PREFACE

Mircea Eliade has established himself as a major twentieth-century figure both as a historian of religions and as an important Romanian novelist. With his very general, interdisciplinary concerns, Eliade has considerable significance for anthropology, sociology, literature, hermeneutics, philosophy of language, phenomenology, philosophy of religion, philosophical anthropology, and other disciplines. He is often referred to as the world's foremost interpreter of myth and symbolism.

Over the years, the compilers of this book, like numerous other scholars interested in Eliade, have encountered many problems and frustrations in attempting to track down specific items or to assemble the relevant publications on a particular topic. Some of the difficulties lie in the diversity of Eliade's writings. Not only has he been a prolific writer, producing many books and articles in Romanian, French, and English, but also most of his works have been reprinted or translated. After devoting considerable time to searching for some rather obscure article, one often finds that he or she has already read it either in a different language or as a chapter in one of Eliade's books.

Other difficulties arise from the unavailability or inadequacy of previous bibliographies. Mention may be made of a bibliography prepared by Serv. Informarea științifică, Biblioteca Centrală de Stat, in Bucharest (date unknown). This unpublished list, sixty-seven typed pages in length, covers the period 1927 to 1942 and was circulated privately. The first published bibliography was J.A. Vázquez, "Para una biobibliografía de Mircea Eliade," Universidad, in 1964 (see F302). This short work is very incomplete and contains many errors. The University of California at Santa Barbara published a bibliography in 1968 (see F239), which was revised and updated in 1974 (F121). Both of these editions had limited circulation and contain many omissions and technical inaccuracies.

"Bibliography of Mircea Eliade" in Myths and Symbols. Studies in Honor of Mircea Eliade (D8), published in 1969, was the first "comprehensive" bibliography to appear in print. It is the bibliography with the widest circulation and the one most often cited by other scholars. Unfortunately, users have frequently repeated the numerous errors, repetitions, and typographical mistakes it contains. The section on articles by Eliade omits a vast number of literary and critical items published to a large extent in Romanian. This section also is misleading since it simply lists articles chronologically without indicating which are revisions or translations of other articles, and which have been reproduced in books by Eliade. Nevertheless, this bibliography represented a tremendous improvement over previous checklists.

A more comprehensive bibliography of Eliade's writings is included in Dennis Doeing's Ph.D. dissertation (E6) of 1975. This bibliography is very strong on the Romanian entries; also, many cross-references are integrated into the biographical text itself. It has served as a major source for us in compiling the present work.

The most comprehensive previous bibliography to be published appeared in the 1978 French edition of Mircea Eliade (D11). This represents an improvement over the bibliography in Myths and Symbols (D8), but shares its weaknesses. This work was also one of our major sources.

Mircea Eliade: An Annotated Bibliography is intended to overcome the difficulties caused by the nature and diversity of Eliade's writings and by the unavailability and weaknesses of earlier bibliographies. It will make publications by and about Eliade much more accessible both to the specialized scholar and to the general reader. At least 2,000 items are cited here for the first time. Most of these new items are book reviews and Romanian publications, but they also include a large number of books and articles by Eliade. This volume is also the first comprehensive listing of publications about Eliade. The most inclusive previous secondary bibliography (D11) listed seventy-five articles about Eliade; this book contains more than three hundred such articles. We have also been able to correct the many errors that appeared in previous bibliographies.

Although this bibliography is extremely comprehensive, it is not absolutely exhaustive. We were able to track down almost all of our obscure references, but there were a few leads or hints, mostly to pieces about Eliade, that we were never able to confirm. Such publications, if they exist, seem to be listed in no library in the United States or Europe nor in any catalogue or bibliography, and other attempts to establish their existence have proved unsuccessful. In addition, our bibliography was completed in late 1978, and we were still uncovering recent publications up to the time of our deadline. Undoubtedly some recent works have been omitted.

In general, our access to publications and our confidence in the reliability of our information varies for the different sections of the bibliography. We have had access to almost all of Eliade's books (Section A) and newspaper articles (Section H) and to the vast majority of his articles (Section B). At the other extreme, we have had to depend heavily on national bibliographies and catalogues for the international translations of Eliade's works (Section I).

Cross-references throughout this bibliography provide the reader with information about translations and instances in which a publication appeared under different titles or as a chapter in a book.

In addition to the annotations of books and articles by Eliade (Sections A, B, and H) and books and articles about Eliade (Sections D and F), there are major annotations of about thirty of Eliade's books (Section A), of some of his most significant articles (Section B), and of books written about him (Section D). These lengthy annotations discuss the purpose, summarize the contents, and sometimes evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of various works. Longer reviews and review articles by Eliade are included in Section B with Eliade's articles; shorter reviews by him are listed in Section C.

We have taken the liberty in Section A of including unpublished manuscripts together with published works. While this may seem unusual, it was done for the sake of completeness, with the intention of enabling the reader to better follow Eliade's development as a writer. It also provides identification of works lost and of those works partially published as articles.

Many volumes listed in Section A are collections of articles or of works of fiction which had been independently published. Within such listings, cross-references are given to the independent, usually original, publications. Annotations can be found either under the collected volume or under each cross-referenced item, depending on the nature of the volume itself.

For the sake of clarity and ease of use, Eliade's articles are organized into two sections: B and H. Those in Section B, which are all accessible, are generally considered to be more important than those in Section H, which are more obscure and many of which are practically inaccessible to the reader. If the articles had been listed together, those currently in Section B would have become "lost" in the maze of over 1,000 entries currently in Section H.

Asterisks are used to indicate items falling within two or more sections. An asterisked item is followed by a cross-reference to the primary citation.

In compiling this bibliography, we have employed many resources. In addition to the previously mentioned bibliographies of Eliade, especially D11 and E6, we made extensive use of all the national and other bibliographies and catalogues to which we had access. Several years ago Dennis Doeing was able to investigate library resources in Romania, and recently Douglas Allen spent three months working at the British Library. Eliade's autobiography and journal (see A85 and A104) have been valuable resources, since in them he refers to various obscure writings and gives important background information. Also very valuable were Eliade's personal files and collection of items; they contained numerous works that had never been listed in any catalogue or bibliography.

We would especially like to thank Mircea Eliade for his generosity, kindness, and assistance, which we have enjoyed over a period of many years. During 1978, he met with us on several occasions, gave us access to his personal files, answered our many questions, and offered valuable suggestions concerning the organization of this bibliography. He gave us permission to use the biographical chronology he had prepared for Mircea Eliade (D11); this appears in revised and expanded form in the present volume. We hope that we have partially returned his kindness by compiling a definitive annotated bibliography that will make his writings more accessible and will assist others in their research.

CHRONOLOGY

- 1907 March 9, Bucharest. Born Mircea Eliade, second son of captain Gheorghe Eliade and Joana Stoenesco.
- 1913 October. Enters primary school, 10 Mântuleasa Street.
- 1917–25 Secondary studies at lycée Spiru-Haret in Bucharest. Has a passion for reading, but reads only what is stimulating to him. Handicapped by myopia.
- 1919 Writes first short stories.
- 1921 January. Publishes his first written article: “How I Found the Philosopher’s Stone” in Ziarul științelor populare. Also begins his diary, Jurnalul.

The contributions concern his youthful interests in entomology, alchemy, orientalism, as well as his impressions of trips to the Carpathians and the Danube, short stories, essays, and literary criticism.
- 1923–25 Learns Italian in order to read G. Papini and V. Macchioro, and English to read Max Müller and Frazer. Also studies Hebrew and Persian. Writes most of his autobiographical novel, Romanul adolescentului miop.
- 1925 October. Passes his baccalaureate exam and enrolls in the Faculty of Letters and Philosophy at the University of Bucharest. Favorite professor: Nae Ionescu.
- 1926 January. Founds Revista Universitară, but it is suppressed after only three issues because of his excessively critical review of N. Iorga’s work Essai d’histoire universelle.
November. Begins to contribute regularly to the daily newspaper Cuvântul. For many years thereafter, Eliade publishes on the average two small articles a week, which in-

- clude portraits of artists and scholars, reviews of works on orientalism and the philosophy of religion, impressions of journeys, etc.
- 1927 Publishes over a hundred short articles, most notably the series "Itinerariu spiritual."
- March-April.* Takes first trip to Italy, where he visits G. Papini in Florence; E. Buonaiuti, A. Panzini, and G. Gentile in Rome; and V. Macchioro in Naples.
- July-August.* Journeys through Austria and Switzerland.
- 1928 January. Preoccupied with writing Gaudeamus, the sequel to Romanul adolescentului mio, both of which are unpublished and lost, except for fragments.
- April-June.* Travels to Rome where he works on his master's thesis on Italian Renaissance Philosophy from Marsilio Ficino to Giordano Bruno.
- After reading Surendranath Dasgupta's A History of Indian Philosophy, Eliade writes to the professor, communicating his desire to study under him at the University of Calcutta. He writes at the same time to Maharajah Manindra Chandra Nandy of Kassimbazar, who was a patron of scientific studies.
- June.* He returns to Bucharest by way of Naples, Athens, and Constantinople.
- September.* Receives encouraging responses from Dasgupta and the Maharajah. The latter promises him a bursary for his sojourn in India.
- October.* He obtains his master's degree in Philosophy.
- November 20.* Departs for India.
- November 25–December 5.* Voyages in Egypt.
- December 17–20.* Disembarks at Colombo and visits Ceylon.

- 1929 January-June. Eliade attends Dasgupta's courses and studies Sanskrit.

- March.* Travels to Benares, Allahabad, Agra, and Jaipur.
- July.* Sojourns at Darjeeling and Sikkim.
- August.* Completes the novel Isabel și apele Diavolului, which is published in Bucharest the following year.
- September-December.* Dasgupta suggests that he work with a pandit in order to accustom himself to conversing in Sanskrit with religious Hindus.
- 1930      January-September. Resides at the home of Dasgupta, 120 Bakulbagan Street, in Bhowanipore quarter. Each morning, under the direction of Dasgupta, he works for an hour on textual analysis (the commentary of Patañjali).
- February.* He decides on the subject of his doctoral thesis: a comparative history of techniques of Yoga.
- June-July.* Dasgupta dictates to him his book on the philosophy of the Upanishads.
- Publication of his first studies on Indian philosophies and religions in Revista de Filosofie, Bucharest, and Ricerche Religiose, Rome.
- September.* Has disagreement with Dasgupta. Leaves Bhowanipore and departs for Hardvar in the Himalaya.
- October.* Takes up residence in a kutiar at Rishikesh where, for a period of six months, he practices Yoga under the direction of Swami Shivananda.
- December.* Visits a number of yogins at Lakshmanjula and joins pilgrims returning from Badrinath.
- 1931      January-March. Practices Yoga and meditates.
- April.* Returns to Calcutta.
- April-November.* Researches in the library of the Asiatic Society of Bengal and becomes friends with the librarian, the Tibetanist Johan van Manen. Eliade begins the redaction of his thesis.
- December.* Called to military service, he departs for Bucharest.
- 1932      January-November. Serves in the first regiment of anti-aircraft artillery, Bucharest.
- Begins to translate into Romanian the English text of his thesis on Yoga.

- 1933     January-May. Wins a competition for unpublished works with his manuscript Maitreyi. When it is then published in May, the work is recognized as a great success by critics and the public alike.
June. Obtains a Doctorate in Philosophy. The University of Bucharest encourages him to publish his thesis in French and to begin looking for a translator who is also familiar with English, Romanian, and Sanskrit.
November. Appointed assistant to Nae Ionescu, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics, Eliade presents a course on "The Problem of Evil in Indian Philosophy."
- 1934     January. Marries Nina Mareș; they take an apartment on Dinicu Golescu Boulevard.
Confronted with financial difficulties, he contributes to many periodicals and publishes four volumes: two novels, Întoarcerea din rai and Lumina ce se stinge; a collection of articles, Oceanografie; and his travel journal, India.

Major Works of Mircea Eliade

Note: Several unpublished works are cited in this section because of their memorable significance for the author. References to most of these are found in his autobiography, Amintiri A85.

Pre-1930

- A1 Nuvele și povestiri (Tales and Narrations). Unpublished series of short stories written in 1919.
- A2 Călătoria celor cinci cărăbuși în țara furnicilor roșii (Voyage of Five Cockchafers in the Land of the Red Ants). Unpublished fantasy written in 1921–22. Mixture of entomology and humor.
- A3 Jurnalul. Unpublished record of events at school, 1921–22. Parts contained in Romanul adolescentului miop A5.
- A4 Memoriile unui soldat de plumb (Memories of a Lead Soldier). Unpublished, unfinished novel of the author's vision of what he called "Universal History." In the moment of a train wreck, a boy's talisman (lead soldier) describes to him its presence through great events of the past: from the formation of the cosmos to the appearance of man, the creation and destruction of civilizations, the crucifixion of Christ, the Crusades, and so on.
- A5 Romanul adolescentului miop (Novel of a Nearsighted Adolescent). Autobiographical novel of exemplary youth, written from 1922 to 1925. Parts published as articles from 1925 to 1927: see H87, H113, H228, H243–45, H247, H250.

- A6 Istorie a descifrării hieroglifelor (History of Hieroglyphic Decipherings). Unpublished, written in 1923.
- A7 Gaudeamus. Autobiographical novel about college life, written in 1927-28. Part published as article in 1928: see H321.
- A8 Jurnalul. Autobiographical journal written from 1928 to present. Parts published as articles from 1953 on: see H932, H934, H953, H972, H982, H1001-2, H1006-7, H1009, H1011, H1015, H1019. Parts from 1945 to 1969 translated into French as Fragments d'un journal A104. The latter is translated into German as Im Mittelpunkt A116; and the parts from 1957 to 1969 into English as No Souvenirs A117. See A117 for annotation.

- A9 Isabel și apele Diavolului (Isabel and the Devil's Waters). Bucharest: Națională Ciornei, 1930, 237 pp. Author's first published novel, written in Calcutta, 1929.
 Told in the first person, it is full of action but poorly written and confusing. A fictional work with many autobiographical references. Deals with the ambiguity of sin and the problem of evil. See especially chapter 7, "Dream of a Summer's Night," which recounts an actual experience of the author.

- A10 Soliloquii. Bucharest: Carte cu Semne, 1932, 83 pp. A collection of youthful aphorisms written from 1928 to 1932.
 A small but significant book containing some of Eliade's first philosophical musings. Reveals an unusual mixture of Western and Eastern influences. It reads like a journal of abstract ideas stressing such notions as "truth," "mystery," the "fantastic," and "cosmic consciousness."

1933

- All Intr'o mănăstire din Himalaya (In a Monastery in Himalaya). Bucharest: Cartea Românească, 1933, 32 pp. Contains autobiographical articles published in 1931-32: see H367-70, H374, H449. Revised in India A13 pp. 165-98, 214-19. French translation of parts: A122.

- A12 Maitreyi. Bucharest: Cultura Națională, 1933, 266 pp. Numerous editions published since 1938 by Editura Cugetarea. Novel of Indian love, written in 1932-33. Parts published as articles in 1933: see H547, H562. Reprinted in Maitreyi. Nuntă în Cer A91. German translation: Das Mädchen Maitreyi A40. French translation: La Nuit Bengali A45.

Aesthetically and financially, one of Eliade's most successful works. It gained him recognition in Romania as a significant literary writer. Based upon actual experiences of 1930 in Calcutta, it is actually a journal of his own discovery of love of one named Maitreyi. The main characters, Allan and Maitreyi, exchange several expressions of love to an "interchange of their beings" and an "integration into the Cosmos." Maitreyi at first appears commonplace to Allan, but eventually he is both charmed and puzzled by her actions, which are startling and upsetting to the reader. A discovery of the Indian spirit, of an exotic world of Indian values.

- A13 India. Bucharest: Cugetarea, 1934, 280 pp. 2nd ed. with new pref. Cugetarea, 1935. Contains autobiographical articles published from 1929 to 1933: see H332-34, H352-58, H361, H363, H365, H367-71, H373-75, H398, H447-54, H536, H552. Part is a revision of A11. This part is translated into French in Mircea Eliade A122 pp. 47-60.

A technical journal of author's three years in India, 1929 to 1931. Reads like a reporter's notebook giving both a detailed account of and a running commentary on his impressions of India. Some parts simply relate events; other parts describe the author's excitement from adventures and encounters. Of particular interest is his six-month stay in the monasteries of Hardwar, Rishikesh, and Svargashram in the Himalaya during 1930 and 1931. This work also contains transcriptions of radio talks about India given a year or so after his return to Romania.

- A14 Întoarcerea din rai (The Return from Paradise). Bucharest: Națională Ciornei, 1934, 419 pp. 2nd rev. ed. Bucharest:

Cugetarea, 1943, 392 pp. See H383, H393, H596.

A complicated work in which the characters convey many different ideologies, anecdotes, and subjective experiences. At the time Eliade was considered a leading writer of his generation, and this work reveals his concern for that "young generation" with its own anxieties and with its frustrations over the older generation of World War I. The main character, Pavel Anicet, is a young modern who is very ambitious, yet he fears failure. He also loves two women at the same time. He finally commits suicide as his only answer to success. Death is valorized as a reintegration into Cosmic vitality. Though appearing "epical," the novel is too lengthy, has too many characters.

- A15 Lumina ce se stinge (The Light that Fails). Bucharest: Cartea Românească, 1934, 415 pp. Novel written in Calcutta, 1930-31. Part published as a serial in the newspaper Cuvântul, 1931: see H372.

Not one of Eliade's more popular novels. Concerns a mysterious fire that breaks out in a library. Cesare, blinded by the fire, cannot forget the events of that night, such as an orgiastic ritual and his encounter with the demonic character Manoil. Based on elements of magic and tantra. The technique of inner monologue highlights Cesare's intellectual confusion. For instance, Manoil invokes Nietzsche, Gide, Zarathustra, and Šiva to overcome the bonds of sensuality.

- A16 Oceanografie. Bucharest: Cultura Poporului, 1934, 304 pp. Contains articles published from 1932 to 1934: see H414-15, H437-38, H443, H465-66, H468, H476-80, H482, H488, H491, H502, H540, H543, H546, H550, H553-59, H561, H563, H568, H570-73, H575-77, H580, H585, H598-99, H604-5, H612.

A collection of heterogeneous essays intended to be "open and authentic" accounts of author's "deeper explorations" (hence title) into a variety of topics. By this kaleidoscopic approach to what he calls "impersonal themes," Eliade attempts to stimulate "active valences" for everything around him, including the most commonplace. Reflects his philosophy at the time: take on all possibilities, yet renounce any one limited possibility. See especially the Introduction, which distinguishes "thinking" from "understanding." The work also contains five "Letters to a Provincial." These letters criticize the restrictive attitude of those Romanians who were concerned mainly with their own internal affairs or who read French literature to the exclusion of other, more ecumenical works.

- A17 Alchimia Asiatică (Asiatic Alchemy). Bucharest: Cultura Poporului, 1935, 76 pp. Eliade's first scientific book to be published; it was researched from 1925 to 1932. Parts published as articles from 1933 to 1935: see H493, H641. Part in French in Yoga. Essai sur les origines A21 chap. 8 [which has rev. French and Eng. pub.]. Material also in Forgerons et alchimistes A55 [which has Eng. and Ger. trans.]. Intended to be the first of several works on Oriental physical and natural sciences.

- A18 Huliganii (The Hooligans). Bucharest: Națională Ciornei, 1935, 2 vols. 3rd ed. Bucharest: Cugetarea, 1943, 457 pp. Novel continuing A14.

Through irresponsible acts and supreme self-confidence, Petru Anicet and his companions try to overcome their fear of the "terror of history." A violent book with multiple amoral and erotic episodes.

- A19 Santier (lit. Construction Site; fig. Work in Progress). Bucharest: Cugetarea, 1935, 277 pp. Autobiographical journal or "indirect novel" of Eliade's stay in India, written from 1928 to 1931. Parts published as articles from 1932 to 1934: see H382, H484, H583, H621.

A companion to A13 but portraying much more personal and intimate events: the author's experiences living in a boarding house, walking the streets of Calcutta, visiting opium parlors, etc. Eliade called this an "indirect novel" and considered it not so much fiction as a confession or unfolding of lived experiences. Told in the first person, it is an attempt to be "authentic"--that is, to render unmediated self-expression without recourse to conventional standards.

- A20 Domnișoara Christina (Mistress Christina). Bucharest: Cultura Națională, 1936, 236 pp. 1943 ed. Editura

Contemporana, 240 pp. French translation: Mademoiselle Christina A121.

Fantastic horror novel containing Romanian folkloric motifs. Vampire-like ghost, Christina, possesses her prepubescent niece, Simina, who subsequently matures rapidly and in three nights time nearly seduces the hero, Egor. Just short of the consummation of their passion, Egor senses death and flees. Later he finds the grave of Christina and ponders his own tragic condition of living, now having lost the presence of the fantastic. This work was accused by authorities of being pornographic.

- A21 Yoga. Essai sur les origines de la mystique indienne. Paris: Librairie Orientaliste Paul Geuthner; and Bucharest: Fundația pentru Literatură și Artă "Regele Carol II," 1936, ix + 346 pp. Originally written in English in 1931 and then translated into Romanian and enlarged by Eliade in 1932, from which it was retranslated into French by M.S. Rivain. Based on doctoral research at the University of Calcutta, 1929 to 1931. Material contained in articles published from 1930 to 1937: see B3-5, B7, B13, B23. Contains translated parts of A17. Parts revised and rewritten as Techniques du Yoga A41 and Patañjali et le Yoga A76 [which has Eng. trans.]. Fully revised and rewritten as Le Yoga. Immortalité et liberté A53 [which has Ger. trans. and Eng. trans. and revision].
- Poorly translated, it was Eliade's first major scientific work, and was so recognized at the time by leading scholars. Compares forms of Yoga in the Vedic and popular traditions. Discerns a popular pre-Aryan resistance, or "autochthonous substratum," to Brahmanical juridical structures. Consequently views India's history as the result of two contrary processes: the assimilation of dominant Indo-Aryan influences and a reaction to this by popular pre-Aryan elements, particularly by the ways of mysticism. Identifying the roots of this mysticism, or the causes of this reactionary tendency, constitutes a problem of the philosophy of culture. The author's thesis: techniques of Yoga attempt to homologize and unify contrary biological, psychological, spiritual (and consequently historical) states such that Chaos is transformed into Cosmos. See also annotation of A63.
- A22 Ionescu, N. Roza Vânturilor (Wind Rose). Edited with afterword by M. Eliade. Bucharest: Cultura Națională, 1936, 450 pp. Reprinted in Munich: Colecția "Omul Nou," 1973. Collected writings of Ionescu. Part of Eliade's afterword published as articles in 1936 and 1963.

A tribute to Ionescu, who was Eliade's professor and later his colleague at the University of Bucharest; and who was editor in chief when Eliade was a writer for the newspaper Cuvântul. In the afterword, Ionescu's philosophy of "sympathy-soteriology" is outlined as a method of achieving the New Man.

- A23 Cosmologie și alchimie babiloniană (Babylonian Cosmology and Alchemy). Bucharest: Vremea, 1937, 135 pp. Part published as articles in 1937: see H732, H734. Another part revised, enlarged, and published in English as Metallurgy, Magic and Alchemy A27. Material also contained in Forgerons et alchimistes A55 [which has Eng. and Ger. trans.].
- A24 Şarpele (The Snake). Bucharest: Națională Ciornei, 1937, 252 pp. 1943 ed. Cugetarea, 273 pp. Novel written in 1935. Book includes two short stories: "Intâlnire" and "Aventură." Reprinted in La Tigānci A92 pp. 145-247. German translation: Andronic und die Schlange A42. "Aventură" translated into French H929.
- Eliade terms this a "fantastic novel." It is purely imaginary. He composed it without a plan and wrote it in only two weeks time, yet it has stylistic unity. It is a story with banal characters who meet a stranger, Andronic, on their way to a picnic at a monastery, and who eventually become entwined involuntarily in strange happenings with a snake. Dorina, the heroine, finally unites with Andronic on an island in the middle of a lake. A major theme: the "Fantastic" emerges from ordinary profane events.
- A25 Hasdeu, B.P. Scrisori literare, morale și politice (Literary, Moral and Political Writings). Edited with Introduction and notes by M. Eliade. Bucharest: Fundația Regală pentru Literatură și Artă, 1937, 2 vols.

In the eighty-page Introduction to his collection of the writings of a nineteenth-century Romanian "encyclopedist," Eliade acclaims Hasdeu's "romantic" and "magical" insight into reality: the ability to perceive in everyday life harmonies on all levels of existence, including the "beginnings" in which were generated "mythical" as well as "historical" consciousness. Myths preserve primordial values of universal stature.

- A26 Viață Nouă (New Life). Unfinished, unpublished novel written from 1937 to 1941. Continues A18.

- A27 Metallurgy, Magic and Alchemy. Cahiers de Zalmoxis, 1. Paris: Librairie Orientaliste Paul Geuthner, 1938, 49 pp. Published also as article in periodical Zalmoxis B49. Revised and enlarged English publication of part of A23.

Scientific treatise dealing with extraordinary functions of metallurgical knowledge. For many cultures of the past, stones and metals were not "profane data" because they came from "sacred zones" and contributed to "creative processes." Inorganic objects were animated with sexuality and cosmic significance; they were in fact "archetypes" with magical valences. Alchemy united the sacred theory with the profane experiment such that it was both a cosmological science and a soteriological technique.

- A28 Mitologiile Morții (Mythologies of Death). Unfinished, unpublished, begun in 1938.

- A29 Fragmentarium. Bucharest: Vremea, 1939, 160 pp. Contains fragments of articles published from 1932 to 1939: see H385, H388, H625, H659, H662, H674, H680, H689, H697, H716, H722, H726, H728, H738-39, H741, H747-52, H754, H761-62, H803-4, H806, H815. Selections translated into French in Mircea Eliade A122 pp. 61-78.

A small, heterogeneous, though highly significant book. It illustrates points of union between Eliade's literary creations and his more theoretical, scientific works. In addition to discussing Rudolf Otto, Pascal, Gioacchino da Fiore, Dostoevsky, and others, it issues terse commentaries on the following subjects: symbols, fear of the unknown, values of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, anthropology, primitive mentality, folklore, nostalgia, authenticity, the fantastic, literature, the sacred and the profane, superstitions, the age of history, the Center, liberty, orgy, suffering, melancholy.

- A30 Nuntă în Cer (Marriage in Heaven). Bucharest: Cugetarea, 1939, 280 pp. Part published as articles in 1938: see H825-26. Reprinted in Maitreyi. Nuntă în Cer A91 pp. 159-313.

Composed of a dialogue between Hasnaș and Mavrodiń who, having met by chance, relate to each other their great romances. The reader discovers that, without their ever realizing it, they were in love with and loved by the same woman. The woman left the older Hasnaș because he wanted her to bear him a child; she left the younger Mavrodiń because he refused to let her bear a child. Themes: predestined love, the paradoxical but transcendent quality of love, the "unrecognizability" of the miracle of love, the "infertility" of time.

- A31 Secretul Doctorului Honigberger (Doctor Honigberger's Secret). Bucharest: Socec, 1940, 189 pp. Contains Nopți la Serampore. Two short stories, the former published also as "Tărâmul nevăzut" in periodical Revista Fundațiilor Regale B68. Both reprinted in La Țigănci A92. German translation: Nächte in Serampore A50 [which is trans. into French as Minuit à Serampore A56]. English translation: Two Tales of the Occult A96.

1941

- A31a Le Labyrinthe. Begun in 1941. Unfinished and probably lost. Deals with symbolism of labyrinths.

1942

- A32 Apocalips. Unfinished, unpublished novel written from 1942 to 1944.

- A33 Mitul Reintegrării (Myth of Reintegration). Bucharest: Vremea, 1942, 109 pp. Contains articles published in 1939-40: see H827-34, H845, H849, H857.

A scientific book little known outside Romania. Centers on the notions of polarity and coincidentia oppositorum in such topics as Goethe's Mephistopheles; Great Mother goddesses; gods of fertility and war; time and destiny; sacred and profane; Indian conception of life; snakes; good and evil brothers; androgynies, particularly in Balzac's Séraphita; Adam and Eve; Logos-Anthropos drama. The importance of the book rests upon the theoretical concepts the author applies: the metaphysical and multi-valent nature of symbols; the systematics of mythical thought; archetypes; planes of reality; homologization and totalization of forms; return to the primordial re-integration of the human being into the Cosmos; degradation of symbols; the human fall into history.

- A34 Salazar și revoluția în Portugalia (Salazar and the Revolution in Portugal). Bucharest: Gorjan, 1942, 247 pp.

A historical sketch of the political and cultural climate of Portugal in the nineteenth century through events leading up to civil war and the establishment of the Salazarian State. Salazar is seen as leading Portugal from anarchy and chaos through a spiritual revolution consisting of Latin, Christian, and European values which results in a reintegration of Portugal into organic and cosmic unity.

- A35 Comentarii la legenda Meșterului Manole (Commentaries on the Legend of Master Manole). Bucharest: Publicom, 1943, 144 pp. Based on lectures given at the University of Bucharest, 1936-37.

Another small but very important scientific book little known outside Romania. The object of study: sacrificial death. The author draws parallels and variations on the theme of Master Manole, the mason in Romanian legend who walled up his wife in the foundation of the monastery of the Curte de Argeș in order to stabilize and animate the structure. Author's interpretation: Each folkloric creation is a completely unique "mental universe," yet from a structural and functional point of view different folkloric creations are "homologable." Stories such as Master Manole portend anthropocosmic significance where micro- and macrocosmic universes become interrelated. Archetypes, in the past as well as in the present, are the key to understanding such universes, since they are impersonal universal models that each popular memory imitates in its own quest for metaphysical truth. Eliade employs "commentary" as a scientific method because myths, since they contain archetypes or models, need only be demonstrated and elaborated; that is, they need to be reconstituted and not to be broken down by personal analysis or argument.

- A36 Insula lui Euthanasius (The Island of Euthanasius). Bucharest: Fundația Regală pentru Literatură și Artă, 1943, 381 pp. Contains articles published from 1932 to 1939: see B12, B16-19, B21-22, B25, B27-28, B31, B33-36, B38, B40-41, B45, B47-48, B54, B57-60, H392, H399-401, H411, H417, H431-32, H434, H475, H499, H510, H513, H584, H613, H702, H705, H718, H724. The first four articles below are translated from Romanian into French in Mircea Eliade A122 pp. 168-81, 233-40, 246-49.

Some of the more noteworthy articles collected in this volume (titles translated): "Folklore as an Instrument of Knowledge"; "Barabudur, Symbolic Temple"; "The Conception of Liberty in Indian Thought"; "About a Philosophy of the Moon"; "Island of Euthanasius"; "Before the Greek Miracle"; "Symbolism of the Sacred Tree"; "A New Mode of Revolutionary Literature"; "Concerning an Ethics of Power"; "Lucian Blaga and the Meaning of Culture"; "Ananda Coomaraswamy"; "Papini, Historian of Italian Literature"; "Notes on Indian Art and Iconography"; "Gioacchino da Fiore"; "Folkloric Themes and Artistic Creation."

- A36a Oameni și pietre. Unpublished play, written in 1943. Manuscript probably lost.

- A37 Os Romenos, Latinos do Oriente (The Romanians, Latins of the East). Translated from the original French manuscript by E. Navarro. Collecção Gládio, 12. Lisbon: Livraria Clássica Editora, 1943, 95 pp. Published also as Los Rumanos, Breviario Histórico. Madrid: Instituto Rumano de Cultura, 1943. Note: Included in section A because originally published in these languages.

Focuses on the leadership qualities of outstanding persons in Romanian history. From the invasion of the Romans to the crisis of World War II, Romanians have preserved their culture intact while they have assimilated the qualities of their would-be conquerors. Focuses on the Christian orthodoxy as well as the folkloric and popular traditions which are unique to Romania, including the myths of "Master Manole" and the "Mioritza."

Published as The Myth of the Eternal Return, or, Cosmos and History by Princeton: Princeton University Press and Princeton/Bollingen Paperback ed., 1971, xv + 195 pp.

Eliade's first major work to appear in English. He identifies a fundamental characteristic of archaic societies: "their revolt against concrete, historical time, their nostalgia for a periodical return to the mythical time of the beginnings of things." This theme is examined through four chapters: Archetypes and Repetition, the Regeneration of Time, Misfortune and History, and the Terror of History. Eliade formulates the fundamental primitive ontological conception: "an object or an act becomes real only insofar as it imitates or repeats an archetype." Everything which lacks exemplary models and does not allow for repetition and participation is "meaningless" and lacks reality. In the last chapter, Eliade confronts the modern historical person with the archaic ontological conception. He concludes that none of the historicistic philosophies succeeds in defending a person from "the terror of history"; that all modern secular "solutions" result in nihilism and despair.

- A60 Birth and Rebirth. The Religious Meaning of Initiation in Human Culture. Translation of Naissances mystique A66 by W.R. Trask. New York: Harper and Brothers; and London: Harvill Press, 1958, 190 pp. Reprinted as Rites and Symbols of Initiation A83. Based on the Haskell Lectures delivered at the University of Chicago in 1956 under the title "Patterns of Initiation."

Analyzing initiation in primitive cultures, Eliade argues that these societies understand puberty rites and various specialized initiations in terms of supernatural or transcendent models revealed to them by their mythical ancestors or by supernatural beings. The basic initiatory symbolism is one of death and rebirth or resurrection, the necessity of dying to the old in order to be born to the new. In the various initiations, traditional religious societies believe that they are recapturing their sacred history and are being spiritually regenerated. Eliade states that "initiation lies at the core of any genuine human life" and that "in the modern Western world significant initiation is practically nonexistent." The author suggests that "modern" human beings, without the traditional rites and symbols of initiation, cannot deal adequately with their existential crises.

1958, xv + 484 pp. Meridian ed. Cleveland: World Publishing Co., 1963. New York: New American Library, 1974.

Rather than presenting a historical interpretation of the development of religious phenomena, Eliade examines the nature of religion through a morphological analysis of "sacred manifestations." The focus of his synchronic analysis is "system," especially the structural systems of religious symbols. The brief but important Foreword establishes the author's view of "the irreducibility of the sacred," a controversial principle to which he returns throughout his writings. The first chapter, "Approximations: The Structure and Morphology of the Sacred," introduces Eliade's interpretation of the structure and nature of religious experience in terms of the sacred and the profane and the "dialectic of hierophanies." Following this chapter are the various morphological studies of the sacred: the sky and sky gods; the sun and sun worship; the moon and lunar symbolism; water symbolism; sacred stones; the earth, woman, and fertility; vegetation and regeneration; agriculture and fertility. The final chapters on sacred space, sacred time, myths, and symbols constitute good introductions to topics discussed in greater detail in other works. This is Eliade's most important publication for gaining an overall understanding of the theoretical framework of symbolic systems that serve as the basis for most of his interpretations of religious meaning.

- A63 Yoga. Immortality and Freedom. Translation of A53 by W.R. Trask. Bollingen Series, 56. New York: Pantheon Books; and London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1958, xxii + 529 pp. 2nd rev. and enl. ed. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969, xxii + 536 pp. New York: Pantheon Books ed., 1970. Princeton/Bollingen Paperback ed., 1970. Contains full English revision of A17, A21, and A41.

In an important Foreword, the author argues the relevance of studying Yoga and Indian philosophy for recent Western philosophy. The "problem of the human condition--that is, the temporality and historicity of the human being"--that is at the center of Western philosophy has always preoccupied Indian philosophy. The first two chapters, "The Doctrines of Yoga" and "Techniques for Autonomy," present a formulation of Patañjali's Yoga-sūtras and the Yoga commentaries. Among the goals of Yoga are "emancipation from temporality," "freedom from psychophysiological structures," and the realization of a transcendent and unconditioned mode of being of absolute freedom.

The remaining seven chapters show the diverse forms taken by the doctrines and techniques of Patañjali's Yoga in Indian history: Yoga and Brahmanism; the Triumph of Yoga (mainly the Mahābhārata and Bhagavad Gītā; Buddhism; Tantrism; Alchemy; Aboriginal India; Conclusions. The book ends with a lengthy section of informative "additional notes" and a very comprehensive bibliography. By devoting so much time to tantrism, alchemy, folklore, and aboriginal cults, Eliade interprets profound meanings in phenomena that other investigators have often dismissed as aberrant and superstitious. Eliade believes that all of the Yoga manifestations--from the most spiritual to the lowest and most "infantile"--are organically interrelated and can be "homologized" and integrated as part of a coherent structural system. - A64 Cosmos and History. The Myth of the Eternal Return. Reprint with new pref. of A51 [which is a trans. of A43]. New York: Harper Torchbooks, 1959, xvi + 176 pp.

In the Preface added to this paperback edition, Eliade defines "archetype" as "exemplary model" or "paradigm" ("in the last analysis, in the Augustinian sense") and explicitly distinguishes this from the Jungian sense of archetypes as structures of the collective unconscious. This is Eliade's primary meaning for archetype, although he is sometimes ambiguous, and passages in several books (A60, A67, A68, A71, A82) occasionally resemble Jungian accounts. See A51 for annotation.

- A65 Eliade, M., and J.M. Kitagawa, eds. The History of Religions. Essays in Methodology. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1959, xi + 164 pp. Paperback ed., University of Chicago Press, Phoenix Books, 1973. German translation: Grundfragen der Religionswissenschaft A78.

This collection of eight essays emphasizing methodological questions includes Eliade's "Methodological Remarks on the Study of Religious Symbolism," which is the best introduction to his view of symbolism and is reproduced as the final chapter in A82. The sacred "speaks" or "reveals" itself through symbols. In his description of the nature and function of religious symbolism in general, Eliade asserts that religious symbols can reveal structures of the world not evident on the level of immediate experience; are multivalent; can unify diverse meanings into wholes or systems; can express paradoxical situations; and always have an "existential value." This essay is extremely important for understanding Eliade's methodology and hermeneutics not only because he believes that "all religious facts have a symbolic character," but also because his view of symbolism provides the methodological framework in terms of which he most often interprets the meaning of religious phenomena.

French publication: Le Sacré et le profane A84.
- A popular introduction to Eliade's view of the nature of religion intended for the general reader. The sacred and the profane are "two modes of being in the world, two existential situations assumed by man in the course of his history." Religious persons base their existence on the experience of the sacred: the recognition of a transhistorical and transcendent ultimate reality, which manifests itself in the world and provides exemplary models allowing religious persons to know all that is meaningful and real. By contrast, the modern nonreligious person "assumes a new existential situation; he regards himself solely as the subject and agent of history, and he refuses all appeal to transcendence." In his discussion of the sacred and the profane, Eliade offers interpretations of sacred space, sacred time, myth, ritual, symbolism, sacred history, and the sacredness of nature and cosmic religion.

- A68 Myths, Dreams and Mysteries. The Encounter between Contemporary Faiths and Archaic Realities. Translation of A58 by P. Mairet. New York: Harper and Row; and London: Harvill Press, 1960, 256 pp. Harper Torchbook ed., 1967. Republished in London: Collins Fontana Library, 1968. Harper Colophon ed., 1975.

This collection of essays consists of a Foreword added to the English edition, a Preface, and the following studies: myths of the modern world; "the Noble Savage"; "the Nostalgia for Paradise"; primitive sense-experience and mystical experience; ascension and "waking dreams"; power and holiness; Mother Earth and Cosmic Hierogamies; spiritual regeneration; religious symbolism and modern anxiety. The central theme of the book is the "encounter" of the "traditional," especially archaic and Oriental, and the "modern" Western "types of mentality." Eliade attempts to develop a hermeneutics necessary if the West is to make sense of the phenomena of "the others." The specific studies provide an excellent introduction to some of the basic characteristics of Eliade's methodology and his interpretations of myth and symbolism. These essays also contain bold normative judgments about "the human condition" and contemporary secular existence. Eliade warns that Western culture is in danger of sterile provincialism and even imminent death; but there is also some hope of the renewal of Western consciousness through a creative encounter with "the others."

- A71 Images and Symbols. Studies in Religious Symbolism.

Translation of A48 by P. Mairet. New York: Sheed and Ward; and London: Harvill Press, 1961, 189 pp. Search Book paperback ed., 1969.

This book is a collection of case studies of different structural analyses of various symbolisms: symbolism of the "Centre"; Indian symbolisms of Time and Eternity; the "God Who Binds" and symbolism of Knots; symbolism of Shells. The final study is on "Symbolism and History." Eliade asserts that symbolic thought is an autonomous mode of cognition with its own structure; that symbols have their own "logic" which allows them to "fit together" to form structural systems; that essential symbolic structures are nontemporal and nonhistorical; and that a symbolic system will preserve its structure regardless of whether it is understood by the people who use it. These chapters contain some of Eliade's boldest formulations, including a description of History of Religions as becoming a "metapsychoanalysis," which produces "a more spiritual technique," and a new "maieutics," which could help to rescue the modern West from cultural provincialism and from historical and existential relativism. The controversial Foreword contains normative judgments about images and symbols, the unconscious and the imagination, and the human condition.

The Origins and Structures of Alchemy.* Harper Torchbook ed., 1971, 230 pp. New paperback ed., Chicago: University of Chicago Press, Phoenix Books, 1978.

This is Eliade's major study on metallurgy and alchemy. It includes the following topics: mythology of the Iron Age; "the world sexualized"; "terra mater - petra genitrix"; rites and mysteries, human sacrifices, Babylonian symbolism, divine smiths, and other topics concerning metallurgy; Chinese and Indian alchemy; initiation, "arcana artis," temporality, and other topics relevant to alchemy. Throughout this study, Eliade uses a religious "scale" of interpretation. He argues that alchemy cannot be reduced to some proto-chemistry, since it is always associated with mystical traditions and since one must take seriously its goal: to perfect Matter and to conquer Time, thus allowing the alchemist to change the human mode of being and to gain immortality. The discovery of metals and techniques for manipulating metals led not only to "empirical," material, and scientific changes, but also to new symbolisms, mythologies, and rituals; in short, to new religious modes of being and worlds of meaning that shaped human history.

- Of all Eliade's publications, this collection of essays offers the best overview of his interpretation of the nature and function of myth. This volume includes the following studies: the structure of myths; origin and cosmogonic myths; myths and rites of renewal; mythologies of "memory and forgetting"; "survivals and camouflages" of myths. There is an appendix on myths and fairy tales. For traditional religious societies, myth is not a fiction or uncritical invention of the imagination, but is a "true story" in the sense of "sacred tradition, primordial revelation, exemplary model." According to Eliade, myth is always an account of a "creation." Myth "tells how, through the deeds of Supernatural Beings, a reality came into existence." Eliade maintains that the mythic is an autonomous mode of cognition, analyzes how myth permits the transformation of chaos into a structured meaningful world, and deciphers "camouflaged" mythical survivals in contemporary secular life.

- A81 Shamanism. Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy. Revised and enlarged translation of A46 by W.R. Trask. Bollingen Series, 76. New York: Pantheon Books; and London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1964, xxiii + 610 pp. Published also as Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1970. Princeton/Bollingen Paperback ed., 1972.

This book, considered by some interpreters to be the "classical" work on shamanism, includes the following topics: the general nature and specific structure of shamanism; shamanic sicknesses and dreams, powers, costume and drum, and initiation; celestial ascents and underworld descents; magical cures and role as psychopomp; cosmology; phenomena in Central and North Asia, North and South America, Southeast Asia, Oceania, and other parts of the world. The work ends with an Epilogue and an extensive bibliography (added to the English edition). Shamanism is defined in terms of a specific structure of ecstasy. Shamanism is found throughout the world, but it is viewed in the "strict sense" of its specific structure of ecstasy (in which the shaman's "soul is believed to leave his body and ascend to the sky or descend to the underworld") as "pre-eminently a religious phenomenon of Siberia and Central Asia." Although shamans are also magicians, medicine men, and ecstasies, Eliade shows that not every magician, medicine man, or ecstatic is a shaman. The Foreword is one of the author's most important statements on his methodology. He argues that the historian of religions is a comparativist and a generalist, who integrates the findings of various specialists; that "the dialectic of the sacred" discloses a structure that is "permanent" and "universal"; that the religious life is "ahistorical," that religious experiences themselves are in some essential sense "non-historical," and that primordial existential experiences such as ecstasy are "constitutive of the human condition."

- A82 Mephistopheles and the Androgynie. Studies in Religious Myth and Symbol. Translation of A75 by J.M. Cohen. New York: Sheed and Ward, 1965, 223 pp. Published also as The Two and the One. London: Harvill Press, 1965, 223 pp. Harper Torchbook ed., as The Two and the One, 1969.

This collection of studies focuses on four groups or "families" of religious myths and symbols: Experiences of Mystic Light; Mephistopheles and the Androgynie or the Mystery of the Whole; Cosmic and Eschatological Renewal; Ropes and Puppets. The final study, entitled "Observations on Religious Symbolism," was annotated under A65. The Foreword is a concise formulation of the extreme relevance of the History of Religions for the contemporary West. (See A68 and A95.) The four essays on groups of myths and symbols reveal Eliade the comparativist, historian, morphologist, and phenomenologist of religion. He isolates certain basic themes and then traces them through a tremendous diversity of experiences, primarily archaic and Oriental but also modern Western phenomena. These studies suggest the fundamental unity of humankind. The essay on "Mephistopheles and the Androgyn" is the best introduction to Eliade's interpretation of the symbolism of the coincidentia oppositorum, which may be the symbolism he considers best suited for expressing the most spiritual experiences in the History of Religions.

Parts published as articles from 1963 to 1966: see H960, H968, H970, H973-74, H978-79. Chapter 5 is translated into French in Mircea Eliade A122 pp. 19-33.

Sequel Part II and Part III, years 1929 to 1940, remain mostly unpublished except for the following: Part II chapter 1 published in periodical Ființa Românească H967 [which is trans. into French in A122 pp. 34-46]. A fragment of Part III chapter 1 published in Cuvântul în Exil H969. A fragment of Part III chapter 3 published also in Cuvântul în Exil H976. Part III chapter 4 in Ființa Românească H986. See also the autobiographical article in Caete de Dor H924. See the above cross-references for annotations.

In Amintiri: I, Eliade recalls the impressions of his childhood experiences and adolescent ambitions. Includes recollections of family; his first discovery and relentless reading of books; the occupation of Bucharest by German soldiers; grammar school activities; vacations; adventures as a Boy Scout; his musical talent; his first writings and publications; his library (the Attic); visits and discussions with friends; university studies; first romances; trips to Italy; work on his Master's thesis on the Italian Renaissance; his "Spiritual Itinerary" (see H195) and other publications for his generation; moods of melancholia; and, finally, his departure for India.

First glimpses into Eliade's past. A graphic representation of events that the author himself had difficulty remembering.

This volume contains 13 essays, including Eliade's "Cultural Fashions and the History of Religions." Returning to one of his frequent claims, Eliade asserts that only a historian of religions can uncover certain "secret" intentions, meanings, and significances, even in contexts that do not seem to be religious. The purpose of the essay is to determine "whether a historian of religions can decipher some hidden meanings in our so-called cultural fashions, taking as examples three recent vogues, all of which originated in Paris": the popularity of a magazine called Planète, of Teilhard de Chardin, and of Claude Lévi-Strauss. Eliade interprets what the popularity of these three "cultural fashions" reveals about modern dissatisfactions and nostalgias and about the contemporary spiritual and existential situation.

- A88 From Primitives to Zen. A Thematic Sourcebook of the History of Religions. New York: Harper and Row; and London: Collins, 1967, xxv + 645 pp. Reprinted as four paperbacks: Gods, Goddesses, and Myths of Creation A106; Man and the Sacred A107; Death, Afterlife, and Eschatology A108; and From Medicine Men to Muhammad A109. Reprinted as a complete paperback ed. under original title, New York: Harper and Row; and London: Collins Fontana, 1977, xxv + 645 pp.

The religious documents in this very comprehensive sourcebook are organized under the following chapter headings: Gods, Goddesses, and Supernatural Beings; Myths of Creation and Origin; Man and the Sacred; Death, Afterlife, Eschatology; Specialists of the Sacred: From Medicine Men to Mystics and Founders of Religions; Speculations on Man and God. There is an excellent bibliography. An index of names and subjects would improve the work. The title may be misleading: As Eliade notes, "pre-literate" or "archaic" would have been better than "primitive"; and in no way does this collection culminate with Zen documents. There are several omissions, including documents from Judaism and Christianity. This sourcebook allows the reader to compare a large number of diverse texts dealing with similar themes.

- A91 Maitreyi. Nuntă în Cer (Maitreyi. Marriage in Heaven). Introduction by D. Micu. Bucharest: Editura pentru Literatură, 1969, xliv + 315 pp. Contains A12 and A30. Introduction of 40 pages by Micu is a thorough overview of Eliade's earlier literary achievements. See F187.

- A92 La Țigănci și alte povestiri (At the Gypsies and other Short Stories). Introduction by S. Alexandrescu. Bucharest: Editura pentru Literatură, 1969, xlix + 525 pp. Contains A20, A24, A31, the short stories in A80, and two additional short stories: "Podul" (The Bridge) written in 1963, first published as H980; and "Adio!" (Good-bye!) written in 1964, first published as H975. See A80 for references to translations.

Reproduced many times, "At the Gypsies" is perhaps the most successful of the author's short stories. The main character, Gavrilescu, a piano instructor, enters the hut of the women gypsies and is asked to forget for awhile the outside world with all the troubles and anxieties it poses. Three naked girls--a Gypsy, a Greek, and a Jew--dance for him. After a matter of hours he leaves only to discover that twelve years have elapsed. When he returns home no one knows him. Possible significance: the transformation of ontological existence through a type of cosmic ritual. The Great Time of ritual and the subsequent loss or fall into time of the historical.

Alexandrescu's introduction of 40 pages, entitled "Dialectica fantasticului," is a major contribution to the understanding of the qualities of the fantastic and other motifs which can be found in both the literary and scientific writings of Eliade. See F5.

Contains short stories "A Great Man" and "Twelve Thousand Head of Cattle." Original Romanian in A80 and A92 also.

In the first story, a man suddenly finds himself afflicted with "macanthropy" as he rapidly outgrows, physically, the "human condition." He is forced to flee the city but reintegrates himself and nature when he returns to the mountains.

In the second narration, a businessman at midday is projected from current time into the time of an air raid some forty days earlier.

German translation: Die Sehnsucht nach dem Ursprung A105.

This collection of essays consists of a Preface and the following studies: A New Humanism; The History of Religions in Retrospect: 1912 and After; The Quest for the "Origins" of Religion; Crisis and Renewal; Cosmogonic Myth and "Sacred History"; Paradise and Utopia: Mythical Geography and Eschatology; Initiation and the Modern World; Prolegomenon to Religious Dualism: Dyads and Polarities. The major emphasis in the first four essays is on the nature and significance of the discipline of the History of Religions. The present state of the discipline is viewed in terms of a creative "tension" between historical and phenomenological approaches. Eliade most clearly identifies himself with phenomenological approaches that are concerned with interpreting "meaning." Sociological, psychological, anthropological, and other approaches are criticized as "reductionist," since they interpret religious data in nonreligious terms and do not respect "the irreducibility of the religious." "Creative hermeneutics," the most appropriate approach for the History of Religions, will result in tremendous benefits for humankind. This hermeneutics will allow scholars to interpret the various existential situations, will make possible an "encounter" with primordial archaic and Oriental myths and symbolisms, and will lead to a deeper knowledge of humanity. It may result in a "new humanism" and a new "planetary" or universal type of culture.

- A96 Two Tales of the Occult. Translation of A31 by W.A. Coates. New York: Herder and Herder, 1970, xiii + 130 pp.

Stories of the "fantastic" in which Eliade evokes some of his own yogic experiences when in India from 1929 to 1931. Text is artistically inferior, though certain structural parallelisms become apparent. For instance, in the first story the narrator, studying in the library of Dr. Zerlendi, who had mysteriously disappeared, comes across the research manuscripts of Dr. Honigberger which describe levels of Tantric exercises. While studying these documents the narrator himself "disappears." A mélange of historical and fictitious events wherein time and space are transcended.

The purpose of this book is to present "the essentials of the religion of the Geto-Dacians and the most important mythological traditions and folkloric creations of the Romanians." Eliade attempts to develop an interpretation of religious traditions for which there are very few historical documents. Some of the topics considered in the eight studies are the following: religious origins of the ethnic name of the Dacians; the cult of Zalmoxis; the cosmogonic myth in Romanian folklore; legends concerning the founding of Moldavia and the building of the Monastery of Arges; Romanian "shamanism"; the cult of mandragora and the gathering of medicinal herbs; and the "Mioritza," the most popular Romanian folk ballad.

Eliade discusses the supernatural beings of Australian religions and offers a critique of both the evolutionists, such as Tylor and Frazer, and the "romantic-decadentists," such as Lang, in the "controversy" over the "High Gods." Other topics include the nature of Australian myths and rituals, especially myths of origins and rituals that "re-create" or renew the world; "mythical geography," sacred space, and sacred time; initiation rites and secret cults; the medicine men; Australian views of death and the postexistence of the soul. Eliade argues that all attempts to discover the "origins" of religion are doomed to failure; that primitive religions are highly complex; that primitives are not only "normal and healthy" but are also highly creative; and that primitives are historical beings but are most interested in "sacred history" and not in the Western sense of history as a series of irreversible events which take place in linear historical time.

Beane and Doty have compiled an anthology of what they consider to be the "essential" Eliade, with selections taken almost exclusively from his books. The two-volume collection is divided into three chapters: Myths-- Sacred History, Time, and Intercommunication; Rites-- Birth, Renewal, Religious Experience, and Technique; Symbols--Patterns, Transitions, and Paradises. Beane has a very brief introductory piece, "Understanding Eliade as Historian of Religions," and a brief concluding essay, "The Work of Mircea Eliade: Implications for a Philosophy of Humankind" (see F42 and F43). A major problem with this anthology is the length of the selections: 192 selections in about 460 pages. Many of the two-page selections are very fragmentary. Fewer and lengthier selections would improve this anthology.

- A113 Occultism, Witchcraft, and Cultural Fashions. Essays in Comparative Religions. Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 1976, x + 148 pp. Paperback ed., University of Chicago Press, Phoenix Books, 1978. French translation: Occultisme, sorcellerie et modes culturelles A127.

This little book, written primarily for the "non-specialist," consists of six essays: "Cultural Fashions and the History of Religions" (see A87); "The World, the City, the House" focuses on sacred space and suggests its relevance for modern "desacralized" experience; "Mythologies of Death: An Introduction" describes ways traditional societies have come to terms with death and suggests a continuity from the archaic to the modern; "The Occult and the Modern World" discusses nineteenth- and twentieth-century interests in the occult and interprets the recent "occult explosion"; "Some Observations of European Witchcraft" examines the "origins" of Western witchcraft and the so-called witches' orgies and interprets some of the recent interest in witchcraft in Western culture; "Spirit, Light, and Seed" examines experiences of "mystical light" (see A82) and ritual sexuality. Eliade maintains that these diverse and perplexing modern phenomena reveal profound symbolic and mythic structures because they can be related to archaic spiritual roots.

- A115 In curte la Dionis (In the Court of Dionysus). Madrid: Caietele Inorogului, 1977, 272 pp.

Collection of short stories. These are listed below with dates of composition and with references to original publication: "Les trois grâces" 1976; "Şançurile" (The Trenches) 1963. See H961; "Ivan" 1967. See H995; "Uniforme de general" (The General's Uniforms) 1971. See B273; "Incognito, la Buchenwald" 1974. See B288; "In curte la Dionis" 1968. See H997. "Les trois grâces" has been translated into book form as Die drei Grazien A123. "Ivan"; "Uniforme de general"; and "In curte la Dionis" are translated in Phantastische Geschichten A128.

Several of the stories contain fantastic and mysterious motifs: "In curte la Dionis" is the most obscure, with a plot that is extremely difficult to understand. The life situation of the main characters is expressed as a confluence of mysterious and mythical allusions.

"Ivan" shifts back and forth between fantasy and reality without a clear delineation of the two.

In "Uniforme de general" Antim's "true love" comes as his angel of death, fulfilling a myth that he had read as a child.

"Incognito, la Buchenwald" portrays Ieronim who, in the dust of the demolition of his family mansion, envisions a mystic transformation of Bucharest as the "New Jerusalem."

This translation of the 1957 to 1969 period of A104 presents Eliade's American experiences since he first came to the University of Chicago in 1956, as well as numerous descriptions of experiences in Europe, where he spends his summers, and of extended trips to Japan and Mexico. This journal-diary is the first English publication in which Eliade freely discusses his personal feelings and views. Eliade first received recognition in Romania as a novelist. This work makes clear Eliade's view that his literary and scholarly worlds complement each other and are organically interrelated, and it reveals the emotional and intellectual basis for many of his scholarly and literary publications. The journal is lively and revealing: Eliade's thoughts about his own works; the tremendous influence of Goethe and Papini; the meetings with Jung, Tillich, and others; conversations with students; reactions to what he is reading; observations about hippies, cultural vogues, and all sorts of contemporary phenomena; feelings about his situation as a Romanian "exile."

- A119 The Forbidden Forest. Translation of A98 by M.L. Ricketts and M.P. Stevenson. Notre Dame and London: University of Notre Dame Press, 1978, xv + 596 pp.

This, Eliade's first novel to be translated into English, is considered by the author and most interpreters to be his literary masterpiece. Eliade writes that this work has been described as "realistic and psychological" and presents itself as a "historical novel," taking place between 1936 and 1948 in Bucharest and other parts of Europe and incorporating many of the author's views about the historical tragedy and destiny of the Romanian people. But a simple description of this work as a historical novel can be misleading. It is also pervaded by mystery and signs of the fantastic, by transhistorical themes and meanings. In the Preface, Eliade describes some of the symbolism of the novel, as well as his view of the importance for him of literary creativity and of the close relationship between his scholarly and literary works. The Romanian hero, Stefan, loves two women: his wife, Ioana, and a mysterious Ileana whom he meets in a forest near Bucharest on the evening of the summer solstice (Night of St. John). Many of Eliade's themes from the History of Religions are apparent in the novel: the sacred and the profane, hierophanies, the terror of history, initiation and the quest for immortality, and various basic mythic and symbolic structures and meanings. Emphasized throughout the novel is Eliade's theme that religious meanings are "hidden" or "camouflaged" in contemporary Western experiences.

- A120 A History of Religious Ideas. I. From the Stone Age to the Eleusinian Mysteries. Translation of A110 by W.R. Trask. Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 1978, xvii + 489 pp. London: Collins Publishers, 1979.

This first of a three-volume study investigates the history of religious beliefs and ideas from prehistory to the cult of Dionysus. The first two chapters, on the "Magico-Religious Behavior of the Paleanthropians" and "The Discovery of Agriculture--Mesolithic and Neolithic," are extremely important in formulating the foundations and essential structures and patterns that define much of the later History of Religions. The book includes two chapters on Israel, two chapters on pre-Buddhist India, four chapters on Greek religion, and studies on Mesopotamian, Egyptian, Iranian, and other religious developments. A lengthy critical bibliography constitutes about one-fifth of the volume. Unlike his previous synchronic, morphological studies of religious phenomena, Eliade interprets the manifestations of the sacred in chronological order. He elucidates "the major contributions to the history of religious ideas and beliefs" in terms of "crises in depth and the creations that result from them." As in previous works, the author maintains the sacred is "an element in the structure of consciousness" and not a stage in the history of consciousness; and this "historical study" is clearly guided by his morphological analysis of essential non-historical religious structures. What this "history" adds to the previous morphologies is a greater emphasis on the "inexhaustible newness" of religious expressions; on how the same themes and structures have been expressed throughout history in radically different ways. In short, there is a greater sense of historical change and development.

The basic principles of Samkhya philosophy are: 1. The exterior world has ontological reality; 2. A teleological significance to the world and to experiences can be intuited; and 3. Freedom from illusion can be attained through "spiritual induction" and a logic of dialectics.

In Samkhya philosophy, suffering and evil are part of the human condition as a result of the confusion of the spirit and psychomental experiences (i.e., "illusions"). Spiritual essence is attained through a dialectics of various techniques of emancipation from the pains of existence. Liberation results from a controlled transformation of mental and physical states and ultimately comes as a revelation. In Western terms, salvation embodies not only metaphysical knowledge but also a "technical will."

- Eliade was greatly influenced by the works of Lucian Blaga, René Guénon, Ananda Coomaraswamy, Paul Mus, and others who, through a study of folkloric and ethnographic documents, deciphered symbolic meanings and cultural "styles," and who developed various "philosophies of culture." In this article Eliade sees the problem as broader than a matter of cultural comparison: folklore points to the structure and limitations of human consciousness itself. Reviewing Frazer's theory, he argues that primitive magic cannot be judged by modern laws of causality as being "superstitious" or "neurotic" since it is based on real concrete experiences which do not assume causality as the basis for understanding events. He also criticizes historicism for its "primacy of documents" and for its segregation of documents which relate miracles and other "unverifiable" phenomena from those which evidence "rational" events. He claims that folklore, having at its base actual experiences, attributes values and meanings to those experiences such that there is a certain degree of reliability to the works and they should be taken seriously. Folklore relates exceptional experiences, or events attributed exceptional values. Historicists and positivists negate these values by their very methods of investigation. Concerning afterlife, for example--the problem of "the real condition of human consciousness after death"--positivists have no say other than to deny the fact. Yet folklore from all ages and cultures values the immediate experience of death and projects beyond death to further meaningful interpretations. In this sense it is a means of knowledge and in this case, as in others, it is more instrumental than, say, positivism.

- Discusses mystical qualities as well as other symbolic meanings of the Canticle of Canticles which has been traditionally interpreted as an allegory of the relationship of Yahweh and his people. Examines Dante's Divine Comedy as a parallel allegory for Christianity. As "secret languages" these works annul the profane sensibility of the words and even of reality itself. Communication of such secrets constitutes a "revelation" for initiates and so promotes a state of "sacredness" among them as well as a recreation of the ontological efficacy of the secrets themselves.

Review article of N. Cartojan, Cărțile populare în literatură românească. Eliade compares popular interest in literature to folkloric creations, and sees contrary processes at work in each: On the one hand, there is a degradation of the "fantastic" due to a localization or ethnization of certain universal values; on the other hand, there develops a categorization of historical individuals and events into types and episodes. Within these processes, or within the works themselves, one can find archaic, primitive theories and attitudes.

Review article of contributions to Eranos-Jahrbuch vol. 17, Der Mensch und die Mythische Welt; and vol. 18, Aus der Welt der Urbilder.

For the primitive, myth constitutes a mode of knowledge of being in the world as a revelation of the structure of reality and of the ultimate sacredness of life. Generally myths are cosmogonies which depict what happened in the beginning, before Time. So myths reveal the "first forms" or atemporal models--archetypes. Archetypes of a similar order are camouflaged in modern systems of thought, both scientific and philosophical.

 Yoga evidences pre-Aryan features which were later assimilated by Brahmanism and Hinduism. As a primarily ascetic practice, Yoga represents a "ritual interiorization" of Brahmanic sacrificial acts, and functions ultimately as a metaphysics. The "jivan-mukta," one who is paradoxically "freed in life," probably best exemplifies the archaic dimension of Indian spirituality.

- For primitives death is not simply a natural phenomenon; it is rather a consequence of a "fall" in illo tempore, in Mythical Times of the Beginning. Dying is a form of passage to a new ontological level of existence, a reintegration into the Cosmos, a rebirth. This is the structure of most initiations.

- Renounces theories that shamanism is mainly a manifestation of a mental disorder or a regression to a less evolved state. Perceives shamanistic imitation of the acts and sounds of animals as a "secret language" based upon and leading to further experiences of ecstasy. This "language" functions to reveal the secrets of Nature and to contact the realm of the Supernatural by freeing the shaman or his initiate from the human condition to that beatitude of Mythical paradisiac time. Today ecstatic experiences are "concretized" as similar secret languages in poetic expression, for instance, and in various linguistic processes themselves.

- Review article of several works of R. Pettazzoni; M.P. Nilsson, La Religion populaire dans la Grèce antique; and G. Germain, Genèse de l'Odyssée.
- According to Eliade, the historian of religions' proper discipline is to decipher atemporal constants of religious experience and of resulting structures that are irreducible to historicity. One's role is to integrate the findings of specialized disciplines such as ethnology, sociology, psychology, and history strictly speaking. In this vein, Eliade agrees with Pettazzoni that all religious phenomena are necessarily conditioned by historical factors, though rightfully they must be considered as religious. Hence a tension exists between history and phenomenology. Also, myth is "true history" because it is "sacred" and that which is "real" is that which is "exemplary" in myths and in human religious activity.

For primitives there are profane stories as well as desacralized forms of oral literature. However, those narratives which are recounted in a sacred context, such as during initiation rituals and popular feasts, are considered to be true and real and, concurrently, are imitated and repeated as models of human behavior and as explications of the human condition. As collective creations, certain forms of oral literature found to be similar among variant cultures point to a "collective conscience," of which the solution of origins is impossible. In history the dialectic process of these collective creations moves basically in two directions: 1. ethnicization or historicization of mythical archetypes into more individual and personal events as, for example, in the hero ballad; and 2. the remythization or assimilation of historical personalities and events into their archetypal equivalents.

- A very stimulating article in which the author recalls the works of Ananda Coomaraswamy, Paul Mus, Giuseppe Tucci, Stella Kramrisch, Carl Hentze and others that had impressed on his own way of thinking some fundamental themes of architectonic symbolism, and of symbolism in general. Eliade understands that architectural structures cannot be reduced simply to geometrical design or to historical diffusion, which would seem to be very logical scientifically. Many of these structures, each in its own way, reveal the "Centre of the World," although many such centers would be absurd empirically. These structures constitute a "sacred zone" and as structures give meaning and orientation within profane, unstructured, and chaotic zones. The sacred building or space, and especially its construction, constitutes a rupture from the ordinary and a communication with transcendent realities. A temple, for instance, is both a visible and spiritual intersection of the three cosmic zones and so is an Axis mundi that functions as a point of passage from one zone to another and as a homologation of those zones. Symbolically, it reaches to the significance of Creation, and its construction is an act of Creation or a reinactment of Creation. It is therefore both a cosmology and a soteriology.

There are constants in religious experience, but they undergo numerous variations and modifications. The author analyzes the structure of an "original," celestial, Supreme Being and then examines the changes and new existential situations that gave rise to the disappearance of this Supreme Being and the emergence of new, more dynamic divine figures. He also shows how "the discovery of agriculture" gave rise to modifications in religious structures. Finally, he examines changes in expressions and images without corresponding modifications in the underlying structures. In short, in order to develop an adequate hermeneutics, the scholar must be sensitive to the complex dynamic relationships between structure and change in the history of religions.

- B176 "Le symbolisme des ténèbres dans les religions archaïques." Polarités du symbole, Études Carmélitaines, 39 (1960) pp. 15-28.

An extremely significant article for grasping Eliade's understanding of symbolism and his hermeneutics of "deciphering" symbols. He begins by claiming that for archaic societies all important symbols are religious symbols, since the latter are concurrently "hierophanies" and "ontophanies." That is, symbols manifest the sacred and constitute what is real, even to the point of a coherent yet presystematic cosmology. On their own, symbols reveal "transcendence" and "liberty" to many peoples of predialectic, prephilosophic vocabularies. Because of their revelatory and efficacious function, symbols are quite different from concepts (of "liberty," etc.). Symbols, in a concrete yet also spiritual way, offer preliterate persons the opportunity to surpass the human condition.

Structurally, symbols are multivalent and always retain necessary cosmic valences. A light or form in the shadows, for instance, can signify not only the creation of the World but also the appearance of man, the beginning of History. In a ritual context the same symbolism refers to both death and resurrection, which in itself is a repetition of a cosmogony. Shadow symbolism, in sum, consists of three simultaneous categories: cosmology, anthropocosmology, and anthropology.

Functionally, therefore, symbols translate the human condition into cosmic terms, and vice versa, such that solidarity and confidence exists between the two. This leads the individual person or culture to a comprehension of the universal, as expressed in concrete exemplary terms. "Par conséquent, 'vivre' un symbole et en déchiffrer correctement le message équivaut à accéder à l'universel. Transformer une expérience individuelle par le symbolisme équivaut à l'ouvrir vers l'Esprit."

A good introduction to Eliade's view of the nature and significance of the History of Religions. The discipline is defined by a creative "tension" between historical and phenomenological approaches, although the emphasis is on phenomenological approaches concerned with structures and meanings. Much of the article is what Eliade takes to be various "antireductionist" claims for the "irreducible" and "autonomous" nature of the approach of the History of Religions. Also emphasizes the possible cultural benefits of a "creative hermeneutics" which may lead to a "new humanism." See A95 for additional annotation.

Here Eliade acclaims Eminescu not as a "systematic philosopher" but as a magnificent poet and encyclopedist whose creations reveal a passion for hermeticism, magic, and archaic Romanian folkloric traditions. Eminescu had a cosmic imagination and an obsession with time. He was a "universal man" in whom was incarnated a "coexistence of contraries."

- Formulates a wide-ranging and thought-provoking essay around the theme of the human nostalgia and obsession for "origins." The nineteenth-century antireligious positivism and the nineteenth-century interest in religious phenomena were similar in their nostalgia for the primordial, for the absolute origins. In addition, Müller, Tylor, Lang, Schmidt, Freud, and others tended to use positivistic approaches in their quest for the origins of religion. One now realizes that the origins of religion cannot be reached. While recognizing that all data are historical, Eliade criticizes modern historicism or historical reductionism. One must ask what historically conditioned documents reveal about the meaning of religious experience and about the nature of the human being. See A95 for additional annotation.

Modern artists are no longer interested in traditional religious art, but the "sacred" has not completely disappeared from modern art. It is "camouflaged in forms, purposes and meanings which are apparently 'profane.'" One of Eliade's most important essays on the present state of the History of Religions. The discipline is now in crisis. He says that excessive specialization has resulted in timidity, cautiousness, inhibition, and provincialism, with a resultant loss of creativity and cultural synthesis. Nevertheless, there is the possibility for renewal, especially through "creative hermeneutics." Only when the History of Religions realizes itself as a synthetic, integrative, total discipline can it be truly creative. Such a creative hermeneutics will lead to the creation of new cultural values and to the opening of Western thought to new perspectives and to the possibilities of a universal type of culture. Claims little progress has been made in understanding "primitive" (archaic, traditional, preliterate) religions. Criticizes earlier naturalistic and later historical approaches. They have not given rise to an adequate hermeneutics. The nature and creativity of primitive religions can only be understood by a hermeneutics that recognizes the religious basis and religious frame of reference of primitive religions. - B254 "South American High Gods, Part I." History of Religions (1969) 8:338-54.

Based on a course given in 1964. With the exception of the last section which concerns the Araucanians of Chile and Argentina, this essay analyzes the High Gods of the Fuegians. A comparative analysis of the three Fuegian tribes reveals the complexity of their High Gods and the coexistence of other religious phenomena with the belief in High Gods. For Part II, see B263.

B259 "Notes for a Dialogue." In The Theology of Altizer. Critique and Response. Ed. by J.B. Cobb. Philadelphia: Westminster, 1970, pp. 234-41.

Discusses Thomas Altizer's Mircea Eliade and the Dialectic of the Sacred D3 by formulating six points of disagreement. For example, Eliade says he does not want to establish the archaic and the Oriental as the "model" for the modern West and does not call for some "return" to a premodern mode of existence. Most significant is the claim that Altizer has misunderstood the dialectic of the sacred, since it does not consist of establishing the sacred by abolishing the profane within which the sacred manifests itself.

B263 "South American High Gods, Part II." History of Religions (1971) 10:234-66.

Based on a course given in 1964. Unlike Part I with its focus on the High Gods of the Fuegians, this essay consists of very brief descriptions of the beliefs of the Botocudo, the Tupi-Guarani, various Cariban and numerous other tribes. More extensive treatments are given of the Tacana of Bolivia and the Kogi of Colombia. The most detailed presentation is taken from Reichel-Dolmatoff's research on the Desana, a small Amazonian tribe. The richness and complexity of the morphology of South American High Gods becomes evident. For Part I, see B254.

- B269 "The Sacred in the Secular World." Cultural Hermeneutics (1973) 1:101-13. (The title of the journal was changed to Philosophy and Social Criticism in 1978.)

In some respects, this is one of the author's most important methodological articles. Eliade has stated that he has intentionally avoided formulating his methodology. However, in the first half of this essay, he presents some very explicit formulations. The emphasis is on phenomenology and synchronicity. The historian of religions "must become a phenomenologist of religion" because of his or her concern for meaning, which is given through the intentionality of structure.

"The structure of the sacred in the human consciousness is built on the structure of synchronicity, as opposed to the diachronic structure of radical historicism." The second half of the essay deals with the important role of the sacred in the modern secular world and related topics found throughout the author's writings.

 Discusses some relations between myth and "history" in the Peruvian tribe of the Campa. Analyzes how the cosmogonic myth and other myths of origin allow the Campa to integrate a real historical event, such as being conquered by Spanish invaders, into a sacred history; this gives meaning to the tragic event and provides a framework for further historical actions.

Discusses two controversial problems: the "origins" of Western witchcraft and the so-called witches' orgies. The History of Religions reveals the inadequacy of past accounts of the origins of Western witchcraft. Comparative analysis discloses most of the same features in Indo-Tibetan yoga and magic, Romanian folkloric parallels, etc., and helps one to understand the complexity and meaning of Western witchcraft. The real or imaginary witches' orgies reveal a protest against the dominant religious and social institutions and a religious nostalgia to return to an archaic non-Christian mode of being. Contemporary youth culture discloses some similar dissatisfactions and nostalgias.

Briefly discusses initiation, esotericism, myth, alchemy, various aspects of contemporary secular society, and the possibility for a "resanctification" of work. In response to a question as to which tradition has most deeply influenced him, Eliade replies: "I consider myself deeply influenced, I can almost say 'formed' or 'shaped,' by the Indian tradition."

- B303 "Literary Imagination and Religious Structure." Criterion (1978) 17, no. 2:30-34. Part published also as part of Preface to The Forbidden Forest A119.

A refreshing article in which Eliade reveals the interdependency of his literary imagination and his work as a historian of religions. The writing of fiction, particularly narratives, is for him an "experience in method" and "an instrument of knowledge." He, like other writers, believes in "the objectivity and the intellectual value of the mundus imaginalis" that is also expressed, say, in dreams, myths, and rituals.

- B305 "The Myth of Alchemy." Parabola (1978) 3, no. 3:7-23. French publication in A122 pp. 157-67.

An excellent introduction to many of the myths, rituals, techniques, and themes analyzed in The Forge and the Crucible A74. Updates his analysis with research that has been published in the 1960s and 1970s. A major topic in this article, which did not appear in A74, although it has been incorporated in the text of the 1977 French ed., is the decisive role alchemy played "in the cultural metamorphosis that made possible the triumph of the natural sciences and the industrial revolution." Analyzes Newton's attempt to integrate alchemy and the Hermetic tradition with mechanical philosophy. In modern science, "the triumph of Newton's mechanics abolished Newton's own scientific ideal."

BOOKS

- D1 Allen, D. Structure and Creativity in Religion. Hermeneutics in Mircea Eliade's Phenomenology and New Directions. Religion and Reason, 14. The Hague, Paris, and New York: Mouton Publishers, 1978, xviii + 266 pp.

This first major study by a philosopher of Eliade's works presents an evaluative formulation of his hermeneutical framework, grounding his methodology in his understanding of symbolism and relating his history and phenomenology of religion to various methodological problems and concepts in phenomenological philosophy. Part 1 provides a brief but rather comprehensive introduction to the major anthropological, sociological, psychological, phenomenological, and other approaches in the History of Religions during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Part 2 formulates the key methodological notions that provide the foundation for Eliade's phenomenology: "the dialectic of the sacred and the profane" and the "autonomous," universal, coherent, structural systems of symbolic associations. Part 3, which often goes beyond anything Eliade has written, formulates new criteria for evaluating religious phenomena, identifying the "transconscious," providing the basis for a phenomenological induction, verifying primary symbolic structures, and creating new philosophical anthropologies.

- D3 Altizer, T.J.J. Mircea Eliade and the Dialectic of the Sacred. Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1963, 219 pp. Reprinted: Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1975.

Altizer's study was the first book written on Eliade's history and phenomenology of religion. The author is "employing Eliade as a route to a new form of theology."

The first half of the book "attempts to elucidate Eliade's understanding of the sacred, and in doing so, it explores various philosophical and theological implications of his thought about which he himself has chosen to be silent." The first four chapters are on Understanding the Sacred, Archaic Religion, Christianity and Archaic Religion, and the Coincidence of Opposites. The second half of the book only infrequently mentions Eliade. Altizer believes that Eliade's dialectical understanding of the sacred and of the coincidentia oppositorum offers possibilities for making the sacred meaningful to modern profane consciousness. He contends that Eliade's History of Religions is largely based on an archaic and Oriental framework and is not adequate for historical Christianity or our present historical situation. Altizer's interpretation has been criticized, both by Eliade (B259) and others (D1, D2, F251, F253).

- D4 Culianu, I.P. Mircea Eliade. Assisi: Cittadella Editrice, 1978, 186 pp.

Consists of the following main sections (translated from Italian): 1. The Philosopher's Stone (1921-1943); 2. Techniques of Salvation (Yoga, Shamanism, Alchemy); 3. Structure of the Interior Life; 4. Morphology of the Sacred and Religious History; 5. Myth and Philosophy.

- D5 Devi, Maitreyi. It Does Not Die. A Romance. A Writers Workshop Saffronbird Book. Translation from Bengali Na Hanyaté, published by Manisha Granthalaya, 1974. Calcutta: P. Lal; and Connecticut: Inter-Culture Associates, 1976, 274 pp.

The author is the daughter of Surendranath Dasgupta, under whom Eliade studied and in whose house Eliade lived in 1930. During that time, Eliade had an intimate relationship with the author. This "autobiographical novel" makes clear that she felt that Maitreyi A12 made her "a victim of unpleasant lies." "Your book is a nightmare for me." Much of this work is her attempt to present her side of the story, the relationship as she viewed it. Although this work is a novel, the author makes little if any effort to disguise individuals, dates, places, and events.

- D6 Duch, L. Ciencia de la religión y mito. Estudios sobre la interpretación del mito. Scripta et documenta, 22. Montserrat: Abadia, 1974, 284 pp.

This manuscript was presented as a dissertation to the Faculty of Catholic Theology of Eberhard-Karls-University of Tübingen. Over half of the book is devoted to a study of Eliade. After extensive formulations of the sacred and the profane and symbolism, the major section analyzes Eliade's interpretation of myth.

- D7 Dudley, G., III. Religion on Trial. Mircea Eliade and His Critics. Philadelphia: Temple University Press, 1977, vii + 183 pp.

Mircea Eliade's methodology is proposed as the "leading candidate" to bring about some sense of unity and development in contemporary History of Religions. But Dudley shows that Eliade cannot unify all of the present methodological approaches since he has been continually criticized and dismissed by the "empiricists" and he cannot meet their minimal criteria for a "scientific" approach. Chapter 2 provides a valuable introduction to many of Eliade's basic concepts and values. Chapter 3 argues Eliade's History of Religions is highly normative, since it rests on a privileged ontological status granted to the "archaic ontology." Chapter 4 traces the basis of Eliade's "archaic ontology" to India and, more particularly, to Patañjali's Yoga. In the controversial final chapter, Dudley identifies Eliade as an "antihistorian" of religions within a tradition of French, deductive, synchronic, systematic approaches. He argues Eliade should avoid the confusion and contradictions in his writings arising from his frequent insistence that he is using an empirical and historical method. It is only when Eliade and his followers are clear about such an "antihistorical" "research program" that one can examine the full potential of this overall theory of religion.

- D8 Kitagawa, J., and C. Long, eds. Myths and Symbols. Studies in Honor of Mircea Eliade. Chicago and London: University of Chicago Press, 1969, xii + 438 pp.

This Festschrift of twenty essays is divided into three sections: phenomenological and theoretical studies, historical studies, and literary studies. There is also a seventeen-page bibliography. Only six of the essays concern Eliade's works. With the exception of Mircea Popescu, "Eliade and Folklore," all of the studies dealing with Eliade are in the literary section: Virgil Ierunca, "The Literary Work of Mircea Eliade" (French publication in D11);

Günther Spaltmann, "Authenticity and Experience of Time: Remarks on Mircea Eliade's Literary Works"; Vintila Horia, "The Forest as Mandala: Notes concerning a Novel by Mircea Eliade"; George Uscatescu, "Time and Destiny in the Novels of Mircea Eliade"; E.M. Cioran, "Beginnings of a Friendship" (French publication in D11), which presents different aspects of Eliade's background and personality. Most readers outside Romania, and especially those familiar only with his English publications, have simply identified Eliade as a historian and phenomenologist of religion. This volume is significant for introducing readers to the extremely important literary dimension of his creativity.

- This book "is written by a religious believer with the simple aim of examining whether Eliade's interpretation of the religions of nonliterate societies conforms to contemporary anthropological research." The overall impression that one gains from this study is that Eliade's interpretation of homo religiosus is extremely inadequate when evaluated in light of contemporary anthropology in Great Britain and the United States. Saliba formulates many serious criticisms of Eliade's History of Religions: Eliade lacks a rigorous methodology; he makes numerous factual errors and is not sensitive to historical evidence; he makes uncritical generalizations and pays insufficient attention to cultural and social contexts; etc. The potential strengths of this study are usually negated by its glaring weaknesses, especially its superficial treatment of methodological and other issues and its frequent misinterpretations of Eliade's position.
- D11 Tacou, C., ed. Mircea Eliade. Cahiers de L'Herne, 33. Paris: L'Herne, 1978, 409 pp. A122.
- Contains the most important collection of articles and commentaries on Eliade yet assembled. After a useful

"repères biographiques," the volume is divided into five sections: Textes de Mircea Eliade; Phénoménologie et Herméneutique; Spiritualité et régénération; Souvenirs, rencontres, traces; Les voies du fantastique. The work ends with a nineteen-page "bibliographie." Although it contains a number of mistakes, this is the most comprehensive bibliography of Eliade published through 1978. - Alexandrescu offers a detailed analysis of several stories of the volume La Tigănci that he considers to be of the type "fantastic." Parallels are given between the dialectics of sacred and profane in Eliade's literature and in his work as a historian of religions. Also relates his work to Romanian folklore and to the themes of the great Romanian poet Eminescu. Whereas in Eliade's prewar writings the sacred appears distinct from the profane, his postwar stories reveal the sacred fully camouflaged in the profane, as best exemplified by the short story "La Tigănci."

 Investigates the type of religious experience Eliade evaluates as the "highest" spiritual manifestation: suggests criteria used to evaluate, provides illustrations, and finally identifies this "most elevated" type of experience. Concludes that Eliade's evaluation is at least partially based on an assumed ontological position much more characteristic of Eastern mysticism than Western religious traditions.

 Presents a phenomenological analysis which focuses on the dialectic of the sacred, taken as the key methodological principle for distinguishing religious phenomena. Analyzes the irreducibility of the sacred, religion and the sacred, and the structure of the dialectic of the sacred.
- F12 ———. "Givenness and Creativity." Journal of Thought (1973) 8, no. 4:270-78. Rev. in D1 as part of chap. 6.
 Formulates a certain ambiguity in Eliade's analysis of religious experience: on the one hand, the major emphasis on the passive reception of, or "givenness" of, universal structures; on the other hand, a sense of active creativity on the part of religious persons. Suggests a dynamic interaction between universal and particular, passive and active, in terms of a "constituted given."

 Claims there is a "disastrous contradiction" in Eliade's thought derived from giving two contrary meanings to

"time." Suggests Eliade has not seen the radical implications of his own dialectic of the sacred for the contemporary human situation. The analysis in this article is repeated in Altizer's Mircea Eliade and the Dialectic of the Sacred D3.

- "It is the purpose of this paper to challenge Eliade's correlation of man, the cosmos, and the sacred, in his understanding of the religious meaning of myth and symbol." By identifying the religious symbol with the archaic symbol, Eliade cannot account for the symbol in the higher religions or its meaning in our historical situation. An excellent challenge to the overall adequacy of Eliade's interpretation of myth and symbol.

- Using an empirical-historical approach, Baird contends that Eliade's approach is ahistorical and that an analysis of his phenomenology of symbolism reveals that his History of Religions "is as normative as theology because it is based on an assumed ontology which is neither historically derived nor descriptively verifiable." Good challenge to Eliade's history and phenomenology of religion. One could counter that Baird's notion of verification is narrow, inadequate, and outdated.

Claims "Eliade's weltanschauung is largely an aesthetic one." Characteristics of this aesthetic, existential orientation include the following: "ambiguity," "unrecognizable" meanings, "integration," consciousness of richness and diversity beyond the "camouflage"; creativity, intellectual expansiveness, and vitality; interpretation as opposing all tendencies toward reduction and conceived as a "totalizing activity, as an attempt to grasp the organic whole." Claims the opposite of frequent criticisms that Eliade ignores differences and reduces the diversity of his data. Totally supportive of Eliade.

Chapter 2, entitled "Mircea Eliade: His Methodology and a Critique," consists of Eliade's basic assumptions, his analysis of hierophanies and symbols, his relationship to phenomenology, his analysis of symbol, objections to his methodology, and a defense of his methodology. The chapters "The Symbol" and "Cosmic Symbols: The Earth and Symbols Related to the Earth" rely heavily on Eliade's interpretation of symbolism. The chapters "Cosmic Symbols of the Earth in the Georgics" and "Water Divinities in the Georgics" make considerable use of Eliade's analysis of certain symbols.

 Very controversial and creative interpretation of Eliade that treats his History of Religions as an "anti-historical" synchronic approach to religious phenomena that can be situated within the French tradition of paradigms and deductive reasoning. While briefly reviewing five books and one article, Frye focuses on the theme of the revolt against "life in time" with the need to surmount the world of time. His attempt to relate Eliade's analysis to modern literary criticism and literature is interesting and includes criticisms. Unfortunately, it also reveals his ignorance of Eliade's literary career: "Mr. Eliade has little interest in literature, and it is perhaps unreasonable to expect him to extend his already enormous erudition to include it."

- Argues that Eliade's homo religiosus, while adequate for archaic religion, is inadequate for the debate about religion and Christianity. Offers some good criticisms. Unfortunately, the entire formulation is based on The Sacred and the Profane A67, and the author writes from a highly normative, faith-oriented, "religionless," Christian, theological stance and assumes Eliade is offering an alternative theology. Thus, he fails to appreciate the basically descriptive, phenomenological dimension of much of Eliade's interpretation.

By stressing a phenomenology of archaic religions, Eliade and others have, it appears, created difficulties in the interpretation of the more historical and modern World Religions. However, his concept of "central hierophany," which Kim calls "ontological locus," can be very useful for a hermeneutics of current religions.

- A strange essay in which it is not clear to what extent Leach wants to be taken seriously or is just being cute. Eliade is condemned for bad historiography, bad ethnography, bad method, bad psychology, and a confusion of terms. Unfortunately, most of Leach's personal attacks are so vicious and petty and his criticisms so based on misunderstanding or ignorance that the reader may fail to appreciate a few serious challenges. For example, he claims that Eliade attaches importance to the symbols as such and not to their structural relations. See rebuttal by Ricketts, F254.

An exciting study of the major features of Eliade's hermeneutics in History of Religions. Analyzes the possibility of a hermeneutics of archaic and popular religions; the language and significance of terms used in such a hermeneutics; the notion of meaning and the role of interpretation; and the resulting possibility of understanding. It discusses Eliade's method further in terms of "circular hermeneutics"; intuitive and objective qualities; integration of documentation; the explicative and demonstrative nature of hermeneutics; the dialectical character of phenomena and their interpretation; archetypes, patterns, symbols; logic or "systematics" of archetypes and symbols; schemes and typologies; "homologization and totalization"; the role of history and the dialectic past-present; and Eliade's overwhelming nostalgia for the universal and creative dimension of human culture and of his own work.

Micu, employing Eliade's autobiography, Amintiri A85, and documentation of earlier works, elucidates Eliade's youthful ambition to imitate such scholars as Voltaire, Goethe, Balzac, Hasdeu, Iorga, Papini, and others. Eliade was especially influenced by Professor Nae Ionescu at the University of Bucharest, when Eliade was a student and later as his colleague, and on the newspaper Cuvântul to which both contributed articles regularly. Particular attention is given to those articles of 1927 entitled "Itinerariu spiritual" (see H195) in which Eliade outlined the enthusiastic goals of his generation. Micu further examines Eliade's "post-Indian" novels, indicating their autobiographical elements. He sees in them the influence of Eliade's Indian studies and his younger struggle toward "nietzschean freedom."

 Eliade's work is in the forefront of the reevaluation of spiritual reality. His interpretations of the sacred, as seen in his studies of religious initiation, help one to understand the nature of human existence and the need for a new initiation to establish contact with a sacred dimension that is relevant to and necessary for modern civilization.

- Excellent analysis, which is one of the rare efforts by a philosopher to take Eliade's work seriously. Clarifies the hermeneutic movement from the appearance of the sacred (involving principles of the irreducibility and dialectic of the sacred) to the understanding of the sacred on the basis of structural and morphological principles. Suggests how this hermeneutic procedure might serve as a method for philosophic reflection.

- F249 Revol, E.L. "Aproximación a la obra de Mircea Eliade." La Torre, Puerto Rico (1953) 1, no. 3:153-63.

Short essay on hierophany and symbol and other themes common to Eliade's work.

A very good introduction to Eliade's hermeneutics. The first part of the study includes sections on the sacred and the profane; sacred space; sacred time and repetition; myth; the sacred and primitive ontology; the sacred and existence. The second part: Christianity; the experience of the secular person; the language of symbols; the History of Religions and a hermeneutics of the sacred.

- F251 Ricketts, M.L. "Eliade and Altizer: Very Different Outlooks." Christian Advocate (Oct. 1967) pp. 11-12.

Although Altizer and Eliade have frequently been associated, "two men could not represent more opposite positions with respect to religion." Most of the article is a summary of some of Eliade's position, with the conclusion that the two scholars "belong to totally opposite philosophical worlds."

Rebuttal of Altizer's Mircea Eliade and the Dialectic of the Sacred D3. In claiming to "use" some of Eliade's approach, Altizer has distorted or misunderstood his History of Religions. In their views of religion and transcendence, the Incarnation and essence of Christianity, Eternal Return, and other important matters, the two positions are diametrically opposed. In particular, Altizer has misunderstood Eliade's dialectic of the sacred and his use of the coincidentia oppositorum.

- F254 ———. "In Defence of Eliade: Toward Bridging the Communications Gap between Anthropology and the History of Religions." Religion. Journal of Religion and Religions (1973) 3, no. 1:13-34.

Formulates a defense of Eliade by criticizing the usual total neglect of, and occasional attacks on, his History of Religions by anthropologists. Extensive critique of Leach F150. Good defense of Eliade and appeal for the merits of the History of Religions, although the author is sometimes too protective of his former teacher. For example, even an admirer of Eliade need not claim that he never ventures any answers as to his own views about reality.

- F255 ———. "The Nature and Extent of Eliade's 'Jungianism.'" Union Seminary Quarterly Review (1970) 25:211-34.

Eliade has often been identified as, and criticized for, being a "Jungian." He shares many similarities with Jung, and some of his analysis does appear "Jungian." But this excellent article carefully examines the texts and concludes that the differences between Eliade and Jung are "even more profound than the similarities." Good formulation of the "transconscious." In F254, Ricketts arrives at a somewhat different conclusion: "those who say Eliade is a Jungian are at least partially right," and "Eliade probably is closer to Jung in his theories than he realizes."

- F257 ———. "Histoire des religions, phénoménologie, herméneutique." In Mircea Eliade D11 pp. 81-87.

Divides Eliade's search for a method into three processes which are presented in some sort of methodological order: first, history; second, phenomenology; finally, hermeneutics. Phenomenology is concerned with morphology and typology and refrains from the work of comparison. Hermeneutics, which involves comparative analysis and takes one beyond phenomenology, is concerned with the interpretation of meaning. For a different analysis, see D1.

- F262 Saiving, V. "Androcentrism in Religious Studies." Journal of Religion (1976) 56:177-97.
 Offers a feminist critique of androcentrism in religious studies, using Rites and Symbols of Initiation A83 as her case study. Contends that what Eliade "says about the human meaning of initiation corresponds almost exactly to what he says about male initiation, and that it contradicts in essential respects his understanding of female initiation." Once again women appear "as deviant by definition."
- F263 Saliba, J.A. "Eliade's View of Primitive Man: Some Anthropological Reflections." Religion. Journal of Religion and Religions (1976) 6, no. 2:150-75.
 There is a need for a dialogue between anthropology and the History of Religions, but Ricketts's attempt (F254) is inadequate and will not be convincing to anthropologists. Eliade's view of "primitive man" is not compatible with contemporary anthropological conceptions. The historian of religions concerned with primitive religion can adopt a method from anthropology, while anthropologists can be stimulated by some speculations in the History of Religions. This analysis is presented in expanded form in D10.

Eliade offers a unique theory of millenarianism, which is seen not as some abnormal phenomenon but as the fulfillment of traditional values, involving the "innate desire" or "natural eschatological yearning" to abolish history and return to primordial time. His theory of millenarianism, his more general theory of eschatology, and his very general account of mythic and historical attitudes toward history are all very inadequate.

Considers Eliade the "most important writer in the fantastic genre in modern Romanian prose...." Sees in his literature such themes as coincidentia oppositorum, hierophany, escape from time, and initiatory ordeals. Contrasts his works to Anglo-Saxon horror types of fantastic literature in that the fantastic emerges from the most banal characters and episodes in a very profound and complex way.

Using Dudley's Religion on Trial D7, Smart suggests his own estimate of Eliade's "place in the future of theory in religion." He expresses "much admiration both for Eliade's work and the way he has given stature to the history of religions," but concludes that "his creative hermeneutic is in the end restricted."

- F276 Smith, J.Z. "The Wobbling Pivot." Journal of Religion (1972) 52, no. 2:134-49.

After formulating "the basic presuppositions and elements" in Eliade's analysis of sacred space and time, Smith offers some "queries and applications" regarding this analysis. He raises questions about Eliade's interpretations of "chaos," of the "Center," of mythic creations or beginnings as always paradigmatic and to be ritually repeated, and of the dichotomy between "archaic" and "modern."

Claims that Eliade writes literature as a form of "confession" or "salvation" that he cannot achieve when writing in the "positivistic" vein as historian of religions. Steinhardt suggests that Eliade's "fantastic literature" is more of the Oriental than of the Occidental type. The world for Eliade is a "cipher" wherein one can come to know the self and where Kantian categories dissolve.

- An extremely powerful critique which challenges the very foundations of Eliade's History of Religions. His "methodological prescriptions are disastrous"; he is evasive, loose thinking, and anti-scientific; his "against history" approach formulates "dilemmas" that are as false as the (nonhistorical) solutions he provides; his analysis of myth cannot be justified. One could show that Eliade's method is not so totally dependent on some depth psychological, nonhistorical "intuition" or "introspection" that is "self-authenticating" and beyond verification and falsification. But these are strong criticisms, and Strenski cannot be dismissed as some "positivist" or "historicist."

Romanian historian Iorga. Here he defends his remarks and disclaims his critics.

- H99 "Noi și Nicolae Iorga" (We and Nicolae Iorga). Cuvântul (1926) 3, no. 604:2.

Beginning of a series of articles on Iorga, emphasizing the polygraphic and asystematic approach of his method. These were first articles to gain Eliade public recognition. Briefly, they called for a "new generation" (a catchword at the time among young Romanians) which should look to something other than history--such as the study of philosophy and religion.

- Initiates a series of 12 articles that are the most significant of Eliade's youthful publications. Concerns the subject of his own spiritual development as well as that of his generation of young Romanians. Focuses on the notion of "method"—a prospectus for achieving a creative expression of metaphysical truth from a multitude of experiences. Argues that positive science and the study of religion are not mutually exclusive. Perceives the study of history as a philosophy of history. Hence "a historian is also a metaphysician." Experiences and intuition are critical to the experimental method. The spirit is an organic hierarchy of "planes" corresponding or "sympathizing" with reality. This correspondence or equilibrium within diversity functions as a "soteriology" for the human spirit and the quest for knowledge.

- H317 "Apologia virilității" (Defense of Virility). Gândirea (1928) 8, no. 8-9:352-59.
Borrows notion of virility from Giovanni Papini's Maschilito--a mode of being in the world as an instrument of knowledge. Virility is a "dynamic phenomenology" of attitudes and experiences in the context of life. By preserving the dynamism of vying powers of the flesh and the spirit, the virile person can achieve points of synthesis to that of an ultimate spiritual unity or "superlife." Mixture of sensuality and metaphysical exuberance.

- H924 "Fragment autobiographic." Caete de Dor (1953) 7:1-13.
 Discusses the tension he felt between his literary and scientific publications from 1934 to 1938, including his popularity as a novelist, his fear of dilettantism, and his wanting to be recognized as a scholarly writer. Directs attention to his works on alchemy and folklore (see A17 and A23) in which he discovered "metaphysical" values, quite the contrary to the "scientific," "personal," and particular "cultural" or "provincial" interpretations of the day. Also recalls the "fantastic" and pseudo-autobiographical qualities of his earliest writings, and relates his experiences in writing Sărpele A24.

- H976 "Scritor la București" (Writer in Bucharest). Cuvântul în Exil (1966) 48-50: 1, 5. Sequel (fragment of Part III, chap. 3) to A85.

Discusses preparation of several volumes: Alchimia Asiatică A17, Cosmologie și alchimie babiloniană A23, Hasdeu edition A25, Şantier A19, and his doctoral dissertation Yoga A21. Gives ideas he had for several more novels and scientific works. Confesses his passion at the time to write a literary opus, in effect to "make Romanian culture" and thus to "save" his other, less outstanding, publications.

- H977 "Popas la cincisprezece ani." Destin (1966) 15:13-14.
- H978 "Amintiri din liceu." Destin (1966) 15:23-44. Part of A85.

- H986 "Bucureşti, 1937." Fîntă Românească (1967) 5:47-66. Sequel (Part III, chap. 4) to A85.

Gives reasons why Yoga A21, published in 1936, although well accepted by noted Indianists abroad, was not very well received at home. Relates his need at the time to be taken seriously as a "man of science," indicating that what he had published in scientific works from 1933 to 1939 contained the basic ideas which were elaborated in French publications after 1946. Recalls work on Ionescu's Roza Vânturilor A22, Domnișoara Christina A20, Hasdeu edition A25, Şarpele A24, and articles in Revista Fundațiilor Regale (see section B). Briefly tells of a trip in 1936 to Berlin for research and to London to observe the Oxford Group Movement. Also discusses accusations of pornography directed against him in 1936 and 1937.
