall not be washed out, it shall not be abraded, it shall not be encumbered with detritus, [it] shall not be —. If it should disappear, if it should wear away, if <sup>25</sup>the stela upon which it is, should fall, I will restore it again anew in this place in which it is.

Inspection Two Years Later

969. Repetition of the vivat.<sup>a</sup> In the year 8, in the first month of the second season, the eighth day, <sup>26</sup>one (i. e., his majesty) was in Akhetaton; the Pharaoh, L. P. H., halted, shining in the great chariot of electrum, while inspecting these landmarks of Aton, which are in the eastern mountain, at the southeastern limit of Akhetaton, established forever and ever for the living Aton.

970. The stela at the northwest corner (A) follows the conventional text of all the other stelæ of the second class for thirteen lines,<sup>a</sup> but then proceeds with the position of the stelæ, the demarcation, etc., in a form quite different from all the others of the second class. It runs thus:

Landmarks and Boundaries

971. Said the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, [Neferkheprure-Wanre], Son of Re, living in truth, Ikhnaton, great in his duration, when setting up these landmarks <sup>21</sup>— — — (cartouche) given life, forever and ever: "As for these [<sup>6</sup> landmarks] which I have set up at the boundaries of Akhetaton, the 3 landmarks upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, together with the 3 landmarks opposite them: <sup>22</sup>[the southern landmark which is upon the eastern mountain of]<sup>d</sup> Akhetaton as far as the [landmark upon] the western [mountain] of Akhetaton shall be for the southern boundary of Akhetaton; the northern land-

<sup>a</sup>See above note on l. 10, § 961.

<sup>b</sup>As numbered on Stela S.

<sup>c</sup>The numeral is broken away, except two strokes.

<sup>d</sup>The restoration is clear from the word "likewise" at the end of the definition of the northern boundary (l. 23); Daressy has not left room for it in his publication, but the length of other lines (like 24) shows that enough is lost for this restoration. The northernmost and southernmost eastern and western stelæ form the eastern and western termini of the northern and southern boundaries.

mark which is upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, <sup>23</sup>going to the landmark [upon] the western [mountain] of Akhetaton, shall be the northern boundary of Akhetaton likewise; the middle landmark which is upon the eastern mountain of Akhetaton, likewise the middle landmark which is opposite it upon the western mountain of Akhetaton.”<sup>a</sup>

Deed to Aton

972. “Now, as for the width of Akhetaton, mountain to mountain <sup>24</sup>from its eastern horizon to its western horizon, it shall belong to my father, Aton,<sup>b</sup> given life, forever and ever; whether its mountains, or its cliffs, — — —, or its —, or all its people, or all its cattle, or anything which Aton causes to exist, upon which his rays shine, <sup>25</sup>or anything — — — of Akhetaton, they shall belong to my father, the living Aton, for the temple of Aton in Akhetaton, forever and ever. They shall be offered to his ka, the beautiful rays receiving them ————.”

ASSUAN TABLET OF THE ARCHITECT BEK<sup>c</sup>

973. The presence of Ikhnaton’s architect and master-sculptor at Assuan is, of course, to be explained by the fact of the quarries there, from which he was taking stone for the temples at Akhetaton.<sup>d</sup> It therefore bears the same relation to the Amarna temple as the Silsileh quarry inscription bears to the Theban Aton-temple. The expungement of Ikhnaton’s figure from the relief shows that the persecution of his memory was extended as far south as the cataract,<sup>e</sup> and the fragments found at Memphis,<sup>f</sup> Heliopolis,<sup>g</sup> and <sup>a</sup>This list gives the position of all the six stelæ and the limits thus marked; the territory thus inclosed is then taken up.

<sup>b</sup>Only the god’s double cartouche is preserved.

<sup>c</sup>Cut on the rocks at Assuan; published by Mariette, Monuments divers, 26, u = de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 40, No. 174. Neither is accurate, and the relief faces opposite directions in the two publications.

<sup>d</sup>See tomb of Hui, §§ 1016 ff.

<sup>e</sup>See also § 896.

<sup>f</sup>See “On Some Remains of the Disk Worshipers Discovered at Memphis,” by Sir Charles Nicholson, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature (Read, May 20, 1868); and ibid., VIII, 308; also Bouriant, Recueil, VI, 52, 53.

<sup>g</sup>Bouriant, Recueil, VI, 53.

the Delta cities, show the northern limit of the persecution. The temple for which his Amarna architect labored has been razed to the ground, like all of Ikhnaton's buildings at Amarna, as well as elsewhere. The tablet is as follows:

Relief Scene

974. Before an altar, embraced by the hands terminating the rays of the sun which is above it, stands Bek at the right in gala costume, with a large bouquet of flowers. The space before Bek, on the left of the altar, contained the figure of Ikhnaton, as the inscription over Bek shows; but this figure has been obliterated<sup>a</sup> by the king's enemies. The scene is accompanied by the following inscriptions:

On Each Side of the Sun

975. <sup>b</sup>———— Living, great Aton, celebrator of jubilees, lord of heaven, lord of earth, lord of every circuit of Aton, lord of the house of Aton in Akhetaton.

Over Bek

Giving praise to the Lord of the Two Lands, obeisance to Wanre (Ikhnaton), by the chief of works in the Red Mountain,<sup>c</sup> the assistant (hr-ꜥ) whom his majesty himself taught, chief of sculptors on the great and mighty monuments of the king, in the house of Aton in Akhetaton, Bek (Bk), son of the chief of sculptors, Men (Mn), born of the matron, Royenet (Rꜥ -yn·t).

976. Beside this relief appears Bek's father, "Men, chief of works in the Red Mountain, chief of sculptors on the great and mighty monuments of the king," presenting a food-offering to a statue of Amenhotep III,<sup>d</sup> under whom he, of

<sup>a</sup>The left half of the relief, which doubtless contained more inscriptions, and another figure is weathered off.

<sup>b</sup>Two cartouches, with content erased. They, of course, contained the god's two names.

<sup>c</sup>See I, 493, l. 15, note.

<sup>d</sup>This is not necessarily an apotheosis of Amenhotep III, as has been supposed, and is therefore not in conflict with the Aton cult.

course, held the offices which his son inherited. To the titles of these offices, when inherited by Bek, he added the necessary phrases to make them fit the new régime of Ikhnaton.

THE TELL EL-AMARNA TOMBS<sup>a</sup>

977. Like all ancient Egyptian cities, the life of Akhetaton, so much of it as has survived, must be sought rather in the city of the dead than in the city of the living; and far more of Akhetaton has survived in its cemetery than in its streets. The tombs are themselves the product of the king's bounty, and we find frequent statement of this in such remarks as this of a relative of the deceased official: "We see the good things which the Good Ruler hath done for his table-scribe (Ani), commanding for him goodly burial in Akhetaton."<sup>b</sup> The tombs are themselves therefore tangible evidence of the royal favor in claiming which, each of the owners of these tombs has used so much space on their walls.

<sup>a</sup>These tombs are cut into the limestone cliffs surrounding the plain of Amarna on the east side of the river. They are twenty-five in number, and fall into two groups, a northern (six) and a southern (nineteen). See Petrie's map, Tell el-Amarna, Pl. XXXV; and excellent description, Baedeker's Egypt, 1902, 195-99. The hymns here translated are usually engraved on the thickness or edge of the doorway (see Mariette, Voyage dans la haute Egypte, I, Pl. V); Davies, Amarna, I, 47, 48). The relief scenes occupy the walls of the chambers. Neither scenes nor inscriptions have ever been completely published. Lepsius published twenty-one plates of selected material (Denkmäler, III, 91-111), the first basis for study of Amenhotep IV's reign. The French Mission Archéologique au Caire spent a few days there and published some new material (Bouriant, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, I, 1 ff.), but it is not reliable. Finally Daressy has furnished a useful sketch of the tombs with some new material (Recueil, XV, 36-50). Many scenes have also appeared in the old publications (see list in Davies, Amarna, I, 3 ff.). On the basis of the above publications I published a study of the hymns: De Hymnis in Solem sub Rege Amenophide IV Conceptis (Berlin, 1894). For the following translations, I had also my own copies of all the hymns at Amarna, made in the winter of 1894-95. A full and accurate publication of all the tombs has been begun by N. de G. Davies, for the Egyptian Exploration Fund, and two volumes have appeared.

<sup>b</sup>Tomb of Ani (Recueil, XV, 45). Such a practice is very old (see e. g. I, 242 ff.), but is nowhere so frequently mentioned as at Amarna.

978. But the walls also carry graphic evidence of that favor. Of the inscribed tombs at Amarna many show the owner standing before Ikhnaton and receiving rich decorations and gifts of gold. It is clear that Ikhnaton was holding all his great officials faithful to his reform, only by such means. These tombs contain, besides these scenes, many pictures from the life of the town, as illustrated in the functions of this or that official: the houses and gardens, the palaces and temples, even such a scene as that of the chief of the gendarmes bringing in prisoners.<sup>a</sup> All such scenes have been studied, and their inscriptions as far as possible, or useful, translated below.

979. The long inscriptions contain all that we know of the Aton faith, in the form of hymns. These hymns are of two classes: (1) those recited by the king; (2) those recited by his officials. The hymns of the first class are of chiefly religious interest, and contain almost exclusively praise of Aton. Those of the second class, besides praise of Aton, contain also encomiums of the king and queen, mingled with an account of the reciter's faithfulness and favor with the king, prayers for the king, as well as for prosperity and "goodly burial" for the reciter himself. Facts of historical importance are thus brought out. These hymns, therefore, have been included herein as historical documents; but the hymns of the first class, although they contain the religious ideas which characterized a great historical movement, have not been translated here.<sup>b</sup>

980. The following six hymns of the second class include all such hymns not too fragmentary for translation. Numerous short and mutilated hymns, not included here, have been studied and employed wherever applicable or useful. The relief scenes, wherever accompanied by historically important inscriptions, have likewise been employed.

<sup>a</sup>Tomb of Mahu.

<sup>b</sup>The longer will be found in the author's De Hymnis in Solem sub Rege Amenophide IV Conceptis, with Latin translation, and thence translated by Griffith in Petrie, History of Egypt, II, 215-18, and in the author's History of Egypt (New York, 1905); and also in the section devoted to religion, which will later appear in this series.

Tomb of Merire II

981. One of the most important scenes<sup>a</sup> at Amarna, unaccompanied by inscriptions, is in the tomb of Merire II. It shows Ikhnaton, his queen, and six daughters, in a kiosk, or covered dais. The king and queen enthroned side by side have just stepped from their sedan chairs, which are set down before the dais. With trumpet sounding, Egyptian troops defile before them, and on either side of the military appear foreign embassies with their tribute: Nubians, Syrians, Libyans, and especially Hittites, who are here depicted for the first time on an Egyptian monument. They bear elaborately decorated vessels, undoubtedly of gold and silver.

TOMB OF MERIRE I<sup>b</sup>

982. The reliefs and inscriptions in this tomb are of unusual interest. The king, proceeding to the temple of Aton, is shown riding in his chariot, accompanied by four daughters, by soldiers and officials.<sup>c</sup> Before its door are the priests, who greet him with cries of "Welcome!" and one

<sup>a</sup>In tomb No. 2 (northern group), belonging to a certain Merire (not to be confused with Merire of tomb No. 4, who is earlier: Davies, Amarna, I), whom we call Merire II. Published from a sketch by Nestor l'Hôte, in Amélineau, Histoire de la sépulture, Pl. XCVI; and in Davies, Amarna, II, Pls. XXXVII-LX, 38-42.

<sup>b</sup>A cliff-tomb (No. 4) in the northern group of Amarna (Lepsius, No. 3); partially published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 92-97, d; superb sketches by Nestor l'Hôte, in Amélineau's Histoire de la sépulture, II, Pl. 85, 92.; plans, also Prisse, Histoire de l'art égyptien, and often, e. g., Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt. The entire tomb has been published by Davies, Rock Tombs of El Amarna, Part I, "Tomb of Meryra" (London, 1903). I had also my own copies.

Davies, Amarna, I, Pls. X-XX.

may distinguish a reference to “the first impost of Aton in the Aton-temple in Akhetaton.” The occasion is, therefore, the celebration of the reception of the first dues of the god in the new capital; hence the temple<sup>a</sup> shows a richly crowded altar in the court and many chambers filled with food and drink. Such scenes are naturally depicted in the tomb of Merire, who was “High Priest” or “great seer” (wr-m<sup>3</sup>), of Aton—a title adopted from the sun-temple of Heliopolis. His appointment to this exalted office is recorded in the tomb. The king, with the queen and daughters, is shown upon the balcony<sup>b</sup> of his palace before which appear Merire and his friends, acclaiming the praise of the king and queen:

983. “He trains<sup>c</sup> the youth and the generations;<sup>d</sup> the good ruler! As surely as the Aton rises, he shall be forever.”

The “great seer” of the Aton in the Aton-temple in Akhetaton, Merire, triumphant, says: “How numerous are the things which the Aton is able to give, satisfying his heart.”

984. A lady of the household of Merire, named Tenr, doubtless his wife, sings praise of Aton and the royal family:<sup>e</sup>

“Thy rising is beautiful, O <sup>f</sup>“Living-Sun, Horizon-Ruler, Rejoicing-in-the-Horizon,<sup>f</sup> <sup>g</sup>in his name: Heat-Which-is-in-Aton,<sup>g</sup> who is given life, forever and ever. O living Aton, beside whom there is no other, who heals the eyes with his rays, the maker of all things that are. When <sup>a</sup>For an account of these representations of the Aton-temple, see especially Erman, Life in Ancient Egypt, 285 ff.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 97, b; only the edge of the balcony is shown in Lepsius, Denkmäler, without the royal pair. The complete scene is published by Davies, Amarna, I, Pls. VI-VIII.

<sup>c</sup>š·hpr, see III, 565.

<sup>d</sup>Or: “classes” (ḡ·mw); see IV, 402.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 97, a; Davies, Amarna, I, xxxvi: she does not belong to the company before the king, but her words well suit the occasion, especially her reference to the queen’s presence beside the king. Her hymn or song was common property, for much of it appears also verbatim on the tomb doorposts of Ahmose (§§ 1004 ff.), and assists in correcting the errors in this tomb of Merire. I had also my own copy, but the inscription has been much mutilated since Lepsius’ day.

<sup>f</sup>First cartouche.

<sup>g</sup>Second cartouche.

thou risest in the eastern horizon of heaven, to make live all that thou hast made, even men, cattle, them that fly and them that (only) flutter, and all reptiles that are in the earth, they live when they see thee, they sleep when thou settest. Grant thou thy beloved son, living in truth, Lord of the Two Lands, Neferkheprure-Wanre (Ikhnaton) that he may live with thee forever, that the Great King's-Wife, his beloved, Mistress of the Two Lands, Nefernefruaton-Nofretete, living forever and ever, may be by his side, doing that which pleases thy heart, seeing all that thou hast made every day. May he rejoice at the sight of thy beauty; grant to him eternity as king of the Two Lands."

The great favorite of the Mistress of the Two Lands, Tenr (Ty-n-r), triumphant; she says: "Praise to thee, O [fashioner] of years, creator of months, maker of days, reckoner of hours, lord of duration, by [whom] reckoning is made. [Grant] thou thy duration as Aton, to thy son, Wanre (Ikhnaton)."

985. The king proclaims from the balcony his appointment of Merire as High Priest ("great seer") of Aton thus:

King's Speech

<sup>a</sup>Said the king, living in truth, Lord of the Two Lands: Neferkheprure-Wanre, to the "great seer" of the Aton, Merire: "Behold, I am appointing thee for myself, to be 'great seer' of the Aton in the temple of Aton in Akhetaton, <sup>b</sup>Irsu of thy beloved<sup>b</sup>, saying: "O my hearer of the call (šdm <sup>c</sup>š), who hears the teaching. As for any commission with which thou art charged, my heart is satisfied therewith; I give to thee the office, saying: 'Thou shalt eat the food of Pharaoh, L. P. H., thy lord in the house of Aton.'"

986. In another scene<sup>c</sup> the reliefs depict further honors received from the king by Merire. Leaning on his staff as he stands before one of the richly filled magazines of the temple, and accompanied by the queen and his daughters,

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 97, b; Davies, Amarna, I, VIII.

<sup>b</sup>"Irsu" (Yr-sw), or "he that made him," is a circumlocution for "father," often applied to a god; "thy beloved" is the king himself. The whole is therefore probably an epithet of the god meaning "father of the king." "Doing it for love of thee" is an attractive rendering, but forbidden by the grammar.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 97, e; Davies, Amarna, I, xxv, xxix-xxxiii.

the king commands that Merire be decorated with gold. The fortunate official stands in the royal presence with arms upraised in praise, while attendants hang golden collars upon his neck, and four scribes record the gifts. The inscriptions furnish us with the words<sup>a</sup> of the king and his favorite:

Words of the King

987. <sup>b</sup>Speech of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, living in truth, Lord of the Two Lands, Neferkheprure-Wanre, [to] the overseer of the silver-house, [concerning] the officer (wꜣw), "great seer" of the Aton in Akhetaton, Merire: "Put gold at his throat and at his back, and gold on his legs, because of his hearing the teaching of Pharaoh, L. P. H., concerning every saying in<sup>c</sup> these beautiful seats which Pharaoh has made in the sanctuary<sup>d</sup> in the Aton-house of Aton in Akhetaton, filled with every good thing, with much corn and southern grain, the Aton<sup>e</sup>-offerings of the Aton."

Merire's Reply

988. "Great seer" of the Aton in the Aton-temple in Akhetaton, fan-bearer on the right of the king, favorite of the Lord of the Two Lands, Merire; he says: "Health —, the beautiful youthfulness of the Aton; grant that he may attain this age,<sup>f</sup> set him forever and ever.

TOMB OF EYE<sup>g</sup>

989. Eye, who afterward became king, has left a fine scene in his tomb, showing the royal family on the palace

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, ibid.; Davies, ibid., xxx.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 97, e; Davies, Amarna, I, xxx.

<sup>c</sup>Possibly "concerning" (hr). <sup>d</sup>Hꜣt-bnbn.

<sup>e</sup>The old word, "god" (ntr), is evidently avoided here, for in the old term, "divine offerings" (hꜣt-ntr), we have ntr replaced by Aton, thus: hꜣt-Ytn. There was thus an evident attempt to introduce the word Aton in place of the old word for "god" and "divine;" this accounts also for the term, "Aton-house (pr-Ytn) of the Aton," where the old texts have Hꜣt-ntr ("god's-house" = temple).

<sup>f</sup>Lit., "make this age," viz., the age of the god; that is, may he live as long a life as the god.

<sup>g</sup>Cliff-tomb (No. 25) at Amarna (No. 1) in the southern group; published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 103-6, a, and 107, a-109. (These scenes [107, d-109] are balcony, throwing down collars and vessels of gold to Eye and his wife Tiy. Unfortunately, the inscriptions such as we find in a similar scene in Merire's tomb (§§ 982 ff.) are here wanting. Only the comments of Eye's servants in the rear of his house have been recorded.<sup>a</sup> Eye had received a similar honor before his marriage with Tiy, and this is likewise depicted in his tomb, but without inscriptions. He was not an official of high rank, being only "Fan-bearer on the right of the king, master of all the horses of his majesty, his truly beloved scribe, the divine father, Eye (ꜥy)." His favor was doubtless due to his zeal in the new faith and his marriage with Tiy, the "great nurse, nourisher of the god, adorer of the king," that is, she had been Ikhnaton's nurse in his childhood.

990. Further indications of his favor<sup>b</sup> are thus recorded:

I was one favored of his lord every day, great in favor from year to year, because of the exceeding greatness of my excellence in his opinion. He doubled for me my favors like the number of the sand; I was the first of the officials at the head of the people . . . . . I am a 'true' witness, devoid of evil; my name has penetrated into the palace, because of my usefulness to the king, because of my hearing his teaching. . . . .

O everyone that liveth upon earth, every generation that is to be, I will tell you the way of life. I bear you witness that I was praised for what I said, I was 'content' by reason of what I did; I was truthful upon earth, making praise to the living Aton.

given by Lepsius as from a second tomb [No. 3] of the same man; this is an error which has been perpetuated in the modern histories. Eye had but one tomb at Amarna; it contains all the material given by Lepsius as from two tombs. See Breasted, The Dial, Chicago, May 1, 1897, 283.) The two long hymns were published by Bouriant, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, I, 2-5, and Daressy, Recueil, XV, 46, 47; both are excessively incorrect. The following translation (of Daressy's hymn) is based on my own copy of the original. Unfortunately, I had not yet made these copies when I published my De Hymnis in Solem sub Rege Amenophide IV Conceptis.

<sup>a</sup>Erman gives an excellent description of the whole scene, Life in Ancient Egypt, 119-21.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 107, d.

Hymn to Aton and the King

991. <sup>2a</sup>Praise to thee! When thou risest in the horizon, O living Aton, lord of eternity. Obeisance to thy rising in heaven, to illuminate every land, with thy beauty. Thy rays are upon thy beloved son. Thy hand <sup>3</sup>has a myriad of jubilees for the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkheprure-Wanre, thy child who came forth from thy rays. Thou assignest to him thy lifetime and thy years. Thou hearest <sup>4</sup>for him that which is in his heart. He is thy beloved, thou makest him like Aton. When thou risest, eternity is given him; when thou settest, thou givest him everlastingness. Thou begetteth him in the morning like thine own forms; thou formest him as thy emanation, <sup>5</sup>like Aton, ruler of truth, who came forth from eternity, son of Re, wearing his beauty, who offers to him the product of his rays; King of Upper and Lower Egypt, living in truth, Lord of the Two Lands, Neferkheprure-Wanre; the Great King's-Wife, Nefernefruatton-Nofretete; living forever and ever.

Hymn to Aton and the King

992. <sup>6</sup>The divine father, favorite of the Good God, fan-bearer at the right of the king, master of all the horses of his majesty, truly beloved scribe of the king, Eye. He saith: "Praise to thee! O living Aton, rising in heaven. He inundates the hearts, and all lands are in festivity because of his rising; their hearts <sup>7</sup>are happy with the joy of their lord, Irsu<sup>b</sup> who shineth upon them. Thy beloved son presents truth before thy beautiful face; thou rejoicest when thou seest him, (for) he came forth from thee; son of eternity, who came forth from <sup>8</sup>Aton, spirit of his spirit, gratifying the heart of Aton. When he rises in heaven, he rejoices in his son; he embraces him with his rays; he gives to him eternity as king, like the <sup>9</sup>Aton; Neferkheprure-Wanre, this god, who made me, who caused my ka to be. Grant that I may be satisfied with seeing thee without ceasing; this lord who forms like Aton; rich in possessions <sup>10</sup>a full Nile every day, making Egypt live. Silver and gold are like the sand of the shore; the land awakens to mighty rejoicing in his ka, the offspring of the Aton. Thou art eternal, Neferkheprure-Wanre; living and sound art thou, for he begat thee."

*L. 1 contains the usual title: "Praise of Aton, the king and the queen," indicating the content of the hymn.

<sup>b</sup>See § 985.

Self-Praise

993. <sup>11</sup>The divine father, etc., Eye; he saith: "I am the truthful one of the king whom he created, the upright one of the Lord of the Two Lands, useful to his lord, following the ka of his majesty, like his favorite, who sees <sup>12</sup>his beauty when he 'appears' in his palace. I am at the head of the princes, the companions of the king, the first of all the followers of his majesty. He put truth in my body, and my abomination is lying. I know that Wanre rejoices in it (truth), this lord, <sup>13</sup>wise like Aton, knowing the truth. He doubles to me my favors in silver and gold; I am first of the officials, at the head of the people (rḥy' t). <sup>14</sup>the lord <sup>15</sup>me. I have carried out his teaching."

Prayer for Self

994. "May I live praising his ka, may I be satisfied following him; (for) my breath of life is in him, this north wind, this myriad of high Niles every day, Neferkheprure-Wanre. <sup>15</sup>Grant me long life in thy favor. How prosperous is thy favorite, O son of the Aton! All that he does endures and prospers, and the ka of the Lord of the Two Lands is with him forever, so that he is satisfied with life, when he reaches <sup>16</sup>old age. O lord, who forms the people, and creates duration, who performs the pleasant obligation to his favorite, (whose) heart is satisfied with truth, whose abomination is lying. How prosperous is he who hears thy teaching of life, of life; he is satisfied with seeing thee without ceasing, <sup>17</sup>and his two eyes see Aton every day. Grant to me a good old age like thy favorite; grant to me goodly burial by thy command in my house, wherein thou commandest me to rest, in the mountain of Akhetaton, the place of the favorite. May I hear thy sweet voice <sup>18</sup>in the sanctuary<sup>a</sup> when thou performest the pleasant ceremonies<sup>b</sup> of thy father, the living Aton."

Prayer for King and Queen

995. "May he set thee forever and ever; may he endow thee with jubilees like the numbers of the shore, when measured with an ipet-rod; like reckoning the sea when measured with <sup>19</sup>zawets, (or) a statement of the numbering of the mountains when weighed in balances; (or) the feathers of the birds, <sup>20</sup>(or) the leaves of the trees, in jubilees for the king, Wanre (Ikhnaton), forever and ever as king; and <sup>21</sup>for the Great

<sup>a</sup>H' t-bnbn.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "doest the pleasing things."

King's-Wife, his beloved, abounding in her beauty;<sup>a</sup> her who sends the Aton to rest<sup>b</sup> with <sup>22</sup>a sweet voice, and with her two beautiful hands, bearing <sup>23</sup>two sistrums, the Mistress of the Two Lands, Nefernefruaton-Nofretete, living forever and ever. May she be by the side of <sup>24</sup>Wanre (Ikhnaton) forever and ever as the heavens abide <sup>25</sup>under that which is in them. Thy father Aton rises in heaven, to protect thee <sup>26</sup>every day, for he begat thee."

Prayer for Self

996. Grant me to kiss the pure ground, to come forth in thy presence with <sup>27</sup>offerings for thy father, Aton, of that which thy ka gives. Grant that <sup>28</sup>my mortuary priest may abide and flourish for me, (as) for one who is on earth following thy ka, <sup>29</sup>who has been exalted<sup>1</sup> for 'my' name's sake, to the place of the favorites, wherein thou makest one to rest. My mouth <sup>30</sup>is full of truth, my name is mentioned because of it, for thou hast commanded that I be like thy every favorite who follows thy ka. May I go on, enjoying thy favor after old age.

For the ka of Eye<sup>c</sup> the revered, who lives again.

TOMB OF MAI<sup>d</sup>

997. Mai was one of the most powerful officials at the Amarna court, as is shown by his titles:

Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, — — his Two Lands, commander of the army of the Lord of the Two Lands, overseer of the "House-of-Sending-Aton-to-Rest;" king's-attendant in his august barge, master of the suite behind the Lord of the Two Lands, chief of all works of the king.

<sup>a</sup>See § 959, l. 4.

<sup>b</sup>There was a "house for sending Aton to rest," at Amarna, of which Mai was overseer (mr). Here doubtless the vesper service in the daily ritual was held at sunset.

<sup>c</sup>His titles, as usual in the original, are omitted above.

<sup>d</sup>Cliff-tomb (No. 14) in the southern group at Amarna (not numbered by Lepsius); published by Daressy, Recueil, XV, 38-41, where the name of the owner of the tomb is stated to be illegible. I found his name twice; it is certainly Mai (M c y). Daressy's copy is inaccurate; I have used my own for the translation. The tomb is unfinished, but it contains, besides the above hymn (left doorpost), an address by Mai (right doorpost), beginning: "Hear ye my speech, all ye people," in five columns, very faint, and still unpublished; and two prayers published by Daressy, from which some of above titles of Mai are taken.

998. He has left a long hymn, containing some of the most interesting references to the king and his “teaching” which have survived to us.

Hymn to Aton

999. <sup>3a</sup>Thy rising is beautiful in the horizon of heaven, O living Aton, beginning of life. When thou risest in the horizon, thou fillest the earth with thy beauty. Thou art beautiful, great, brilliant, high over every hand. Thy rays <sup>4</sup>embrace the lands, even all that thou hast made. Thou art Re, and thou takest them all captive; thou bindest them for thy beloved son.

Praise of the King and Akhetaton

1000. Thy rays are upon thy glorious emanation, the ruler of truth, who came forth from eternity. <sup>5</sup>Thou grantest to him thy lifetime and thy years; thou hearest for him that which is in his heart. He is thy beloved; thou makest him<sup>b</sup> like Aton; thy child, who came forth from thy rays, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkheprure-Wanre, who hath made for thee the mighty Akhetaton, <sup>6</sup>great in loveliness, mistress of pleasant ceremonies, rich in possessions, the offerings to Re in her midst; at the sight of her beauty there is rejoicing. She is lovely and beautiful; when one sees her, it is like a glimpse at heaven; her number cannot be calculated. When the Aton rises in her, he fills her with his rays, <sup>7</sup>and he embraces his beloved son, son of eternity who came forth from Aton, and offers the earth to him who placed him on his throne, causing the earth to belong to Irsu.<sup>c</sup>

Praise of Aton and King

1001. Every land is festive at his rising; they assemble, making oblations to his ka, to Aton, rising in the horizon every early morning. <sup>8</sup>Thy<sup>d</sup> son presents truth to thy beautiful face; thou rejoicest when thou seest him, (for) he came forth from thee. Thou settest ¶him<sup>1</sup> as king like the Aton, Neferkheprure-Wanre, living and sound, like the Aton.

---

<sup>a</sup>Ll. 1 and 2 contain the usual title (“Praise of Aton, the king and queen”), which characterizes the content; although this does not contain any praise of the queen, as in Eye (§§ 989 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>Read sw, as in Eye, § 991, l. 4.

<sup>c</sup>See § 985, note.

<sup>d</sup>Original has “his.”

Selj-Praise

1002. Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, <sup>9</sup>— — his Two Lands, commander of the army of the Lord of the Two Lands, overseer of the house of sending [the Aton] to rest, [Mai (M<sup>c</sup> y)]; he saith:

“I am his servant, whom he created; upright for the Lord of the Two Lands, one useful to his lord, who put truth in my body; (my) abomination is lying. <sup>10</sup>I know that the son of the Aton, Neferkheprure-Wanre, rejoices because of it, (for) he hath doubled to me my favors like the numbers of the sand. I am the head of the officials at the head of the people (rhy't). <sup>11</sup>My lord has advanced me, (because) I have carried out his teaching, and I hear his word without ceasing. My eyes behold thy beauty every day.”

Prayer for Selj

1003. “O my lord, wise like Aton, satisfied with truth. How prosperous is <sup>12</sup>he who hears thy teaching of life! May he be satisfied with seeing thee, when he reaches old age. Grant me goodly burial, of that which thy ka gives, in the house wherein thou commandest me to rest, [in] the mountain of Akhetaton, <sup>13</sup>the place of the favorites. O thou Myriad of full Niles every day, Neferkheprure-Wanre, god, that madest me, through whose ka I<sup>1</sup> live; grant that I may be satisfied with following thee without ceasing, O <sup>14</sup>child of the Aton. Thou art for eternity, O thou Myriad of — — beseeching Wanre (Ikhnaton). How prosperous is he <sup>15</sup>who follows thee! Grant him, that all that he does may abide forever. May his lord give him burial, (for) his mouth was full of truth.”

TOMB OF AHMOSE<sup>a</sup>

1004. Ahmose was “real king's-scribe, his beloved, jan-bearer on the right of the king, master of the judgment-hall, steward of the estate of Neferkheprure-Wanre (Ikhnaton).”

<sup>a</sup>Cliff-tomb (No. 3) at Amarna, northern group (Lepsius, No. 4); the hymns are on the doorposts: left-hand, Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, Pl. VII (very bad), and my own copy. I found this doorpost much mutilated since Sharpe's time, and could not check all he copied. Right-hand: Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 98, a; this doorpost is now so mutilated that I made no attempt to copy, in view of the short time at my disposal.

He has left the usual composite hymn upon the doorposts of his tomb.

1005. The two portions of this hymn, one introduced by praise to the rising, the other by praise to the setting, sun, form really one hymn, of the usual character above described (§ 979). The introductory praise of the god, the king, and the queen, is verbatim identical with the hymn of Tenr (§ 984), to which the reader is referred for the translation. Ahmose's hymn then proceeds with a tribute to the universality of the king's power, as follows:

Praise of the King

1006. — — — <sup>1</sup>the praise<sup>1</sup> of all that thou hast encircled. ——— presenting them to thy ka. <sup>5</sup>Thy child whom thou thyself didst beget — — — —. The south, as well as the north, the west and the east, [and the isles] in the midst of the sea <sup>6</sup>are in jubilation to his ka. His southern boundary is as far as the wind, and (his) northern as far as the shining of Aton. All their princes make supplication, whom his fame has cowed <sup>7</sup>through his beautiful ka, who makes festive the Two Lands, who supplies the needs of the whole land. Place him with<sup>a</sup> thyself forever, according as he has loved to behold thee. <sup>8</sup>Grant him very many jubilees of peaceful years. Grant him the love of thy heart, like the sands of the shore, like the scales of the <sup>9</sup>fish in the river, (or) the hair <sup>10</sup>of the cattle. . . . . May I be a follower of the Good God until he assigns the burial which he gives.

Hymn to Aton

1007. <sup>b</sup>Thy setting is beautiful, O living Aton, lord of lords, ruler of the Two Lands, — — — in the peace of the Two Lands. The people are in rejoicing before thee, giving praise to him who formed them, doing obeisance [to him who created] them, [—] to thy beloved son, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, living in truth, Neferkheprure-

<sup>a</sup>Read hn c -k.

<sup>b</sup>The second portion (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 98, a, right doorpost) begins here. It is clearly the second half of one hymn, the first half containing the praise of god, king, and queen; the second chiefly the prayer of the deceased as usual.

Wanre (Ikhnaton). The whole land, every country in thy every circuit, at thy appearance shall make jubilee to thy rising and to thy setting likewise, O god, living in truth before the eyes. Thou art the maker of that which is not, the maker of all these things that come forth from thy mouth.

Prayer for Selj

1008. Grant to me advancement before the king every day, without ceasing; goodly burial after old age, on the highland of Akhetaton, when I have finished life in prosperity. May I be a follower of the Good God, when he treads any place he desires; may I be the companion of his two feet, for he trained me, when I was a child, until [I] attained revered age in peace and joy, a follower of the ruler, when he was at the feast, every day.

---

TOMB OF TUTU<sup>a</sup>

1009. Tutu (Tw-tw) was an imi-khentit (ymy-hnty t) in Akhetaton. He was decorated with gold, like most of his colleagues, and has recorded some remarkable statements concerning his king in the following hymn:

Hymn to Aton and the King

1010. 1— — —<sup>b</sup> O Aton, given life forever and ever. As for thy son, the king, living in truth, Lord of the Two Lands [Neferkheprure-Wanre, thy child, who came forth from thy rays, thou establishest him in thy office of King of Upper and Lower Egypt, as ruler of the circuit of Aton. Thou givest him eternity, as thou hast made thyself, (for) thy son is thy emanation; spending for [thee] thy lifetime; Son of Re, great in duration; Great King's-Wife [Nefernefru]aton-[Nofretete], living forever. 2— — — forever, Lord of the Two Lands. Thy rays

---

<sup>a</sup>Cliff-tomb (No. 8) in the southern group at Amarna (Lepsius, No. 2); Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 107, a; Lepsius' squeeze of the same text; and my own copies of the original. The tomb contains, besides the above hymn, also a long and magnificent text (too long to be copied in the time at my disposal) and the short form of the great hymn.

<sup>b</sup>This beginning is apparently not a title, as in the other hymns, but a direct address.

are upon thy beloved son; thy hand carries satisfying life. Thy love is great, immense, [—], by thy august skin, when thou floodest heaven and earth with thy beauty. (Then) thy son, who came forth from thy limbs, adores thee, thou hearest for him that which is in his heart, (and) thou doest according to that which comes forth from his mouth. He is thy beloved, thou makest him like Aton. Although thou art in heaven, thy rays are upon [earth].<sup>a</sup> <sup>3</sup>As thou begettest thyself every day without ceasing, (so) thou hast formed him out of thine own rays to spend the lifetime of Aton. When thou sailest the heavens, his eye [sees] thy beauty, rejoicing with joy at beholding thee, O living Aton, (for) he is thy favorite. Those who are under the heavens, even all that see thy rays, — — —, for thou hast made them, that he might satisfy thy heart therewith. <sup>4</sup>— — — — great in duration.

Hymn to Aton

1011. I come with praise to Aton, the living, the only god, lord of radiance, who makes light when he rises in heaven, who illuminates the Two Lands. When he made to live all that he created, he drove away the darkness. When he sends out his rays, every land is filled with his love. The herbage and the trees start up before thee; the denizens of the water spring up at thy shining; all people arise in their places. (When) [their limbs]<sup>b</sup> are washed [they take]<sup>b</sup> their clothing, [they do]<sup>b</sup> all work, they make their products. Thou hast awakened the Two Lands, when thou risest in thy form of living Aton. Their mouths are filled with that which thou givest. All small cattle rest upon their herbage; thou expellest evil and hast given health. Every one lifts himself up because thou risest: they have seen their lord (when) he appears

Praise of the King

1012. As for thine only son who came forth from thy body, thou embracest him with thy beautiful rays. <sup>6</sup>— — — — — in thy form of Aton, every land trips to thy rising. Thy rays bear a myriad of jubilees for thy son, living in truth, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Neferkheprure-Wanre, my god, my fashioner, and my creator.

<sup>a</sup>Restored from Eye's great hymn (see my De Hymnis in Solem sub Rege Amenophide IV Conceptis, 19, v. 11).

<sup>b</sup>Ibid., 34 and 36.

Prayer and Self-Praise

1013. Grant me that my eye may see him, that [my] hands may adore him, that my ear may hear his voice, that his ka may be before me without ceasing. I am the favorite servant, who [hears] his teaching, and his marvelous things are in my body without ceasing. I will speak truth to his majesty, (for) I know that he lives therein . . . . .<sup>8</sup>. . . . . I do not that which his majesty hates, (for) my abomination is lying in my body, [— — —]. I have sent up truth to his majesty, (for) I know that he lives therein. Thou art Re, begetter of truth; thou hast given<sup>9</sup> ————. My voice was not [lifted up] in the king's house, nor was my step too broad in the palace. I took not the reward of lying, nor expelled the truth for the violent; but it was the truth [which] I executed by his (the king's) might before me; I was mighty through the ka of Wanre, I was honored with reward — — —<sup>10</sup> — . . . . . I set not lying in my body . . . . . He glorified my teachableness every day, because I so fully carried out his teaching, not transgressing by any evil thing<sup>11</sup>. . . . . May I be one who may adore his majesty; may I be his follower. Grant that I may be satisfied with seeing thee . . . and assign to me — burial<sup>12</sup> after old age — — in the mountain of Akhetaton. . . . .<sup>a</sup>

TOMB OF HUY<sup>b</sup>

1014. In Huy we have the usual favorite of Ikhnaton. His offices were responsible and important ones; for he was "Overseer of the royal harem, overseer of the White House, steward in the house of the [—],<sup>c</sup> great king's-wife, Tiy (Tyy)." The events depicted in his tomb are naturally those connected with his offices. As "overseer of the White House" he had charge of incoming tribute. A scene<sup>d</sup> in the tomb shows the king on a splendid throne-chair, borne <sup>a</sup>Ll. 12-15 are mere fragments, showing that the prayers usual in these hymns form the conclusion.

<sup>b</sup>Cliff-tomb (No. 1) at Amarna, in the northern group (No. 7); published by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 100-102; sketches by Nestor l'Hôte in Amélineau, Histoire de la sépulture, Pls. 100-103; and my own copies.

<sup>c</sup>See § 1017.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 100, b.

on the shoulders of eighteen soldiers, and accompanied by fan- and shade-bearers. The fragmentary inscription shows that he is going to inspect the incoming foreign tribute of the twelfth year.

1015. Year 12, second month of the second season, day 8. Live my father, [Aton],<sup>a</sup> given life forever and ever; [live] the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, [Ikhnaton] and the Great King's-Wife, Nefernefruaton-Nofretete, living forever, at the arrival — — — — the tribute of Kharu ( $\overline{H}^3$ -rw) and Kush, the west and east — — united in one head, the isles [in the midst] of the sea — on the side —, the tribute — — — the great storehouse of Akhetaton for receiving the impost of —, [that he may give to] them the breath of life.

1016. As steward of the queen-mother Tiy, we see him in charge of a feast,<sup>b</sup> doubtless in her house, at which she entertains the king, his queen, and three daughters. On another occasion Huy stands in the door of a temple ushering into it the king, who is leading the queen-mother Tiy, followed by the princess Bekateton and the court. Before them are the words:

Conducting the great king's-wife, [—], Tiy, to show to her her "Shadow-of-Re."

1017. This sanctuary, called here "Shadow-of-Re,"<sup>c</sup> is the queen-mother's temple; for besides being called "hers" above, the titles of Aton in the same temple have twice appended to them the words:<sup>d</sup> "in the 'Shadow-of-Re' of [—],<sup>e</sup> the Great King's-Wife, Tiy." It is perhaps the smaller of the two temples<sup>f</sup> found by Petrie at Amarna. As the relief shows, it was magnificently equipped with colonnades, statues, and cultus materials. Another temple of Aton, erected by the king's-daughter Meretaton, is similarly

<sup>a</sup>Two cartouches, contents erased.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 100, c.

<sup>c</sup>See Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 213, 214.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 102.

<sup>e</sup>Uncertain title of the queen, also in the preceding inscription and in § 1014.

<sup>f</sup>Petrie, Amarna, 7 and Pl. XXXV.

referred to on an altar (?) block<sup>a</sup> dedicated by the princess. It refers to Aton "in the 'Shadow-of-Re' of the king's-daughter . . . . . Meretaton . . . . . in the chamber (called): 'Rejoicing-of-the-Aton' in the Aton-temple in Akhetaton."

1018. What was probably another sanctuary is referred to in an unpublished hymn<sup>b</sup> from the tomb of Merire:

The singers and musicians are rejoicing with joy in the broad-hall (wsh·t) of the house: "Shadow-of-Re," thy temple in Akhetaton, the place wherein thou art pleased.

This is probably the king's own official sanctuary, and "Shadow-of-Re"<sup>c</sup> is thus not a proper name, but a designation of any Aton-temple.<sup>d</sup> The temple of Aton at Heliopolis was called "Exaltation-of-Re-in-Heliopolis."<sup>e</sup> This was perhaps the first of the Aton-temples. Another Aton-temple erected at Hermonthis,<sup>f</sup> was called: "Horizon-of-Aton- (y<sup>3</sup> h<sup>w</sup>·t-n-ytn)-in-Hermonthis (ymw šm<sup>c</sup>)." Still another, in Memphis, was called simply: "The-House-of-the-Aton."<sup>g</sup>

<sup>a</sup>British Museum, 1000; from my own copy; published by Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 48; also Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 2d Ser., I, Pl. II; and Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XV, 200-11.

<sup>b</sup>My own copy; this passage is also found in the tomb of Apy, which fact enabled me to correct the Merire passage, which is corrupt. The Apy passage uses "h·t-bnbn" in place of "Shadow-of-Re," as given in Merire's tomb. (Piehl, Inscriptions, 1st Ser., Pl. CXCI = Bouriant, Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, I, 11, 12, ll. 6 and 7.) These passages show clearly that "Shadow-of-Re" is the name of the Akhetaton temple, and not of the god's statue, as supposed by some.

<sup>c</sup>Temples called "Shadow-of-Re" were found in the sacred districts of all the divinities of Egypt in the Twentieth Dynasty (IV, 363). Such a temple is known under Ramses II and also in the Twenty-first Dynasty; see Spiegelberg (Recueil, 17, 159, 160), who thinks these later ones were in the necropolis.

<sup>d</sup>On the Aton-temples at Amarna and elsewhere, see my article in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 106 ff. [Later—too late for insertion above, I have received the discussion of Davies (Amarna, II, 20-28) on the Amarna temples.]

<sup>e</sup>Ts-R<sup>c</sup>-m-Ymw, possibly also "Re-is-Exalted-in-Heliopolis" (Recueil, XVI, 123, CIX).

<sup>f</sup>Recueil, 23, 62.

<sup>g</sup>Spiegelberg, Rechnungen, Taf. XVI, l. 4; Mariette, Monuments divers, 56 = Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 54; fragments of inscriptions from this temple are in Mariette, ibid., 34, e.

REIGN OF TUTENKHAMON

TOMB OF HUY<sup>a</sup>

1019. So little is known of the immediate successors of Ikhnaton that the tomb of Huy, viceroy of Kush under Tutenkhamon, is of the greatest importance. We know that this king marked the transition from the Aton faith back to Amon, having changed his name from Tutenkhaton to Tutenkhamon;<sup>b</sup> but on returning to Thebes he extended the temple of Aton.<sup>c</sup> Nevertheless, he was forced by the priestly party to begin the restoration of the monuments defaced by Ikhnaton, and to recut the inscriptions and dedications to Amon, which they bore.<sup>d</sup> We might infer that the Egyptian power in Asia was not wholly broken by Ikhnaton's reform, in view of the rich tribute of Syria shown in the following document; but see the remarks below. That of Nubia naturally continued without interruption,<sup>e</sup> as the scenes in this tomb likewise indicate. These scenes fall into three series:

- I. Investiture of the Viceroy of Kush.
- II. Tribute of the North.
- III. Tribute of the South.

---

<sup>a</sup>Hewn into the cliff of Kurnet-Murraï on the west side at Thebes; published partially by Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 477-80; by Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 115-18; Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 301-6; Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1133-41; and Piehl, Inscriptions, Pls. 144, A-145; a good account of the scenes, Baedeker, Egypt, 288, 289. These scenes are among the most gorgeous and elaborate of the Empire.

<sup>b</sup>The old form, Tutenkhaton, occurs on a Berlin stela, No. 14197 (Ausführliches Verzeichniss des Berliner Museums, 128); see Erman, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 38, 112.

<sup>c</sup>Fragments of his extension are now rebuilt in the pylon of Harmhab at Karnak, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, a-b; Bouriant, Recueil, VI, 51 ff.; and Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1884, 41. The name of Eye is found on similar reused blocks also.

<sup>d</sup>See II, 896.

<sup>e</sup>See also II, 896.

I. INVESTITURE OF THE VICEROY OF KUSH<sup>a</sup>

1020. The interesting and important ceremony depicted in this series of scenes throws light on a number of obscure points in the administration of Kush by the Pharaohs. We here learn its limits, viz., from El Kab on the north to Napata on the south. For Napata appears (§ 1025) the important variant Karoy, thus locating this otherwise unknown region, designated by the Eighteenth Dynasty kings as their southern boundary.<sup>b</sup>

Scene

1021. King Tutenkhamon is enthroned at the left in a kiosk; before him are two lines of men in groups, representing successive incidents in the ceremony:

Reception of Huy

1022. An officer standing with back to the king receives Huy as he advances, accompanied by several courtiers. The inscriptions are these:

Over the Officer

The overseer of the White House; he says: "This is the seal<sup>c</sup> from the Pharaoh, L. P. H., who assigns to thee (the territory) from Nekhen to Napata."

Over Huy

1023. King's-son of Kush ———.

Words of Courtiers

"Thou art the Son of Amon ———;<sup>d</sup> he causes that the chiefs of all countries come to thee, bearing every good and choice thing of their countries."

<sup>a</sup>Scenes and inscriptions copied by Erman, and published from his notes by Brugsch (Thesaurus, V, 1133-41).

<sup>b</sup>This had been already noticed by Erman (Aegypten, 666), and was not new, as I supposed when I called attention to it in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 40, 108.

<sup>c</sup>Reading the my-sign as the usual determinative of hm, "seal;" see Piehl (Inscriptions, I, 112, n. 5).

<sup>d</sup>Cartouche with name illegible.

Investiture of Huy

1024. Huy stands before an officer who holds a small object, perhaps an étui containing the seal, which is to be delivered to Huy. No inscriptions. Immediately beside this scene appears an official who extends to Huy the seal of office. The inscriptions are:

Over Official

1025. [‘Take’] the seal of office, O king’s-son of [Kush].

Over Huy

The office is assigned to the king’s-son of Kush, Huy, from Nekhen to Karoy.

1026. Another scene shows Huy’s reception by his family and officials (among whom are the “inspectors” (rwḏ w)), as he issues from the palace.

Over Huy

The coming forth, favored, from the court, having been appointed in the presence of the Good God to be king’s-son and governor of the southern countries, Huy. He accounts Khenthennofer, included under his authority, to offer it to the Lord of the Two Lands, like every subject of his majesty.

II. TRIBUTE OF THE NORTH

1027. It is evident in this series that the administration of Kush now requires two viceroys, for Huy’s brother, Amenhotep, here appears as “King’s-son of Kush.” For reasons not evident in the inscriptions, these two viceroys of the South appear presenting to the king the tribute of the North. This circumstance looks suspicious. What should the viceroy of Kush have to do with the tribute of the North? Moreover, we know from the Amarna Letters that Egyptian power in Asia was at an end under Ikhnaton. One might be inclined to think, therefore, that the frequent representation of the tribute of the South and North in earlier Theban tombs of the Eighteenth Dynasty induced Huy to add the tribute of the North as a pendant to the tribute of the South which he actually collected. But it should not be forgotten that one of Ikhnaton's successors carried on war in Asia (III, 20), and this can hardly have been any other than Tutenkhamon. He may thus have been able to collect some northern tribute.

Scene

1028. King Tutenkhamon is enthroned at the left under a splendid kiosk. Before him bows the viceroy of Kush, Huy, behind whom comes a second viceroy of Kush, Huy's brother, Amenhotep, bearing gifts. These two officials are introducing four lines of Asiatics who bring a magnificent array of tribute, chiefly gold and silver vessels, costly stones, and horses.

1029. The following inscriptions accompany the scene:

Over Huy

King's-son of Kush, governor of the south countries, fan-bearer at the right of the king, Huy (Hwy), triumphant; he says: "May thy father, Amon, protect thee during myriads of jubilees (hb-sd). May he give to thee eternity as king of the Two Lands, everlastingness as ruler of the Nine Bows. Thou art Re, and thy emanation is his emanation. Thou art heaven,<sup>a</sup> abiding like its four pillars, the earth sits beneath thee, because of thy permanence, O good ruler."

With Amenhotep

1030. Bringing in all the tribute to the Lord of the Two Lands, the presents of Retenu (Rtmw) the wretched; by the king's-messenger to every country, the king's-son of Kush, governor of the southern countries, Amenhotep, triumphant.

---

<sup>a</sup>Meaning, as enduring as heaven.

With Vessels

1031. Vessels of all the choicest of the best of their countries, in silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, every splendid costly stone.

With an Official Receiving Asiatics

1032. All the chiefs of the 'north' countries '— —'; they say: "How great is thy fame, O Good God! how mighty thy strength! there is none living in ignorance of thee."

The chiefs of [all countries] that knew not Egypt since the time of the god, are craving peace from his majesty that it may not be. "Give to us the breath which thou givest, etc., (as below)."

Over Asiatics

1033. The chiefs of Retenu (Rnw) the Upper, who knew not Egypt since the time of the god, are craving peace from his majesty. They say: "Give to us the breath which thou givest, O 'lord'. Tell us<sup>a</sup> thy victories; and there shall be no revolvers in thy time; but every land shall be in peace."

III. TRIBUTE OF THE SOUTH<sup>b</sup>

1034. In this series the two viceroys present to the king the tribute of the lands under them. This ceremony took place in the temple, from which Huy then goes forth to embark for Nubia, and is received on his dahabiyeh by his local officials, who have accompanied him to Thebes.

Scene

1035. King Tutenkhamon is enthroned as in the previous scene, with Huy before him. In the king's presence a magnificent array of tribute; chiefly commercial gold and silver, gold and silver vessels, a chariot, shields, and furniture.

<sup>a</sup>The two n's (dative?) are probably an error for one, viz., "that we may tell, etc."

<sup>b</sup>See Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 301-6; where the inscriptions are much more accurate than in the folio of Lepsius.

A second part of the scene shows Huy receiving three lines of Negroes, and a line of Egyptians below. In the top line of Negroes are children of the Kushite chiefs, among them a princess in a chariot drawn by oxen. The negro chiefs wear Egyptian clothing;<sup>a</sup> they bring similar tribute, and also curiously decorated cattle. Behind all, we see six Nile boats landing. With the exception of the king's names, the inscriptions are confined to the second part of the scene.

Before Huy

1036. The arrival in peace — from the house of the hereditary prince, count, (mry-ntr-) priest, king's-son of Kush, Huy [having received] the favor of the Lord of the Two Lands, [who ordered] gold [to be put] upon his neck and his arms. "How many are the<sup>3</sup> examples<sup>b</sup> of thy favor, O Nebkheprure (Tutenkhamon)! One mentions them (one) time (each) by its name; they are too numerous to put them into writing.

Over the Upper Line of Negroes

1037. The chief of Miam<sup>c</sup> (My<sup>c</sup> m), good ruler.<sup>d</sup> The chiefs of Wayet (w<sup>3</sup> y' t).<sup>e</sup> The children of the chiefs of all countries.

Over the Middle Line of Negroes

The chiefs of Kush, they say: "Hail to thee, O king of Egypt, Sun of the Nine Bows! Give to us the breath which thou givest. Men live by thy love."<sup>f</sup>

Over the Egyptians

1038. The coming forth of the people of the king's-son, to receive him, when he received the favor of the Lord of the Two Lands; (<sup>3</sup>from<sup>3</sup>)

<sup>a</sup>Under Thutmose III they still wore native costume; see tomb of Rekhmire.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "Examples upon very many examples, and great is thy favor, etc."

<sup>c</sup>Country around Ibrim; see tomb of Penno (IV, 474).

<sup>d</sup>The presence of these chiefs shows that the country was still under its native rulers, and that the Egyptian administrative officers were not in sole control.

<sup>e</sup>As in Champollion (Notices descriptives, I, 478).

<sup>f</sup>Very much the same inscription is over the lower row of Negroes (Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 303).

the house<sup>a</sup> of the king's-son of Kush, king's-scribe, Amenhotep — — living again.

They say: "O ruler, L. P. H., good, mighty in creation, for whom the sun rises; many are the things [which] [his two hands] [accomplish]."

Over the Boats

Arrival from Kush bearing this good tribute of all the choicest of the best of the south countries. Landing at the city of the South (Thebes) by the king's-son of Kush, Huy.

Scene

1039. Huy leans on his staff; behind him are the members of his family; before him a richly decorated dahabiyeh with sail spread, and another with sail furled, bearing a chariot and horses. On the boats approaching Huy, are four rows of officials under Huy, followed by sailors and women with tambourines. The inscriptions show that the presentation ceremonies depicted above have just been completed in the temple, and Huy is now doubtless embarking for his post. The inscriptions are these:

Over Huy

1040. The coming from the temple of Amon after the pleasing ceremonies before him, to offer this land to thee;<sup>b</sup> by the hereditary prince, count, sole companion, great in [his office], great [in his ra]nk, great —, — king's-scribe, ——— Amenhotep — —.

Over Huy's Family

The inscriptions are nearly vanished, but the words: "His son" (twice); "his mother," and "his sister," may be distinguished.

---

<sup>a</sup>The door of the house from which they come is seen behind them; on it are the cartouches of Tutenkhamon.

<sup>b</sup>The change of person is difficult.

Over Officials

1041. 1. Deputy of Kush. 2. Mayor of Khammat (Soleb) 3. Overseer of cattle. 4. ———. 5. Deputy of the fortres: (called): "Neb[khepr]ure<sup>a</sup>-Satisfier-of-the-Gods,"<sup>b</sup> Penno. 6. Mayor of "Satisfier-of-the-Gods." 7. His brother, 'prophet' of —<sup>c</sup> [in] the fortress; "Satisfier-of-the-Gods," Mermose; 8. Priest of —,<sup>c</sup> residing in the fortress: "Satisfier-of-the-Gods." 9. ———.

---

<sup>a</sup>Tutenkhamon's throne-name.

<sup>b</sup>S' htp-nr'w.

<sup>c</sup>Cartouche.

REIGN OF EYE

LANDMARK OF EYE<sup>a</sup>

1042. Documents of this king are rare. This stela shows the king, in relief at the top, offering flowers to "Hathor, mistress of Hotep." The exclusive worship of Aton had therefore been abandoned by him at this date, year 3. The inscription records a gift of land by the king to one of his officials, whose name is no longer visible, and to the latter's wife, Mutnezmet.

1043. Year 3, third month of the third season (eleventh month), first day, of King Eye,<sup>b</sup> given life, while he was in Memphis.

His majesty commanded to endow him with lands, a reward for the king's —, —,<sup>c</sup> and for his wife, Mutnezmet. It was laid out in the district called: "Field-of-the-Kheta," in the fields of the "House-of-Okheperkere (Thutmose I)" and the "House-of-Menkheprure (Thutmose IV)," a field of 154 stat.

The south is the "House-of-Menkheprure (Thutmose IV);" the north is the "House-of-Ptah" and the "House-of-Okheperkere (Thutmose I)," between his 1—1; the west is [the "House-of-Okheperkere (Thutmose I)"];<sup>d</sup> the east is the "House-of-Menkheprure (Thutmose IV)" between his 1—1.

There came<sup>e</sup> the chief king's-scribe, the steward, Ramose; the scribe, Merire; — Thay. Command was given to the — attendant, Re, to transfer it.<sup>f</sup>

---

<sup>a</sup>Stela now in Cairo; found by the Great Pyramid, in the chapel of Pesibkhenno; published by Daressy (Recueil, 16, 123) and from Daressy by Spiegelberg (Rechnungen, 36).

<sup>b</sup>Full fivefold titulary is used in the original.

<sup>c</sup>The lacuna contained the remainder of a royal official's title, and his name, which latter ended in nj.

<sup>d</sup>The land, as already stated, lay in the fields of the House-of-Thutmose I and the House-of-Thutmose IV; the southern and eastern boundaries were formed by the House-of-Thutmose IV, and the northern boundary by the House-of-Thutmose I. Hence it is probable that the western boundary was also formed by the House-of-Thutmose I, and that Daressy has overlooked it in his copy, owing to its identity with the preceding boundary.

<sup>e</sup>As witnesses? Spiegelberg renders "those who came," but the nt which he renders as the relative pronoun occurs above, with the first, "his 1—1 (nwy)," and must therefore belong to nwy here.

<sup>f</sup>The land.

Class 232

Book B42

Library of Adelbert College V. 3

of Western Reserve University, Cleveland, O.

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT

ANCIENT RECORDS

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF WILLIAM RAINNEY HARPER

---

First Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF ASSYRIA AND BABYLONIA
EDITED BY ROBERT FRANCIS HARPER

Second Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT
EDITED BY JAMES HENRY BREASTED

Third Series

ANCIENT RECORDS OF PALESTINE, PHENICIA
AND SYRIA
EDITED BY WILLIAM RAINNEY HARPER

ANCIENT RECORDS OF EGYPT

HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS

FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PERSIAN CONQUEST, COLLECTED
EDITED AND TRANSLATED WITH COMMENTARY

BY

JAMES HENRY BREASTED, PH.D.

PROFESSOR OF EGYPTOLOGY AND ORIENTAL HISTORY
IN THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

VOLUME III

THE NINETEENTH DYNASTY

CHICAGO
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS
1906

LONDON: LUZAC & CO.

LEIPZIG: OTTO HARRASSOWITZ

COPYRIGHT 1906, BY
THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
Published May 1906

A. C. S.

Composed and Printed By
The University of Chicago Press
Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

VOLUME I

	§§
THE DOCUMENTARY SOURCES OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY . . . . .	1-37
CHRONOLOGY . . . . .	38-57
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE . . . . .	58-75
THE PALERMO STONE: THE FIRST TO THE FIFTH DYNASTIES	76-167
I. Predynastic Kings . . . . .	90
II. First Dynasty . . . . .	91-116
III. Second Dynasty . . . . .	117-144
IV. Third Dynasty . . . . .	145-148
V. Fourth Dynasty . . . . .	149-152
VI. Fifth Dynasty . . . . .	153-167
THE THIRD DYNASTY . . . . .	168-175
Reign of Snefru . . . . .	168-175
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	168-169
Biography of Methen . . . . .	170-175
THE FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	176-212
Reign of Khufu . . . . .	176-187
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	176
Inventory Stela . . . . .	177-180
Examples of Dedication Inscriptions by Sons . . . . .	181-187
Reign of Khafre . . . . .	188-209
Stela of Mertityôtes . . . . .	188-189
Will of Prince Nekure, Son of King Khafre . . . . .	190-199
Testamentary Enactment of an Unknown Official, Establishing the Endowment of His Tomb by the Pyramid of Khafre . . . . .	200-209
Reign of Menkure . . . . .	210-212
Debhen's Inscription, Recounting King Menkure's Erec- tion of a Tomb for Him . . . . .	210-212
THE FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	213-281
Reign of Userkaf . . . . .	213-235

	§§
Testamentary Enactment of Nekonekh . . . . .	213-215
I. The Priesthood of Hathor . . . . .	216-219
II. The Mortuary Priesthood of Khenuka . . . . .	220-222
III. Nekonekh's Will . . . . .	223-225
IV. Nekonekh's Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	226-227
V. Nekonekh's Mortuary Statue . . . . .	228-230
Testamentary Enactment of Senuonekh, Regulating His Mortuary Priesthood . . . . .	231-235
Reign of Sahure . . . . .	236-241
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	236
Tomb Stela of Nenekhsekhmet . . . . .	237-240
Tomb Inscription of Persen . . . . .	241
Reign of Neferirkere . . . . .	242-249
Tomb Inscriptions of the Vizier, Chief Judge, and Chief Architect Weshptah . . . . .	242-249
Reign of Nuserre . . . . .	250-262
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	250
Tomb Inscriptions of Hotephyakhet . . . . .	251-253
Inscription of Ptahshepses . . . . .	254-262
Reign of Menkuhor . . . . .	263
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	263
Reign of Dedkere-Isesi . . . . .	264-281
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	264-267
Tomb Inscriptions of Senezemib, Chief Judge, Vizier, and Chief Architect . . . . .	268-277
Mortuary Inscription of Nezemib . . . . .	278-279
Tomb Inscription of the Nomarch Henku . . . . .	280-281
THE SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	282-390
Reign of Teti . . . . .	282-294
Inscriptions of Sabu, Also Called Ibebi . . . . .	282-286
Inscription of Sabu, Also Called Thety . . . . .	287-288
Inscription of an Unknown Builder . . . . .	289-290
Inscription of Uni . . . . .	291-294
I. Career under Teti (l. 1) . . . . .	292-294
II. Career under Pepi I (ll. 2-32) . . . . .	306-315
III. Career under Mernere (ll. 32-50) . . . . .	319-324
Reign of Pepi I . . . . .	295-315
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	295-301

TABLE OF CONTENTS

vii

	§§
I. The King's Inscriptions . . . . .	296
II. The Expedition's Inscription . . . . .	297-298
III. Chief Architect's Inscription . . . . .	299
IV. Inscription of the Treasurer of the God Ikhi . . . . .	300-301
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	302-303
Inscription in the Hatnub Quarry . . . . .	304-305
Inscription of Uni: II Career under Pepi I . . . . .	306-315
Reign of Mernere . . . . .	316-336
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	316-318
I. Northern Inscription . . . . .	317
II. Southern Inscription . . . . .	318
Inscription of Uni: III Career under Mernere . . . . .	319-324
Inscriptions of Harkhuf . . . . .	325-336
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued) . . . . .	350-354
Reign of Pepi II . . . . .	337-385
Conveyance of Land by Idu, Called Also Seneni . . . . .	337-338
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	339-343
Stela of the Two Queens, Enekhnes-Merire . . . . .	344-349
Inscriptions of Harkhuf (continued from § 336) . . . . .	350-354
Letter of Pepi II . . . . .	350-354
I. Dates and Introduction . . . . .	351
II. Acknowledgment of Harkhuf's Letter . . . . .	351
III. Harkhuf's Rewards . . . . .	352
IV. King's Instructions . . . . .	353-354
Inscriptions of Pepi-Nakht . . . . .	355-360
Inscriptions of Khui . . . . .	361
Inscriptions of Sebni . . . . .	362-374
Inscriptions of Ibi . . . . .	375-379
Inscription of Zau . . . . .	380-385
Reign of Ity . . . . .	386-387
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	386-387
Reign of Imhotep . . . . .	388-390
THE NINTH AND TENTH DYNASTIES . . . . .	391-414
Inscriptions of Siut . . . . .	391-414
I. Inscription of Tefibi . . . . .	393-397
II. Inscription of Kheti I . . . . .	398-404
III. Inscription of Kheti II . . . . .	405-414

	§§
THE ELEVENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	415-459
The Nomarch, Intef . . . . .	419-420
Mortuary Stela . . . . .	419-420
Reign of Horus-Wahenekh-Intef I . . . . .	421-423
Royal Tomb Stela . . . . .	421-423
Reign of Horus-Nakhtneb-Tepnefer-Intef II . . . . .	423A-423G
Stela of Thethi . . . . .	423A-423G
Reign of Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I . . . . .	423H
Temple Fragments from Gebelen . . . . .	423H
Reigns of Intef III and Nibkhrure-Mentuhotep II . . . . .	424-426
Relief near Assuan . . . . .	424-426
Reign of Senekhkere-Mentuhotep III . . . . .	427-433
Hammamat Inscription of Henu . . . . .	427-433
Reign of Nibtowere-Mentuhotep IV . . . . .	434-459
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	434-459
I. The First Wonder . . . . .	435-438
II. The Official Tablet . . . . .	439-443
III. The Commander's Tablet . . . . .	444-448
IV. The Second Wonder . . . . .	449-451
V. Completion of the Work . . . . .	452-456
Stela of Eti . . . . .	457-459
THE TWELFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	460-750
Chronology of Twelfth Dynasty . . . . .	460-462
Reign of Amenemhet I . . . . .	463-497
Inscription of Khnumhotep I . . . . .	463-465
Hammamat Inscription of Intef . . . . .	466-468
Inscription of Nessumontu . . . . .	469-471
Inscription of Korusko . . . . .	472-473
The Teaching of Amenemhet . . . . .	474-483
Dedication Inscription . . . . .	484-485
The Tale of Sinuhe . . . . .	486-497
Reign of Sesostri I . . . . .	498-593
The Building Inscription of the Temple of Heliopolis . . . . .	498-506
Inscription of Meri . . . . .	507-509
Wadi Halfa Inscription of Mentuhotep . . . . .	510-514
Inscription of Amenemhet (Ameni) . . . . .	515-523
Stela of Ikudidi . . . . .	524-528
Inscription of Intefyoker . . . . .	529

	§§
Inscriptions of Mentuhotep . . . . .	530-534
The Contracts of Hepzefi . . . . .	535-538
I. First Contract . . . . .	539-543
II. Second Contract . . . . .	544-548
III. Third Contract . . . . .	549-553
IV. Fourth Contract . . . . .	554-558
V. Fifth Contract . . . . .	559-567
VI. Sixth Contract . . . . .	568-571
VII. Seventh Contract . . . . .	572-575
VIII. Eighth Contract . . . . .	576-581
IX. Ninth Contract . . . . .	582-588
X. Tenth Contract . . . . .	589-593
Reign of Amenemhet II . . . . .	594-613
Inscription of Simontu . . . . .	594-598
Inscription of Sihathor . . . . .	599-605
Sinai Inscription . . . . .	606
Stela of Khentemseti . . . . .	607-613
Reign of Sesostri II . . . . .	614-639
Inscription of Hapu . . . . .	614-618
Inscription of Khnumhotep II . . . . .	619-639
Reign of Sesostri III . . . . .	640-748
The Conquest of Nubia . . . . .	640-672
I. The Canal Inscriptions . . . . .	642-649
I. First Inscription . . . . .	643-645
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	646-648
II. The Elephantine Inscription . . . . .	649-650
III. The First Semneh Stela . . . . .	651-652
IV. The Second Semneh Stela . . . . .	653-660
V. Inscription of Ikhernofret . . . . .	661-670
VI. Inscription of Sisetet . . . . .	671-673
See also . . . . .	676 ff. and 687
Hammamat Inscription . . . . .	674-675
Stela of Sebek-Khu, called Zaa . . . . .	676-687
Inscriptions of Thuthotep . . . . .	688-706
Hammamat Inscriptions . . . . .	707-712
Inscriptions of Sinai . . . . .	713-738
I. Wadi Maghara . . . . .	713-723
I. Inscriptions of Khenemsu . . . . .	714-716

	§§
II. Inscription of Harnakht . . . . .	717-718
III. Inscription of Sebekdidi . . . . .	719-720
IV. Inscription of Ameni . . . . .	721-723
II. Sarbût el-Khadem . . . . .	724-738
I. Inscription of Sebek-hir-hab . . . . .	725-727
II. Inscription of Ptahwer . . . . .	728-729
III. Inscription of Amenemhet . . . . .	730-732
IV. Inscription of Harurre . . . . .	733-738
Turra Inscription . . . . .	739-742
Inscription of Schetepibre . . . . .	743-748
Reign of Amenemhet IV . . . . .	749-750
Kummeh Inscription . . . . .	749
Sinai Inscriptions . . . . .	750
FROM THE THIRTEENTH DYNASTY TO THE HYKSOS . . . . .	751-787
Reign of Sekhemre-Khutowe . . . . .	751-752
Records of Nile-Levels . . . . .	751-752
Reign of Neferhotep . . . . .	753-772
Great Abydos Stela . . . . .	753-765
Boundary Stela . . . . .	766-772
Reign of Nubkheprure-Intef . . . . .	773-780
Coptos Decree . . . . .	773-780
Reign of Khenzer . . . . .	781-787
Inscriptions of Ameniseneb . . . . .	781-787

VOLUME II

	§§
THE EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-1043
Reign of Ahmose I . . . . .	1-37
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	1-3
I. Career under Ahmose I (ll. 1-24) . . . . .	4-16
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-39
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	17-25
I. Ahmose's Campaigns [Continued § 40] . . . . .	18-20
II. Ahmose's Rewards . . . . .	21-24
III. Ahmose's Summary . . . . .	25

	§§
Quarry Inscription . . . . .	26-28
Karnak Stela . . . . .	29-32
Building Inscription . . . . .	33-37
Reign of Amenhotep I . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	38-39
II. Career under Amenhotep I (ll. 24-29) . . . . .	38-53
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	40-42
Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	40-42
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	43-46
I. Career under Amenhotep I . . . . .	44-46
II. Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	99-108
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Stela of Harmini . . . . .	47-48
Stela of Keres . . . . .	49-52
Reign of Thutmose I . . . . .	54-114
Coronation Decree . . . . .	54-60
Biographical Inscription of Thure . . . . .	61-66
Tombos Stela . . . . .	67-73
Inscriptions at the First Cataract . . . . .	74-77
I. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	75
II. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	76
III. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	77
Inscription of Ahmose, Son of Ebana . . . . .	78-82
III. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 29-39) . . . . .	78-82
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	83-85
Career under Thutmose I . . . . .	83-85
Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	86-89
Abydos Stela . . . . .	90-98
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	99-108
II. Career under Thutmose I (ll. 4-14) . . . . .	99-108
Stela of Yuf . . . . .	109-114
Reign of Thutmose II . . . . .	115-127
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	115-118
III. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	115-118
Assuan Inscription . . . . .	119-122
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekbet . . . . .	123-124
IV. Career under Thutmose II . . . . .	123-124

	§§
Campaign in Syria . . . . .	125
The Ebony Shrine of Der el-Bahri . . . . .	126-127
Reign of Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	128-390
Introduction . . . . .	128-130
Inscription of the Coronation; Buildings and Offerings	131-166
Semneh Temple Inscriptions . . . . .	167
I. Renewal of Sesostris III's List of Offerings . . . . .	168-172
II. Dedication to Dedun and Sesostris III . . . . .	173-176
Biography of Nebwawi . . . . .	177
I. The Statue Inscription . . . . .	178-183
II. Abydos Stela . . . . .	184-186
The Birth of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	187-191
I. The Council of the Gods . . . . .	192
II. Interviews Between Amon and Thoth . . . . .	193-194
III. Amon with Queen Ahmose . . . . .	195-198
IV. Interview Between Amon and Khnum . . . . .	199-201
V. Khnum Fashions the Child . . . . .	202-203
VI. Interview Between Thoth and Queen Ahmose . . . . .	204
VII. Queen Ahmose is Led to Confinement . . . . .	205
VIII. The Birth . . . . .	206-207
IX. Presentation of the Child to Amon . . . . .	208
X. Council of Amon and Hathor . . . . .	209
XI. The Nursing of the Child . . . . .	210
XII. Second Interview of Amon and Thoth . . . . .	211
XIII. The Final Scene . . . . .	212
Statue of Enebni . . . . .	213
Vase Inscription . . . . .	214
The Coronation of Queen Hatshepsut . . . . .	215
I. The Purification . . . . .	216
II. Amon presents the Child to All the Gods . . . . .	217-220
III. The Northern Journey . . . . .	221-225
IV. Coronation by Atum . . . . .	226-227
V. Reception of the Crowns and the Names . . . . .	228-230
VI. Proclamation as King before Amon . . . . .	231
VII. Coronation before the Court . . . . .	232-239
VIII. Second Purification . . . . .	240-241
IX. Concluding Ceremonies . . . . .	242
Southern Pylon Inscription at Karnak . . . . .	243-245

	§§
The Punt Reliefs . . . . .	246-295
I. Departure of the Fleet . . . . .	252-253
II. Reception in Punt . . . . .	254-258
III. The Traffic . . . . .	259-262
IV. Loading the Vessels . . . . .	263-265
V. The Return Voyage . . . . .	266
VI. Presentation of the Tribute to the Queen by the Chiefs of Punt, Irem and Nemyew . . . . .	267-269
VII. The Queen Offers the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	270-272
VIII. Weighing and Measuring the Gifts to Amon . . . . .	273-282
IX. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition before Amon . . . . .	283-288
X. Formal Announcement of the Success of the Expedition to the Court . . . . .	289-295
Inscription of the Speos Artemidos . . . . .	296-303
The Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	304-307
I. Shaft Inscriptions; Middle Columns . . . . .	308-311
II. Shaft Inscriptions; Side Columns . . . . .	312-313
III. Base Inscription . . . . .	314-321
Reliefs of Transportation of Obelisks . . . . .	322
I. Transport . . . . .	323-329
II. Reception in Thebes . . . . .	330-335
III. Dedication of the Obelisks . . . . .	336
Rock Inscription in Wadi Maghara . . . . .	337
Building Inscription of Western Thebes . . . . .	338-339
Biography of Ineni . . . . .	340-343
IV. Career under Thutmose III and Hatshepsut . . . . .	340-343
Biography of Ahmose-Pen-Nekhet . . . . .	344
Conclusion of Summary . . . . .	344
Inscriptions of Senmut . . . . .	345-368
I. Inscriptions on the Karnak Statue . . . . .	349-358
II. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	359-362
III. Inscriptions on the Berlin Statue . . . . .	363-368
Inscription of Thutiy . . . . .	369-378
Inscriptions of Puemre . . . . .	379
I. Statue of Inscription . . . . .	380-381
II. Tomb Inscriptions . . . . .	382-387
Inscriptions of Hapuseneb . . . . .	388-390

	§§
Reign of Thutmose III . . . . .	391-779
The Annals . . . . .	391-405
The Annals: Conspectus of Campaigns . . . . .	406
I. Introduction . . . . .	407
II. First Campaign (Year 23) . . . . .	408-443
Wadi Halfa Inscription . . . . .	411-437
Fragment on the Siege of Megiddo . . . . .	438-443
III. Second Campaign (Year 24) . . . . .	444-449
IV. Third Campaign (Year 25) . . . . .	450-452
V. Fourth Campaign . . . . .	453
VI. Fifth Campaign (Year 29) . . . . .	454-462
VII. Sixth Campaign (Year 30) . . . . .	463-467
VIII. Seventh Campaign (Year 31) . . . . .	468-475
IX. Eighth Campaign (Year 33) . . . . .	476-487
X. Ninth Campaign (Year 34) . . . . .	488-495
XI. Tenth Campaign (Year 35) . . . . .	496-503
XII. Eleventh Campaign (Year 36) . . . . .	504
XIII. Twelfth Campaign (Year 37) . . . . .	505
XIV. Thirteenth Campaign (Year 38) . . . . .	506-515
XV. Fourteenth Campaign (Year 39) . . . . .	516-519
XVI. Fifteenth Campaign . . . . .	520-523
XVII. Sixteenth Campaign . . . . .	524-527
XVIII. Seventeenth Campaign . . . . .	528-539
XIX. Conclusion . . . . .	540
Feasts and Offerings from the Conquests . . . . .	541-573
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	574-592
Fragments of Karnak Pylon VII . . . . .	593-598
Great Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	599-608
Building Inscription of the Karnak Ptah-Temple . . . . .	609-622
Obelisks . . . . .	623
I. Karnak Obelisks . . . . .	624-625
II. Lateran Obelisks . . . . .	626-628
III. Constantinople Obelisk . . . . .	629-631
IV. London Obelisk . . . . .	632-633
V. New York Obelisk . . . . .	634-636
Medinet Habu Building Inscriptions . . . . .	637-641
Heliopolis Building Inscriptions . . . . .	642-643
Nubian Wars . . . . .	644-654

	§§
I. Canal Inscription . . . . .	649-650
II. Inscriptions of Nehi, Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	651-652
III. Offerings from the South Countries . . . . .	653-654
Hymn of Victory . . . . .	655-662
Tomb of Rekhmire . . . . .	663-759
I. Appointment of Rekhmire as Vizier . . . . .	665-670
II. Duties of the Vizier . . . . .	671-711
III. The Sitting of the Vizier . . . . .	712-713
IV. Reception of Petitions . . . . .	714-715
V. Inspection of Taxes of Upper Egypt . . . . .	716
A. Above Thebes . . . . .	717-728
B. Below Thebes . . . . .	729-745
VI. Reception of Dues to the Amon-Temple . . . . .	746-751
VII. Inspection of Daily Offerings and of Monuments . . . . .	752
VIII. Inspection of Craftsmen . . . . .	753-755
IX. Inspection of Sculptors and Builders . . . . .	756-759
X. Reception of Foreign Tribute . . . . .	760-761
XI. Accession of Amenhotep II . . . . .	762
Stela of Intef the Herald . . . . .	763-771
Tomb of Menkheperreseneb . . . . .	772-776
Stela of Nibamon . . . . .	777-779
Reign of Amenhotep II . . . . .	780
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	780-798
I. Karnak Stela . . . . .	781-790
II. Amâda and Elephantine Stelæ . . . . .	791-798
III. Karnak Chapel . . . . .	798A
Turra Inscription . . . . .	799-800
Tomb of Amenken . . . . .	801-802
Karnak Building Inscription . . . . .	803-806
Biography of Amenemhab . . . . .	807-809
Reign of Thutmose IV . . . . .	810-840
Sphinx Stela . . . . .	810-815
Asiatic Campaign . . . . .	816-822
Konosso Inscription . . . . .	823-829
Lateran Obelisk . . . . .	830-838
Stela of Pe'aoke . . . . .	839-840
Reign of Amenhotep III . . . . .	841-931
Birth and Coronation . . . . .	841

	§§
Nubian War . . . . .	842-855
I. Stela at First Cataract . . . . .	843-844
II. Stela of Konosso . . . . .	845
III. Bubastis Inscription . . . . .	846-850
IV. Semneh Inscription . . . . .	851-855
Tablet of Victory . . . . .	856-859
The Commemorative Scarabs . . . . .	860-869
I. Marriage with Tiy . . . . .	861-862
II. Wild Cattle Hunt . . . . .	863-864
III. Ten Years Lion-Hunting . . . . .	865
IV. Marriage with Kirgipa . . . . .	866-867
V. Construction of a Pleasure Lake . . . . .	868-869
Jubilee Celebrations . . . . .	870-874
Quarry and Mine Inscriptions . . . . .	875-877
Building Inscription . . . . .	878-892
I. Introduction (ll. 1-2) . . . . .	882
II. Temple of the (Memnon) Colossi (ll. 2-10) . . . . .	883-885
III. Luxor Temple and Connected Buildings . . . . .	886-887
IV. Sacred Barge of Amon (ll. 16-20) . . . . .	888
V. Third Pylon of Karnak (ll. 20-23) . . . . .	889
VI. Temple of Soleb (ll. 23-26) . . . . .	890
VII. Hymn of Amon to the King (ll. 26-31) . . . . .	891-892
Building Inscriptions of the Soleb Temple . . . . .	893-898
Great Inscription of the Third Karnak Pylon . . . . .	899-903
Dedication Stela . . . . .	904-910
I. Speech of the King (ll. 1-13) . . . . .	905-908
II. Speech of Amon (ll. 14-20) . . . . .	909
III. Speech of the Divine Ennead (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	910
Inscriptions of Amenhotep, Son of Hapi . . . . .	911-927
I. Statue Inscription . . . . .	913-920
II. Mortuary Temple Edict . . . . .	921-927
Statue of Nebnefer . . . . .	928-931
Reign of Ikhnaton . . . . .	932-1018
Quarry Inscription at Silsileh . . . . .	932-935
Tomb of the Vizier Ramose . . . . .	936-948
The Tell El-Amarna Landmarks . . . . .	949-972
Assuan Tablet of the Architect Bek . . . . .	973-976
The Tell El-Amarna Tombs . . . . .	977-1018

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xvii

	§§
Tomb of Merire II . . . . .	981
Tomb of Merire I . . . . .	982-988
Tomb of Eye . . . . .	989-996
Tomb of Mai . . . . .	997-1003
Tomb of Ahmose . . . . .	1004-1008
Tomb of Tutu . . . . .	1009-1013
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1014-1018
Reign of Tutenkhamon . . . . .	1019-1041
Tomb of Huy . . . . .	1019-1041
I. Investiture of the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	1020-1026
II. Tribute of the North . . . . .	1027-1033
III. Tribute of the South . . . . .	1034-1041
Reign of Eye . . . . .	1042-1043

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Punt Reliefs . . . . .	105

VOLUME III

	§§
THE NINETEENTH DYNASTY . . . . .	1-651
Reign of Harmhab . . . . .	1-73
Tomb of Harmhab . . . . .	1-21
I. Leyden Fragments . . . . .	2-9
I. Stela with Adoration Scene . . . . .	2-5
II. Reward of Gold . . . . .	6-9
II. Vienna Fragment . . . . .	10-12
III. Alexandria Fragments . . . . .	13
IV. British Museum Fragments . . . . .	14-19
I. Doorposts . . . . .	14-17
II. Stela with Three Hymns . . . . .	18-19
V. Cairo Fragments . . . . .	20-21
Coronation Inscription . . . . .	22-32
Graffiti in the Theban Necropolis . . . . .	32A-32C
The Wars of Harmhab . . . . .	33-44
I. In the North . . . . .	34-36
II. In the South . . . . .	37-44
Edict of Harmhab . . . . .	45-67

	§§
I. Introduction (ll. 1-10) . . . . .	49
II. Introduction: The King's Zeal for the Relief of the People (ll. 10-14) . . . . .	50
III. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Royal Breweries and Kitchens (ll. 14-17)	51
IV. Enactment Against Robbing the Poor of Wood Due the Pharaoh (ll. 17-18) . . . . .	52
V. Enactment Against Exacting Dues from a Poor Man Thus Robbed (ll. 18-20) . . . . .	53
VI. Against Robbing the Poor of Dues for the Harem or the Gods by the Soldiers (ll. 20-24) . . . . .	54
VII. Enactments Against Unlawful Appropriation of Slave Service (ll. 22-24) . . . . .	55
VIII. Enactment Against Stealing of Hides by the Soldiers (ll. 25-28) . . . . .	56-57
IX. Against Connivance of Dishonest Inspectors with Thievish Tax-Collectors, for a Share of the Booty (ll. 28-32) . . . . .	58
X. Enactment Against Stealing Vegetables Under Pretense of Collecting Taxes (ll. 32-35) . . . . .	59
XI. Enactments too Fragmentary for Analysis (ll. 35- 39) and Right Side (ll. 1, 2) . . . . .	60-62
XII. Narrative of the King's Reforms, Containing Also an Enactment Against Corrupt Judges (ll. 3-7) . . . . .	63-65
XIII. Narrative of the King's Monthly Audiences and Largesses (ll. 7-10) . . . . .	66
XIV. Laudation of the King, and Conclusion (Left Side) . . . . .	67
Tomb of Neferhotep . . . . .	68-73
Reign of Ramses I . . . . .	74-79
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	74-79
Reign of Seti I . . . . .	80-250
Karnak Reliefs . . . . .	80-156
Scene 1. March through Southern Palestine . . . . .	83-84
Scene 2. Battle with the Shasu . . . . .	85-86
Scene 3. Capture of Pekanán . . . . .	87-88
Scene 4. Capture of Yenoam . . . . .	89-90

	§§
Scene 5. Submission of the Chiefs of Lebanon . . . . .	91-94
Scenes 6 and 7. Binding and Carrying Away Prisoners . . . . .	95-97
Scene 8. Reception in Egypt . . . . .	98-103
Scene 9. Presentation of Shasu Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	104-108
Scene 10. Presentation of Syrian Prisoners and Precious Vessels to Amon . . . . .	109-112
Scene 11. Slaying Prisoners Before Amon . . . . .	113-119
Scene 12. First Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	120-122
Scene 13. Second Battle with the Libyans . . . . .	123-132
Scene 14. Return from Libyan War . . . . .	133-134
Scene 15. Presentation of Libyan Prisoners and Spoil to Amon . . . . .	135-139
Scene 16. Capture of Kadesh . . . . .	140-141
Scene 17. Battle with the Hittites . . . . .	142-144
Scene 18. Carrying off Hittite Prisoners . . . . .	145-148
Scene 19. Presentation of Hittite Spoil and Prisoners to Amon . . . . .	149-152
Scene 20. Slaying Prisoners before Amon . . . . .	153-156
Wadi Halfa Stela . . . . .	157-161
Inscriptions of Redesiyeh . . . . .	162-198
I. First Inscription . . . . .	169-174
II. Second Inscription . . . . .	175-194
III. Third Inscription . . . . .	195-198
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	199-250
I. First Cataract Inscription . . . . .	201-204
1. Assuan Inscription . . . . .	201-202
2. Elephantine Stela . . . . .	203-204
II. Silsileh Quarry Stela . . . . .	205-208
III. Gebelên Quarry Inscription . . . . .	209-210
IV. Mortuary Temple at Thebes (Kurna) . . . . .	211-221
V. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	222-224
VI. Mortuary Temple at Abydos . . . . .	225-243
VII. Temple Model of Heliopolis . . . . .	244-246
VIII. Miscellaneous . . . . .	247-250
Reign of Ramses II . . . . .	251-568
Great Abydos Inscription . . . . .	251-281
Kubbân Stela . . . . .	282-293

	§§
The Asiatic War . . . . .	294-391
I. Beginning of the Hittite War . . . . .	296-351
I. First Campaign . . . . .	297
II. Second Campaign: The Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	298-351
a. Poem of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	305-315
b. Official Record of the Battle of Kadesh . . . . .	316-327
c. The Reliefs of the Battle of Kadesh. . . . .	328
I. The Council of War . . . . .	329-330
II. The Camp . . . . .	331-332
III. Ramses' Messengers . . . . .	333-334
IV. The Battle . . . . .	335-338
V. The Defense of the Camp . . . . .	339-340
VI. After the Battle . . . . .	341-347
VII. Presentation of Captives to Amon . . . . .	348-351
III. Palestinian Revolt . . . . .	352-362
I. Reconquest of Southern Palestine . . . . .	353-355
II. Reconquest of Northern Palestine . . . . .	356-362
IV. Campaign in Naharin . . . . .	363-391
I. Conquest of Naharin . . . . .	364-366
II. Treaty with the Hittites . . . . .	367-391
Relations of Egypt with the Hittites after the War . . . . .	392-491
I. The Blessing of Ptah . . . . .	394-414
II. Marriage Stela . . . . .	415-424
III. Message of the Chief of Kheta to the Chief of Kode . . . . .	425-426
IV. Coptos Stela . . . . .	427-428
V. Bentresh Stela . . . . .	429-447
Nubian Wars and References to Northern Wars . . . . .	448-491
I. Abu Simbel Temple . . . . .	449-457
II. Bet el-Walli Temple . . . . .	458-477
III. Assuan Stela . . . . .	478-479
IV. Luxor Temple . . . . .	480-484
V. Abydos Temple . . . . .	485-486
VI. Tanis Stelæ . . . . .	487-491
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	492-537
I. Great Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	495-499
II. Small Temple of Abu Simbel. . . . .	500-501
III. Temple of Serreh . . . . .	502

	§§
IV. Temple of Derr . . . . .	503
V. Temple of Sebûca . . . . .	504
VI. Temple of el Kab . . . . .	505
VII. Temple of Luxor . . . . .	506-508
VIII. Temple of Karnak . . . . .	509-513
IX. The Ramesseum . . . . .	514-515
X. Temple of Kurna . . . . .	516-522
XI. Seti I's Temple at Abydos and Great Abydos Inscription . . . . .	262-267
XII. Ramses II's Temple at Abydos . . . . .	524-529
XIII. Memphis Temples . . . . .	530-537
1. Great Abydos Inscription (l. 22) . . . . .	260
2. Blessing of Ptah (ll. 32, 35) . . . . .	412-413
XIV. City of Tanis (Blessing of Ptah (ll. 16-18) . . . . .	406
Stela of the Year 400 . . . . .	538-542
Royal Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	543-560
I. First Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	552
II. Bigeh Inscription . . . . .	553
III. Second Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	554
IV. Third Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	555
V. Fourth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	556
VI. Sehel Inscription . . . . .	557
VII. El Kab Inscription . . . . .	558
VIII. Fifth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	559
IX. Sixth Gebel Silsileh Inscription . . . . .	560
Inscription of Beknekhonsu . . . . .	561-568
Reign of Merneptah . . . . .	569-638
The Invasion of Libyans and Mediterranean Peoples . . . . .	569-617
I. The Great Karnak Inscription . . . . .	572-592
II. The Cairo Column . . . . .	593-595
III. The Athribis Stela . . . . .	596-601
IV. The Hymn of Victory . . . . .	602-617
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Roy . . . . .	618-628
Daybook of a Frontier Official . . . . .	629-635
Letter of a Frontier Official . . . . .	636-638
Reign of Siptah . . . . .	639-650
Nubian Graffiti . . . . .	639-650

LIST OF FIGURES		PAGE
Fig. 1.	Plan of the Reliefs of Seti I, on the North Wall of the Great Hall of Karnak . . . . .	39
Fig. 2.	Seti I on the Route through Southern Palestine (Scene 1) . . . . .	44
Fig. 3.	Showing Two Superimposed Figures . . . . .	61
Fig. 4.	Inserted Figure of "First King's-Son" . . . . .	61
Fig. 5.	An Unknown Prince Following the Chariot of Seti I (Scene 14) . . . . .	66
Fig. 6.	Figure of an Unknown Prince Inserted in a Fragmentary Scene (§ 130) . . . . .	66
Fig. 7.	Map of the Orontes Valley in the Vicinity of Kadesh . . . . .	126
Fig. 8.	March to Kadesh: First Positions . . . . .	128
Fig. 9.	Battle of Kadesh: Second Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 10.	Battle of Kadesh: Third Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 11.	Battle of Kadesh: Fourth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 12.	Battle of Kadesh: Fifth Positions . . . . .	130
Fig. 13.	The Modern Mound of Kadesh . . . . .	152

VOLUME IV

		§§
THE TWENTIETH DYNASTY . . . . .		1-603
Reign of Ramses III . . . . .		1-456
Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		1-150
Building and Dedication Inscriptions . . . . .		1-20
Historical Inscriptions . . . . .		21-138
I. Treasury of Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .		25-34
II. First Libyan War, Year 5 . . . . .		35-58
1. Great Inscription in the Second Court (Year 5) . . . . .		36-58
III. Northern War, Year 8 . . . . .		59-82
1. Great Inscription on the Second Pylon, Year 8 . . . . .		61-68
2. Relief Scenes Outside North Wall and in Second Court, Year 8 . . . . .		69-82
IV. Second Libyan War . . . . .		83-114

	§§
1. Great Inscription on the First Pylon (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	85-92
2. Poem on Second Libyan War . . . . .	93-99
3. Relief Scenes on First Pylon and Outside North Wall (Medinet Habu) . . . . .	100-114
4. Papyrus Harris . . . . .	405
V. The Syrian War . . . . .	115-135
VI. The Nubian War . . . . .	136-138
Medinet Habu Temple Calendar . . . . .	139-145
Act of Endowment of the Temples of Khnum . . . . .	146-150
Papyrus Harris . . . . .	151-412
Discussion of . . . . .	151-181
Content:
I. Introduction . . . . .	182-183
II. Theban Section . . . . .	184-246
III. Heliopolitan Section . . . . .	247-304
IV. Memphite Section . . . . .	305-351
V. General Section (Small Temples) . . . . .	352-382
VI. Summary . . . . .	383-396
VII. Historical Section . . . . .	397-412
Record of the Royal Jubilee . . . . .	413-415
Records of the Harem Conspiracy . . . . .	416-456
I. Appointment of the Court . . . . .	423-424
II. The Condemned of the First Prosecution . . . . .	425-443
III. The Condemned of the Second Prosecution . . . . .	444-445
IV. The Condemned of the Third Prosecution . . . . .	446-450
V. The Condemned of the Fourth Prosecution . . . . .	451-452
VI. The Acquitted . . . . .	453
VII. The Practicers of Magic . . . . .	454-456
Reign of Ramses IV . . . . .	457-472
Hammamat Stela . . . . .	457-468
I. The First Stela . . . . .	457-460
II. The Second Stela . . . . .	461-468
Abydos Stela . . . . .	469-471
Building Inscription of the Khonsu Temple . . . . .	472
Reign of Ramses V . . . . .	473
Tomb Dedication . . . . .	473
Reign of Ramses VI . . . . .	474-483

	§§
Tomb of Penno . . . . .	474-483
Reign of Ramses VII . . . . .	484-485
Stela of Hori . . . . .	484-485
Reign of Ramses IX . . . . .	486-556
Inscriptions of the High Priest of Amon, Amenhotep	486-498
I. Building Inscriptions . . . . .	488-491
II. Records of Rewards . . . . .	492-498
The Records of the Royal Tomb-Robberies . . . . .	499-556
I. Papyrus Abbott . . . . .	509-535
II. Papyrus Amherst . . . . .	536-541
III. Turin Fragment . . . . .	542-543
IV. Mayer Papyri . . . . .	544-556
Reign of Ramses XII . . . . .	557-603
The Report of Wenamon . . . . .	557-591
Records of the Restoration of the Royal Mummies . . . . .	592-594
Letter to the Viceroy of Kush . . . . .	595-600
Building Inscriptions in the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	601-603
THE TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY . . . . .	604-692
The Twenty-First Dynasty . . . . .	604-607
Reign of Hrihor . . . . .	608-626
Inscriptions of the Temple of Khonsu . . . . .	608-626
Reign of Nesubenedbed . . . . .	627-630
Gebelên Inscription . . . . .	627-630
Reign of the High Priest and King Paynozem I . . . . .	631-649
I. Paynozem I as High Priest . . . . .	631-635
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	631-635
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	636-642
II. Paynozem I as King . . . . .	643 ff.
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	643-647
Building Inscriptions . . . . .	648-649
High Priesthood of Menkheperre . . . . .	650-661
Stela of the Banishment . . . . .	650-658
Record of Restoration . . . . .	659
Karnak Graffito . . . . .	660
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	661
High Priesthood of Paynozem II . . . . .	662-687
Records on the Priestly Mummies . . . . .	662-663
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	664-667

	§§
Record of Paynozem II's Burial . . . . .	668
Stela of the "Great Chief of Me," Sheshonk . . . . .	669-687
High Priesthood of Pesibkhenno . . . . .	688-692
Records on Mummy-Wrappings . . . . .	688
Burial of Nesikhonsu . . . . .	689
Records on the Royal Mummies . . . . .	690-692
THE TWENTY-SECOND DYNASTY . . . . .	693-792
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	693-698
Reign of Sheshonk I . . . . .	699-728
Records on Mummy-Bandages of Zeptahefonekh . . . . .	699-700
Building Inscription . . . . .	701-708
Great Karnak Relief . . . . .	709-722
Presentation of Tribute . . . . .	723-724
Karnak Stela . . . . .	724A
Dakhel Stela . . . . .	725-728
Reign of Osorkon I . . . . .	729-737
Record of Temple Gifts . . . . .	729-737
Reign of Takelot I . . . . .	738-740
Statue of the Nile-God Dedicated by the High Priest, Sheshonk . . . . .	738-740
Reign of Osorkon II. . . . .	742-751
Flood Inscription . . . . .	742-744
Statue Inscription . . . . .	745-747
Jubilee Inscriptions . . . . .	748-751
Reign of Takelot II . . . . .	752-755
Graffito of Harsiese . . . . .	752-754
Stela of Kerome . . . . .	755
Reign of Sheshonk III . . . . .	756-777
Annals of the High Priest of Amon, Osorkon . . . . .	756-770
I. East of Door . . . . .	760-761
II. West of Door . . . . .	762-770
First Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	771-774
Record of Installation . . . . .	775-777
Reign of Pemou. . . . .	778-781
Second Serapeum Stela of Pediese . . . . .	778-781
Reign of Sheshonk IV . . . . .	782-792
Stela of Weshtehet . . . . .	782-784

	§§
Serapeum Stela of Harpeson . . . . .	785-792
THE TWENTY-THIRD DYNASTY. . . . .	793-883
Records of Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	793-794
Reign of Osorkon III . . . . .	795
Will of Yewelot . . . . .	795
Reign of Piankhi . . . . .	796-883
The Piankhi Stela . . . . .	796-883
THE TWENTY-FOURTH DYNASTY . . . . .	884
Reign of Bocchoris . . . . .	884
Serapeum Stelæ . . . . .	884
THE TWENTY-FIFTH DYNASTY . . . . .	885-934
Records of the Nile-Levels at Karnak . . . . .	885-888
Reign of Shabaka . . . . .	889
Building Inscription . . . . .	889
Reign of Taharka . . . . .	892-918
Tanis Stela . . . . .	892-896
Building Inscription in Large Cliff-Temple of Napata	897-900
Inscription of Mentemhet . . . . .	901-916
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	917-918
Reign of Tanutamon . . . . .	919-934
Stela of Tanutamon . . . . .	919-934
THE TWENTY-SIXTH DYNASTY . . . . .	935-1029
Reign of Psamtik I . . . . .	935-973
Adoption Stela of Nitocris . . . . .	935-958
Statue Inscription of the Chief Steward, Ibe . . . . .	958A-958M
First Serapeum Stela . . . . .	959-962
Second Serapeum Stela . . . . .	963-966
Statue Inscription of Hor . . . . .	967-973
Reign of Necho . . . . .	974-980
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	974-979
Building Inscription . . . . .	980
Reign of Psamtik II . . . . .	981-983
Statue Inscription of Neferibre-Nofer . . . . .	981-983
Reign of Apries . . . . .	984-995
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	984-988
Stela of the Divine Consort Enekhnesneferibre . . . . .	988A-988J
Inscription of Nesuhor . . . . .	989-995

TABLE OF CONTENTS

xxvii

---

	§§
Reign of Amasis (Ahmose II). . . . .	996-1029
Elephantine Stela . . . . .	996-1007
Serapeum Stela . . . . .	1008-1012
Statue Inscription of the General Ahmose . . . . .	1013-1014
Statue Inscription of Pefnefdineit . . . . .	1015-1025
Mortuary Stelæ of the Priest Psantik . . . . .	1026-1029

LIST OF FIGURES

	PAGE
Plan of Scenes and Inscriptions in Medinet Habu Temple . . . . .	5
INDEX . . . . .	521

EXPLANATION OF TYPOGRAPHICAL SIGNS AND SPECIAL CHARACTERS

1. The introductions to the documents are in twelve-point type, like these lines.

2. All of the translations are in ten-point type, like this line.

3. In the footnotes and introductions all quotations from the documents in the original words of the translation are in italics, inclosed in quotation marks. Italics are not employed in the text of the volumes for any other purpose except for titles.

4. The lines of the original document are indicated in the translation by superior numbers.

5. The loss of a word in the original is indicated by —, two words by — —, three words by — — —, four words by — — — —, five words by — — — — —, and more than five by —————. A word in the original is estimated at a “square” as known to Egyptologists, and the estimate can be but a very rough one.

6. When any of the dashes, like those of No. 5, are inclosed in half-brackets, the dashes so inclosed indicate not lost, but uncertain words. Thus [—] represents one uncertain word, [— —] two uncertain words, and [————] more than five uncertain words.

7. When a word or group of words are inclosed in half-brackets, the words so inclosed are uncertain in meaning; that is, the translation is not above question.

8. Roman numerals I, II, III, and IV, not preceded by the title of any book or journal, refer to these four volumes of Historical Documents. The Arabic numerals following such Romans refer to the numbered paragraphs of these volumes. All paragraph marks (§ and §§, without a Roman) refer to paragraphs of the same volume.

9. For signs used in transliteration, see Vol. I, p. xv.

THE NINETEENTH DYNASTY

REIGN OF HARMHAB

TOMB OF HARMHAB<sup>a</sup>

1. This splendid limestone tomb was built by the general, Harmhab, who afterward became King Harmhab. His career before he gained the throne is openly narrated in his Coronation Inscription (§§ 22 ff.); but the first step in the study of his life is the demonstration of the identity of the general and the king. This was first proved by the observation that the Vienna fragment may be fitted upon the Leyden blocks<sup>b</sup> (§§ 2-13). The construction of the tomb and execution of the reliefs belong to a period either just before or just after the Aton heresy of Ikhnaton; for Harmhab, in praising King Ikhnaton, states that he owes his kingdom to Amon<sup>c</sup> (§ 8); furthermore, the gods of Heliopolis—Horus, Osiris, Isis, Nephthys, and Hathor—are mentioned. As Amon is not erased in the tomb, this, with the mention of the other gods, would indicate that the tomb was constructed under Ikhnaton's weak successors, after the resumption of the Amon-worship, at a time when the commemoration of Harmhab's favor under Ikhnaton was not yet a political faux pas. But this is not certain.

---

<sup>a</sup>It originally stood in Sakkara, but has been ruthlessly destroyed. The few fragments which have survived are now in six different museums.

<sup>b</sup>See my remarks, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 38, 47 ff.

<sup>c</sup>This has little or no bearing on the date of the event depicted in the relief, but only on the date of the execution of the relief. The later insertion of the uraeus shows that an anachronism like the assumed mention of Amon in Ikhnaton's presence might easily be perpetrated after the worship of Amon had been resumed.

I. LEYDEN FRAGMENTS<sup>a</sup>I. STELA WITH ADORATION SCENE<sup>b</sup>

2. The hawk-headed Re, enthroned, is worshiped by the deceased, standing, who "shows in his body exactly those deformities by which the king Chu-en-Aten is to be recognized. The belly projects forward prominently, and heavy masses of fat are distributed along the entire body. His hair is curled, and about the neck he wears the braided necklace with which Chu-en-Aten was accustomed to reward his most faithful servants." The inscription of twelve very short vertical lines over the heads of the figures, is as follows:

Over the God

3. 1. Harakhte! Great god, lord of heaven, lord of earth; who cometh forth from the horizon. He illuminateth the Two Lands, the sun of darkness, as the great one, as Re.

Over Harmhab

4. Praise to thee! Re, lord of truth, great god, sovereign of Heliopolis! May he grant a fortunate life, <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup> in eternity, glory in heaven, favor in earth, for the ka of the commander in chief of the army, Harmhab, triumphant.

5. The content of the inscription, like the reliefs, shows plain traces of the influence of Ikhnaton's movement; although Aton is not mentioned. The following reliefs show clearly the relation of Harmhab to Ikhnaton.

<sup>a</sup>These fragments have never been published entire.

<sup>b</sup>Leyden Museum, V, 29; a rectangular tablet, the text of which was published by Wiedemann (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1885, 80, 81) without the reliefs of which he offers the above description.

2. REWARD OF GOLD<sup>a</sup>

6. These reliefs are in two series,<sup>b</sup> both representing Harmhab receiving the reward of gold from his king.

7. In the first series, the figure of the king (at the extreme right) is lost. Harmhab, wearing the uraeus, and with hands raised in rejoicing, is loaded with collars of gold; behind him (at the left) approach two long double lines of Asiatics, each pair led by two Egyptians; over these were lines of horsemen!<sup>c</sup>

8. In the second series, the lower portion of the king's figure (at the extreme left) is preserved and shows unmistakably the peculiar characteristics found only in the representations of Ikhnaton. His queen stands behind him, as in the similar scenes at Amarna, and showing the same peculiarities of style. Below is Harmhab alone,<sup>d</sup> his neck loaded with golden collars, having before him the lower ends of three lines of inscription, as follows:

<sup>1</sup>[Speech] ——— in his presence, by the hereditary prince, count, sole companion, king's-scribe, Harmhab, triumphant. He says, while he answers <sup>2</sup>[the king] ——— [The kingdom is thine] forever and ever; Amon has assigned it to thee. They muster [every] country <sup>3</sup>——— in their heart as one. Thy name is a fire <sup>4</sup>———.

9. Adjoining this scene on the right is a continuation,

<sup>a</sup>These reliefs have never been published. I secured photographs of them through the kindness of Dr. Pleyte. They are described by Leemans, Description raisonnée des monuments égyptiens, 40-41, C, 1-3; see also Leemans, Monuments du Musée d'Antiquités, I, 31-34.

<sup>b</sup>The upper portion, containing the inscriptions in each series, is unfortunately lost, and the extreme lower ends of a few lines remain.

<sup>c</sup>Only a long line of prancing horses' feet are visible; as there are no chariot wheels among them, and no human feet of men leading them (except at the extreme front), we may suppose that we have here a unique scene on an Egyptian monument—a troop of Asiatic horsemen. That the horses are being driven in a loose herd in the presence of the king is also possible.

<sup>d</sup>The head is lost, but of course it would show the uraeus, as everywhere else in the tomb.

showing Harmhab (on the left) received with acclamation by his household servants<sup>a</sup> (on the right), as he returns wearing his newly received collars of gold. Besides his two Egyptian servants appears a group of Asiatics,<sup>b</sup> like those in the first scene, all in postures of extravagant joy.<sup>c</sup>

II. VIENNA FRAGMENT<sup>d</sup>

10. The block contains a text of eight vertical lines above a relief scene, representing a group of Egyptian officials bowing (toward the left) to their superior, Harmhab (his figure is lost on the left), who is giving them instructions regarding the disposition of certain Asiatics, whose town has been attacked, plundered, and destroyed. The whole description shows that we have in these Asiatics, fugitives from the conditions in Palestine described in the Amarna Letters at this time. The arrival of these people must have fallen under the reign of Ikhnaton or his immediate successors. They desire a home in Egypt, as they say, "after the manner of your fathers' fathers since the beginning." This, with the letter in Papyrus Anastasi<sup>e</sup> (VI, 4, 13 ff., and 5, 1 ff.), makes quite certain the custom of allowing the Asiatic Bedwin the privilege of settling in Egypt, to pasture their herds in the eastern Delta in times of distress, and is

<sup>a</sup>The same in the tomb of Eye at Amarna.

<sup>b</sup>Two Libyans are among them.

<sup>c</sup>One of them is on his back, and one on his belly. This explains the greeting in the Amarna letters: "At the feet of my lord the king . . . . seven times and seven times with breast and back, I throw myself" (ed. Winckler, p. 285, No. 158, ll. 9-13). No. 157 has: "with belly and back."

<sup>d</sup>In the imperial collection; published by Wiedemann, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 425; and Bergmann, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, XXVII, 125-27. Neither publishes the reliefs, for which I had my own photograph and collation of the original. I have published the photograph showing the relief in ibid., 38, 47.

<sup>e</sup>§§ 637 ff.

an interesting parallel to the similar favor shown to Abraham and the kindred of Joseph.

11. These seven lines read:

1————<sup>a</sup> Asiatics; others have been placed in their abodes
 2———— they have been destroyed, and their town laid waste, and fire has been thrown 3————;<sup>b</sup> [they have come to entreat<sup>3</sup>] the Great in Strength to send his mighty sword before 4————. Their countries are starving, they live like goats of the mountain, [their] children<sup>c</sup> 5———— saying: “A few of the Asiatics, who knew not how they should live, have come 6[‘begg’]ing [‘a home in the domain’]<sup>d</sup> of Pharaoh, L. P. H., after the manner of your<sup>e</sup> fathers’ fathers since the beginning, under 7————. Now, the Pharaoh, L. P. H., gives them into your<sup>e</sup> hand, to protect their borders.”

12. Behind the officials receiving these instructions stood the Asiatics mentioned, as is shown by the fragment of one line of their inscription still surviving. It reads:

———— their boundaries — — [‘Lord’] of the Two Lands. They give praise to the Good God, the Great in Strength, Zeserkheprure (Harmhab).

Now, as this Vienna block has been shown to belong to the Leyden reliefs,<sup>f</sup> the conclusion would be that the royal figure in the Leyden reliefs must be King Harmhab. But the royal figure is clearly that of Ikhnaton. The difficulty is solved by the explanation of another incongruity in the tomb. Throughout its reliefs the figure of the general, Harmhab, wears the uraeus. This uraeus, as has been

<sup>a</sup>An uncertain amount is lacking at the beginning of each line; this is left unindicated by Wiedemann.

<sup>b</sup>Probably, “fire has been thrown [into their grain];” see I, 658, ll. 15, 16.

<sup>c</sup>An obvious emendation.

<sup>d</sup>The restoration is exceedingly uncertain, but something similar must be supplied.

<sup>e</sup>Plural.

<sup>f</sup>I have published the Vienna block and the adjoining Leyden fragments in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 38, 47.

clearly proved,<sup>a</sup> is a later insertion after the reliefs were finished. Hence the name of King Harmhab is a similar later insertion, and the Asiatics bowing, of course, like the officials, originally to the general Harmhab, are now represented as giving praise to the king Harmhab. The identity of the general and the king is thus demonstrated.

III. ALEXANDRIA FRAGMENTS<sup>b</sup>

13. The text recounted a journey of Harmhab to the upper Nile, as messenger of some king—a journey from which he returned successfully, bringing tribute which the king publicly inspected. Under this text is the figure of Harmhab wearing the uraeus and leaning on a staff.

1 ——— 2[—] He was sent as royal messenger as far as Aton shines, coming 3[—] no land stood before him; 4he captured it in the passing of a moment. His name shall be remembered in 5the land of [— —] He sailed northward. Behold, his majesty 6appeared upon a dais (used) at the bringing<sup>c</sup> in of tribute 7and the [tribute] 8of south and north was brought in. 9Behold, the prince, 10Harmhab, triumphant, 11stood by the side of ———.

IV. BRITISH MUSEUM FRAGMENTS

I. DOORPOSTS<sup>d</sup>

14. These monuments are chiefly of a religious nature, but the movement of Ikhnaton was so largely religious that

<sup>a</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 38, 49, 50. The fan which Harmhab carries in his hand, has been shifted to one side and distorted. The old lines still visible show that in its original position, the top of the fan would have interfered with the uraeus; hence it was shifted aside to insert the uraeus.

<sup>b</sup>In the Collection Zizinia; published by Wiedemann, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 424; it contains portions of eleven lines, the first and last very broken, and the beginning of all the lines wanting.

<sup>c</sup>Egyptian idiom, "a dais of the bringing in of tribute."

<sup>d</sup>Nos. 550 and 552; Birch, Guide to the Egyptian Galleries, 36; Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 92; excellent photographs by Clark and Davies, London; I had also my own copy.

such texts from the transition period are historically important. Furthermore, the titles of Harmhab which they contain indicate unusual powers and connect the owner of this tomb with the Harmhab of the Turin inscription (§§ 22 ff.), thus confirming the identity of the general and the king, Harmhab.

15. Each of the doorposts has below a figure of Harmhab in adoration, wearing the uraeus as usual, and having strapped to his back his fan, as insignium of his office. His form clearly shows traces of the style of art which prevailed under Ikhnaton, e. g., the thin ankles, above which the limbs thicken too suddenly.

16. The texts are in six vertical lines above and before the figures, one being a Sun-Hymn, as follows:

<sup>1</sup>Utterance of the hereditary prince, Harmhab, triumphant, when he worships Re at his rising, saying:

“Praise to thee! who becomest<sup>a</sup> every day,

“Who begetteth thyself<sup>a</sup> each morning,

“Who comest<sup>a</sup> forth from the body of thy<sup>a</sup> mother without ceasing.

“The two regions come to thee bowing down,

“They give to thee praise, when thou risest,

“When thou hast illuminated the earth with brightness.

“<sup>2</sup>Thy divine limbs flame as a mighty one in the heavens, “Excellent god, eternal king,

“Lord of brightness, ruler of light,

“Upon his throne in the Morning-Barque,

“Great in brilliance in the Evening-Barque,

“Divine youth, heir of eternity,

“Who begetteth himself, who generateth himself.

“The great ennead worship thee,

“<sup>3</sup>The lesser ennead exult to thee;

“They praise thee in thy beautiful forms,

“With thy brilliance in the Evening-Barque,

“As when the sacred apes spy thee.

---

<sup>a</sup>The Egyptian idiom requires third person here.

"4Rise thou, thy heart glad,
 "With thy diadems in the horizon of heaven;
 "Grant thou glory in heaven,
 "Power in earth,<sup>a</sup>
 "That I may go forth among thy followers <sup>5</sup>of every day;
 "That my heart may be satisfied with all offerings,
 "May receive flower-offerings, from the sanctuary (h' t-bnbn),
 "Upon the table of the lords of Heliopolis."

<sup>6</sup>By the hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion, privy councilor of the palace, superior in the whole land, fan-bearer at the right of the king, general of the Lord of the Two Lands, real king's-scribe, his beloved, the hereditary prince, Harmhab.

17. The other doorpost bears the usual prayer to Osiris (but is important for the titles of Harmhab), as follows:

<sup>1</sup>Praise to thee! Presider over the west; Osiris, ruler of eternity; Wennofer, lord of Tazoser; Anubis, lord of Rosta; the gods, lords of the necropolis. May they grant bread, beer, oxen, fowl, libations of water, wine and milk for the hereditary prince, the general in chief of the Lord of the Two Lands, king's-scribe, <sup>2</sup>scribe of recruits, fan-bearer at the right hand of the king, overseer, giving satisfaction in the whole land, great in his office, great in rank, the two eyes of the king in the Two Lands, favorite of Horus in the palace, satisfying the heart of the king, <sup>3</sup>with all monuments, overseer of works in the mountain of grit-stone,<sup>b</sup> deputy of the king, presiding over the Two Lands, Harmhab, triumphant; he saith: "Homage to thee! Presider over the west, Osiris in the midst of Abydos. <sup>4</sup>I have come to thee (extending) my two hands in adoration of the beauty of thy majesty. Set thou me among thy followers, like the glorious ones who enter <sup>5</sup>the nether world, who live in truth every day. May I be one among them, (for) my abomination was lying, I executed <sup>6</sup>truth upon earth without neglecting it.

"For the ka of the hereditary prince, real king's-scribe, his beloved, deputy of the king in the whole land, general in chief, Harmhab, triumphant."

<sup>a</sup>Cf. the prayer on the second Leyden fragment.

<sup>b</sup>Cf. Inscription of Amenhotep, son of Hapi (II, 917, l. 40).

2. STELA WITH THREE HYMNS<sup>a</sup>

18. Above, occupying about one-third of the stela, is a relief showing the divinities Harakhte, Thoth, and Mat, standing, before whom stands Harmhab worshipping. His head is (in the photograph) almost wholly destroyed, and the uraeus, if present, cannot be discerned. Over Re are the words: "Harakhte, only god, king of the gods; he rises in the west, he sendeth his beauty — —." Thoth and Mat bear the usual titles, while before Harmhab is a magical prayer.

19. The text of twenty-five lines addresses one after the other, Re, Thoth, and Mat, with the usual praise and prayers. These show clearly that the old traditional views are in full sway, although Aton is mentioned in l. 2: "Thou art beautiful, youthful, as Aton before thy mother Hathor." The hymn is very interesting, but not historically important.

V. CAIRO FRAGMENTS

20. Two blocks,<sup>b</sup> apparently doorposts, contain the following important titles of Harmhab above his figure on each block seated at an offering-table and wearing the uraeus. Each column begins with: "Hereditary prince, count, wearer of the royal seal, sole companion;" and then proceeds with the further titles:

<sup>1</sup>Privy councilor of the palace (pr-stny), great in love with his lord, chief prophet of Horus, lord of Sebi (Sby);<sup>c</sup> for the ka of the general in chief, Harmhab. <sup>2</sup>Prince of the greatest of the companions, confidant of especial confidants (conclusion as in l. 1); <sup>3</sup>king's-follower on his expeditions in the south and north country (conclusion as in l. 1). <sup>4</sup>Great-est of the great, mightiest of the mighty; great lord of the people (conclusion as in l. 1). <sup>5</sup>King's-messenger at the head of his army, to the south and north country (conclusion as in l. 1). <sup>6</sup>Chosen of the king, presider over the Two Lands, in order to carry on the administration of the Two Lands, general of generals of the Lord of the Two Lands; for the ka of the real king's-scribe, his beloved, Harmhab. <sup>7</sup>Giving satisfaction in the entire land, privy councilor of the palace, unique in his qualities, recorder of the troops; for the ka of the chief steward, Harmhab. <sup>8</sup>Companion of the feet of his lord upon the battlefield on that day of slaying the Asiatics (St tyw)<sup>a</sup> (conclusion as in l. 1).

<sup>a</sup>Published by Meyer, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1877, 148 ff.; photograph by Clark and Davies; I had also my own copy from the original.

<sup>b</sup>Mariette, Monuments divers, 74 = Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, CVII-CVIII.

<sup>c</sup>The place is unknown, but is probably connected, if not identical, with Alabastronpolis, the patron deity of which was also Horus; this Horus is the one whom the king claims as his special patron at his coronation (§ 27). The title, "chief prophet," is an old nomarch title, and of course descended to Harmhab from his ancestors at Alabastronpolis.

21. Several other fragments in Cairo contain the conventional mortuary prayers<sup>b</sup> and show Harmhab wearing the uraeus<sup>c</sup> and kneeling before various divinities, chiefly Osiris, Isis, and Nephthys. Finally there are two fragments in Bologna not noted heretofore; one<sup>d</sup> shows him wearing the uraeus, and plowing in the fields of Yaru in the hereafter; the other<sup>e</sup> contains part of an historical scene, showing the presentation of Negro captives, and mentioning the tribute of Palestine.

CORONATION INSCRIPTION

22. This important inscription relates: (1) the youth (ll. 1-5); (2) career at court (ll. 5-12); (3) coronation in <sup>a</sup>It is impossible to suppose that Ikhnaton is the king meant here; it must be one of his successors, probably Tutenkhaton, by whom tribute was received from the north.

<sup>b</sup>Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, CIV-CVI.

<sup>c</sup>Mariette, Monuments divers, 75 = Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, XXXVI f.

<sup>d</sup>No. 1885. The fragment does not bear the name of Harmhab anywhere, but is identical in style with the known fragments of his tomb, and as the uraeus is clearly a later insertion throughout the fragment (six lines), it is undoubtedly another hitherto unnoticed wanderer from Harmhab's tomb.

<sup>e</sup>No. 1165. The style is unquestionably sufficient to identify this piece as belonging to the same tomb.

<sup>f</sup>Engraved "on the back of a black granite group of two seated statues in the

Thebes (ll. 12-21); and (4) the early reign (ll. 21-26) of Harmhab. It shows clearly this king's obscure origin and his rise, through continued favor at court, to the kingship. The king who favored him is not mentioned; but the Leyden tomb reliefs (§§ 2 ff.) show that he was a favorite of Ikhnaton. It is possible that he is to be found among Ikhnaton's favorites at Amarna as Patonemhab.<sup>a</sup> He also enjoyed the favor of Tutenkhamon,<sup>b</sup> and it must have been one of these two kings of whom he speaks; probably the latter. He was the descendant of an old nomarchical house at Alabastronpolis. Rising from such beginnings, throughout the precarious reigns of Ikhnaton's successors, Harmhab skilfully maintained himself, and gradually gained a position of such power that by conciliating the priestly party of Amon, which was then again in the ascendant, he finally succeeded in seizing the throne. Thus, after their long struggle with the Aton heresy, we see the Amonite priests seating a second Pharaoh on the throne, as they had seated Thutmose III. From his home in Alabastronpolis he is led by Horus, as the piously veiled language of the inscription puts it, into the presence of Amon at Thebes, where he is crowned and his

---

Museum of Turin," representing Harmhab and his wife, Mutnezmet. The two sides also contained texts, which have disappeared, with the exception of nineteen signs on the lady's side, among which her name occurs. The statues are described by Birch (Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, III, 486 ff.), who gives other references. The text of twenty-six lines was published by Birch (ibid., facing p. 486) from a sketch by Bonomi, which the latter made from a squeeze taken by himself. It is very inaccurate, as Birch evidently worked from the squeeze in translating, and did not revise Bonomi's sketch. It was published again by Brugsch (Thesaurus, V, 1073-78), also very inaccurately. I have copied the original in Turin and collated the copy with the Berlin squeeze (No. 1253). This I again collated with the original in Turin.

<sup>a</sup>Recueil, XV, 50. The tomb of this man is at Amarna. Such a change of name, involving the substitution of Aton for Horus (Har), is common at this time. But I am more inclined to find in Patonemhab the man who was won to Harmhab's cause and became high priest of Re at Heliopolis, with the name Premhab (Recueil, XVI, 123 f.).

<sup>b</sup>Sayce, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XXI, 141.

titulary fixed by the gods. To make his claim on the crown legitimate, however, he next proceeds to the palace of the princess, Mutnezmet, the sister of Ikhnaton's queen, Nefernefruaton-Nofretete, who, although advanced in years, was a princess of the royal line, and is there recognized as her husband.

23. After the celebration of a feast in Luxor, the king proceeds northward, to restore the temples of the gods—an interesting indication of the destructive work of Ikhnaton's reform, in abolishing the old cults. Thus the old order and, particularly, the unchecked domination of Amon are restored. The calendar of feasts was immediately resumed and before he left Thebes, he celebrated the Feast of Ptah in his Theban temple. He left a record<sup>a</sup> of it in the Ptah-temple there:

Year 1, fourth month of the first season, day 22, of the King Harmhab,<sup>b</sup> the day of the feast of "Ptah-South-of-His-Wall," lord of "Life-of-the-Two-Lands" in Thebes; at his feast were founded [the offerings] of the ancestors ————."c

This record enables us to determine that Harmhab remained in Thebes at least two months; for it is to be inferred that he was present at the above feast, which is about two months later than the Feast of Opet, during which he arrived at Thebes for his coronation.

Youth

24. 1 ————<sup>d</sup> [Horus: Mighty Bull, Ready in Plans; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Great in Marvels in Karnak; Golden Horus: Sat-

<sup>a</sup>Mariette, Karnak, Pl. 47, D; Legrain, Annales, III, 100.

<sup>b</sup>Double name.

<sup>c</sup>Doubtless a list of the restored offerings followed. A stela commemorating Harmhab's pious works in this temple has suffered too much to discern its content (Annales, III, 111, 112).

<sup>d</sup>The lacuna contained either: (1) the date, followed as usual by "under the majesty of" and the royal titulary; or (2) the frequent opening formulary, "Live the Horus," followed by the titulary.

is]²fied with Truth, Creator of the Two Lands;<sup>b</sup> King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands: Zeserkheprure, Setepnere;<sup>c</sup> Son of Re, Lord of Diadems: Beloved of Amon, Harmhab,<sup>d</sup> [Beloved of] Horus, lord of Alabastronpolis<sup>e</sup> — —<sup>f</sup> 2 —————<sup>g</sup> Bull of his mother, Amon, king of gods, was the one who brought him up; Har-si-ese, his guardian was the protector of his limbs. He came forth from the body, clothed with strength; the hue of a god was upon him; he made — — 3 —————<sup>h</sup> the arm was dropped to him as a child, obeisance among great and small, [—] him food and eatables, while he was a child, without his counsel 4 —————<sup>i</sup> great before all the land; the form of a god was in his color, before the beholder of his form, the strength of his father, Horus. He set himself behind him; he that created him exerted his protection. The people brought all [—] — 5 —————<sup>j</sup> he knew the day of his satisfaction, to give to him his kingdom.

Appointment to Office

25. Behold, this god exalted his son before all the land;<sup>k</sup> he desired to extend his steps, until the coming of the day of his receiving his office, that he might give 6 —————<sup>l</sup> of his time. The heart of the king was satisfied with his affairs; (he) rejoiced at his choice; he appointed him to be chief (*r*² -hry) of the land, to administer the laws of the Two Lands as hereditary prince of all this land; he was unique, without his second. The plans 7 —————<sup>m</sup>. [He astonished] the people, by that which came out of his mouth. When he was summoned before the king, the palace, it began to fear. When he opened his mouth, when he replied to the king, he pleased him with that which came out of his mouth. The only excellent one, without 8 [his 'second'] —————<sup>m</sup>.

<sup>a</sup>The lacking portion of the full titulary is restored from the Karnak pylons of Harmhab, cf. Brugsch-Bouriant, Le livre des rois, 56, 57.

<sup>b</sup>Incorrectly copied as a t by Birch.

<sup>c</sup>Meaning: "Splendid (is) the being of Re, Chosen of Re."

<sup>d</sup>Meaning: "Horus at the feast."

<sup>e</sup>This shows that the statue came from Alabastronpolis; it is omitted by Brugsch.

<sup>f</sup>Birch adds "Good God," but it is not in his text. <sup>h</sup>About one-third line.

<sup>g</sup>About one-third line. <sup>i</sup>Over one-quarter line.

<sup>j</sup>Over one-quarter line. The subject of the verb is some god, as is evident from the next sentence.

<sup>k</sup>With the determinative of people.

<sup>l</sup>Over one-quarter line. <sup>m</sup>About one-quarter line.

His every plan was in the footsteps of the Ibis.<sup>a</sup> His decisions were<sup>b</sup> in accord with<sup>b</sup> the Lord of Hesret;<sup>a</sup> rejoicing in accustomed usage like Thoth, pleased of heart therewith like Ptah. When he woke in the morning, he presented her 'due'; 'the way' <sup>9</sup>—————<sup>c</sup> his affairs. As for one who walks in her<sup>d</sup> way, it is she who protects him on earth forever.

Appointed Deputy

26. Behold, he administered the Two Lands during a period of many years; there reported [to him]<sup>e</sup> <sup>10</sup>—————<sup>c</sup> there [bowed down] to him the council in obeisance at the front of the palace, there came to him the chiefs of the Nine Bows, South as well as North; their hands were spread out in his presence, they offered praise to his face as (to) a god. All that was done was done under command <sup>11</sup>[from him]<sup>f</sup> —————<sup>c</sup>. When he came, the fear of him was great in the sight of the people; prosperity and health<sup>g</sup> were besought for him; he was greeted: "Father of the Two Lands, excellent counsel of divine gift,<sup>h</sup> in order to administer <sup>12</sup>—————<sup>c</sup>"<sup>c</sup>

Coronation in Thebes

27. [Now, when many days had]<sup>i</sup> passed by, while the eldest son of Horus was chief and hereditary prince in this whole land, behold, this august god, Horus, lord of Alabastronpolis, his heart desired to establish his son upon his eternal throne, and [he] commanded <sup>13</sup>————— of the —<sup>j</sup> of Amon. Horus proceeded with rejoicing to Thebes, city of the lord of eternity, (and with) his son in his embrace to Karnak, to introduce him before Amon, to assign to him his office of king, to pass his life (as such). Behold, <sup>14</sup>—————<sup>k</sup> [<sup>1</sup>they came<sup>l</sup> with rejoicing at his beautiful feast in Luxor. He<sup>l</sup> saw the majesty of this god, Horus, lord of Alabastronpolis, his son being with him as king, introduced in

<sup>a</sup>Thoth.            <sup>b</sup>Lit., "a part of."            <sup>c</sup>About one-quarter line.

<sup>d</sup>The feminine pronoun in this passage refers to "usage" (l. 8).

<sup>e</sup>Compare the duties of the vizier, Rekhmire, § 692, l. 22, and § 706, l. 29.

<sup>f</sup>Or only the suffix, "his."            <sup>g</sup>A greeting accorded only to royalty.

<sup>h</sup>Lit., "of that which the god gives."

<sup>i</sup>The phrase so common in the folk-tales.

<sup>j</sup>Birch has "house," but it is not to be gotten from his text.

<sup>k</sup>About one-eighth line.            <sup>l</sup>Amon.

order to give to him<sup>a</sup> his office and his throne. Behold, Amon-Re was filled<sup>b</sup> with joy when he saw <sup>15</sup>[him coming] on the day of giving his offerings. Then he presented himself to this prince, the hereditary prince, head (hr-d<sup>3</sup> d<sup>3</sup>) of the Two Lands, Harmhab.

Marriage to Mutnezmeh

28. He proceeded to the palace, he brought him before him to the shrine<sup>c</sup> of his revered eldest daughter <sup>16</sup>— — —. [She did] obeisance to him, she embraced his beauty, and placed herself before him.

Rejoicing of the Gods

The gods, the lords of the [fire-chamber] were in exultation because of his coronation; Nekhbet, Buto, Neit, Isis, Nephthys, Horus, Set, all the ennead of gods who preside over the great throne <sup>17</sup>lifted praises to the height of heaven, rejoicing at the satisfaction of Amon: "Behold, Amon hath come, his son before him, to the palace, to set his crown upon his head, to lengthen his whole life. We have gathered together, that we might establish for him <sup>18</sup>—. Let us count for him the adornments<sup>d</sup> of Re; let us praise Amon on his behalf: "Thou hast brought to us our protector; grant to him the royal jubilees of Re, the years of Horus as king; for it is he who shall satisfy thy heart in the midst of Karnak, likewise Heliopolis and Memphis; it is he who shall make them splendid."

The Gods Fix the Titulary

29. <sup>19</sup>Let the great name of this Good God, and his titulary be made like (that of) the majesty of Re, as follows:

1. Horus: Mighty Bull, Ready in Plans;
2. Favorite of the Two Goddesses; Great in Marvels in Karnak;
3. Golden Horus: Satisfied with Truth, Creator of the Two Lands;
4. King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Zeserkheprure, Setepnere;
5. Son of Re: Mernamon, Harmhab, given life.

<sup>a</sup>The ambiguity of the pronouns in this and following sentences is also in the original.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "permeated."

<sup>c</sup>Pr-wr. There was, therefore, a shrine or chapel of the "Divine Consort" in the king's palace.

<sup>d</sup>Which Re once wore as King of Egypt.

Festival in Luxor

30. Then came forth to the <sup>20</sup>ofrear<sup>1</sup> in the palace the majesty of this august god, Amon, king of gods, his son being before him. He embraced his beauty crowned with the royal helmet, in order to assign to him the circuit of the sun.<sup>a</sup> The Nine Bows are beneath his feet. Heaven is in festivity, earth hath joy. The ennead of gods of Egypt, their hearts are happy. <sup>21</sup>Behold, all the land was in joy, they cried out to heaven; great and small, they took up the jubilation; the whole land was rejoicing. After the completion of this feast in Luxor, Amon, king of gods, returned in peace to <sup>22</sup>Thebes<sup>b</sup> (W<sup>3</sup> s<sup>3</sup> t).

Restoration of the Temples

31. His majesty sailed down-stream as the image of Harakhte. Behold, he organized this land; he adjusted according to the time of Re. He restored the temples (from) the pools of the marshes<sup>c</sup> to Nubia (T<sup>3</sup> - p d<sup>3</sup> t). He shaped all their images <sup>23</sup>in number<sup>1</sup> more than before, increasing the beauty in that which he made. Re rejoiced when he saw them, which had been found ruined aforetime. He raised up their temples. He fashioned 100 images with all (their) bodies correct, and with all splendid costly stones. <sup>24</sup>He sought the precincts<sup>d</sup> of the gods, which were in the districts in this land; he furnished them as they had been since the time of the first beginning. He established for them a daily offering every day; all the vessels of their temples <sup>25</sup>were wrought of silver and gold. He equipped them with priests (w<sup>c</sup> b<sup>3</sup> w), with ritual priests, and with the choicest of the army. He transferred to them lands and cattle, supplied with all equipment.

Prayer for the King

32. They rise early to sing to Re in the morning <sup>26</sup>every day: "Mayest thou exalt <sup>e</sup>for us<sup>e</sup> the kingdom of thy son who satisfies thy heart, Zeserkheprure, Setepnere (Harmhab). Mayest thou give to him a

<sup>a</sup>Aton.

<sup>b</sup>The palace was therefore at Luxor; the god has been at Luxor during the feast; he went in procession to the palace, and now returns from Luxor to Karnak.

<sup>c</sup>In the Delta; hence, from the Delta to Nubia. These temples had been neglected since the reform of Amenhotep IV.

<sup>d</sup>This rare word (b<sup>3</sup> k<sup>3</sup> y<sup>3</sup> t) will be found applied to the sacred precinct of the cemetery at Abydos (Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 19, e).

<sup>e</sup>Birch has m (for nm), but as he also renders "for us," it shows clearly that he never revised Bonomi's text of the inscription for publication.

myriad of royal jubilees, and cause him to be victorious over all lands, like Har-si-ese, according as he satisfied thy heart in Heliopolis, united with thy divine ennead."

---

GRAFFITI IN THE THEBAN NECROPOLIS<sup>a</sup>

32A. The significance of these graffiti does not consist alone in the light which they throw upon the history of the robbery of the royal tombs at Thebes, showing that their violation began at least two centuries earlier than we had supposed; but they reveal to us also the state of anarchy which followed the religious revolution of Ikhnaton. It is only at that time that such an act could have taken place at Thebes, and we thus discern the turbulent conditions from which Harmhab rescued the country.

32B. Year 8, third month of the first season (third month), day 1, under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Zeserkheprure-Setepnere, Son of Re, Harmhab-Mernamon.

Command of his majesty, L. P. H., to commission the fan-bearer on the king's right hand, king's-scribe, overseer of the treasury, chief of works in the "Eternal Seat" (necropolis), leader of the feast(s) of Amon in Karnak, Meya (My), son of the judge, Yui (Ywy), born of the matron, Weret, to restore the burial of King Menkheprure (Mn-hprw-R, Thutmose IV), triumphant, in the august house<sup>b</sup> on the west of Thebes.

32C. Beneath is the name of Meya's assistant and the latter's parents:

His assistant, steward of the Southern City (Thebes), Thutmose, son of Hatey (H<sup>2</sup> t-y<sup>2</sup> y). His mother, Yuh (Ywh), of the City (Thebes).

---

<sup>a</sup>Written with ink on the wall of one of the lower chambers in the tomb of Thutmose IV in the Valley of the Kings' Tombs at Thebes; published in The Tomb of Thutmose IV (Mr. Theodore M. Davis' excavations), by Carter and Newberry, London, 1904, pp. xxxiii-iv, Figs. 7 and 8.

<sup>b</sup>His tomb.

THE WARS OF HARMHAB

33. Very little is recorded of Harmhab's relations with the foreign world. The scattered references on the surviving monuments are gathered here, recording his wars: I, in the North (§§ 34-36); II, in the South (§§ 37-44).

I. IN THE NORTH

34. The character and extent of these wars are very uncertain. The only sources are: (1) a list<sup>a</sup> of names, of which remains of eleven are preserved, among which appears Kheta; and (2) a relief<sup>b</sup> showing Harmhab leading three lines of captives and presenting them to Amon, Mut, and Khonsu. The costumes of the captives and their physiognomy indicate Asiatics. The inscription<sup>c</sup> with the middle<sup>d</sup> row is as follows:

35. The wretched princes of the Haunebu; [they say: "Hail to] thee! Thy name has encircled the two ends of the earth, among all lands; every land fears because of thy fame; thy fear is in their heart."

36. The lower row has the following:

The wretched princes of —; [they] say: "Hail to thee! like the great ———; [fear] has entered into their bodies, terror is in their hearts."

II. IN THE SOUTH

37. An expedition to Punt, probably of a peaceful nature, is recorded on the wall connecting Harmhab's two Karnak pylons.<sup>e</sup> A relief shows the king at the right, holding

<sup>a</sup>On the north side of Karnak Pylon XI; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 178, and Recueil, XVI, 42. See Müller, Mittheilungen der Vorderasiatischen Gesellschaft, 1897, III, 276-78.

<sup>b</sup>Recueil, XVI, 42 f.

<sup>c</sup>Published also by Wiedemann, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 423.

<sup>d</sup>That of the upper row is lost.

<sup>e</sup>Relief and inscriptions on the inside (west side) of the wall north of the door in the middle.

audience, receiving the chiefs of Punt approaching from the left, bearing sacks of gold dust, ostrich feathers, etc.<sup>a</sup> Their words are given in an accompanying inscription<sup>b</sup> as follows:

38. Speech of the great chiefs of Punt: "Hail to thee, King of Egypt, Sun of the Nine Bows! By thy ka! We knew not Egypt; our fathers had not trodden it. Give us the breath which thou givest. All lands are under thy feet."

39. Another scene<sup>c</sup> represents Harmhab presenting the newly acquired products of Punt to Amon, as indicated in the accompanying inscription:

Bringing the tribute, by his majesty, to his father Amon; being the tribute of Punt. "—————<sup>d</sup> by thy victorious might. Thou hast set their chiefs in tumult, because of thy terror ————— bearing all their tribute upon their backs. Great is thy might in every country."

40. A campaign in Kush is recorded in a series of superb reliefs in the temple which the king had cut in the rocks at Silsileh.

Scene<sup>e</sup>

41. The king, accompanied by a fan-bearer and two sunshade-bearers, is seated on his throne, which is borne upon the shoulders of six soldiers. Before him march a priest offering incense, the Negro captives, and three lines of soldiers, whose trumpeter blows a fanfare in salutation of the king.

<sup>a</sup>Only the line of Puntite chiefs is published (Mariette, Monuments divers, 88).

<sup>b</sup>Mariette, Monuments divers, 88; Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, II, 57, 3 = Recueil, XVII, 43.

<sup>c</sup>Nowhere published; Wiedemann (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, 424) says: "a fragment lying quite near the wall alludes to them [Harmhab's victories], showing flowers and other gifts." He then adds the lower ends of the inscription long ago published, Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 180, but without comment. It is translated above, § 39.

<sup>d</sup>An address of Amon to the king begins in the lacuna.

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 121, a-b.

Words of the Bearers

42. "All health is with thee, O Lord of the Two Lands! Re is the protection of thy limbs."

Description of the Scene

The Good God comes, he triumphs over the princes of every country. His bow is in his hand like the lord of Thebes (Montu), puissant king, mighty in strength, who carries away the princes of wretched Kush, King Zeserkheprure (Harmhab),<sup>a</sup> given life. His majesty came from the land of Kush, with the captives which his sword had made, according as his father Amon commanded him.

Scene<sup>b</sup>

43. The king stands before Amon, both grasping a wand between them.

Inscription: Words of Amon

I have given to thee triumph over the South, victory over the North.

Scene<sup>c</sup>

44. A line of Negro captives advancing toward the first scene.

Words of the Negroes

"Hail to thee, King of Egypt, Sun of the Nine Bows! Thy name is great in the land of Kush, thy battle-cry is in their abodes. It is thy might, O good ruler, that makes the countries into heaps, O Pharaoh, L. P. H.! Thou Sun!"

EDICT OF HARMHAB<sup>d</sup>

45. This is the most important edict which has come down to us from ancient Egypt, and it is much to be regretted

<sup>a</sup>Usual double name and titles.

<sup>b</sup>Below at the left, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 20, b.

<sup>c</sup>Below at the right; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 120, a.

<sup>d</sup>A large stela discovered by Maspero in February or March, 1882. It is, or when complete was, about five meters high by three wide, and stands against one that its very fragmentary state, together with the execrable manner in which it has been published, has deprived us of so many of its important data.

The edict contains the practical legislation of Harmhab by means of which he intended to prevent the oppressive abuses connected with the collection of taxes from the common people, who were continually robbed and impoverished by the fiscal officers. This legislation consists of a series of enactments, each of the following form:

a) Statement of the abuse as it existed before this legislation and the king's displeasure at it.

b) Statement of a hypothetical commission of the offense by the officials concerned.

c) Declaration of the penalty to be inflicted.

46. A very interesting question is whether these enactments have preserved on the stela the form and language of the original edict in the royal archives. It seems probable that, beginning with l. 13 (§ 50), we have the ipsissima verba of the original document, and that it continued to and included l. 2 (§ 62), although Müller is doubtful on this point.<sup>a</sup>

47. The content of the entire inscription is as follows:

---

of the pylons of Harmhab at Karnak. Over a third of the stone has broken off. The inscription occupies the face and the side edges. It has been copied and published very inaccurately by Bouriant, Recueil, VI, 41 ff.; important corrections, which unfortunately include only part of the inscription, by Piehl, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1885, 86 f.; see also Revue égyptologique, VIII, 106-9. I am greatly indebted to my friend, Mr. A. H. Gardiner, for a careful copy of the original on the spot. His copy corrects the incredibly numerous errors of Bouriant's publication, and fills out many of the lacunæ therein, though the stone shows loss since Bouriant's copy. Some fragments still surviving when Bouriant made his copy, Mr. Gardiner states, are now missing entirely. An exhaustive study by Müller, with translation and notes, in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 70-94. The present translation owes much to Müller, for which I make general acknowledgment here.

<sup>a</sup>Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 75.

Front

Above was an adoration scene,<sup>a</sup> showing Harmhab worshipping before Amon.

I. Introduction (ll. 1-10, § 49).

II. Introduction: the king's zeal for the relief of the people (ll. 10-14, § 50).

III. Enactment against robbing the poor of dues for the royal breweries and kitchens (ll. 14-17, § 51).

IV. Enactment against robbing the poor of wood due the Pharaoh (ll. 17, 18, § 52).

V. Enactment against exacting dues from a poor man thus robbed (ll. 18-20, § 53).

VI. Enactment against robbing the poor of dues for the harem or the gods by the soldiers (ll. 20-22, § 54).

VII. Enactment against unlawful appropriation of slave service (ll. 22-24, § 55).

VIII. Enactment against stealing of hides by the soldiers (ll. 25-28, §§ 56, 57).

IX. Enactment against connivance of dishonest inspectors with thievish tax-collectors for a share of the booty (ll. 28-32, § 58).

X. Enactment against stealing vegetables under pretense of collecting taxes (ll. 32-35, § 59).

XI. Enactments too fragmentary for analysis (ll. 35-39; right side, ll. 1, 2, §§ 60-62).

XII. Narrative of the king's reforms, containing also an enactment against corrupt judges (ll. 3-7, §§ 63-65).

XIII. Narrative of the king's monthly audiences and largesses (ll. 7-10, § 66).

XIV. Laudation of the king, and conclusion (left side, § 67).

<sup>a</sup>Very fragmentary; it is the only source from which we gain the name of the king who issued the edict; Pl., Recueil, VI. Mr. Gardiner states that it is now missing.

48. In the translation it has been necessary to indicate the connection between the beginnings of the lines, a large portion of the ends having been lost.<sup>a</sup> These connecting insertions contain only what was probably the intervening thought, without any attempt to reproduce the lost words.<sup>b</sup>

I. INTRODUCTION

49. <sup>1</sup>. . . . . <sup>10</sup>. . . . . <sup>c</sup>

II. INTRODUCTION: THE KING'S ZEAL FOR THE RELIEF OF THE PEOPLE (LL. 10-14)

50. His majesty took counsel with his heart [how he might<sup>1</sup>] ————<sup>d</sup> <sup>11</sup>[exp]el evil and suppress lying. The plans of his majesty were an excellent refuge,<sup>e</sup> repelling violence behind ————<sup>d</sup> [and delivering the Egyptians from <sup>12f</sup>the oppressions<sup>1</sup>] which were among them. Behold, his majesty spent the whole time seeking the welfare of Egypt and searching out instances <sup>g</sup>[of oppression in the land].<sup>g</sup> ————<sup>d</sup> [I came the scribe<sup>1</sup>] <sup>13</sup>of his majesty. Then he seized palette and roll; he put it into writing according to all that his majesty, the king himself said. He spoke as follows: "[My majesty] commands ———— [concerning all<sup>1</sup>] <sup>14</sup>instances of oppression in the land.

<sup>a</sup>Bouriant says: "Des lignes visibles aujourd'hui les quatre premières ne présentent plus que quelques signes très mutilés et ne pouvant fournir aucun sens; les vingt-deux suivantes ont perdu environ les deux tiers de leur longueur primitive, quelques-unes même ont perdu plus encore. A partir de la vingt-sixième, les lignes gagnent en longueur mais elles sont coupées de lacunes fréquentes. . . ." This is verified by Mr. Gardiner's scale copy. After l. 31 they rapidly decrease in length, and become so fragmentary that a coherent rendering is impossible.

<sup>b</sup>They often follow Müller, but I have carefully verified his conclusions in every case.

<sup>c</sup>See Bouriant's remark above (note a); the lines contained the usual eulogistic introduction with names and titles of the king. Its length, one-fourth of the entire inscription, is unusual.

<sup>d</sup>About two-thirds of a line.

<sup>e</sup>Same phrase applied to Amenhotep III (II, 916, l. 35).

<sup>f</sup>Müller inserts here a fragment containing the ends of three lines, which should conclude ll. 11, 12, and 13. These ends fit 13 very well, 11 fairly, and 12 not at all; for some reason Müller has ignored the end of l. 12, or it would have been apparent that the alleged fragment of the end of l. 12 does not connect with the beginning of l. 13.

<sup>g</sup>Restored from l. 14.

III. ENACTMENT AGAINST ROBBING THE POOR OF DUES FOR THE ROYAL BREWERIES AND KITCHENS (LL. 14-17)

51. If the poor man made for himself a craft with its sail, in order to be able to serve the Pharaoh, L. P. H., [loading it with the dues for the breweries and kitchens of the Pharaoh, and he was robbed of the craft and<sup>1</sup>] <sup>15</sup>the dues, the poor man stood reft of his goods and stripped of his many labors<sup>1</sup>. [This is wrong, and the Pharaoh will suppress it by<sup>1</sup>] <sup>16</sup>his excellent measures. If there be<sup>a</sup> a [poor man<sup>1</sup>] who pays the dues of the breweries and kitchens of the Pharaoh, L. P. H., <sup>17</sup>to the two<sup>1</sup> deputies, [and he be robbed of his goods and his craft, my majesty commands: that every officer who seizeth the dues<sup>1</sup>] <sup>17</sup>and taketh the craft of any citizen (<sup>c</sup> nḥ) of the army or of any person who is in the whole land, the law shall be executed against him, in that his nose shall be cut off, and he shall be sent to Tha[ru].<sup>b</sup>

IV. AGAINST ROBBING THE POOR OF WOOD DUE THE PHARAOH (LL. 17, 18)

52. [Furthermore, concerning the impost of wood, my majesty commands that if any officer find<sup>1</sup>] <sup>18</sup>a poor man without a craft, then let him bring to him a craft for his impost from another, and let him send him to bring for him the wood; thus he<sup>c</sup> shall serve [the Pharaoh].

V. AGAINST EXACTING DUES FROM A POOR MAN THUS ROBBED (LL. 18-20)

53. [Furthermore, my majesty commands that if any poor man be oppressed by<sup>1</sup>] [robbery, <sup>19</sup>his cargo be emptied by theft of them, and the poor man stand reft of hi[s goods], [no further exactions for dues shall be made from him<sup>1</sup>] <sup>20</sup>when he has nothing. For it is not good, this report of very great injustice. My majesty commands that restitution be made to him; behold, ———.

<sup>a</sup>Text has "stand."

<sup>b</sup>This is a remarkable corroboration of Strabo, who mentions Rhinocolura as "so called from the colonists, whose noses had been mutilated. Some Ethiopian invaded Egypt and, instead of putting the malefactors to death, cut off their noses and settled them at Rhinocolura. . . ." (XVI, II, § 31; translation of Hamilton and Falconer, III, 176). See also Herodotus, II, 137, and Diodorus, I, 60 and 65; and Müller, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 81.

<sup>c</sup>The ambiguity of the pronouns is also in the original.

VI. AGAINST ROBBING THE POOR OF DUES FOR THE HAREM
OR THE GODS BY THE SOLDIERS (LL. 20-22)

54. [Furthermore, as for those who<sup>1</sup>] ———— <sup>21</sup>and those who bring to the harem, likewise for the offerings of all gods, paying dues to the [two<sup>1</sup>] deputies of the army and ———— [my majesty commands that if any officer is guilty of extortions or thefts<sup>1</sup>], <sup>22</sup>the law [shall be executed] against him, in that his nose<sup>a</sup> shall be cut off, and (he) shall be sent to Tharu [T<sup>2</sup> -rw] likewise.

VII. AGAINST UNLAWFUL APPROPRIATION OF SLAVE
SERVICE (LL. 22-24)

55. When the officers (sdm'w) of the Pharaoh's house of offerings have gone about tax-collecting in the towns, to take [katha (k<sup>2</sup> -f<sup>2</sup>)-plant], [they have seized the slaves of the people, and kept them at work<sup>1</sup>] <sup>23</sup>for 6 days or 7 days, without one's being able to depart from them [afar<sup>1</sup>], so that it was an excessive detention indeed. It shall be done likewise<sup>b</sup> [against them<sup>1</sup>]. If there be any place [where the stewards shall be tax-collecting, and any one<sup>1</sup>] <sup>24</sup>shall hear, saying: "They are tax-collecting, to take katha-plant [for themselves,<sup>1</sup>" and another shall come to report, saying: "My man slave (or) my female slave has been taken away [and detained many days at work by the stewards;" it shall be done likewise against them<sup>1</sup>].

VIII. AGAINST STEALING OF HIDES BY THE SOLDIERS
(LL. 25-28)

56. <sup>25</sup>The two divisions<sup>c</sup> of troops which are in the field, one in the southern region, the other in the northern region, stole hides in the whole land, not passing a year, without applying the [brand<sup>1d</sup> of [the

<sup>a</sup>See note on l. 17.

<sup>b</sup>The same punishment inflicted as in §§ 51 and 54; this is not the place for the penalty, which heretofore has followed, not after the narrative of the crime, but after a second, hypothetical statement of the crime. It is therefore anticipatory, and hence the full statement of the penalty, as in §§ 51 and 54, may have been repeated in the lacuna at the end.

<sup>c</sup>This important statement defines the two great divisions of the army, and shows that Herodotus' division of the Egyptian army of his time into Kalasiries and Hermotybies is not a late arrangement. See Müller, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 82-84, and Wiedemann, Herodots Zweites Buch, 573-77.

<sup>d</sup>Text has "fire."

royal house to cattle which were not due to them, thereby increasing<sup>1</sup> <sup>26</sup>their<sup>1</sup> number, and stealing that which was stamped from them. They went out from house to house, beating and <sup>1</sup>plundering<sup>1</sup> without leaving a hide for <sup>1</sup>the people ———. Then the officer<sup>1</sup> of Pharaoh went about <sup>1</sup>to each one,<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup>to collect the hides charged against him, and came to the people demanding<sup>1</sup> <sup>27</sup>them<sup>1</sup>, but the hides were not found with them (although<sup>1</sup>) the <sup>1</sup>amount charged<sup>1</sup> against them could be established. They satisfied them,<sup>a</sup> saying: "They have been stolen from us." A wretched case is this, <sup>1</sup>therefore<sup>1</sup> it shall be [done] likewise.<sup>b</sup>

57. When the overseer of the cattle of Pharaoh, L. P. H., goes about to attend to the loan-herds<sup>c</sup> in the whole land, and there be not brought to him the hides of the —<sup>d</sup> which are on the <sup>1</sup>lists<sup>1</sup>,<sup>e</sup> <sup>1</sup>he shall not hold the people responsible for the hides if they have them not, but they shall be released by command of his majesty,<sup>1</sup> <sup>28</sup>according to his just purposes.<sup>f</sup> As for any citizen (<sup>c</sup> nh) of the army, (concerning) whom one shall hear, saying: "He goeth about stealing hides," beginning with this day, the law shall be executed against him, by beating him a hundred blows, opening five wounds, and taking from him by force the hides which he took.<sup>g</sup>

IX. AGAINST CONNIVANCE OF DISHONEST INSPECTORS WITH THIEVISH TAX-COLLECTORS, FOR A SHARE OF THE BOOTY (LL. 28-32)

58. Now, as for this other instance of evil which the <sup>1</sup>official staff<sup>h</sup> were accustomed to commit, when they held inspection<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup>in the land, of that which happened<sup>1</sup> <sup>1</sup>against the law<sup>1</sup>, [the table-scribe of] <sup>29</sup>the queen and the table-scribe of the harem went about after the official staff, <sup>a</sup>The officers, here pluralized.

<sup>b</sup>The same punishment inflicted as in §§ 51 and 54.

<sup>c</sup>Herds of the Pharaoh which were contracted to be maintained by private individuals; see also Ameni (I, 522, ll. 16, 17; cf. Müller, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 85-86).

<sup>d</sup>Only the determinative of the fallen enemy or criminal is preserved.

<sup>e</sup>Only an r is visible; perhaps to be read rh't, "list."

<sup>f</sup>The meaning probably is that the cattle loaned on contract by the Pharaoh sometimes died, in which case the people must show the hides. These the corrupt officials often stole before the overseer of cattle arrived.

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "thievishly;" but see Spiegelberg, Studien, 68.

<sup>h</sup>Khnb't?

<sup>i</sup>Fragment placed by Müller.

punishing<sup>a</sup> them and investigating the 'affair'<sup>b</sup> — — of the one who sailed down- or up-river. One investigated it among the officials in the time of the King Menkheperre (Thutmose III).<sup>c</sup> Now, when the one who sailed down- or up-river whom they took; and when [the superior officials of] [the king],<sup>d</sup> Menkheperre, went about<sup>d</sup> [after these officials] <sup>3e</sup>each year,<sup>1</sup> [that they might make an] expedition to the 'city,<sup>1</sup> and that these superior officials might come to these officials, saying: "Give thou [to us] the consideration for the careless expedition;"<sup>e</sup> then, behold, the Pharaoh, L. P. H., made the expedition at the feast of Opet<sup>f</sup> each year without carelessness. One prepared the way before the Pharaoh [and questioned the local magistrate, wherever he] landed,<sup>d</sup> [concerning the <sup>32</sup>corrupt official] causing him to [— —] what he (the corrupt official) was like. As for the one who goes about again, afterward, to seek the consideration — —, then these officials shall go about with the expedition<sup>g</sup> concerning the affairs of these poor people ——— <sup>32</sup>———. <sup>h</sup> My majesty commands to prevent that one shall do thus, beginning with this day ———<sup>i</sup> the landing; he is the one against whom one shall prosecute it.

X. AGAINST STEALING VEGETABLES UNDER PRETENSE OF COLLECTING TAXES (LL. 32-35)

59. Likewise the 'collection' of vegetables for the breweries [and kitchens of the Pharaoh and] ——— [Extortion was practiced, <sup>33</sup>and the officials plundered] the poor, taking the best of their vegetables, saying: "They are for the impost [of the Pharaoh]." [Thus they] robbed the poor of their 'labors,<sup>1</sup> so that a double [impost was levied. Now, my majesty commands that as for any officials who come to] collect vegetables [for] the impost of Pharaoh, L. P. H., in the

<sup>a</sup>Read *c* and see Gardiner, Inscription of Mes, 21, note 59; also p. 40.

<sup>b</sup>Müller supplies nkt, "affair," which is exceedingly probable.

<sup>c</sup>The following is a description of the conditions under Thutmose III.

<sup>d</sup>Fragment.

<sup>e</sup>The meaning is: "We have gone about carelessly, intentionally overlooking your extortions; now divide with us."

<sup>f</sup>Early in October, when he had returned from the summer's campaign in Syria (see II, 409, 410).

<sup>g</sup>Meaning perhaps the expedition of the king, thus preventing collusion.

<sup>h</sup>About ten or twelve words.

<sup>i</sup>Eight or ten words.

arbors,<sup>a</sup> and the — houses of the estates of Pharaoh, L. P. H., and the — of Pharaoh which contain vegetables,<sup>b</sup> (concerning whom<sup>c</sup>) one shall hear, saying: “They — for any [—]<sup>d</sup> of any citizen (<sup>c</sup> nḥ) of the army, or [any] people, [beginning with this day, the law shall be executed against them]<sup>e</sup> ———— 35 — — — transgressing commands.

XI. ENACTMENTS TOO FRAGMENTARY FOR ANALYSIS (LL. 35-39, AND RIGHT SIDE, LL. 1 AND 2)

60. The fragmentary condition of ll. 35-39 makes any coherent rendering impossible. They contain, however, a new enactment of the greatest interest regarding taxation of grain, in which there is an apparent contrast between the property owners, or citizens of the city, and the poor, thus:

61. Now as for these officials of the [herds]<sup>1</sup>, who go about [— —] in the southern region or the northern region collecting grain from the [citizens]<sup>f</sup> of the city<sup>g</sup>. . . . .<sup>36</sup>. . . . going about . . . . . in the southern region or northern region collecting . . . .<sup>g</sup> from the poor. . . .<sup>h</sup>

62. <sup>i</sup> ———— going about taking possession to bring every citizen,<sup>j</sup> to cause them to see ———— (concerning whom) one shall hear, (saying) “<sup>2</sup> ———— a crime, ———— collectors of the harem who go about in the [towns tax-collecting]<sup>1</sup> ———— the [—] of the fishermen ———— carrying the ———— .

<sup>a</sup>Doubtless to be read: wt n(t)-ḥt, like the t-nt-ḥt of IV, 194, 264; and IV, 1021.

<sup>b</sup>Vegetable products in general are thus designated.

<sup>c</sup>The antecedent is “officials” (end of l. 33); see l. 28.

<sup>d</sup>Judging from l. 28, one would expect: “They steal vegetables, etc.,” but Mr. Gardiner’s copy clearly forbids.

<sup>e</sup>After l. 28. <sup>f</sup>The following context shows that we must read nḥ w.

<sup>g</sup>Indications of measurements are given here, which need special study.

<sup>h</sup>Fragments of three lines more are visible.

<sup>i</sup>Proceeding to the right side (miscalled left by Bouriant). This text is so fragmentary that I have made no attempt to indicate the length of the lost portions, or my own omissions.

<sup>j</sup>Tw.

XII. NARRATIVES OF THE KING'S REFORMS, CONTAINING ALSO AN ENACTMENT AGAINST CORRUPT JUDGES
(LL. 3-7)

Appointment of Two Judges

63. <sup>3</sup>I have improved this entire land — — — I have sailed it, as far as south of the wall,<sup>a</sup> I have given ———, I have learned its whole interior, I have traveled it entirely in its midst,<sup>b</sup> I have searched in ——— <sup>4</sup>[[and I have sought two officials<sup>1</sup>]]<sup>c</sup> perfect in speech, excellent in good qualities, knowing how to judge the innermost heart,<sup>d</sup> hearing the words of the palace, the laws of the judgment-hall. I have appointed them to judge the Two Lands, to satisfy those who are in ———. [[I have given to each one<sup>1</sup>]] his seat; I have set them in the two great cities<sup>e</sup> of the South and the North; every land among them cometh to him<sup>f</sup> without exception; I have put before them regulations in the daily register [of the palace]<sup>g</sup> ——— st. — <sup>1</sup>I have directed [them] to the way of life, I lead them<sup>h</sup> to the truth, I teach them,<sup>h</sup> saying: "Do not associate with others of the people;<sup>i</sup> do not receive the reward of another, not hearing — — — —. How, then, shall those<sup>1</sup> like you judge others, while there is one among you committing a crime against justice.

Now, as to the obligation of silver and gold — <sup>6</sup>— — [my] majesty remits it, in order that there be not collected an obligation of anything from the official staff (knb·t) of the South and North.<sup>j</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Probably not a reference to Ptah, but to some southern limit of the kingdom.

<sup>b</sup>See similar statements by Amenemhet III (I, 482, ll. 10, 11).

<sup>c</sup>The reference to "him" (in l. 4) shows that there were but two of these judges, one in each of the two cities. The two viziers must be meant. Mr. Gardiner, however (Inscription of Mes, 34), regards the passage as referring to the two great courts of the South and North (knb·t c·t).

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "that which is in the body" (Coptic makt, "viscera"), meaning the thoughts of a man.

<sup>e</sup>Thebes and either Memphis or Heliopolis, probably the latter.

<sup>f</sup>That is, every man with a complaint comes for redress to the official in whose jurisdiction he lives.

<sup>g</sup>Restored from Annals, (year 31, II, 472, l. 13). <sup>h</sup>Omitted by Müller.

<sup>i</sup>Just what misdeed is implied in this first admonition is not clear. See l. 35 of the front, and Müller, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1888, 92.

<sup>j</sup>Müller thinks this refers to a percentage paid the state by the judges from the income of their office. (This is shown to be a fact by the inscriptions of Rekh-

Punishment of Bribery

64. Now, as for any official or any priest (concerning whom) it shall be heard, saying: "He sits, to execute judgment among the official staff (knb' t) appointed for judgment, and he commits a crime against justice therein;" it shall be against him a capital crime.<sup>a</sup> Behold, my majesty has done this, to improve the laws of Egypt, in order to cause that another should not be — — <sup>b7</sup>————.

Appointment of Local Courts

65. [Behold, my majesty appointed<sup>1</sup>] the official staff (knb' t) of the divine fathers, the prophets of the temples, the officials (h' tyw) of the court (h' nw) of this land and the priests of the gods who comprise the official staff (knb' t) out of desire that they shall judge the citizens (c' nh' w) of every city. My majesty is legislating for Egypt, to prosper the life of its inhabitants; when he<sup>c</sup> appeared upon the throne of Re. Behold, the official staffs (knb' t) have been appointed in the whole land — all — to comprise the official staffs (knb' t) in the cities according to their rank.

XIII. THE KING'S AUDIENCES AND LARGESES (LL. 7-10)

66. <sup>8</sup>———— They<sup>d</sup> went around — times a month, [which<sup>1</sup> he made<sup>1</sup> for them like a feast; every man sat down at a portion of every good thing, of good bread, and meat of the storehouses, of royal provision —————;<sup>e</sup> their voices reached heaven, praising all benefits — the heart of all the soldiers of the army. <sup>9</sup>[The king appeared to the people<sup>1</sup>] — — throwing (gifts) to them from the balcony<sup>f</sup> while every man was called by his name by the king himself. They came forth from the presence rejoicing, laden<sup>g</sup> with the provision of the royal mire, II, 716 ff.) Owing to the strict prohibition of bribery, the king now remits this payment, allowing the judges to keep all their income from the people.

<sup>a</sup>Lit., "a great crime of death."

<sup>b</sup>See Spiegelberg, Studien, 50 f.

<sup>c</sup>As the king is speaking, the first person is to be expected here.

<sup>d</sup>These must be the inspecting officials who are thus so liberally provided for that they have no occasion to accept bribes, etc.

<sup>e</sup>Five or six broken words.

<sup>f</sup>The palace balcony; cf. Great Karnak Inscription of Merneptah (§ 587, l. 48, and note).

<sup>g</sup>Lit., "victualled."

house; yea, they took 'grain-heaps' in the granary, every one of them 'bore' barley and spelt, there was not found one who had nothing ———— 'their cities. 'If' they did not complete the circuit therein within three days, '— —' their khetkhet-officers hastened after them to the place where they were immediately. They were found there ————.

XIV. LAUDATION OF THE KING, AND CONCLUSION<sup>a</sup>

67. Little can be made out of these nine lines. In line 9, the conclusion of the whole edict can be discerned:

Hear ye these commands which my majesty has made for the first time governing the whole land, when my majesty remembered these cases of oppression<sup>b</sup> which occur before this land.

TOMB OF NEFERHOTEP<sup>c</sup>

68. This beautiful tomb, so well known to the tourist visitors at Thebes, contains wall scenes and inscriptions of great importance for the study of religious and mortuary customs. But it also contains one scene of historical importance, depicting the honors received by Neferhotep at the hands of his king, Harmhab.

Scene

69. At the right, in a balcony, stands King Harmhab, wearing a helmet, and carrying the royal scourge. He is accompanied by two attendants. Before him is a court marshal, accompanied by the two viziers, and behind these Neferhotep, with arms uplifted in rejoicing, is being decorated with golden collars by two attendants. Golden collars and bracelets, also intended for him, are lying on a table before the balcony. The accompanying inscriptions are these:

<sup>a</sup>Nine lines on the left side (incorrectly called right by Bouriant). According to Mr. Gardiner, there were originally ten lines.

<sup>b</sup>See ll. 12 and 14 (front), § 50.

<sup>c</sup>In the cliff of Assasif at Thebes; published by Bénédict in Mémoires de la mission française au Caire, V, 489-540, and Pls. I-VI; partially by Dümichen, Historische Inschriften, II, xl, to xl, e, and Flotte, XXX and XXXIII; and Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, I, Pl. 37. This tomb is not to be confused with that of another Neferhotep in the cliff of Shekh Abd-el-Kurna, and published by Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 546-51, 853 f.; Champollion, Monuments, 172 ff.; Rosellini, Monumenti Civili, 130, 131, 134; and Wilkinson, Manners.

Over King's-Attendants

70. Superintendent of a royal domain, king's-butler, king's-attendant in every place.

Before King

71. Year 3 under the majesty of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Zeserkheprure-Setepnere (Harmhab).

Lo, his majesty appeared, like the sun in his palace of satisfying life, after offering bread to his father, Amon. At his coming forth from the Gold-House, acclamation passed through the whole land; and rejoicing, it reached heaven. The divine father of Amon, Neferhotep was summoned to receive the favor of the king's-presence: myriads of everything, of silver, gold, garments, ointment, bread, beer, meat, and cakes, at the command of my lord Amon, who secures my favor in the (royal) presence.

72. The ritual priest, pleasing the heart of Amon, Neferhotep; he says: "How many are the possessions of him who knows the gifts of that god, the king of gods. Wise is he who knows him, favored is he who serves him, there is protection for him who follows him, he is the sun of his body, the Aton who is his, [forever]<sup>a</sup> and ever.

73. After the presentation, Neferhotep, wearing his collars of gold, is met by his brother, Amenemyenet. Over his head is his name with the words: "Rewarded with silver and gold by the king himself." He is followed by another priest, wearing similar collars, and accompanied by the following words:

Arrival in peace, bearing the favor of the king, by the divine father of Amon, Perennefer, triumphant.

---

<sup>a</sup>Nhh must have fallen out here, but it is lacking in both publications.

REIGN OF RAMSES I

WADI HALFA STELA<sup>a</sup>

74. This stela was erected by Ramses I in commemoration of his pious works at the temple of Horus of Bohem (Halfa). These works consisted of new offerings, an increase in the number of priests and servants, and an addition to the temple building. Seti I, in recording on a second stela his own works in this temple, uses the identical form and words of his father's stela,<sup>b</sup> with the exception of the new building record which Seti, who built nothing here, omits. The occurrence of Seti I's name as king at the bottom shows that he was coregent with his father in the latter's second year. His father died not more than six months after the erection of this stela (§ 157), and reigned a maximum of two and a half years.

75. The reference to the "captivity of his majesty" (l. 8) would indicate that Ramses I had somewhere in Nubia carried on war; but as the inscription places him in Memphis, the occurrence of Seti I's name at the bottom may indicate that he (Seti) carried on the campaign, evidently in Nubia.

Introduction

76. <sup>1</sup>Year 2, second month of the second season, twentieth day. Live the Horus: Mighty Bull, Flourishing in Kingship; Favorite of the

---

<sup>a</sup>Discovered by Champollion in 1829 in the southernmost of the two temples at Wadi Halfa (Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 32), and published by him (Monuments, I, 1, No. 2, and partially, Notices descriptives, I, 32-34); again by Rosellini (Monumenti Storici, 45, No. 1), and finally by Brugsch (Thesaurus, V, 1233 f.). Now in the Louvre (C 59), where I made the copy of it used in the accompanying translation.

<sup>b</sup>As both monuments are fragmentary, it is possible to fill up all the lacunæ in Ramses I's monument by reference to Seti's, except one. The brackets in the translation therefore represent restorations from Seti's stela.

Two Goddesses: Shining as King, like — [Golden Horus]: ———
<sup>2</sup>in the Two Lands; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menpehtire; Son of Re: Ramses (I), beloved of Amon, lord of Thebes and Min-si-ese, <sup>3</sup>appearing upon the Horus-throne of the living, like his father, Re, every day.

Establishment of Offerings

77. Lo, his majesty was in the city [of Memphis (H·t-k<sup>2</sup>-Pth)] performing the ceremonies <sup>4</sup>of his father, Amon-Re, Ptah-South-of-His-Wall, lord of “Life-of-the-Two-Lands,” and all the gods of Egypt (T<sup>2</sup>-mry), according as they gave to him [might and victory over all lands], <sup>5</sup>united with one heart in praising thy ka. All lands, all countries, the Nine Bows are overthrown ———. <sup>6</sup>His majesty, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menpehtire (Ramses I), given life, commanded to establish divine offerings for his father, Min-Amon, residing in B[ohen, the first<sup>a</sup> of] his [establishment] <sup>7</sup>in his temple:
 12 (pr·t-s) loaves; 100 (by<sup>2</sup>t) loaves; 4 (ds) jars of beer; 10 bundles of vegetables.

Establishment of Priests

78. Likewise [this temple was filled with prophets, ritual priests] <sup>8</sup>and priests (w<sup>c</sup>b); his storehouse was filled with male and female slaves, of the captivity of his majesty, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menpehtire (Ramses I), [given life, like Re, forever and ever].

New Building

79. <sup>9</sup>His majesty was — watchful, he was not slothful in seeking exce[llent things to do them for his father] <sup>10</sup>Min-Amon, residing in Bohen (Bhny), making for him a temple like the horizon of heaven, wherein Re [rises].

Here follows the double name of Seti I without connection with the preceding; it concludes the inscription.

<sup>a</sup>This was possibly not “first” in Ramses I’s inscription; but it probably was so, or the number of his establishment would not be mentioned at all.

REIGN OF SETI I

KARNAK RELIEFS<sup>a</sup>

80. These reliefs form the most important document surviving from Seti I's reign, being practically our only source for his wars. Unfortunately, their function was a religious one; they furnish us a series of scenes presenting the wars of Seti I in their religious aspect, accompanied by a few meager explanatory inscriptions annexed to the principal actors in each scene. These scenes, like the Annals of Thutmose III, again illustrate the nature of the compact between the Pharaoh and his god: on the one hand, the god grants the Pharaoh the might which prevails over all the nations; on the other, the Pharaoh offers to the god the captives and the plunder thus gained. According to these scenes, the wars of Seti have but one aspect, and that is religious. Even in the arrangement of the scenes on the wall this is evident. Distributed symmetrically on each side of the temple door (see Fig. 1), the action of the suc-

---

<sup>a</sup>This, the most extensive series of war reliefs in Egypt, occupies the exterior of the entire northern wall of the great hypostyle hall in Karnak, and extends also eastward around the corner onto the eastern face of the eastern wall of the hall. The reliefs are arranged in three rows, one above the other, all of the top row being lost except one scene (see Fig. 1). They have been often published, and a statement of the publications will be found inserted in each scene (Fig. 1). But none of the publications meets the demands of modern epigraphic accuracy. I arranged all the inscriptions as given by the several publications in parallel columns, and checked these to some extent by photographs; but my photographs were unfortunately made after the lower row was again encumbered by débris. What purports to be an accurate publication of the inscriptions collated with photographs is given by Guieysse (Recueil, XI, 52-77). I collated over half of Guieysse's publication, and found it so excessively inaccurate that it was useless to insert its variants, and I did not employ it further. (See my note, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 139, n. 5.) On the princes in these reliefs, see my remarks, ibid., 37, 130-39.

cessive scenes converges on that door, until the final scenes on each side of it represent the culminating sacrifice in the temple itself in the presence of the god. At the two extreme ends, as far from the door as possible, are the battles and marches of the war in distant lands; moving toward the door follow the capture and deportation of prisoners, the arrival in Egypt, the presentation of prisoners and spoil to Amon, and finally on either side of the door itself the slaying of captive princes, who are thus sacrificed in the temple by the king himself in the presence of Amon.

81. The only date in these reliefs is that of the year 1, which occurs only with the reliefs of the Shasu campaign. It is absurd to suppose that Seti I completed a war with the Libyans, a campaign against the Shasu, the conquest of Palestine and some of southern Syria, and a war with the Hittites, and finally accomplished the return to Thebes, all in one year.

In the opinion of the present writer, the arrangement above described indicates at least two great periods of war, each made by the artist to culminate in a human sacrifice before Amon.<sup>a</sup> The first (east of the door, Scenes 1-11) is a war in the year 1<sup>b</sup> against the Shasu, followed by a

---

<sup>a</sup>This does not overlook the fact that the geographical list accompanying each sacrificial scene is identically the same. The whole series of scenes was planned after the completion of Seti's conquests, and the total territory gained could not, of course, then be cut up and assigned to different campaigns. Moreover, these two lists are only intended to convey the impression of vast conquest, and are so full of mistakes and repetitions as to show clearly that their compiler had no definite idea of the territory covered.

<sup>b</sup>This date occurs only on the east side of the door (thrice, Scene 3, Scene 8, and Scene 9, all in the Shasu row), and dates both beginning and end of of Seti's first campaign. There is no more reason for supposing that the Syrian campaign on the west side of the door, which bears no date, necessarily took place in year 1, than that two contiguous undated campaigns of Thutmose III must belong to the same year.

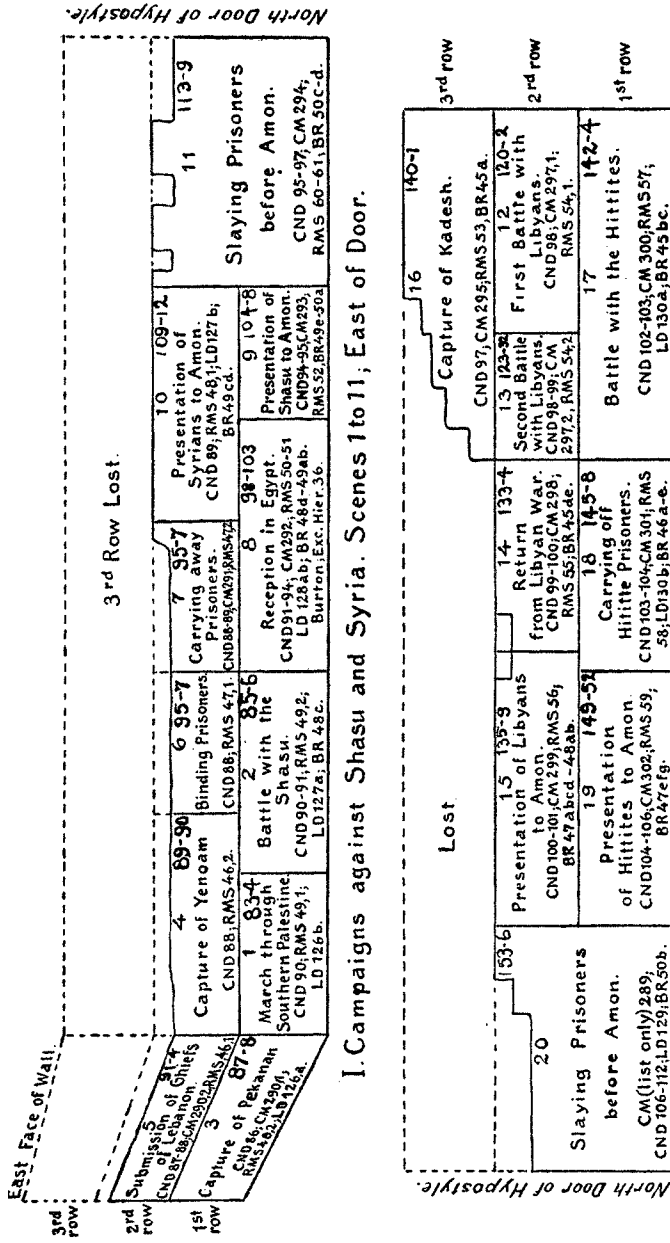

FIG. 1.—Plan of the Reliefs of Seti I, on the North Wall of the Great Hall of Karnak (each scene is numbered in the middle at the top; the numbers in the upper right-hand corners are the paragraphs of the translations herein. The abbreviations of the publications are: CND = Champollion, Notices descriptives; CM = Champollion, Monuments; RMS = Rosellini, Monumenti Storici; LD = Lepsius, Denkmäler; BR = Brugsch, Receuil de monuments).

campaign to the north as far east as the Hauran;<sup>a</sup> thence westward along the Phœnician coast, perhaps as far as Simyra, and Ullaza; the second, preceded by a subordinate campaign against the Libyans, is the further prosecution of the Syrian conquest. The method pursued is exactly that of Thutmose III in his conquest of 130 years before (II, 396), viz., first to gain control of the Phœnician coast, and thoroughly establish connection with Egypt by sea, so that reinforcements and supplies for the next campaign might land at one of the Phœnician harbors from which as a base he could move upon the interior of Syria, especially the Orontes valley.<sup>b</sup> From the coast the war was now carried inland and northward between the Lebanons, where the Egyptians met the Hittites for the first time in battle.<sup>c</sup> It

<sup>a</sup>Professor G. A. Smith discovered a monument showing Seti I worshipping Amon and Mut in the Hauran, in 1901, at "Tell-esh-Shihâb" (Athenæum, July 6, 1901; Académie des Inscriptions, October 18, 1901). But see § 140.

<sup>b</sup>That Seti follows the method of Thutmose III is evident at every step. His first campaign, like that of Thutmose III, is through southern Palestine; then, like Thutmose III, he moves northward through Palestine and subdues the Lebanon. Before Thutmose III can move upon Kadesh, he secures the Phœnician coast (fifth campaign), and attacks Kadesh the next season. It can be no accident that the campaign of Seti's first year subdues Lebanon and the Phœnician coast, while the (undated) campaign west of the door shows him in the Hittite country on the Orontes. The undated Hittite campaign here clearly bears the same relation to the coast campaign as in the case of Thutmose III.

<sup>c</sup>A glance at Fig. 1 will show that the arrangement of the wars on each side of the door strikingly indicates that they fall into two groups. One row on each side is a preliminary campaign near home, while the other rows on each side are the more important distant battles and conquests, thus:

Lost	Door	Lost	Kadesh
Syria (without date)		Libya (without date)
Shasu (year 1)		Hittites (without date)

We thus get two groups of wars: (1) Shasu-Syrian wars; (2) Libyan-Hittite wars. The further question now arises, whether each row does not represent a separate war. This is clearly the case with the two lower rows on the right-hand is possible that Seti at this time reached even as far north as Naharin, as he claims in his lists;<sup>a</sup> but the Hittite power was evidently not broken, and Seti could not push his permanent northern boundary beyond an east-and-west line running through the Phœnician coast (probably well south), eastward into the Hauran, and his son, Ramses II, was obliged to spend long years in the struggle for the upper Orontes valley (§§ 294 ff.).<sup>b</sup>

82. 1. In harmony with the supposition of several campaigns in Asia is the fact that Seti numbered his campaigns, or at least began to do so. Furthermore, on returning from the campaign of the year 1, a rebellion is announced to him, as in the case of Thutmose IV (II, 826) for example, calling for a further campaign. A stela,<sup>c</sup> erected in the Ptah-temple at Karnak in his first year after his return from the first campaign, runs thus:

---

side of the door; on the left-hand side it is probable, for only the Shasu war is dated, and he returns from that war (Scene 8) by land, of course, whereas he would more probably return by sea (as did Thutmose III), had he pushed on directly from the Shasu war into Syria, and gained possession of the Phœnician coast. If, therefore, each row represents a different war, Seti fought at least four Asiatic campaigns (besides the Libyan war), of which one is in the south and three in the north.

<sup>a</sup>It must not be forgotten that, with the exception of the scene of the capture of Kadesh (Scene 16, Fig. 1), the entire uppermost row of Seti's reliefs (that is, about one-third of them) is lost. As the capture of Kadesh shows, this uppermost row dealt with his northernmost advance inland. We may therefore have lost in this row full corroboration of the northern advance claimed in the lists.

<sup>b</sup>Other references to Seti's conquests are few in number: (1) The Wadi Halfa Stela (§§ 157 ff.). (2) The stela of Hori from Abydos (Mariette, Abydos, II, 51, which is incorrectly numbered 57), where Seti is seen before Osiris saying: "I have made for thee great herds of cattle from the captivity of my might." Hori's titles were: "Overseer of herds of the house (h't) of Menmare, (named): 'The-Heart-is-Satisfied-in-Abydos,' and mayor, Hori, belonging to 'The-Tower (bhn)-of-Ramses.'" The last is some fortified place (cf. Scene 3) established or named by Seti's father, Ramses, from which Hori came. (3) The Elephantine Stela (§§ 203, 204); (4) He is called: "Slayer of Palestine, smiter of Kush," in a rock inscription at Silsileh (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 141, g). (5) The list on the north wall, Karnak (loc. cit., III, 144; see note on Scene 11, § 114, note).

<sup>c</sup>Legrain, Annales, III, 112, 113.

<sup>1</sup>Year 1 under the majesty of Seti I . . . .<sup>5</sup> . . .<sup>a</sup> His majesty returned with glad heart from his first victorious campaign, <sup>6</sup>when his onset passed over every country, and he took captive the rebellious countries by the puissance of his father, Amon, who decreed to him victorious might. He puts himself before him with glad heart <sup>7</sup>furnishing <sup>1</sup>protection<sup>1</sup> for his son, assigning to him South, North, West, and East. They who invade his border are gathered together and delivered into his hand. There is none that thrusts aside his hand, carrying away their chiefs <sup>8</sup>as living captives, with their tribute upon their backs, presenting them to his august father, Amon, and his associate gods, in order to fill their storehouse with male and female slaves, <sup>9</sup>the captivity of every country. Lo, his majesty was at the Southern City (Thebes), performing the pleasing ceremonies of his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes —————.

2. The announcement of hostilities,<sup>b</sup> by a messenger who found the king thus engaged, unquestionably followed. This cannot be the announcement of the Shasu invasion of the year 1, which is already past. It can only be that of the Libyans, who are now invading the Delta. This supposition becomes extremely probable, if not a certainty, when we note that Seti I spent the next year in the Delta, as proved by the bills<sup>c</sup> for the maintenance of his court during year 2 and part of year 3. They show that Seti spent practically the whole of the year 2 in the Delta,<sup>d</sup> Memphis, or Heliopolis. This would indicate that he fought the Libyan war in that year.

<sup>a</sup>Full title and several lines of conventional encomium.

<sup>b</sup>As so frequently in such inscriptions, e. g., II, 826.

<sup>c</sup>Papyri in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, published by Spiegelberg, Rechnungen aus der Zeit Seti I. The numbers used are his.

<sup>d</sup>In year 2 he was at Memphis from the second to the fourth of the first month (Bill 2); in the eastern Delta on the seventh, and in the same place from the fourteenth of the first month to the thirtieth of the fourth month (Bill 2), with the exception of the twenty-third and twenty-eighth of the fourth month, when he was in Memphis (Bill 5). On the sixteenth of the sixth month he was in Heliopolis (Bill 7); and from the seventh of the fourth month (with the above exceptions) to the seventeenth (?) of the eleventh month he was in the eastern Delta (Bill 3).

In the following treatment each scene is numbered as in Fig. 1, where its position on the wall can be instantly determined.

SCENE I. MARCH THROUGH SOUTHERN PALESTINE<sup>a</sup>

83. On leaving Tharu, his last station in Egypt, Seti strikes into the desert south of and merging into Palestine. Here he finds only fortified water stations<sup>b</sup> at intervals along the way, which are depicted (Fig. 2), each with its name added, in the relief. The interspersed inscriptions are these:

Over King, Left of Sun

Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare; Lord of Diadems [Seti-Mer-neptah].

In Fortress

84. Town (dmy) —.

Over Horses

Great first span of his majesty: "Amon-Assigns-to-Him-the-Victory," also called: "Anath (<sup>c</sup> n-ty-t)-is-Satisfied."

Over Horses Each Side of Fortress

<sup>1</sup>The Good God achieving with his arms, an archer like Montu, residing in Thebes, ———, smiting <sup>2</sup>the Asiatics, making his boundary as far as his desire places it; his arm is not repulsed <sup>3</sup>in all the lands; the king who protects <sup>4</sup>Egypt, who pierces <sup>5</sup>the wall <sup>6</sup>in the rebellious countries. <sup>7</sup>He causes the chiefs of Kharu (H<sup>3</sup> -rw) <sup>8</sup>to cease every contradiction of their mouths. His mighty sword <sup>9</sup>is his<sup>c</sup> valor; his might is like the son of Nut.

Over Princes, behind Chariot

———— every country beneath [thy] sandals ———.

<sup>a</sup>Bibliography in Fig. 1.

<sup>b</sup>See Müller (Asien und Europa, 134).

<sup>c</sup>The second arm is probably to be corrected to the possessive f, as Guieysse has done.

FIG. 2.—Seti I on the Route through Southern Palestine (Scene I, §§ 83, 84).
 (This example may serve to illustrate the character of this series of reliefs.)

In Fort, over Horses

Town [dmy], which his majesty built anew at the well of Hu — ti (Hw — ty).<sup>a</sup>

Under Fort, over Horses

The victory ——— Menmare, heir of Re.
 ——— [H]arabat ([H]<sup>2</sup> -r<sup>2</sup> -b<sup>2</sup> -ty, with determinative of a well.)

Under Fort, under Horses

The well: "Menmare-is-Great-in-Victory."

In Pool, under Horses

The pool: "Sweet."

SCENE 2. BATTLE WITH THE SHASU<sup>b</sup>

85. Pushing along this road in the Negeb, the king scatters the Shasu, who from time to time gather in sufficient numbers to meet him. One of these actions is depicted in this relief as taking place on the desert road, with the neighboring fortified stations indicated as in the preceding scene (§§ 83, 84).

In King's Bow

86. Menmare, Seti-Merneptah.

In Fortress, Right End

The stronghold (bhn) of Menmare (called): "The — His-Protection."

Under Same

"The Fortress (nhtw) of Seti-Merneptah."

<sup>a</sup>The restoration of Guieysse, viz., bw-r<sup>2</sup> between Hw and ty, is merely a guess. It is more likely we should restore according to the broken line under the fort, where a word of which the beginning is lacking has also the determinative of a well (like the broken word in the fortress), thus: [H]<sup>2</sup> -r<sup>2</sup> -b<sup>2</sup> -ty (and determinative of well). The H is uncertain, but exceedingly probable. Thus our word in the fortress is probably Hw - [r<sup>2</sup> -b<sup>2</sup>] - ty, though two of the copies (Champollion, Notices descriptives, and Lepsius, Denkmäler) show the beginning of a bird with a stroke (b<sup>2</sup>?), as the sign after hw. This is surely , "desert" or "ruin."

<sup>b</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Middle Fortress

Town (dmj) which [his] majesty [buil]t a[new].

In Pool

The pool: "Ibsekeb" (Yb-s ˆ -k ˆ -b ˆ).

Under Fortress, Left End

The well of Seti-Merneptah.

Over Battle

The Good God, Sun of Egypt, Moon of all lands, Montu in the foreign countries; irresistible, mighty-hearted like Baal, there is none that approaches him on the day of drawing up the battle-line. He has extended the boundaries of Egypt as far as the heavens on every side. The rebels, they know not how they shall [flee];<sup>a</sup> the vanquished of the Shasu, who were —, — — his majesty; [becoming like] that which exists not.

SCENE 3. CAPTURE OF PEKANAN<sup>b</sup>

87. The fighting with the Shasu, as depicted in the preceding scene, continued until Seti reached Canaan. Somewhere on the frontier, not far into Asia, Seti apparently meets a fortified town, to which the relief gives the name "Pekanan" or "the Canaan." Exactly what this name means here is not certain. Pekanan is used in the text (§ 88) to indicate the limits of the war with the Shasu since the king has left Tharu, his last stop in Egypt. "The town of Pekanan" would seem, therefore, to indicate the place of his arrival in Canaan, as Müller thinks (Asien und Europa, 205); but this is not certain. The Egyptians called the entire west of Syria-Palestine "Canaan,"<sup>c</sup> and it is only certain that Seti is now fighting somewhere in that country.

<sup>a</sup>Determinative of legs is preserved.

<sup>b</sup>For publications, see Fig. 1, to which may be added Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 48.

<sup>c</sup>Pekanan; "Pe" is the article, the whole being "the Canaan" as we say "the Levant."

Over King

88. King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menmare, Son of Re: Seti-Merneptah, given life, like Re, beloved of Menhyt.

Fortress

Town (dmj) of Pekanan ( $P^{\circ} - k^{\circ} - n^{\circ} - n^{\circ}$ ).

Over Horses

Great first span of his majesty: "Victory-in-Thebes."

Over Enemy

<sup>1</sup>Year 1. King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menmare (Seti I). The destruction <sup>2</sup>which the mighty sword of Pharaoh, L. P. H., made among the <sup>3</sup>vanquished of the Shasu ( $\check{S}^{\circ} - sw$ ) from <sup>4</sup>the fortress of Tharu ( $\check{T}^{\circ} - rw$ ) to <sup>5</sup>Pekanan ( $P^{\circ} - k^{\circ} - n^{\circ} - n^{\circ}$ ), when his majesty <sup>6</sup>marched against them like a fierce-eyed lion, <sup>7</sup>making them carcasses in their <sup>8</sup>valleys, overturned in their blood like <sup>9</sup>those that exist not. Everyone that escapes his fingers <sup>10</sup>says: "His might toward distant countries is <sup>11</sup>the might of his father, Amon, who hath assigned to him<sup>a</sup> <sup>12</sup>victorious valor in the countries ( $h^{\circ} s^{\circ} wt$ )."

SCENE 4. CAPTURE OF YENOAM

89. Seti has now traversed the entire length of Palestine. His lists (§ 114) show that after crossing Carmel he captured Peher and Bethshael, both in the plain of Jezreel, and then proceeded to Akko, whence he marched along the Phœnician coast to Tyre and Othu. Our relief represents the capture of Yenoam, which lies a short distance inland from the last two cities. It is depicted surrounded by forest, as we should expect.

Name in Fortress

90. Town of Yenoam ( $Y^{\circ} - nw - c^{\circ} - mw$ ).

<sup>a</sup>Guieysse, "to thee."

SCENE 5. SUBMISSION OF THE CHIEFS OF LEBANON<sup>a</sup>

91. Leaving Tyre and Othu, Seti now pushed northward, and advanced along the coast of Phœnicia, as indicated by his lists (§ 114). As he passes Lebanon, he receives the submission of its local dynasts, and secures cedar<sup>b</sup> for his temples in Egypt. This the Syrians are depicted as felling, while one of Seti's officers assures him of their submission. The name of this officer is not given, but he has been identified by Wiedemann with the prince appearing in the Libyan campaign, for which there is no evidence.<sup>c</sup>

92. According to Seti's lists (§ 114), he advanced northward along the coast past Simyra and Ullaza, but the upper row of reliefs, which contained the northernmost conquests,<sup>d</sup> has unfortunately been lost, and we are unable to control the lists or trace this coast march in detail. If Seti really reached Simyra and Ullaza, it was only the intervening mountains on the east which prevented a collision with the Hittites.

93. Having secured the coast,<sup>e</sup> as did his great ancestor, Thutmose III, Seti returned home with his plunder. He was now certain of a harbor for his sea connection with Syria on the next campaign—a connection which would greatly facilitate future operations in the North.

In Fortress

94. Town (dmy) of Kader ( $\overline{K}^{\text{D}}$  -dw-rw) in Ṗemehtem ( $P^{\text{D}}$  -mḥ-t^{\text{D}} -m^{\text{D}})<sup>1, f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

<sup>b</sup>See my New Chapter, 28, 29.

<sup>c</sup>See my remarks, "Ramses II and the Princes in the Karnak Reliefs of Seti I," Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 136, 137.

<sup>d</sup>As shown by the one scene (the capture of Kadesh) preserved in this uppermost row.

<sup>e</sup>It is difficult to say just where Seti attempted to fix his northern boundary in Phœnicia; if Ramses II's stela at Beyrut are boundary marks, as seems probable, then Seti's boundary is almost certain to have been south of Beyrut, as Ramses would probably not mark off less than his father held.

<sup>f</sup>So Guieysse, but Champollion, Notices descriptives, omits t^{\text{D}}, and Champol-

Before and behind King

[Inspection of the chiefs of] Lebanon, who are cutting down [cedars for]<sup>a</sup> the great barge of the "Beginning-of-the-River," ——— likewise for the great flagstaves of Amon, ——— building ——— with satisfying life ——— [like] Re, every day ———, Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Uhem-mesut. ——— Mightiest of Bows ——— Seti-Merneptah, given life.<sup>b</sup> ———satisfied with victory; the chiefs ——— his might ——— his ——— [he loves an hour of battle] more than a day [of rejoicing] ——— he sees <sup>1</sup>them<sup>1</sup>, his lord ——— his heart is satisfied, making the boundaries of Egypt ——— to fill the storehouses ——— heir ——— in —.

Before Egyptian Officer

Said the fan-bearer at the right of the king in his answer to the Good God: "It shall be done according to all that thou hast said, O Horus, Vivifier of the Two Lands. Thou art like Montu in every country; when the chiefs of Retenu (Rtṛw) see thee, the fear of thee is in their limbs.

Over Chiefs of Lebanon

The great chiefs of Lebanon; they say in praising the Lord of the Two Lands, in magnifying his might: "Thou seemest like thy father, Re; there is life in seeing thee."

SCENES 6 AND 7. BINDING AND CARRYING AWAY PRISONERS<sup>c</sup>

95. The return to Egypt has begun, and we see the king in two symbolical scenes binding and carrying away the captives.

Before and behind King

96. 6. ——— all countries; he carries them off as living captives ——— Hartema, Lord ——— felling ——— his enemies.

lion, Monuments, and Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, have P<sup>2</sup>-hn-m<sup>2</sup>. On Kader, which is the Hebrew "Gader," a "stockade" or "inclosure," see Müller, Asien und Europa, 202, 203.

<sup>a</sup>For the restorations, see my New Chapter, 29, note a.

<sup>b</sup>These fragments of Seti I's complete titulary may be restored from Redesiyeh (§§ 169, l. 1).

<sup>c</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Over Horses

97. 7. Great first span of his majesty: "Great-in-Victory."

Over Prisoners

Great chiefs of Retenu (Rtṃw), whom his majesty carried off as living captives.

SCENE 8. RECEPTION IN EGYPT<sup>a</sup>

98. Seti has now reached Egypt, and nears the frontier city, Tharu, driving and leading his prisoners. On the Egyptian side of the canal which passes by the city stands a body of officials acclaiming the victorious Pharaoh.<sup>b</sup>

99. The most important item in this scene is the long inscription (§ 101), which informs us of the reason of Seti's chastisement of the Shasu. It was reported to him that the Bedwin (Shasu) were making common cause against the Palestinians (Kharu), and that this invasion had resulted in the complete overthrow of all authority in Palestine. That these Bedwin are the Khabiri<sup>c</sup> of the Amarna Letters there can be no doubt. The conditions which confronted Seti I in Palestine are exactly those which we should expect in view of what we learn from the letters of Abdkhiba of Jerusalem. There is also further evidence of the same conditions, in the tomb of Harmhab (§§ 10 ff.). The attempt of the Hebrews to gain a footing in Palestine is undoubtedly involved in the larger movement of the Bedwin, which Seti here records.<sup>d</sup>

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1, to which may be added Brugsch, Geographische Inschriften, I, Pl. 48.

<sup>b</sup>The prince who marches behind the Pharaoh whose name is lost (§ 102 infra), has been identified by Wiedemann with the crown prince of Scene 13; for which there is no evidence, and against which there is conclusive evidence. See Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 27, 136, 137.

<sup>c</sup>See Ed. Meyer, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 75, 76.

<sup>d</sup>See Meyer, loc. cit.

Over King

100. King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands. Menmare; Son of Re, Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah, given life, like Re.

Under Vulture

Nekhet, the white goddess of Nekhen, may she give life, stability, and satisfaction, like Re.

In Canal

The bridge.

In Fort, by Canal

The fortress (h̄tm) of Tharu (T<sup>3</sup>-rw).

Fort under Horses

The store-chamber: "The Lion."

In Fort behind Horses

The Tower (M-k-ty-r<sup>2</sup>) of Menmare.

Beside Pool of Fort

The Pool of Hepen (Hw-p<sup>2</sup>-n<sup>2</sup>).<sup>a</sup>

Fort behind Horses

Buto of Seti-Merneptah.

Pool under Fort

The pool of the water-<sup>1</sup>supply<sup>1</sup>.

Over Horses

Great first span of his majesty, L. P. H.: "Amon-He-Giveth-Might."

Over Horses at Top

101. Year 1 of Uhem-mesut<sup>b</sup> <sup>2</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands, Menmare, given Life.

<sup>a</sup>This occurs in two places according to Champollion, Notices descriptives, and Lepsius, Denkmäler, 128, but the one placed by these two authorities on the right side of the canal is not to be found in my photograph. The reading Hw-t<sup>2</sup>-y-n<sup>2</sup> (Anast., 1, 27) would indicate that we should read Hw-t<sup>2</sup>-na here, but the texts all have p<sup>2</sup>. See Müller (Asien und Europa, 134), who, however, has not gone back of the publications.

<sup>b</sup>Part of the second name in Seti I's fivefold titulary, see infra, Redesiyeh, § 169, l. 1.

<sup>3</sup>One came to say to his majesty: <sup>4</sup>"The vanquished Shasu ( $\text{Š}^{\text{D}}\text{-sw}$ ), they plan <sup>5</sup>rebellion<sup>1</sup>. Their tribal chiefs <sup>6</sup>are gathered together, rising<sup>2</sup> against the Asiatics of Kharu<sup>a</sup> ( $\text{H}^{\text{D}}\text{-rw}$ ). <sup>7</sup>They have taken to cursing, and quarreling, each of them <sup>8</sup>slaying his neighbor, and they disregard the laws of the <sup>9</sup>palace."

The heart of his majesty, L. P. H., was glad on account of it. <sup>10</sup>Lo, as for the Good God, he rejoices <sup>11</sup>to begin battle, he is delighted to <sup>12</sup>enter<sup>b</sup> into it, his heart is satisfied <sup>13</sup>at seeing blood, he cuts off <sup>14</sup>the heads of the rebellious-hearted, he loves <sup>15</sup>an hour of battle more than a day of rejoicing. His majesty slays them at one time. He leaves not a limb among them, and he that escapes his hand as a living captive, is carried off to Egypt.

Over Prince<sup>c</sup> behind Chariot

102. Following the king on his marches in the countries of Retenu ( $\text{R}^{\text{t}}\text{nw}$ ), by the hereditary prince, great in invocation<sup>d</sup> by ———— real king's-scribe, his beloved ———— king's-son, of his body, his beloved ———— <sup>e</sup>

Over Rejoicing Egyptians

103. Prophets, nobles, and officials ( $\text{h}^{\text{D}}\text{-tyw}$ ) of the South and North, coming to acclaim to the Good God, at his return from the country of Retenu ( $\text{R}^{\text{t}}\text{nw}$ ) with very numerous captivity. <sup>2</sup>Never was seen the like of it, since <sup>3</sup>the time of the god. They say, in <sup>4</sup>praising his majesty, in magnifying <sup>5</sup>his might: "Welcome art thou, from <sup>6</sup>the countries which thou hast subdued; <sup>7</sup>thou art triumphant, and thy enemies are <sup>8</sup>beneath thee. Thy duration as king <sup>9</sup>is like Re in heaven, while gratifying thy heart <sup>10</sup>on the Nine Bows. When Re made thy

<sup>a</sup>Or: "standing (gaining a foothold) in the Kharite (Horite) regions of Asia."

<sup>b</sup>Or: "when one transgresses against him."

<sup>c</sup>See also Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, III, 19.

<sup>d</sup>My explanation in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache (XXXVII, 136, n. 5) is incomplete, if not incorrect; sh, or sw <sup>2</sup>, means "to bless or curse," these meanings being derived from a common idea, viz., "to invoke divine powers," a meaning used in magical texts.

<sup>e</sup>This fragmentary name contained the syllable nb or hb; hence Lefebvre restores Harmhab (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XII, 447); while Wiedemann at first favored Nebwa ( $\text{Nb-w}^{\text{D}}$ ) (Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XII, 258 ff.), and later thinks it was Amon-nefer-nebef (Recueil, XVIII, 121). See my note, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache (37, 137, note 1).

boundary, his two arms <sup>10</sup>were a protection behind thee. Thy sword was in the midst of <sup>11</sup>every land, and their chiefs fell by thy blade."

SCENE 9. PRESENTATION OF SHASU PRISONERS AND PRECIOUS VESSELS TO AMON<sup>a</sup>

104. Seti appears before Amon presenting him with slaves and costly vessels from his campaign against the Shasu, though the victories are stated to have been in Retenu, and the upper row of captives is affirmed to be from Retenu.

Over Amon

105. Utterance of Amon-Re, Lord of Thebes: "O my beloved son, Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare, I have caused that thou shouldst be [victorious] over every country, that thou shouldst rule over their chiefs, so that they come to thee, gathered together with a burden (tribute) upon their backs, for fear of thee."

Over Tribute

106. [Presentation of the tribute by his majesty to his father, Amon],<sup>b</sup> at the return from the country of Retenu (Rt<sup>nw</sup>). The chiefs of the country are living prisoners, their tribute upon their back, consisting of every vessel, the choicest of their countries, of gold, silver, lapis lazuli | — — which thou givest me in every country ———.

Over Prisoners, Upper Line

107. Chiefs of countries which knew not Egypt, which his majesty carried away, from his victories in the country of Retenu (Rt<sup>nw</sup>) the wretched. They say, in magnifying his majesty, in acclaiming his victories: "Hail to thee! How great is thy name, how mighty thy power! The countries rejoice to be subject to thee, and they that transgress thy boundary are bound. By thy ka! We knew not Egypt, nor had our fathers trodden it. Give to us the breath that thou givest."

Over Prisoners, Lower Line

108. Captivity which his majesty carried off from the Shasu (Š<sup>3</sup> -sw), whom his majesty himself overthrew, in the year 1 of Uhem-mesut (Seti I).

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

<sup>b</sup>Restored from Scene 10.

SCENE 10. PRESENTATION OF SYRIAN PRISONERS AND PRECIOUS VESSELS TO AMON

109. A scene like that in the preceding relief, but with Syrians in place of Shasu.

Over Amon

110. Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes: "Thou comest in peace, O Good God, Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare, I have set thy might in every country, thy fear in the hearts of the Nine Bows. Their chiefs come to thee as one man, with a burden (viz., tribute) on their backs. I have placed for thee the lands under thy fear, bowing down in terror of thee."

Over Vessels

111. Presentation of the tribute by his majesty, to his father, Amon, at his return from the country of Retenu (Rtnw), the wretched; consisting of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, 1—1, and every splendid, costly stone. The chiefs of the countries are inclosed in his grasp, in order to fill the storehouse of his father, Amon, by the might that thou hast given to me (sic!).

Over Prisoners, Upper Row

112. Arrival of his majesty from Retenu (Rtnw) the Upper, extending the boundaries of Egypt ———.

Over Prisoners, Lower Row

Chiefs of countries that knew not Egypt, whom his majesty carried off as living captives.

SCENE 11. SLAYING PRISONERS BEFORE AMON<sup>a</sup>

113. This bloody ceremony, which is of very ancient origin, is the king's final recognition of his power as coming from the god, before whom he now sacrifices a number of the foes, whom the god has enabled him to vanquish. The fulsome praise and promises of the god are taken from earlier sources. The first portion (§ 116) is plagiarized from the great stela of Amenhotep III recounting his buildings (II, 891, 892). Seti I had restored this splendid stela after its defacement by Ikhnaton (II, 878), and apparently at its restoration it was found to be so pleasing by Seti that he appropriated its form for his own use, but with many changes. Seti's form of it was then again used by Ramses III on his Medinet Habu temple (IV, 137). The other part of Amon's discourse (§ 117) is taken from a still earlier composition, the great Hymn of Victory of Thutmose III (II, 658 ff.), but again with some changes.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

114. The title over the captive towns and countries led by Amon and a Theban genius, is restored from Scene 20, where it is repeated. This list of the towns and countries gained in these conquests was appended to each of the two sacrificial scenes (11 and 20) concluding the two great series. Both lists are totally confused, even the stereotyped "Nine Bows" being broken up into two fragments. Evidently little reliance can be placed upon them, as they are placed here to serve a conventional function, viz., merely to convey the idea of vast conquests. Fortunately, a more careful list of Seti's conquests is preserved upon a sphinx in his temple at Kurna,<sup>a</sup> which is as follows: 1-9, the "Nine Bows;" 10, Kheta (ḥt<sup>2</sup>); 11, Naharin (N-h-r-ny); 12, Alasa (2-r<sup>2</sup>-s<sup>2</sup>); 13, Akko (c-k<sup>2</sup>); 14, Simyra (d<sup>2</sup>-my<sup>2</sup>;<sup>b</sup> r<sup>2</sup>); 15, Peher (P<sup>2</sup>-h-r<sup>2</sup>); 16, Bethshael (B<sup>2</sup>-t-š<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>); 17, Khamehem (ḥ<sup>2</sup>-my-h-mw); 18, Yenoam (Y-nw<sup>2</sup>-mw);<sup>c</sup> 19, Ullaza (2-n-n-r<sup>2</sup>-t<sup>2</sup>); 20, Kemed (K<sup>2</sup>-my-dw); 21, Tyre (d<sup>2</sup>-rw); 22, Othu (Yw-tw); 23, Bethanath (B<sup>2</sup>-t<sup>2</sup>-n-t<sup>2</sup>); 24, Keremim (k<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>-my-mw);<sup>c</sup> The remaining names (25-43) are haphazard selections<sup>a</sup> of the famous towns and districts, chiefly of Asia, familiar to the Egyptians from earlier conquests. Only the towns in the northern plain of Jezreel, and in Phœnicia are grouped together (Nos. 13-24), but within the group they occur at haphazard. Not even such a grouping can be discovered in the aimless, confused conclusion (Nos. 25-43).<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 131, a. See Müller, Asien und Europa, 191-95.

<sup>b</sup>Text "ty," which is clearly to be corrected to r<sup>2</sup> (Müller, Asien und Europa, 187, n. 2).

<sup>c</sup>Perhaps to be corrected, as Müller does (Asien und Europa, 195), to K<sup>2</sup>-r<sup>2</sup>-t<sup>2</sup>-n-t<sup>2</sup>.

115. In harmony with the claims of these lists the words accompanying the king's action claim for him the great domain of his predecessors of the Eighteenth Dynasty, viz., from the "Horns of the Earth,"<sup>c</sup> on the south, to the "marshes of Naharin," (§ 118) on the north. This is still literally true for the southern boundary, but is unquestionably an exaggeration in the case of the northern boundary. If Seti ever carried his arms as far as Naharin, he was unable to establish his boundary there, or hold anything inland, north of Galilee.

Over Amon

116. <sup>1</sup>Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes: "O my son, of my body, <sup>2</sup>my beloved, Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare, lord of might in every country! <sup>3</sup>I am thy father; I set thy terror in Retenu, the Upper and <sup>4</sup>the Lower. The Nubian Troglodytes are slain beneath thy feet.

I bring <sup>5</sup>to thee the chiefs of the southern countries, that they may

---

<sup>a</sup>They do not seem to be taken from Scenes 11 and 20, as Müller states (Müller, Asien und Europa, 191, n. 1), but are equally orderless and methodless selections from the names known to the compiler.

<sup>b</sup>A relief on this same north wall of Karnak shows Amon presenting to an uncertain king a series of thirty captured towns. Müller (Asien und Europa, 164-66) has shown that this list includes some towns in the west of central Palestine. He has attributed the relief to Ramses II, but the location of the document, where only Seti I's inscriptions are found would indicate that it belongs to the latter.

<sup>c</sup>A stela at Ibrim contains similar references (Sayce, Recueil, 16, 170 f.); the southern boundary is given as the "Horns of the Earth," and, referring to the northern, the king is called the "crusher of Retenu, carrying off their chiefs as living prisoners." Then follow the conventional references to the submission of South and North.

make thee to receive the tribute, being <sup>6</sup>every good product of their countries, to hasten <sup>7</sup>————.

[I turn] my face to the north,<sup>a</sup> I work a wonder <sup>8</sup>[for thee] — — — snaring the rebels in their nests by the power of thy might. I bring to thee <sup>9</sup>countries that know not Egypt, with their tribute borne, consisting of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, every splendid costly stone of God's-Land.

<sup>10</sup>I turn my face to the east, I work a wonder for thee, I bind them all for thee, gathered in thy grasp. I gather together all the countries <sup>11</sup>of Punt, all their tribute, of gum of myrrh (<sup>c</sup> nty), cinnamon, and all the pleasant sweet woods of God's-Land, <sup>12</sup>[fragrant] before thee, and thy uraeus.

I turn my face to the west, I work a wonder for thee, consuming for thee every land of Tehenu (Tyhnuw). <sup>13</sup>They come bowing down [to thee],<sup>b</sup> falling upon their knees for terror of thee. The chiefs of <sup>14</sup>———— to give to thee praise.

I turn my face to heaven, I work a wonder for thee; the gods of the horizon of heaven acclaim <sup>15</sup>to thee, when Re is born every morning; thou flourishest like Re, when he has brought midday.

I turn my face to the earth, <sup>16</sup>[I work a wonder for thee, I appoint for thee victories in every country]. The gods rejoice in thee, in their temples; thou shalt spend eternity as king upon the throne of Keb.

Before Amon

117. <sup>1</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty as lord of radiance, so that thou hast shone in their faces like my image.

<sup>2</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty, arrayed in thy regalia, when [thou] takest the weapons of war in the chariot.

<sup>3</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty like a circling star, which scatters its flame in fire and gives forth its dew.

<sup>4</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty as a young bull, firm of heart, ready-horned, irresistible.

<sup>5</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty as a crocodile, terrible on the shore, unapproachable.

<sup>a</sup>The god should first face south, as in the original text of Amenhotep III (II, 891), from which our text of Seti I is plagiarized.

<sup>b</sup>Corrected from Medinet Habu; Guieysse has totally confused the two texts, his Medinet Habu text being incorrect.

<sup>6</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty like a flame of fire, like the very being of Sekhmet, in her tempest.

<sup>7</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty as [a fierce-eyed lion, so that thou makest] them corpses in their valleys.

<sup>8</sup>I have caused them to see thy majesty as a —, great in strength, irresistible in heaven or in earth.

Before Amon's Sword

Take to thyself the sword (hꜣš), O mighty king, whose mace smites the Nine Bows.

Before the King

118. Slaying of the Asiatic Troglodytes (Ynw-Mn't yw), all inaccessible countries, all lands, the Fenkhu of the marshes of Asia, the Great Bend (phr wr) of the sea (wꜣ ḏ-wr).

Over King

Smiting the Troglodytes, beating down the Asiatics (Mn't yw), making his boundary as far as the "Horns<sup>1</sup> of the Earth," as far as the marshes of Naharin (N-h-r-n).

Line below King

119. List of those southern and northern lands, which his majesty smote, making a great slaughter among them, of unknown number. [Their subjects are]<sup>a</sup> carried away [as living captives, to fill the storehouse of his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, all countries] ———.

SCENE 12. FIRST BATTLE WITH THE LIBYANS<sup>b</sup>

120. With this scene we pass to the other side of the door (cf. Fig. 1), to a group of nine scenes where there is no date preserved; and as shown above (§§ 80 ff.), they do not necessarily belong to the wars of year 1 on the east side of the door, but may have occurred at any time subsequent to the year 1. As we have shown above (§ 82), Seti spent practically his entire second year in the Delta, and he may well have fought the Libyan war in that year.

<sup>a</sup>Restored from Scene 20.

<sup>b</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

121. As Seti's first war in Asia was introduced by a minor campaign against the Bedwin of Sinai and the Negeb, so now his second Asiatic war is preceded by a campaign against the Libyans. It is evident that the pressure of the Libyans into the Delta, which became so serious under Seti's grandson, Merneptah (§§ 569 ff.), already began under Seti himself. He was, therefore, unable to continue his conquests in Asia without chastising them. Unfortunately, the scene is purely conventional, and the descriptive texts contain nothing but general terms.

Before King

122. Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare; Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah.

Behind King

Hartema, Lord of achievement.

Over Horses

<sup>1</sup>——— <sup>2</sup>devastating, seizing in every country, <sup>3</sup>brave without his like, achieving with his <sup>4</sup>sword, till the Two Lands know it, till the <sup>5</sup>whole earth sees it. He is like Baal, <sup>6</sup>he traverses the mountains, <sup>7</sup>his terror has penetrated the countries, his name <sup>8</sup>is victorious, <sup>9</sup>his sword <sup>10</sup>is mighty, <sup>11</sup>there is none <sup>12</sup>that stands before him.

SCENE 13. SECOND BATTLE WITH THE LIBYANS<sup>a</sup>

123. This second battle scene in addition to the strength and vigor which give it value as an artistic composition, is of great importance because of the two princes, whom it represents as participating in the battle. One of them (behind Seti) bears the name of Ramses, and is of course, he who later became Ramses II. This fact has had great weight in the study of the reigns of Seti and of Ramses II, and has materially modified the chronology of both reigns.<sup>a</sup> But let it be noted, in the first place, that this figure of Ramses is in a scene of the Libyan war, without a date, far from the scenes of the Shasu war of year 1, on the other side of the door. This appearance of Ramses with his father was therefore not necessarily in his father's first year, as has been so often assumed.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1, to which Prisse, Histoire de l'art égyptien (plates unnumbered), may be added.

124. Furthermore, a close examination of the accompanying figures will show, first, that this scene is no proof that Ramses ever appeared with his father in battle at all; and, second, that Ramses was not the first heir to Seti's throne.<sup>b</sup> Behind the Libyan chief whom Seti hurls backward stands an Egyptian prince (Fig. 4, broken lines), facing toward the left, and watching, or possibly taking part in, the conflict. Behind Seti stands Prince Ramses (Fig. 3, dotted lines), facing toward the right, and likewise watching the conflict. Fig. 4 cannot also be Ramses, for he could not appear twice in the same scene. Its accompanying inscription<sup>c</sup> is as follows: "Hereditary prince, first king's-son, of his body ————," in which, unfortunately, the name is wanting; where it could have stood before its disappearance is a question, for the skirt of the prince projects under the titles, and the name must therefore have been pushed to

<sup>a</sup>Thus Maspero (Struggle of the Nations, 369, n. 3) concludes that Seti I married Ramses II's mother, Tuya, under Harmhab, and (ibid., 387, n. 5) that Seti I could not have reigned longer than fifteen to twenty years (possibly only twelve or fifteen), because Ramses II appears "as a stripling in the campaign of Seti's first year."

<sup>b</sup>A full discussion of these questions by the present writer will be found in Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 130-39, from which the accompanying figures are taken.

<sup>c</sup>It is very faint and has been overlooked in Champollion, Monuments, 297, 2, and in Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, 54, 2; the only publication containing it is Champollion, Notices descriptives, 99. Every sign is traceable in the photograph which I used for making the drawing.

FIG. 3.—Showing Two Superimposed Figures (dotted lines facing left; broken lines facing right);

(Figures 3 and 4 are taken from opposite ends of the same scene. Omitted in the middle is the colossal figure of Seti I. His foot is shown trampling the head of a Libyan in Fig. 3. His arm appears in Fig. 4 overthrowing a Libyan (with bow in hand), but Fig. 4 is on a smaller scale than Fig. 3.)

the left (under the Libyan chief's elbow).<sup>a</sup> The historical conclusion here is important: the "first king's-son" of Seti I was not his successor, Ramses; that is, that Ramses II had an older brother, who did not reach the throne.

125. But a further examination of this scene discloses the fact that this figure of Ramses' elder brother (Fig. 4) is not original and does not belong where it stands. The first glance shows that the contracted space between the chariot wheel (belonging to the next scene to the right) and the leg of the falling Libyan is too narrow for another figure, and the artist has barely been able to squeeze the prince in. Thus he is as much in one scene as the other, an anomalous arrangement! He stands with fan upraised in his right hand, as if to smite the falling Libyan. The fan runs directly across the vertical line of text! It is difficult to say where the right arm is; it seems to have been raised, and it may be that he was seizing his father's foe, as his father is doing. Passing through the fan, the large column of text extends down through the prince's head and body, to the bottom. It is clear, therefore, that at some time after Seti had completed these reliefs his eldest son had himself inserted here, as taking part in Seti's Libyan campaign. It is clear also that someone desired his removal, for his figure has been rudely chiseled away. Champollion speaks of him<sup>b</sup> as a "prince martelé et surchargé avec débris de légende" (his titles follow), showing that also his accompanying inscription has been hammered out. The person to whom the figure of the eldest son would be most unwelcome, and who would therefore be most desirous to remove it, is of course, the other prince in the same scene, Ramses. We are certainly correct in attributing the mutilation to him. Moreover, it is quite certain that he did this in order to have the figure of himself inserted in the same scene, for his own figure (Fig. 3, dotted lines) is not original to this scene.

---

<sup>a</sup>There is now no trace of it there, owing to a large fissure in the stone. I am unfortunately obliged to work from photographs, as I did not study these reliefs when at Karnak, and the figures of the princes are now nearly covered with débris again.

<sup>b</sup>Notices descriptives, II, 99.

126. In the first place, we notice in Fig. 3, as in Fig. 4, the narrowness of the space into which the prince's figure has been squeezed, so that his left foot passes through the feather of the fallen Libyan, whom Seti is trampling, and his left hand collides with the other feather. Further, we again notice a column of text extending down through the prince's head into his body.<sup>a</sup> Ramses stands with right hand raised palm outward, as usual in salutation, and carrying his fan vertically before him in the left hand. A joint in the masonry has obliterated shoulders and face. The accompanying text is partly in one scene and partly in the next. It is as follows: "Prince (r<sup>p</sup><sup>c</sup> · ty), king's-son, crown prince, of his body, his beloved, Ramses." The historical conclusions to be derived from this text will be taken up later.

127. A closer inspection of Ramses' figure shows that, in having himself inserted here, he at the same time improved the opportunity to efface another figure, which we will call X, over which his own has been cut. The motives for this second effacement are undoubtedly the same as for the first, and X was therefore Ramses' elder brother. But, as the elder brother has already been once effaced in this scene, we should expect that this second occurrence of his figure belonged to another scene, and such is clearly the case. Under Ramses' figure appears a second pair of feet striding in the opposite direction (the left; see broken lines); behind Ramses is the front point of a skirt; behind him is a third arm; across his figure is a quiver<sup>a</sup> with the opening to the left; above him is a fan<sup>b</sup>, with the tip of the feather turned to the left.<sup>c</sup> All these belong, of course, to the figure X (broken lines), facing to the left. A comparison of X with the prince in Fig. 5 shows clearly that X was striding in the same way after the chariot behind which he is. Especially characteristic are his left foot poised for the next step, the arm hanging down in front, and the fan over the shoulder. X therefore belongs to the scene to the left, representing Seti's triumphant return (Scene 14) from the Libyan war, riding in his chariot and driving his prisoners before him, like the prince following Seti in his return from the first Syrian war (Fig. 5). This is what we should expect; before Ramses' interference, the figure of his elder brother appeared once in each of the two scenes: the battle with the Libyans (Fig. 4) and the return (Fig. 3). Ramses preferred to appear in the battle and had himself inserted facing the right.

<sup>a</sup>These signs are so clear that they were copied by Rosellini, but in his publication (Monumenti Storici, 54, 2) he has shifted the column above too far to the right.

128. But if the figure of Ramses is a later insertion, that of his brother (X) is equally so; the latter's fan, quiver, and indeed his whole figure cut directly into the original column of text, as the figure of Ramses does. X has had himself inserted here. It is this fact which renders certain the identity of X and Seti's eldest son (Fig. 4); both desired to appear in Seti's Libyan war, both were the object of Ramses' hatred, and both were effaced by him.

<sup>a</sup>The quiver was always carried on the left side, with the opening in front; hence in this case belonging to a person facing the left.

<sup>b</sup>The fan was always borne with the tip of the feather pointing toward the front, as in Ramses' figure and in Fig. 5.

<sup>c</sup>The feet and the quiver were seen and copied by Rosellini and Champollion, and appear in their publications (Rosellini, Monumenti Storici, 54; Champollion, Monuments, 297, 2), but seem to have remained unnoticed since.

129. To recapitulate, we find thus far three stages on this wall:

1. An uninterrupted column of text on each side of the battle scene; and no princes in either it or the scene of the return.

2. Seti's eldest son inserts his own figure at the right of the battle scene and at the right of the return.

3. Prince Ramses effaces the figure of his elder brother in both places, but over that of his brother in the return scene he inserts his own figure, so facing as to belong to the battle scene.

130. There are evidences of a similar insertion (Fig. 6) at the top of this same wall, on a few isolated blocks at the left of the capture of Kadesh (Scene 16). Here we see a figure (Fig. 6, broken lines) with uplifted arm, like that of Ramses in the battle scene, and wearing a quiver. Before this figure are the arms of a captive bound behind his back, showing that the man follows the king's chariot (as in Fig. 5), behind which, however, the king leads a line of captives. But this figure is likewise a later insertion, for a column of text extends down through it, and the head of the Syrian, who has fallen beneath the chariot, projects into the skirt. It is impossible to decide whether this figure is that of Ramses or his brother.

131. The historical results to be drawn from the above facts are not numerous, but are important. It is clear, in the first place, that these reliefs offer no evidence whatever that Ramses II ever took part in any campaign of his father, of whatever year. It is therefore no longer necessary to shorten the reign of Seti in order that Ramses may be sufficiently young at his (Ramses') accession, as Maspero con-

FIG. 5.—An Unknown Prince Following the Chariot of Seti I
(Scene 14).

FIG. 6.—Figure of an Unknown Prince Inserted in a Fragmentary Scene (§ 130).

sidered unavoidable. As far as these reliefs are concerned, Ramses might even have been born after Seti's accession. The fact alone that Ramses was obliged to insert his own figure in his father's battle scenes, in order to appear there at all, of course creates a strong suspicion that he had nothing to do with the events they depict;<sup>a</sup> and thus Seti's reign may have been considerably longer than is usually attributed to him. He was about to celebrate his jubilee when he died, having left an obelisk unfinished, so that it was completed by his son, Ramses II (§§ 544 ff.). If his father reigned two and a half years, Seti's jubilee might have fallen in the middle of his twenty-eighth year. But as he did not live to complete the obelisk and celebrate the jubilee, he may have died a few years before the jubilee, after a reign of over twenty years. A greater maximum is improbable, for the reason that Setau, viceroy of Kush in Seti I's second year,<sup>b</sup> is known also in Ramses II's thirty-eighth year, which, if Seti reigned twenty years, makes Setau's term of office at least fifty-seven years—an extraordinary tenure of office. For the extensive building which Seti I accomplished, twenty years are none too long a reign.

Over the Foe

132. <sup>1</sup>———— [overth]rowing his enemies, smiting <sup>2</sup>———— among them, <sup>3</sup>———— their chiefs fall <sup>4</sup>———— [beneath] the two feet of Horus, <sup>5</sup>[the King of Upper and Lower Egypt], Men[mare]; <sup>6</sup>[the Son of Re, Seti-Me]rn[eptah], given satisfying life, like Re.

Before King

Smiting the chiefs of Tehenu (Tyḥnw).

<sup>a</sup>See the discussion of Ramses II's youth, §§ 254, 283.

<sup>b</sup>Papyrus in Bibliothèque Nationale, 209, in Spiegelberg, Rechnungen, Pl. X, col. 4, l. 3.

Over Fan

Hartema, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering, smiting every country.

Under Fan

All protection, life, stability, satisfaction are behind him, like Re, lord of might, smiting the Nine Bows.

Left of Fan

The King, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Might, Menmare, smites the chiefs of the countries.

With Prince behind King

The hereditary prince (rp<sup>c</sup> · ty), the king's-son, crown-prince, of his body, his beloved, Ramses.

With Prince behind Enemy

Prince (rp<sup>c</sup> · ty), first king's-son, of his body ———.

Over Horses

Great first span of his majesty (named): "Smiter-of-Foreigners."

SCENE 14. RETURN FROM LIBYAN WAR<sup>a</sup>

133. We here see Seti returning from the Libyan war in the same manner as he is shown returning from his Syrian war of the year 1. Behind Seti's chariot, in this scene, his eldest son had himself inserted following the chariot, as does the prince behind the chariot in the return from Syria (Scene 8). The prince's figure is here cut in over a column of inscription (see Fig. 3), showing that it is not a part of the relief as left by Seti. It was afterward erased and replaced by the figure of Ramses II, who faces the other way and belongs to the preceding scene (13).

Over King

134. Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare, Lord of Diadems, Seti-Merneptah, given life.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Over Horses

Great first span of his majesty: "Mighty-is-Amon."

Over Prisoners, Upper Line

———— he causes them to cease standing upon the meadow, unable to take up the bow, passing the day in the caves, hidden like wolves for fear of his majesty ————— their hearts ————— might.

Over Prisoners, Lower Line

———— as living prisoners in the country of Tehenu (Tyhny), by the might of his father, Amon.

SCENE 15. PRESENTATION OF LIBYAN PRISONERS AND SPOIL
TO AMON<sup>a</sup>

135. This presentation does not differ from those depicted east of the door. The inscription over the Libyan prisoners in the upper line referring them to "Retenu" and calling them "Asiatics"(!), only shows the subordinate character of the Libyan campaign, and the exclusive importance of the Asiatic victories. It may also indicate that this presentation of Libyan spoil did not take place till after the second Asiatic war; but as these reliefs were not put on the temple wall until the close of Seti's wars, all the campaigns in Retenu are then past, and could be referred to.

Over Amon

136. <sup>1</sup>Utterance of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes: "<sup>2</sup>O Son of my body, my beloved, Lord of the Two Lands, <sup>3</sup>Menmare; my heart is glad <sup>4</sup>for love of thee, I rejoice to look on <sup>5</sup>thy beauty. I set the terror of <sup>6</sup>thy majesty in every country ————— <sup>7</sup>over their chiefs, [they] come <sup>8</sup>to thee together, to Egypt, <sup>9</sup>with all their possessions <sup>10</sup>borne upon their backs.

Before Mut

Mut, mistress of Ishru ————— mistress of heaven, queen of all gods, ————— eternity as king of the Two Lands, while thou appearest as Re.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Before Khonsu

Khonsu in Thebes, Beautiful Rest, Horus, lord of joy (and) Thoth, lord of Karnak.

Below

I give to thee might against the south, victory against the north.

Over Spoil

137. Presentation of tribute by his majesty <sup>2</sup>to his father, Amon-Re, consisting of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, <sup>3</sup>every splendid costly stone, from the might which thou givest to me in every country. <sup>4</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt. Lord of Offering: Menmare; <sup>5</sup>Son of Re, Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah, given life, like Re.

Before King

138. <sup>1</sup>Presentation of tribute by the Good God to his father, Amon, from the rebellious chiefs of the countries that knew not <sup>2</sup>Egypt. Their tribute is upon their backs, in order to fill thy storehouse with slaves, male and female; <sup>3</sup>from the victories which thou givest me in every country.

With Prisoners, Upper Line

139. <sup>1</sup>His majesty arrived from the countries ——— when he had desolated <sup>2</sup>Retenu (Rṯnw) and slain their chiefs, causing <sup>3</sup>the Asiatics (<sup>c</sup> mw) to say: <sup>4</sup>“See <sup>5</sup>this! He is <sup>6</sup>like a flame <sup>7</sup>when it goes forth and <sup>8</sup>no water is brought.” He causes <sup>9</sup>all rebels to cease <sup>10</sup>all contradiction <sup>11</sup>of their mouths, <sup>12</sup>when he has taken away <sup>13</sup>their breath. <sup>14</sup>——— When one approaches the boundaries, he is like Montu, <sup>15</sup>———, he is like the son of Nut; no country stands before <sup>16</sup>[him].

Over Prisoners, Lower Line

Chiefs of the countries of Tehenu (Tyhṯw) ———.

SCENE 16. CAPTURE OF KADESH<sup>a</sup>

140. The campaign against Libya being concluded, we find Seti again in Syria. Like the Annals of Thutmose III, the campaigns of which so often begin, “His majesty was in the land of X,” so our reliefs offer no statement of the route of the army, but show it at once in the midst of the enemy's country, where he attacks the Galilean Kadesh.<sup>a</sup> The crossing of the Jordan valley and the erection of a boundary stela in Hauran (see § 81) may perhaps be connected with this campaign instead of with that against the coast cities.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Beside City

141. Town (dmy) of Kadesh (Kdš).

In Fortress

The charge which Pharaoh, L. P. H., made to devastate the land of Kadesh (Kdš), of the land of the Amor (Y-m-r).

Over Battle

1 ——— rage 2 — — heaven, Montu upon 3 — — his right, valor
4 — — battle of myriads 5 — — his army; a wall for millions 6 — — when he sees multitudes, [he does] not 7 [consider]<sup>b</sup> myriads united, charging 8 — — of the Asiatics, making them 9 — — smiting the towns 10 — — destroying the settlements 11 — — his [w]ay, smiting ———.

SCENE 17. BATTLE WITH THE HITTITES<sup>c</sup>

142. Seti's advance between the Lebanons necessarily brings him into collision with the Hittites, and we see him here in the first battle between Egyptians and Hittites known to us. Unfortunately, no details of the conflict are given.

<sup>a</sup>Müller sees in this city the Kadesh on the Orontes (Asien und Europa, 217); but there seem to me conclusive reasons against this identification: (1) The relief shows a city on rocky heights, while Kadesh is in a low valley surrounded by moats (Müller thinks this due to the artist's looseness). (2) It is said to be "of the land of Amor." Now, Kadesh on the Orontes clearly did not belong to the land of the Amorites (see Meyer, Festschrift für Georg Ebers, 69), and the purpose of the addition, "of the land of Amor," is precisely to distinguish the Galilean Kadesh from its more powerful neighbor in the north. (3) Müller's argument that Seti failed to capture the city, which would be impossible if it were a small Galilean town, is refuted by the fact that ḥ is used by Ramses II of a whole list of captured cities (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 156, with metathesis ḥj).

<sup>b</sup>See § 148, l. 8; and Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 76, 77.

<sup>c</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Over King

143. The Good God, the mighty Lord of the Two Lands; Menmare; Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah, chosen of the favor of Re.

Over Enemy

The wretched land of the Hittites (Ht<sup>o</sup> w), among whom his majesty, L. P. H., made a great slaughter.

Over Battle

144. <sup>1</sup>Horus: Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes, Vivifier of the Two Lands, <sup>2</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare; Son of Re: Seti-Merneptah; <sup>3</sup>Good God, mighty in strength, brave like Montu, <sup>4</sup>mightiest of the mighty, like him that begat him, illuminating the Two Lands like the horizon-god, <sup>5</sup>great in strength like the son of Nut, victorious, the double Horus <sup>6</sup>by his 'own' hand, treading the battlefield like Set, <sup>7</sup>great in terror like Baal in the countries. Favorite of the Two Goddesses, <sup>8</sup>while he was in the nest, (for) his might protected Egypt. Re made <sup>9</sup>for him his boundary as far as the limits of that which Aton illuminates. <sup>10</sup>Divine Hawk, bright of plumage, sailing the heavens <sup>11</sup>like the majesty of Re; prowling Wolf circling this land <sup>12</sup>within an hour; fierce-eyed Lion, tramping the inaccessible ways of every <sup>13</sup>country; mighty Bull, [ready]-horned, [mighty]-hearted, smiting the Asiatics, <sup>14</sup>beating down the Hittites (Ht<sup>o</sup> (w)), slaying <sup>15</sup>their chiefs, overthrown in <sup>16</sup>their blood, charging <sup>17</sup>among them like a tongue of <sup>18</sup>fire, making them as that which is not.

SCENE 18. CARRYING OFF HITTITE PRISONERS<sup>a</sup>

145. As in the other wars, Seti now carries off his prisoners. The reference to Tehenu (Libya, § 147) would indicate that, as we have already concluded, the Libyan war preceded the Hittite campaign.

Before King

146. Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare; Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Over Horses

Great first horse of his majesty (called): "Amon-Giveth-to-Him-the-Might."

Over Prisoners in Front, Upper Line

147. Good God, mighty in being, great in strength like Montu, residing in Thebes, youthful Bull, ready-horned, <sup>5</sup>firm-hearted, smiting myriads; mighty Lion, tramping the inaccessible <sup>10</sup>ways in every country; the prowling southern Wolf, circling this land within an hour, sm[iting] his [enemies] in every country, mighty warrior without his like, <sup>15</sup>an archer skilful of hand, setting his fame like a mountain of copper, furnishing their nostrils with his breath. Retenu (Rt<sup>mw</sup>) comes to him bowing down, the land of Tehenu (Tyhy, sic) on its knees. He establishes <sup>20</sup>seed as he wishes in this wretched land of Kheta (Ht<sup>2</sup>-t<sup>2</sup>, sic); their chiefs fall by his blade, becoming as that which is not. His prowess is among them <sup>24</sup>like fire, (when) he destroys their towns (dm<sup>y</sup>).

Over Prisoners in Front, Lower Line

148. Chiefs of the countries that knew not Egypt, whom [his] majesty brought as living captives. They bring upon their backs of all the choicest of their countries.

Over Prisoners Behind

<sup>1</sup>Victorious king, great in strength; his terror is like (that of) the son of <sup>2</sup>Nut. The victor returns, when he has devastated the countries. He has smitten <sup>3</sup>the land of Kheta (Hy-t<sup>2</sup>), causing the cowardly rebels <sup>4</sup>to cease. Every country has become peaceful, <sup>5</sup>(for) the fear of his majesty has entered <sup>6</sup>among them, his <sup>7</sup>odor<sup>3</sup> has penetrated into their hearts. <sup>7</sup>The chiefs of the countries are bound <sup>8</sup>before him, he considers not myriads united together.

SCENE 19. PRESENTATION OF HITTITE SPOIL AND PRISONERS TO AMON<sup>a</sup>

149. The captive Hittites and their spoil are now presented to Amon, as in the other wars; but there is unfortunately no additional information in the inscriptions as to the character or extent of the campaign.

<sup>a</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

Over King

150. Good God, great in victory, King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menmare; Son of Re: Seti-Merneptah, chosen of Re, in the barque of Re.

Over Amon

<sup>1</sup>[Utterance: "I give to thee] all might and all victory."

<sup>2</sup>Utterance: "I give to thee all lands, all countries beneath thy sandals."

<sup>3</sup>Utterance: "I give to thee the duration of Re, the years of Atum."

<sup>4</sup>Utterance: "I give to thee an eternity of jubilees, like Re."

<sup>5</sup>Utterance: "I give to thee all food-offerings."

<sup>6</sup>Utterance: "I give to thee all life, stability, satisfaction; all health."

<sup>7</sup>Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, presider over Karnak.

Over Bast

<sup>1</sup>Mut, the great Bast, ruler of Karnak, mistress of amiability and love.

Over Khonsu

Khonsu in Thebes, Beautiful Rest, Horus, lord of joy.

Over Mat

Utterance of Mat, daughter of Re: "O my son, of my body, my beloved, Lord of the Two Lands, lord of might, Menmare."

Over Spoil

151. <sup>1</sup>[Presentation of] the tribute by the Good God, <sup>2</sup>to his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, when he returned from the country of Kheta (Ht), <sup>3</sup>devastating the [rebellious] countries, smiting the Asiatics, <sup>4</sup>[taking] their possessions of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, malachite, <sup>5</sup>and [every] splendid, [costly stone], according as he decreed to him might and victory against every country.

Over Prisoners, Upper Lines

152. <sup>1</sup>Great chiefs of Retenu (Rtww) the wretched, whom his majesty <sup>2</sup>carried off in his victories in the country of Kheta (Ht), <sup>3</sup>in order to fill the storehouse of his august father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, <sup>4</sup>according as he has given to him might against the south and victory against the north. <sup>5</sup>The chiefs of the countries, they say in acclaiming his majesty, L. P. H., <sup>6</sup>in magnifying his might: "Hail to thee, O king of Egypt, Sun <sup>7</sup>of the Nine Bows. Great is thy fame, O lord of gods, (for) thou hast carried away all<sup>a</sup> the countries, <sup>8</sup>thou bindest them beneath the two feet of thy son Horus, Vivifier of the Two Lands.”

Over Prisoners, Lower Line

Great is thy fame, O victorious king; how great is thy might! Thou art Montu in every country; thy strength is like his form.

SCENE 20. SLAYING PRISONERS BEFORE AMON<sup>b</sup>

153. This scene on the right of the door forms the symmetrical pendant of the like scene (11) on the left of the door, from which it differs only in the inscriptions. The account of Scene 11 (§§ 113 ff.) may serve equally well for this scene.

Before King

154. Good God, great in might, Lord of the Two Lands, Lord of Offering: Menmare, achieving with his sword —; Son of Re, smiting myriads, Lord of Diadems: Seti-Merneptah, smiter of —, given life, like Re.

Behind King

All protection, life, stability, satisfaction, all health, are behind him, like Re. The living king's-ka, Lord of the Two Lands, presiding over the db<sup>2</sup>-t-hall, presiding over the dw<sup>2</sup>-t-hall;<sup>c</sup> he is given all life. Mighty Bull, Shining in Thebes, Vivifier of the Two Lands.

Over King

Hartema, lord of offering, smiting the countries, overthrowing his enemies.

Under Vulture

She gives victory, like Re; she gives all life, and satisfaction, like Re.

<sup>a</sup>On the use of r<sup>c</sup>, see my De Hymnis in Solem sub Rege Amenophide IV Conceptis, 22-25; but my explanation of the phrase in the sun-hymn, “yn<sup>c</sup> k r<sup>c</sup> -sn” (ibid.), is to be modified in view of this Seti passage. R<sup>c</sup> is here clearly equivalent to “number,” as so often in the great Papyrus Harris, and is used like tnw, “number,” in the sense of “all.” “Yn,” being parallel with “w<sup>c</sup> f, seize or bind,” is clearly used as usual with the meaning: “carry away captive.”

<sup>b</sup>For bibliography, see Fig. 1.

<sup>c</sup>See IV, 410, l. 1.

Before and behind Amon

155. 1[Utterance of Amon:] ——— the Two Lands, my son, of my body, my beloved, Lord of the Two Lands: Menmare, brilliant in diadems ——— 2——— his enemies. Thou hast carried away all countries; he who approaches [thy] boundaries ——— 3——— it is on the north of him; thy excellent fame is all that he (the sun) encircles; thy fear has penetrated ——— 4——— thy victories. I put the fear of thee in their hearts so that thou cuttest down the Curly-Haired<sup>a</sup> ——— 5——— thy — in order to make me lord of their heads. The Sand-dwellers (Hry w-š) ——— 6——— I — my mace as 7——— thee, subduing for thee the rebe<sup>8</sup>[llious-hearted] ——— 9——— their chiefs [come] to thee with all their good tribute of their countries. I have given to thee Egypt (T<sup>3</sup>-mry) 10——— [captives for thy treasury. I cause the South to come to thee, doing obeisance, and the North bowing down. 11——— before thy face. I have given to thee a kingdom established on earth, I make thy terror to circulate in 12——— the sea 1bring1 his 1wealth1; I have opened for thee the highways of Punt. 13——— who is there. I give to thee Inmutef<sup>b</sup> (Yn-mw t [f]) to lead thee, Khonsu and Horus-Soped, 14——— as thy followers, I make for thee his two hands as a cool retreat of the countries, 15——— [the countries that knew] not Egypt. I cause thy majesty to tread it like one — faced, like the wolf 16———. I give to thee the possessions of Horus and Set, and their victories. The portions of the two gods are made thy portions.

Over List of Captives

156. List of those southern and northern lands, which his majesty smote, making a great slaughter among them of unknown number. Their subjects are carried away as living captives to [fill] the storehouse of his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, all countries —.

Under Amon's Foot

——— I give to thee all lands, every country is beneath thy sandals.

<sup>a</sup>For rd read nd, as in Tombos Inscription, l. 8 (II, 71).

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "Pillar of his Mother." See II, 133 and 138, note.

WADI HALFA STELA<sup>a</sup>

157. As stated above (§ 74), this monument is practically a duplicate of a stela erected by Seti I at the same place six months before, recording his father's pious works in the southernmost of the two temples at Wadi Halfa. It was perhaps erected by Seti after his campaign of the first year, as it is dated in that year, and refers at the same time to "the captivity of his majesty."<sup>b</sup> The king is only confirming the offerings established by his father, as they are identical with those on Ramses I's stela (§§ 74 ff.), and this identity, and the absence of Ramses I's name, make it certain that Ramses I had died in the interval between the two stelæ. Moreover, both stelæ are of Seti I's first year; on the first his father is still living; on the second, six months later, he is not mentioned. Hence he died in Seti's first year, and probably in his own second year; at most he reigned two and a half years.

Introduction

158. <sup>1</sup>Year 1, fourth month of the third season, the last day. Live Seti I<sup>c</sup> . . . . <sup>2</sup>. . . . given life, beloved of <sup>3</sup>Amon, lord of Thebes, and Min-si-ese, appearing upon the Horus-throne of the living, like his father, Re, every day.

Establishment of Offerings

159. Lo, his majesty was <sup>4</sup>i[n the c]ity of Memphis (H·t-k·Pth) performing the ceremonies of his father, Harakhte, Ptah, the great, South-of-His-Wall, lord of Life-of-the-Two-Lands, Atum, lord of the <sup>a</sup>Sandstone stela in the British Museum (No. 1189); published by Turajeff, St. Petersburg, 1902. The above translation is from my own copy of the original; the brackets contain restorations from Ramses I's stela (§§ 74 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>This captivity might possibly refer to some raid of Seti's among the Nubians, for in an inscription at Silsileh (Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 165-67), otherwise consisting of conventional phrases only, he is called: "bringer of the limits of the land of the Negroes as living captives." Moreover, as the stela reproduces that of his father merely, the phrase may be only an inadvertent repetition.

<sup>c</sup>The full fivefold titulary, as at Redesiyeh (§ 169).

Two Lands of Heliopolis <sup>5</sup>and all [the gods] of Egypt (T<sup>3</sup>-mry), according as they gave [to him] might and victory over all lands, united with one heart under thy sandals. 1— — 1 <sup>6</sup>[His majesty<sup>a</sup> commanded] to found [divine offerings for his father Min-] Amon residing in Bohén (Bhn·t), his first foundation in his temple: 12 (pr·t-s) loaves; <sup>7</sup>[100 (by<sup>3</sup>·t) loaves; 4 (ds) jars of beer; 10 bundles of vegetables.]<sup>b</sup>

Priests and Servants

160. [Likewis]e this temple was filled with prophets, ritual priests, priests (w<sup>c</sup> b); <sup>8</sup>his storehouse was filled with male and female slaves from the captivity of his majesty, L. P. H., [the King of Upper and Lower Egypt] Menmare (Seti I), given life, like Re, forever and ever.

161. <sup>9</sup>Lo, his majesty sought excellent things to do them for his father Min-A[mon] <sup>10</sup>residing in Bohén; he made a great, august stela of good sandstone for the — place ———— <sup>11</sup>of [his father], Amon, for the beautiful birth-house of the ennead, where appears the lord of gods, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt ————.

INSCRIPTIONS OF REDESIYEH<sup>c</sup>

162. The reliefs in the vestibule contain two stereotyped scenes, showing the king overthrowing the people of the north and south. These evidently do not refer to specific victories of Seti, but are of the conventional order. They are as follows:

163. <sup>d</sup>Amon, leading ten peoples captive, extends the

<sup>a</sup>There is not room for the cartouche, as on Ramses I's stela (l. 6).

<sup>b</sup>Determinative preserved, showing with the first item that Seti's list was identical with Ramses I's (l. 7). Turajeff inserts all the items and numbers, probably from the stela of Ramses I.

<sup>c</sup>In the temple usually given the same name, although it is located in the desert thirty-seven miles east of the modern Redesiyeh (Baedeker, 347 f.), which is on the Nile about five miles above Edfu. It was discovered by Cailliaud in 1816. The inscriptions have never been completely published; the most important ones by Lepsius (Denkmäler, III, 139-41, d, copied thence by Rheinisch, Chrestomathie, Taf. 9); the long ones much better by Golénischeff (Recueil, XIII, Pl. I and II). See also Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 75-84.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 139, a.

(hps-) sword to Seti, who slays a group of Kushites before the god. Interspersed are the following inscriptions:

Over Amon

164. Utterance of Amon: "Take to thyself the sword, O mighty king, Horus of the bows, in order to overthrow the chiefs of Kush, the wretched; in order to cut off their heads. Thy terror enters into their bodies, like Sekhmet when she rages."<sup>a</sup>

By the King

Smiting the chiefs of Kush the wretched.

Scene<sup>b</sup>

165. Same as above, only with Horus<sup>c</sup> in place of Amon, and Asiatics in place of Kushites; inscriptions as follows:

Over Horus

Utterance of Horus of Edfu: "Take to thyself the sword, O mighty King, Horus, shining in Thebes, in order to smite the rebellious countries, that violate thy boundaries. Thy fame is among them forever; (they) fall in their blood by the might of thy father, Amon, who hath decreed thee might and victory."

166. In addition to these unimportant scenes, the temple contains three inscriptions<sup>d</sup> of great importance as indicating the revival of intercourse with the Red Sea region, and the exploitation of the gold mines in the Gebel Zebâra district<sup>e</sup>. According to these inscriptions, the road to the mines eastward though the desert, was so lacking in water that the working of the mines in Seti's time had languished. Seti undertook to establish communications by digging a well on

<sup>a</sup>The list of ten names in the ovals of the captives is entirely conventional.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 140, a.

<sup>c</sup>The god here leads only six countries, of which Shinar, Shasu, Kadesh, Ashur, and Megiddo are certain.

<sup>d</sup>Cut on the face of the rock in which the temple is excavated.

<sup>e</sup>See Lepsius, Metalle, 36, 37.

this road thirty-seven miles from the Nile, claiming that he was the first to do so, although the name of a "king's-son" under Amenhotep III, named "Mermose,"<sup>a</sup> still surviving, cut on the rocks in the vicinity, proves the use of the station already in the Eighteenth Dynasty.

167. The first inscription, dated in the year 9, narrates the successful completion of the well and also the erection of a temple and establishment of a settlement at this station. The heretofore unnoticed motive for all this elaborate equipment is stated in the king's words to be (l. 13): "on behalf of my beautiful house in Abydos." This is, of course, Seti's famous temple at Abydos, which he says was erected "by oracle of the god" (l. 13). It is to endow the king's mortuary service in this temple that he is now restoring communications with the eastern gold regions. He therefore prays, as he worships for the first time in the new temple at the newly established station on the road to the mines, that the god may instruct coming generations of kings and princes to respect his establishment, presumably both at Abydos, and at the new station by which communication with the source of revenue for Abydos was to be maintained. This explains why the next inscription of nineteen lines, the longest of the three, is devoted almost exclusively to warnings and curses addressed to those who may in future interfere with the arrangements by which Seti hopes to perpetuate the income of his Abydos temple from the gold mines. Hence at its close (l. 19) he calls down the vengeance of Osiris, Isis, and Horus upon the person, wife, and children of any official of the necropolis (of course, at Abydos) who shall disregard ("avert the face from") "the command of Osiris." But, notwithstanding these solemn adjurations of Seti, he had not been dead a year when his mortuary endowments at Abydos were suspended (§ 263). They were then re-enacted by his son, Ramses II (§ 271, ll. 73-75; § 272, 77-89).

---

<sup>a</sup>Recueil, XIII, 79, and Pl. IV, No. 1.

168. The third inscription records the gratitude of the king's people who use the new station and the road thus rendered easy. They call him "the good shepherd"<sup>a</sup> (l. 2), and it is not accidental that in the dedicatory inscription of Seti's Abydos temple, he is likewise called the "mighty shepherd,"<sup>b</sup> indicating that particular activity of the king, to which the temple owed its income.

I. FIRST INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

Introduction

169. 1Year 9, third month of the third season, the twentieth day, under the majesty of Horus: Mighty-Bull-Shining-in-Thebes-Vivifier-of-the-Two-Lands; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Uhemmesut,<sup>d</sup> Mighty of Sword, Expelling-the-Nine-Bows; Golden Horus: Repeating-Coronations, Mightiest-of-Bows-in-All-Lands; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menmare (Mn-m<sup>3</sup>c-t-R<sup>c</sup>); Son of Re: Seti-Merneptah, given life forever and ever.

Seti's Excursion in the Desert

170. On this day, 10, as his majesty inspected the hill-country as far as the region of the mountains, his heart desired <sup>2</sup>to see the mines from which the electrum<sup>e</sup> is brought. Now, when his majesty had

<sup>a</sup>Read the standing man, with the staff and sack (?), as s<sup>3</sup>, e. g., Brugsch, Thesaurus, VI, 1435. The same phrase (s<sup>3</sup> nfr) applied to the king occurs in Mariette, Karnak, 35, l. 62 (corrected from photo); and compare also Libyan war of Merneptah (§ 580, l. 16). See also Bergmann, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1890, 40, n. 2.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 138, d.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 140, b = Golénischeff, Recueil, XIII, Pl. 1.

<sup>d</sup>Whm-msw't = "Begetting again," or "Begotten (or born) again."

<sup>e</sup>Gold was commonly found with so large an admixture of silver as often to be thus spoken of; and in this same temple the god says to Seti: "I have given to thee the gold-countries, giving to thee what is in them of electrum, lapis lazuli and malachite." Lepsius, Metalle, 45, and Denkmäler, III, 141, b. The same in Ramses III's treasury (IV, 28).

ascended from the signs of numerous water courses, he made a halt in the road, in order to devise counsel with his heart, and he said: "How evil is the way without water! It is as with a traveler <sup>3</sup>whose mouth is parched. <sup>1</sup>How<sup>1</sup> shall their (sic!) throats <sup>1</sup>be cooled<sup>1</sup>, how shall he (sic!) quench their thirst; for the lowland is far away, and the highland is vast. The thirsty man cries out for himself against a fatal country. Make haste! Let <sup>4</sup>me take counsel of their needs. I will make for them a supply <sup>2</sup>for preserving them alive, so that they will thank god in my name, in after years. They shall come, and the generations which are to be, shall come to charm by me, because of my might and because that, lo, I am kind-hearted, inclining toward <sup>5</sup>the circuit runners."

The Successful Well

171. Now, after his majesty had spoken these his words, in his own heart, he coursed through the highland seeking a place to make a water-station. Lo, the god led him, in order to grant the request which he desired. Then were commanded workmen <sup>6</sup>in stone, to dig a well upon the mountains, that he might sustain the fainting, and cool for him the burning heart in summer. Then this place was built in the great name of Menmare (Mn-m<sup>7</sup>c<sup>7</sup>t-R<sup>c</sup>, Seti I), and the <sup>7</sup>water inundated it in very great plenty like the two caves<sup>b</sup> of Elephantine.

Plan for a Settlement and Temple

172. Said his majesty: "Behold, the god has performed my petition and he has brought to me water upon the mountains. Since the gods the way has been dangerous, (but) it has been made pleasant in my glorious reign. <sup>8</sup>The districts of the colporteurs are refreshed, the land is extended, my reign is with might in every respect. It has not been known — — — under me. Another good thought has come into my heart, at command of the god, even the equipment of a town, <sup>9</sup>in whose august midst shall be a resting-place, a settlement, with a temple. I will build a resting-place in this spot, in the great name of my fathers, the gods. May they grant that what I have wrought abide, that my name prosper, circulating through the hill-country."

<sup>a</sup>This is the same as \-mw*, "water-supply," in the Assiut inscriptions (I, 407), but the mw is here omitted, as also sometimes elsewhere. See also II, 698.

<sup>b</sup>Text has tph<sup>1</sup>t and krt<sup>y</sup>, from which the Krophî and Mophî, given by Herodotus as the Nile sources, were doubtless corrupted.

Construction of the Temple

173. Then his majesty commanded <sup>10</sup>that the leader (hrp) of the king's workmen be commissioned, and with him the quarrymen, that there should be made by digging (š 3 d)<sup>a</sup> in this mountain, this temple, wherein is Amon, in whose midst is Re, in whose great house are Ptah, Osiris, Horus, Isis, Menmare (Seti I), and the divine ennead <sup>11</sup>belonging in this temple.

Seti Worships in the New Temple

174. Now, after the stronghold was completed, adorned and its paintings executed, his majesty came to worship his fathers, all [the gods]. He said: "Praise to you, O great gods! who furnished heaven and earth according to their mind. May ye favor me <sup>12</sup>forever, may ye establish my name eternally. As I have been profitable, as I have been useful to you, as I have been watchful for the things which ye desire, may ye speak to those who are still to come (yw ty sn), whether kings, or princes or people (rhy t), that they establish <sup>13</sup>for me my work in the place, on behalf of my beautiful house in Abydos, made by the oracle of the god, the existent one, that they may not subvert his plan. Say ye, that it was done by your oracle, for that ye are the lords. I have spent my life and my might for you, <sup>14</sup>to attain my acceptability from you. Grant that my monuments may endure for me, and my name abide upon them."

II. SECOND INSCRIPTION<sup>b</sup>Address to Earlier Kings

175. <sup>1</sup>King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Menmare (Seti I), Son of Re: Seti-Merneptah. He saith to his fathers, all the Kings of Upper Egypt, the Kings of Lower Egypt, the rulers<sup>c</sup> and the people (rhy t): "Hearken to me, ye chiefs of bowmen of the Land of Egypt (T 3 -mry); may ye hear <sup>2</sup>the things, O may ye —. I have desired to requite your virtues alike, ye being like gods; a lord is counted among the divine ennead. I have said this for the [guidance] of my caravaneers of the gold-washers to my temple, to set them carrying <sup>3</sup>for my house ——— my temple."

<sup>a</sup>All except the vestibule of the temple is excavated in the side of the mountain.

<sup>b</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 140, c = Golénischeff, Recueil, XIII, Pl. II.

<sup>c</sup>It is possible to render also: "rulers of the people."

Warning to Caravaneers on the Inviolability of Gold

176. As for gold, it is the limbs of the gods;<sup>a</sup> not your possession. Take care lest ye say <sup>1</sup>that which<sup>1</sup> Re said at his beginning of speech: "My skin is of pure electrum."

Warning to Caravaneers concerning Earlier Endowments

177. "Now, Amon, the lord of my temple <sup>4</sup>———. His two eyes are upon his possessions. They do not desire to be deprived of their belongings. Take heed against the incursions of their people, because they are like them that taste his —. Make not <sup>5</sup>joy ——-. As for the one who trespasses upon the matter of another, there shall come to him an end, by doing likewise; the monument of the violator shall be violated, and there shall not remain an example of the deceivers — — <sup>6</sup>the king."

Seti's New Plans

178. "——— to let you know that I have inaugurated a way, in order to save you; I have made the caravaneers into gold-washers in — <sup>7</sup>in my name —— my — by my virtues. I have made them into caravaneers anew, in order that they might remain under me. I have not brought from other <sup>8</sup>caravaneers —— among the children of my temple, or among the mountaineers of my sanctuary."

Exhortation and Good Wishes to Future Kings

179. "As for any king who shall be after me, he shall establish my work, <sup>9</sup>in order to cause to abide —— conveying his impost to the house of Menmare (Seti I), to gild all their images, made by Amon, Harakhte, Ptah-<sup>10</sup>Ta[te]nen —— they flourish. May they rule the lands with gladness of heart, may they overthrow the Red Lands and Nubia; may their ka's abide; may their food-offerings endure. May he satisfy <sup>11</sup>those who are upon earth; may Re hear ——."

Warning to Kings Who Shall Disregard Seti's Establishments

180. —— saying: "Now, as for any king, who is to come, who shall overthrow any of my plans with me, he is one of whom the lands after me shall say, that I and they were as they are <sup>12</sup>with him; an evil matter for the heart of the gods. Behold, one shall answer him in Heliopolis ———. They shall make answer concerning their affairs. They shall redden like flame of fire, and they shall consume their limbs, (because) they <sup>13</sup>hearkened not to me. They shall consume the violator of my plans, in order to place him in the dungeon of the gate.”<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Compare the words of Ptah in his address to Ramses II (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 194; § 401, l. 7).

Good Will for the King Who Respects Seti's Establishments

190.<sup>b</sup> “[As for him who respects] our affairs, cause to save him, void of his offense; <sup>1</sup>for he is<sup>3</sup> another who derives <sup>14</sup>understanding from the divine ennead; they shall abide with him.”

Blessing on Seti's Officials, Who Shall Survive Him

191. Now, as for any official who shall survive to (the time of) a king after me, he shall cause to remember good, in order to establish the matter which I have done in my name. May the god give reverence for him on earth; may his end be satisfaction <sup>15</sup>brought to his ka.

Curse on Disregardful Officials Surviving Seti

192. Now, as for any official who shall bring near this thought to his lord, in order to take away the (hsb'w) people,<sup>c</sup> to give them to another, [—] by counsels of evil testimony; the fire shall burn his glowing limbs, the flame shall <sup>16</sup>devour his members, because his majesty made all these things for their ka, the lords of my house. An abomination of the god is the transgression against his people. None turns away the violating hand except it be the caravaneers <sup>17</sup>of the gold-washing, which I have made for the house of Menmare, protected and defended. It shall not be made to fall by any people who are in the whole land, by any chief archer of the gold, or by any inspector of the highlands.

Further Warning to Respect Endowment

193. Now, as for anyone who shall transgress against the people therein, <sup>18</sup>putting (them) into another place, the gods and goddesses, the lords of my house shall execute upon him the appropriate penalty. (For) there is none <sup>d</sup>to oppose that any of my property in the inventory

<sup>a</sup>The prison at Thebes was at the gate of the temple of Amon (IV, 541).

<sup>b</sup>Intentional omission of nine in numbering sections.

<sup>c</sup>Some kind of official people in Seti's new establishment, whom Seti now warns their superiors not to take away, in disregard of his endowment.

<sup>d</sup>The negative n is to be read.

should be beneath their feet, forever and ever; except it be the chief archer of the caravaneers of the gold-washing of the house of <sup>19</sup>Menmare, by his hand, presenting their impost of gold to the house of Menmare.

Curse on One Disregarding Command of Osiris

194. As for anyone who shall avert the face from the command of Osiris, Osiris<sup>a</sup> shall pursue<sup>b</sup> him, Isis shall pursue his wife, Horus shall pursue his children, among all the princes of the necropolis, and they shall execute their judgment with him.

III. THIRD INSCRIPTION<sup>c</sup>

195. <sup>1</sup>Horus: Mighty-Bull-Shining-in-Thebes, Vivifier-of-the-Two-Lands; King of Upper and Lower Egypt [Menmare (Seti I)]; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, and his divine ennead; making for them a temple anew:<sup>d</sup> wherein the gods are satisfied; before which he dug a well. Never was made <sup>2</sup>the like of it by any king, save by the king, the maker of glorious things, the Son of Re, Seti-Merneptah, the good shepherd,<sup>e</sup> who preserves his soldiers alive, the father and mother of all. They say from mouth to mouth: "O Amon, give to him eternity; double to him everlastingness. Ye gods dwelling in the well,<sup>f</sup> <sup>3</sup>give ye to him your duration; for he hath opened for us the way to march in; (when) it was closed up before us. We proceed<sup>g</sup> and are saved; we arrive and are preserved alive. The difficult way, which is in our memory, <sup>4</sup>has become a good way. He (the king) has caused the mining of the gold to be like the sight of the Horus-hawk.<sup>h</sup> All generations that are to be, beseech for him eternity, that he may celebrate jubilees like Atum, that he may flourish like the Edfuan Horus, <sup>a</sup>A second ws-throne has been omitted in the original; "Osiris" must be read twice, as the parallels following show.

<sup>b</sup>Lit., "be behind;" cf. English "be after."

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 140, d = Golénischeff, Recueil, XIII, Pl. II.

<sup>d</sup>Or: "for the first time." <sup>e</sup>See § 168 and note.

<sup>f</sup>The formal name of each god, as patron of the temple and well, was: "Amon or Horus (or any god in the ennead) dwelling in the well of Menmare" (see Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 139, b, c, e, f).

<sup>g</sup>"T <sup>3</sup>wmm hr, etc.," and "T <sup>3</sup>wn hr, etc.," are parallel, the first being a miswriting of the auxiliary verb.

<sup>h</sup>An obscure comparison; Golénischeff thinks it refers to the swiftness of the hawk's eye.

<sup>5</sup>for he has made monuments upon the highlands for all the gods; he hath dug for water upon the mountains, (although) far<sup>a</sup> from men, the supply of every messenger that traverses the highlands, with the life, stability, and satisfaction<sup>b</sup> of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Menmare (Seti I), beloved of Amon-Re, king of gods.

196. On the neighboring rocks three of the officials intrusted by Seti with the establishment or administration of the station have left inscriptions. In the first two<sup>c</sup> the official's name is no longer legible, though in the second one may discern the words:

197. "Made by the officer of marines ——— commissioned to dig (šd t) 'The Well of Seti-Merneptah.'"

198. The third<sup>d</sup> was made by Iny (Yny), an official of high rank, who is shown praising Seti I, thus:

"Praise to thy ka, O good and beautiful ruler, child of Amon, the sun (šw), in seeing whom one lives. O ka of every house, my god, who fashioned me, in order to make me; grant thou the food of the great. How prosperous is he who follows thee daily. [For the] ka of the chief of the stable, of the 'Stable of Seti-Merneptah,' charioteer of [his] majesty, king's-son of Kush —, chief of the gendarmes, Ini (Yny)
—————."

BUILDING INSCRIPTIONS

199. Seti I has not left us any long record of his buildings, like those which we find in the Eighteenth Dynasty. Of his notable activity as a builder the only inscripational witnesses are several quarry stelæ, and the architrave and other dedication formulæ still to be found in the buildings themselves. Besides erecting new temples, Seti was active in <sup>a</sup>Meaning the water; it was formerly far from men in this place.

<sup>b</sup>That is, "in the service" of the king.

<sup>c</sup>Golénischeff, Recueil, XIII, Pl. III.

<sup>d</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 138, n; corrections by Golénischeff, Recueil, XIII, 79.

restoring the old. Throughout the country he had his sculptors at work restoring the defacement of the gods' names which had taken place under Ikhnaton, especially that of Amon. Examples of these restorations will be found frequently, as in the temple of Amenhotep III at El Kab,<sup>a</sup> on the great building record of Amenhotep III at Thebes (II, 878); or on the obelisks of Hatshepsut (II, 312). They are usually recorded thus:

200. Restoration of the monument which King Seti I made in the house of — (name of a god).

Taking up first the quarry stelæ, the following are the building inscriptions of Seti I:

I. FIRST CATARACT INSCRIPTIONS

I. ASSUAN INSCRIPTION<sup>b</sup>

201. In his ninth year, Seti I sent an expedition to Assuan, to obtain granite for his obelisks and colossi; the expedition left a record of its work on the rocks, showing Seti offering to Khnum, Satet, and Anuket, in a relief at the top, below which is the following inscription:

202. Year 9 under the majesty of<sup>c</sup> . . . . . Seti I. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

His majesty, L. P. H., commanded to execute numerous works, in order to make very great obelisks<sup>e</sup> and great and marvelous statues, with the name of his majesty. . . . .<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 138, g, and Text, IV, 45.

<sup>b</sup>On the rocks on the route from Philæ to Assuan; published from inaccurate copies in de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, I, 7. The text is, according to de Morgan, "très mal gravée," so that the concluding lines are untranslatable in his publication.

<sup>c</sup>Full titulary. <sup>d</sup>A series of conventional epithets of the king are omitted.

<sup>e</sup>See his only surviving obelisk, from Heliopolis (§§ 544 ff.), and the mention of them on his temple model (§ 246).

<sup>f</sup>The remainder is totally unintelligible in the publication. A mutilated and badly copied rock inscription of Seti from the same locality (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 141, i), doubtless contained similar information as the above text, for it is also dated in "year 9" and begins: "His majesty, L. [P.] H., commanded to make great obelisks for Egypt. Then his majesty found ———" (remainder lost).

2. ELEPHANTINE STELA<sup>a</sup>

203. Above, Seti I worships Amon and Khnum; below, an inscription of eighteen lines, containing a prayer of the king to Khnum. It is very fragmentary, and the only data of historical importance are these:

204. <sup>14</sup>———— Thou hast flooded thy temple with their food-offerings ————— <sup>15</sup>———— of silver, gold, lapis lazuli, and malachite; thou hast filled [thy] storehouse ————— <sup>16</sup>————. Thou hast given to me the South as well as the North, the West and the East, beneath [my sandals].<sup>b</sup>

II. SILSILEH QUARRY STELA<sup>c</sup>

205. In his sixth year Seti I sent an expedition of one thousand men to Silsileh to procure blocks of sandstone for his temples. He records with pride his humane treatment

<sup>a</sup>A stela set up at one corner of one of the Elephantine temples; copied and published by Champollion (Notices descriptives, I, 223, 224), but since probably covered up again, as it was not copied by de Morgan's expedition.

<sup>b</sup>These are conventional terms, and may not apply to any particular conquests of Seti. A neighboring rock shows him in the ancient traditional style smiting the southern enemy, while the viceroy of Kush adores him. The latter is accompanied by the following inscription: "Fan-bearer on the king's right hand, governor of the Southern Country, king's-son, Amenemopet" (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 141, h = de Morgan, Catalogue des monuments, 28-5). This viceroy of Kush has left his name several times in this locality, e. g., on the island of Schel (ibid., 103, No. 53; also Mariette, Monuments divers, No. 53). Farther up the river he has left a considerable inscription (Sayce, Recueil, 16, 170 ff.). "Above the inscription is a representation of the Pharaoh in the act of slaying an enemy; behind him is a chariot drawn by two horses which are galloping away from the scene of combat, while to the left is a standing human figure. On the left-hand side of the last seven lines of hieroglyphic text are three vertical lines of inscription recording the name of Amen-mapet, the royal son of Kush, to the left of which again is the figure of a man kneeling on one knee and holding a 'fan' in his hand." This is Amenemopet, as the inscription beside him shows: the long inscription referred to contains only conventional praise of Seti I, in which occur the phrases: "Valiant king, making his boundary to the limits in the 'Horns of the Earth.' . . . hacking up their town . . . . The Southerners come to him in obeisance, and the Northerners with prostrations." of his workmen, and the bountiful character of the rations which he issued to them.

<sup>c</sup>On the east shore at Silsileh in the sandstone quarry, published by Rougé, Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques, 263-65, and Griffith, Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, XI, Pl. IV; Lepsius, Denkmäler, Text, IV, 98; cf. Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 141, e (also f and g) and Text, IV, 97.

Dispatch of the Expedition

206. <sup>1</sup>Year 6, fourth month of the first season, first day, under the majesty of Seti I.<sup>a</sup> . . . . . <sup>4</sup>. . . . . On this day, lo, his majesty, L. P. H., was in the Southern City,<sup>5</sup> performing the pleasing ceremonies<sup>b</sup> of his father, Amon-Re, king of gods, spending the night awake in pursuit of benefactions for the gods, the lords of Egypt. When the land brightened <sup>6</sup>and [<sup>7</sup>day] came, [his majesty], L. P. H., commanded to send a king's-messenger of [his] majesty, L. P. H., with a body of citizens of the army, being 1,000 men <sup>7</sup>——— in troops to transport the monuments of his father Amon-Re-Osiris and his divine ennead, of fine sandstone.

Rations of the Troops

207. His majesty, L. P. H., <sup>8</sup>increased that which was furnished to the army in ointment, ox-flesh, fish, and plentiful vegetables without limit. <sup>9</sup>Every man among them had 20 deben<sup>c</sup> of bread daily, <sup>12</sup>1 bundles of vegetables, a roast of flesh; and <sup>12</sup>1 linen garments monthly. (Thus) they worked <sup>10</sup>with a loving heart for his majesty, L. P. H., his plans were pleasing in the mouth of the people who were with the king's-messenger of his majesty, L. P. H.

Rations of the King's-Messenger and Standard-Bearers

208. <sup>11</sup>That which he had: good bread, ox-flesh, wine, sweet oil, (<sup>1</sup>olive) oil, <sup>1</sup>fat<sup>1</sup>, honey, figs, <sup>1</sup>—<sup>1</sup>, fish, and vegetables every day. Like-wise the wreath<sup>d</sup> <sup>12</sup>of his majesty, L. P. H., which was paid him from the House of Sebek, lord of Silsileh, daily; 20 linen garments were paid to the magazine of the standard-bearers of his army <sup>13</sup>in like manner. . . . .<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup>After the date nearly four lines are occupied by the names, titles, and epitheta of Seti I; they are very much mutilated.

<sup>b</sup>The original is corrupt; it must contain the usual hr' yr t hss't, etc., occurring in this connection, e. g., on the Assuan stela of Thutmose IV (II, 826).

<sup>c</sup>Nearly four pounds.

<sup>d</sup>Mr. Alan Gardiner has called my attention to the occurrence of this word (<sup>c</sup> nh) here.

<sup>e</sup>Usual conventional phrases attached to the names of the king in conclusion.

III. GEBELËN QUARRY INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

209. The fragmentary record of Seti's quarrying operations at Gebelên shows that he took out stone there for his mortuary temple at Thebes, on the west side by Kurna.

210. <sup>b</sup>———— to search out [—] — — Hathor, in order to cut out very much stone therein, (for) the "House-of-Menmare (Seti I)-of-Millions-of-Years-upon-the-West-of-Thebes." Then he came to his majesty, L. P. H., saying ————— an opportunity of making his name to flourish in the whole land. On this day, the overseer of [the treasury], Thutmose — who — — — gave silver and gold of one time,<sup>c</sup> to prosecute his work ————— to cut out very much stone (for) the "House-of-Menmare (Seti I)," while working — —. He said: "— plan — the king protect —" — regulation of the impost, to assign their [overseer] who is in charge of "Lord-of-Life;"<sup>d</sup> the people — the work. It is his father, Amon ————— telling thee the desires of the heart [since] the time of the god. For the ka of the scribe, who conducts the monuments of the Lord of the Two Lands, the chief of works, Hui.

IV. MORTUARY TEMPLE AT THEBES (KURNA)

211. Besides the quarry inscription at Gebelên, Seti has recorded the erection of his beautiful mortuary temple at Kurna in a series of dedication inscriptions in the building itself. Several show that the temple was also dedicated to the mortuary ritual of his deceased father:

212. <sup>e</sup>Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Osiris-Ramses I [triumphant; making for him a house] of millions of years, the "Temple-of-the-Spirit-of-Seti-Merneptah-in-the-House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes;" and fashioning his barque, [built] of electrum, in

<sup>a</sup>In one of the quarries, on the rocks at Gebelên; found there and published by Daressy, Recueil, X, 134.

<sup>b</sup>Here are visible the fragments of Seti I's titulary, which was doubtless preceded by the date and followed by the words: "His majesty commanded, etc."

<sup>c</sup>A kind of gold.

<sup>d</sup>The name of the mountain on the west of Thebes; also the word for "sarcophagus l'id." order to carry his beauty in the procession of the lord of gods, at his feast of the valley.

<sup>e</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 705.

213. <sup>a</sup>Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his father, the Good God, Menpehtire (Ramses I), making for him a place of coolness forever.

<sup>b</sup>. . . . . making for him a Great House of silver, wrought with electrum ———.

<sup>b</sup>. . . . . making for him an august palace of eternity.

<sup>b</sup>. . . . .<sup>c</sup> making for him a house of millions of years on the west of Thebes.

214. The name of the temple: "Temple-of-the-Spirit-of-Seti-Merneptah-in-the-House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes"<sup>d</sup> shows clearly that it was also Seti's own mortuary temple. Hence I have also found six dedications to himself alone or to Amon:

215. 1.<sup>e</sup> Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, — — of Karnak, making for him a great palace, an august holy of holies, for the divine ennead, a place of rest for the lord of the gods at his beautiful feast of the valley; which the son of Re, Seti I, given life, like Re, forever, made for him.

216. 2.<sup>e</sup> Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, king of gods, making for him a house of millions of years, on the west of Thebes, over against Karnak, of fine white sandstone, made very high and great, which the son of Re, etc. . . . .<sup>f</sup>

217. 3.<sup>g</sup> Seti I; he made it as his monument for his father, Amon-

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 131, b; Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 707.

<sup>b</sup>Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, 52, 3; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 132, g, h. Usual introduction omitted.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 131, c and d; also ibid., 132, h.

<sup>d</sup>Seti I's temple at Memphis was also called: "Temple-of-the-Spirit-of-Seti-Merneptah-in-the-House-of-Ptah" (Brugsch, Thesaurus, V, 1223).

<sup>e</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 132, a; Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 696, 697.

<sup>f</sup>As in No. 1; but the name here is that of Ramses II, according to Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 696.

<sup>g</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, 132, e, and again 152.

Re, lord of Thebes, residing in the "Temple-of-the-Spirit-of-Seti-Merneptah-in-the-House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes," making for him a house of millions of years, of fine, white sandstone, a place of appearance for the lord of gods, to behold the beauty of Thebes. The doors thereof are of real cedar, wrought with Asiatic copper, made high and large.

218. 4.<sup>a</sup> . . . . . making for him a wide hall, shining in the midst of his house, a place for the appearance of his august image at his beautiful "Feast of the Valley." The great divine ennead who are in Tazeser, their hearts are satisfied ———.

219. 5.<sup>b</sup> He made (it) as his monument for his fathers, the gods and goddesses residing in the temple (called): "Spirit (y<sup>3</sup> b)-of-Seti-Merneptah-in-the-House-of-Amon-on-the-West-of-Thebes," making for them an august palace as a house of the holy of holies for the gods. When they rest in its palace, Amon-Re is at the front ———."

220. 6.<sup>c</sup> . . . . . making for him a house of millions of years on the west of Thebes, over against Karnak, of fine white sandstone, made very high and large. . . . .<sup>d</sup>

221. The temple was not finished at Seti's death, but was completed by his son, Ramses II, who has left in it more dedication inscriptions (§§ 516-22) than did his father.

V. TEMPLE OF KARNAK

222. The northern half of the great hypostyle hall, including the nave, with both its rows of columns and also the first row south of the nave, are the work of Seti I. The pylon in front of the hall was at least begun under Ramses I. Seti's portion of the hall contains architrave inscriptions and dedications, recording the building as his work, though it was finished under his son, Ramses II. Its name was:

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 132, d; and 152, d; the latter is fuller and better preserved; the omitted introduction is the same as No. 3.

<sup>b</sup>"Chambre latérale, côté est de la grande salle" (Brugsch, Recueil de monuments, 51, 4).

<sup>c</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 697; usual introduction is omitted.

<sup>d</sup>Conclusion as in No. 1.

“Temple-of-the-Son-of-Seti-Mernamon-in-the-House-of-Amon.”

223. <sup>a</sup>Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes (Ns'wt-t'wy); making for him a great and splendid temple of fine sandstone. . . . ———. Utterance of Amon-Re, king of gods: “O my son, of my body, my beloved, lord of the Two Lands, Menmare (Seti I), Begotten of Re. How beautiful is this monument which thou hast made! O Uhem-mesut! Thou hast made festive my house a[new]; how exalted, how greatly extended are the august precincts,<sup>b</sup> which existed before the kings of Upper and Lower Egypt. No god put it into their hearts to make [the like of that which thou hast made].”

224. Seti I, king, shining upon the steed like the son of Isis; archer, mighty of arm like Montu; a great wall of bronze, protecting his army; <sup>c</sup> upon the <sup>c</sup>field in the day of battle; he did not consider<sup>c</sup> millions gathered together, by the might of Amon, who assigns to him victory and might over every land. . . . .<sup>d</sup>. . . Seti I, maker of monuments in the House of Amon <sup>c</sup>, in order to make for him who begat him in the great and august precinct of Karnak, a beautiful, divine resting-place wherein Amon might rest, a place of appearance for the lord of the gods at his feast of the First of the Year.

Other references like: “maker of monuments with a loving heart in the house of his father, Amon,”<sup>e</sup> occur in several places.

VI. MORTUARY TEMPLE AT ABYDOS

225. This, in decoration the most beautiful temple in Egypt, was chiefly the work of Seti I.<sup>f</sup> While serving as a

<sup>a</sup>Architrave inscription over the columns of the north side; Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 79, 80.

<sup>b</sup>S'wt, lit., “ground, pavement;” it is possible that we should understand it literally here, the reference being to the rise and extension of the site, which, according to Legrain, rose over a meter from Sesostris I to Seti (Annales, IV, 32, 33).

<sup>c</sup>Meaning “he despised.” <sup>d</sup>Fuller titular.

<sup>e</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 78.

<sup>f</sup>Views of the temple, Mariette, Voyage dans la haute Egypte, I, Pls. 19-34, and the author's Egypt through the Stereoscope (Nos. 43-45).

mortuary temple for himself, sacred to all the gods of Egypt, it was also closely identified with the mortuary cult of the remote kings of the earliest dynasties, with whose tombs in the desert behind, it was connected by a pylon and a causeway. All Egypt was conceived as participating in and contributing to this service of the gods and the early kings; hence the nomes of all Egypt are represented at its doors in personified form.

226. The first and second pylons, with all of the first and most of the second court, have perished, and with them the dedication inscriptions of the architraves.<sup>a</sup> Those which remain are connected with the seven chapels devoted to the king and six great divinities, which form a row across the rear of the second hypostyle hall. In the center is Amon; on the right, Osiris, Isis, and Horus; on the left, Harakhte, Ptah, and the king himself. Thus the right is devoted to the Osirian triad, and the center and left to the three great state-gods of Thebes, Heliopolis, and Memphis, with whom is naturally associated the king himself as head of the state. The seven aisles leading to these chapels each bear inscriptions devoted to the divinity to whose chapel the respective aisle leads. These aisles pass through the first and second hypostyle, and the connecting doors between the two hypostyles bore dedications each to the divinity to whose chapel the respective aisle leads. These dedications of Seti I were erased by Ramses II, who inserted his own;<sup>b</sup> only four<sup>c</sup> are still legible:

---

<sup>a</sup>A long inscription in one of the rear chambers represents the goddess Sakhthabui as describing the temple, but it can hardly be called a dedication or building inscription (Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 50, 51), being chiefly of religious significance. On the foundation ceremony in this inscription, see Brugsch (Thesaurus, VI, 1268 f.).

<sup>b</sup>He erased the name of Seti throughout the first hypostyle (Mariette, Abydos, I, 14, 37).

<sup>c</sup>Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 13, c, d, e. The fourth (b), not read by Mariette,

227. King Seti I, given life. He made (it) as his monument for his mother Isis, the great, the divine mother; making for her a doorway of electrum (named): "Menmare-is-Rich-in-Food."

228. This formula was repeated at each of the doors, with only the necessary change in the name of the god and the door. The recesses for the opened double doors also bore each a dedication of the chapel itself, which was six times repeated on each doorway, varying only in the name of the chapel:

229. <sup>a</sup>Seti I; he made it as his monument for his father, Horus, residing in "House (h't)-of-Menmare;" making for him a Great House (h't-c't) of gold, that he may be given life.

230. In the five repetitions on this door we find in place of "Great House" above: (2) Doorway; (3) Divine Monument; (4) Great House (pr wr); (5) August Palace; and (6) Place of the Heart's Rest. In the aisle of Ptah the chapel is called:<sup>b</sup>

(1) Great House (pr wr) Adorned with Electrum; (2) Splendid Palace like the Horizon of Heaven; (3) Temple made Festive with Provisions; (4) Glorious Temple upon the Excellent Seat; (5) August Temple of Gold; (6) Great Seat by the Side of 'Rosta'.

231. The chapels themselves also bear dedications. Three<sup>c</sup> of these refer to the temple as a whole, and mention only Osiris:

232. 1. He made (it) as his monument for Osiris, residing in "House (h't)-of-Menmare;" making for him a temple like heaven; its is furnished by Borchardt's copies. The four are dedicated to Horus, Isis, Osiris, and Harakhte. Another dedication to Amon-Re, king of gods, Harakhte, Ptah of Memphis, and Osiris is published partially by Daressy (Recueil, 21, 6). See also Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 138, b-f.

---

<sup>a</sup>Ibid., Pl. 14, a.

<sup>b</sup>Ibid., b. The designations may, of course, apply to the second hypostyle. Mariette published only the two given above.

<sup>c</sup>Along the ceilings; Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 19, b, c, d, and p. 17, § 49.

divine ennead are like the stars in it; its radiance is in the faces (of men) like the horizon of Re rising therein at early morning ———.

233. 2. . . . .<sup>a</sup> making for him an august temple, the most pure [house] of eternity, splendid seat of everlastingness, fronted by images and figures of all gods.

234. 3. . . . .<sup>a</sup> making for him a temple, beautiful, pure, glorious and excellent upon the divine soil of the lords of Tazeser, the cool seat of Wennofer, the rest — —.

235. The dedications on the chapel doorposts refer to the individual chapels, and mention on each one only the divinity to whom the respective chapel was devoted. The six<sup>b</sup> are as follows:

236. 1a. HORUS. He made (it) as his monument for his father, Horus, son of Isis, residing in "House-of-Menmare;" making for him a great seat shining in the faces (of men), its door is like a great illumination, by the side of his mother, Isis, (named): "Menmare-is-the-Protector-of-His-Father."

237. 1b. . . . .<sup>c</sup>in his house of millions of years; door (named): . . . . .<sup>d</sup>

2a. ISIS. . . . . making for her a Great Seat, its door glittering with every splendid costly stone, its door is gilded with electrum, giving forth radiance like the sun; (named): "Menmare-is-Enduring-in-Monuments."

2b. . . . . making for her a great house — [—] house of millions of years; (named): . . . . .

3a. OSIRIS. . . . . making for him a Great Seat, over against the lord of Tazeser, a great house (pr wr), gilded with electrum, its door [expels] darkness like the sun, when he appears in the morning; (named): "Menmare-is-the-Enricher-of-Abydos."

3b. . . . . making for him a very radiant —, its doorway gilded with electrum, its door — — adorned with every splendid, costly stone; (named): . . . . .

<sup>a</sup>Same as No. 1.

<sup>b</sup>Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 18, a-f. Each dedication is double, one on each doorpost. One is fuller than the other. I have rendered the fuller form (a), adding the shorter as a variant (b).

<sup>c</sup>Same as 1a, as far as "Isis."

<sup>d</sup>As in 1a.

4a. AMON. (Lost.)

4b. (Only fragments.)

5a. HAKHTE. . . . . making for him a Great Seat, adorned with electrum, its door gilded with electrum (named): "Menmare-the-Emanation-of-Re-is-the-Satisfier-of-Re-in-Abydos."

5b. (The same.)

6a. PTAH. . . . . making for him a Great Seat, a chapel of the august 'god', its door gilded with electrum (named): "Menmare-Ruler-of-Thebes-is-Great-in-Might."

238. In each of the chapel doorways is a further fivefold dedication, each formula containing a different name for the respective chapel.<sup>a</sup>

239. The colonnaded hall behind the Osiris-chapel contains a series of dedications inscribed on the columns. They begin with the usual formulary as above, but continue with various designations<sup>b</sup> of the temple as a whole, each beginning with "making for him;" thus:

240. 1. a pure palace anew, of fine limestone of Ayan.
 2. a temple anew in the glorious seat of eternity.
 3. a divine palace in the place which his heart loved.
 4. an august adytum in the district of the lords of Tazoser.
 5. an august adytum in the nome of the lord of Tazoser.
 6. a great house (h' t' c' t), a splendid seat of the lords of eternity.
 7. horizon of eternity, place for performing the pleasing ceremonies in the presence.
 8. a pure audience-hall, excellent forever.
 9. a palace, a door of the dwellers in the Nether World.
 10. the great seat of the 'sanctuary'.
 11. a pure dwelling in the precinct of Tazoser.
 12. a house like the heavens, its beauty illuminating the Two Lands.
 13. a glorious seat, excellent for giving jubilees to the king.
 14. this monument, beautiful, pure, flourishing, and excellent.
 15. the favorite place of Wennofer by the side of Tazoser.

<sup>a</sup>These thirty dedications were not copied by Mariette; but from Borchardt's copies it is evident that they contain for the most part the conventional designations, and need not be repeated here. There are some repetitions.

<sup>b</sup>Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 19, e.

241. The seventh chapel, devoted in large measure to the king, was, after all, sacred to the gods in general, as the following dedications<sup>a</sup> show:

242. He made (it) as his monument for his fathers, the gods residing in "House-of-Menmare," making for them an august Great House (pr wr) in my house of millions of years, my great seat beside their majesties; (named): "Menmare-Equips-Abydos."

243. The other dedication begins with the same words, and proceeds: making for them — — my door of millions of years (named): "King Menmare — —." A. C. S.

VII. TEMPLE MODEL<sup>b</sup> OF HELIOPOLIS

244. This unique monument was the base block of a model temple and accessory monuments executed by Seti I at Heliopolis. It shows the sockets in which were set up the side walls, the pylons, colossal statues, a pair of obelisks, and the last pair of the avenue of sphinxes between which are the steps leading up to the temple. It was clearly not an architect's working model, but served some religious purpose in the temple, like the model tools and implements always found in the temple foundation deposit, or the model temple offered by the kings to the gods. Supplementing the model, the inscriptions on the right and left edge mention the making of a holy of holies, which by metonymy may mean an entire temple; two pylons, doorways, two "pairs," and two obelisks. Now the materials given are such as are never used for such purposes in a real temple, and the inscriptions therefore unquestionably refer to the model itself and to its parts. The model itself is the “holy of holies” (sh̄m), also called “temple” (h̄ t-ntr) of conglomerate; the two miniature pylons were of some costly white stone, the doorways of bronze, the flagstaves (the “pairs”) of mesdet stone, and the obelisks of diorite. These valuable materials have long since been stolen, but the base block of conglomerate has survived, because of its ordinary material.

<sup>a</sup>Mariette, Abydos, I, Pl. 28, e.

<sup>b</sup>A single block of gritstone about 34½ by 44½ inches, and 9½ inches thick, "discovered at a village near Cairo in 1875," now in the possession of Commander H. H. Gorrige, U. S. N. It was published by Emil Brugsch in Recueil, 7-9, Pls. III and IV, and by Gorrige in his Egyptian Obelisks (New York, 1882), Pl. XXXII.

245. Although this model, as the inscriptions show,<sup>a</sup> had its own religious function, it suggests real buildings of Seti I, at Heliopolis. As a matter of fact, he did erect at least one obelisk there, which now stands in the Piazza del Popolo in Rome. But it was still uninscribed at Seti I’s death, and its present inscriptions were placed upon it by his son, Ramses II (§§ 544-49), who reserved for himself one side of the obelisk, where he states the fact. He also affirms that Seti “filled Heliopolis with obelisks.”<sup>b</sup> But no others have survived. A doorpost from Heliopolis bears the following dedication:<sup>c</sup>

Seti I, beloved of Shu and Tefnut; he made (it) as his monument for his father, Atum, lord of Heliopolis; making for him a gate of grit-stone, the doors thereof of cedar, wrought with —, established as an eternal work, which his majesty made, because he ‘so much’ desired ‘—’ — for the gods of Heliopolis.

246. The building inscriptions on the model are as follows:

<sup>d</sup>[He made (it) as] his monument for his father, Re-Atum-Khepri, by making for him an august holy of holies in the likeness of the horizon of heaven, a resting-place of the two horizons, in which the lords of Heliopolis rest, like Atum — — —.

<sup>e</sup>The Good God, making monuments for his father, Re-Harakhte,

<sup>a</sup>On the edge, Seti I is eight times shown offering.

<sup>b</sup>See the record of Seti’s work on obelisks in the Assuan quarry (§ 201 f.); and an altar of his at Heliopolis (Annales, II, 95, 96).

<sup>c</sup>Now in Alexandria; Legrain, Annales, V, 121.

<sup>d</sup>Left edge.

<sup>e</sup>Right edge.

making for him in the temple, of good (red) gritstone, two pylons of white costly stone, doorways of bronze, pairs<sup>a</sup> of mesdet (msd' t) stone, two obelisks of black basalt (bhnw), established in Heliopolis, the horizon of heaven;<sup>b</sup> the gods of Heliopolis exult at seeing (them).

VIII. MISCELLANEOUS

247. Finally there are two more short dedications: one at Wadi Halfa, and one at Benihasan in the Speos Artemidos.

Wadi Halfa

248. <sup>c</sup>[Seti I] seeking monuments for his father, Min-Amon, residing in Bohen; making for him a temple like the horizon of heaven, wherein Re rises.

Benihasan

249. <sup>d</sup>Seti I; he made (it) as his monument for his mother, Pakhet, the great, mistress of Benihasan, in her temple of the secret valley, the 'cleft' of the cliff.

250. There are also a dedication inscription from an uncertain monument, possibly an obelisk found at Kantara;<sup>e</sup> and one or two minor references to buildings, of slight importance.

<sup>a</sup>The "pairs" (here snsn or snwy) are the tall flagstaves set up against the pylon-towers. In the temples they are of cedar, capped with metal (see II, § 103).

<sup>b</sup>All the preceding contains only participles agreeing with Good God, viz., the king.

<sup>c</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 705; besides the confirmation of his father's pious works there (§§ 73 ff.).

<sup>d</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, II, 332; Sharpe, Egyptian Inscriptions, II, 60; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 138, h.

<sup>e</sup>Prisse, Monuments égyptiens, 19.

REIGN OF RAMSES II

GREAT ABYDOS INSCRIPTION<sup>a</sup>

251. This is the longest inscription of Ramses II's reign. Together with the Kubbân Stela, it has been regarded as the most important source for his youth and early regency. It shows us the young king in his first year journeying to Thebes,<sup>b</sup> and in mentioning a statue of his father erected by Ramses on that occasion at Thebes, the narrator takes occasion to summarize the king's works in provision for his father (ll. 22-26).<sup>c</sup>

252. Ramses now sails to Abydos (ll. 26-32), where he finds Seti I's beautiful temple (Baedeker, 218-23) unfinished, and its endowments violated (ll. 32, 33). He immediately summons his court and officials (ll. 33, 34), who come in with the usual fulsome adulation demanded by court etiquette (ll. 34-40), after which Ramses announces to them his intention to complete his father's buildings (ll. 40-43), and takes

---

<sup>a</sup>Cut on the wall of the portico behind the colonnade at the rear of the first court in the famous temple of Seti I at Abydos. The inscription is in 116 vertical lines, the first 21 of which accompany a relief and are shorter. Numerous lacunæ break the text. Published by Maspero (from a copy by Devéria): Essai sur l'inscription dédicatoire du temple d'Abydos, par G. Maspero (Paris, 1867); again by Mariette in 1880 (Abydos, I, 5-9). I also had a collation of Mariette with the original for the Berlin dictionary by Borchardt.

<sup>b</sup>Whence he came is quite uncertain. Maspero (Struggle of the Nations, 387) states that he came from Ethiopia, but for this I find no evidence. On the contrary, the mention of the statue erected in Memphis (l. 22) may indicate that he came from the north.

<sup>c</sup>Ll. 1-21 contain only the dialogue between the divinities (ll. 1-17) in the relief and Ramses (ll. 18-21). The translation begins with the words of Ramses (ll. 18-21). The works summarized in ll. 22-26 are (except the statues) not yet undertaken at the time of the visit to Thebes; but, being complete at the time of the composition of this inscription, the narrator inserts the summary here, forgetting that they were not complete at the time of which he is writing.

occasion to recall to his courtiers how his father had him publicly crowned coregent while a mere child, giving him extensive authority and a harem (ll. 43-48). He proceeds to describe his administration as coregent (ll. 48-50), and reiterates in conclusion his determination to complete his father's buildings (ll. 51-55). Hereupon the courtiers fairly outdo themselves in a long-winded eulogy of the dutiful son (ll. 55-69). The narrator now recounts the summons to the architects, artists, and workmen, who are commissioned to complete Seti I's temple. At the same time the king re-enacts and reorganizes his father's endowments for the maintenance of the temple and its mortuary service (ll. 69-75).

253. When all is done, Ramses addresses his deceased father, calling attention to all these pious works for his father's welfare in the hereafter (ll. 75-93), and showing how it will be to his father's interest to ensure unbroken continuance of these favors, by inducing the gods, among whom he now is, to grant Ramses a long reign. Ramses assures his father that his (Seti's) mortuary offerings shall be maintained as long as he (Ramses) continues on the throne (ll. 93-98). To this remarkable compact Seti, in reply, agrees, intercedes with the gods, and assures Ramses that the gods have decreed<sup>a</sup> him an eternal reign, and that he himself enjoys the greatest felicity because of his son's provision for him (ll. 98-116).

254. The inscription, it will be observed, is historically very important, as well as interesting in several respects. The statements regarding Ramses' coregency in youth are detailed and circumstantial. His appearance in public for coronation, in the presence of his father, reminds us of the similar account of Hatshepsut's coronation (II, 215 ff.). But the evidence of the Karnak reliefs (§§ 123 ff.) is so conclusively against his ever having been so chosen by Seti that, like the said story of Hatshepsut's coronation, we must regard it as a fabrication.<sup>a</sup> Such a fiction could hardly have been published immediately on Seti's death, and when we remember Ramses' extraordinary compact with his deceased father, the question arises whether the inscription is a later product of Ramses' reign, and his long life is the source which suggested the fiction of the compact, to which the narrator now attributes Ramses' remarkable longevity.<sup>b</sup> In any case, the inscription was written after the completion of his works for his father, and after some of his foreign campaigns (l. 93).

---

<sup>a</sup>See similar prayer of Seti, quoted with l. 103, p. 115, n. b.

255. The king's visit to Thebes in his first year is corroborated by an independent document in the Theban tomb of the High Priest of Amon, Nebunef (Nb-wm-nf).<sup>c</sup> A relief in this tomb shows Ramses II, accompanied by his queen, Mutnofret, and the court, addressing Osiris. Before the god is the following inscription:

256. Year 1, third month of the first season, —<sup>d</sup> when his majesty went north from the Southern City, ¶having<sup>1</sup> celebrated the pleasing ceremonies of his father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes . . . . .,<sup>e</sup> [Mut] . . . . .,<sup>e</sup> Khonsu in Thebes, Beautiful Rest, and the Divine Ennead <sup>a</sup>See also introduction to Kubbân inscription (§ 283), and my "Ramses II and the Princes in the Karnak Reliefs of Seti I" (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 37, 138 f.).

<sup>b</sup>Against this is the motive for the account of his appointment as coregent—a motive which would have been influential only immediately after his accession, when he desired to support the legitimacy of his reign.

<sup>c</sup>Champollion, Notices descriptives, I, 535, 851, 852; and Lepsius, Denkmäler; Text, III, 239.

<sup>d</sup>The space for the day is left vacant in the original.

<sup>e</sup>Further titles of Amon and Mut, omitted by Champollion.

dwelling in Thebes; at his beautiful feast of Opet (named): "Returning-Thence-with-Praise."

257. As Nebunnef was High Priest, this great feast of Amon is naturally recorded in his tomb. It is the same feast, celebrated in the month Hathor, by Thutmose III<sup>a</sup> on his return from his first campaign (II, 541, 550), and, this being the first celebration of it in Ramses' reign, it naturally called him to Thebes, whose powerful priesthood he could not fail to conciliate by appearing at their temple in person on such an important occasion.

258. Returning now to our great document, we find in the relief scene preceding the long inscription that the young King Ramses II appears offering an image of the goddess Mat (Truth) to Osiris, Isis, and his deified father, Seti I. The speeches of the divinities are of solely religious interest. The speech of Ramses, which merges into the long inscription itself, is of historical importance, and begins the following translation:

Speech of Ramses

259. <sup>18</sup>Utterance of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Usermare-Setepnere (Ramses II) in the presence of his father, Osiris: "I champion thee, <sup>19</sup>like thy son, Horus; I have done according to [his]<sup>b</sup> doing. I repeat for thee monuments in the necropolis, <sup>20</sup>I double offerings for thy ka. I answer on behalf of my father, he being in the Nether World (Dwꜣt), in the place [— —], <sup>21</sup>for the son becomes the champion of his father, like Horus, when he championed his father, forming him that formed him, fashioning him that fashioned him, making to live the name of him that begat him, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Ramses (II), given life, like Re, forever, beloved of Osiris, lord of Abydos."

Voyage to Thebes, Summary of Ramses' Works for His Father

260. <sup>22</sup>When the Lord of the Two Lands arose as king, to act as champion of his father, in the year 1, on his first voyage to Thebes, he fashioned statues of his father; King Menmare (Seti I) was he; one in Thebes, another in Memphis, in the temple which he built for them, <sup>23</sup>an addition to the beauty of that which was in Abydos of Towêr, which he loved, which his heart has desired since he was on earth, the soil of Wennofer (Osiris). He repeated the restoration of the monuments of his father, which are in the cemetery, making his name live, fashioning his statues, giving offerings abiding <sup>24</sup>for his august ka — his house, supplying his altars, upbuilding that which was fallen in the house which he loved, erecting the seats in his temple, laying its walls, setting up its doorways, erecting the ruins in the seat of<sup>a</sup> his father, in the district of Osiris ——— <sup>25</sup>the double façade made therein, in everything which the Great in Victory, the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Ramses (II), given life, made for his father, Osiris, the King Menmare (Seti I), triumphant. He established for him possessions, supplied with food of the [— —] his heart <sup>26</sup>being kindly disposed toward him that begat him, his feelings inclining toward him that brought him up.

<sup>a</sup>Also by Piankhi (IV, 836).

<sup>b</sup>Cf. l. 43.

Ramses Sails from Thebes to Abydos

261. On one of these days it happened in the year 1, the third<sup>b</sup> month of the first season, the twenty-third day, at the [‘feast’]<sup>c</sup> ——— after the return of Amon to Karnak, that he (the king) came forth, favored with might and victory from Amon-Atum in Thebes, and he rewarded him with myriads of years, even to the duration of Re in heaven. Hear ——— [‘exalted’] forever and ever. He raised his hand, bearing the censer, to the horizon of him who abides in the West, his offering being excellent and acceptable to his [‘father’], the lord of love. His majesty departed from the Southern City ——— Re.

(He) began the way,<sup>d</sup> to make the voyage, while the royal barges illuminated the flood, turning down-stream to the seat of might, “House<sup>e</sup>-

<sup>a</sup>There is a superfluous n here which suggests “seat of truth, for his father,” etc.

<sup>b</sup>Borchardt has only one month-sign.

<sup>c</sup>Even in Ramses III’s day the Feast of Opet closed at least eight days before this; this must have been the Feast of Hathor, at which Amon also celebrated; but the king must have been at Thebes during the great Feast of Opet, which just preceded.

<sup>d</sup>For the usual form of this phrase, see Amarna Landmarks (II, 960, l. 6), or Scarab of Wild Cattle Hunt (II, 864).

<sup>e</sup>This is the earliest occurrence of the city of “Ramses.” It is not clear why it should be mentioned, unless the king was going farther north to the Delta.

of-Ramses-Meriamon-Great-in-Victory." His majesty entered, to see his father, the voyage of the waters of the canal of Abydos<sup>a</sup> (Nj-wr), in order to found offerings for Wennofer, consisting of every good thing, that which his ka loves, in order to praise<sup>30</sup> — — — for his brother, Onouris, son of Re in truth, like himself.

Ramses Finds Cemetery Buildings in Ruins

262. He found the buildings of the cemetery belonging to former kings, their tombs<sup>b</sup> in Abydos, beginning to be in ruin. The half of them were in process of construction<sup>31</sup> — — — in the ground, their walls [lying] incomplete, not one brick touching<sup>c</sup> another. That which was only begun<sup>d</sup> had become mere rubbish. There was no one building — — — who was carrying out according to his plans, since their lord had flown to heaven. There was no<sup>32</sup> other son, who renewed the monuments of his father, which were in the cemetery.

Seti I's Temple Unfinished, Its Endowments Violated

263. Lo, the house of Menmare (Seti I), its front and its rear were in process of construction, when he entered into heaven. Its monuments were not finished, its columns were not set up on its [platform], its statue was upon the ground, it was not<sup>33</sup> fashioned after the regulation for it, of the gold-house. Its divine offerings had ceased, the lay priesthood likewise. That which was brought [from] its fields was taken away, their boundaries were not fixed in the land.<sup>e</sup>

Ramses Summons His Court and Officials

264. Said his majesty to the wearer of the royal seal who was at his side: "Speak thou, call<sup>34</sup> the court, the king's-grandeens, all the commanders of the army, all the chiefs of works, and the keepers of the

<sup>a</sup>Abydos lies seven miles from the river, and is evidently connected with it by a canal which the king here enters. Compare the same voyage of King Neferhotep (I, 763, ll. 16, 17).

<sup>b</sup>These can hardly be anything else than the tombs of the First Dynasty kings. That some of them should be in course of construction may mean that chapels were being erected for these kings (their halls in Seti's temple) or that repairs were going on.

<sup>c</sup>Lit., "embracing."

<sup>d</sup>Mshn means "birth- or nursing-chamber," which may be figurative for "beginning," that which was incipient. Suggested by Erman.

<sup>e</sup>See Seti I's solemn adjuration to respect his endowment of this very temple (§ 180, ll. 11-13, 15-19).

house of rolls (books).” They were brought before his majesty, their noses were bowed in the dust, their knees were on the earth <sup>35</sup>in adoration, smelling the earth; their hands were uplifted to his majesty, they praised this Good God, magnifying his beauty in the presence. They told the story according to that which he had done, they likened his brave deeds, as they were; every word which came out of their mouths, was that which the Lord of the Two Lands had actually done. <sup>36</sup>They were upon their bellies, <sup>1</sup>wallowing upon the earth before his majesty, saying:

The Court Eulogizes the King

265. “We come to thee, lord of heaven, lord of earth, Re, life of the whole earth, lord of duration, of fruitful revolution,<sup>a</sup> Atum for the people, lord of destiny, creator of Renenet,<sup>b</sup> Khnum <sup>37</sup>who fashioned the people (rhy' t), giver of breath into the nostrils of all, making all the gods live, pillar of heaven, support of earth, [—] adjusting the Two Lands, lord of food, plentiful in grain, in whose footsteps is the harvest goddess, <sup>38</sup>maker of the great, fashioner of the lowly, whose word produces food, the lord vigilant when all men sleep, whose might defends Egypt, valiant in foreign lands, who returns when he has triumphed, whose sword protects the Egyptians, beloved of truth, in which he lives <sup>39</sup>by his laws, defender of the Two Lands, rich in years, great in victory, the fear of whom expels foreign lands, our king, our lord, our Sun, by the words of whose mouth Atum lives. Lo, we are now before thy majesty, that thou mayest decree to us the life that thou givest, <sup>40</sup>Pharaoh, L. P. H., breath of life, who makes all men live when he has shone on them.”

Ramses Announces His Intention to Complete His Father's Buildings

266. Said his majesty to them: “Behold, I have caused that they call you, because of a plan that is before me. I have seen that the buildings of the cemetery, the tombs that are in Abydos, <sup>41</sup>and the works therein, are in an unfinished state, since the time of their lord until this day. When a son arose in the place of his father, the monuments of him that begat him were not restored. Then I conversed with my own heart: ‘It is a happy example, to provide for <sup>42</sup>them that have passed away, excellent to behold good — — 'Horus who shaped' the thought of the son, that he should incline the heart after his father. My heart leads me in doing excellent things for Merneptah (Seti I). I will cause it to be said forever and ever: "It was his son, who made his name live." May my father, Osiris, <sup>43</sup>favor me with the long life of his son, Horus, according as I do that which [he] did; I do excellent things, as he did excellent things, for him who begat me."

---

<sup>a</sup>The king is often called the source of the land's fruitfulness; hence the same here, where he is called Re, the sun.

<sup>b</sup>Goddess of birth, destiny, and good fortune.

Ramses Relates His Appointment as Coregent

267. "I came forth from Re, [although] ye say, from Menmare (Seti I), who brought me up.<sup>a</sup> <sup>44</sup>The All-Lord himself made me great, while I was a child, until I reigned. He gave to me the land while I was in the egg; the great smelled the earth before me, when I was installed as eldest son, as hereditary prince upon the throne of Keb. I reported <sup>45</sup>— —<sup>b</sup> as lord (hry-d' d') of infantry and chariotry. When my father appeared to the public, I being a child between his arms. [He] sa[id] concerning me: "Crown him as king, that I may see his beauty while I live <sup>46</sup>with him." [Thereupon approached] the courtiers (ymyw-hnty), to set the double diadem upon my head. "Place for him the crown upon his head," so spake he concerning me, while he was upon earth. "Let him organize this land, let him administer —, let him show his face to the people," so spake he <sup>47</sup>— because the love of me was so great in his bowels.<sup>c</sup> He equipped me with 'household' women, a royal harem, like the beauties of the palace, he chose for me wives, after —, taking the concubines <sup>48</sup>of — his —, seizing [—]<sup>d</sup> and female companions."

Ramses Describes His Administration as Coregent

268. "Lo, I was Re over the people (rhy' t), those of the South and North were under my feet — it was I, who [set] them to <sup>49</sup>[building] —. I fashioned my father in gold anew, in the first year of my

<sup>a</sup>Or: "I came forth from Re, [so] say ye, while Menmare brought me up."

<sup>b</sup>Maspero's (Devéria's) text cannot be correct here; Borchardt shows only the canal-sign (mr) with the land-wedge.

<sup>c</sup>On the following passage, see Müller, Liebespoesie, 5. The different terms for harem-women are not exactly determined as yet.

<sup>d</sup>Müller, "Abgeschlossene."

appearance (as king).<sup>a</sup> I commanded that his temple be prepared, I established his fields ———. I founded for him offerings for his ka.
<sup>50</sup>——— wine, incense, all fruit, I cultivated trees, growing for him. Lo, his house was under my charge, all its works were under my authority, since — — — as a child.”

Ramses Repeats His Intention to Complete His Father's Buildings

269. “<sup>51</sup>——— my father; I will enlarge them anew. As for the monuments, I will not neglect his seat, after the manner of those children who forgot [their] father. ——— speak of — <sup>52</sup>——— a son doeth excellent things. My mighty deeds for my father as a child, I will now complete, being Lord of the Two Lands; I will [—] in them in the proper way ——— <sup>53</sup>——— I will lay the walls in the temple of him that begat me. I will charge the man of my choice, to conduct this work therein. I will mason up therein the br[eaches] in its walls <sup>54</sup>———, its pylon-towers of — —. I will cover its house, I will [erect] its columns, I will set stones in the places of the lower foundation, making monument upon monument, two excellent things at one time, bearing my name<sup>b</sup> and the name of my father, for the son <sup>55</sup>is like him that begat him.”

The Court Responds with an Eulogy of the King

270. Then spake the royal companions, and they answered the Good God: “Thou art Re, thy body is his body. There has been no ruler like thee, (for) thou art unique, like the son of Osiris, thou hast achieved the like of his designs <sup>56</sup>Isis [hath not loved] a king since Re, except thee and her [son]; greater is that which thou hast done than that which he did when he ruled after Osiris. The laws of the land proceed according to his position. The son is compassionate to him that made him, the divine seed — — <sup>57</sup>him who created him [in the] [egg] — it<sup>c</sup> inclines to the august guardian. None hath done that which Horus did for his father to this day, except thy majesty —. Thou

<sup>a</sup>This is evidently the statue of l. 72, and the reference to it by the king here, as a thing of the past, made in the year 1, is an anachronism of which a scribe, composing the inscription at a time when all the events it narrates were past, could easily be guilty.

<sup>b</sup>Ramses II's name is, indeed, upon many portions of the building which Seti built; Seti's name has even been erased to make room for it.

<sup>c</sup>Viz., the egg; that is, the young King Ramses II.

hast increased that which has been done; what <sup>58</sup>example of excellence ——— that we may introduce it, to tell it in the (royal) presence?
 Who shall come, that he may recall a thing proposed to thee<sup>a</sup>? (but) thou hast led the ignorant abroad ———. ——— mild, thy heart is kindly toward thy father, Menmare (Seti I), <sup>59</sup>the divine father, the beloved of a god, Seti-Merneptah, triumphant. Since the time of the god, since the kings have taken the crown, there has been no other like thee, neither seen in face nor heard in speech. [No other] son has repeated monuments for his father. Not one has arisen, <sup>60</sup>that he might champion his father, (but) every man deals for himself, on behalf of his own name, except thee and Horus, for thou art like the son of Osiris. Behold, thou art a goodly heir like him; as for his kingdom, thou administertest it in like manner. <sup>61</sup>As for him who doeth that which the god did, he shall have the length of life which he enjoyed. Re in heaven [is joyous-] hearted, his divine ennead is glad, the gods are satisfied with Egypt since thy coronation as king of the Two Lands. Beautiful ——— is thy —, excellent is thy truth, it has reached <sup>62</sup>heaven, thy plans are right in the estimation of Re, Atum is delighted — —, Wennofer is in triumph at that which thy majesty has done for his ka. He says:
 ‘— — — [I give] to thee the duration of heaven, his two heavens;’
<sup>63</sup>the gods of the secret place of the lord of the nether world say: ‘Thou shalt be upon earth like Aton.’ Glad is the heart of Merneptah (Seti I), his name shall live again, (for) thou hast fashioned him in gold and real costly stones, ——— his — of electrum <sup>64</sup>——— his —, thou buildest it anew, bearing thy name. As for every king<sup>b</sup> who is in heaven, whose buildings are in course of construction, there has been no son
 (of theirs) doing what thou hast done, since Re until <sup>65</sup>[this day]. ———
 Thy majesty — him; that which he did, thou hast remembered, when it was forgotten. Thou hast restored monuments in the cemetery. As for every plan that was neglected, thou hast carried it out in the proper way ——— <sup>66</sup>——— passes away, another comes. Thy majesty is King of Upper Egypt and King of Lower Egypt, for thou doest excellent things, and thy heart is satisfied in doing truth. Those things which are done in the presence of the gods, shall be heard ——— <sup>67</sup>——— when [thou] rise[st to] heaven, when thy beauty ascends to the horizon, the eyes see thy excellent deeds before gods and men. Thou art the one who doest it; thou art the one who repeatest monument on monument for the gods, according as thy father, Re, commanded <sup>68</sup>that thy name should be [known] in every land, from Khenthennofer of the South, northward, from the [shores] of the sea to the countries of Retenu (Rtmo), and among the settlements and strongholds of the king, the towns colonized and supplied with people<sup>a</sup> <sup>69</sup>—— every city [should know] that thou art the god of all people, that they may awake, to give to thee incense at the command of thy father, Atum; that Egypt as well as the Red Land may adore thee.”

<sup>a</sup>The king is the one who originates and proposes.

<sup>b</sup>This is doubtless a reference to the list of kings in the Abydos temple.

Ramses Completes and Endows His Father's Temple

271. Now, after <sup>70</sup>—— these utterances which these nobles [had spoken] in the presence of their lord, his majesty commanded to commission the chiefs of works; he set apart soldiers, workmen, carvers with the chisel, <sup>71</sup>—— draughtsmen, all ranks of artificers, to build the holy place of his father, to erect that which was in ruins in the cemetery, the mortuary house of his father. Lo, <sup>72</sup>he [began] to fashion his statue in the year 1;<sup>b</sup> while the offerings were doubled before his ka, his temple was properly victualed, and he supplied his necessities. He established his ritual roll of fields, peasant-slaves (mry' t) and cattle. <sup>73</sup>He appointed priests over their affairs, a prophet to upraise the hands — — — his people under — — — — to conduct affairs — — under him; his numerous granaries with grain <sup>74</sup>—— his possessions. The great officials in South and North are under the authority of his steward, being an act of the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Usermare-Setepnere; Son of Re, Meriamon-Ramses (II), given life, like Re, forever and ever, for his father, King Menmare (Seti I), triumphant, <sup>75</sup>—— — — [under] the authority of Wennofer. He did it again for his ka in Thebes,<sup>c</sup> Heliopolis, and Memphis<sup>d</sup> (where) his statues rested in their places in all his [stations]<sup>e</sup> of the [—].

<sup>a</sup>See Müller, Asien und Europa, 269, 270.

<sup>b</sup>Doubtless at the same time that he set up one in Thebes and another in Memphis (l. 22).

<sup>c</sup>A reference to Ramses II's work on the Theban mortuary temple of Seti I at Kurna.

<sup>d</sup>If Seti I had temples at Heliopolis and Memphis, they have now utterly vanished; but this remark may apply only to his statues.

<sup>e</sup>Where a statue stopped when carried in festival processions? But Spiegelberg (Rechnungen, 58) thinks it means “bazaar, market, or court.”

Ramses Addresses His Father, Narrating His Good Deeds to Him

272. Then spake the King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Ramses II,<sup>a</sup> given life, <sup>76</sup>sending up<sup>b</sup> that which he had done for his father, the Osiris, King Menmare (Seti I), triumphant; saying: "Awake thou, (lift) thy face to heaven, that thou mayest see Re, O my father, Merneptah (Seti I), who art a god. Behold, I am making thy name to live, I have protected thee, I give attention to thy temple, <sup>77</sup>thy offerings are established. Thou restest in the Nether World (Dw'ꜣt), like Osiris, while I shine as Re for the people, being upon the great throne of Atum, like Horus, son of Isis, who protected his father. <sup>78</sup>How [happy] for thee, who begattest me — — since thou comest as one living again. I have fashioned thee, I have built the house thou lovest, wherein is thy statue in the cemetery of Abydos, region of eternity. I have founded offerings <sup>79</sup>[for] thy s[atues], the daily offerings come to thee. [I] am he that doeth that which is lacking to thee; I do it for thee, every desire of thy heart, the excellent thing in thy name. I assess for thee the 'officials' (mꜣ dy' w) <sup>80</sup>— works for thy ka, in order to offer<sup>c</sup> for thee upon the ground, with bread and drink. I have come myself, myself (sic!), in order to see thy temple beside Wennofer, sovereign of eternity. I have 'finished' the work in it, I have laid out the 'ground', <sup>81</sup>I — that which thou desirest, making thy every house wherein I have established thy name forever. [I] am he that doeth according to truth, that it (truth) may flourish."

273. "I have given to thee the Southerners, offering gifts to thy temple, and the Northerners, <sup>82</sup>(bringing) their tribute before thy beautiful face. I have collected all them that owe thee dues, united in one body, under the administration of the prophet of thy temple, in order to make thy property a permanent whole,<sup>d</sup> to be brought <sup>83</sup>[to] thy temple [—] forever."

274. "I made splendid thy treasury, filled with possessions, the heart's desire, which I have given to thee, together with thy dues. I have given to thee a ship (mnš), bearing cargoes upon the sea, conveying to thee <sup>84</sup>the great [marvels] of God's-Land, and the merchants doing merchandising, bearing their wares and their impost therefrom in gold, silver, and copper."

<sup>a</sup>Full double name.    <sup>b</sup>Viz., to heaven.    <sup>c</sup>Lit., "sprinkle" or "sow."
<sup>d</sup>Lit., "causing thy property to become abiding in one body."

275. "I have made for thee calculations of the fields, which had been only verbal <sup>85</sup>—— on high [land], calculated in fields. I equipped them with inspectors, together with husbandmen, to produce clean grain for thy divine offerings. I have given to thee barges with crews, and artisans hewing <sup>86</sup>— without ceasing to sail to thy temple."

276. "I have formed for thee herds of all small cattle, faithfully to supply thy offerings. I levied for thee wild fowl from the [inclosed] marsh; others <sup>87</sup>— — live geese for maintaining those that were hatched. I put fishermen on the waters, on every pool, in order to furnish for thee imposts by the shipload."

277. "I equipped thy temple with every office <sup>88</sup>— — of my majesty. Thy lay priesthood of the temple has its full complement of heads.<sup>a</sup> The peasant-slaves are assessed for woven stuff, for thy wardrobe, and (as for) thy serfs of the fields of every district, every man brings <sup>89</sup>their (sic!) impost, to fill thy house."

278. "Lo, thou hast entered into heaven, thou followest Re, thou minglest with stars and moon. Thou restest in the nether world, like those who are therein, beside Wennofer, lord of eternity; <sup>90</sup>thy two [arms] draw Atum in heaven and in earth, like the unresting stars and the imperishable<sup>b</sup> stars, while thou art on the prow of the barque of myriads of years. When Re rises in heaven, thy two eyes are upon his beauty; <sup>91</sup>when Atum [enters]<sup>c</sup> into the earth, thou art among his followers. Thou hast entered into the hidden chamber before its lord; thy going is afar in the midst of the Nether World; thou hast associated thyself with the mortuary gods. Lo, <sup>92</sup>[I] pray for the breath of thy august nostrils. I mention thy name many times daily, I — my father [ — — ] — — — <sup>93</sup>— I tell of thy valor, when I am in a foreign country.<sup>d</sup> I lay down for thee gifts, my hand bears offerings for thy name, for thy — in thy every place."

<sup>a</sup>Viz., "people," often referred to as "heads," like our "head of cattle."

<sup>b</sup>The two names literally mean: "those who cannot rest," and "those who cannot perish." They are probably the stars of the southern and northern heavens (Brugsch, Aegyptologie, 321).

<sup>c</sup>Only the determinative of a verb of going is visible.

<sup>d</sup>There is no indication that this is a reference to a particular campaign, and the statement that it refers to Ramses II's Ethiopic campaign (Maspero, Struggle of the Nations, 387), in which it is averred he was engaged at his father's death, lacks foundation.

Ramses Prays His Father to Intercede in His Behalf

279. "Mayest thou speak to Re — — — —<sup>94</sup>— life to his son, Wennofer, with a loving heart. Grant lifetime upon lifetime, united in jubilees for Usermare-Setepnere (Ramses II), given life. It will be well for thee, that I should be king forever,<sup>95</sup>(for) thou wilt be — by a good son, who remembers his father; (for) I will take counsel for thy temple, every day, and for the affairs of thy ka, in every matter. If I hear of any damage<sup>96</sup>about to happen, I will command to remove it instantly in every matter. Thou shalt be as if thou livedst, while I reign. I shall look to thy house every day. <sup>97</sup>— I have —, my heart shall incline after thee, I shall champion thee and thy name, while thou art in the nether world. Excellent indeed shall it be for thee, while I am; while Ramses, given life, like Re, forever,<sup>98</sup>[the son] of Re, lives."

The Deceased Seti I Replies to His Son's Prayer

280. Then was King Menmare (Seti I), triumphant (m<sup>3</sup>c-hrw), an excellent soul (b<sup>3</sup>), like Osiris, rejoicing over all that which his son, the doer of excellent things, King<sup>99</sup>Ramses II,<sup>a</sup> had done, and praising all his beauty, to Re-Harakhte, and to the gods who are in the nether world, while he spoke in [—] <sup>100</sup>as a father on earth speaks with his son, saying:

281. "Let thy heart be very glad, O my beloved son, Usermare-Setepnere, given life, in — — giving to thee [myriads] of years, eternity upon the Horus-throne <sup>101</sup>of the living. Osiris has besought for thee the duration of heaven, wherein thou risest like Re at early morning. Life and prosperity shall be with thee, — truth, might, and joy of heart, for him who is rich in years. <sup>102</sup>Thine shall be might and victory, O thou great in victory; health shall be for thy limbs like (those of) Re in heaven. Joy and rejoicing shall be in thy every abode, O king, defending Egypt, binding the barbarians, spending the eternity <sup>103</sup>of thy lifetime as King of Upper Egypt, and as King of Lower Egypt, as Atum flourishes at rising and setting. Behold, I say to Re<sup>b</sup> with a

<sup>a</sup>Full double name, with the usual salutations after it, which have been omitted in the translation, in order to show more clearly the connection.

<sup>b</sup>A similar prayer of Seti's is found at Kurna (Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 150, a), in which he addresses Amon thus: "Grant thou to him (Ramses II) eternity, that he may make my name to live, by reason of the command that comes out of thy mouth." Here we see the same compact as in the Abydos inscription.

loving heart: 'Grant to him<sup>a</sup> eternity upon earth <sup>104</sup>like Khepri.' I have repeated to Osiris when I entered before him: 'Double thou for him the duration of thy son, Horus.' Behold, Re said in the horizon of heaven: 'Grant eternity, everlastingness, myriads of years <sup>105</sup>of royal jubilees for the son of his body, the beloved Meriamon-Ramses, given life, doer of excellent things.' Atum has decreed to thee his duration as king. Might and victory shall be united <sup>106</sup>behind thee. Thoth writes them at the side of the All-Lord, and the Great Ennead say: 'Re, in his barque, lord of the morning-barque, collects them for him; his eye sees <sup>107</sup>that which thou hast so excellently done. When he sails the heavens with the wind every day, great joy is behind him, because he remembers thy beauty; until Atum <sup>108</sup>sets in the land of the West, thy love is in his body every day.' Behold, Wennofer is lord of triumph (m<sup>o</sup>c-hrw) through that which thy majesty has done in the place of truth. I [Horus]<sup>b</sup> awake him at the reminder of thy goodness; my heart hath joy indeed, because of the eternity which he has decreed for thee. Behold, I have received the things which thou hast given to me: my bread and my water with gladness of heart, breath <sup>110</sup>[reaches my, nostrils, because of the deeds of a son, whose heart chooses to protect, free from negligence, knowing that which is seemly. Thou hast repeated monument on monument for Osiris under my authority in the presence <sup>111</sup>— — [in] the midst of Abydos (Njw-wr). I am magnified because of all that which thou hast done for me; I am placed at the head of the abode of the dead, I am transformed, I have become a god more <sup>112</sup>beautiful than before, since thy heart has inclined to me, while I am in the nether world. I am thy true father, who am a god; I have mingled with the gods, following Aton; I <sup>113</sup>[know] him who dwells in the barque — — like one in — — — who is in — — —. <sup>114</sup>He [remembers thy beauty — — —. Behold, thou hast a long life, Re has decreed to thee — — —, forever, like — — —. Thou art the living — of Atum, thy every word <sup>115</sup>comes to pass like (that of) the All-Lord. Thou art the favorite egg of Khepri, the water of a god [which came forth] from him. What thou begettest is that which Re himself has made; he said to thee: '— — — [as the maker of] — — — <sup>116a</sup>a guardian, thou comest as living Re to the people; the Southland and Northland [are beneath] thy feet, beseeching myriads of royal jubilees for Usermare-Setepnere, the duration of the All-Lord, when [he] rises

<sup>a</sup>Text has "to thee," but as Seti here speaks to Re in direct discourse, as the imperative shows, this is clearly an error for "to him," as found in the speech to Osiris, in the next line.

<sup>b</sup>Emendation suggested by Erman.

 _____.”

KUBBÂN STELA<sup>a</sup>

282. This document records the attempt of Ramses II to supply with water the desert road leading from the Nile at Kubbân to the gold-bearing regions on the east in the great Wadi 'Alâki.<sup>b</sup> It is similar to the records of like attempts by Seti I at Redesiyeh (§§ 162-98), with which it should be compared. Seti I, indeed, had made a futile attempt to find water on this same road, having dug a well there 200 feet deep, as our document informs us (l. 21). In spite of this fact, Ramses makes another attempt, and sends out the viceroy of Kush for the purpose. He presently reports success at a depth of only 20 feet.

283. A statement in the ceremonious address of the court (ll. 13-19) has always been regarded as of great historical importance. It affirms that Ramses had held important official positions in the land since he was a lad in the tenth year of his age (l. 17). But this statement, we should remember, is found in the midst of a fulsome eulogy abounding

<sup>a</sup>This stela was discovered in the ruins on the south of the village of Kubbân, by Prisse d'Avennes. It is now in the château of the Count St. Ferriol at Uriage, near Grenoble. It was published by Prisse (Monuments égyptiens, XXI), but his text is excessively incorrect. The first twenty-five lines were then much more accurately published by Chabas (Les inscriptions des mines d'or), and again without change by Rheinisch (Chrestomathie, Taf. 10). The last fourteen lines (ll. 25-38) have lost the first two-thirds of their length. These have been republished with collation of the Louvre squeeze by Virey (Recueil, XIV, 97, 98); his restorations are mostly gratuitous, and often grammatically impossible. An exhaustive copy of the original is very much needed.

<sup>b</sup>See Linant, Carte de l'Elbâye ou pays habité par des Arabes Bisharis, comprenant les contrées des mines d'or connues des anciens sous le nom d'Olaki, publiée par le dépôt de la guerre, 1854.

in the most absurd exaggerations. It is probable, in view of these statements, however, that Ramses early developed administrative ability, which he was given opportunity to exercise while still very young. This was doubtless a privilege granted to many princes of the royal house; it does not indicate that Ramses came to the throne while a child, nor do the courtiers here make any such claim,<sup>a</sup> though their words have been so misunderstood.<sup>b</sup>

284. A relief above the inscription shows Ramses II offering incense to "Horus, lord of Bek (B<sup>o</sup> k)," and "wine to Min residing in the mountain," resulting in the usual promises from the god. Then follows below the long inscription:

Introduction

285. <sup>1</sup>Year 3, first month of the second season, day 4, under the majesty of Horus: Mighty Bull, Beloved of Truth; Favorite of the Two Goddesses: Defender of Egypt, Binder of the Barbarians; Golden Horus: Rich in years, Great in Victory; King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Usermare-Setepnere; Son of Re: Meriamon-Ramses (II), given life, forever and ever, beloved of Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, and presider over Karnak; <sup>2</sup>shining upon the Horus-throne of the living, like his father, Re, every day; Good God, lord of the Southland, Horus of Edfu, of brilliant plumage, beautiful hawk of electrum. He protects Egypt with his wing, making shade for the people, as a wall of might and victory. When he went forth <sup>3</sup>from the body,<sup>c</sup> he was (already) terrible for capture, while his might was extending his boundaries; color was given to his limbs like the might of Montu. (He is) the double lord,<sup>d</sup> on the day of whose birth there was exultation in heaven; the gods said: "Our seed is in him." <sup>4</sup>The goddesses said: "He hath come forth from us to exercise the kingship of Re." Amon

<sup>a</sup>See infra, Figs. 3 and 4, and §§ 123 ff.

<sup>b</sup>E. g., by Wiedemann, Aegyptische Geschichte, 419; and by Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1890, 34 f.

<sup>c</sup>At birth.

<sup>d</sup>Written with the figures of Horus and Set.

said: "I am Irsu,<sup>a</sup> I have put justice into its place." The earth is established, heaven is satisfied, the divine ennead is content with his qualities, the Bull, mighty against Kush the wretched, smiting <sup>5</sup>the rebels<sup>b</sup> as far as the land of the Negro. His hoofs trample the Troglodytes, his horn goes into them; his fame is mighty in Khenthennofer; as for his terror, it has reached Karoy (K <sup>7</sup>r y). His name circulates among <sup>6</sup>all lands, because of the victories which his two hands have wrought. Gold comes forth from the mountain at his name,<sup>c</sup> like (that of) his father, Horus, lord of Bek (B <sup>7</sup>k <sup>7</sup>),<sup>d</sup> great in love in the southern countries, like Horus in the land of Miam (M y <sup>c</sup> m <sup>7</sup> m),<sup>e</sup> lord of Bohén (B whn); the King of Upper and Lower Egypt: Usermare-Setepnere; <sup>7</sup>Son of Re, of his body, Lord of Diadems: Meriamon-Ramses (II), given life forever and ever, like his father, Re, every day.

Investigation of the Land of Akita

286. Now, when his majesty was in Memphis, performing the pleasing ceremonies of his fathers, all the gods of South and North, according as they gave to him might and victory, and long life of myriads <sup>8</sup>of years; on one of these days it came to pass that, lo, his majesty was sitting upon a great throne of electrum, diademed with the double-feathered crown, recounting the countries, from which gold is brought, and devising plans for digging <sup>9</sup>wells on a road lacking in water, after hearing said that there was much gold in the country of Akita (<sup>7</sup>k <sup>7</sup>y <sup>t</sup>), whereas the road thereof was very lacking in water. If a few of <sup>10</sup>the caravaneers of the gold-washing went thither, it was only half of them that arrived there, (for) they died of thirst on the road, together with the asses which they drove before them. There was not found for them their necessary supply of <sup>11</sup>drink, in ascending and descending, from the water of the skins.<sup>f</sup> Hence no gold was brought from this country for lack of water.

<sup>a</sup>"Irsu" (Yr-sw), lit., "he who made him," a not uncommon designation of the god as father of the king (II, 985, note).

<sup>b</sup>Cf. Guieyssè (Recueil, X, 64 ff.), whose rendering is grammatically impossible.

<sup>c</sup>The same remarkable idea referring to Amenhotep IV (II, 946).

<sup>d</sup>District in which the ancient town at Kubbân was situated. See Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 31 f.

<sup>e</sup>M <sup>7</sup> m as often for <sup>7</sup> m. Miam is the ancient name of Derr; see Tomb of Penno (IV, 474 ff.), and Brugsch, Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 1882, 31.

<sup>f</sup>Going from the Nile into the desert is regularly "ascending," and the return is

Court is Summoned

287. Said his majesty to the wearer of the royal seal, who was at his side: "Call the princes of the court, <sup>12</sup>his majesty would counsel with them concerning this country, (how) I may take the necessary measures." They were immediately brought before the Good God, their hands uplifted to his ka, acclaiming and smelling the earth before his beautiful face. One (=the king) told them the character of this country, counseling <sup>13</sup>with them concerning the plan of opening a well upon the road thereof.

Address of the Court

288. They said before his majesty: "Thou art like Re in all that thou doest; that which thy heart wishes comes to pass. If thou desirest a matter in the night, in the morning it quickly comes to pass. We have been <sup>14</sup>beholding a multitude of thy marvels, since thy appearance as king of the Two Lands; we have not heard, neither have our eyes seen,<sup>a</sup> (yet) do they come to pass as they are.<sup>a</sup> As for everything that comes out of thy mouth, it is like the words of Harakhte. Thy tongue is a pair of balances, more accurate are thy two lips <sup>15</sup>than the correct weight of Thoth. What is that which thou knowest not? Who is the finisher of it like thee? Where<sup>b</sup> is the place, which thou hast not seen? There is no country which thou hast not trodden. All matters pass through thy ears, <sup>16</sup>since thou hast exercised authority over this land. Thou didst make plans while thou wast (still) in the egg, in thy office of child of a prince.<sup>c</sup> The affairs of the Two Lands were told thee, while thou wert a child wearing the curl;<sup>d</sup> no monument was executed, which was not under thy authority; <sup>17</sup>there was no commission without thy knowledge. Thou wast chief<sup>e</sup> of the army while thou wast "descending;" the workmen were unable to carry in the skins sufficient water for the round trip.

<sup>a</sup>See the same idea in l. 22. This method of flattery by courtiers is not unique. The same assumption of a mysterious origin of completed works of the king is found regarding Hatshepsut's obelisks, and the statue of Amenhotep III erected by Amenhotep, son of Hapi.

<sup>b</sup>Yw-t = יהוה (Bondi, Lehnwörter, 31).

<sup>c</sup>Rp = ty. <sup>d</sup>The well-known sidelock of youth.

<sup>e</sup>R = hry, lit., "superior mouth;" this is the phrase used in l. 13 where the king asks for advice = lit., "mouth" where "mouth" is, of course, a metonymy for "counsel." The exact military rank indicated is not certain. It should be a boy of the tenth year. Every work that was carried out, it was thy hand which made the foundation thereof. If thou sayest to the water: 'Come upon the mountain,' the flood comes forth <sup>18</sup>quickly after thy word, for thou art Re in limbs, and Khepri with his true form. Thou art the living image on earth of thy father, Atum of Heliopolis. Taste is in thy mouth, intelligence<sup>a</sup> in thy heart; the seat of thy tongue is the shrine of truth, the god sits upon thy two lips.<sup>b</sup> Thy words come to pass every day, <sup>19</sup>thy heart is made into the likeness of (that of) Ptah, the creator of handicrafts.<sup>c</sup> Thou art forever, it shall be done by thy plans, all that thou sayest is heard, O Sovereign, our lord."

Statement of the Viceroy of Kush

289. "As for the country of Akita, this is said concerning it," said the king's-son of Kush the wretched, <sup>20</sup>concerning it before his majesty, "that it has been in this manner lacking in water, since the time of the god. They die therein of thirst, and every earlier king desired to open a well therein, but did not succeed.<sup>d</sup> <sup>21</sup>King Menmare (Seti I) did the like, and caused to be dug a well of 120 cubits<sup>e</sup> depth in his time. It is (however), forsaken on the road, (for) no water came out of it. (But) if thou thyself say to thy father Hapi,<sup>f</sup> <sup>22</sup>the father of the gods: 'Let water be brought upon the mountain,' he will do according to all that thou hast said, like all thy designs, which come to pass before us, (although) they have not been heard in conversation; because thy fathers, all the gods love thee, more than any king, <sup>23</sup>who has been since Re."

---

observed that the courtiers here (ll. 16, 17) make no claim that Ramses became king at ten years of age, as is so often stated. They affirm no more than the assumption of great trusts by Ramses at a very early age; there is no hint of coregency.

<sup>a</sup>This is the same idea as in the Memphite system; ideas come from the heart (=mind). See my "Philosophy of a Memphite Priest" (Zeitschrift für ägyptische Sprache, 39, 39 ff.).

<sup>b</sup>This notion is also found in the Memphite system (ibid., pp. 46-48).

<sup>c</sup>In the address of Ptah to Ramses II (Abu Simbel Stela, Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 194, ll. 14, 15), Ptah says: "I cause the mountains to shape for thee great, mighty, lofty monuments; I cause the highlands to fashion for thee [all] splendid costly stones."

<sup>d</sup>Lit., "Their prosperity (=success) did not happen."

<sup>e</sup>Two hundred feet.

<sup>f</sup>The Nile-god.

Ramses Determines to Dig a Well in Akita

290. Said his majesty to these princes: "How true is all that which ye have said [—], that no water has been dug in this country since the time of the god, as ye say. (But) I will open a well there, [furnishing] water every day as in <sup>24</sup>[the valley of] the Nile, at command of my father, Amon-Re, lord of Thebes, and all the gods of Nubia, according as their heart is satisfied with the things desired. I will cause it to be said in the land — — — <sup>25</sup>— —."

291. [Then these princes] praised their lord, smelling the ground, throwing themselves upon their bellies in the presence, exulting to the height of heaven.

Said his majesty to the chief king's-scribe —: "<sup>26</sup>—— of the road to Akita. Let a month become a day,<sup>a</sup> when [thou] sendest <sup>27</sup>——." [Then the chief king's-scribe communicated to the king's-son of Kush]<sup>b</sup> according as it had been commissioned him. Lo, he mustered the people for <sup>28</sup>[digging the well] ———. [But they said: "What] then is it which the king's-son shall do? Shall the water <sup>29</sup>[which is in the nether world hearken to him?"]<sup>c</sup> Then they dug the well on] the road to the country of Akita. Never was done the like since the kings who were aforetime <sup>30</sup>——<sup>d</sup> he puts fish in the pools of the regions of [—] of the Delta marshes, pleasing his heart in creating <sup>31</sup>—— like a rudder in the wind.<sup>e</sup>

A Letter Announcing Success from the Viceroy of Kush

292. One came, bearing a letter from the king's-son of Kush the wretched, saying: <sup>32</sup>"—— [The] well [is finished]; that which thy majesty spake with his own mouth has come to pass; the water has come forth from it<sup>f</sup> at 12 cubits, being 4 cubits therein in depth. <sup>33</sup>—— it outside, as a god does, in satisfying the heart with that <sup>a</sup>That is, let a month of preparation become as short as a day.

<sup>b</sup>This scribe must have communicated the commission to the viceroy of Kush, for it is the latter who executes the task in Akita, as is shown by ll. 28 and 31.

<sup>c</sup>Cf. l. 35.

<sup>d</sup>The subject is uncertain; possibly the Nile-god is meant, being here doubtless the one who brings the water to Ramses' well.

<sup>e</sup>Virey's text has "shore" instead of "wind."

<sup>f</sup>Feminine pronoun, referring to "well" (fem.), which must have been mentioned in the preceding lacuna.

which thou desirest. Never was done <sup>34</sup>[the like since the time of the god] ——— Akita rejoices with great joy, those who are far away <sup>35</sup>——— the ruler. The water which is in the nether world hearkens to him, when he digs water upon the mountain <sup>36</sup>———.”

Conclusion

293. ——— to him from the king's-son, announcing that which he had done. They were glad because of<sup>a</sup> [it] — <sup>37</sup>——— excellent in plans, good in [— —] ——. <sup>38</sup>[His majesty ordered to call the name of] this [we]ll: “The-Well-of-Meriamon-Ramses-Mighty-[in-Victory].”

THE ASIATIC WAR

294. Ramses II, with his two predecessors, inherited a very dangerous situation in Syria. Seti I had not succeeded in relieving that situation, and upon Ramses II fell the critical task of confronting and checking the southward advance of the Hittites, in their process of absorbing the Egyptian conquests in Syria. They were the most powerful people which Egypt had ever met, and the conflict lasted nearly twenty years, during which we may discern three periods. In the first of these we find Ramses, after having pushed his Phœnician boundary northward to Beyrut, marching down the Orontes against the Hittites at Kadesh. The remarkable battle which followed was without beneficial result. The second period finds Ramses battling for the recovery of Palestine, where there had arisen a general revolt, undoubtedly incited by the Hittites. This revolt suppressed, the third period finds him again in the Hittite country, conquering Naharin as far north as Tunip, where his progress was such that the Hittites were willing to resign all projects of further conquest in Syria and negotiate a permanent compact in a treaty, in arranging which no mention of the boundary<sup>a</sup> adopted is made.

<sup>a</sup>Or: “They (the reports) were agreeable to [the heart of the king].”

295. The materials for the three periods are very scanty, except for the battle of Kadesh and the treaty. These materials are as follows:<sup>b</sup>

I. Beginning of the Hittite War.

1. First campaign: three illegible stelæ on the Nahr-el-Kelb near Beirut (§ 297).

2. Second campaign, battle of Kadesh:

a) Poem on the battle of Kadesh (§§ 305-15).

b) Official record of the battle of Kadesh (§§ 316-27).

c) Reliefs of the battle of Kadesh (§§ 328-51).

II. Palestinian revolt.

1. Reconquest of southern Palestine: a relief at Karnak showing the storming of Askalon (§§ 353-55).

2. Reconquest of northern Palestine: a short list of towns taken in the eighth year (§ 356); a relief at the Ramesseum, of the storming of Deper (§§ 356-62); a relief in the Hauran (§ 358).

III. Close of the Hittite War.

1. Conquest of Naharin: a small fragment at the Ramesseum, from an inscription describing the capture of Tunip (§§ 363-65); two short lists of conquered countries (§ 366).

2. Treaty with the Hittites: entire text of the document (§§ 367-91).

I. BEGINNING OF THE HITTITE WAR

296. Like his great predecessors, Seti I and Thutmose III, Ramses II began his operations for the conquest of northern Syria by first securing the coast and then moving against <sup>a</sup>This boundary will not have been far south of Hamath, which marks the southern limit of Hittite remains.

<sup>b</sup>Besides these materials, see also Nubian War, etc. (§§ 448-91).

the interior, where for the first time he comes into contact with the Hittites.

I. FIRST CAMPAIGN

297. Ramses II's first campaign was directed along the Phœnician coast, and extended as far as Beyrut, near which he erected a stela on the Nahr el-Kelb (Dog River) in his fourth year. Another stela, dated "year 2"<sup>a</sup> is called uncertain by Lepsius,<sup>b</sup> and is probably to be read "year 10;" for the first<sup>c</sup> is clearly 4; and there was but one campaign before that of the "year 5,"<sup>d</sup> against Kadesh. A third stela is without date. These stelæ<sup>e</sup> are so weathered that the records of the campaigns which they doubtless contained, are most totally illegible.<sup>f</sup> The location of the stela near the northern boundary of the conquests of Ramses' father, Seti I, is significant. They of course mark the advance boundary of Ramses II's northern conquests.

II. SECOND CAMPAIGN: THE BATTLE OF KADESH<sup>g</sup>

298. This battle, in which Ramses meets the Hittites for the first time, forms the culmination of Ramses II's second

<sup>a</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 197, c.

<sup>b</sup>Briefe, 403.

<sup>c</sup>Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 197, b.

<sup>d</sup>Which is called the second campaign, Record, l. 1.

<sup>e</sup>Published by Bonomi, Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature, 1st ser., II, pl.; Lepsius, Denkmäler, III, 197; see also Boscawen, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, VII, 331 ff.

<sup>f</sup>These stelæ are cut in the limestone of the hillside, and have so weathered that visitors unaccustomed to reading such inscriptions have declared they contained none. One (Boscawen's No. 1, farthest north) was smoothed off by the French, and a record of the French occupation (1860-61) inscribed upon it. The Egyptian inscription was, of course, totally obliterated (Boscawen, Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, VII, 336).

<sup>g</sup>Three sources: (1) the so-called "Poem of Pentaur" (referred to above as "Poem"); (2) the Official Record (called "Record"); (3) the Reliefs. The bibliography, etc., will be found with the introduction to each document. In general, see my Battle of Kadesh, "Decennial Publications of the University of Chicago," V, 81-127.

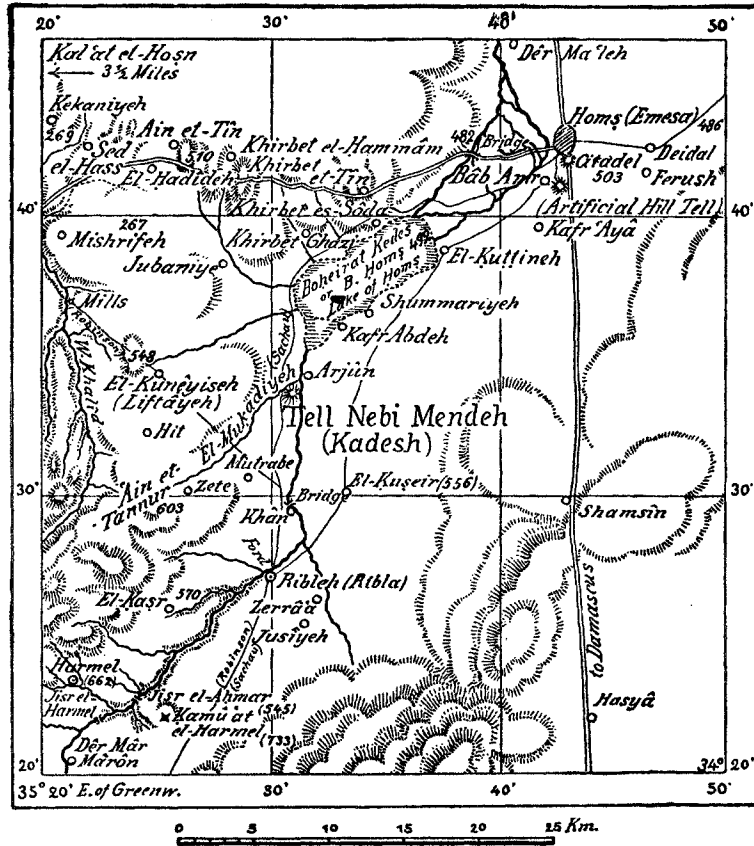

FIG. 7.—Map of the Orontes Valley in the Vicinity of Kadesh, 1:500,000 (after Blanckenhorn)

Syrian campaign, and furnishes nearly all we know of the beginning of his Syrian war. It is of especial interest, being the first battle in history of which we may follow the tactics and the disposition of both armies.<sup>a</sup> About the end of

<sup>a</sup>Rev. H. G. Tomkins' study of this battle (Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, VII, 390 ff.) was unfortunately made without all the data to be gained from the texts, but shows good use of what he had. Failure to observe the sequence of events made any clear outline of movements impossible. Maspero's account of it in his one volume, Histoire, is excellent, but this account was altered in his April, Ramses marched northward from the fortress of Tharu on the Egyptian frontier, with an army of probably about 20,000 men, in four divisions: the division of Amon, which formed the advance, under the immediate command of the Pharaoh; and the divisions<sup>a</sup> of Re, of Ptah, and of Sutekh, which followed that of Amon in the order given. Marching through Palestine,<sup>b</sup> and along the Phœnician coast road, Ramses passed into Amor, where he formed his van of picked men, on the "shore in the land of Amor" (Poem, l. 18). Thereupon he left the coast, perhaps marching up the valley of the Litâny, and reached the last elevation on the east side of the Orontes, where the high valley (the Bukâ<sup>c</sup> a) drops to the level of the plain around Kadesh, about a day's march south of it.<sup>c</sup> Here he camped (Poem, ll. 11, 12; Record, l. 2), without finding trace of the enemy. He therefore pushed on the next day, and as he reached the ford just south of Shabtuna, later Ribleh,<sup>d</sup> a small town, some seven and a half miles south of Kadesh, he was informed by two Shasu-Bedwin, sent out by the Hittite king for this purpose, that the Asiatics had retreated far northward to the district of Aleppo, beyond Tunip (Record, ll. 2-6). With the division of Amon, therefore, Ramses crossed to the west side of the Orontes at Shabtuna (Poem, l. 12), leaving the other three divisions on the east side, dis-larger history. Meyer is the only later historian who has shown a correct understanding of the general plan of the battle. On the literature of the subject, see my Battle of Kadesh, 4, 5.

---

<sup>a</sup>This word, which I render "division," is in Egyptian "army" (mš c), but it was probably about the size of a modern army division (see p. 153, note).

<sup>b</sup>The route is uncertain in Palestine (see Müller, Asien und Europa, 220), but must have been along the coast when he reached southern Phœnicia. It is barely possible, therefore, that Ramses embarked his army, after leaving Tharu, and landed at some Phœnician port.

<sup>c</sup>Battle of Kadesh, 19-21; see infra, Figs. 7 and 8.

<sup>d</sup>Battle of Kadesh, 21, 22.

FIG. 8.—March to Kadesh. First Positions

tributed along the road to the south. The division of Re, however, soon crossed at the same ford, with about a mile and a half between its van and the rear of the division of Amon<sup>a</sup> (Fig. 9). With these two divisions following him in a long line, Ramses continued rapidly northward, leaving the other two (Ptah and Sutekh) marching slowly south of Shabtuna, till there was a wide gap between the two halves of his army.

299. Meanwhile the Asiatics (Poem, l. 17), with an army of probably 20,000 men, the combined forces of the north Syrian princes, under the Hittite king, together with a large proportion of mercenaries from states in Asia Minor, adjacent or subject to the Hittites<sup>b</sup>—all these were concealed on the northwest of Kadesh, hidden from the Egyptians by the city. The Hittite king now uses the city to mask his movements, and as Ramses pushes northward on the west side of Kadesh, the Hittite commander shifts his position rapidly eastward and southward,<sup>c</sup> all the time keeping the <sup>a</sup>From this point on consult the battle plans (Figs. 9 to 12). They are taken from my Battle of Kadesh. The four Egyptian divisions are marked by their names: Amon, Re, Ptah, and Sutekh.

<sup>b</sup>Poem, ll. 1, 2, 13-16, and 24; Record, ll. 6, 7. The language of the inscriptions puts the Syrian contingents in the same category with those of Asia Minor, but it is clear that the latter are only mercenaries, called "warriors" (tw-hy-r), i. e., professional soldiers, who are in the service of the Hittite king for hire (Poem, l. 16), under their own native commanders, whom the Poem represents as their princes. The Syrians, on the other hand, are real allies of the Hittites, and their kings are really present.

<sup>c</sup>No direct statement of this movement is made in the sources, but after stating that the Hittites are "on the northwest of Kadesh" (Poem, ll. 16, 17), while Ramses is still south of Kadesh, they further state that the Asiatics emerged for the attack "from the southern side of Kadesh" (Poem, l. 20; Record, l. 20), when Ramses is in camp northwest of Kadesh. The Hittites could not have shifted from the northwest of Kadesh to the south of it, along the west side, for here Ramses was marching northward. They must have passed eastward and southward on the east side of the city (Fig. 10), keeping themselves constantly "behind Kadesh," from Ramses' point of view. They could, of course, have passed through Kadesh if the gates were in such positions as to permit. But as they crossed the Orontes

FIG. 12.—Fifth Positions

FIG. 11.—Fourth Positions

FIG. 10.—Third Positions

FIG. 9.—Second Positions

